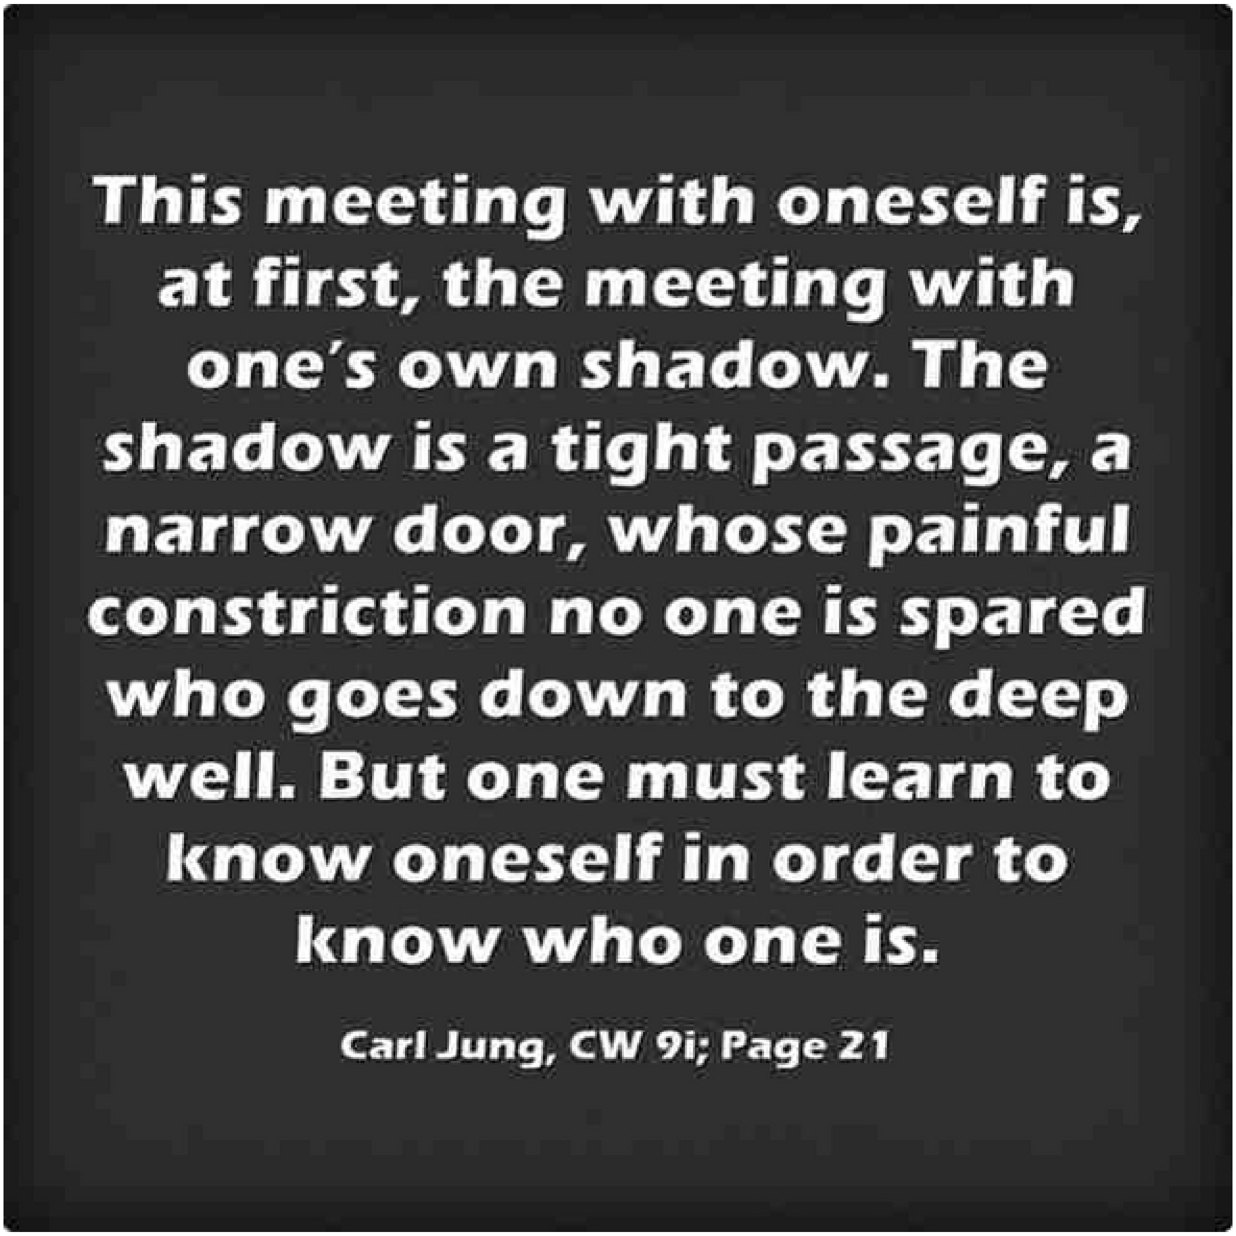
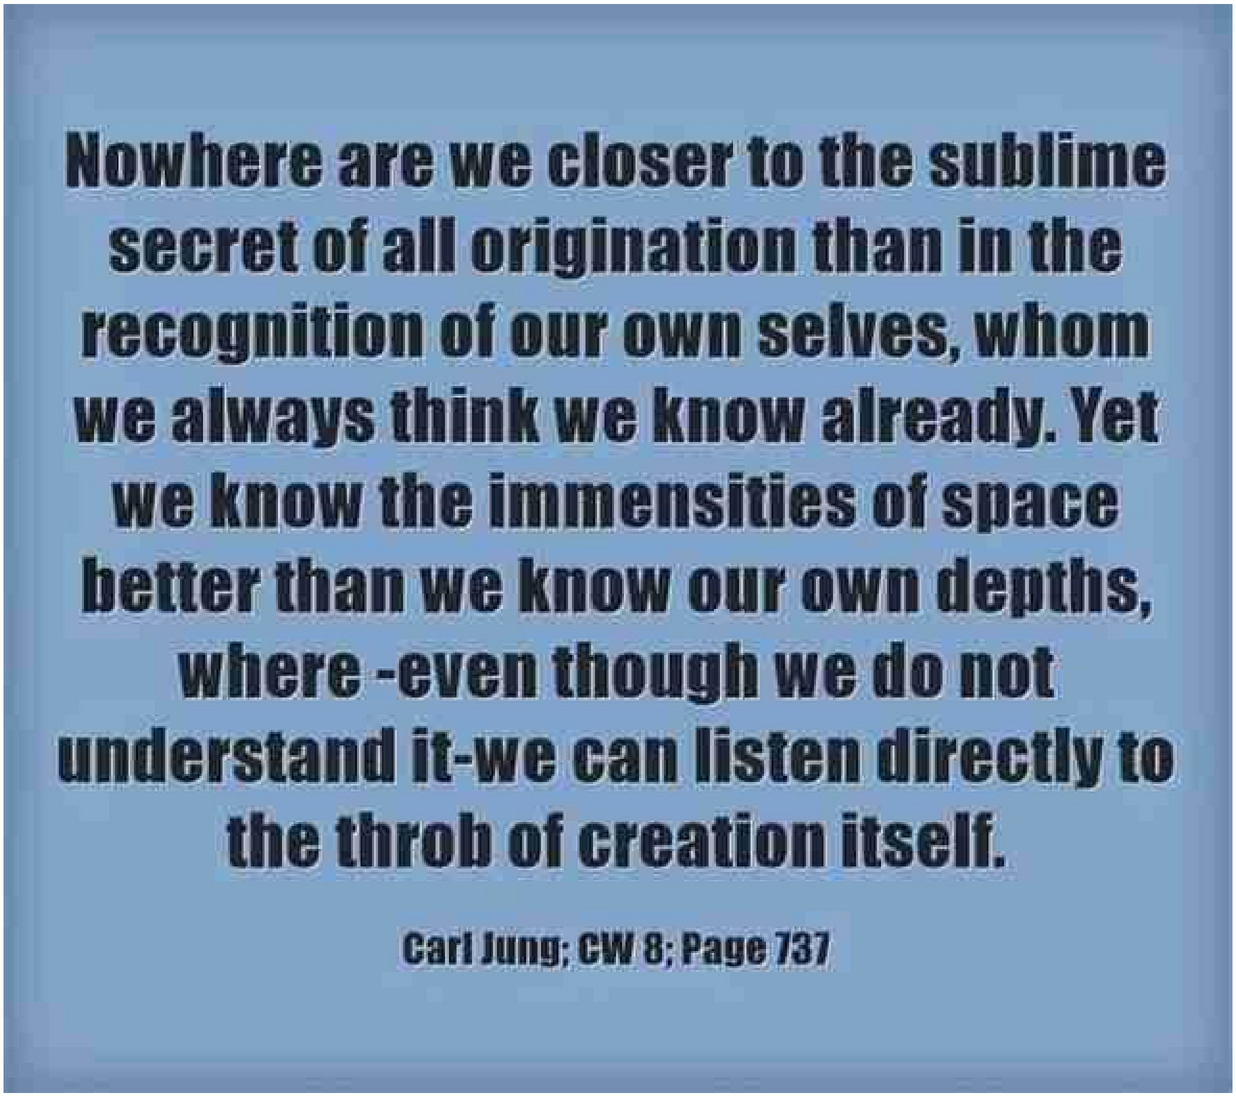
Love "bears all things" and "endures all things'* (i Cor. 13:7). These words say all there is to be said; nothing can be added to them. For we are in the deepest sense the victims and the instruments of cosmogonic "love." Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 354



This meeting with oneself is, at first, the meeting with one's own shadow. The shadow is a tight passage, a narrow door, whose painful constriction no one is spared who goes down to the deep well. But one must learn to know oneself in order to know who one is.

Carl Jung, CW 9i; Page 21

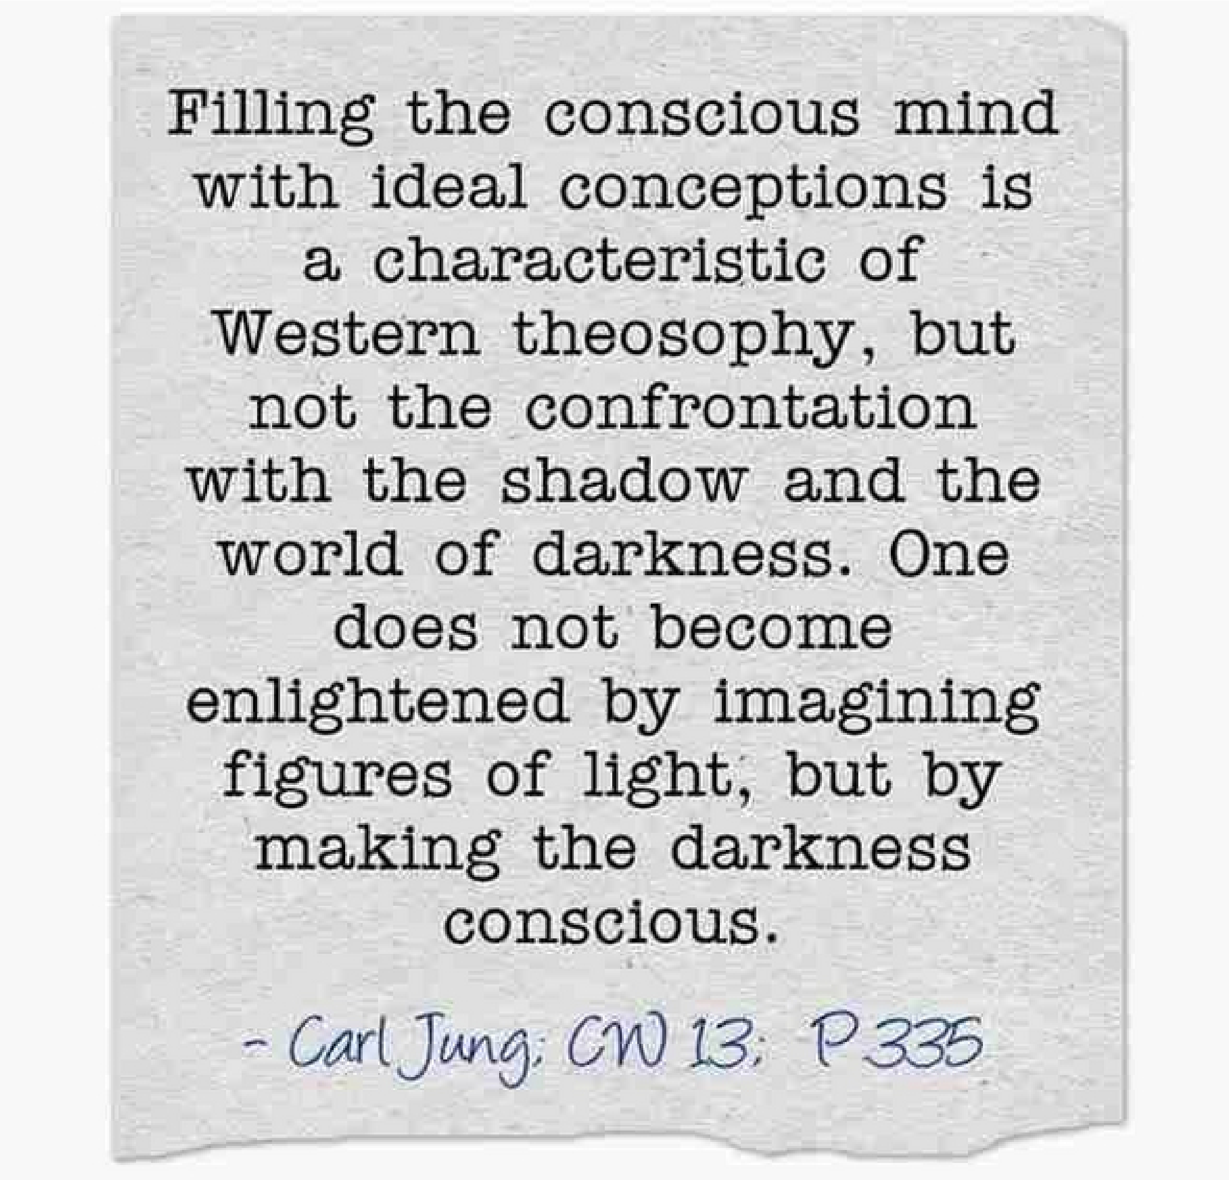
This meeting with oneself is, at first, the meeting with one's own shadow. The shadow is a tight passage, a narrow door, whose painful constriction no one is spared who goes down to the deep well. But one must learn to know oneself in order to know who one is. Carl Jung, Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious, vol. 9, pt. 1 p. 21



Nowhere are we closer to the sublime secret of all origination than in the recognition of our own selves, whom we always think we know already. Yet we know the immensities of space better than we know our own depths, where -even though we do not understand it-we can listen directly to the throb of creation itself.

Carl Jung; CW 8; Page 737

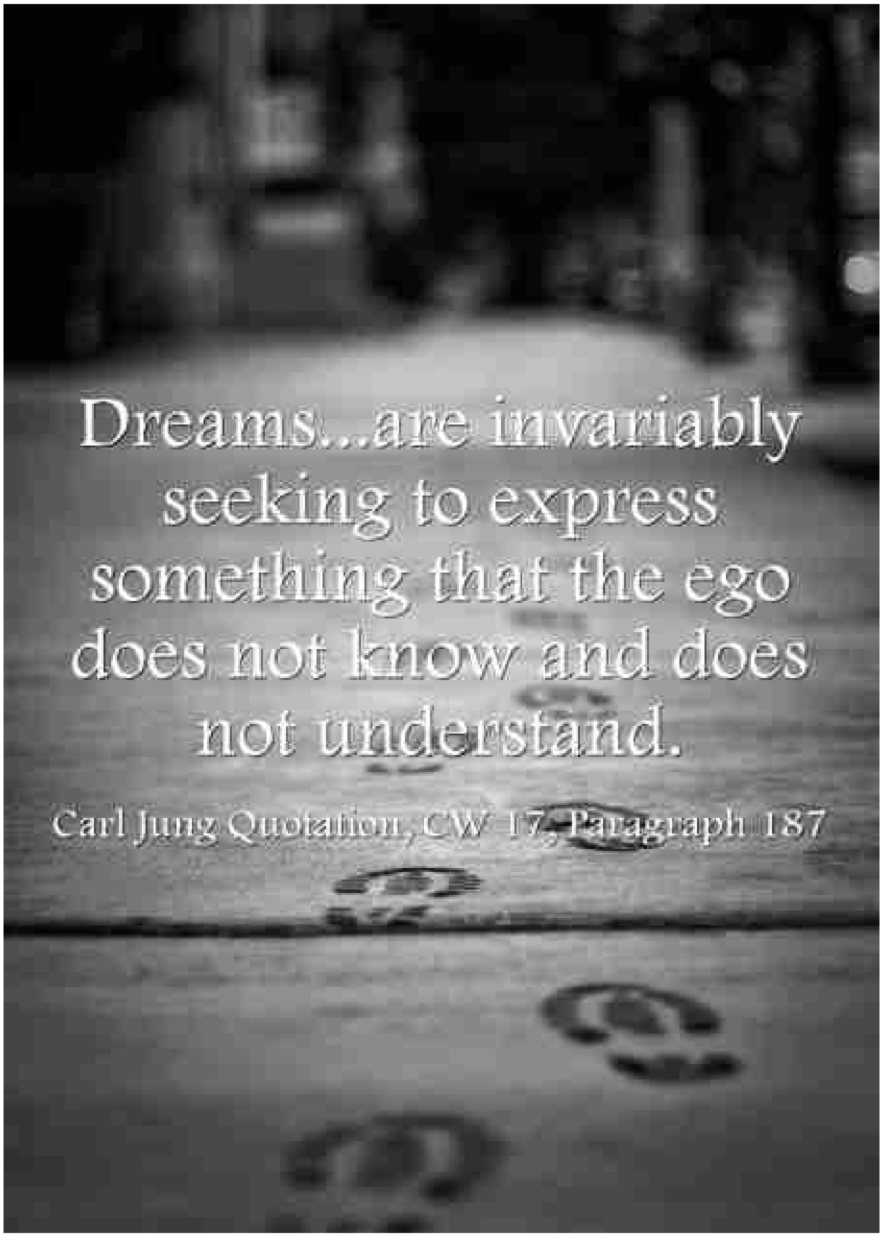
Nowhere are we closer to the sublime secret of all origination than in the recognition of our own selves, whom we always think we know already. Yet we know the immensities of space better than we know our own depths, where -even though we do not understand it-we can listen directly to the throb of creation itself. "Analytical Psychology and Weltanshauung" (1928). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P. 737



Filling the conscious mind with ideal conceptions is a characteristic of Western theosophy, but not the confrontation with the shadow and the world of darkness. One does not become enlightened by imagining figures of light, but by making the darkness conscious.

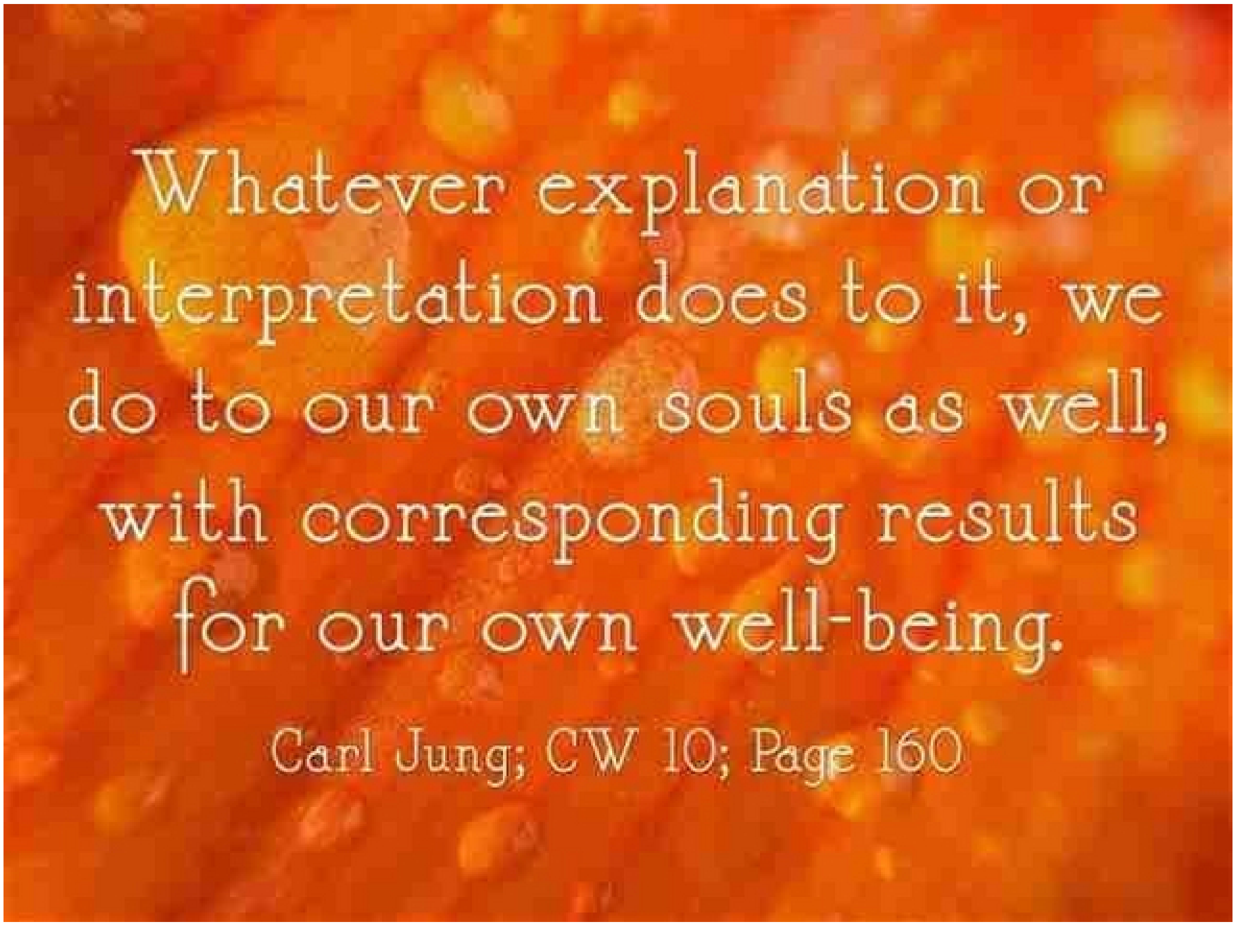
- Carl Jung; CW 13; P.335

Filling the conscious mind with ideal conceptions is a characteristic of Western theosophy, but not the confrontation with the shadow and the world of darkness. One does not become enlightened by imagining figures of light, but by making the darkness conscious. Carl Jung; The Philosophical Tree; CW 13: Alchemical Studies. P.335



Dreams...are invariably seeking to express something that the ego does not know and does not understand.
Carl Jung Quotation, CW 17, Paragraph 187

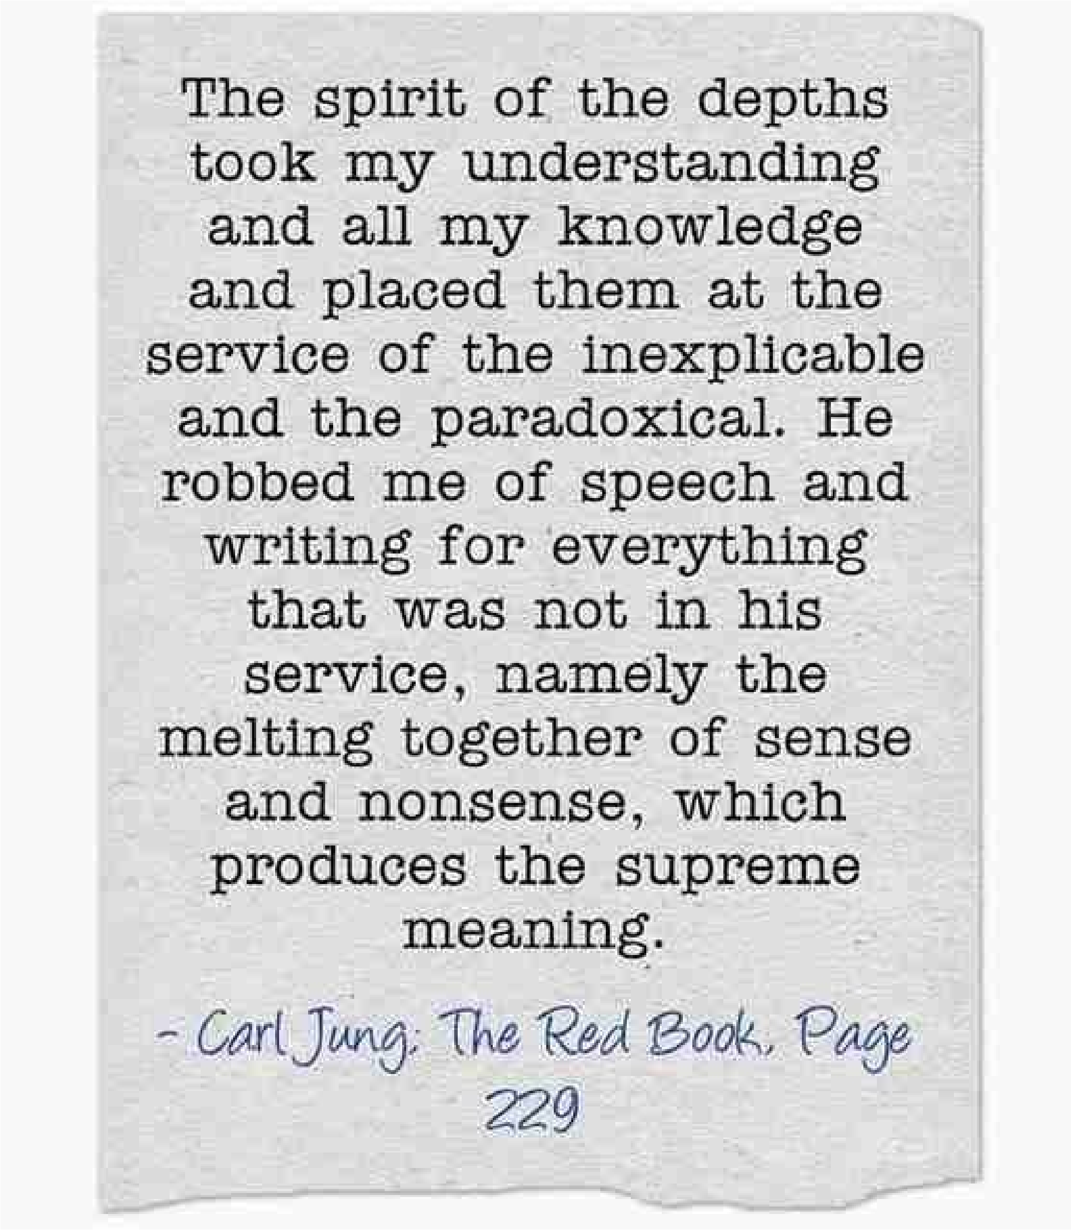
Dreams…are invariably seeking to express something that the ego does not know and does not understand. Carl Jung Quotation, CW 17, Paragraph 187



Whatever explanation or interpretation does to it, we do to our own souls as well, with corresponding results for our own well-being.

Carl Jung; CW 10; Page 160

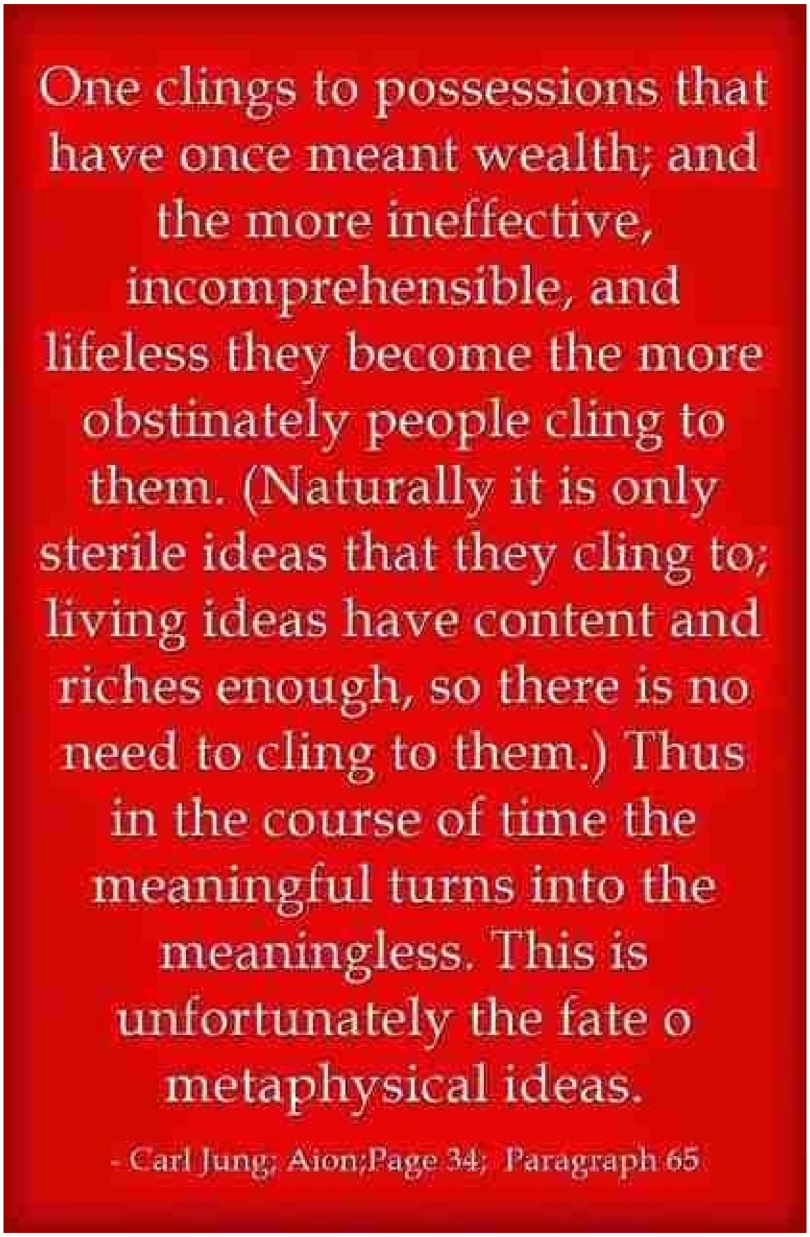
Whatever explanation or interpretation does to it, we do to our own souls as well, with corresponding results for our own well-being. Carl Jung; CW 9; Page 160



The spirit of the depths took my understanding and all my knowledge and placed them at the service of the inexplicable and the paradoxical. He robbed me of speech and writing for everything that was not in his service, namely the melting together of sense and nonsense, which produces the supreme meaning.

- Carl Jung: The Red Book, Page 229

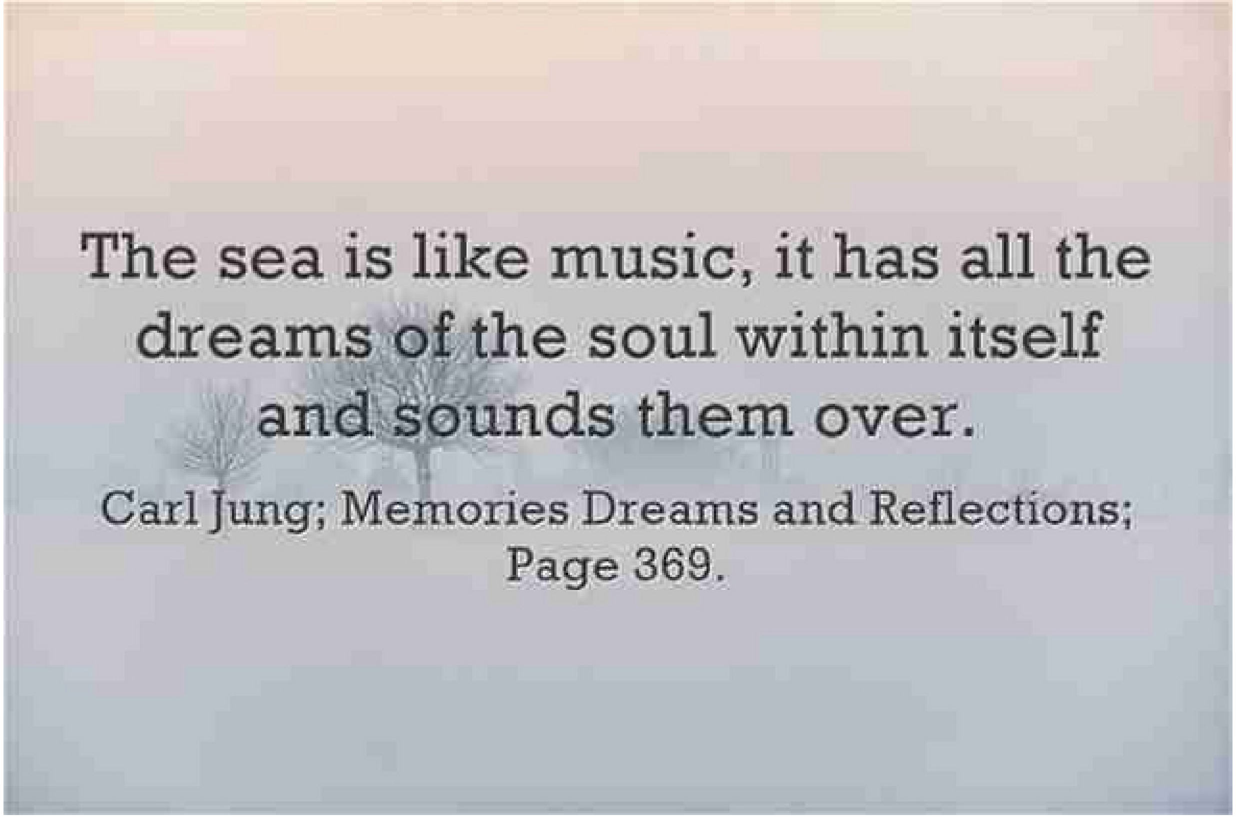
The spirit of the depths took my understanding and all my knowledge and placed them at the service of the Inexplicable and the paradoxical. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 229



One clings to possessions that have once meant wealth; and the more ineffective, incomprehensible, and lifeless they become the more obstinately people cling to them. (Naturally it is only sterile ideas that they cling to; living ideas have content and riches enough, so there is no need to cling to them.) Thus in the course of time the meaningful turns into the meaningless. This is unfortunately the fate o metaphysical ideas.

- Carl Jung; Aion;Page 34; Paragraph 65

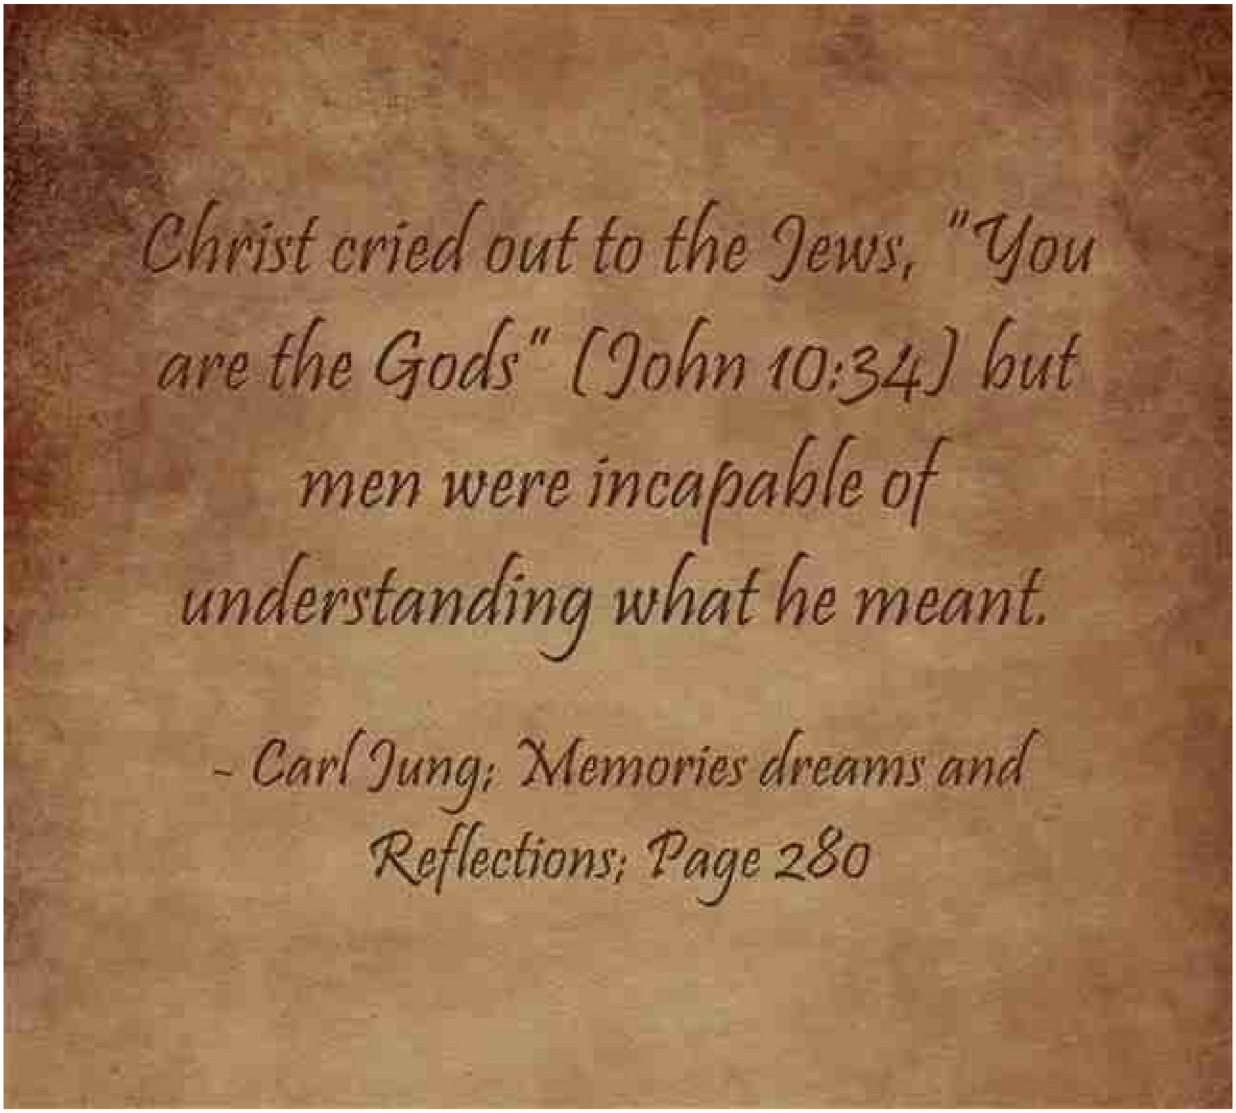
One clings to possessions that have once meant wealth; and the more ineffective, incomprehensible, and lifeless they become the more obstinately people cling to them. (Naturally it is only sterile ideas that they cling to; living ideas have content and riches enough, so there is no need to cling to them.) Thus in the course of time the meaningful turns into the meaningless. This is unfortunately the fate of metaphysical ideas. Carl Jung; Aion;Page 34; Paragraph 65.



The sea is like music, it has all the dreams of the soul within itself and sounds them over.

Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 369.

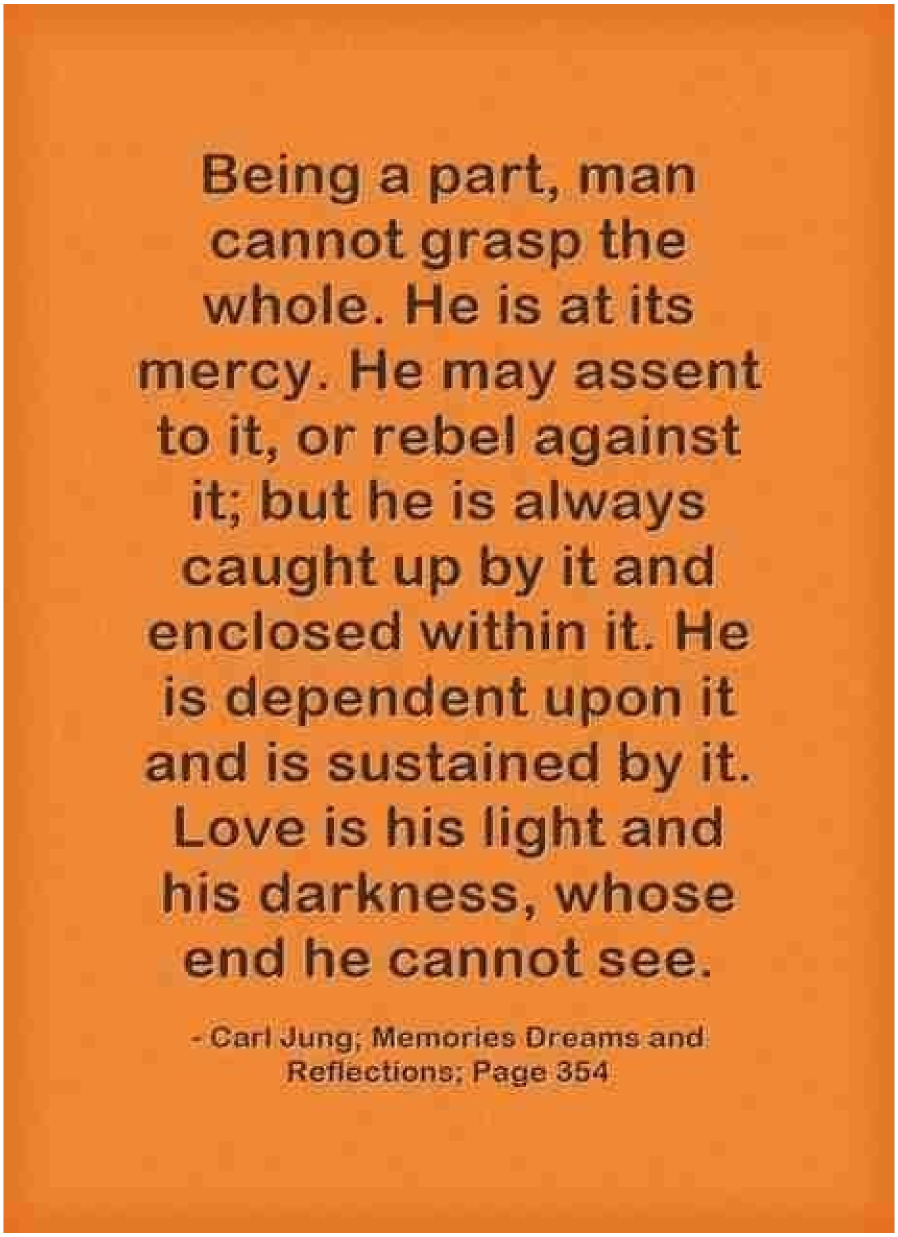
The sea is like music, it has all the dreams of the soul within itself and sounds them over. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 369.



Christ cried out to the Jews, "You are the Gods" [John 10:34] but men were incapable of understanding what he meant.

- Carl Jung; Memories dreams and Reflections; Page 280

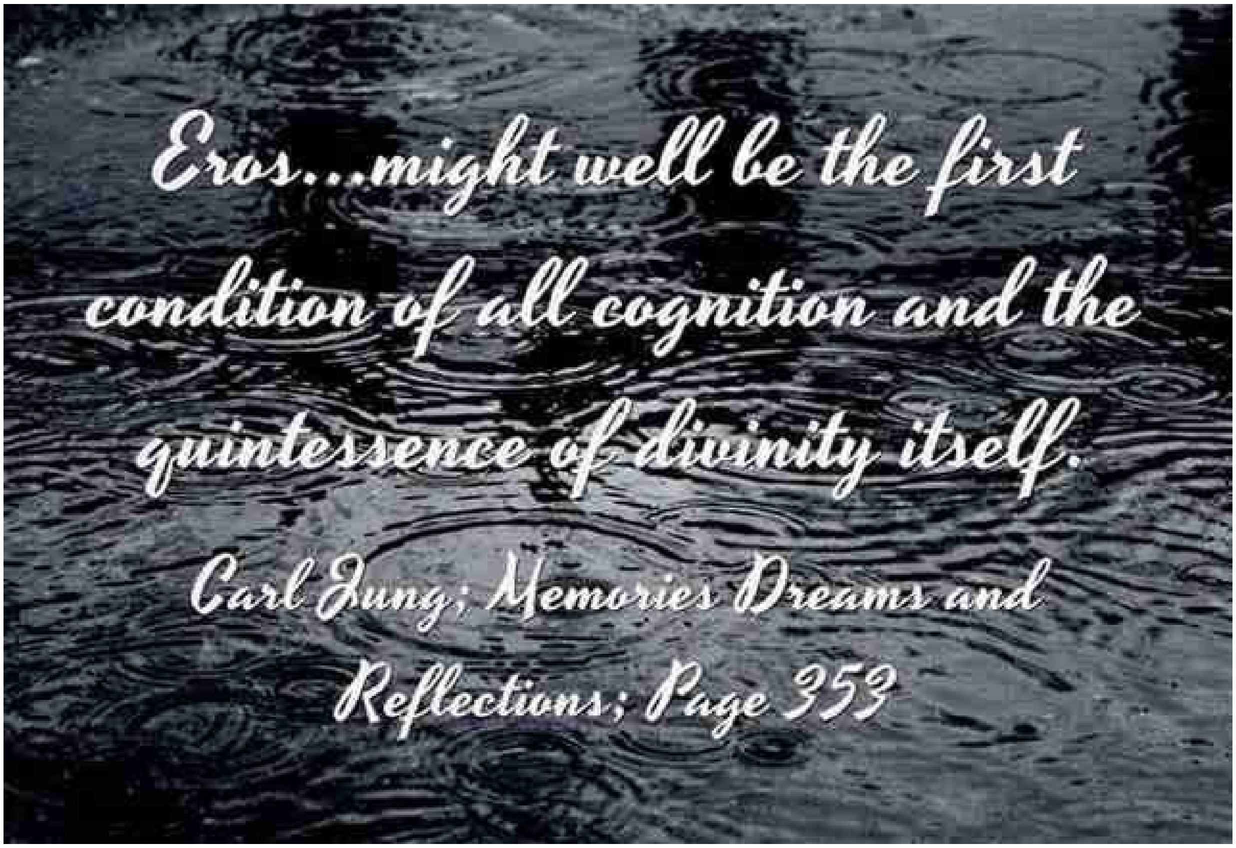
Christ cried out to the Jews, “You are the Gods” (John 10:34) but men were incapable of understanding what he meant. Carl Jung; Memories dreams and Reflections; Page 280



Being a part, man cannot grasp the whole. He is at its mercy. He may assent to it, or rebel against it; but he is always caught up by it and enclosed within it. He is dependent upon it and is sustained by it. Love is his light and his darkness, whose end he cannot see.

- Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 354

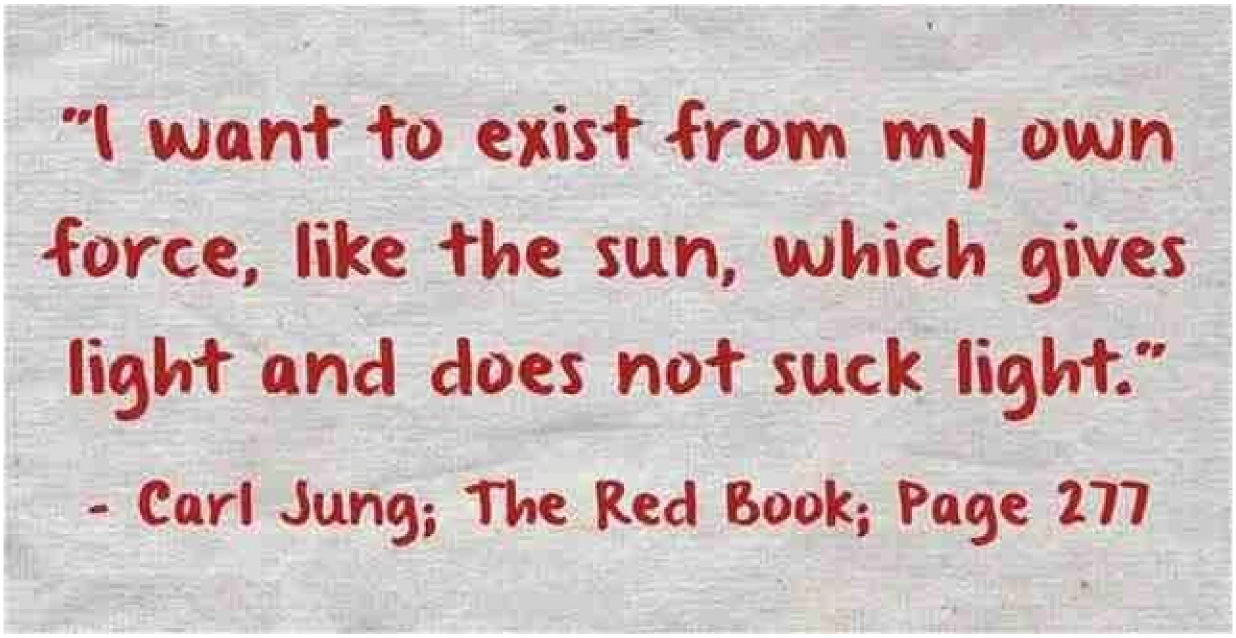
Being a part, man cannot grasp the whole. He is at its mercy. He may assent to it, or rebel against it; but he is always caught up by it and enclosed within it. He is dependent upon it and is sustained by it. Love is his light and his darkness, whose end he cannot see. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 354



Eros…might well be the first condition of all cognition and the quintessence of divinity itself.
Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 353

Eros…might well be the first condition of all cognition and the quintessence of divinity itself. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Late Thoughts; Page 353.

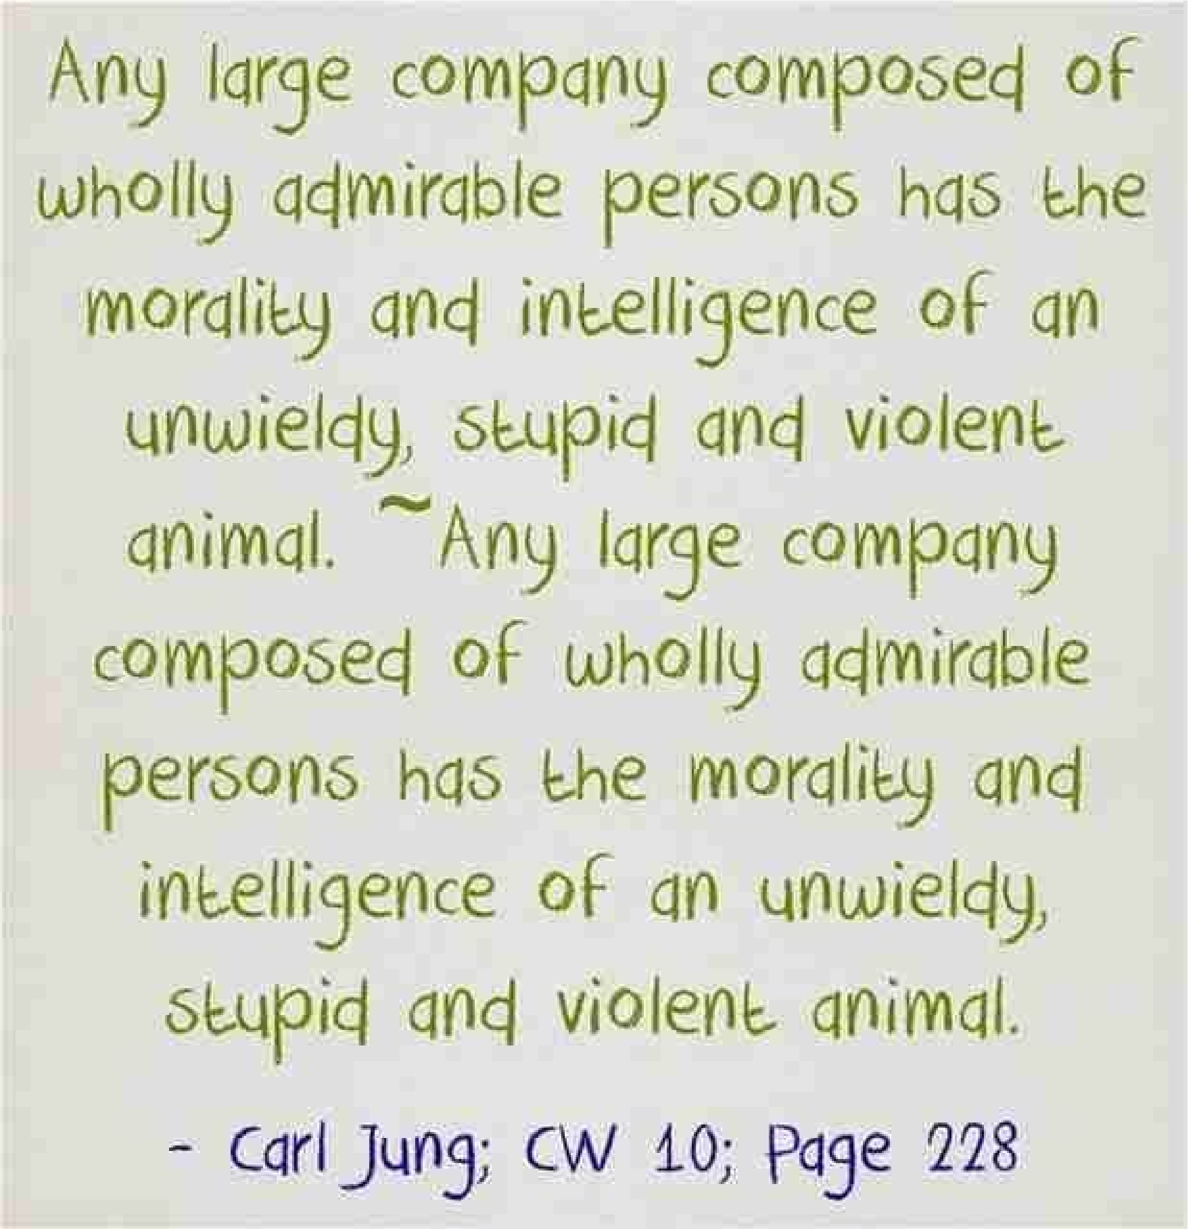
[18]



"I want to exist from my own force, like the sun, which gives light and does not suck light."
- Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 277

I want to exist from my own force, like the sun, which gives light and does not suck light. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 277

[19]

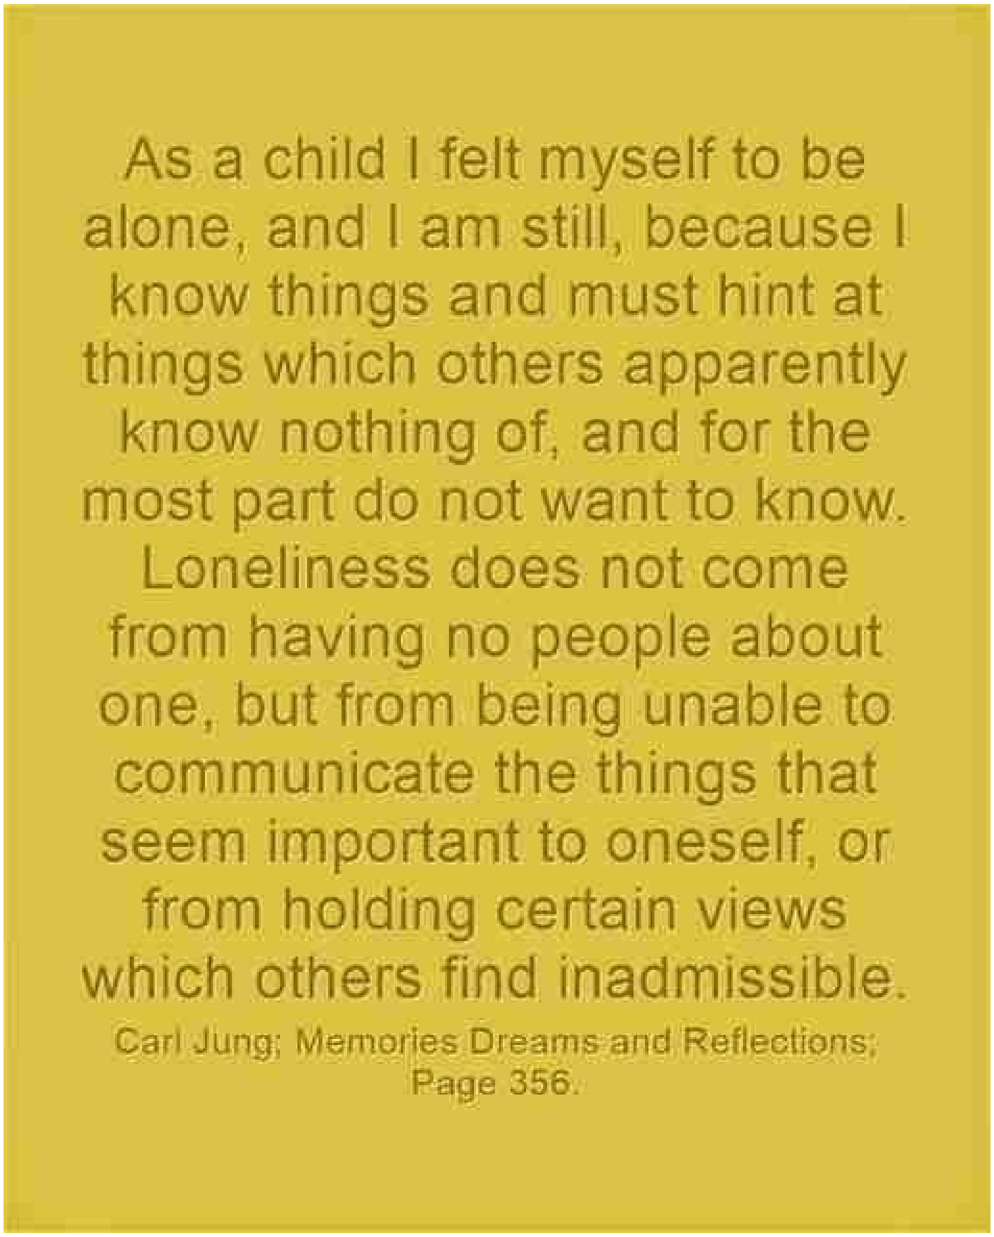


Any large company composed of wholly admirable persons has the morality and intelligence of an unwieldy, stupid and violent animal. ~Any large company composed of wholly admirable persons has the morality and intelligence of an unwieldy, stupid and violent animal.

- Carl Jung; CW 10; Page 228

Any large company composed of wholly admirable persons has the morality and intelligence of an unwieldy, stupid and violent animal. Carl Jung; CW 10; Page 228

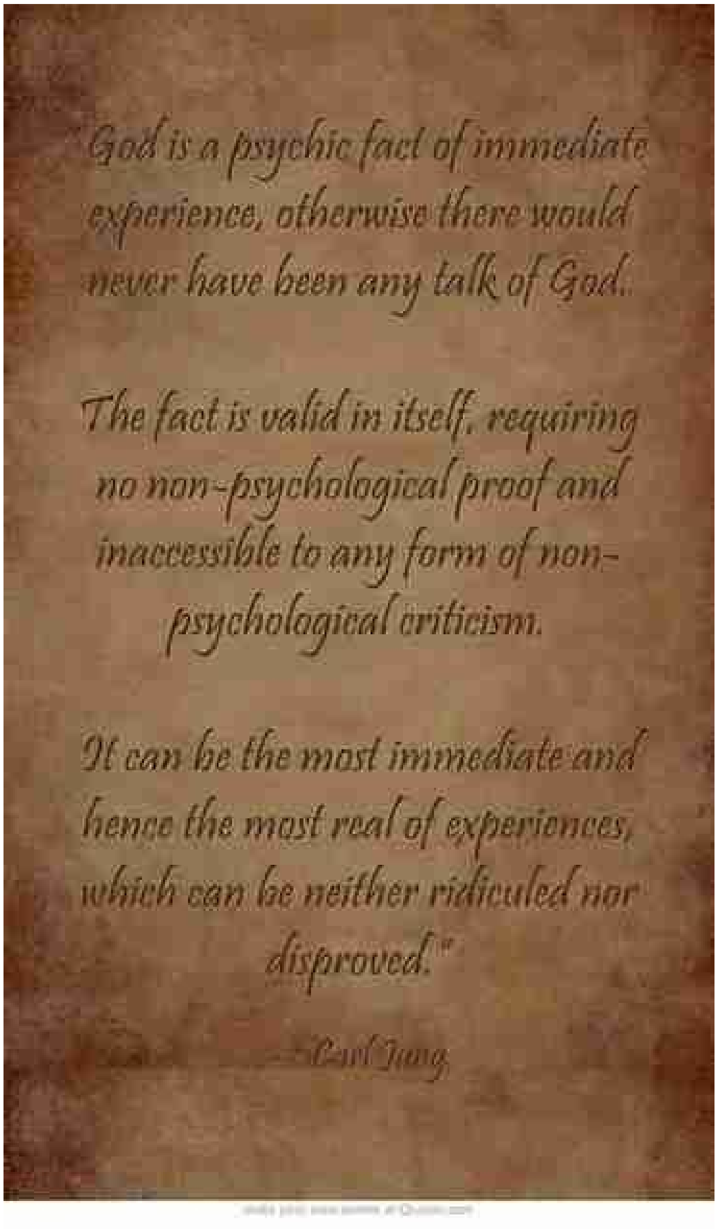
[20]



As a child I felt myself to be alone, and I am still, because I know things and must hint at things which others apparently know nothing of, and for the most part do not want to know. Loneliness does not come from having no people about one, but from being unable to communicate the things that seem important to oneself, or from holding certain views which others find inadmissible.

Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 356.

As a child I felt myself to be alone, and I am still, because I know things and must hint at things which others apparently know nothing of, and for the most part do not want to know. Loneliness does not come from having no people about one, but from being unable to communicate the things that seem important to oneself, or from holding certain views which others find inadmissible. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 356.



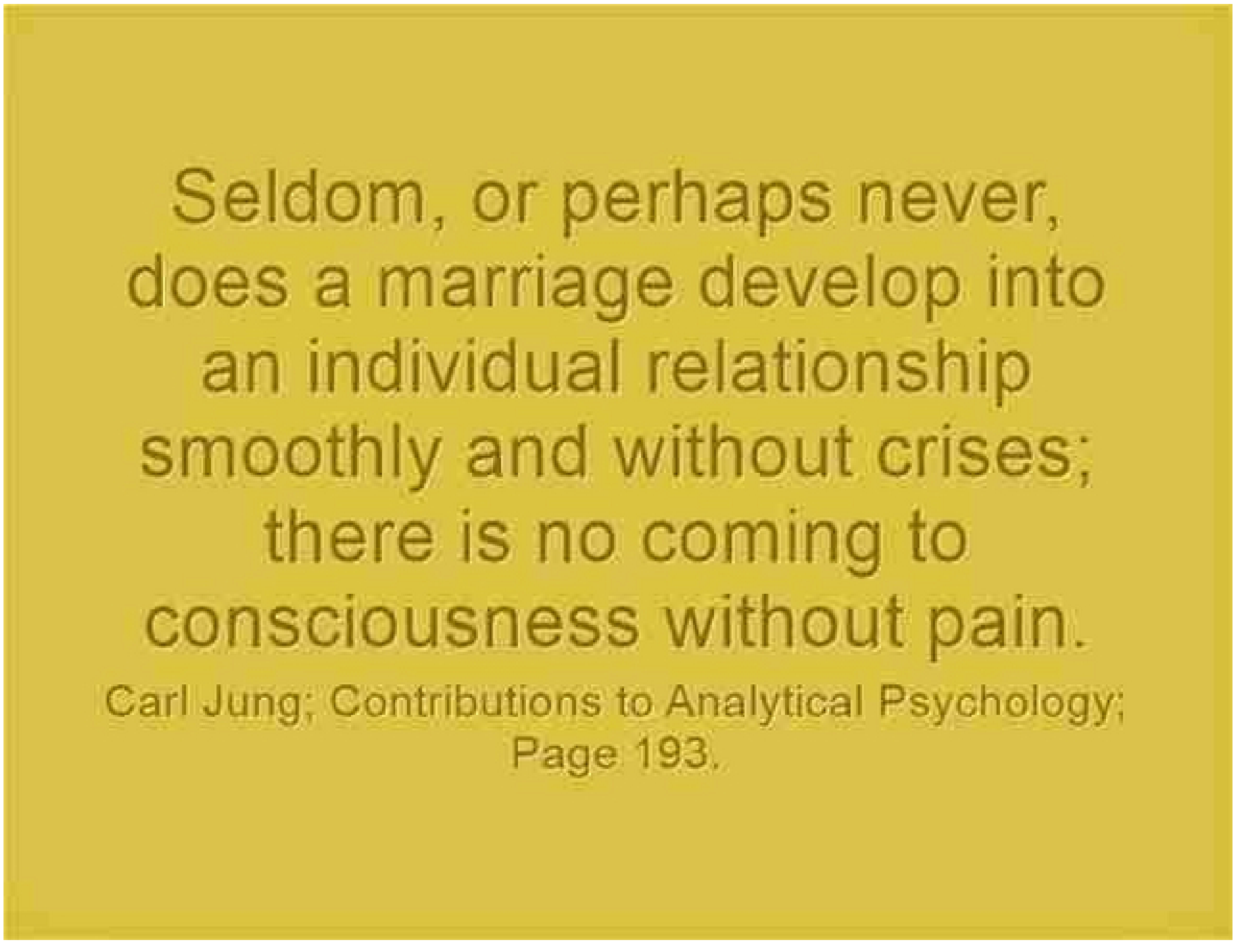
"God is a psychic fact of immediate experience, otherwise there would never have been any talk of God.

The fact is valid in itself, requiring no non-psychological proof and inaccessible to any form of non-psychological criticism.

It can be the most immediate and hence the most real of experiences, which can be neither ridiculed nor disproved."

–Carl Jung

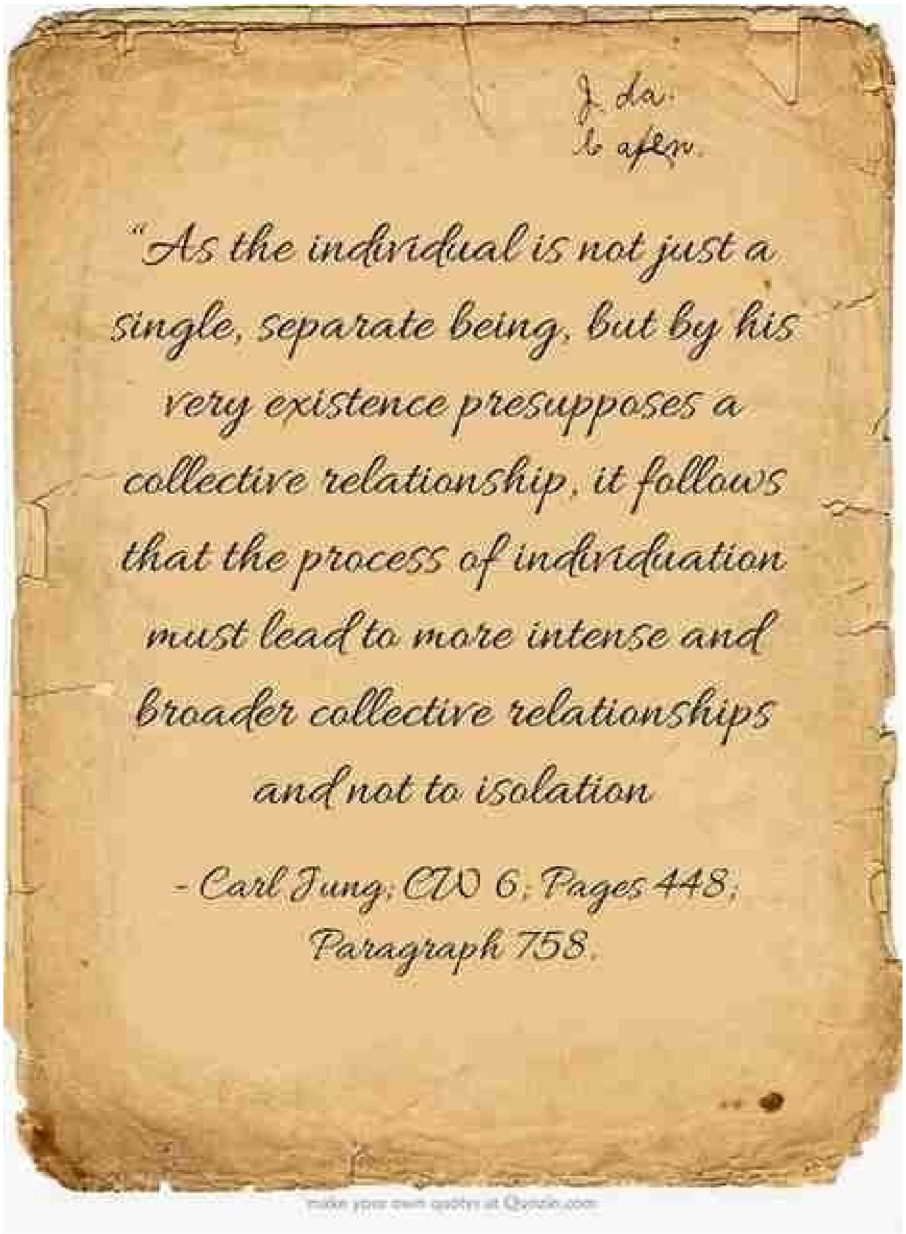
God is a psychic fact of immediate experience; otherwise there would never have been any talk of God. The fact is valid in itself, requiring no non-psychological proof and inaccessible to any form of non-psychological criticism. It can be the most immediate and hence the most real of experiences, which can be neither ridiculed nor disproved. Carl Jung



Seldom, or perhaps never, does a marriage develop into an individual relationship smoothly and without crises; there is no coming to consciousness without pain.

Carl Jung; Contributions to Analytical Psychology; Page 193.

Seldom, or perhaps never, does a marriage develop into an individual relationship smoothly and without crises; there is no coming to consciousness without pain. Carl Jung, Contributions to Analytical Psychology, P. 193



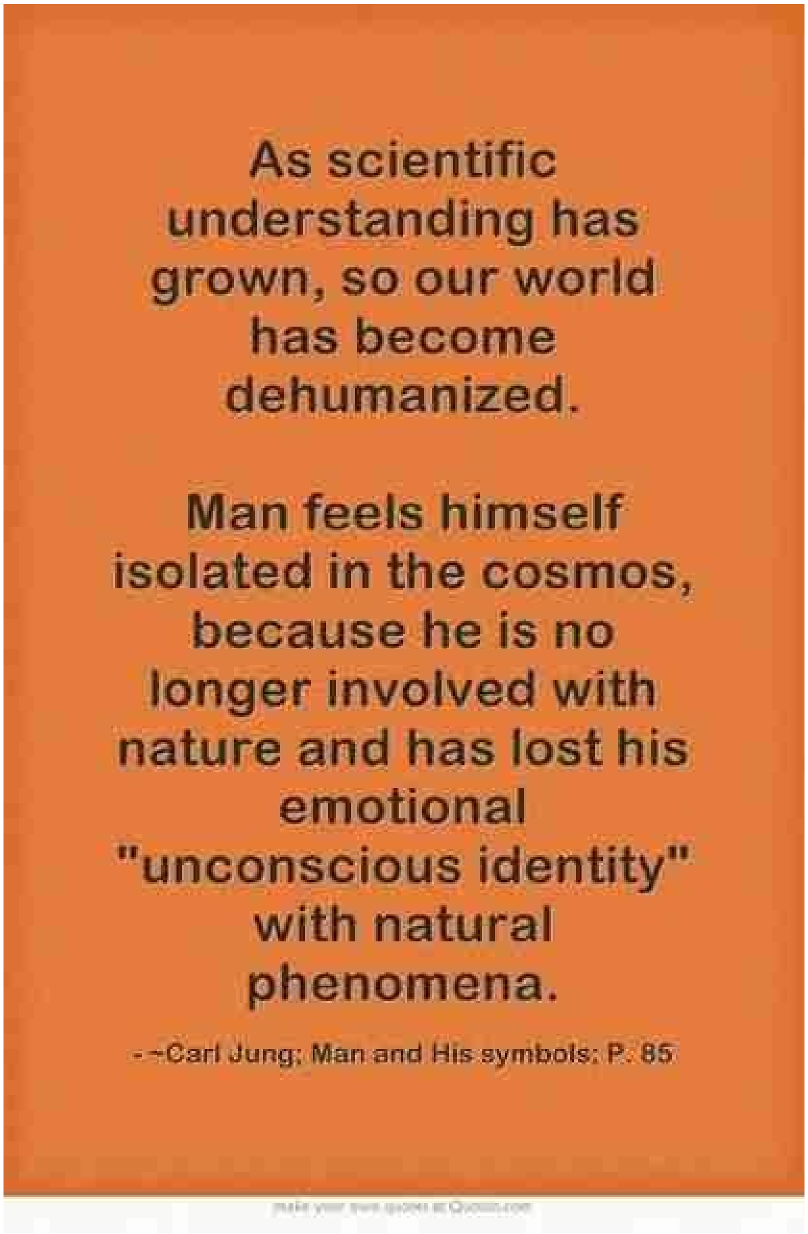
J. da.
b after.

"As the individual is not just a single, separate being, but by his very existence presupposes a collective relationship, it follows that the process of individuation must lead to more intense and broader collective relationships and not to isolation

- Carl Jung, CW 6, Pages 448, Paragraph 758.

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

As the individual is not just a single, separate being, but by his very existence presupposes a collective relationship, it follows that the process of individuation must lead to more intense and broader collective relationships and not to isolation. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 758



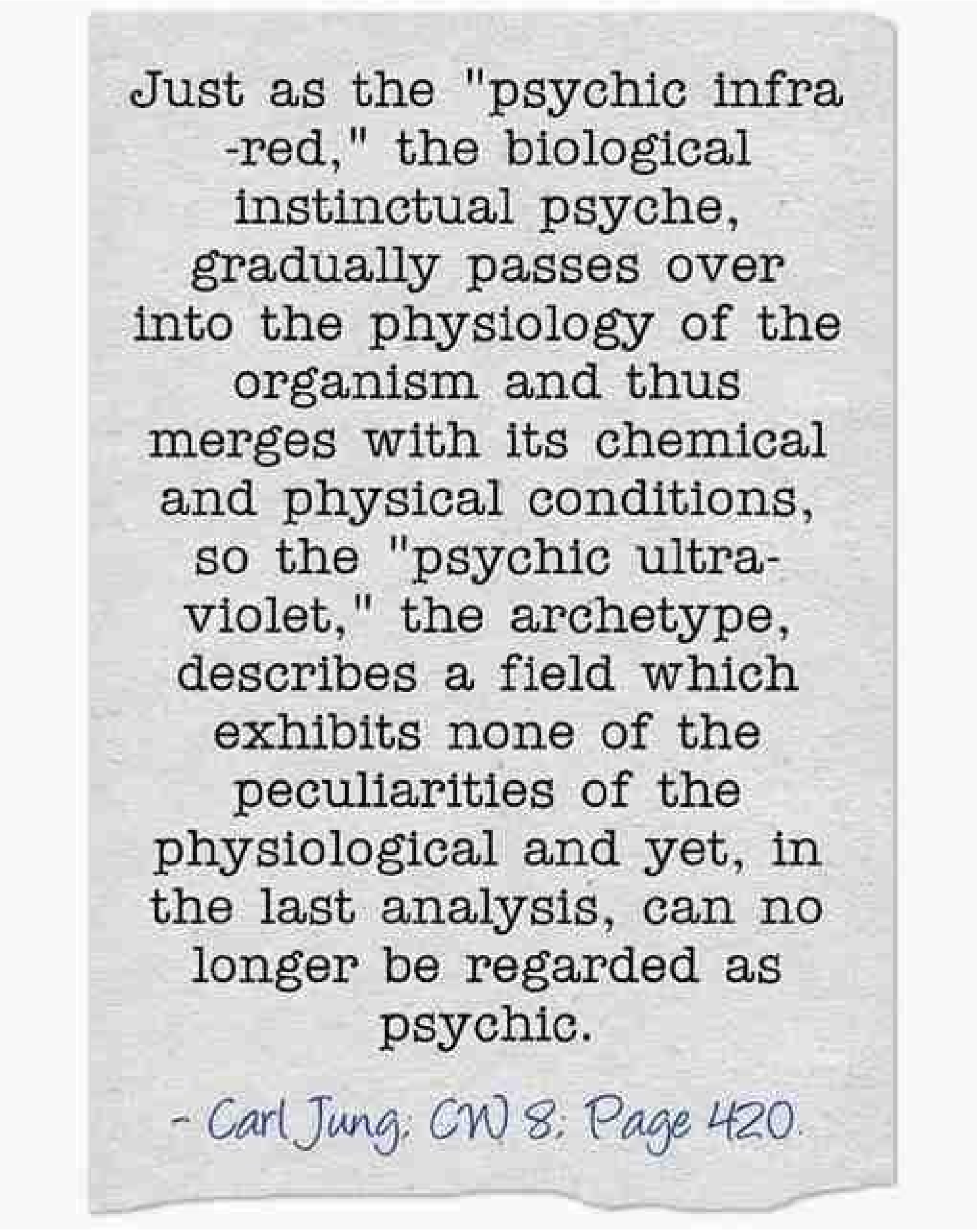
As scientific understanding has grown, so our world has become dehumanized.

Man feels himself isolated in the cosmos, because he is no longer involved with nature and has lost his emotional "unconscious identity" with natural phenomena.

- ~Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; P. 85

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

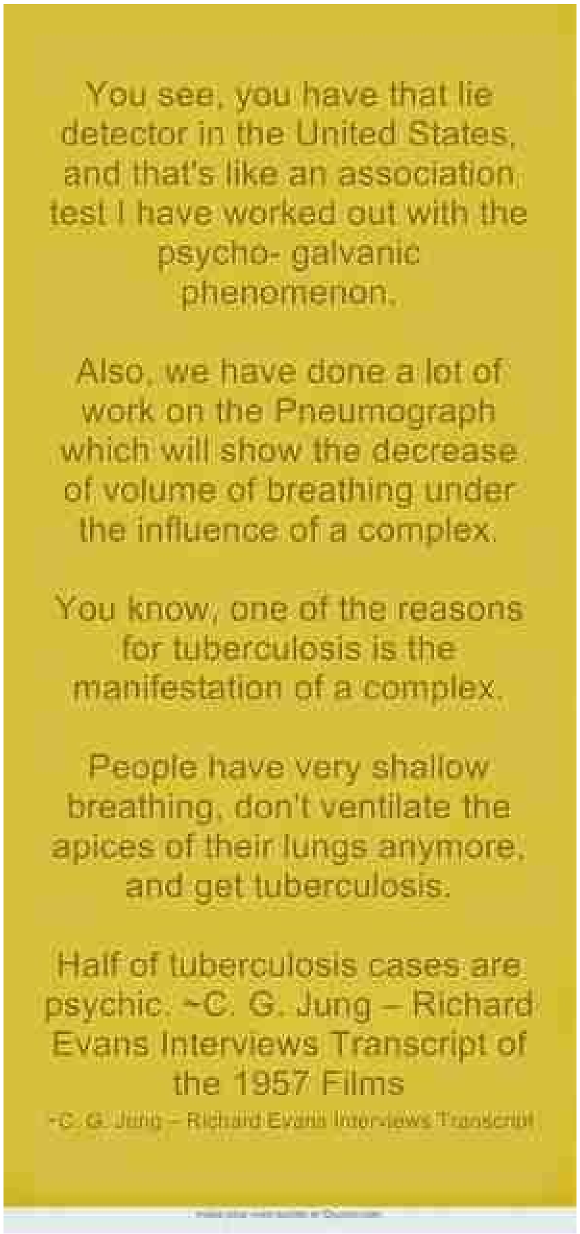
As scientific understanding has grown, so our world has become dehumanized. Man feels himself isolated in the cosmos, because he is no longer involved in nature and has lost his emotional 'unconscious identity' with natural phenomena. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 85.



Just as the "psychic infra-red," the biological instinctual psyche, gradually passes over into the physiology of the organism and thus merges with its chemical and physical conditions, so the "psychic ultra-violet," the archetype, describes a field which exhibits none of the peculiarities of the physiological and yet, in the last analysis, can no longer be regarded as psychic.

- Carl Jung: CW 8: Page 420.

Just as the "psychic infra-red," the biological instinctual psyche, gradually passes over into the physiology of the organism and thus merges with its chemical and physical conditions, so the "psychic ultra-violet," the archetype, describes a field which exhibits none of the peculiarities of the physiological and yet, in the last analysis, can no longer be regarded as psychic. Carl Jung; On the Nature of the Psyche; CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche; Page 420.



You see, you have that lie detector in the United States, and that's like an association test I have worked out with the psycho- galvanic phenomenon.

Also, we have done a lot of work on the Pneumograph which will show the decrease of volume of breathing under the influence of a complex.

You know, one of the reasons for tuberculosis is the manifestation of a complex.

People have very shallow breathing, don't ventilate the apices of their lungs anymore, and get tuberculosis.

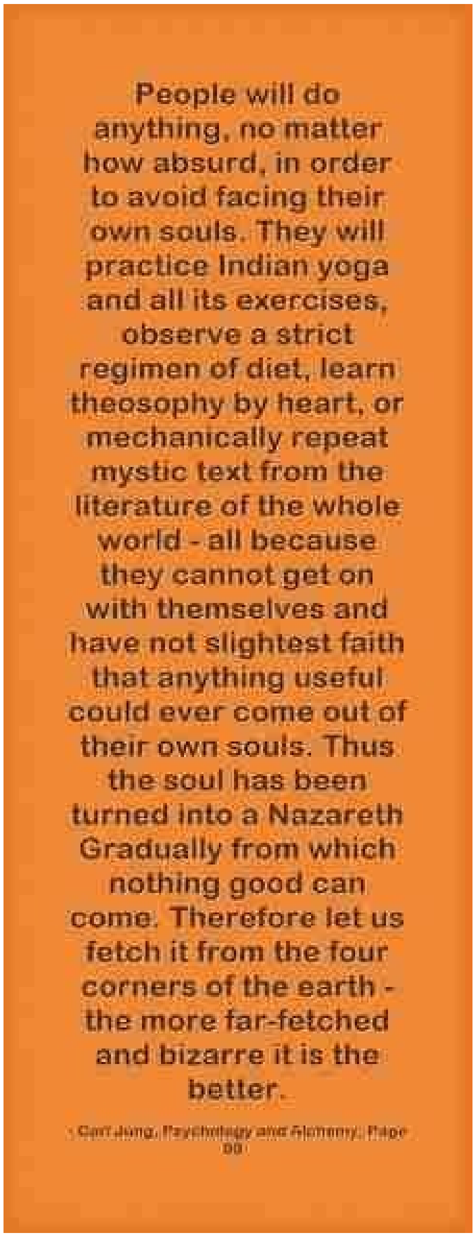
Half of tuberculosis cases are psychic. ~C. G. Jung – Richard Evans Interviews Transcript of the 1957 Films

~C. G. Jung – Richard Evans Interviews Transcript

[26]

You see, you have that lie detector in the United States, and that's like an association test I have worked out with the psycho-galvanic phenomenon. Also, we have done a lot of work on the Pneumograph which will show the decrease of volume of breathing under the influence of a complex. You know, one of the reasons for tuberculosis is the manifestation of a complex.

People have very shallow breathing; don't ventilate the aspices of their lungs anymore, and get tuberculosis. Half of tuberculosis cases are psychic. C.G. Jung – Richard Evans interviews Transcript of the 1957 films.



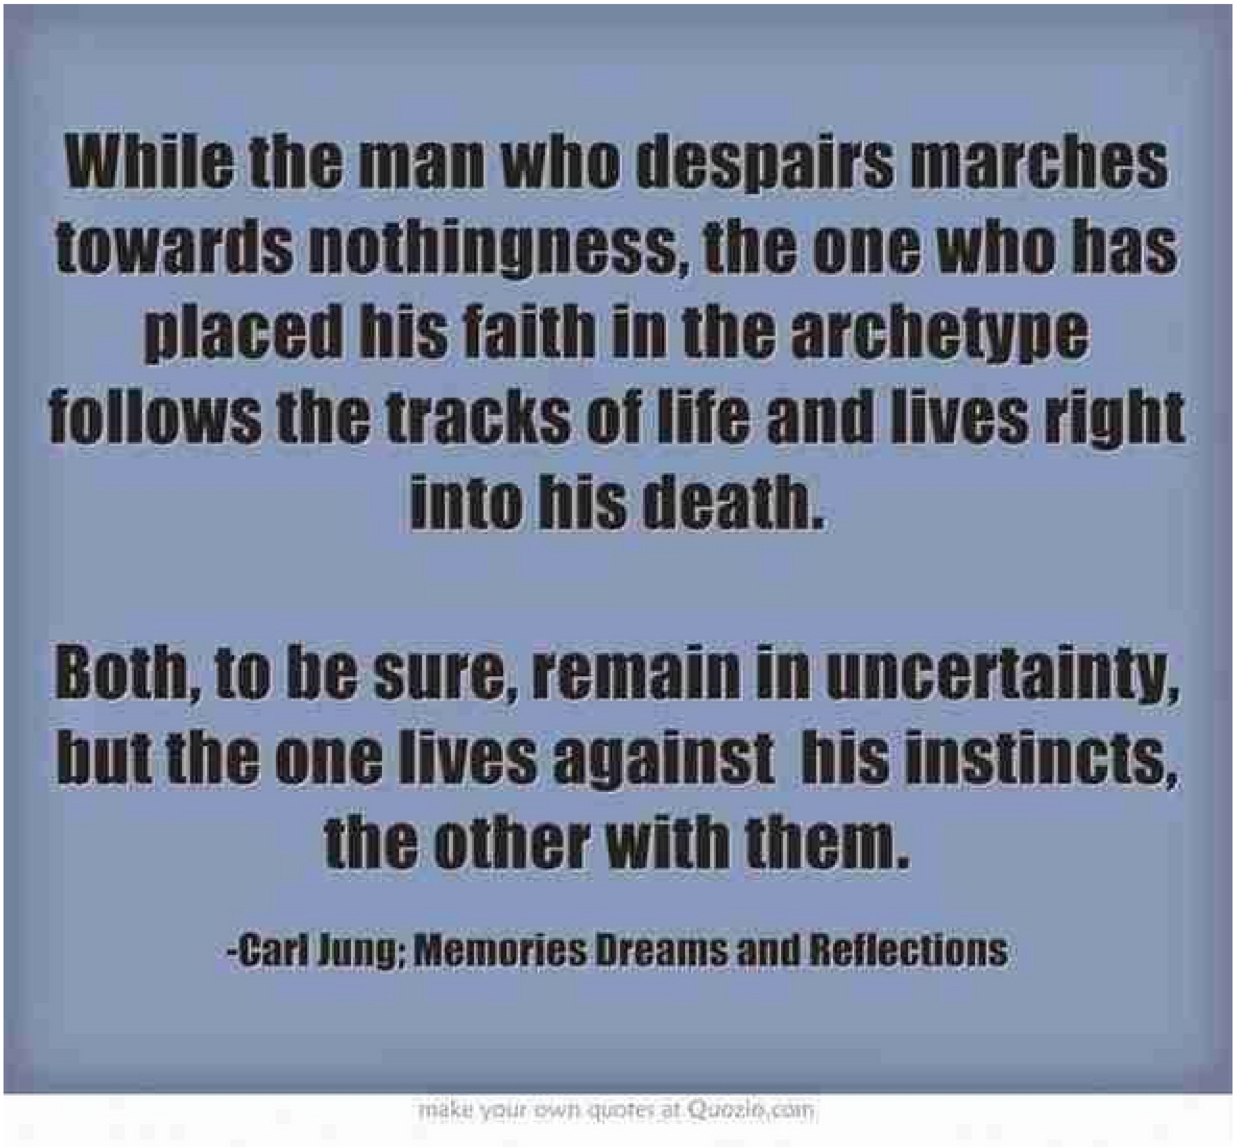
People will do anything, no matter how absurd, in order to avoid facing their own souls. They will practice Indian yoga and all its exercises, observe a strict regimen of diet, learn theosophy by heart, or mechanically repeat mystic text from the literature of the whole world - all because they cannot get on with themselves and have not slightest faith that anything useful could ever come out of their own souls. Thus the soul has been turned into a Nazareth Gradually from which nothing good can come. Therefore let us fetch it from the four corners of the earth - the more far-fetched and bizarre it is the better.

- Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 99

[27]

People will do anything, no matter how absurd, in order to avoid facing their own souls. They will practice Indian yoga and all its exercises, observe a strict regimen of diet, learn theosophy by heart, or mechanically repeat mystic text from the literature of the whole world - all because they cannot get on with themselves and have not slightest faith that anything useful could ever come out of their own souls. Thus the soul has been turned into a Nazareth Gradually from which nothing good can come. Therefore let us fetch it from the four corners of the earth - the more far-fetched and bizarre it is the better. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 99 .

[28]



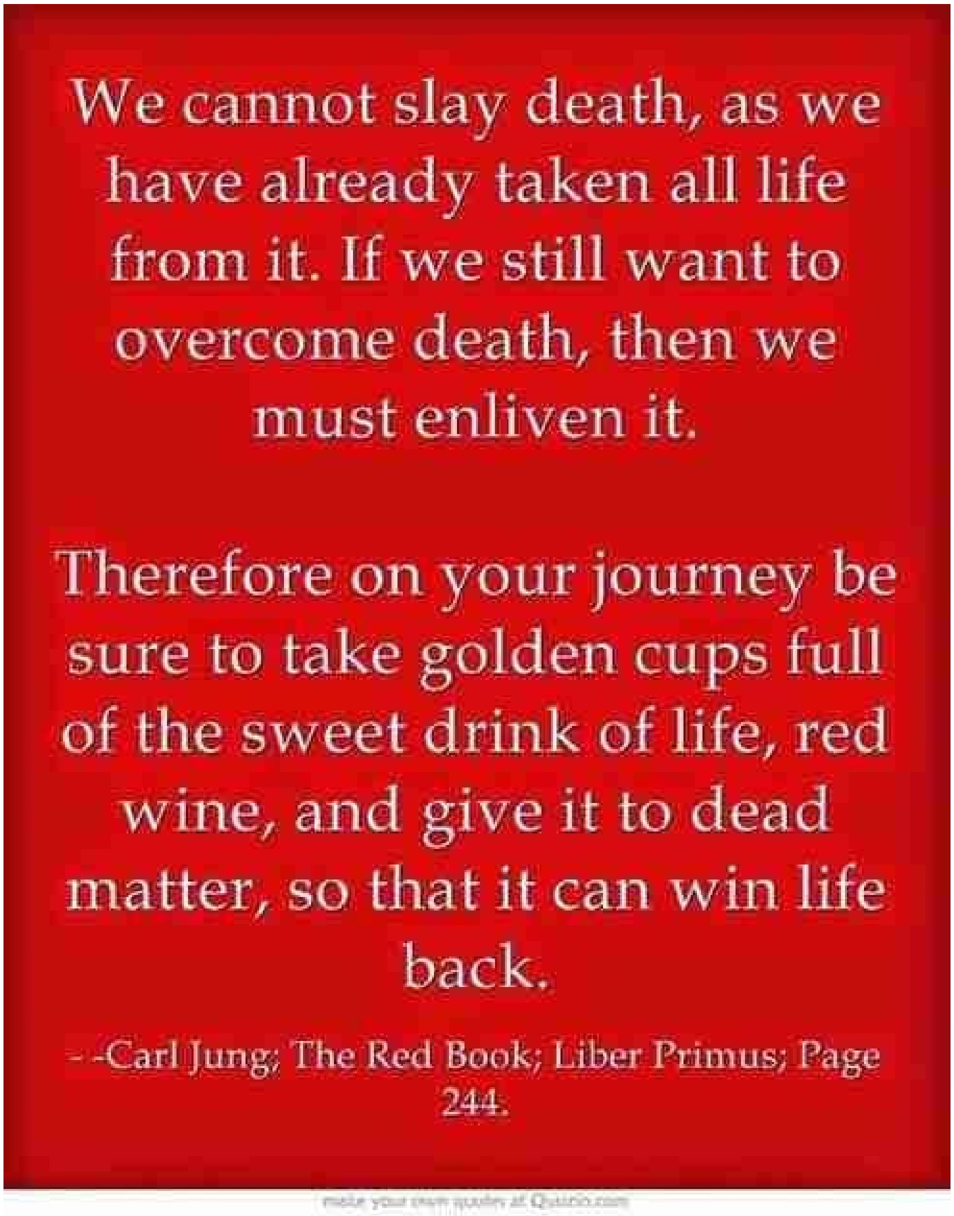
While the man who despairs marches towards nothingness, the one who has placed his faith in the archetype follows the tracks of life and lives right into his death.

Both, to be sure, remain in uncertainty, but the one lives against his instincts, the other with them.

-Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

While the man who despairs marches towards nothingness, the one who has placed his faith in the archetype follows the tracks of life and lives right into his death. Both, to be sure, remain in uncertainty, but the one lives against his instincts, the other with them. Carl Jung; MDR; Page 306.



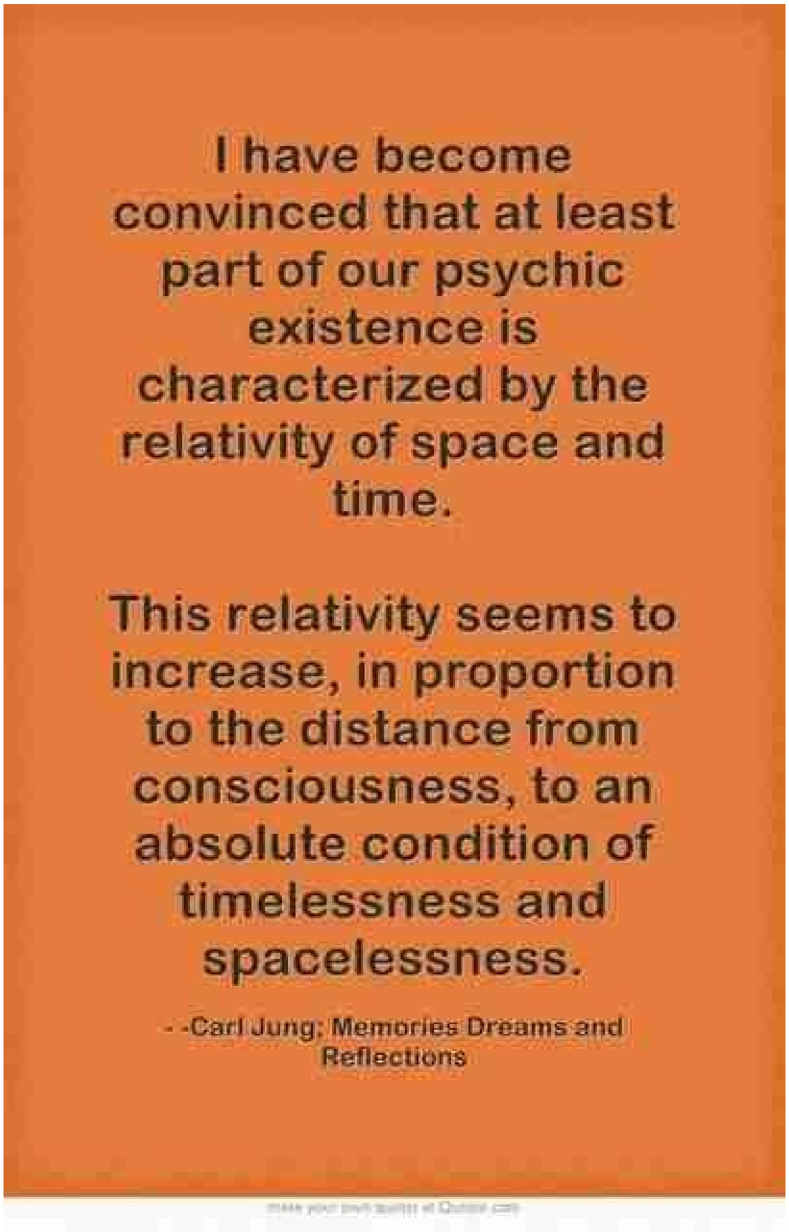
We cannot slay death, as we have already taken all life from it. If we still want to overcome death, then we must enliven it.

Therefore on your journey be sure to take golden cups full of the sweet drink of life, red wine, and give it to dead matter, so that it can win life back.

- -Carl Jung; The Red Book; Liber Primus; Page 244.

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

We cannot slay death, as we have already taken all life from it. If we still want to overcome death, then we must enliven it. Therefore on your journey be sure to take golden cups full of the sweet drink of life, red wine, and give it to dead matter, so that it can win life back. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 244.

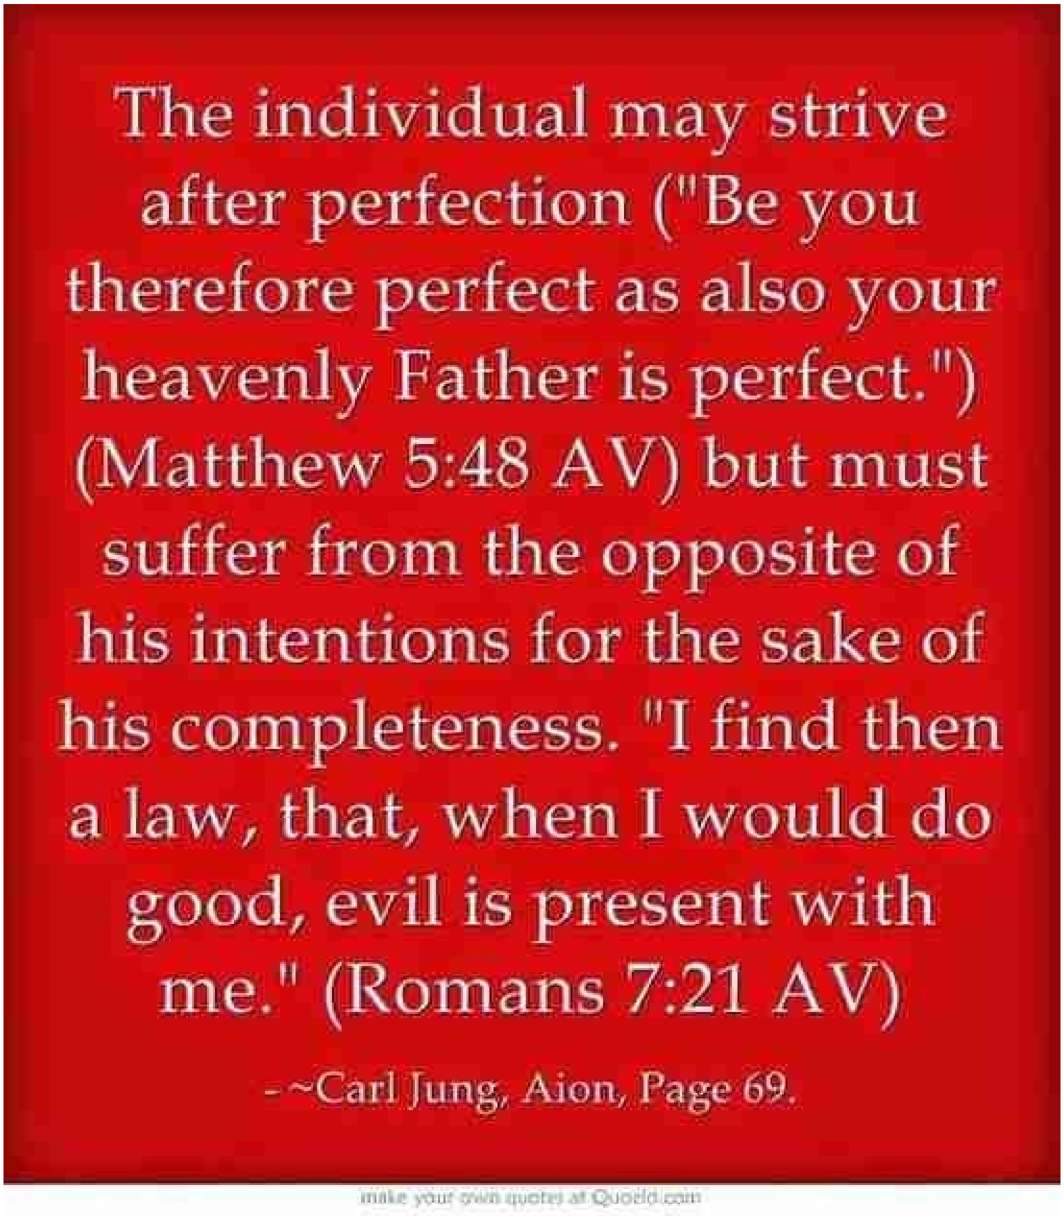


I have become convinced that at least part of our psychic existence is characterized by the relativity of space and time.

This relativity seems to increase, in proportion to the distance from consciousness, to an absolute condition of timelessness and spacelessness.

- -Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections

I have become convinced that at least part of our psychic existence is characterized by the relativity of space and time. This relativity seems to increase, in proportion to the distance from consciousness, to an absolute condition of timelessness and spacelessness. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 305.

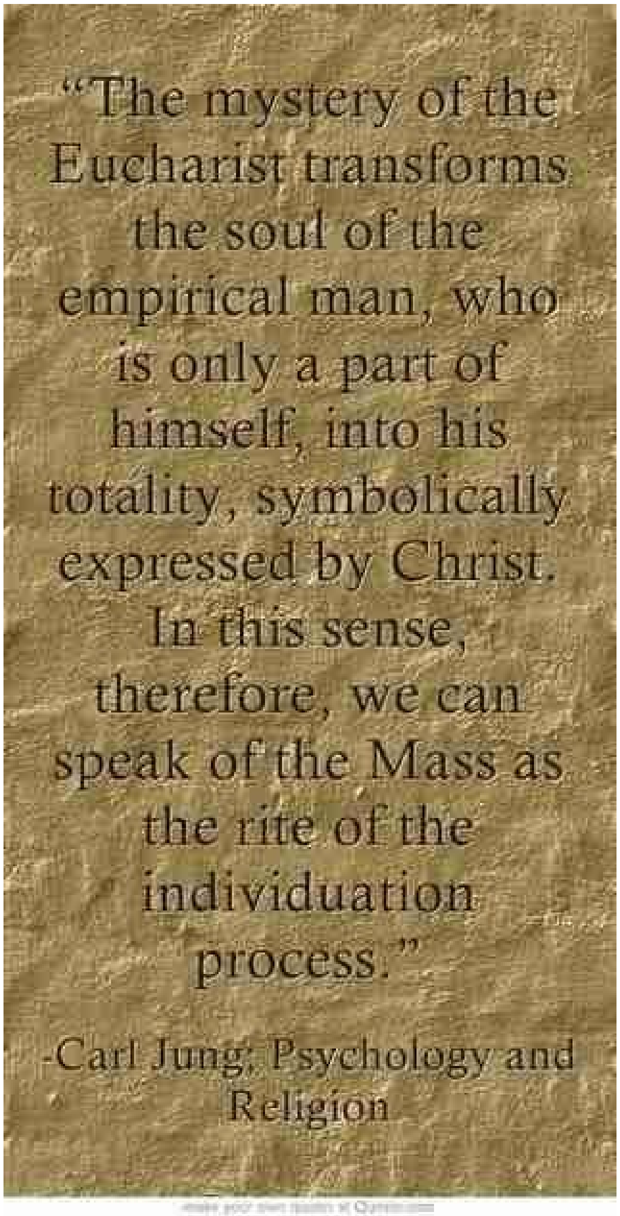


The individual may strive after perfection ("Be you therefore perfect as also your heavenly Father is perfect.") (Matthew 5:48 AV) but must suffer from the opposite of his intentions for the sake of his completeness. "I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me." (Romans 7:21 AV)

- ~Carl Jung, Aion, Page 69.

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

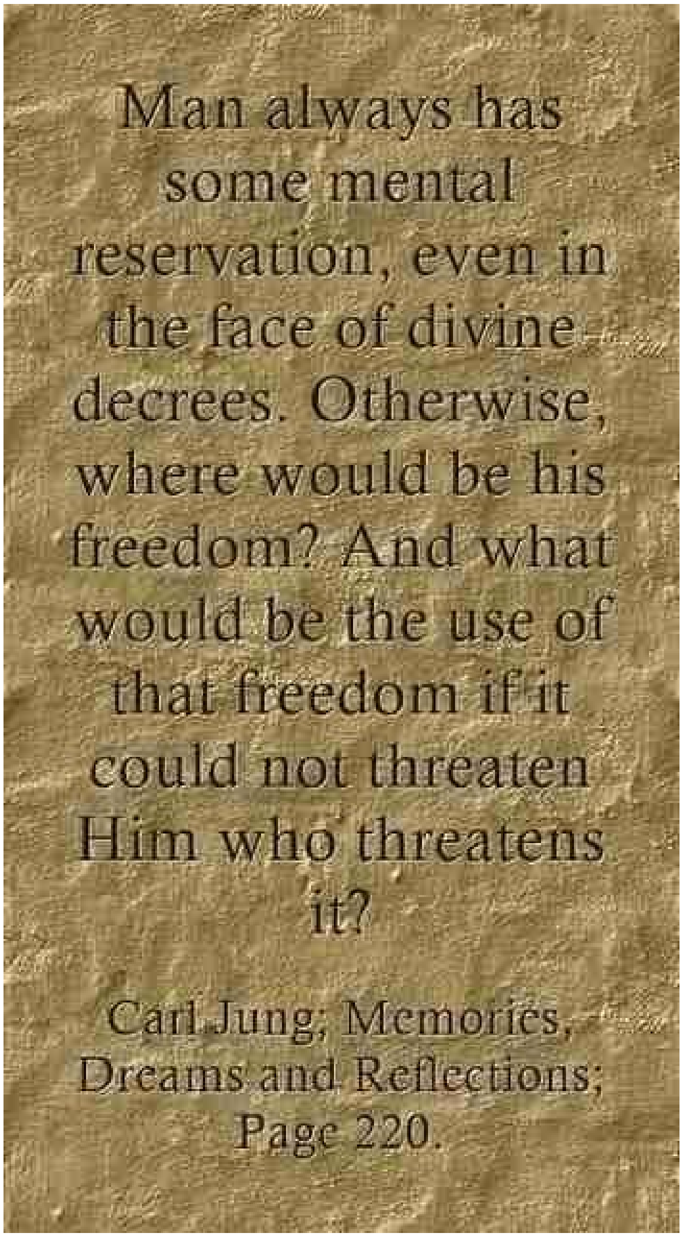
The individual may strive after perfection . . . but must suffer from the opposite of his intentions for the sake of his completeness. ["Christ, A Symbol of the Self, ibid” par. 123.]



"The mystery of the Eucharist transforms the soul of the empirical man, who is only a part of himself, into his totality, symbolically expressed by Christ. In this sense, therefore, we can speak of the Mass as the rite of the individuation process."

-Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion

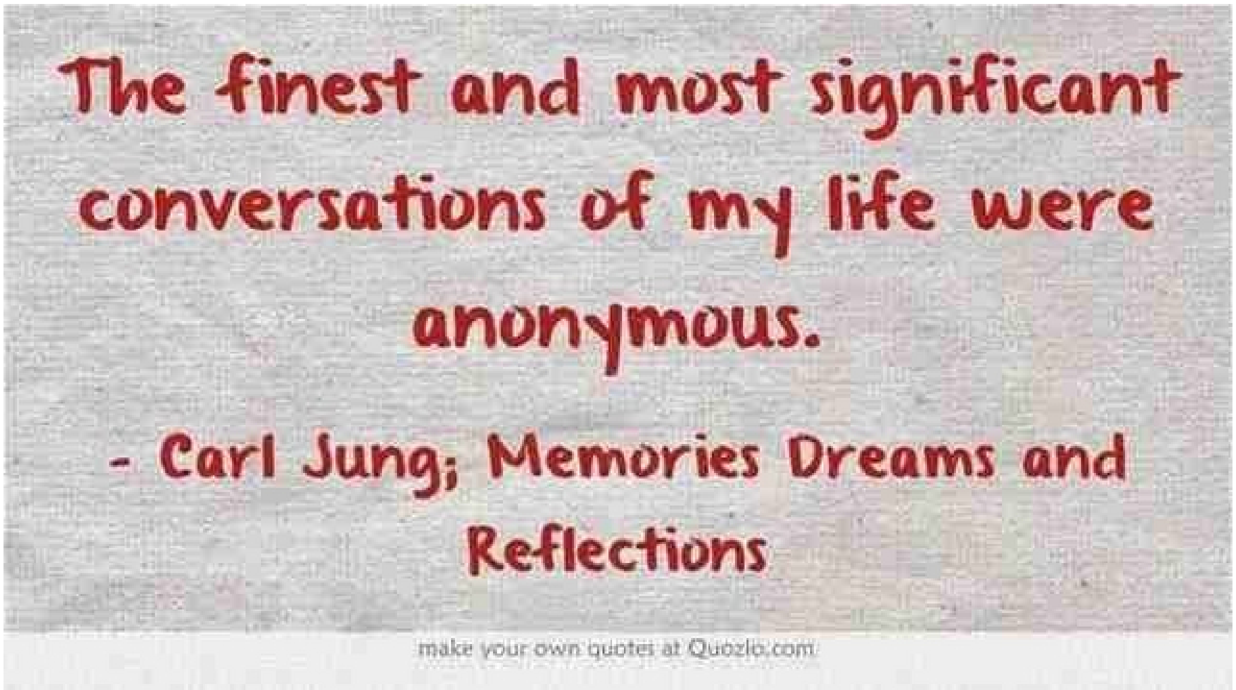
The mystery of the Eucharist transforms the soul of the empirical man, who is only a part of himself, into his totality, symbolically expressed by Christ. In this sense, therefore, we can speak of the Mass as the rite of the individuation process. Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion



Man always has some mental reservation, even in the face of divine decrees. Otherwise, where would be his freedom? And what would be the use of that freedom if it could not threaten Him who threatens it?

Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 220.

Man always has some mental reservation, even in the face of divine decrees. Otherwise, where would be his freedom? And what would be the use of that freedom if it could not threaten Him who threatens it?   Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 220



The finest and most significant conversations of my life were anonymous.

- Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections

make your own quotes at Quozlo.com

The finest and most significant conversations of my life were anonymous. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 145.

If thou wouldst complete the diamond body with no out-flowing.
Diligently heat the roots of consciousness and life.
Kindle light in the blessed country ever close at hand,
And there hidden, let thy true self always dwell.

- The Secret of the Golden Flower; Richard Wilhelm Translation

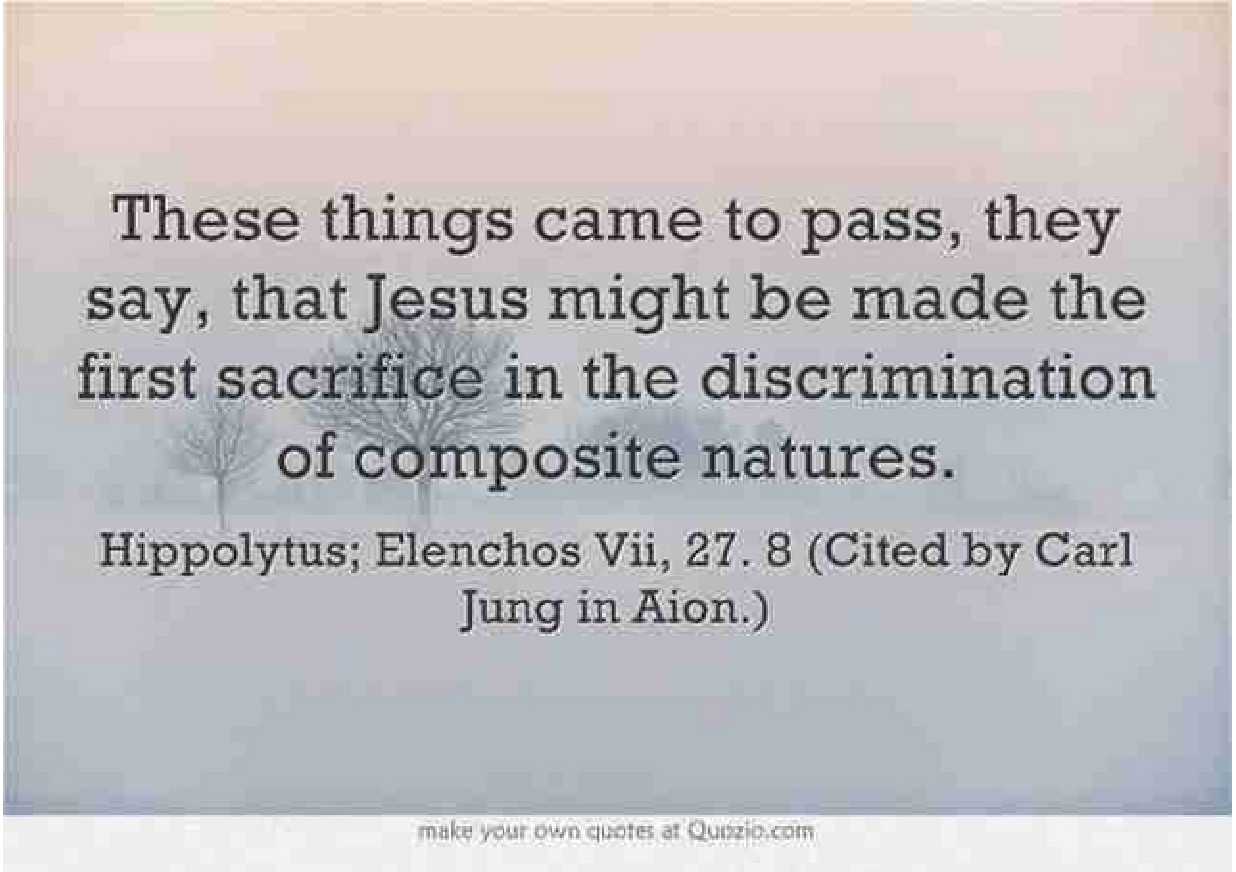
If thou wouldst complete the diamond body with no out-flowing. Diligently heat the roots of consciousness and life. Kindle light in the blessed country ever close at hand, And there hidden, let thy true self always dwell. Carl Jung; The Secret of the Golden Flower.

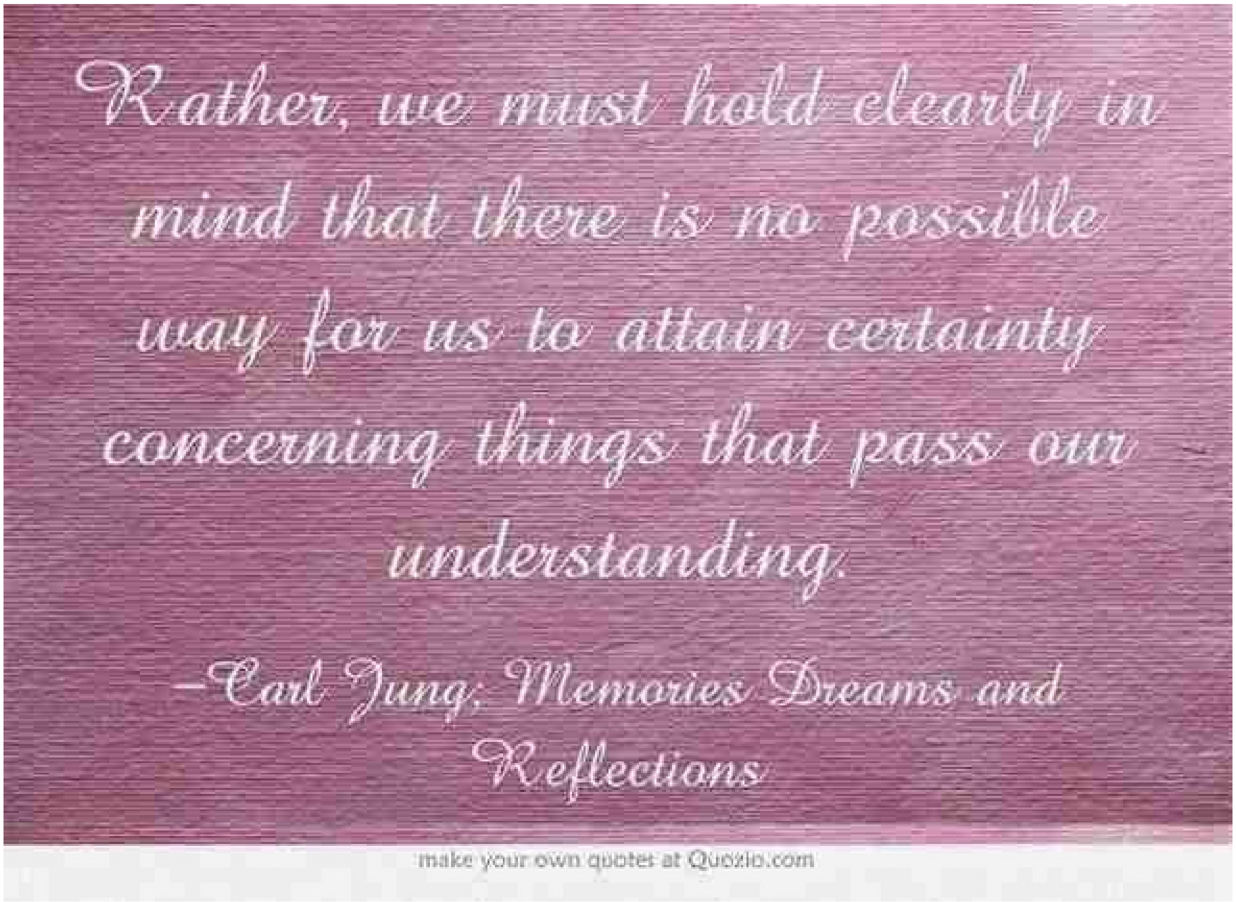


These things came to pass, they say, that Jesus might be made the first sacrifice in the discrimination of composite natures.

Hippolytus; Elenchos Vii, 27. 8 (Cited by Carl Jung in Aion.)

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

These things came to pass, they say, that Jesus might be made the first sacrifice in the discrimination of composite natures. Hippolytus; Elenchos vii; 27.8 (Cited by Carl Jung in Aion.)

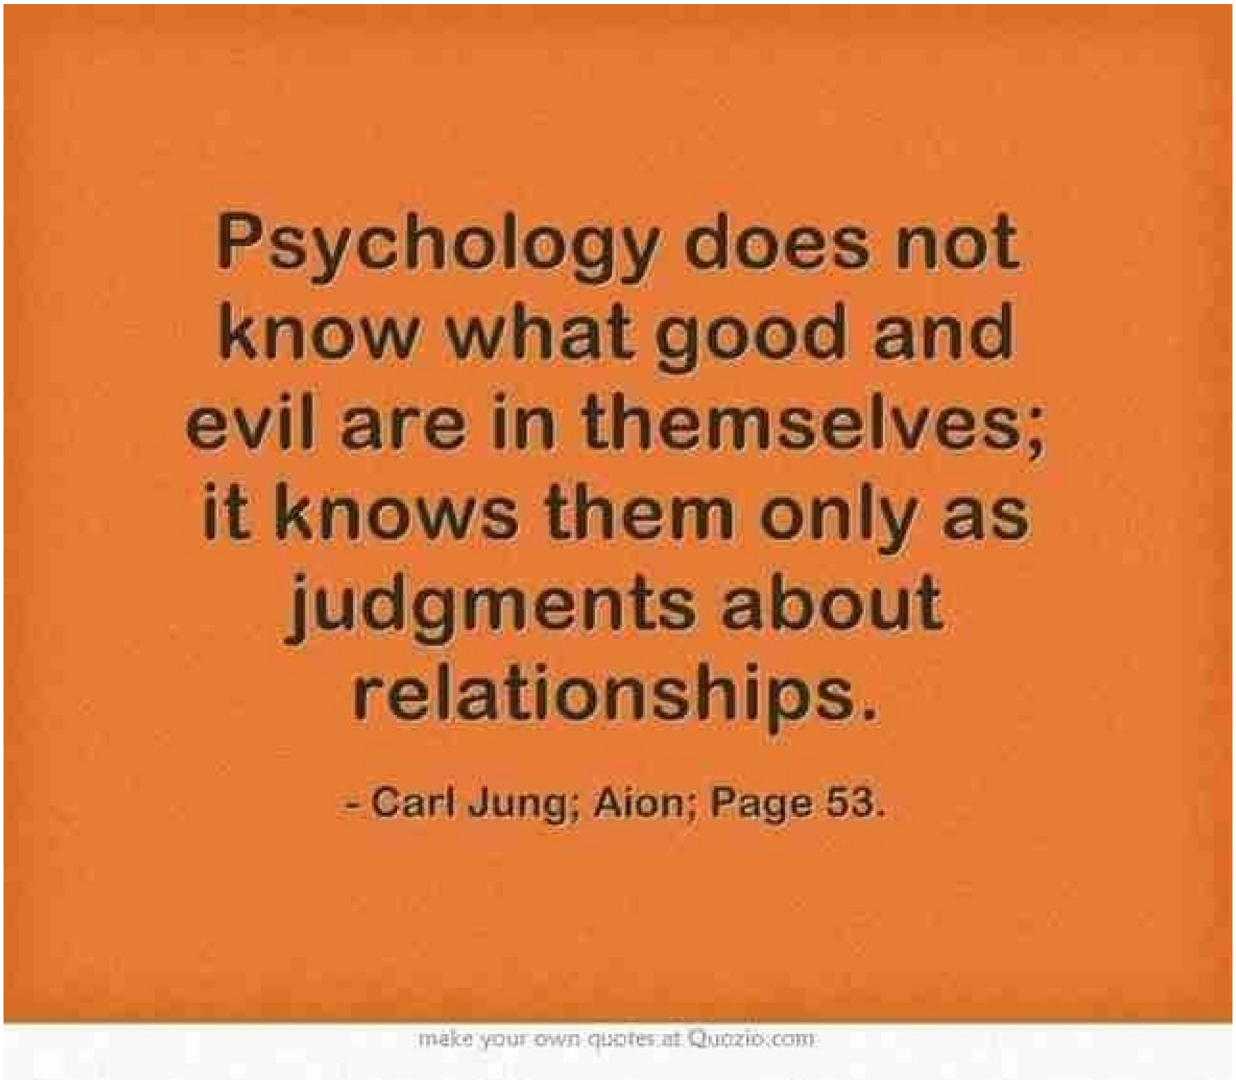


Rather, we must hold clearly in mind that there is no possible way for us to attain certainty concerning things that pass our understanding.

–Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

Rather, we must hold clearly in mind that there is no possible way for us to attain certainty concerning things that pass our understanding. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 300.



Psychology does not know what good and evil are in themselves; it knows them only as judgments about relationships.

- Carl Jung; Aion; Page 53.

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

Psychology does not know what good and evil are in themselves; it knows them only as judgments about relationships.
Carl Jung; Aion; Page 53.

Here the soul drew near to my ear and whispered, "The Gods are even happy to turn a blind eye from time to time, since basically they know very well that it would be bad for life if there were no exception to eternal law.
Hence their tolerance of the devil."

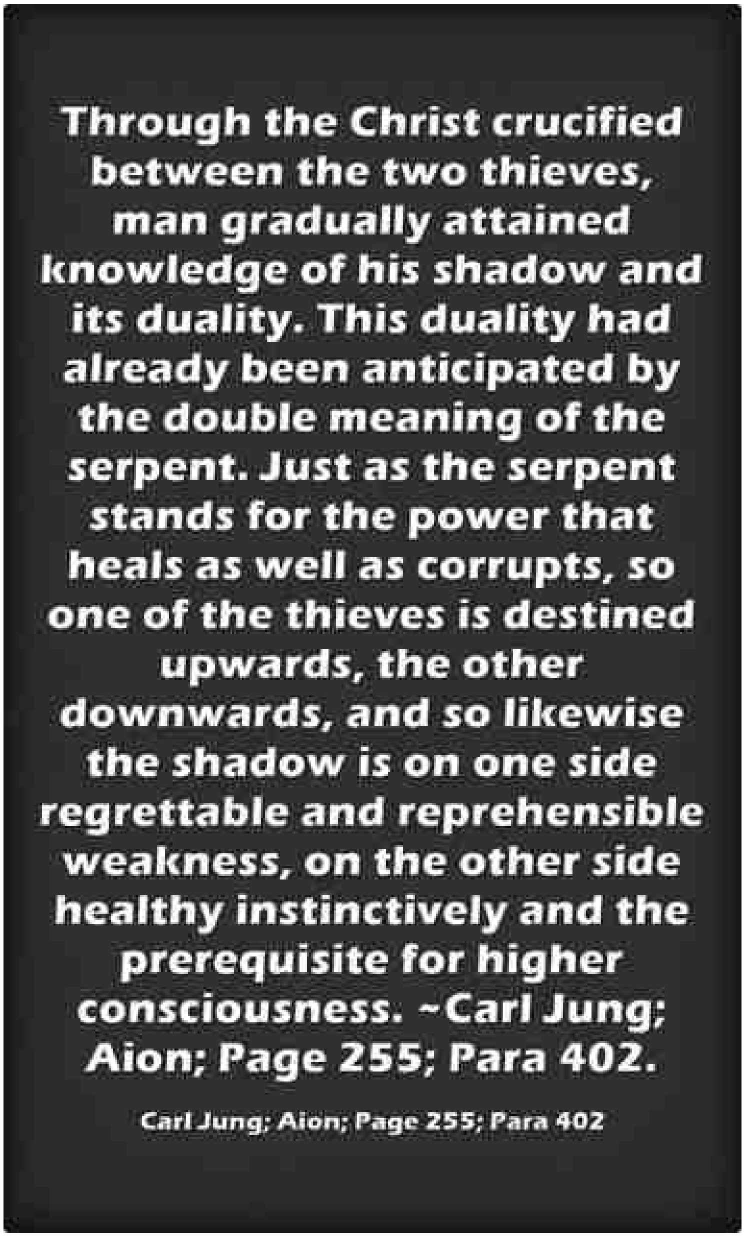
-Carl Jung; The Red Book; Scrutinies; Page 359.

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

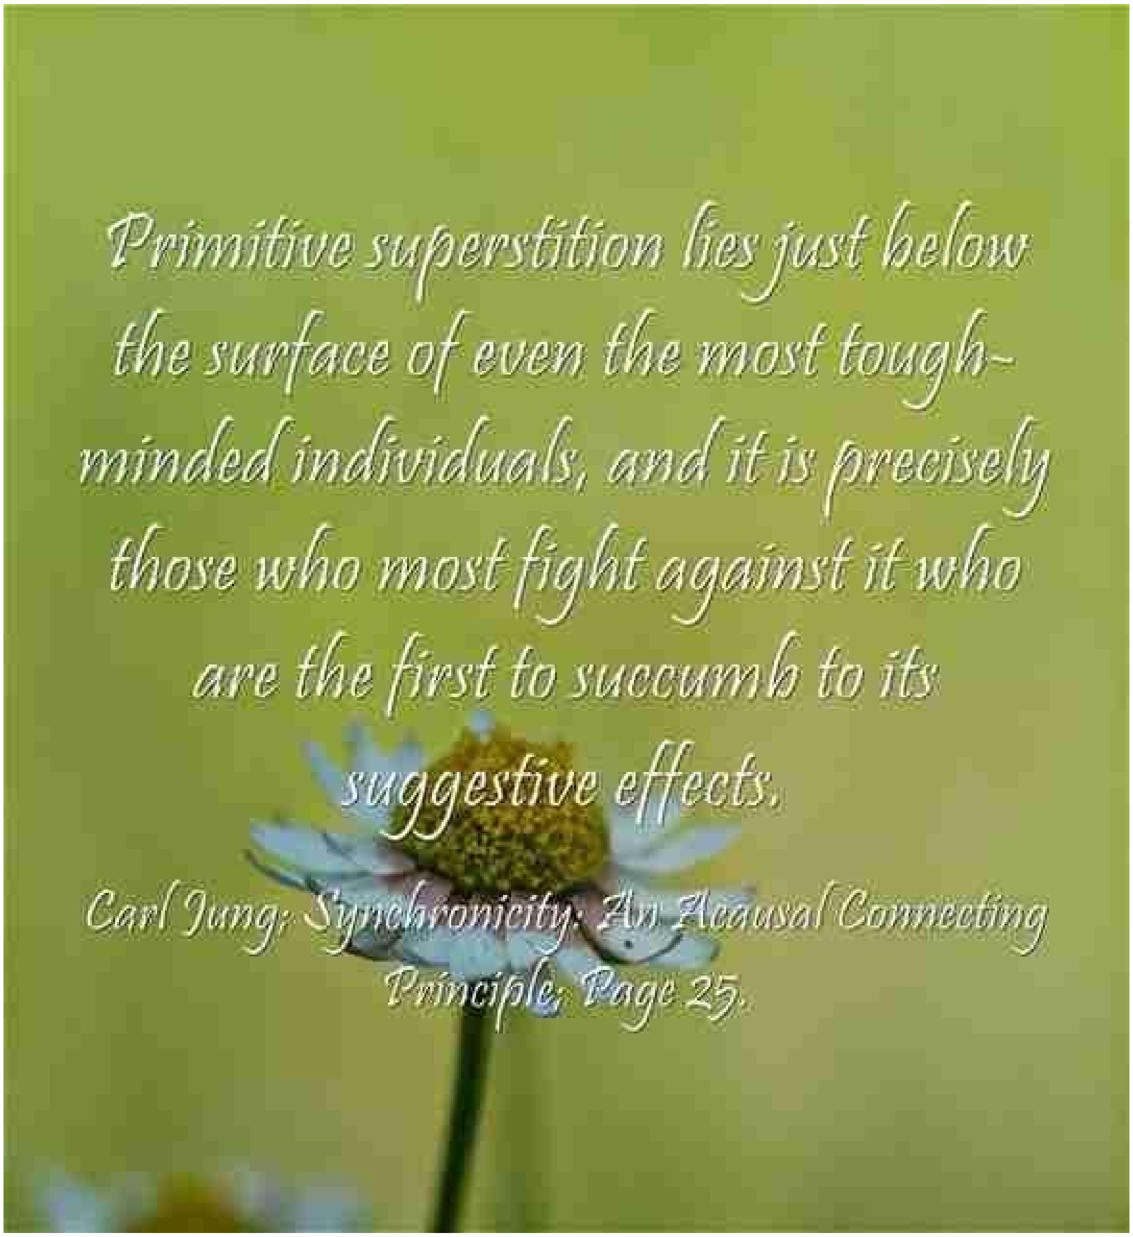
Here the soul drew near to my ear and whispered, "The Gods are even happy to turn a blind eye from time to time, since basically they know very well that it would be bad for life if there were no exception to eternal law. Hence their tolerance of the devil. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 359.



Through the Christ crucified between the two thieves, man gradually attained knowledge of his shadow and its duality. This duality had already been anticipated by the double meaning of the serpent. Just as the serpent stands for the power that heals as well as corrupts, so one of the thieves is destined upwards, the other downwards, and so likewise the shadow is on one side regrettable and reprehensible weakness, on the other side healthy instinctively and the prerequisite for higher consciousness. ~Carl Jung; Aion; Page 255; Para 402.

Carl Jung; Aion; Page 255; Para 402

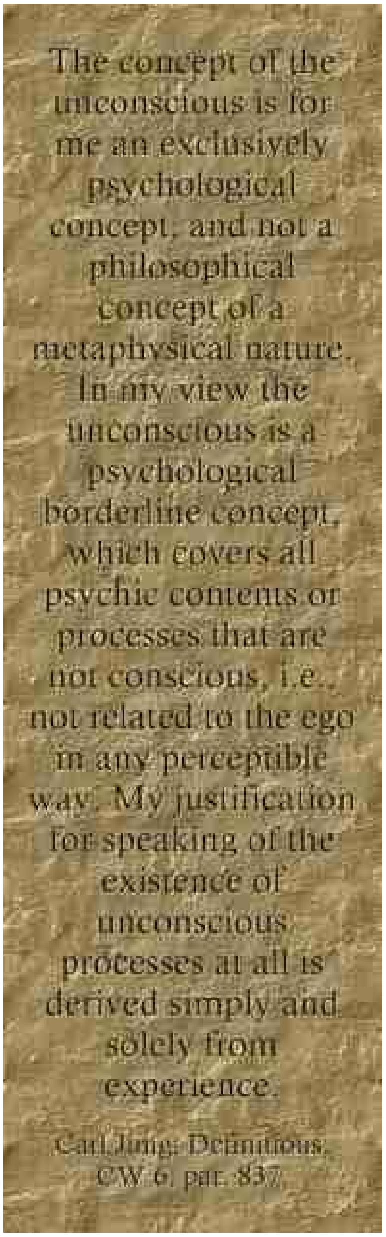
Through the Christ crucified between the two thieves, man gradually attained knowledge of his shadow and its duality. This duality had already been anticipated by the double meaning of the serpent. Just as the serpent stands for the power that heals as well as corrupts, so one of the thieves is destined upwards, the other downwards, and so likewise the shadow is on one side regrettable and reprehensible weakness, on the other side healthy instinctively and the prerequisite for higher consciousness. Carl Jung; Aion; Page 255; Para 402.



Primitive superstition lies just below the surface of even the most tough-minded individuals, and it is precisely those who most fight against it who are the first to succumb to its suggestive effects.

Carl Jung; Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle; Page 25.

Primitive superstition lies just below the surface of even the most tough-minded individuals, and it is precisely those who most fight against it who are the first to succumb to its suggestive effects. Carl Jung; Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle; Page 25.



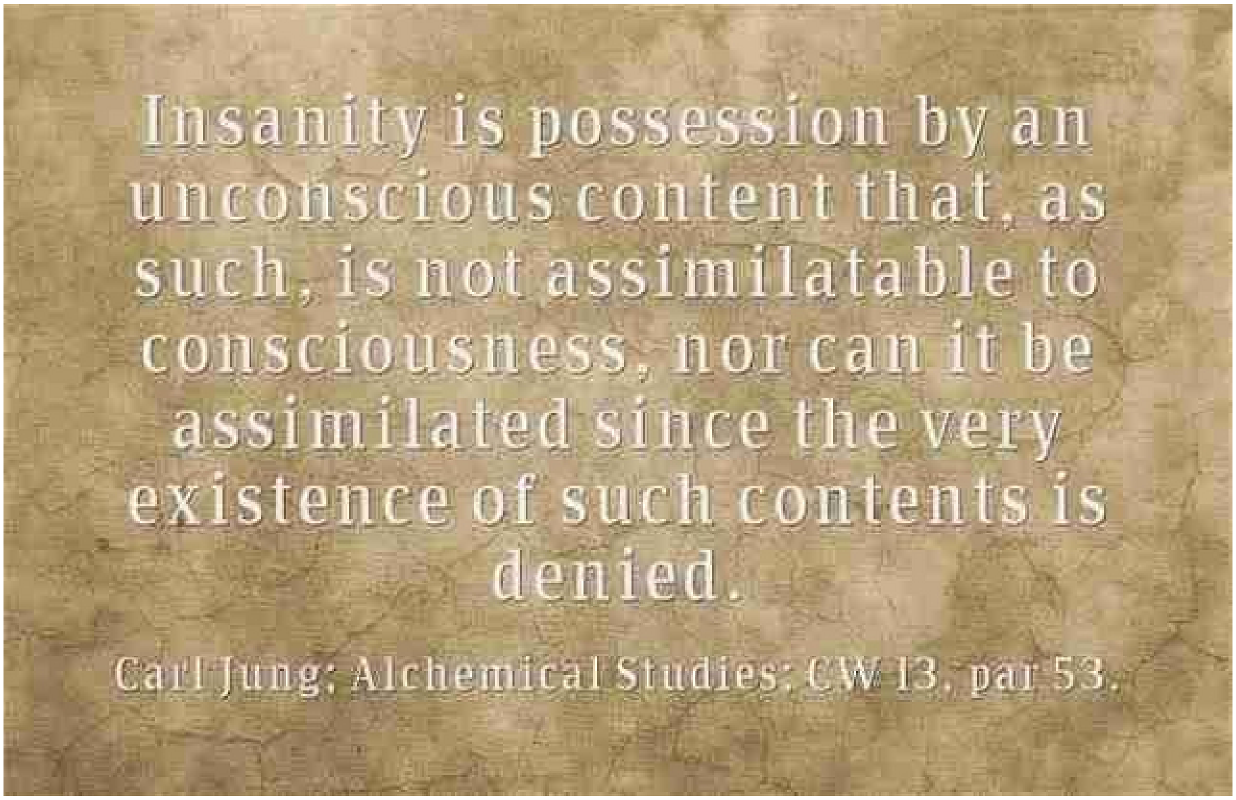
The concept of the unconscious is for me an exclusively psychological concept, and not a philosophical concept of a metaphysical nature. In my view the unconscious is a psychological borderline concept, which covers all psychic contents or processes that are not conscious, i.e., not related to the ego in any perceptible way. My justification for speaking of the existence of unconscious processes at all is derived simply and solely from experience.

Carl Jung: Definitions; CW 6, par. 837

[42]

The concept of the unconscious is for me an exclusively psychological concept, and not a philosophical concept of a metaphysical nature. In my view the unconscious is a psychological borderline concept, which covers all psychic contents or processes that are not conscious, i.e., not related to the ego in any perceptible way. My justification for speaking of the existence of unconscious processes at all is derived simply and solely from experience. Carl Jung; Definitions; CW 6, par. 837.

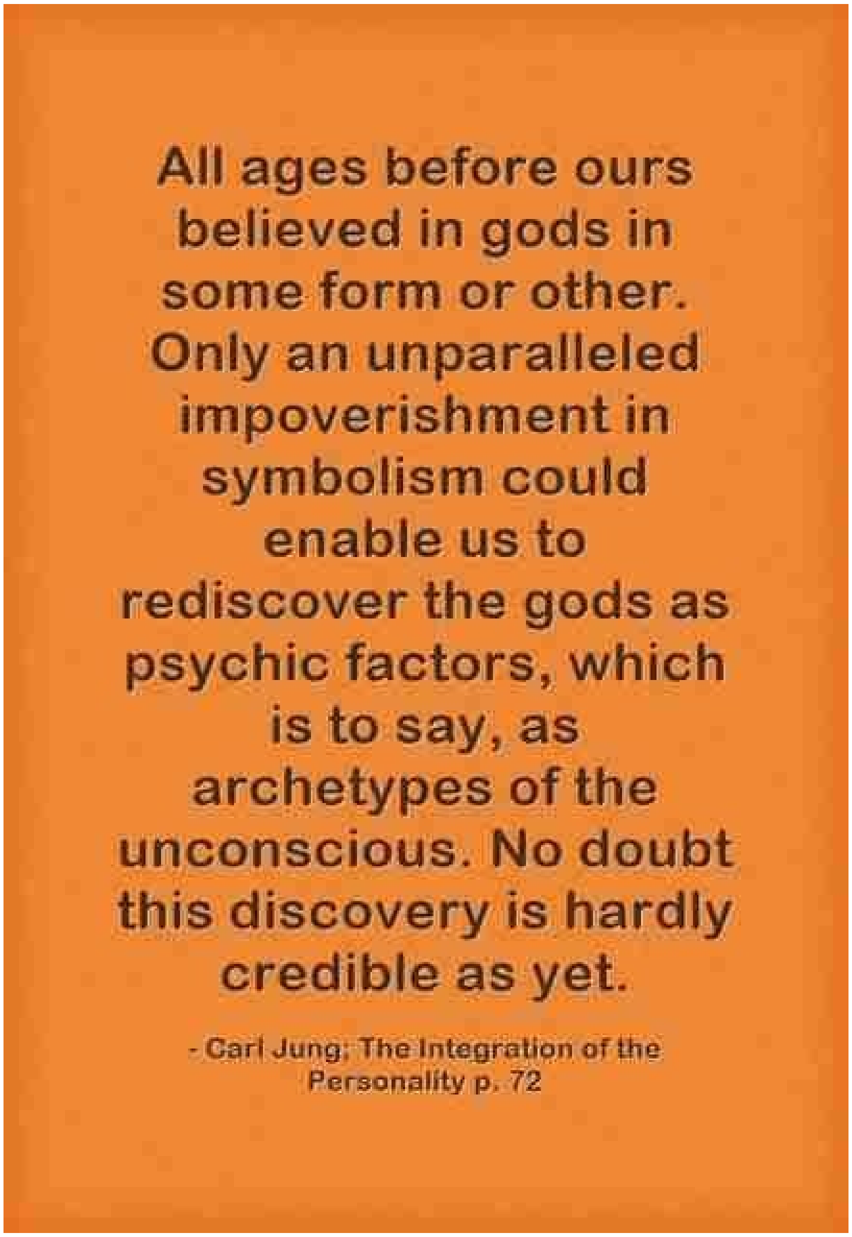
[43]



Insanity is possession by an unconscious content that, as such, is not assimilatable to consciousness, nor can it be assimilated since the very existence of such contents is denied.

Carl Jung; Alchemical Studies; CW 13, par 53.

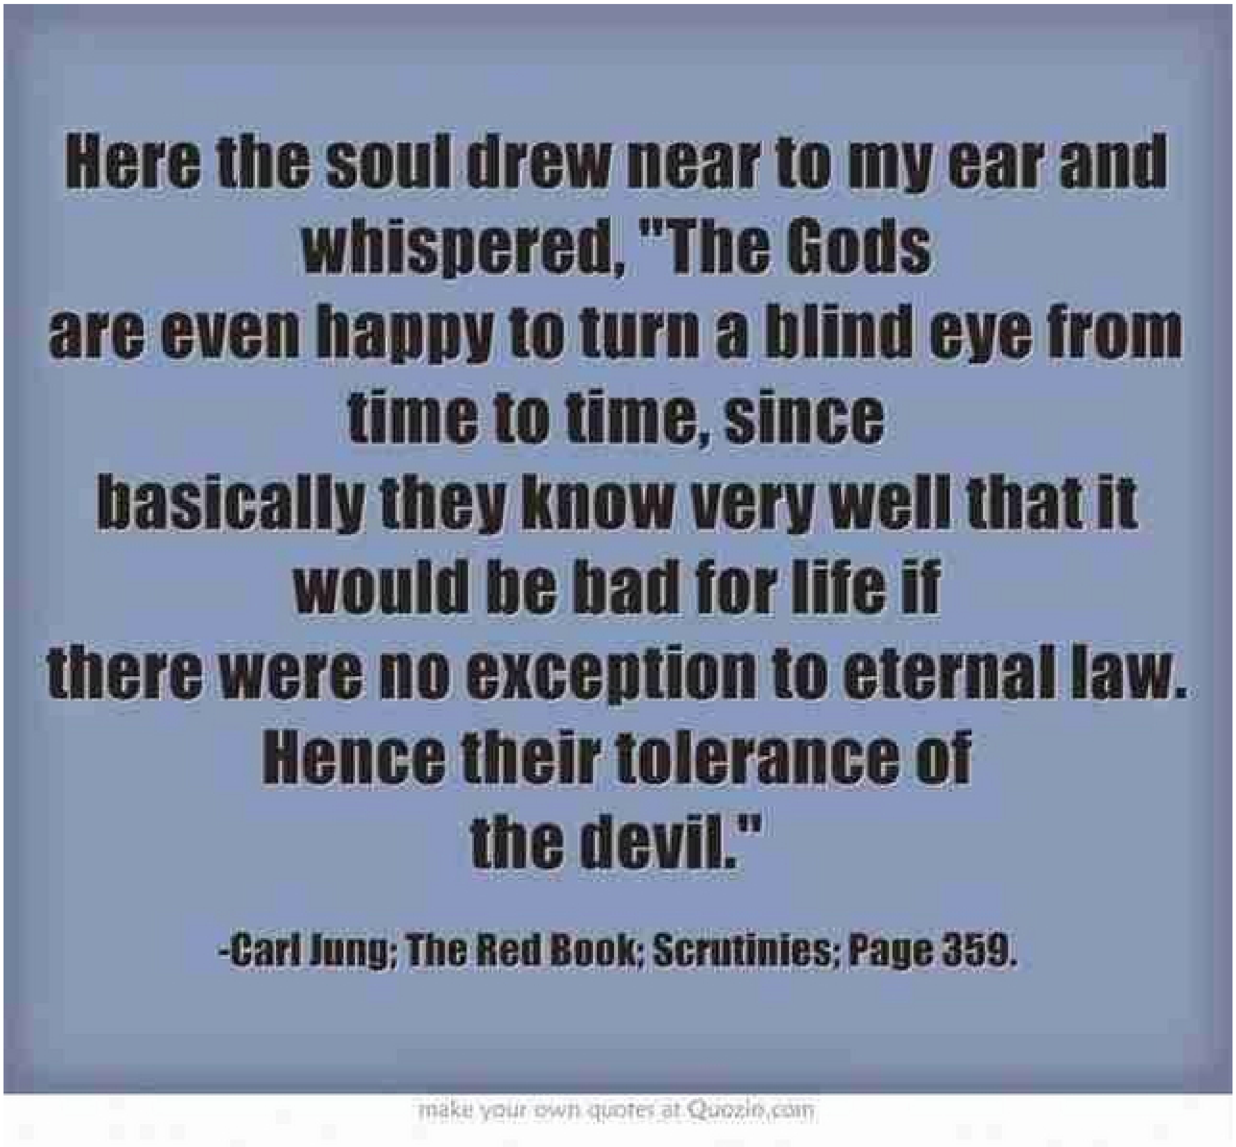
Insanity is possession by an unconscious content that, as such, is not assimilatable to consciousness, nor can it be assimilated since the very existence of such contents is denied. Carl Jung; Alchemical Studies; Collected Works 13, par 53.



All ages before ours believed in gods in some form or other. Only an unparalleled impoverishment in symbolism could enable us to rediscover the gods as psychic factors, which is to say, as archetypes of the unconscious. No doubt this discovery is hardly credible as yet.

- Carl Jung; The Integration of the Personality p. 72

All ages before ours believed in gods in some form or other. Only an unparalleled impoverishment in symbolism could enable us to rediscover the gods as psychic factors, which is to say, as archetypes of the unconscious. No doubt this discovery is hardly credible as yet. Carl Jung; The Integration of the Personality p. 72

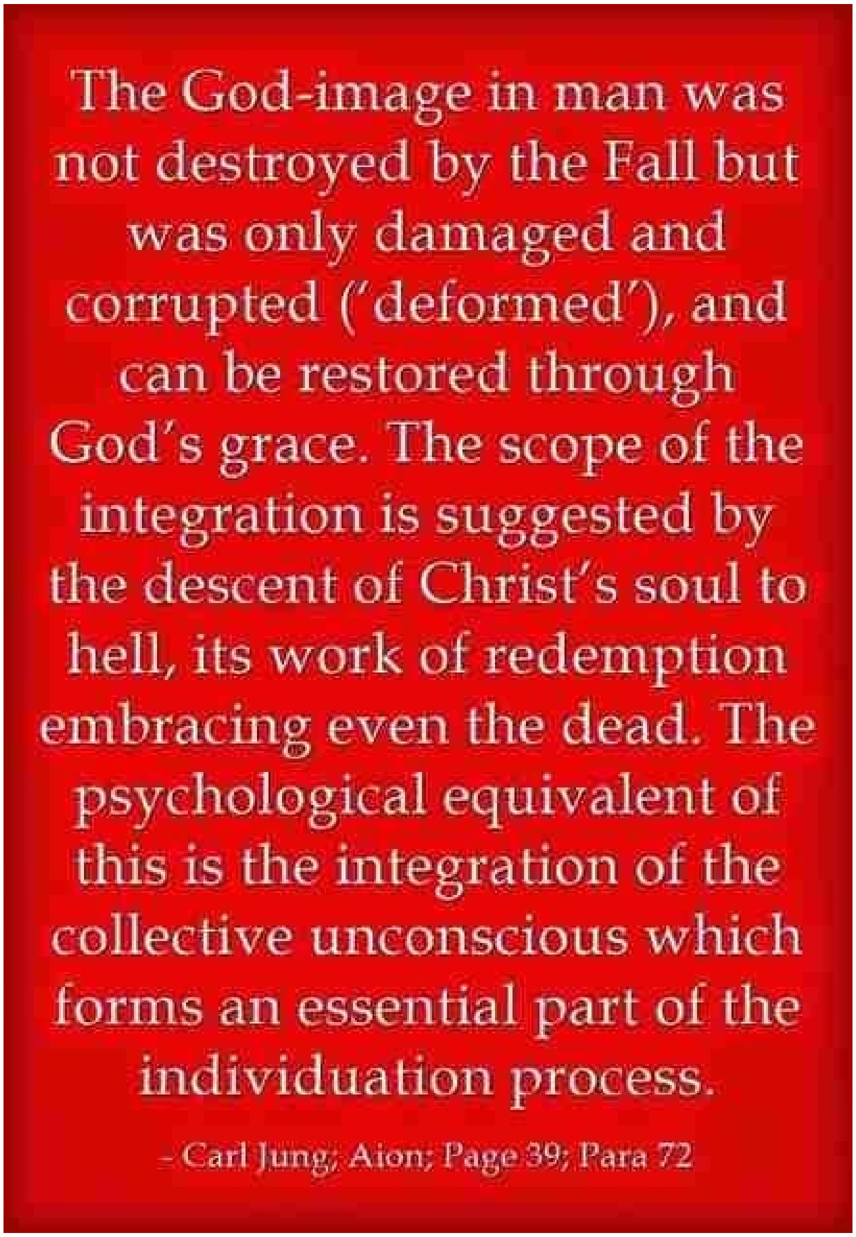


Here the soul drew near to my ear and whispered, "The Gods are even happy to turn a blind eye from time to time, since basically they know very well that it would be bad for life if there were no exception to eternal law. Hence their tolerance of the devil."

-Carl Jung; The Red Book; Scrutinies; Page 359.

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

Here the soul drew near to my ear and whispered, "The Gods are even happy to turn a blind eye from time to time, since basically they know very well that it would be bad for life if there were no exception to eternal law. Hence their tolerance of the devil. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 359.



The God-image in man was not destroyed by the Fall but was only damaged and corrupted ('deformed'), and can be restored through God's grace. The scope of the integration is suggested by the descent of Christ's soul to hell, its work of redemption embracing even the dead. The psychological equivalent of this is the integration of the collective unconscious which forms an essential part of the individuation process.

- Carl Jung; Aion; Page 39; Para 72

The God-image in man was not destroyed by the Fall but was only damaged and corrupted ('deformed'), and can be restored through God's grace. The scope of the integration is suggested by the descent of Christ's soul to hell, its work of redemption embracing even the dead. The psychological equivalent of this is the integration of the collective unconscious which forms an essential part of the individuation process. Carl Jung; Aion; Page 39; Para 72.

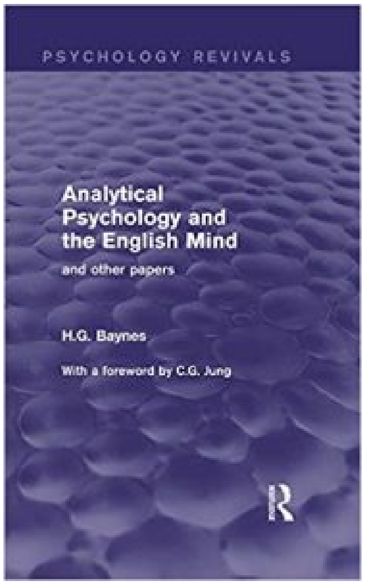
---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aac47-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2605.j`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7dda8-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2606.j`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/06d4b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2608.j`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f840c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2609.j`

5. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/50724-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2610.j
6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/34354-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2611.j
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c7ffc-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2612.j
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/caab1-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2613.j
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a5f2b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2614.j
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/96325-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2615.j
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/78b7c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2616.j
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cf767-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2617.j
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/96e4d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2618.j
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fd3ea-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2619.j
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/06037-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2620.j
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/45b6f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2621.j
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/666c9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2623.j
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/05d92-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2624.j
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/13e01-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2625.j
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fe047-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2626.j
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6f319-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2627.j
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6c749-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2628.j
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/46359-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2629.j
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e0665-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2630.j
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/79cf7-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2631.j
26. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/77620-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2632.j
27. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9574f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2633.j
28. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ace8b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2634.j
29. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/11b8d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2635.j

30. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ee547-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2636.j
31. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ba0c8-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2637.j
32. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/db4ee-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2638.j
33. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b7d96-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2639.j
34. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bb77b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2640.j
35. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0165b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2641.j
36. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/07db3-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2642.j
37. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f7340-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2643.j
38. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9dfa2-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2644.j
39. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2e6fd-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2645.j
40. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/992f7-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2646.j
41. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/19b45-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2647.j
42. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8c5b6-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2648.j
43. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7acb8-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2649.j
44. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d6cbf-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2650.j
45. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/14b7b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2651.j
46. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f8512-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2652.j

Carl Jung’s Foreword to "Analytical Psychology and the English Mind" by H.G. Baynes (2019-03-05 11:08)



PSYCHOLOGY REVIVALS
Analytical Psychology and the English Mind and other papers
H.G. Baynes
With a foreword by C.G. Jung
R

[1]Analytical Psychology and the English Mind (Psychology Revivals): And Other Papers

I write these few introductory words to this collection of essays and lectures in affectionate memory of their author.

The late H. G. Baynes was my assistant for several years, my travelling companion on our African expedition, and my faithful friend till his all too early death, which has left a painful gap in the circle of his friends and colleagues.

His first published work was his most excellent translation of my book Psychological Types.

Later he became well known as the author of two important works, Mythology of the Soul and Germany Possessed.

The first of these deals with the daily reality of the psychotherapist, and the second with contemporary events.

In Mythology of the Soul the author uses raw material—such as the psychotherapist meets with daily in his consulting hours—as a clue to guide the reader through the maze of individual reflections, opinions, interpretations and attempts at explanation which a psychologist gathers in the course of his experience.

The empirical material stimulates such considerations and they are also indispensable in order to integrate it in consciousness.

Germany Possessed is concerned with the great contemporary problems which form a direct challenge to the psychologically minded doctor.

This book made the author known to a very wide public.

His shorter writings, which have been collected in this present volume, deal with the complex psychic conditions characteristic of medical psychology.

Psychology is thus a discipline which obliges the medical psychologist to deal with complex psychic factors, for the psychotherapeutic process can only take place on this level.

Therefore analytical psychology is also rightly called ’complex psychology’.

A simplifying theory is naturally exceedingly popular in this highly complicated field, but the author has wisely resisted any such temptation.

In its place he has drawn from a really remarkable wealth of theoretical and practical points of view, and has opened up possibilities and connections worthy of further discussion.

H. G. Baynes left us too soon. May this volume, which he has left to us, become a milestone on the road of psychological research.

C. G. JUNG

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Analytical-Psychology-English-Mind-Revivals-ebook/dp/B00VA7H1MC/ref=sr_1_fkmrnull_1?keywords=H.G.+Baynes+english+mind&qid=1551801905&s=ga`

Carl Jung: Classification (By Type) did not interest me very much. (2019-03-05 14:20)

[1]

[Dr. Jung, he repeatedly made clear that his work on “Types” was not that of the “Classification of Individuals” as made quite clear in his letter to Mr. von Frange in 1960.]

Dear Mr. von Fange, April 1960

I have read your letter with great interest and I congratulate you on your attempt at further investigation in the field of typology.

It is a line of thought which I have not pursued any further, since my original tendency was not the classification of normal or pathological individuals but rather the discovery of conceptual means deriving from experience, namely the ways and means by which I could express in a comprehensible way the peculiarities of an individual psyche and the functional interplay of its elements.

As I have been chiefly interested in psychotherapy I was always mostly concerned with individuals needing explanation of themselves and knowledge of their fellow-beings.

My entirely empirical concepts were meant to form a sort of language by which such explanations could be communicated.

In my book about types I have given a number of examples illustrating my modus operandi.

Classification did not interest me very much.

It is a side-issue with only indirect importance to the therapist.

My book, as a matter of fact, was written to demonstrate the structural and functional aspect of certain typical elements of the psyche.

That such a means of communication and explanation could be used also as a means of classification was an aspect which I was rather afraid of, since the intellectually detached classifying point of view is just the thing to be avoided by the therapist.

But the classifying application was-1 almost regret to say-the first and almost exclusive way in which my book was understood, and everybody wondered why I had not put the description of the types right at the beginning of the book instead of relegating it to a later chapter.

Obviously the tendency of my book has been misunderstood, which is easily understandable if one takes into account that the number of those people who would be interested in its practical psychotherapeutic application is infinitely small in comparison with the number of academic students.

I admit that your statistical line of research is perfectly legitimate but it certainly does not coincide with the purpose of my book, which in my humble opinion aims at something far more vital than classification.

Though I have expressed my therapeutic views most emphatically only very few of my readers noticed them.

The possibility of classification seems to be far more attractive.

By this rather longwinded peroration I am trying to explain to you why I am more or less unable to give you any helpful suggestions in your specific enterprise, since my thoughts do not move on this line at all.

I am even sceptical in this respect.

I hold the conviction that for the purpose of any classification one should start with fundamental and indubitable principles and not with empirical notions, i.e., with almost colloquial terms based upon mere rules of thumb .

My concepts are merely meant to serve as a means of communication through colloquial language.

As principles however I should say that they are in themselves immensely complicated structures which can hardly fulfil the role of scientific principles.

Much more important are the contents conveyed by language than their terms.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 550-552.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/54dbe-12bboy.jpg`

Carl Jung: The black serpent symbolizes the introverting libido. Salome is the anima and Elijah the wise old man. (2019-03-05 14:47)

[1]

The black serpent symbolizes the introverting libido. Salome is the anima and Elijah the wise old man.

Salome, being instinctive and quite blind, needs the foreseeing eyes of wisdom that Elijah possesses.

The figure of the prophet is compensatory to that of the blind anima.

As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

As you remember, the real Salome was involved in incestuous relations with Herod, her stepfather, and it was because of the latter's love for her that she was able to get the head of John the Baptist.

I had read much mythology before this fantasy came to me, and all of this reading entered into the condensation of these figures.

The old man is a very typical figure.

One encounters him everywhere; he appears in all sorts of forms, and usually in company with a young girl. (See Rider Haggard: Wisdom's Daughter.)

Feeling-sensation is in opposition to the conscious intellect plus intuition, but the balance is insufficient.

When you assume the anima is due to the preponderance of the differentiated function in the conscious, the unconscious is balanced by a figure within itself that compensates the anima figure.

This is the old man Elijah.

It is as though you have a scale, and in the one side of the scale is the conscious, in the other the unconscious. This was one of my first hypotheses.
With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance.

In those days I saw a compensatory principle that seemed to show a balance between the conscious and unconscious.

But I saw later that the unconscious was balanced in itself.

It is the yea and the nay.

The unconscious is not at all exactly the opposite of the conscious.

It may be irrationally different.

You cannot deduce the unconscious from the conscious.

The unconscious is balanced in itself, as is the conscious.

When we meet an extravagant figure like Salome, we have a compensating figure in the unconscious.

If there were only such an evil figure as Salome, the conscious would have to build up a fence to keep this back, an exaggerated, fanatical, moral attitude.

But I had not this exaggerated moral attitude, so I suppose that Salome was compensated by Elijah.

When Elijah told me he was always with Salome, I thought it was almost blasphemous for him to say this.

I had the feeling of diving into an atmosphere that was cruel and full of blood.

This atmosphere was around Salome, and to hear Elijah declare that he was always in that company shocked me profoundly.

Elijah and Salome are together because they are pairs of opposites.

Elijah is an important figure in man's unconscious, not in woman's.

He is the man with prestige, the man with a low threshold of consciousness or with remarkable intuition.

In higher society he would be the wise man; compare Lao-tse.

He has the ability to get into touch with archetypes.

He will be surrounded with mana, and will arouse other men because he touches the archetypes in others.

He is fascinating and has a thrill about him. He is the wise man, the medicine man, the mana man.

Later on in evolution, this wise man becomes a spiritual image, a god, “the old one from the mountains” (compare Moses coming down from the mountain as lawgiver), the sorcerer of the tribe.

He is the legislator.

Even Christ was in company with Moses and Elijah in his transfiguration.

All great lawgivers and masters of the past, such as for example the Mahatmas of theosophical teaching, are thought of by theosophists as spiritual factors still in existence.

Thus the Dalai Lama is supposed by theosophists to be such a figure.

In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.

Christ is not quite suitable; he is too young to be the Mahatma.

The great man has to be given another role.

John the Baptist was the great wise man, teacher, and initiator, but he has been depotentiated.

The same archetype reappears in Goethe as Faust and as Zarathustra in Nietzsche, where Zarathustra came as a visitation.

Nietzsche has been gripped by the sudden animation of the great wise man.

This plays an important role in man’s psychology, as I have said, but unfortunately a less important part than that played by the anima.

The serpent is the animal, but the magical animal.

There is hardly anyone whose relation to a snake is neutral.

When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct.

Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has.

In primitive countries, you can easily see why man has acquired this instinct.

The Bedouins are afraid of scorpions and carry amulets to protect themselves, especially stones from certain Roman ruins.

So whenever a snake appears, you must think of a primordial feeling of fear.

The black color goes with this feeling, and also with the subterranean character of the snake.

It is hidden and therefore dangerous.

As animal it symbolizes something unconscious; it is the instinctive movement or tendency; it shows the way to the hidden treasure, or it guards the treasure.

The dragon is the mythological form of the snake.

The snake has a fascinating appeal, a peculiar attraction through fear. Some people are fascinated by this fear.
Things that are awe-inspiring and dangerous have an extraordinary attraction.

This combination of fear and attraction is shown, for instance, when a bird is hypnotized by a snake, for the bird flutters down to fight the snake, and then becomes attracted and held by the snake.

The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater.

The snake is also Yin, the dark female power.

The Chinese would not use the snake (i.e., dragon) as a symbol for Yin, but for Yang.

In Chinese [tradition], the Yin is symbolized by the tiger and the Yang by the dragon.

The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization.

It makes things real, makes them come into being, after the manner of Yin.

Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below.

There are mythological parallels.

Certain Negroes call the soul “My serpent”—they say, “My serpent said to me,” meaning “I had an idea.”
Therefore the serpent is also the symbol of wisdom, speaks the wise word of the depths.
It is quite chthonic, quite earth-born, like Erda, daughter of the earth. The dead heroes transform into serpents in the underworld.
In mythology, that which had been the sun-bird devours itself, goes into the earth, and comes up again. The Semenda Bird, like the phoenix, burns in order to renew itself.

Out of the ashes comes the snake, and out of the snake the bird again.

The snake is the transition from the Heaven-born, back again to the bird.

The snake encoils the vessel of Ra. In the Night Journey, in the Seventh Hour, Ra must fight the serpent.

Ra is supported by the ritual of the priests: if he kills the serpent, the sun rises, if he should not succeed, the sun would rise no more.

The serpent is the personification of the tendency to go into the depths and to deliver oneself over to the alluring world of shadows.

I had already engaged the old man in an interesting conversation; and, quite against all expectations, the old man had assumed a rather critical attitude toward my kind of thinking.

He said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air.

He said, “If you should see people in a room, you would not say that you made those people, or that you were responsible for them.”

Only then I learned psychological objectivity.

Only then could I say to a patient, “Be quiet, something is happening.” There are such things as mice in a house.
You cannot say you are wrong when you have a thought.

For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena.

We must have perfect objectivity.

A few evenings later, I felt that things should continue; so again I tried to follow the same procedure, but it would not descend.

I remained on the surface.

Then I realized I had a conflict in myself about going down, but I could not make out what it was, I only felt that two dark principles were fighting each other, two serpents.

There was a mountain ridge, a knife edge, on one side a sunny desert country, on the other side darkness.

I saw a white snake on the light side and a dark snake on the dark side.

They met in battle on the narrow ridge.

A dreadful conflict ensued.

Finally the head of the black snake turned white, and it retired, defeated.

I felt, “Now we can go on.”

Then the old man appeared high up on the rocky ridge.

We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring. I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.”
We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar. The old man climbed up on the altar.

At once he became small and so did the altar, while the walls grew bigger and bigger.

Then I saw a tiny house near the walls, and a tiny, tiny woman, like a doll, who turned out to be Salome.

I also saw the snake, but it too was very tiny.

The walls kept on growing, and then I realized that I was in the underworld, that the walls were those of a crater, and that this was the house of Salome and Elijah.

All this time, I did not grow, but kept my own size.

As the walls grew, Salome and Elijah grew a bit bigger.

I realized that I was at the bottom of the world.

Elijah smiled and said, “Why, it is just the same, above or below.”

Then a most disagreeable thing happened.

Salome became very interested in me, and she assumed that I could cure her blindness.

She began to worship me.

I said, “Why do you worship me?” She replied, “You are Christ.”

In spite of my objections she maintained this.

I said, “This is madness,” and became filled with skeptical resistance.

Then I saw the snake approach me. She came close and began to encircle me and press me in her coils.

The coils reached up to my heart.

I realized as I struggled, that I had assumed the attitude of the Crucifixion.

In the agony and the struggle, I sweated so profusely that the water flowed down on all sides of me.

Then Salome rose, and she could see.

While the snake was pressing me, I felt that my face had taken on the face of an animal of prey, a lion or a tiger.

The interpretation of these dreams is this:

First the fight of the two snakes: the white means a movement into the day, the black into the kingdom of darkness, with moral aspects too.

There was a real conflict in me, a resistance to going down. My stronger tendency was to go up.

Because I had been so impressed the day before with the cruelty of the place I had seen,

I really had a tendency to find a way to the conscious by going up, as I did on the mountain.

The mountain was the kingdom of the sun, and the ring-wall was the vessel in which people had gathered the sun.

Elijah had said that it was just the same below or above. Compare Dante's Inferno.

The Gnostics express this same idea in the symbol of the reversed cones.

Thus the mountain and the crater are similar.

There was nothing of conscious structure in these fantasies, they were just events that happened.

So I assume that Dante got his ideas from the same archetypes.

I have seen these ideas very often in patients—the upper and the lower cones, things above and things below.

Salome's approach and her worshiping of me is obviously that side of the inferior function which is surrounded by an aura of evil.

I felt her insinuations as a most evil spell.

One is assailed by the fear that perhaps this is madness.

This is how madness begins, this is madness.

For example, in a certain Russian book there is a story of a man who fears he will go mad.

Lying in bed at night, he sees a bright square of moonlight in the middle of the room.

He says to himself, "If I should sit there and howl like a dog, then I would be mad, but I am not doing it so I am not mad."

Then he tries to dismiss this thought, but after a while he says to himself, "I might sit there and howl like a dog, knowing it and choosing it, and still I would not be mad."

Again he tries to put the thought away, but finally he can resist it no longer—he gets up and sits in the moonlight and howls like a dog, and then he is mad.

You cannot get conscious of these unconscious facts without giving yourself to them.

If you can overcome your fear of the unconscious and can let yourself down, then these facts take on a life of their own.

You can be gripped by these ideas so that you really go mad, or nearly so.

These images have so much reality that they recommend themselves, and such extraordinary meaning that one is caught.

They form part of the ancient mysteries; in fact, it is such figures that made the mysteries.

Compare the mysteries of Isis as told in Apuleius, with the initiation and deification of the initiate.

Awe surrounds the mysteries, particularly the mystery of deification.

This was one of the most important of the mysteries; it gave the immortal value to the individual—it gave certainty of immortality.

One gets a peculiar feeling from being put through such an initiation.

The important part that led up to the deification was the snake's encoiling of me. Salome's performance was deification.

The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake's head resting on the man's head, and the face of the man that of a lion.

This statue has only been found in the mystery grottoes (the under-churches, the last remnants of the catacombs).

The catacombs were not originally places of concealment, but were chosen as symbolical of a descent into the underworld.

It was also part of those early conceptions that the saints should be buried with the martyrs in order to go down into the earth before rising again.

The Dionysian mysteries have the same idea.

When the catacombs decayed, the idea of the church continued.

The Mithraic religion also had an underground church, and only initiates assisted at the underground ceremonies.

Holes were cut in the walls of the underground portion in order that lay people might hear in the church above what was being said by the initiates in the church below.

The lower church was fitted up with divans or cubicles placed opposite each other. Bells were used in the ceremony, and bread marked with a cross.
We know that they celebrated a sacramental meal where this bread was eaten with water instead of wine. The Mithraic cult was strictly ascetic.
No women were admitted as members.

It is almost certain that the symbolical rite of deification played a part in these mysteries. The lion-headed god encoiled by the snake was called Aion, or the eternal being.
He derives from a Persian deity, Zrwanakarana, which word means "the infinitely long duration."

Another very interesting symbol in this cult is the Mithraic amphora with flame arising from it, and the lion on one side with the snake on the other, both trying to get at the fire.

The lion is the young, hot, dry July sun in culmination of light, the summer. The serpent is humidity, darkness, the earth, winter.
They are the opposites of the world trying to come together with the reconciling symbol between them.

It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925—see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains).

Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics.

It is of course a man's symbol, a symbol of the womb—the creative womb of the man out of which rises the fire.

When the pairs of opposites come together, something divine happens, and then it is immortality, the eternal, creative time.

Wherever there is generation there is time, therefore Chronos is God of Time, Fire, and Light.

In this deification mystery you make yourself into the vessel, and are a vessel of creation in which the opposites reconcile.

The more these images are realized, the more you will be gripped by them.

When the images come to you and are not understood, you are in the society of the gods or, if you will, the lunatic society; you are no longer in human society, for you cannot express yourself.

Only when you can say, "This image is so and so," only then do you remain in human society.

Anybody could be caught by these things and lost in them—some throw the experience away saying it is all nonsense, and thereby losing their best value, for these are the creative images.

Another may identify himself with the images and become a crank or a fool.

Question: What is the date of this dream?

Dr. Jung: December 1913.

All this is Mithraic symbolism from beginning to end. In 1910 I had a dream of a Gothic cathedral in which Mass was being celebrated.

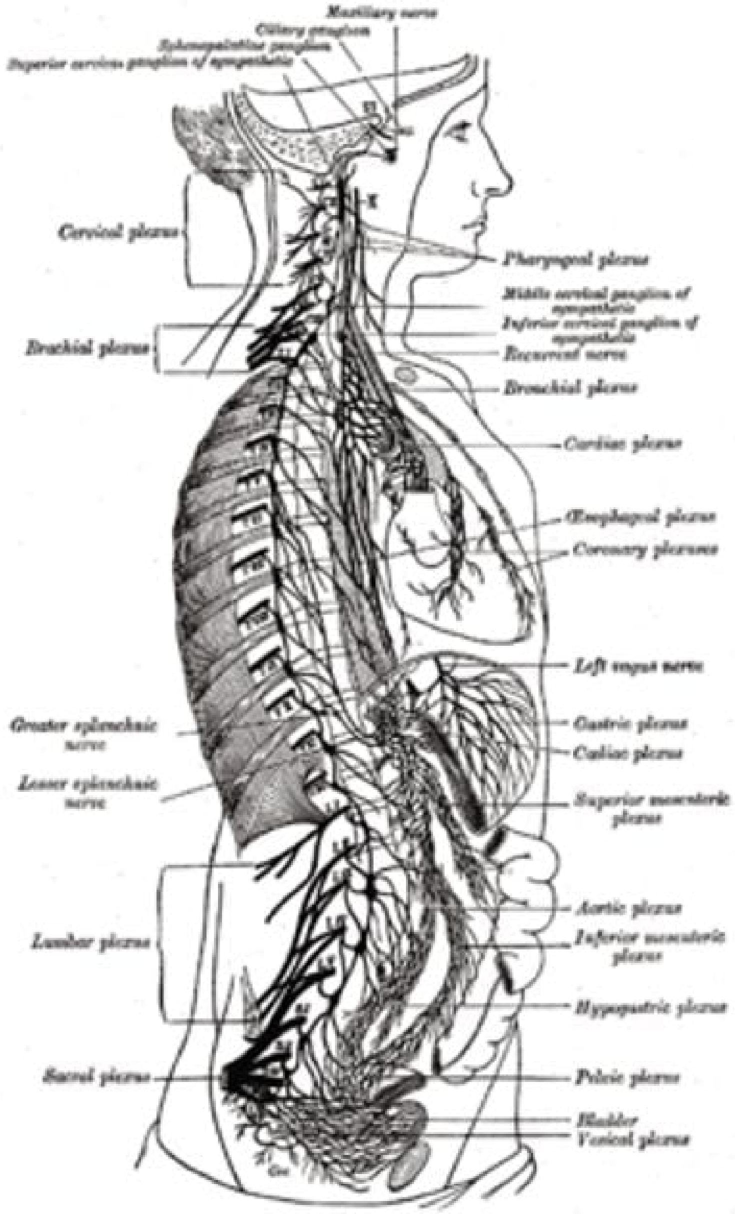
Suddenly the whole side wall of the cathedral caved in, and herds of cattle, with ringing bells, trooped into the church.

You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 99-108

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c2047-12bblack.jpg`

The Sympathetic Nervous System [Anima Mundi] Mother of the Brain (2019-03-05 15:50)

[1]



Maxillary nerve
Ciliary ganglion
Sphenopalatine ganglion
Superior cervical ganglion of sympathetic
Cervical plexus
Pharyngeal plexus
Middle cervical ganglion of sympathetic
Inferior cervical ganglion of sympathetic
Brachial plexus
Recurrent nerve
Bronchial plexus
Cardiac plexus
Œsophageal plexus
Coronary plexuses
Left vagus nerve
Gastric plexus
Greater splanchnic nerve
Cœliac plexus
Lesser splanchnic nerve
Superior mesenteric plexus
Aortic plexus
Lumbar plexus
Inferior mesenteric plexus
Hypogastric plexus
Sacral plexus
Pelvic plexus Bladder
Vesical plexus

[The Sympathetic Nervous System [Anima Mundi] is the Mother of the Cerebrospinal System [Brain.]

The “vestigial” sympathetic nervous system, an apparently fortuitous tangle of ganglionic nodes that regulate the vegetative functions of the body in an astoundingly purposive way, becomes the matrix of the cerebrospinal system, whose crowning miracle, the brain, seems to our fascinated gaze the controller of all bodily processes.

Nay more: the sympathetic system is, for Schleich, the mysterious “cosmic nerve,” the true “ideoplast,” the original and most immediate realization of-giving World Soul, and, ultimately, the architect of the brain, this newest achievement of the pre-existent a body-building and body-sustaining World Soul, which was there before mind and body came into existence.

The Hyliaster of Paracelsus is thus stripped of its unfathomable creative secret. Once again the solidity and tangibility of matter, so fervently believed in and so convincing to the senses, dissolve into Maya, into a mere emanation of primordial thought and will, and all hierarchies and all values are reversed. The intangible, the psyche, becomes the ground and substrate, and the “merely vegetative” sympathetic system the possessor and realizer of unthinkable creative secrets, the vehicle of the life-giving World Soul, and, ultimately, the architect of the brain, this newest achievement of the pre-existent creative will.

What lay modestly hidden beneath the overwhelming grandeur of the cerebrospinal system, which, as the vehicle of consciousness, seems to be identical with the psyche as such—this same sympathetic system is “psyche” in a deeper and more embracing sense than is the interplay of the cortical fields of the cerebrum.

Nothwithstanding its quantitative and qualitative insignificance, it is the exponent of a psyche far excelling consciousness both in depth and scope, and is not, like this, defencelessly exposed to the potions of the endocrine system, but itself creates these magical secretions with single minded purposiveness. Carl Jung; The Symbolic Life; Page 464 [Forward to Essays written by Ludwig Schleich.]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/03/8ed5f-sympathy.jpg`

Forward to Lucifer and Prometheus by Carl Jung (2019-03-05 15:57)

[1]
Prometheus having his liver eaten by an eagle. Painting by Jacob Jordaens, c. 1640, Wallraf-Richartz-Museum, Cologne, Germany.

Forward to Werblowsky's: Lucifer and Prometheus

468 The author has submitted his manuscript to me with the request that I should write a few words by way of introduction. As the subject of the book is essentially literary, I do not feel altogether competent to express an opinion on the matter. The author has, however, rightly discerned that, although the problem of Milton's Paradise Lost is primarily a subject for literary criticism, it is, as a piece of confessional writing, fundamentally bound up with certain psychological assumptions. Though he has only touched on these at least in so many words he has made it sufficiently plain why he has appealed to me as a psychologist. However little disposed I am to regard Dante's Divine Comedy or Klopstock's Messiah or Milton's opus as fit subjects for psychological commentary, I cannot but acknowledge the acumen of the author, who has seen that the problem of Milton might well be elucidated from that angle of research which is my special field of study.

469 For over two thousand years the figure of Satan, both as a theme of poetico-religious thinking and artistic creation and as a mythologem, has been a constant expression of the psyche, having its source in the unconscious evolution of "metaphysical" images. We should go very wrong in our judgment if we assumed that ideas such as this derive from rationalistic thinking. All the old ideas of God, indeed thought itself, and particularly numinous thought, have their origin in experience. Primitive man does not think his thoughts, they simply appear in his mind. Purposive and directed thinking is a relatively late human achievement. The numinous image is far more an expression of essentially unconscious processes than a product of rational inference. Consequently it falls into the category of psychological objects, and this raises the question of the underlying psychological assumptions. We have to imagine a millennial process of symbol-formation which presses towards consciousness, beginning in the darkness of prehistory with primordial or archetypal images, and gradually developing and differentiating these images into conscious creations. The history of religion in the West can be taken as an illustration of this: I mean the historical development of dogma, which also includes the figure of Satan. One of the best-known archetypes, lost in the grey mists of antiquity, is the triad of gods. In the early centuries of Christianity it reappears in the Christian formula for the Trinity, whose pagan version is Hermes terunits. Nor is it difficult to see that the great goddess of the Ephesians has been resurrected in the QZOTOKOS. This latter problem, after lying dormant for centuries, came into circulation again with the dogma of the Immaculate Conception and, more recently, of the Assumption of the Virgin. The figure of the mediatrix rounds itself out in almost classical perfection, and it is especially noteworthy that behind the solemn promulgation of the dogma there stands no arbitrary tenet of papal authority but an anonymous movement of the Catholic world. The numerous miracles of the Virgin which preceded it are equally autochthonous; they are genuine and legitimate experiences springing directly from the unconscious psychic life of the people.

470 I do not wish to multiply examples needlessly, but only to make it clear that the figure of Satan, too, has undergone a curious development, from the time of his first undistinguished appearance in the Old Testament texts to his heyday in Christianity. He achieved notoriety as the personification of the adversary or principle of evil, though by no means for the first time, as we meet him centuries earlier in the ancient Egyptian Set and the Persian Ahriman. Persian influences have been conjectured as mainly responsible for the Christian devil But the real reason for the differentiation of this figure lies in the conception of God as the summum bonum, which stands in sharp contrast to the Old Testament view and which, for reasons of psychic balance, inevitably requires the existence of an infimum malum. No logical reasons are needed for this, only the natural and unconscious striving for balance and symmetry. Hence very early, in Clement of Rome, we meet with the conception of Christ as the right hand and the devil as the left hand of God, not to speak of the Judaeo-Christian view which recognized two sons of God, Satan the elder and Christ the younger. The figure of the devil then rose to such exalted metaphysical heights that he had to be forcibly depotentiated, under the threatening influence of Manichaeism. The depotentiation was effected this time by rationalistic reflection, by a regular tour de force of sophistry which defined evil as a privatio boni. But that did nothing to stop the belief from arising in many parts of Europe during the eleventh century, mainly under the influence of the Catharists, that it was not God but the devil who had created the world. In this way the archetype of the imperfect demiurge, who had enjoyed official recognition in Gnosticism, reappeared in altered guise. (The corresponding archetype is probably to be found in the cosmogonic jester 2 of primitive peoples.) With the extermination of the heretics that dragged on into the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, an uneasy calm ensued, but the Reformation thrust the figure of Satan once more into the foreground. I would only mention Jakob Bohme, who sketched a picture of evil which leaves the privatio boni pale by comparison. The same can be said of Milton. He inhabits the same mental climate. As for Bohme, although he was not a direct descendant of alchemical philosophy, whose importance is still grossly underrated today, he certainly took over a number of its leading ideas, among them the specific recognition of Satan, who was exalted to a cosmic figure of first rank in Milton, even emancipating himself from his subordinate role as the left hand of God (the role assigned to him by Clement). Milton goes even further than Bohrne and apostrophizes the devil as the true principium individuationis, a concept which had been anticipated by the alchemists some time before. To mention only one example: "Ascendit a terra in coelum, iterumque descendit in terram et recipit vim superiorum et inferiorum. Sic habebis gloriam totius mundi." (He rises from earth to heaven and descends again to earth, and receives into himself the power of above and below. Thus thou wilt have the glory of the whole world.) The quotation comes from the famous alchemical classic, the Tabula Smaragdina, attributed to Hermes Trismegistus, whose authority remained unchallenged for more than thirteen centuries of alchemical thought. His words refer not to Satan, but to the filius philosophorum, whose symbolism, as I believe I have shown, coincides with that of the psychological "self." The filius of the alchemists is one of the numerous manifestations of Mercurius, who is called "duplex" and "ambiguus" and is also known outside alchemy as "utriusque capax" capable of anything. His "dark" half has an obvious affinity with Lucifer.

[2]
Satan, who in Milton's Paradise Lost is also called Lucifer,[1] on his way to bring about the downfall of Adam. Gustave Doré's illustration for Paradise Lost, Book III, lines 739–742 by John Milton.

47 1 In Milton's time these ideas were very much in the air, forming part of the general stock of culture, and there were not a few Masters who realized that their philosophical stone was none other than the "total man." The Satan-Prometheus parallel shows clearly enough that Milton's devil stands for the essence of human individuation and thus comes within the scope of psychology. This close proximity, as we know, proved a danger not only to the metaphysical status of Satan, but to that of other numinous figures as well. With the coming of the Enlightenment, metaphysics as a whole began to decline, and the rift which then opened out between knowledge and faith could no longer be repaired. The more resplendent figures in the metaphysical pantheon had their autonomy restored to them practically untarnished, which assuredly cannot be said of the devil. In Goethe's Faust he has dwindled to a very personal familiaris, the mere "shadow" of the struggling hero. After rational-liberal Protestantism had, as it were, deposed him by order of the day, he retired to the shadier side of the Christian Olympus as the "odd man out," and thus, in a manner not unwelcome to the Church, the old principle reasserted itself: Omne bonum a Deo, omne malum ab homine. The devil remains as an appendix to psychology.

472 It is a psychological rule that when an archetype has lost its metaphysical hypostasis, it becomes identified with the conscious mind of the individual, which it influences and refashions in its own form. And since an archetype always possesses a certain numinosity, the integration of the numen generally produces an inflation of the subject. It is therefore entirely in accord with psychological expectations that Goethe should dub his Faust a Superman. In recent times this type has extended beyond Nietzsche into the field of political psychology, and its incarnation in man has had all the consequences that might have been expected to follow from such a misappropriation of power.

473 As human beings do not live in airtight compartments, this infectious inflation has spread everywhere and given rise to an extraordinary uncertainty in morals and philosophy. The medical psychologist is bound to take an interest in such matters, if only for professional reasons, and so we witness the memorable spectacle of a psychiatrist introducing a critical study of Milton's Paradise Lost. Meditating upon this highly incongruous conjunction, I decided that I should best fulfill my obligations if I explained to the well-intentioned reader how and why the devil got into the consulting-room of the psychiatrist. Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion.

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/2/22/Koeln_wrm_1044.jpg/200px-Koeln_wrm_1044.jpg`
2. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/9/9d/Paradise_Lost_12.jpg/300px-Paradise_Lost_12.jpg`

Prefatory Note to Answer to Job by Carl Jung (2019-03-05 16:15)

Prefatory Note to Answer to Job by Carl Jung.

[1]
The suggestion that I should tell you how Answer to Job came to be written sets me a difficult task, because the history of this book can hardly be told in a few words.

I have been occupied with its central problem for years. Many different sources nourished the stream of its thoughts, until one day and after long reflection the time was ripe to put them into words.

The most immediate cause of my writing the book is perhaps to be found in certain problems discussed in my book Aion especially the problems of Christ as a symbolic figure and of the antagonism Christ-Antichrist, represented in the traditional zodiacal symbolism of the two fishes.

In connection with the discussion of these problems and of the doctrine of Redemption, I criticized the idea of the privation bono as not agreeing with the psychological findings.

Psychological experience shows that whatever we call "good" is balanced by an equally substantial "bad" or "evil." If "evil" is non-existent, then whatever there is must needs be "good.

Dogmatically, neither "good" nor "evil" can be derived from Man, since the "Evil One" existed before Man as one of the "Sons of God."

The idea of the privatio bono began to play a role in the Church only after Mani.

Before this heresy, Clement of Rome taught that God rules the world with a right and a left hand, the right being Christ, the left Satan.

Clement's view is clearly monotheistic, as it unites the opposites in one God.

Later Christianity, however, is dualistic, inasmuch as it splits off one half of the opposites, personified in Satan, and he is eternal in his state of damnation.

This crucial question forms the point of departure for the Christian theory of Redemption. It is therefore of prime importance.

If Christianity claims to be a monotheism, it becomes unavoidable to assume the opposites as being contained in God.

But the we are confronted with a major religious problem: the problem of Job. It is the aim of my book to point out its historical evolution since the time of Job down through the centuries to the most recent symbolic phenomena, such as the Assumptio Mariae, etc.

Moreover, the study of medieval natural philosophy of the greatest importance to psychology made me try to find an answer to the question: what image of God did these old philosophers have?

Or rather: how should the symbols which supplement their image of God be understood?

All this pointed to a complexio oppositorurn and thus recalled again the story of Job to my mind: Job who expected help from God against God.

This most peculiar fact presupposes a similar conception of the opposites in God.

On the other hand, numerous questions, not only from my patients, but from all over the world, brought up the problem of giving a more complete and explicit answer than I had given in Aion.

For many years I hesitated to do this because I was quite conscious of the probable consequences, and knew what a storm would be raised.

But I was gripped by the urgency and difficulty of the problem and was unable to throw it off.

Therefore I found myself obliged to deal with the whole problem, and I did so in the form of describing a personal experience, carried by subjective emotions.

I deliberately chose this form because I wanted to avoid the impression that I had any idea of announcing an "eternal truth."

The book does not pretend to be anything but the voice or question of a single individual who hopes or expects to meet with thoughtfulness in the public.

Prefatory Note to Answer to Job by Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion.

LECTORI BENEVOLO

I am distressed for thee, my brother . . . II Samuel i : 26 (AV)

On account of its somewhat unusual content, my little book requires a short preface.

I beg of you, dear reader, not to overlook it.

For, in what follows, I shall speak of the venerable objects of religious belief.

Whoever talks of such matters inevitably runs the risk of being torn to pieces by the two parties who are in mortal conflict about those very things.

This conflict is due to the strange supposition that a thing is true only if it presents itself as a physical fact.

Thus some people believe it to be physically true that Christ was born as the son of a virgin, while others deny this as a physical impossibility.

Everyone can see that there is no logical solution to this conflict and that one would do better not to get involved in such sterile disputes. Both are right and both are wrong.

Yet they could easily reach agreement if only they dropped the word "physical."

"Physical" is not the only criterion of truth: there are also psychic truths which can neither be explained nor proved nor contested in any physical way.

If, for instance, a general belief existed that the river Rhine had at one time flowed backwards from its mouth to its source, then this belief would in itself be a fact even though such an assertion, physically understood, would be deemed utterly incredible.

Beliefs of this kind are psychic facts which cannot be contested and need no proof.

Religious statements are of this type.

They refer without exception to things that cannot be established as physical facts.

If they did not do this, they would inevitably fall into the category of the natural sciences.

Taken as referring to anything physical, they make no sense whatever, and science would dismiss them as non-experienceable.

They would be mere miracles, which are sufficiently exposed to doubt as it is, and yet they could not demonstrate the reality of the spirit or meaning that underlies them, because meaning is something that always demonstrates itself and is experienced on its own merits.

The spirit and meaning of Christ are present and perceptible to us even without the aid of miracles.

Miracles appeal only to the understanding of those who cannot perceive the meaning.

They are mere substitutes for the not understood reality of the spirit. This is not to say that the living presence of the spirit is not occasionally accompanied by marvelous physical happenings.

I only wish to emphasize that these happenings can neither replace nor bring about an understanding of the spirit, which is the one essential thing.

The fact that religious statements frequently conflict with the observed physical phenomena proves that in contrast to physical perception the spirit is autonomous, and that psychic experience is to a certain extent independent of physical data.

The psyche is an autonomous factor, and religious statements are psychic confessions which in the last resort are based on unconscious, i.e., on transcendental, processes.

These processes are not accessible to physical perception but demonstrate their existence through the confessions of the psyche.

The resultant statements are filtered through the medium of human consciousness: that is to say, they are given visible forms which in their turn are subject to manifold influences from within and without.

That is why whenever we speak of religious contents we move in a world of images that point to something ineffable, We do not know how clear or unclear these images, metaphors, and concepts are in respect of their transcendental object.

If, for instance, we say "God," we give expression to an image or verbal concept which has undergone many changes in the course of time.

We are, however, unable to say with any degree of certainty unless it be by faith whether these changes affect only the images and concepts, or the Unspeakable itself.

After all, we can imagine God as an eternally flowing current of vital energy that endlessly changes shape just as easily as we can imagine him as an eternally unmoved, unchangeable essence.

Our reason is sure only of one thing: that it manipulates images and ideas which are dependent on human imagination and its temporal and local conditions, and which have therefore changed innumerable times in the course of their long history.

There is no doubt that there is something behind these images that transcends consciousness and operates in such a way that the statements do not vary limitlessly and chaotically, but clearly all relate to a few basic principles or archetypes. These, like the psyche itself, or like matter, are unknowable as such.

All we can do is to construct models of them which we know to be inadequate, a fact which is confirmed again and again by religious statements.

If, therefore, in what follows I concern myself with these "metaphysical" objects, I am quite conscious that I am moving in a world of images and that none of my reflections touches the essence of the Unknowable.

I am also too well aware of how limited are our powers of conception to say nothing of the feebleness and poverty of language to imagine that my remarks mean anything more in principle than what a primitive man means when he conceives of his god as a hare or a snake.

But, although our whole world of religious ideas consists of anthropomorphic images that could never stand up to rational criticism, we should never forget that they are based on numinous archetypes, i.e., on an emotional foundation which is unassailable by reason.

We are dealing with psychic facts which logic can overlook but not eliminate. In this connection Tertullian has already appealed, quite rightly, to the testimony of the soul.

In his De testimonio animae, he says: These testimonies of the soul are as simple as they are true, as obvious as they are simple, as common as they are obvious, as natural as they are common, as divine as they are natural.

I think that they cannot appear to anyone to be trifling and ridiculous if he considers the majesty of Nature, whence the authority of the soul is derived.

What you allow to the mistress you will assign to the disciple.

Nature is the mistress, the soul is the disciple; what the one has taught, or the other has learned, has been delivered to them by God, who is, in truth, the Master even of the mistress herself.

What notion the soul is able to conceive of her first teacher is in your power to judge, from that soul which is in you.

Feel that which causes you to feel; think upon that which is in forebodings your prophet; in omens, your augur; in the events which befall you, your foreseer.

Strange if, being given by God, she knows how to act the diviner for men! Equally strange if she knows Him by whom she has been given!

I would go a step further and say that the statements made in the Holy Scriptures are also utterances of the soul even at the risk of being suspected of psychologism.

The statements of the conscious mind may easily be snares and delusions, lies, or arbitrary opinions, but this is certainly not true of the statements of the soul: to begin with they always go over our heads because they point to realities that transcend consciousness.

These entia are the archetypes of the collective unconscious, and they precipitate complexes of ideas in the form of mythological motifs.

Ideas of this kind are never invented, but enter the field of inner perception as finished products, for instance in dreams.

They are spontaneous phenomena which are not subject to our will, and we are therefore justified in ascribing to them a certain autonomy.

They are to be regarded not only as objects but as subjects with laws of their own. From the point of view of consciousness, we can, of course, describe them as objects, and even explain them up to a point, in the same measure as we can describe and explain a living human being.

But then we have to disregard their autonomy.

If that is considered, we are compelled to treat them as subjects; in other words, we have to admit that they possess spontaneity and purposiveness, or a kind of consciousness and free will.

We observe their behaviour and consider their statements. This dual standpoint, which we are forced to adopt towards every relatively independent organism, naturally has a dual result.

On the one hand it tells me what I do to the object, and on the other hand what it does (possibly to me).

It is obvious that this unavoidable dualism will create a certain amount of confusion in the minds of my readers, particularly as in what follows we shall have to do with the archetype of Deity.

Should any of my readers feel tempted to add an apologetic "only" to the God-images as we perceive them, he would immediately fall foul of experience, which demonstrates beyond any shadow of doubt the extraordinary numinosity of these images.

The tremendous effectiveness (mana) of these images is such that they not only give one the feeling of pointing to the Ens realissimum, but make one convinced that they actually express it and establish it as a fact.

This makes discussion uncommonly difficult, if not impossible.

It is, in fact, impossible to demonstrate God's reality to oneself except by using images which have arisen spontaneously or are sanctified by tradition, and whose psychic nature and effects the naive-minded person has never separated from their unknowable metaphysical background.

He instantly equates the effective image with the transcendental x to which it points.

The seeming justification for this procedure appears self-evident and is not considered a problem so long as the statements of religion are not seriously questioned.

But if there is occasion for criticism, then it must be remembered that the image and the statement are psychic processes which are different from their transcendental object; they do not posit it, they merely point to it.

In the realm of psychic processes criticism and discussion are not only permissible but are unavoidable.

In what follows I shall attempt just such a discussion, such a "coming to terms" with certain religious traditions and ideas.

Since I shall be dealing with numinous factors, my feeling is challenged quite as much as my intellect.

I cannot, therefore, write in a coolly objective manner, but must allow my emotional subjectivity to speak if I want to describe what I feel when I read certain books of the Bible, or when I remember the impressions I have received from the doctrines of our faith.

I do not write as a biblical scholar (which I am not), but as a layman and physician who has been privileged to see deeply into the psychic life of many people.

What I am expressing is first of all my own personal view, but I know that I also speak in the name of many who have had similar experiences. Carl Jung; Answer to Job; Prefatory Note to Answer to Job; Psychology and Religion.

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/3/35/Georges_de_La_Tour_044.jpg/200px-Georges_de_La_Tour_044.jpg`

Carl Jung on “Shamanism.” (2019-03-06 03:59)

[1]

From Dr. Jung 28 January 1913

With regard to your question concerning the applicability of the cathartic procedure, I can say that I adopt the following standpoint: every procedure is good if it helps.

I therefore acknowledge every method of suggestion including Christian Science, mental healing, etc. "A truth is a truth, when it works."

It is another question, though, whether a scientifically trained doctor can square it with his conscience to sell little bottles of Lourdes water because this suggestion is at times very helpful.

Even the so-called highly scientific suggestion therapy employs the wares of the medicine-man and the exorcising shaman.

And why not?

The public is not much more advanced either and continues to expect miraculous cures from the doctor.

And indeed, we must rate those doctors wise—worldly-wise in every sense—who know how to surround themselves with the aura of a medicine-man.

They have not only the biggest practices but also get the best results.

This is because, apart from the neuroses, countless physical illnesses are tainted and complicated with psychic material to an unsuspected degree.

The medical exorcist betrays by his whole demeanour his full appreciation of that psychic component when he gives the patient the opportunity of fixing his faith firmly on the mysterious personality of the doctor.

In this way he wins the sick man's mind, which from then on helps him to restore his body to health.

The cure works best when the doctor himself believes in his own formulae, otherwise he may be overcome by scientific doubt and so lose the proper convincing tone. Carl Jung, CW 4, Pages 255-256

[Carl Jung on "Shamanism."]

From Dr. Jung 28 January 1913

With regard to your question concerning the applicability of the cathartic procedure, I can say that I adopt the following standpoint: every procedure is good if it helps.

I therefore acknowledge every method of suggestion including Christian Science, mental healing, etc. "A truth is a truth, when it works."

It is another question, though, whether a scientifically trained doctor can square it with his conscience to sell little bottles of Lourdes water because this suggestion is at times very helpful.

Even the so-called highly scientific suggestion therapy employs the wares of the medicine-man and the exorcising shaman.

And why not?

The public is not much more advanced either and continues to expect miraculous cures from the doctor.

And indeed, we must rate those doctors wise—worldly-wise in every sense—who know how to surround themselves with the aura of a medicine-man.

They have not only the biggest practices but also get the best results.

This is because, apart from the neuroses, countless physical illnesses are tainted and complicated with psychic material to an unsuspected degree.

The medical exorcist betrays by his whole demeanour his full appreciation of that psychic component when he gives the patient the opportunity of fixing his faith firmly on the mysterious personality of the doctor.

In this way he wins the sick man's mind, which from then on helps him to restore his body to health.

The cure works best when the doctor himself believes in his own formulae, otherwise he may be overcome by scientific doubt and so lose the proper convincing tone. Carl Jung, CW 4, Pages 255-256

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/682e7-62bshamanism.jpg`

Carl Jung: "All that is outside, also is inside," we could say with Goethe. (2019-03-06 04:30)

[1]

"All that is outside, also is inside," we could say with Goethe.

But this "inside," which modern rationalism is so eager to derive from "outside," has an a priori structure of its own that antedates all conscious experience.

It is quite impossible to conceive how "experience" in the widest sense, or, for that matter, anything psychic, could originate exclusively in the outside world.

The psyche is part of the inmost mystery of life, and it has its own peculiar structure and form like every other organism.

Whether this psychic structure and its elements, the archetypes, ever "originated" at all is a metaphysical question and therefore unanswerable.

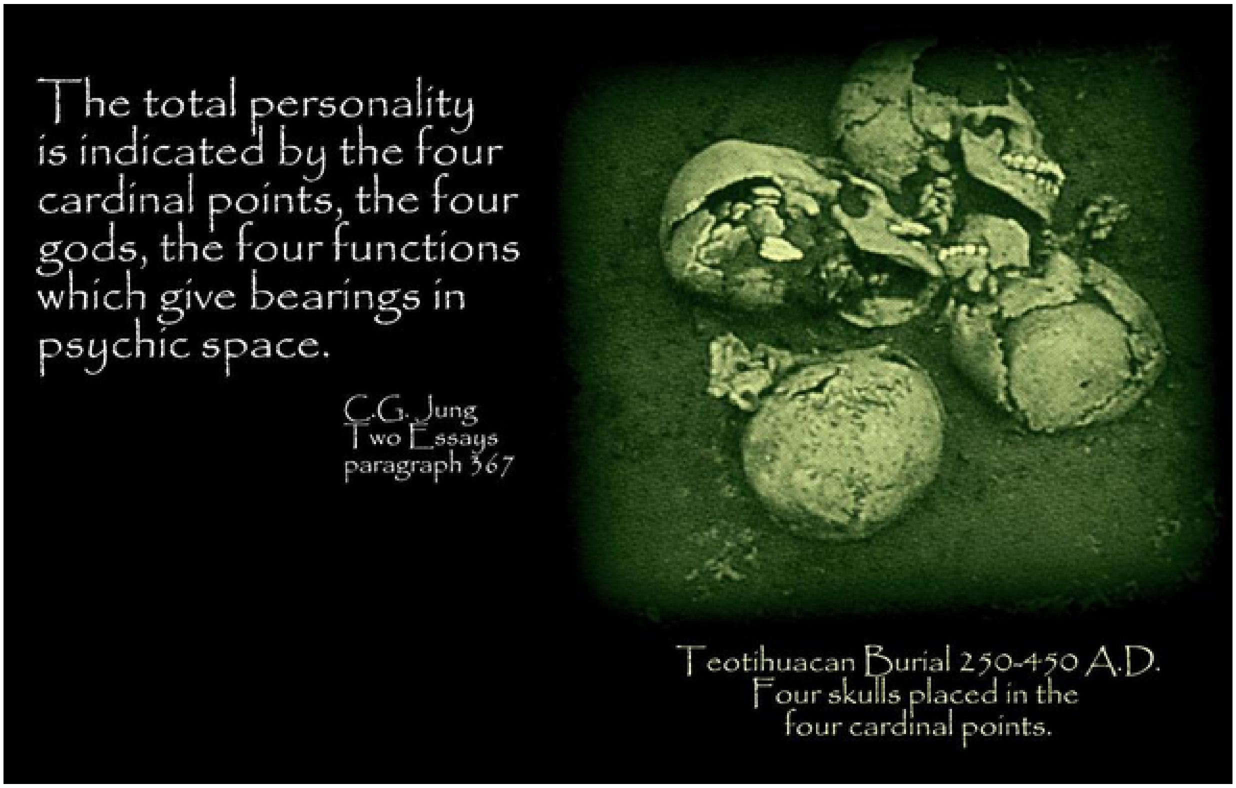
The structure is something given, the precondition that is found to be present in every case.

And this is the mother, the matrix—the form into which all experience is poured. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Pages 101-102

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a414b-12bgoethe.jpg`

Carl Jung: Told in her own words, this is what the patient saw: (2019-03-06 04:30)

[1]



The total personality is indicated by the four cardinal points, the four gods, the four functions which give bearings in psychic space.
C.G. Jung
Two Essays
paragraph 367
Teotihuacan Burial 250-450 A.D.
Four skulls placed in the four cardinal points.

Coming now to our example: it concerns a fantasy of intensely visual character, something which in the language of the ancients would be called a "vision."

Not a "vision seen in a dream," but a vision perceived by intense concentration on the background of consciousness, a technique that is perfected only after long practice.

Told in her own words, this is what the patient saw:

"I climbed the mountain and came to a place where I saw seven red stones in front of me, seven on either side, and seven behind me.

I stood in the middle of this quadrangle.

The stones were flat like steps.

I tried to lift the four stones nearest me.

In doing so I discovered that these stones were the pedestals of four statues of gods buried upside down in the earth.

I dug them up and arranged them about me so that I was standing in the middle of them.

Suddenly they leaned towards one another until their heads touched, forming something like a tent over me.

I myself fell to the ground and said, ’Fall upon me if you must! I am tired.’

Then I saw that beyond, encircling the four gods, a ring of flame had formed.

After a time I got up from the ground and overthrew the statues of the gods.

Where they fell, four trees shot up.

At that blue flames leapt up from the ring of fire and began to burn the foliage of the trees.

Seeinig this I said, ’This must stop.

I must go into the fire myself so that the leaves shall not be burned.’

Then I stepped into the fire.

The trees vanished and the fiery ring drew together to one immense blue flame that carried me up from the earth."

Here the vision ended.

Unfortunately I cannot see how I can make conclusively clear to the reader the extraordinarily interesting meaning of this vision.

The fragment is an excerpt from a long sequence, and one would have to explain everything that happened before and afterwards, in order to grasp the significance of the picture.

At all events the unprejudiced reader will recognize at once the idea of a "mid-point" that is reached by a kind of climb (mountaineering, effort, struggle, etc.).

He will also recognize without difficulty the famous medieval conundrum of the squaring of the circle, which belongs to the field of alchemy.

Here it takes its rightful place as a symbol of individuation.

The total personality is indicated by the four cardinal points, the four gods, i.e., the four functions which give bearings in psychic space, and also by the circle enclosing the whole.

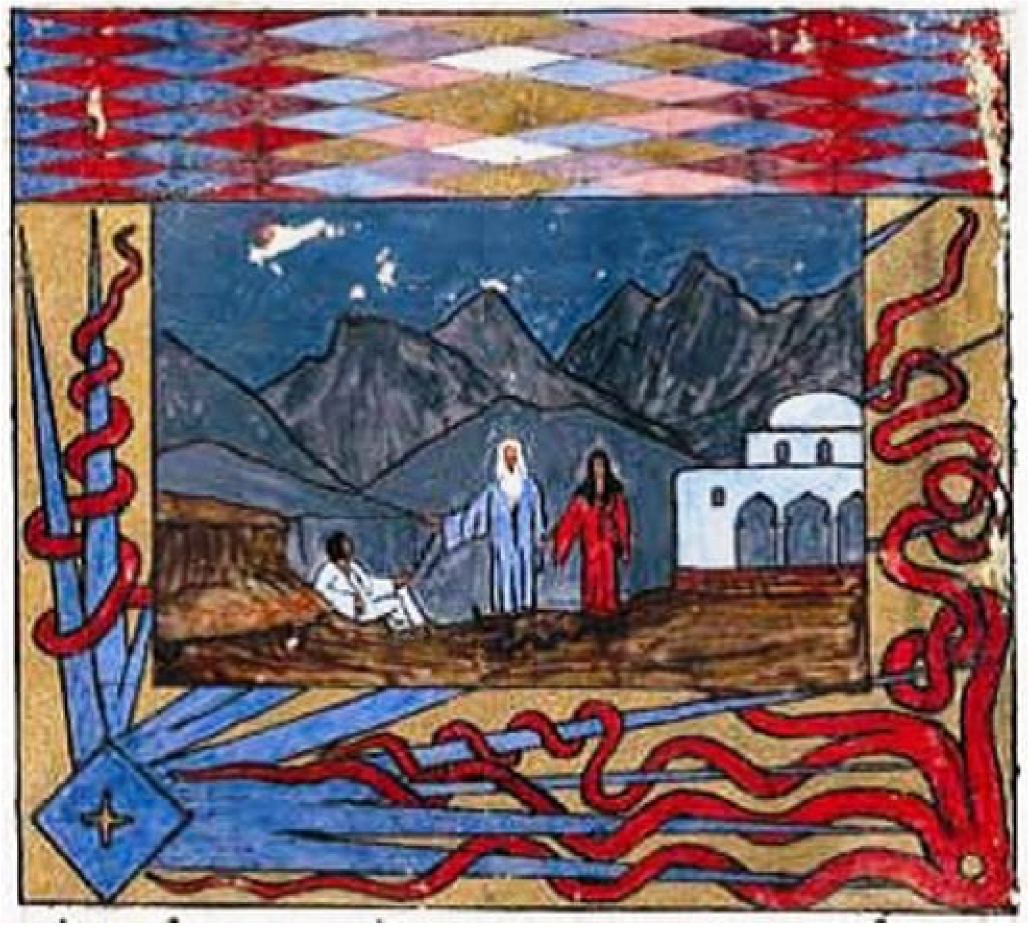
Overcoming the four gods who threaten to smother the individual signifies liberation from identification with the four functions, a fourfold nirdvandva ("free from opposites") followed by an approximation to the circle, to undivided wholeness.

This in its turn leads to further exaltation. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 367.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/62c11-12btotal2bpersonality.jpg`

A Pictorial Guide to The Red Book (2019-03-06 04:34)

[1]



The link below will take you to a page where at the top will be found:

"A Pictorial Guide to The Red Book: An excerpt from A Pictorial Guide to The Red Book," by Jay Sherry.

At the bottom of the introduction you will see where it says: "Entire Paper." It is well worth the time to click on "Entire Paper" and read the remainder of the article and more importantly see the images and captions.

http://aras.org/notices/newsletter10-01.htm

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/d67dc-figure2salomec-g-jungtheredbookfoliovverso.jpg`

Mrs. Jung: "Could you say something about the relation of the animus to immortality… (2019-03-06 05:08)

[1]

Mrs. Jung: Could you say something about the relation of the animus to immortality in the same way that you discussed the anima and immortality?

Dr. Jung: The animus seems to go back only to the fourteenth century, and the anima to remote antiquity, but with the animus I must say I am uncertain altogether.

Mrs. Jung: It had seemed to me that the animus was not a symbol of immortality, but of movement and life, and that it is man’s attitude that gives that different aspect to the anima.

Dr. Jung: It is true that the animus is often represented by a moving figure—an aviator or a traffic manager.

Perhaps there is something in the historical fact of women being more stable, therefore there is more movement in the unconscious.

Mr. Schmitz: Surely there could have been no repression of the animus at the time of the matriarchy. Dr. Jung: We cannot be too sure.

Mrs. Zinno: The figures of gods carry the idea of immortality, do they not?

smuch as they are also animus figures and come into women's dreams, I should think one could say the animus carried the meaning of immortality also.

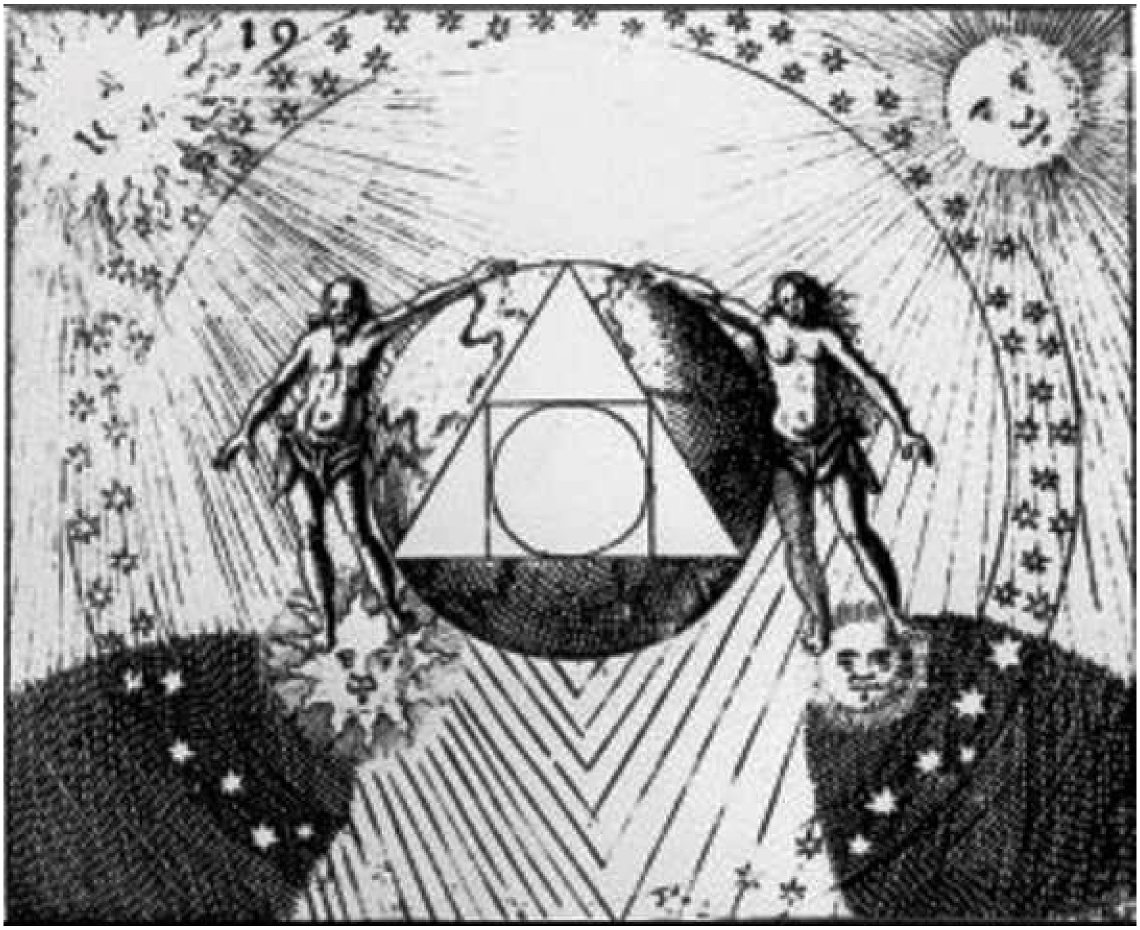
Dr. Jung: Yes, that is true, but there remains a tremendous difference between the animus and the anima.
Mr. Schmitz: Is immortality in the individual?
Dr. Jung: No, only as the image. Immortality belongs to the child of the anima. Inasmuch as the anima has not brought forth, she assumes immortality.

When she brings forth she dies. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 168.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8fde0-12bemma.jpg`

Carl Jung on "What is the Prima Materia?" (2019-03-06 05:11)

[1]



Lecture XI 11th July, 1941

We have been speaking of the prima materia during several lectures.

It is a fundamental and exceedingly important idea in alchemy, and therefore it will be well worthwhile to give you a resume of the superfluity of meanings which I have endeavoured to depict for you.

It is really true, as the alchemists say, that when one has understood the idea of the prima materia the problem of alchemy is already half solved and its questions half answered.

Summary

I. Projection of the Unconscious

1. Nature

The most important question naturally is:

What is the prima materia?

It is really a projection of the unconscious, as we saw clearly in many of the definitions, for the Middle Ages, as well as Antiquity, saw the unconscious in nature.

We could define the unconscious as a psychical existence in ourselves of which we are unconscious.

We can only become conscious of it in the form of individual symptoms and indications, and sometimes we are surprised by it.

We get messages from time to time from the unconscious: dreams, phantasies, intuitions, visions and so on; and it is from these that we draw the conclusion of a psychical existence in ourselves which is totally different to our conscious mind.

Its psychology is quite different, and the contents which come to us from it differ, in a most peculiar way, from the contents of the conscious.

The latter belong to a personal psychology, to the personality of the ego which is in the world, whereas the unconscious is not, but is rather a world itself.

One could almost say it was the world, and that it speaks, as it were, to us.

It is impersonal and not human (that is, in any case it is not personal), and this explains a great many peculiarities of the prima materia.

Antique and even medieval man had no knowledge of psychology, there was no psychology (that is, what we call psychology) in those days.

Even today the majority of people have no idea what psychology is; they have a personal psychology and some metaphysical convictions.

Knowledge of psychology only comes with knowledge of the unconscious.

So it is quite comprehensible that antique and medieval man should have got an inkling of the psyche when he contemplated the canopy of heaven with its planets and stars, and the earth with its growth and products.

It was particularly the starry heavens which fascinated our forefathers.

You know that the antique study of the sky was far more astrology than the science of astronomy: in other words, it was the projected unconscious which was so fascinating.

The stars represented forces of a psychical nature.

The sun, moon and planets were the exponents, so to speak, of certain psychological or psychical constituents of the human character; and this is why astrology can give more or less valid information about character.

The empirical correctness of the horoscope is, of course, another question; I am only speaking of the old conviction that the stars represented the human character and determined it.

According to this belief, if I am melancholy, given to depressions and bad moods, Saturn is influencing me.

The assumption is that if Saturn is unfavorable in my horoscope, I shall necessarily suffer from the conditions of Saturn.

And the same was valid for all the other planets, each in its own way.

Therefore antique man had no knowledge of his real character, because his character (inasmuch as it was unconsciously determined) was in the sky, and he only saw it in as far as he could read the stars.

It was not in fact recognised as character, but as Heimarmene (compulsion by the stars).

Of course it was not the stars which compelled him, but the grouping of the constituents and qualities of his own psyche which he saw in the stars.

And it is a curious fact that, all over the earth wherever we find astrology, the stars have essentially the same meaning.

Saturn and Mars, for instance, are known as "malefici" (evil doers) everywhere.

It is evident from this that our forefathers saw all unconscious psychical events, that is, all the roots of the human character, in the sky.

While a man sees something in the sky, there is no chance of his seeing it in himself, and so naturally he will attribute his own actions to the stars.

If he loses his temper, for instance, and performs an act of violence, Mars is the culprit, or at least his Mars was in a bad aspect, so he was obliged to act as he did.

This is the reason why the religious mysteries of later antiquity were all concerned with freeing man from the Heimarmene; in other words with freeing him from the compulsive quality of the foundations of his own character, or with separating him from the unconscious in order that he might be free.

This tendency found its culmination in Christianity, for it is the Christian teaching which gives man the greatest hope of freeing himself entirely from evil.

The well known sentence in the Lord’s Prayer, "Deliver us from evil", meant, as it was first understood, deliver us from the evil principle of the Heimarmene.

If you have read St. Paul attentively, you will have realised that Satan was this evil principle, the Lord of the World who is the dark and strongest Archon, the ruler who keeps men in fetters and oppresses them.

And this same principle was called Saturn, so that the prayer "deliver us from evil" could also be: "deliver us from Saturn", for it means deliver us from the oppressive power which rules the world.

It was not only the stars which contained the projections of the ancients but the whole space between the stars and the earth, regarded as the kingdom of the air.

You find this idea also in the New Testament, St. Paul describes this realm in the Epistle to the Ephesians.

He speaks of "the prince of the power of the air" of the "principalities", “powers" and "rulers of the darkness of this world" and of " spiritual wickedness in high places".

These "powers" are the old Gnostic rulers of the planets.

The beautiful old name, Elizabeth, is a remnant of the same idea.

It originated in Babylon and means: "My deity is the seven", that is, these even planets, for only seven were known in those days.

These seven were regarded as the rulers of human destiny; this was a projection of a feeling that man’s fate did not lie in his own conscious hands, but was made for him.

He found himself fettered, under conditions which he did not make, he could not find these conditions in himself, so he assumed that they were outside.

It was in this way that the heavens and earth became peopled and permeated with psychical life.

It was perhaps the unknown depths of the sea which attracted the most projections.

The sea is one of the best known symbols for the prima materia, as the mother of all life.

All life came from the sea, and we feel life streaming into us from an unknown source, as it were from the sea.

We do not know at all where psychical contents come from, so it is easy to assume that they all come from outside.

Medieval and primitive man, in spite of all his projections, was by no means sure of this; and of course they really come from inside and from outside.

Our sense impressions come from outside and also certain psychical effects; we do not recognise these effects today, but our forefathers were aware of them.

The most important things, however, come from inside, the real manifestations of life.

The things, which impress us from outside, can only do so because of our inner attitude.

You can put the most marvellous things before the eyes of a stupid person and they will make no impression on him, for all impressions come from inside ourselves.

If you see the beauty of a picture, it is you who produce the beauty; a donkey would not see any beauty, for it could not be eaten.

1. Substances

A further stage of the projection already reaches a sort of conclusion.

That is, one begins to suspect that the effective thing is something definite, not just the celestial vault, the wide earth or the vast sea.

The existence of definite substances is suspected, and then one has already come nearer to a definition of the prima materia.

For instance, let us imagine the prima materia is water, water is a mysteriously determined power which can also evaporate as steam.

By this analogy we have come nearer to understanding the prima materia: it is similar to water, subject to mysterious laws which impress us in a marvellous way.

Think, for instance, of the definition of the Tao in Lao-Tse's "Tao-te Ching", where he says that the Tao is like the nature of water, it always seeks the deepest place.

The secret power of water lies in its infallible faculty of knowing the deepest place and finding it.

It was this which impressed our forefathers so deeply; and when they speak of "water " it is the essence of the unconscious that they describe.

This essence is a peculiar wisdom of nature, a knowledge which man does not possess, an instinctive knowledge, a conformity to obscure laws, totally inexplicable to naive man.

The mysterious operative in nature, which determines us, is therefore said to be of the nature of water.

But it is not tangible like water itself; we read in the Rosarium, for instance, that it is "aqua sicca" (dry water) , it does not moisten the hands.

It is evident that this water is not the ordinary water which flows in our springs and fountains, it is rather "a qua spiritualis" (a spiritual water).

In all these definitions, the alchemists are referring to a psychical nature.

This is the reason they so often use the analogy of steam or smoke.

These are subtle substances and convey to some extent the character of the indescribable thing which works up on us in this world, though it is hidden from our sight.

We cannot see it or touch it with our hands, and therefore it is well concealed and it is to be found wherever it is least expected.

It is safely concealed, for instance, in a black or dark metal, such as lead, and therefore the alchemists frequently speak of it as lead because the term describes exactly how one experiences the unconscious.

Sometimes it feels like a heavy weight lying on the top of one; these are the times when, according to astrology, Saturn is oppressing us.

It is exactly as if something were sitting up on one, and this was sometimes expressed as a demon sitting on man's neck and oppressing him.

It is in the neighbourhood of very unconscious people that this weight is most evident, it works as a sort of heaviness in the atmosphere which oppresses us.

This is the weight of the lead and shows us why the alchemists projected the unconscious into lead, but as we shall see later, with the presupposition that it was not the actual substance of the lead itself, the tangible metal, which was meant, but something which was concealed in the lead.

It was naturally quicksilver above all which impressed the alchemists.

Quicksilver is a metal and yet it is liquid like water, and has therefore the same mystical significance as water.

But it is a metallic water, and has, therefore, certain qualities in common with lead, in that lead is also a metal which is easily melted, and when it is in a liquid state it behaves exactly like quicksilver.

And beyond this, quicksilver was connected with the god Hermes or Mercury, and for this reason Hermes is the arch-authority of Greek alchemy.

Innumerable treatises of a chemical nature are ascribed to him, and many of the discovered papyri refer to his name or quote his authority.

He is "Hermes Trismegistos" (thrice-greatest Hermes), and is identical with the Egyptian Thoth, the god of learning.

Hermes was a leader of souls, a god of revelation and understanding, connected with the human mind, and also the source of dreams.

He was actually the god of the unconscious, and the being who determined the human intellect.

Mercury, quicksilver, represented him and this is the reason for the alchemistic idea that the greatest wisdom was hidden in mercury and also in lead.

But it was particularly quicksilver (the mercurial water as it was called in the Middle Ages) which was directly regarded as being itself knowledge, light, reason, and the Nous.

It had a transforming influence on man, for it is above all in mind that men differ.

Another substance, which naturally occupied the phantasy of the ancients, was fire.

The fact, that fire ranks as an element, shows us how little the nature of fire (that is the chemical process) was understood.

It was not understood as a process at all, but as a substance, concealed inside matter, a phlogiston as it was called later.

This was a sort of caloric, understood to be hidden in all things and it was also called the principle of life.

This again is a symbol for a certain quality of the unconscious which imparts the warmth of life.

We experience this quality directly in an emotional condition.

For instance, someone may be sitting quietly, feeling cool and collected, when suddenly a hot wave surges up in him.

A disagreeable thought, or something which rouses anger, has struck him and the inner fire flares up and bursts forth.

Another variety of the same idea is the "scintilla" (spark) , the "Seelenfiinklein" (little spark of the soul) as Meister Eckhart calls it.

This is a very ancient idea and is to be found among the most primitive people.

These scintillae are thought to be the souls of the ancestors by the Paleolithic primitives of Central Australia.

This is an interesting parallel to the alchemists' definition of the prima materia as the "land of the dead".

The Central Australians say that this land consists of "maiaurli" (little soul sparks).

These are malicious little beings, particularly inconvenient to women.

When, for instance, a primitive woman is not pregnant (which occasionally happens even with primitives!) she must take great care in passing certain rocks, trees, rivers, and particularly fords where there are "maiaurli", that is, souls of the ancestors.

If she forgets to s ay a certain incantation, out jumps a maiaurli, straight into her uterus and she at once conceives.

One of the best known preventatives is for a young woman to pretend she is old, and to limp along on a stick, so that the maiaurlis think: "That is quite an old woman, there is no point in doing anything there!"

This idea of the maiaurli is a remnant of the "scintilla" which played a great role, as the "Seelenfiinklein" right into the Middle Ages.

1. Living beings

The resemblance or relation of the prima materia to the principle of life soon led to the assumption that the prima materia was man himself, or rather that it was connected with man.

There are many passages in the literature where it is definitely stated that it is not man, and others where it is almost as definitely stated that it is.

In a treatise in "Artis Auriferae", for instance, we read: "And as man is composed of the four elements, so is also the stone, and so it arises from man, and thou art its minerals".

We gather from the literature that the prima materia is in man, and to be found in the neighbourhood of man, but yet is not man.

So our forefathers came very near to the realisation that the prima materia must b a being connected with man.

It was to be found, they said, everywhere where men are: in their houses, kitchens , stables and so on.

They thus perceived that the unconscious was not just anywhere, but was bound to the neighbourhood of man, but they did not realise that it belonged to man himself.

And even today the majority of people do not realise this either.

We are always piously convinced that it is someone else who is making a colossal mistake, whereas it is clear to everyone else that I am making one myself.

The things which I conceal from myself I simply do not see.

It is the old story of the mote and the beam, and while I am cold-bloodedly concentrating on the mote, I have a whole house in my own eye.

II. Symbols

We come now to the second part of our summary.

The things, which I have spoken of up till now, were not symbols but conjectures.

They were real projections, the alchemists met the thing they were searching for in the actual objects.

When they spoke of the sky, stars, earth or water they meant what they said; and they worked with actual quicksilver and gave themselves endless trouble to find the best quicksilver.

There is a famous treatise by Count Bernardus Trevisanus who travelled round Europe for six years in order to find the right quicksilver, but in the last moment the devil betrayed him so that he never found it!

One sees from such things that they also meant the real quicksilver, and that they worked practically and most seriously in their laboratories, right into the seventeenth century.

We come now to the symbolic stage, in which stage the alchemists were conscious that all they said about the prima materia was symbolic, although they thought it was presumably a substance.

The authors assure us that they call it so and so, but that the name has a mystical significance or is used metaphorically.

We will classify the symbols under the same headings that we used for the projection of the unconscious: nature, substances and living beings.

1. Nature

It is from nature that the image of the chaos was taken, the primeval condition of the creation: "And the earth was without form and void; and darkness was up on the face of the deep.

And the Spirit of God moved up on the face of the waters." (Gen. I:2.)

This text is the starting point of the whole idea, the prima materia is in the condition of the beginning of things, the condition before there was any consciousness.

This is simply the unconscious, for our consciousness originated in the unconscious.

You can observe in any small child the way in which fragments of consciousness flow together and form the ego.

At first a child speaks in the third person, and only later does it say "I".

This is the moment when the island of consciousness has begun to gain continuity.

When consciousness comes on the scene the primeval chaos begins to recede.

The chaos consists of the elements and the effects of the stars.

The elements are of an earthly nature, the physical and chemical constituents of our bodies.

These are the earth in us, so to speak, and the stars represent the beginning of psychical life, the influence of the stars in the condition of the chaos.

You remember the picture of" the Chaos" (see sketch p. 202) and the wild confusion and conflict which prevailed.

There was no coordination, nothing was organic, everything was still inorganic.

The chaos is also frequently simply defined as the earth or as "terra prima " (the first earth), from which nothing yet grows, but from which everything can grow.

And for the same reason it is represented as "mother" or "virgin", as a mother who is still a virgin, and, as you saw, this was symbolised later by the Virgin Mary, the mother of God.

Or this earth, on account of its wonderful fertility, was also called the "earth of Paradise", or simply "susceptible", something which can receive a seed into itself and nourish and develop it.

This last definition is of the utmost importance, in that the unconscious is thus represented as the "susceptible" in us; it receives everything into itself and reacts to all impressions.

The unconscious is indeed the dark being in ourselves which hears what our conscious ears do not hear, and sees what our conscious eyes do not perceive.

It receives impressions of every kind, allows them to grow and molds them in itself.

They disappear from our conscious memory and we become aware of them again in the form of dreams and visions and so on.

This is the amazing fertility of the unconscious.

Is it not a fact that you often do not know where some stimulus has come from, or you are at first unconscious that anything is stimulating you, and then suddenly later something quite unexpected grows out of it.

These phenomena are most easily observed in artists or in other creative people.

This earth is a dark earth, it is invisible as the original chaos was invisible in the darkness; and therefore it is also called "Hades " or the "Land of the Dead" by the alchemists.

Hades is inhabited by the dead, the ghosts of the ancestors, the maiaurli.

It is thought of as being situated in the centre of the earth or in some other cavity in the earth.

The dead are sunk in the earth, so to speak, like grains of wheat, always waiting to spring up into new life.

Psychologically this means that the souls of the ancestors (potential factors, qualities, talents, possibilities, and so on, which we have inherited from all the lines of our ancestry) are waiting in the unconscious, and are ready at any time to begin a new growth.

You can often observe in human life that certain family characteristics, which seem to have skipped a generation, suddenly develop and then we say: "He is a chip of the old block after all."

Family characteristics come to light in every kind of form, positive and negative: features, bodily illnesses, psychical disturbances, talents and so.

These are, so to speak, the re-animated souls of the ancestors which have been lying dormant in the unconscious, and the alchemists call these units or souls the sleepers or the dead in Hades who are resurrected by the "holy waters" (that is the miraculous water of alchemy, the fertilising Mercury).

These waters fall on the dead like spring rain and wake them to a new life.

This means that the opus of the alchemists woke the unconscious to a new life.

The alchemist understood this as an awakening of the possibilities and potentialities lying dormant in lead, for instance, and his work consisted in calling forth the miraculous life concealed in the lead.

In reality the unconscious, which he contemplated in the lead, was in himself, but in that he meditated on the lead, he woke its spirit to a new life.

This contemplation created the spring rain, and the fertilising qualities of this rain are so great that even Hades itself blossoms.

Another influence in this dark chaos of nature is that of the planets and above all that of the sun and the moon, the father and mother, as the alchemists call them.

You know that it is the father and mother complexes which play the most distinguished roles in analysis!

Everyone has had a father and mother from whom he assumes that he inherited his whole existence.

Whether this explanation is correct is another question, but at any rate it is certain that father and mother represent two psychical factors of unequalled importance, for we originate from them.

These two psychical factors are represented by the sun and moon in alchemy, the two great sources of light in the sky.

This points to the fact that the prima materia is solar as well as lunar, and both in one, for it is the "mountain in which there are no differences", and the symbol of the hermaphrodite.

1. Substances

We come now to the sub stances.

Mercury was the substance par excellence that was used as a symbol for the prima materia.

It was considered to be the "soul of the body", of the human body, and of every other substance, for the alchemists found a soul in everything.

Everything contained an "imago invisibilis" [an invisible or non-pictorial image).

The way that a crystal framework forms in a solution of salt is a good example for what the alchemists mean by this invisible image.

These invisible images really exist in the unconscious, they are one of its strangest characteristics; it contains the images of all that which is not yet in being, of that which will be, and also perhaps of that which will never be.

But these images are always present as potentialities, and can at times take shape, that is when they allow themselves to be formed by the conscious or when they force their form on consciousness.

Another substance, which is used as a symbol, is lead.

The alchemists very often called it Saturn, and then one can be sure that they do not mean concrete lead but symbolic lead.

Saturn is the god of lead and the condition of heaviness, darkness, and melancholy is attributed to him.

But it is in this condition that the fire is concealed, a passionate fire, libido.

It contains a universe, a world, for the alchemists felt that the unconscious was a world.

They saw the soul all over the world, and as man becomes conscious this soul comes home to him, so to speak.

This idea of a world soul is, as you know, also a fundamental idea in Indian philosophy.

But the universal mind, the anima mundi, is also a dangerous demon which causes madness.

This is absolutely true, for if you investigate the diseases of the mind - particularly the well-known and most common mental disease, schizophrenia - it becomes very evident that the patients have simply been overwhelmed by the unconscious.

The spirit of Saturn or lead has suddenly burst into flame with a terrible commotion, and the inmost oven, so to speak, has burst.

The old alchemists knew this, and therefore they said that the lead contained an insolent demon which made people mad.

Water was a substance which was also very often used as a symbol, as a philosophic principle.

It is usually called "humidum radicale", [radical humidity).

The alchemists suspected that a moist substance existed from which all existing things originated, and they described this as the "humidum radicale".

1. Living Beings

Among other living animals, man himself was naturally used as a symbol for the Prima materia.

He played a great role in alchemy as the homunculus, for instance.

And also as Adam, the mystical Adam, primeval man, who fell into the power of the darkness.

This primeval man was the Gnostic Nous who , looking down from above on to the Physis, saw his image in the primeval waters, and was embraced by the loving arms of the female Physis, and drawn down into, and imprisoned in, the depths.

The task, which the alchemists set themselves, was to free this primeval and whole man of the beginning from his prison.

I hope to be able to show you, in a later series of lectures, the kind of opus through which the alchemists sought to reach this goal. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Pages 224-231.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/a9690-1.jpg`

Victor White: " I am just indescribably lonely, and it’s some relief to me to tell you. . . ." (2019-03-06 05:14)

[1]

My dear C. G., November 8, 1953

The dilemma, reduced to its simplest terms, seems complete and insoluble.

If Christ is no longer an adequate and valid symbol of the Self, and in fact very inadequate, one-sided, unintegrated and harmful, then must not one choose—at whatever cost?

Faith in him, it seems to me, must be unconditional; once one "criticizes Christ" one has lost faith in him, and one cannot in honesty preach him any more.

And one has lost any sense of oneness that one ever had with one's community, with the Church, with the "cause" that animates them. . . .

So I tell myself from time to time that, whatever the cost, I must get out. . . . I am just indescribably lonely, and it's some relief to me to tell you. . . .
I must confess there are times when I wish to heaven I had never heard of your psychology (and some of your disciples); and yet I tremble to think what would have happened if I hadn't!

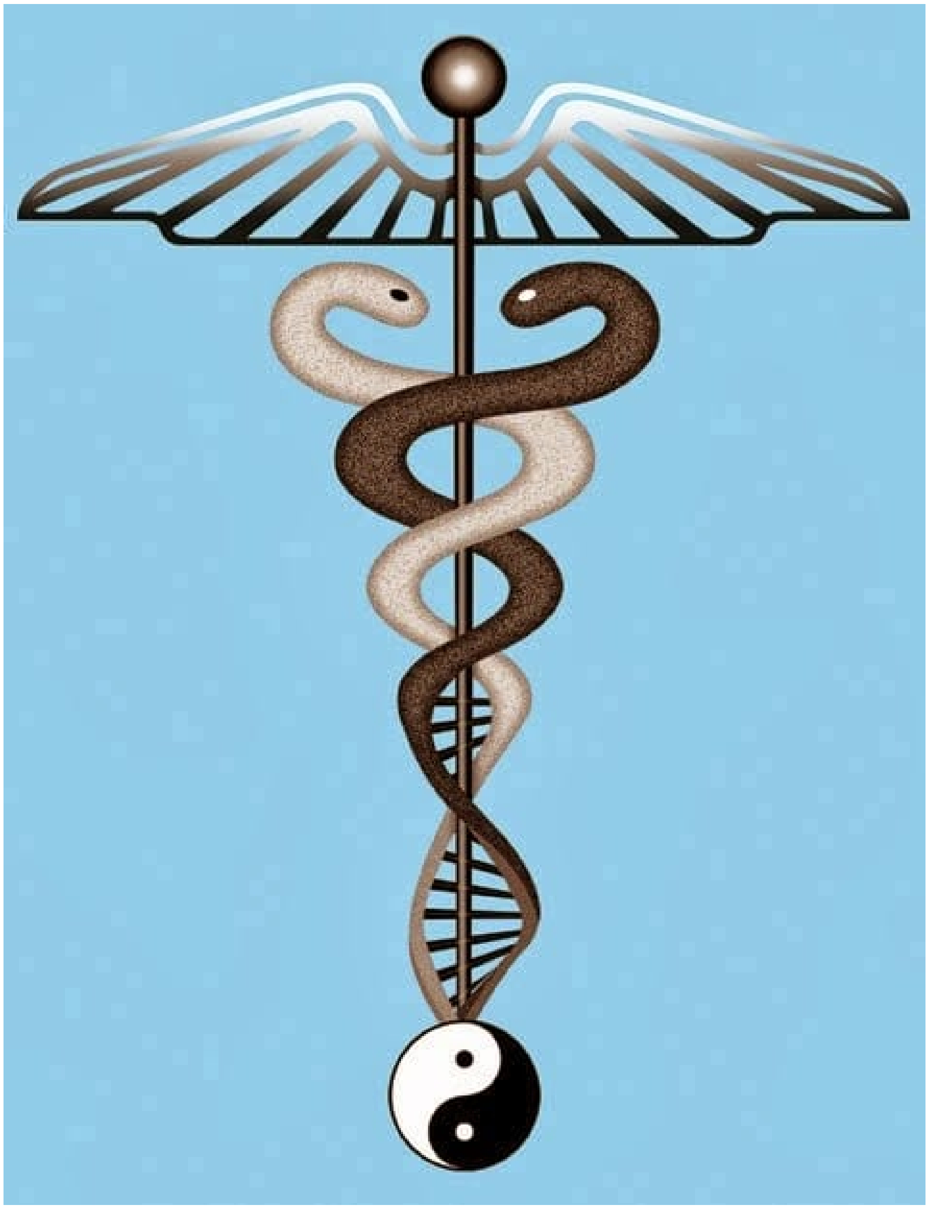
Ever Cordially,

Victor Jung-White Letters, Pages 216-217.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ed218-12bvictor.jpg`

Carl Jung and The Anima and Animus (2019-03-06 05:46)

[1]



[Carl Jung and The Anima and Animus]

Though the effects of anima and animus can be made conscious, they themselves are factors transcending consciousness and beyond the reach of perception and volition. Hence they remain autonomous despite the integration of their contents, and for this reason they should be borne constantly in mind. This is extremely important from the therapeutic standpoint, because constant observation pays the unconscious a tribute that more or less guarantees its co-operation.

The unconscious as we know can never be “done with” once and for all. It is, in fact, one of the most important tasks of psychic hygiene to pay continual attention to the symptomatology of unconscious contents and processes, for the good reason that the conscious mind is always in danger of becoming one-sided, of keeping to well-worn paths and getting stuck in blind alleys. The complementary and compensating function of the unconscious ensures that these dangers, which are especially great in neurosis, can in some measure be avoided.

It is only under ideal conditions, when life is still simple and unconscious enough to follow the serpentine path of instinct without hesitation or misgiving, that the compensation works with entire success. The more civilized, the more unconscious and complicated a man is, the less he is able to follow his instincts. His complicated living conditions and the influence of his environment are so strong that they drown the quiet voice of nature.

Opinions, beliefs, theories, and collective tendencies appear in its stead and back up all the aberrations of the conscious mind. Deliberate attention should then be given to the unconscious so that the compensation can set to work. Hence it is especially important to picture the archetypes of the unconscious not as a rushing phantasmagoria of fugitive images but as constant, autonomous factors, which indeed they are. Carl Jung; Syzygy: Anima and animus.

Anima and Animus

- The conscious side of woman corresponds to the emotional side of man, not to his "mind." Mind makes up the soul, or better, the "animus" of woman, and just as the anima of a man consists of inferior relatedness, full of affect, so the animus of woman consists of inferior judgments, or better, opinions. The Secret of the Golden Flower. (Das Geheimnis der Goldenen Blute) 1929. Commentary by C.G. Jung in CW 13: Alchemical Studies. P.60

- The conscious side of woman corresponds to the emotional side of man, not to his "mind." Mind makes up the soul, or better, the "animus" of woman, and just as the anima of a man consists of inferior relatedness, full of affect, so the animus of woman consists of inferior judgments, or better, opinions. The Secret of the Golden Flower. (Das Geheimnis der Goldenen Blute) 1929. Commentary by C.G. Jung in CW 13: Alchemical Studies. P.60

- For a woman, the typical danger emanating from the unconscious comes from above, from the "spiritual" sphere personified by the animus, whereas for a man it comes from the chthonic realm of the "world and woman," i.e., the anima projected on to the world. "A Study in the Process of Individuation" (1934) In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 559

- No man can converse with an animus for five minutes without becoming the victim of his own anima. Anyone who still had enough sense of humor to listen objectively to the ensuing dialogue would be staggered by the vast number of commonplaces, misapplied truisms, clichés from newspapers and novels, shop-soiled platitudes of every description interspersed with vulgar abuse and brain splitting lack of logic. It is a dialogue which, irrespective of its participants, is repeated millions and millions of times in all the languages of the world and always remains essentially the same. Aion (1951). CW 9, Part II: Page 29

- The concept of archetypes as the mode of expression of the collective unconscious is discussed. In addition to the purely personal unconscious hypothesized by Freud, a deeper unconscious level is felt to exist. This deeper level manifests itself in universal archaic images expressed in dreams, religious beliefs, myths, and fairytales.

The archetypes, as unfiltered psychic experience, appear sometimes in their most primitive and naive forms (in dreams), sometimes in a considerably more complex form due to the operation of conscious elaboration (in myths). Archetypal images expressed in religious dogma in particular are thoroughly elaborated into formalized structures which, while by expressing the unconscious in a circuitous manner, prevent direct confrontation with it. Since the Protestant Reformation rejected nearly all of the carefully constructed symbol structures, man has felt increasingly isolated and alone without his gods; at a loss to replenish his externalized symbols, he must turn to their source in the unconscious.

The search into the unconscious involves confronting the shadow, man’s hidden nature; the anima/animus, a hidden opposite gender in each individual; and beyond, the archetype of meaning. These are archetypes susceptible to personification; the archetypes of transformation, which express the process of individuation itself, are manifested in situations. As archetypes penetrate consciousness, they influence the perceived experience of normal and neurotic people; a too powerful archetype may totally possess the individual and cause psychosis.

The therapeutic process takes the unconscious archetypes into account in two ways: they are made as fully conscious as possible, and then synthesized with the conscious by recognition and acceptance. It is observed that since modern man has a highly developed ability to dissociate, simple recognition may not be followed by appropriate action; it is thus felt that moral judgment and counsel is often required in the course of treatment. Archetypes of the collective unconscious. From Collected Works of C. G. Jung , Vol. 9, Part 1, 2nd ed., Princeton University Press, 1968. 451 p. (p. 3-41).

• The formulation of the archetypes is described as an empirically derived concept, like that of the atom; it is a concept based not only on medical evidence but on observations of mythical, religious and literary phenomena, these archetypes are considered to be primordial images, spontaneous products of the psyche which do not reflect any physical process, but are reflected in them.

It is noted that while the theories of materialism would explain the psyche as an epiphenomenon of chemical states in the brain, no proof has yet been found for this hypothesis; it is considered more reasonable to view psychic production as a generating rather than a generated factor.

The anima is the feminine aspect of the archetypal male/female duality whose projections in the external world can be traced through myth, philosophy and religious doctrine. This duality is often represented in mythical syzygy symbols, which are expressions of parental imagos; the singular power of this particular archetype is considered due to an unusually intense repression of unconscious material concerning the parental imagos. Archetypal images are described as preexistent, available and active from the moment of birth as possibilities of ideas which are subsequently elaborated by the individual.

The anima image in particular is seen to be active in childhood, projecting superhuman qualities on the mother before sinking back into the unconscious under the influence of external reality. In a therapeutic sense, the concept of the anima is considered critical to the understanding of male psychology. There is really a curious coincidence between astrological and psychological facts, so that one can isolate time from the characteristics of an individual, and also, one can deduce characteristics from a certain time. Therefore we have to conclude that what we call psychological motives are in a way identical with star positions . . . We must form a peculiar hypothesis. This hypothesis says that the dynamics of our psyche is not just identical with the position of the stars . . . better to assume that it is a phenomenon of time - Carl G. Jung in 1929

• Although "wholeness" seems at first sight to be nothing but an abstract idea (like anima and animus), it is nevertheless empirical in so far as it is anticipated by the psyche in the form of spontaneous or autonomous symbols. These are the quaternity or mandala symbols, which occur not only in the dreams of modern people who have never heard of them, but are widely disseminated in the historical records of many peoples and many epochs. Their significance as symbols of unity and totality is amply confirmed by history as well as by empirical psychology. [The Self, ibid" par. 59.]

• The "soul" which accrues to ego-consciousness during the opus has a feminine character in the man and a masculine character in a woman. His anima wants to reconcile and unite; her animus tries to discern and discriminate. [The Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par. 522.]

• When animus and anima meet, the animus draws his sword of power and the anima ejects her poison of illusion and seduction. The outcome need not always be negative, since the two are equally likely to fall in love (a special instance of love at first sight). Aion (1951). CW 9, Part II: P.338.30

• The persona, the ideal picture of a man as he should be, is inwardly compensated by feminine weakness, and as the individual outwardly plays the strong man, so he becomes inwardly a woman, i.e., the anima, for it is the anima that reacts to the persona. But because the inner world is dark and invisible to the extraverted consciousness, and because a man is all the less capable of conceiving his weaknesses the more he is identified with the persona, the persona’s counterpart, the anima, remains completely in the dark and is at once projected, so that our hero comes under the heel of his wife’s slipper.

If this results in a considerable increase of her power, she will acquit herself none too well. She becomes inferior, thus providing her husband with the welcome proof that it is not he, the hero, who is inferior in private, but his wife. In return the wife can cherish the illusion, so attractive to many, that at least she has married a hero, unperturbed by her own uselessness. This little game of illusion is often taken to be the whole meaning of life. Two Essays on Analytical Psychology, CW 7 (1957). "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious" P.309

- The persona, the ideal picture of a man as he should be, is inwardly compensated by feminine weakness, and as the individual outwardly plays the strong man, so he becomes inwardly a woman, i.e., the anima, for it is the anima that reacts to the persona. But because the inner world is dark and invisible to the extraverted consciousness, and because a man is all the less capable of conceiving his weaknesses the more he is identified with the persona, the persona’s counterpart, the anima, remains completely in the dark and is at once projected, so that our hero comes under the heel of his wife’s slipper.

If this results in a considerable increase of her power, she will acquit herself none too well. She becomes inferior, thus providing her husband with the welcome proof that it is not he, the hero, who is inferior in private, but his wife. In return the wife can cherish the illusion, so attractive to many, that at least she has married a hero, unperturbed by her own uselessness. This little game of illusion is often taken to be the whole meaning of life. Two Essays on Analytical Psychology, CW 7 (1957). "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious" P.309

- As the animus is partial to argument, he can best be seen at work in disputes where both parties know they are right. Men can argue in a very womanish way, too, when they are anima - possessed and have thus been transformed into the animus of their own anima. Aion (1951). CW 9, Part II: P.29

- Archetypes are complexes of experience that come upon us like fate, and their effects are felt in our most personal life. The anima no longer crosses our path as a goddess, but, it may be, as an intimately personal misadventure, or perhaps as our best venture. When, for instance, a highly esteemed professor in his seventies abandons his family and runs off with a young red-headed actress, we know that the gods have claimed another victim. "Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious" (1935). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 62
- Every man carries within him the eternal image of woman, not the image of this or that particular woman, but a definite feminine image. This image is fundamentally unconscious; an hereditary factor of primordial origin engraved in the living organic system of the man, an imprint or "archetype" of all the ancestral experiences of the female, a deposit, as it were, of all the impressions ever made by woman-in short, an inherited system of psychic adaptation. Even if no women existed, it would still be possible, at any given time, to deduce from this unconscious image exactly how a woman would have to be constituted psychically. The same is true of the woman: she too has her inborn image of man." Marriage as a Psychological Relationship" (1925) In CW 17: The Development of the Personality. P.338

- With a little self-criticism one can see through the shadow-so far as its nature is personal. But when it appears as an archetype, one encounters the same difficulties as with anima and animus. In other words, it is quite within the bounds of possibility for a man to recognize the relative evil of his nature, but it is a rare and shattering experience for him to gaze into the face of absolute evil. ["The Shadow, ibid” par. 19.]

- The symbol is a living body, corpus et anima; hence the "child" is such an apt formula for the symbol. The uniqueness of the psyche can never enter wholly into reality; it can only be realized approximately, though it still remains the absolute basis of all consciousness.

The deeper "layers" of the psyche lose their individual uniqueness as they retreat farther and farther into darkness. "Lower down," that is to say as they approach the autonomous functional systems, they become increasingly collective until they are universalized and extinguished in the body's materiality, i.e., in chemical substances. The body's carbon is simply carbon. Hence "at bottom" the psyche is simply "world."

In this sense I hold Kerenyi to be absolutely right when he says that in the symbol the world itself is speaking. The more archaic and "deeper," that is the more physiological, the symbol is, the more collective and universal, the more "material" it is. The more abstract, differentiated, and specified it is, and the more its nature approximates to conscious uniqueness and individuality, the more it sloughs off its universal character. Having finally attained full consciousness, it runs the risk of becoming a mere allegory which nowhere oversteps the bounds of conscious comprehension, and is then exposed to all sorts of attempts at rationalistic and therefore inadequate explanation. "The Psychology of the Child Archetype" (1940). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P.291

The persona, the anima, and the little game of illusion that gives meaning to many lives due to getting incapacitated somehow the persona, the ideal picture of a man as he should be, is inwardly compensated by feminine weakness, and as the individual outwardly plays the strong man, so he becomes inwardly a woman, i.e., the anima, for it is the anima that reacts to the persona. But because the inner world is dark and invisible to the extroverted consciousness, and because a man is all the less capable of conceiving his weaknesses the more he is identified with the persona, the persona's counterpart, the anima, remains completely in the dark and is at once projected, so that our hero comes under the heel of his wife's slipper.

If this results in a considerable increase of her power, she will acquit herself none too well. She becomes inferior, thus providing her husband with the welcome proof that it is not he, the hero, who is inferior in private, but his wife. In return the wife can cherish the illusion, so attractive to many, that at least she has married a hero, unperturbed by her own uselessness. This little game of illusion is often taken to be the whole meaning of life. - Two Essays on Analytical Psychology, CW 7 (1957). "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious" P.309

The concept of archetypes as the mode of expression of the collective unconscious is discussed. In addition to the purely personal unconscious hypothesized by Freud, a deeper unconscious level is felt to exist. This deeper level manifests itself in universal archaic images expressed in dreams, religious beliefs, myths, and fairy-tales.

The archetypes, as unfiltered psychic experience, appear sometimes in their most primitive and naive forms (in dreams), sometimes in a considerably more complex form due to the operation of conscious elaboration (in myths). Archetypal images expressed in religious dogma in particular are thoroughly elaborated into formalized structures which, while by expressing the unconscious in a circuitous manner, prevent direct confrontation with it. Since the Protestant Reformation rejected nearly all of the carefully constructed symbol structures, man has felt increasingly isolated and alone without his gods; at a loss to replenish his externalized symbols, he must turn to their source in the unconscious. The search into the unconscious involves confronting the shadow, man's hidden nature; the anima/animus, a hidden opposite gender in each individual; and beyond, the archetype of meaning. These are archetypes susceptible to personification; the archetypes of transformation, which express the process of individuation itself, are manifested in situations.

As archetypes penetrate consciousness, they influence the perceived experience of normal and neurotic people; a too powerful archetype may totally possess the individual and cause psychosis. The therapeutic process takes the unconscious archetypes into account in two ways: they are made as fully conscious as possible, then synthesized with the conscious by recognition and acceptance. It is observed that since modern man has a highly developed ability to dissociate, simple recognition may not be followed by appropriate action; it is thus felt that moral judgment and counsel is often required in the course of treatment.

The result of a phenomenological study of psychic structure, consisting of the observance and description of the products of the unconscious, is described as the development of a psychological typology of situations and figures, called motifs, in the psychic processes of man. The principal types of motifs of the human figure include the shadow, the wise old man, the child, the mother as a supraordinate personality or a maiden, the anima in man and the animus in woman. One such motif is the Kore figure, belonging in man to the anima type and in woman to the supraordinate personality, or the self; like the other psychic figures, the Kore is observed to have both positive and negative manifestations. Images such as the Kore are considered to rise from an area of the personality which has an impersonal, collective nature, and to express this psychic material in the conscious. The experience of these archetypal expressions has the effect of widening the scope of consciousness. Several dream visions described by men and women are analyzed in their manifestations of the Kore symbol as supraordinate personality and anima. I reference. The phenomenology of the spirit in fairytales. 1. Concerning the word "spirit." In: Jung, C., Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Vol. 9, Part 1. 2nd ed., Princeton University Press, 1968. 451 p. (p. 207-214).

Anima and animus are both characterized by an extraordinary many-sidedness. In a marriage it is always the contained who projects this image upon the container, while the latter is only partially able to project his unconscious image upon his partner. The more unified and simple this partner is, the less complete the projection. In which case, this highly fascinating image hangs as it were in mid air, as though waiting to be filled out by a living person. There are certain types of women who seem to be made by nature to attract anima projections; indeed one could almost speak of a definite "anima type." The so-called "sphinxlike" character is an indispensable part of their equipment, also an equivocalness, an intriguing elusiveness – not an indefinite blur that offers nothing, but an indefiniteness that seems full of promises, like the speaking silence of a Mona Lisa. A woman of this kind is both old and young, mother and daughter, of more than doubtful chastity, childlike, and yet endowed with a naive cunning that is extremely disarming to men. Not every man of real intellectual power can be an animus, for the animus must be a master not so much of fine ideas as of fine words – words seemingly full of meaning which purport to leave a great deal unsaid. He must also belong to the "misunderstood" class or be in some way at odds with his environment, so that the idea of self-sacrifice can insinuate itself. He must be a rather questionable hero, a man with possibilities, which is not to say that an animus projection may not discover a real hero long before he has become perceptible to the sluggish wits of the man of "average intelligence." (from Marriage as a Psychological Relationship
Anima and Animus C.J. Jung (1925):

“SOUL. [psyche, personality, persona, anima,] I have been compelled, in my investigations into the structure of the unconscious, to make a conceptual distinction between soul and psyche. By psyche I understand the totality of all psychic processes, conscious as well as unconscious. By soul, on the other hand, I understand a clearly demarcated functional complex that can best be described as a “personality.” In order to make clear what I mean by this, I must introduce some further points of view. It is, in particular, the phenomena of somnambulism, double consciousness, split personality, etc., whose investigation we owe primarily to the French school, that have enabled us to accept the possibility of a plurality of personalities in one and the same individual.” (CW6, §797)

“The name’s people give to their experiences are often very revealing. What is the origin of the word Seele? Like the English word soul, it comes from the Gothic saiwalu and the old German saiwalô, and these can be connected etymologically with the Greek aiolos, ‘quick-moving, twinkling, iridescent’. The Greek word psyche also means ‘butterfly’. Saiwalô is related on the other side in the Old Slavonic sila, ‘strength’. These connections throw light on the original meaning of the word soul; it is moving force, that is, life-force.

The- Latin words animus, ‘spirit’, and anima, ‘soul’, arc the same as the Greek anemos, ‘wind’. The other Greek word for ‘wind’, pneuma , also means ‘spirit’. In Gothic we find the same word in us-anan, ‘to breathe out’, and in Latin it is anhelare, ‘to pant’. In Old High German, spiritus sanctus was rendered by atum,‘breath’. In Arabic, ‘wind’ is rih, and rüh is ‘soul, spirit’. The Greek word psyche has similar connections; it is related to psychein, ‘to breathe’, psychos, ‘cool’, psychros, ‘cold, chill’, and physa, ‘bellows’. These connections show clearly how in Latin, Greek, and Arabic the names given to the soul are related to the notion of moving air, the “cold breath of the spirits.” And this is probably the reason why the primitive view also endows the soul with an invisible breath-body.” (CW8, § 663 &664)

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/5fcb8-caduceuplain-blue.jpg`

Carl Jung: Transcendent Function and Tertium non Datur - Lexicon (2019-03-06 05:52)

[1]

Transcendent function:

A psychic function that arises from the tension between consciousness and the unconscious and supports their union. (See also opposites and tertium non datur.)
When there is full parity of the opposites, attested by the ego’s absolute participation in both, this necessarily leads to a suspension of the will, for the will can no longer operate when every motive has an equally strong counter-motive. Since life cannot tolerate a standstill, a damming up of vital energy results, and this would lead to an insupportable condition did not the tension of opposites produce a new, uniting function that transcends them. This function arises quite naturally from the regression of libido caused by the blockage.[Ibid., par. 824.]

The tendencies of the conscious and the unconscious are the two factors that together make up the transcendent function. It is called "transcendent" because it makes the transition from one attitude to another organically possible.["The Transcendent Function," CW 8, par. 145.]

In a conflict situation, or a state of depression for which there is no apparent reason, the development of the transcendent function depends on becoming aware of unconscious material. This is most readily available in dreams, but because they are so difficult to understand Jung considered the method of active imagination-giving "form" to dreams, fantasies, etc.–to be more useful.

Once the unconscious content has been given form and the meaning of the formulation is understood, the question arises as to how the ego will relate to this position, and how the ego and the unconscious are to come to terms. This is the second and more important stage of the procedure, the bringing together of opposites for the production of a third: the transcendent function. At this stage it is no longer the unconscious that takes the lead, but the ego.[Ibid., par. 181.]

This process requires an ego that can maintain its standpoint in face of the counter-position of the unconscious. Both are of equal value. The confrontation between the two generates a tension charged with energy and creates a living, third essence.

Tertium non datur:

The reconciling "third," not logically foreseeable, characteristic of a resolution in a conflict situation when the tension between opposites has been held in consciousness.

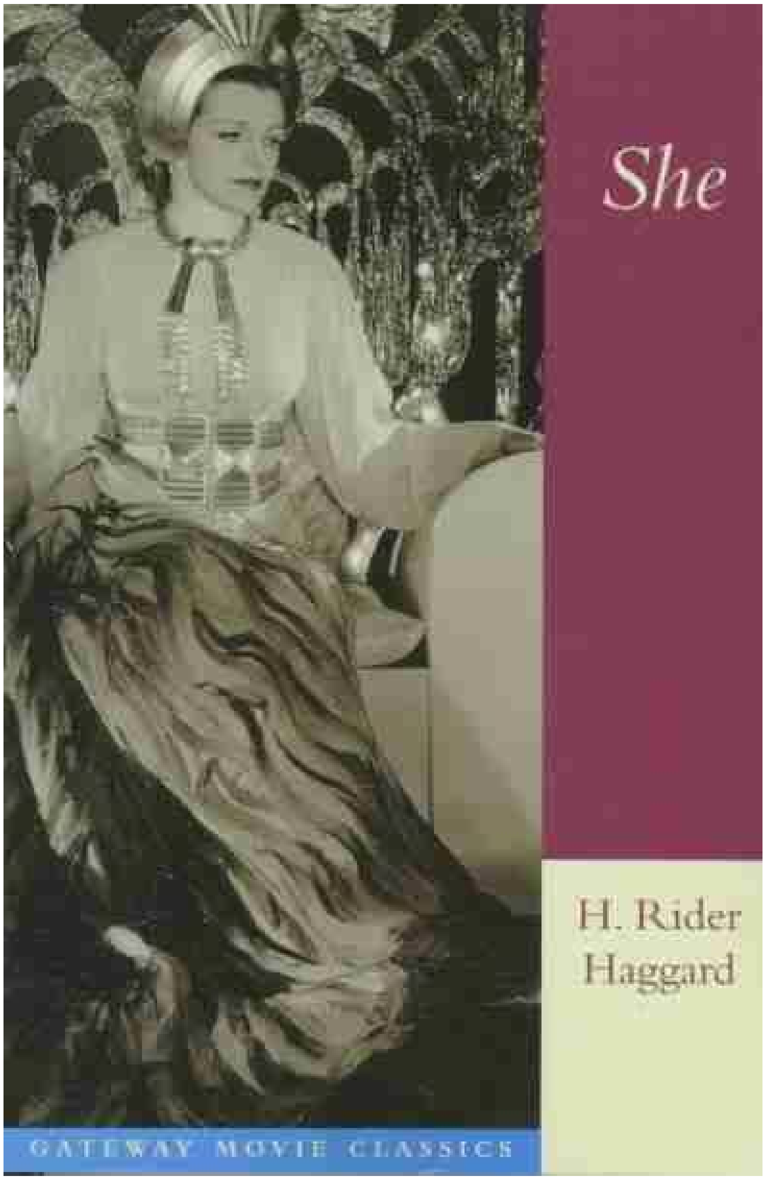
As a rule it occurs when the analysis has constellated the opposites so powerfully that a union or synthesis of the personality becomes an imperative necessity. . . . [This situation] requires a real solution and necessitates a third thing in which the opposites can unite. Here the logic of the intellect usually fails, for in a logical antithesis there is no third. The "solvent" can only be of an irrational nature. In nature the resolution of opposites is always an energic process: she acts symbolically in the truest sense of the word, doing something that expresses both sides, just as a waterfall visibly mediates between above and below.["The Conjunction," CW 14, par. 705.]

http://www.nyaap.org/jung-lexicon/t

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/fe872-transcendent.jpg`

Carl Jung on: “L’Atlantide” (2019-03-06 05:56)

[1]



Mr. Bacon read the report of the committee on L'Atlantide.

The committee were of divided opinions as to the proper psychological interpretation.

One view was that the book demonstrated a conflict in Benoît's mind between his spiritual side and a tedency toward material considerations.

It was felt, for example, that he was conscious of misusing the messages of the unconscious for the sake of writing "bestsellers."

Looked at from that angle, Antinéa was not accepted as a true anima figure—that is, a creation of unconscious fantasies—but was taken as having been more than half constructed with a view to literary effect.

Another view represented in the committee was that the book represented a conflict between what was rational and what was irrational in Benoît's psychology, rather than as a conflict between a spiritual and a materialistic viewpoint.

Mr. Aldrich, differing from both of these viewpoints, presented a minority report in which he valiantly defended Antinéa not only as a true anima figure, but also as being a symbol of positive importance.

According to his view, Antinéa was neither a good woman nor an evil one, but complete on all sides. He has summarized his report as follows:
"The natural complement of a complete woman is a complete man.

Insofar as the man is incompletely developed, or refuses to give her more than one side of his nature, he may expect that she will punish him. In Benoît's romance, the hero is split in two: the sensual side of him is personified by Saint-A vit, while Morhange stands for an infantile and conventional sort of spirituality.

In effect, the hero goes to Antinéa and says, 'I tender you my sensual side, because Nature drives me; but I mean to deny you any participation in my spiritual side because, according to my conventional morality, love of woman and spirituality are opposites and cannot be reconciled.'

Naturally, this aroused a devil in Antinéa—as it would in any woman who had any individuality.

Obviously the right woman for a man is the woman who complements his own stage of development: the mother is suitable for the baby, the wife for the man who is winning his place in the world, and the hetaira—the completely developed woman, the comrade—for the man who has achieved complete individuality, the Wise Man.

Antinéa would have been a delightful comrade for a Wise Man; but for a man who had not passed out of the Warrior stage she was as inappropriate and fatal as a wife would be for a baby."

Dr. Jung: The most interesting point about this book is the way in which it differs from She, is it not, Mr. Bacon?

Mr. Bacon: Yes, I must say I was a little confused in trying to get at the differences, but for one thing there is the theme of luxury greatly emphasized in Benoît's book.

Miss Raevsky: Not only that, there is a sensualism that is much developed in it, even in Antinéa.

Dr. Jung: Yes, if you think of the outside details, there is a tremendous difference.

In L'Atlantide as you say, there is an atmosphere of luxury, the beauty of the place is dwelt upon, the way which the people are received is described so as to bring out the details, while the corresponding features in She are very sparsely treated. Benoît is outspokenly esthetical.

One could [not?] imagine an Anglo-Saxon writer paying as much attention to these physical details.

Haggard pays a good deal of attention to them himself, in fact, as for example when he describes an afternoon tea under perfectly absurd conditions, but when Haggard does this, it is with a sort of frugality; it is the sort of sensuality that belongs to the sportsman, while Benoît's is that of the salon.

When you mention the sensuality in L'Atlantide, you have something, but there is a still greater difference.

Benoît fully acknowledges the place of sexuality, while in Haggard it always appears as a fiendish element. In Benoît it plays a big part, while in all of Haggard's books it is decidedly in the background.

One could say that one had here the French and the Anglo-Saxon viewpoints in opposition.

We cannot assume that the Anglo-Saxon view is the only one in harmony with Heaven; we must assume that the French view has also justification.

So it is worthwhile to go into some detail about this question of attitude. In order to do that we must pay some attention to Antinéa.

I am not sure if the class got a very clear picture of Antinéa.

Mr. Bacon, will you describe the ways in which Antinéa differs from "She"?

Mr. Bacon: Antinéa is a much more physiological object than "She," who is very nebulous. Antinéa is represented as full of animal desire.

Mr. Aldrich: "She" says nothing to me, while Antinéa is to me a real woman.

I think I was the only member of the committee who did not think of her as poison.

If the author could only have got himself together and not approached her as a split personality, he would have found Antinéa a very nice girl.

Dr. Jung: But you must admit it is a bit of a bad joke to have a salon full of dead men. Mr. Aldrich: Ah, but she gave them immortality.

Dr. Jung: I must say that view is a little too optimistic, but it is true that Antinéa is usually depreciated, unnecessarily so if her circumstances are taken into consideration.

She is an omnipotent queen who can have her every mood and whim satisfied. Such an Oriental queen can be very cruel without being vicious.

If we compare her with other similar types, she is not so bad. Moreover, she is in a difficult situation.

She is a woman who has not been hampered by interferences of education; she could unfold quite completely, but we should not assume that this is the best thing that can happen.

She sees and appreciates natural values, and she is intelligent and educated intellectually, but she has had no education in the higher values.

One can be doubtful, of course, about whether or not these higher values are worthwhile, but it would be a mistake to think they can be utterly neglected.

If we compare "She" with Antinéa, we can see that the tragedy hangs about this matter of values.

"She" is tortured for thousands of years till she admits them.

Antinéa is not even so far along that she admits or sees their existence, and so she does not fight, and we see that Antinéa is on a lower level than "She." Our sympathy therefore goes to the latter.

But Antinéa has all the charm of the native woman, all the erotic power and instinctiveness that goes with such a woman.

This is somewhat gone in “She,” for “She” is already under the influence of things.

But we must remember that Antinéa is not a real woman, but the anima of a Frenchman, and here we have a typical difference between the French and the Anglo-Saxons.

If ever there was a book that could throw light on this difference it is this one.

I should like to hear from you on this point. How do you explain this peculiar difference? Mr. Schmitz: I believe that the difference between the French and the Anglo-Saxons, between the French and the rest of Europe for that matter, arises out of the difference in their relation to the pagan world.

The French are the only people having a direct connection with this world. When the Romans conquered Gaul they surrounded it with Roman culture.
So when Christianity came, it found France a civilized state in contradistinction to Germany.

The Germans resisted Roman culture, so there is no continuity of tradition with the pagan world. Christianity found us barbaric, and our paganism has remained with the barbaric element in it.

This difference runs through the whole French culture. Dr. Jung: What Mr. Schmitz says is very true.

Therein lies the reason for the difference between the French and the Anglo-Saxon viewpoints.

Gaul was civilized in early times; it even contained a fertile Roman culture at a time when Germany and the Anglo-Saxon were in a most primitive state of development.

In those days even Paris was in existence as a civilized place, and there were poets, even emperors, coming from the natives of Gaul.

It was, in other words, a rich civilization, the old Gauls having been assimilated into the Roman people.

The Celtic languages disappeared, and the Germanic tribes that came in were absorbed by the Romanized population and so received the Roman civilization also.

On that basis Christianity was planted, not on a wild people as in Germany.

Therefore there is an absolute continuity between the Roman mentality and that of the Middle Ages. There is no break.

Even certain early Church Fathers were French.

Besides the Roman, there was a strong Greek influence that reached up the Rhone, and cultural influences from the Mediterranean came at a very early date.

All of these influences from the pagan world had a peculiar effect.

They fortified the antique layers to such an extent that Christianity could not undo it.

The same is true more or less for all the Mediterranean peoples; that is, they remained more pagan than Christian.

It would be hard to say this to a Frenchman, because the French think of themselves as good Catholics. And so they are, in one sense; even when most skeptical they are still good Catholics.

Otherwise Voltaire and Diderot would not be as acceptable as they are.

Thus one can be Catholic in a negative way, and be pleased with venom against the thing formerly most reverenced.

Those within the Church have a most positive attitude.

They center about Catholicism because they feel it embraces life.

Within its scope paganism persists, and so one finds among the most religious Frenchmen a full recognition of sexuality.

Today their point of view about sexuality is that it is amoral.

It is just obvious that it is accepted, and morality scarcely enters into the question.

A man goes regularly to church and keeps up whatever sexual practices he may see fit, for sexuality in his eyes has nothing to do with morality.

That is why sexuality receives the special treatment it does in France.

This peculiar difference explains, I think, every difference between “She” and Antinéa.

And since Antinéa has so definite a character, we can reconstruct something of the author’s conscious and arrive at an appreciation of a modern Frenchman.

Then there are other figures that throw much light on French psychology. Take Le Mesge, for example.

Here is a pure rationalist living in an altogether irrational way, a thing typical of the French.

It is characteristic of the French mind to allow the limit of irrationality in behavior, and nowhere else can one see so many comical figures in reality; but they are nonetheless rational in their viewpoints.

Then Count Bielowsky, in spite of being a Pole, is a typical French figure of the Third Empire, a habitué of Paris.

His figure forms a necessary counterpart to that of Morhange, whose flirtatious attitude toward the church is compensated by Bielowsky’s flirtatious attitude toward “high life.”

The mediating figure between the two is Le Mesge.

Such contradictions always demand a compromise, and this comes about through a rational mediation. But here there is too little life, so then Saint-A vit is brought in to provide temperament and passion.
A Frenchman always allows himself to have “fits,” where he can apply a whole arsenal of rhetoric.

There comes out a long series of tremendous words, put together in a perfect style, and then he is all right.

Mr. Aldrich: Morhange, according to the way I see him, has only a very feeble spirituality. I don't believe he ever had a religious emotion.

Dr. Jung: But you are Anglo-Saxon and he was a Catholic.

We can never know what Sacré-Coeur means to them, nor how they can excite themselves over the image of the Virgin.

We can say then that there is a peculiar atmosphere in L'Atlantide, and an altogether different one from She. This is something I felt very profoundly and wonder if you did not also.

When one reads such a book one asks oneself, "What does it lead to?" What does it mean to you?

Mrs. Zinno: It seems to me a going to death rather than to life.

Mr. Bacon: There is an indefinable sense of cheapness about it to me. It ends as if preparing for a sequel.

Mrs. Zinno: I think the figure of "She" is an effort to connect unreality to reality, but Antinéa remains stuck in unreality, that is, the unconscious.

Dr. Jung: You have touched upon something important there.

Antinéa does not try to get out, she makes no attempt to reach the world, nor to let the world reach her. "She" is planning to rule the world, to get at it in some way.

That is a peculiarity of the Anglo-Saxon, this desire to get at the world and rule it.

It is quite conscious in England, and probably in fifty years will be equally so in America. But the French point of view is to remain where they are.
The French are really not concerned with ruling the world, it is an affectation that Napoleon, who was not a true Frenchman, brought—i. e., the idea of dominating Europe.

The French are concerned with their own country.

It is no wonder then that Antinéa sticks where she is. What I really feel about the issue is that it is hopeless.

It will be repeated one hundred times, and then there is an end of the whole business.

Antinéa will die, and then she will be on a throne in all her royal beauty with appropriate adornments.

It is a sort of apotheosis, something one can see at the end of a film, the idea of La Gloire.

There is a pantheon of fallen heroes, and there the whole thing ends in vain ambition.

Now, in She there is the feeling of enormous expectation at the end. One does not know, but the future is looked for.

What makes a great difference between the anima of the Frenchman and that of the Anglo-Saxon is that the latter contains a mysterious side of promise, therefore there is more feeling of spiritual potencies in "She" than in Antinéa.

All that element is taken out of Antinéa by the supposition of her birth.

That rational suspicion is, of course, a tremendous depreciation of the function of the archetypes. It is the "nothing but" spirit again.
The value is gone from the archetype.

It says, "You can't base yourself on the archetypes, so it is better not to build at all, the ground is not safe." This is a peculiar fact that has to be reckoned with in the analysis of Frenchmen.

It is very hard to get them to take it seriously enough. Their rationalism is blocking them at every point.

They have an exact view about everything and know what it is to the last dot.

They exhaust themselves in that fight.

Because of this knowing how everything works, they are inclined to depreciate the immediate facts of the soul, and to assume that everything is the result of an old civilization.

This was the attitude they had to take up in the Middle Ages as a compensation against the force of antiquity.

Christianity was not strong enough to hold them at the beginning, and this rationalism gave support to the Church.

The relation of this rationalism to the Church is something that an Anglo-Saxon can hardly understand.

Dr. de Angulo: Will you discuss the point made in the report of the committee to the effect that Antinéa was not an unconscious figure but was put into the unconscious setting deliberately?

Dr. Jung: I think Antinéa is partly conscious and partly unconscious.

When the Anglo-Saxon says she is twisted by the personal unconscious, he is commenting on the peculiar racial character of Antinéa.

Mrs. Jung: Could you say something about the relation of the animus to immortality in the same way that you discussed the anima and immortality?

Dr. Jung: The animus seems to go back only to the fourteenth century, and the anima to remote antiquity, but with the animus I must say I am uncertain altogether.

Mrs. Jung: It had seemed to me that the animus was not a symbol of immortality, but of movement and life, and that it is man's attitude that gives that different aspect to the anima.

Dr.Jung: It is true that the animus is often represented by a moving figure—an aviator or a traffic manager.

Perhaps there is something in the historical fact of women being more stable, therefore there is more movement in the unconscious.

Mr. Schmitz: Surely there could have been no repression of the animus at the time of the matriarchy. Dr. Jung: We cannot be too sure.
Mrs. Zinno: The figures of gods carry the idea of immortality, do they not?

smuch as they are also animus figures and come into women's dreams, I should think one could say the animus carried the meaning of immortality also.

Dr. Jung: Yes, that is true, but there remains a tremendous difference between the animus and the anima.

Mr. Schmitz: Is immortality in the individual?

Dr. Jung: No, only as the image. Immortality belongs to the child of the anima. Inasmuch as the anima has not brought forth, she assumes immortality. When she brings forth she dies.

But this problem of the anima and the animus is far too complex to be dealt with here. The End Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 146-168

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3c423-12bshe.jpg`

Carl Jung: How much "soul" is projected into the unknown ... (2019-03-06 06:00)

[1]

Although common prejudice still believes that the sole essential basis of our knowledge is given exclusively from outside, and that "nihil est in intellectu quod non antea fuerit in sensu," it nevertheless remains true that the thoroughly respectable atomic theory of Leucippus and Democritus was not based on any observations of atomic fission but on a "mythological" conception of smallest particles, which, as the smallest animated parts, the soul-atoms, are known even to the still Paleolithic inhabitants of central Australia.

How much "soul" is projected into the unknown in the world of external appearances is, of course, familiar to anyone acquainted with the natural science and natural philosophy of the ancients.

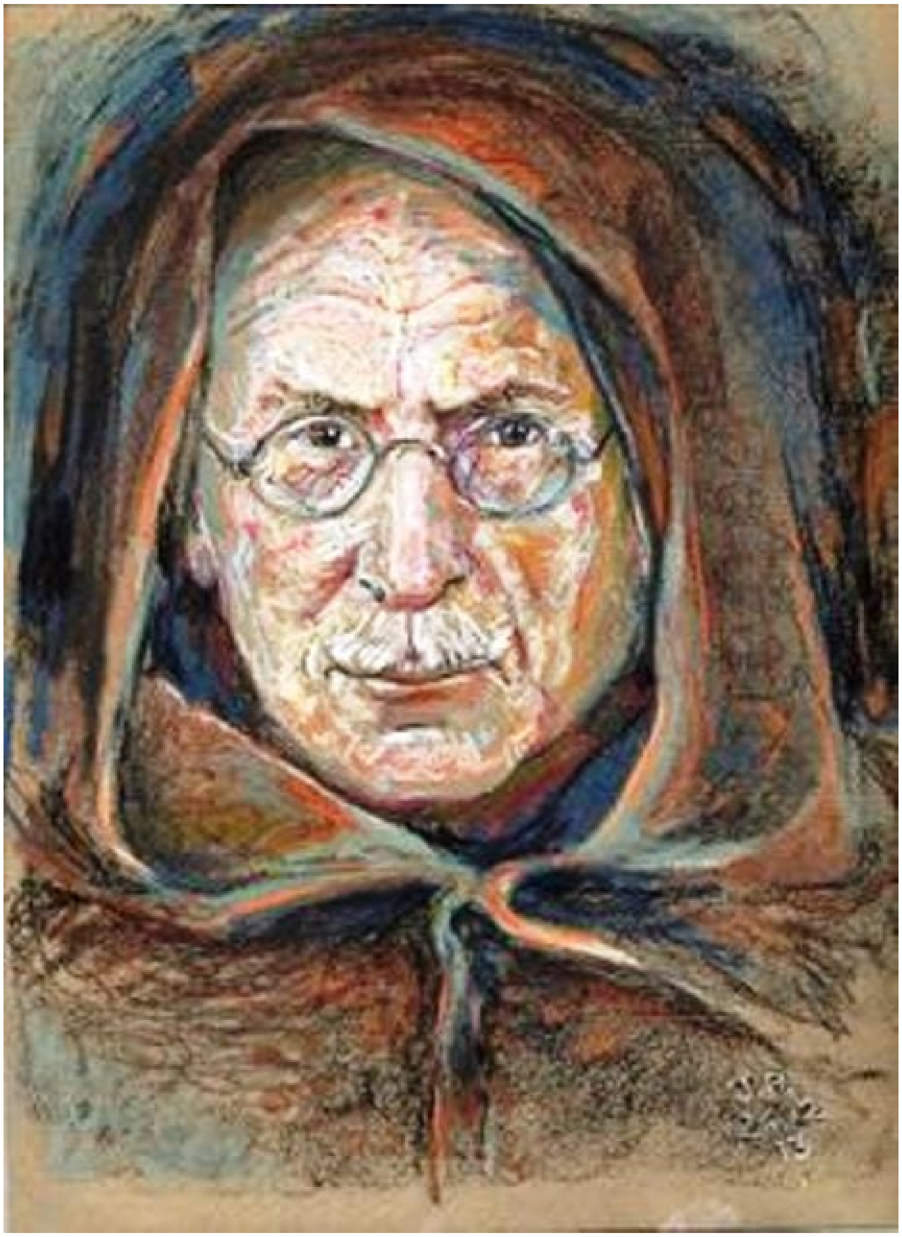
It is, in fact, so much that we are absolutely incapable of saying how the world is constituted in itself—and always shall be, since we are obliged to convert physical events into psychic processes as soon aswe want to say anything about knowledge.

But who can guarantee that this conversion produces anything like an adequate "objective" picture of the world? Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 116.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9fde2-12batoms.jpg`

Carl Jung Depth Psychology Facebook Group. Come Join Us. (2019-03-06 06:57)

[1]

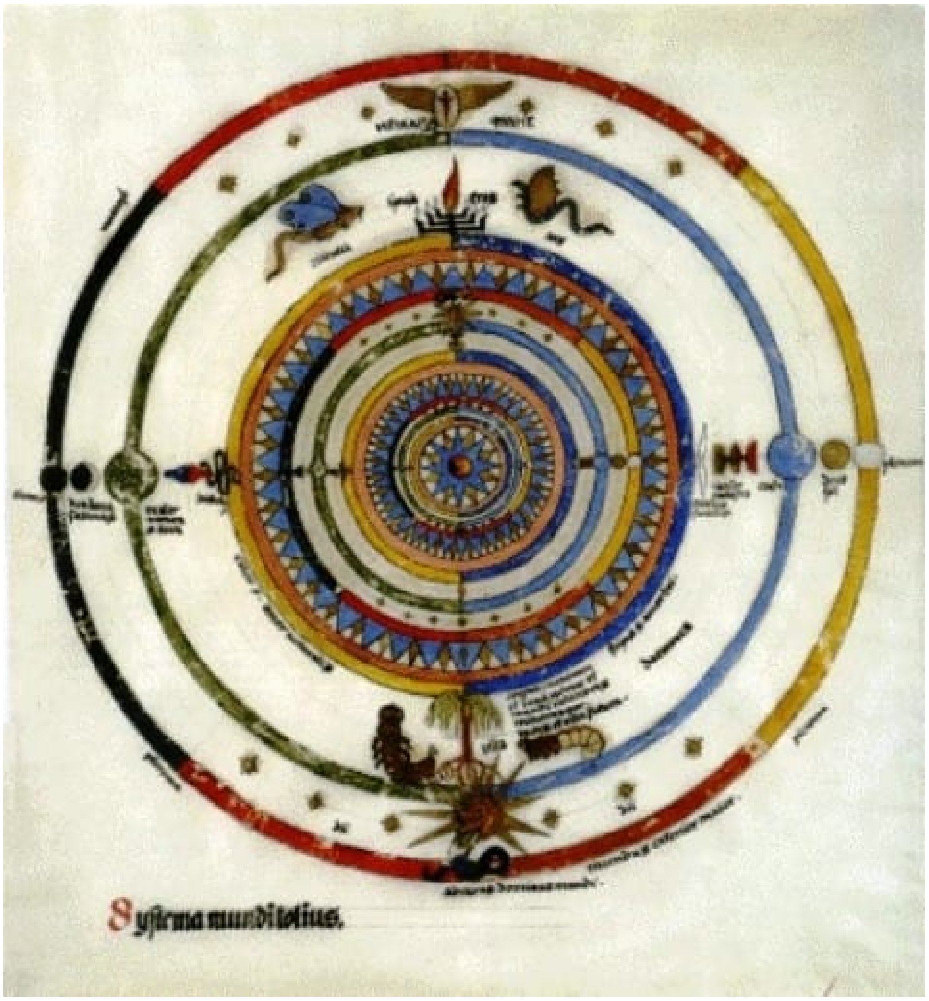


[2]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a4955-12bcarl.jpg`
2. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/`

Systema Munditotius (2019-03-06 07:04)

[1]



Syſtema munditotius.

Systema Munditotius.

In 1955, Jung’s Systema Munditotius was published anonymously in a special issue of Du dedicated to the Eranos conferences. In a letter of February II, 1955, to Walter Corti, Jung explicitly stated that he did not want his name to appear with it.

He added the following comments to it:

"It portrays the antinomies of the microcosm within the macrocosmic world and its antinomies.

At the very top, the figure of the young boy in the winged egg, called Erikapaios or Phanes and thus reminiscent as a spiritual figure of the Orphic Gods. His dark antithesis in the depths is here designated as Abraxas.

He represents the dominus mundi, the lord of the physical world, and is a world-creator of an ambivalent nature.

Sprouting from him we see the tree of life, labeled vita (’life’) while its upper counterpart is a light-tree in the form of a seven-branched candelabra labeled ignis (’fire’) and Eros (‚love’).

Its light points to the spiritual world of the divine child. Art and science also belong to this spiritual realm, the first represented as a winged serpent and the second as a winged mouse (as hole-digging activity!) .

The candelabra is based on the principle of the spiritual number three (twice-three flames with one large flame in the middle), while the lower world of Abraxas is characterized by five, the number of natural man (the twice-five rays of his star).

The accompanying animals of the natural world are a devilish monster and a larva.

This signifies death and rebirth. A further division of the mandala is horizontal. To the left we see a circle indicating the body or the blood, and from it rears the serpent, which winds itself around the phallus, as the generative principle.

The serpent is dark and light, signifying the dark realm of the earth, the moon, and the void (therefore called Satanas).

The light realm of rich fullness lies to the right, where from the bright circle [cold, or the love of God] the dove of the Holy Ghost takes wing, and wisdom (Sophia) pours from a double beaker to left and right.

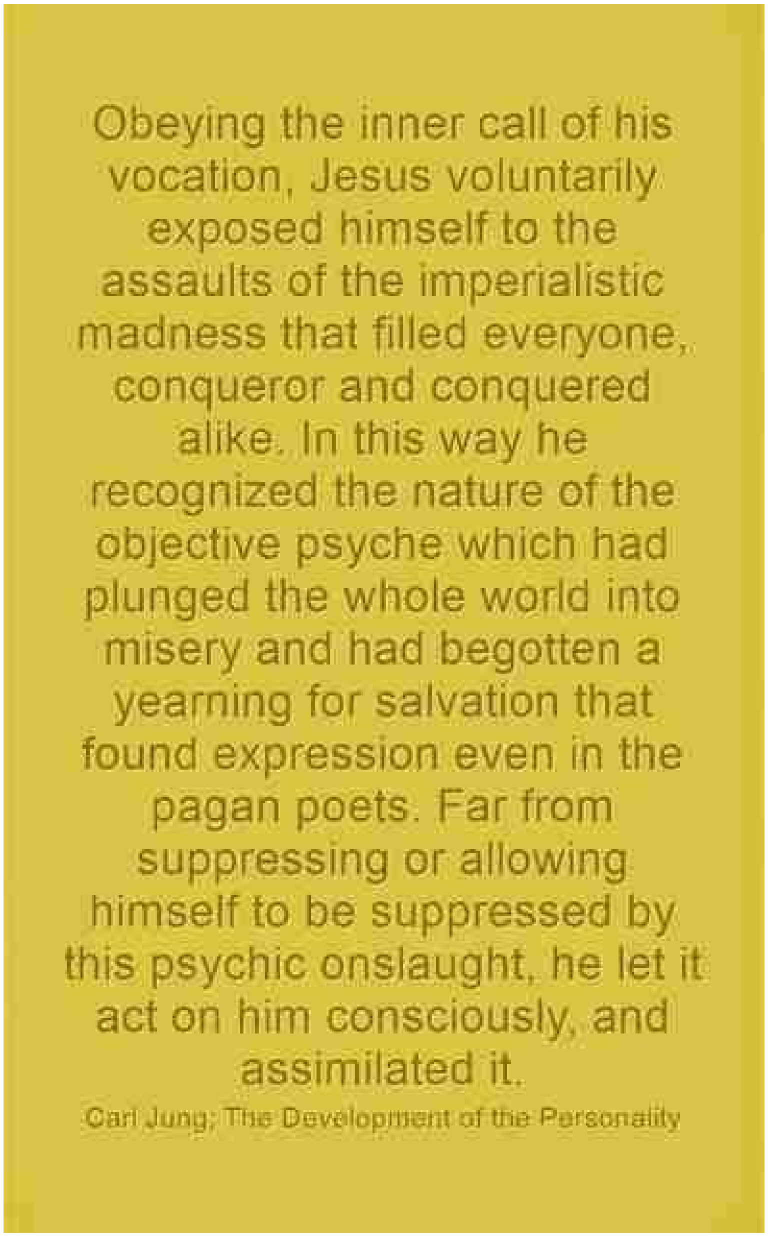
This feminine sphere is that of heaven. The large sphere characterized by zigzag lines or rays represents an inner sun; within this sphere the macrocosm is repeated, but with the upper and lower regions reversed as in a mirror.

These repetitions should be conceived of as endless in number, growing even smaller until the innermost core, the actual microcosm, is reached" Copyright © The Foundation of the works of C. G. Jung reproduced with the permission of the Foundation and Robert Hinshaw.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/03/b193c-system.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 13 (2019-03-06 07:44)

[1]



Obeying the inner call of his vocation, Jesus voluntarily exposed himself to the assaults of the imperialistic madness that filled everyone, conqueror and conquered alike. In this way he recognized the nature of the objective psyche which had plunged the whole world into misery and had begotten a yearning for salvation that found expression even in the pagan poets. Far from suppressing or allowing himself to be suppressed by this psychic onslaught, he let it act on him consciously, and assimilated it.

Carl Jung; The Development of the Personality

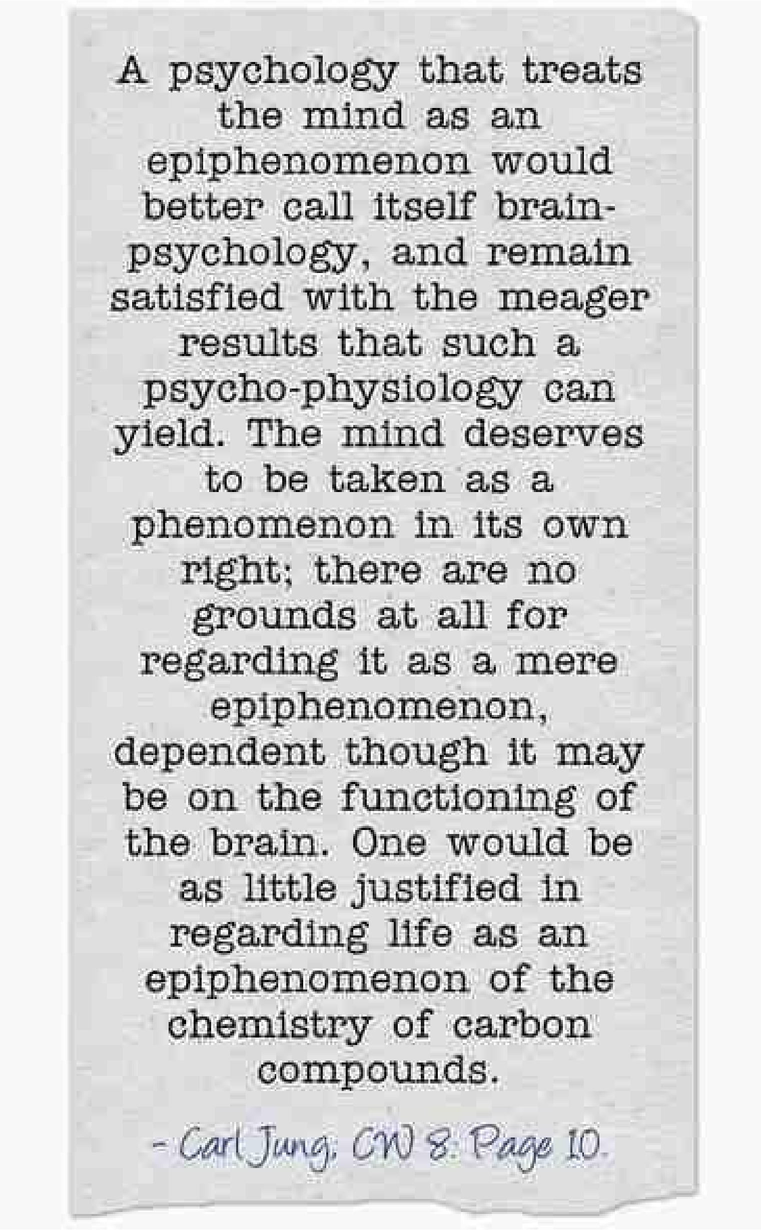
Obeying the inner call of his vocation, Jesus voluntarily exposed himself to the assaults of the imperialistic madness that filled everyone, conqueror and conquered alike. In this way he recognized the nature of the objective psyche which had plunged the whole world into misery and had begotten a yearning for salvation that found expression even in the pagan poets. Far from suppressing or allowing himself to be suppressed by this psychic onslaught, he let it act on him consciously, and assimilated it. Carl Jung

[2]
How are we to explain religious processes, for instance, whose nature is essentially symbolical? In abstract form, symbols are religious ideas; in the form of action, they are rites or ceremonies. They are the manifestation and expression of excess libido. At the same time they are stepping-stones to new activities, which must be called cultural in order to distinguish them from the instinctual functions that run their regular course according to natural law.

Carl Jung; On Psychic Energy; CW 8, par. 91.

How are we to explain religious processes, for instance, whose nature is essentially symbolical? In abstract form, symbols are religious ideas; in the form of action, they are rites or ceremonies. They are the manifestation and expression of excess libido. At the same time they are stepping-stones to new activities, which must be called cultural in order to distinguish them from the instinctual functions that run their regular course according to natural law. Carl Jung; On Psychic Energy; CW 8, par. 91.

[3]



A psychology that treats the mind as an epiphenomenon would better call itself brain-psychology, and remain satisfied with the meager results that such a psycho-physiology can yield. The mind deserves to be taken as a phenomenon in its own right; there are no grounds at all for regarding it as a mere epiphenomenon, dependent though it may be on the functioning of the brain. One would be as little justified in regarding life as an epiphenomenon of the chemistry of carbon compounds.

- Carl Jung; CW 8: Page 10.

A psychology that treats the mind as an epiphenomenon would better call itself brain-psychology, and remain satisfied with the meager results that such a psycho-physiology can yield. The mind deserves to be taken as a phenomenon in its own right; there are no grounds at all for regarding it as a mere epiphenomenon, dependent though it may be on the functioning of the brain. One would be as little justified in regarding life as an epiphenomenon of the chemistry of carbon compounds. - "On Psychic Energy" (1928). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. pp.10

Not your thinking, but your essence, is differentiation.
Therefore you must not strive for what you conceive as distinctiveness, but for your own essence.
At bottom, therefore, there is only one striving, namely the striving for one's own essence.

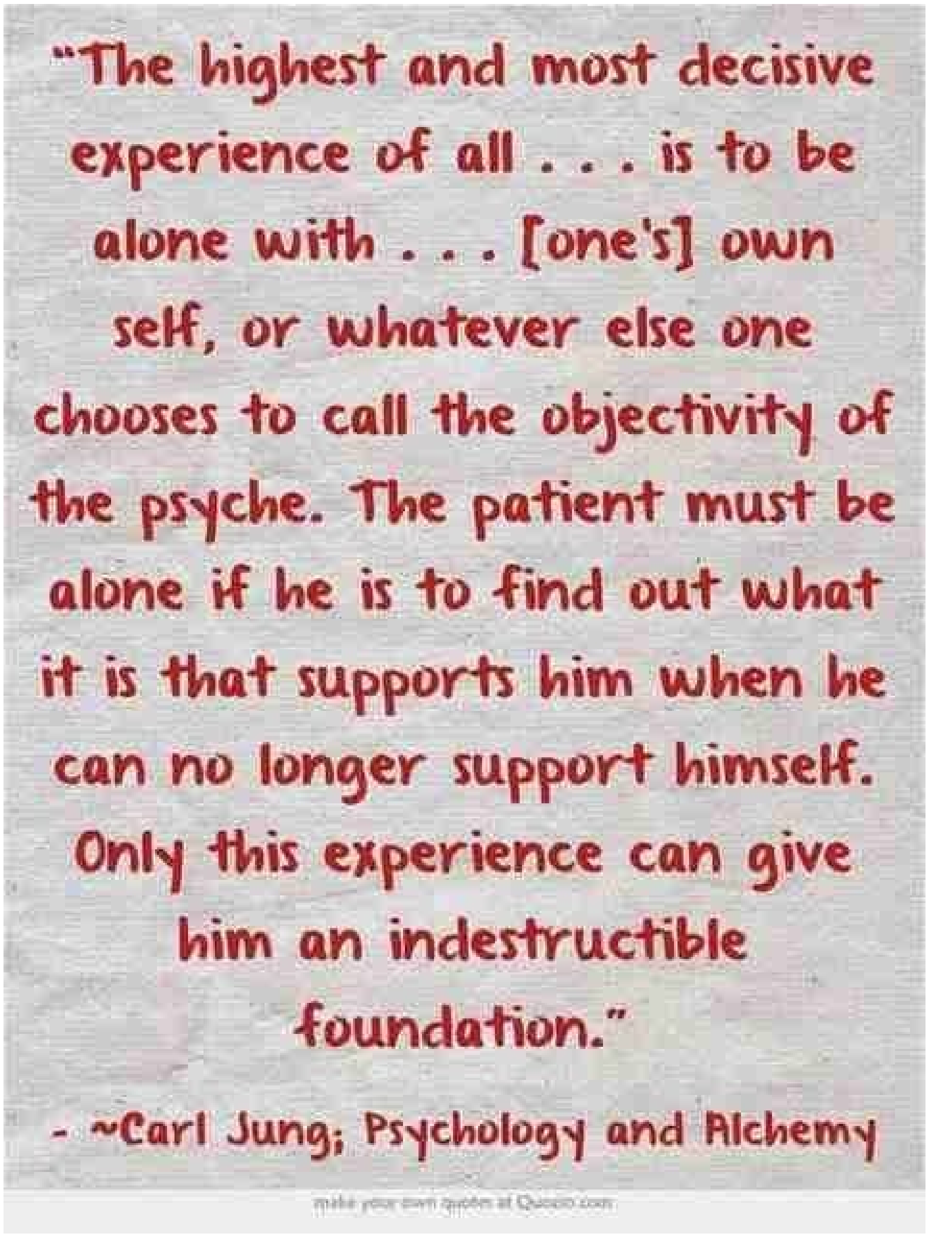
-Carl Jung: The Red Book:
Scrutinies: Page 348.

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

Not your thinking, but your essence, is differentiation. Therefore you must not strive for what you conceive as distinctiveness, but for your own essence. At bottom, therefore, there is only one striving, namely the striving for one's own essence. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Scrutinies; Page 348.

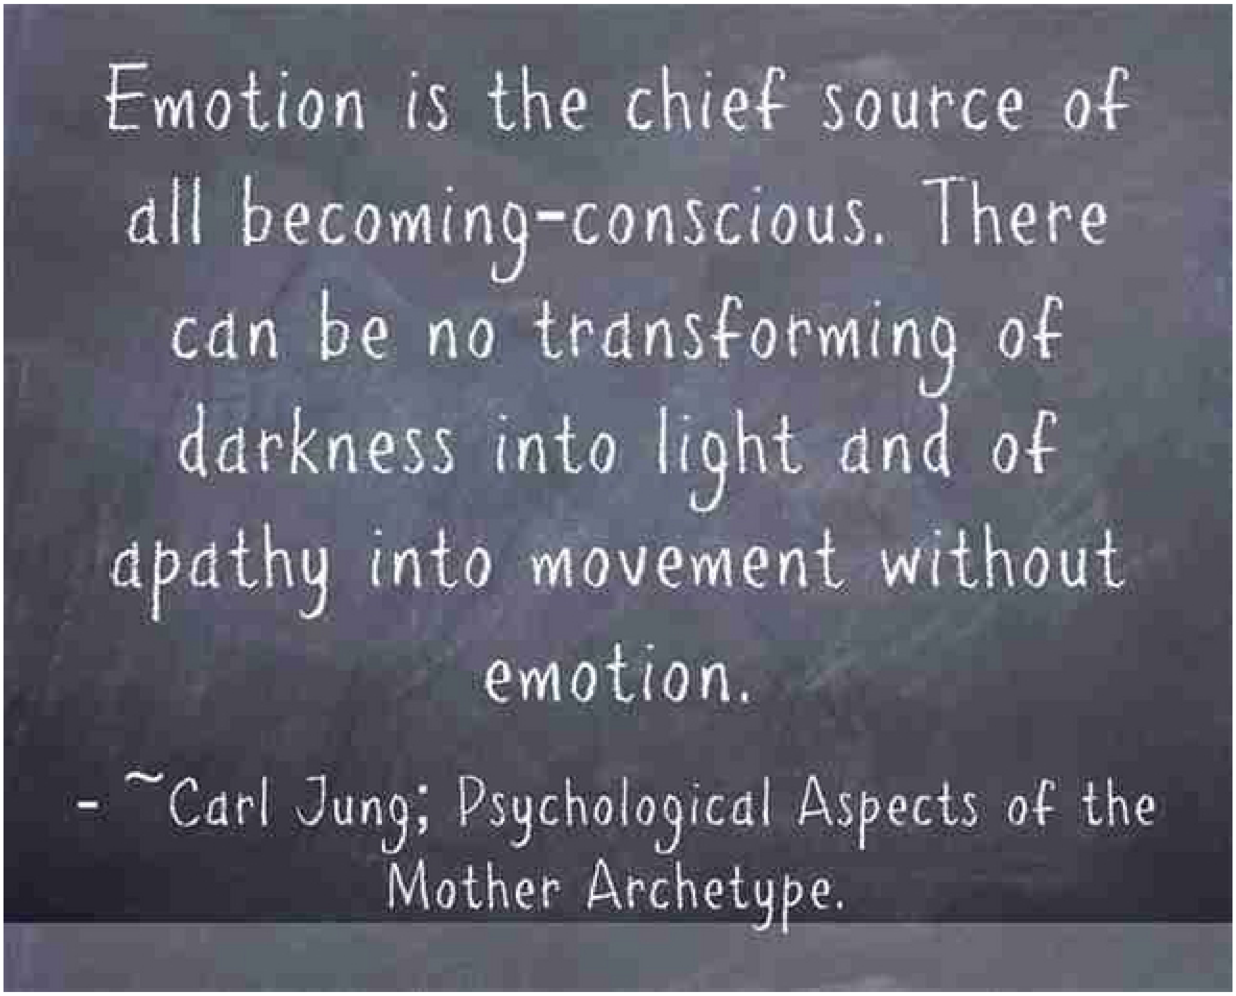


"The highest and most decisive experience of all . . . is to be alone with . . . [one's] own self, or whatever else one chooses to call the objectivity of the psyche. The patient must be alone if he is to find out what it is that supports him when he can no longer support himself. Only this experience can give him an indestructible foundation."

- ~Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

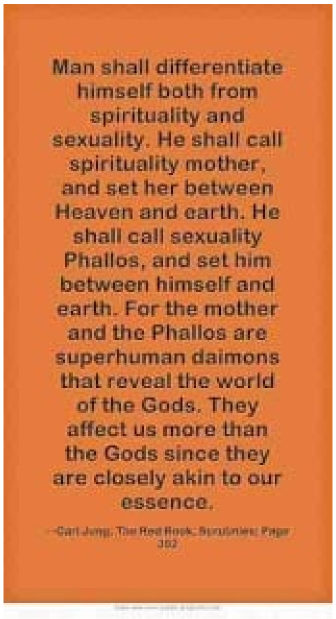
The highest and most decisive experience of all . . . is to be alone with . . . [one's] own self, or whatever else one chooses to call the objectivity of the psyche. The patient must be alone if he is to find out what it is that supports him when he can no longer support himself. Only this experience can give him an indestructible foundation. Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy; CW 12: P.32.



Emotion is the chief source of all becoming-conscious. There can be no transforming of darkness into light and of apathy into movement without emotion.

- ~Carl Jung; Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype.

Emotion is the chief source of all becoming-conscious. There can be no transforming of darkness into light and of apathy into movement without emotion. Carl Jung; Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype.



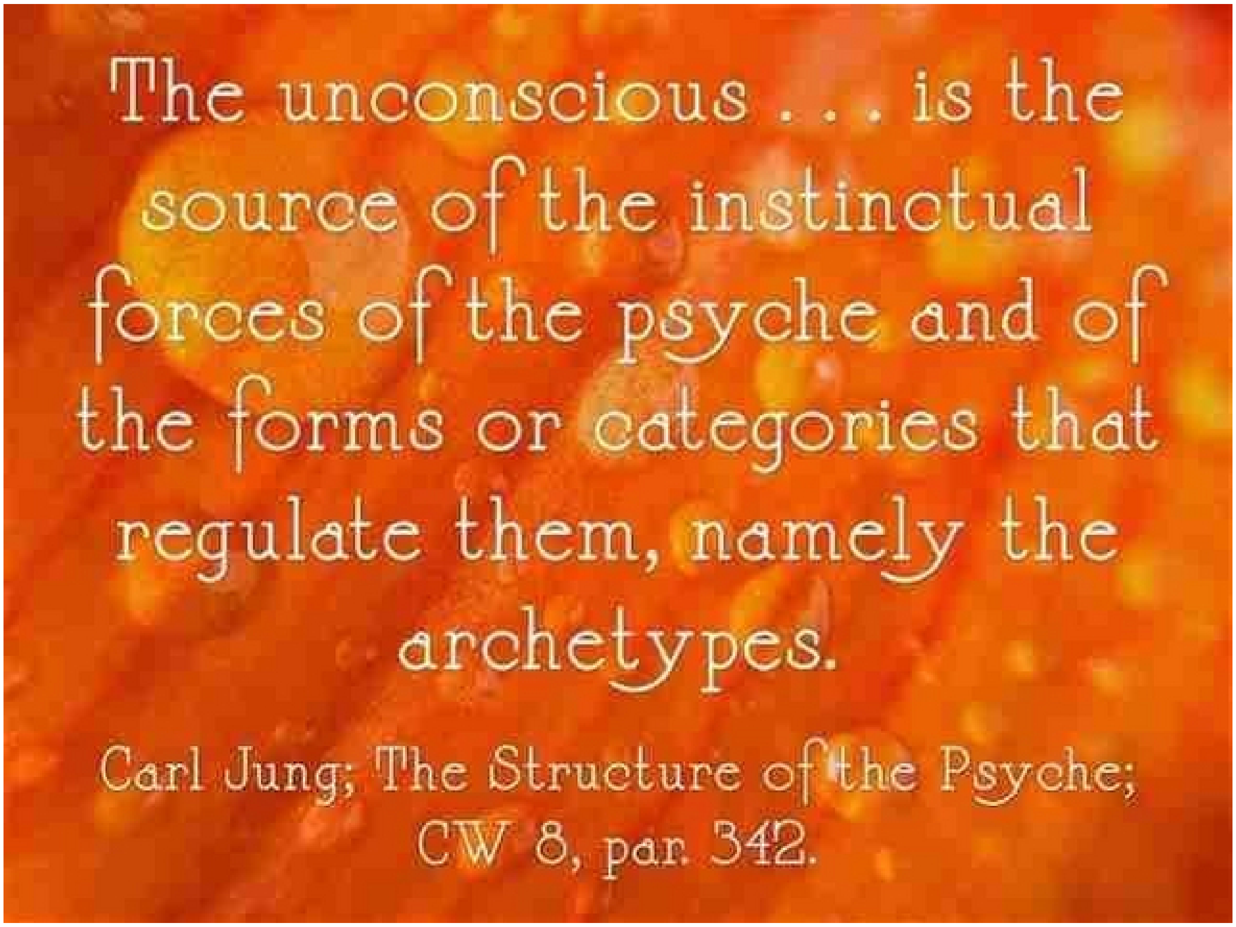
Man shall differentiate himself both from spirituality and sexuality. He shall call spirituality mother, and set her between Heaven and earth. He shall call sexuality Phallos, and set him between himself and earth. For the mother and the Phallos are superhuman daimons that reveal the world of the Gods. They affect us more than the Gods since they are closely akin to our essence.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book; Scrutinies; Page 352

[7]

Man shall differentiate himself both from spirituality and sexuality. He shall call spirituality mother, and set her between Heaven and earth. He shall call sexuality Phallos, and set him between himself and earth. For the mother and the Phallos are superhuman daimons that reveal the world of the Gods. They affect us more than the Gods since they are closely akin to our essence. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Scrutinies; Page 352.

[8]

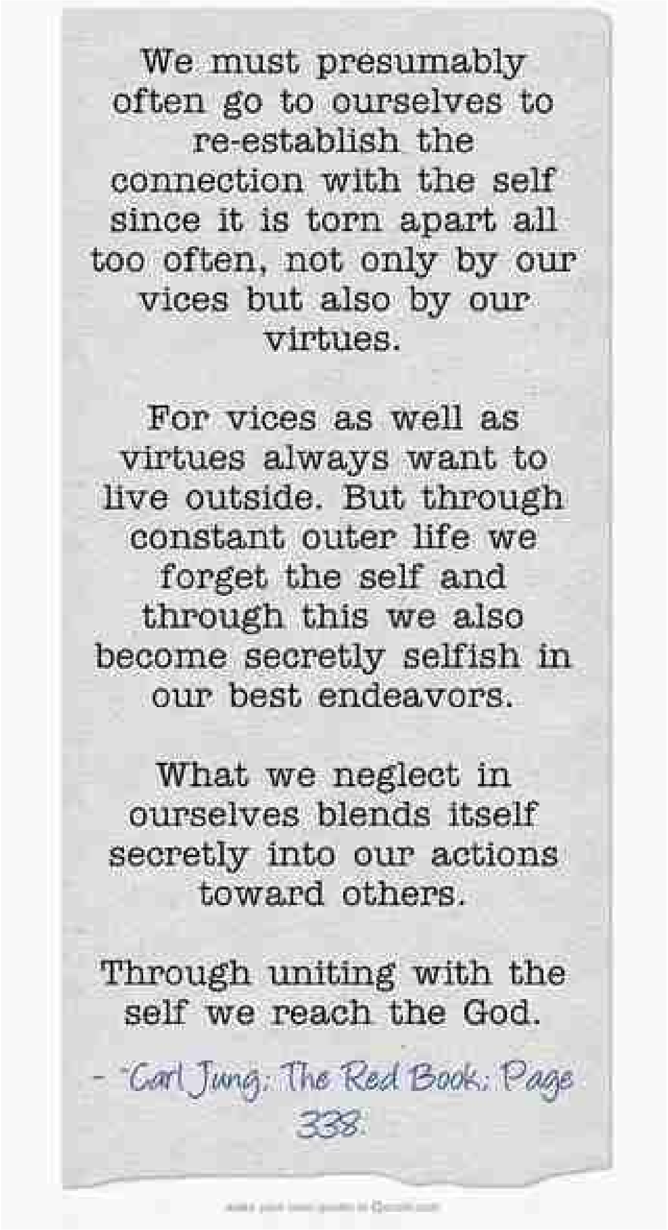


The unconscious . . . is the source of the instinctual forces of the psyche and of the forms or categories that regulate them, namely the archetypes.

Carl Jung; The Structure of the Psyche; CW 8, par. 342.

The unconscious . . . is the source of the instinctual forces of the psyche and of the forms or categories that regulate them, namely the archetypes. Carl Jung; The Structure of the Psyche; CW 8, par. 342.

[9]



We must presumably often go to ourselves to re-establish the connection with the self since it is torn apart all too often, not only by our vices but also by our virtues.

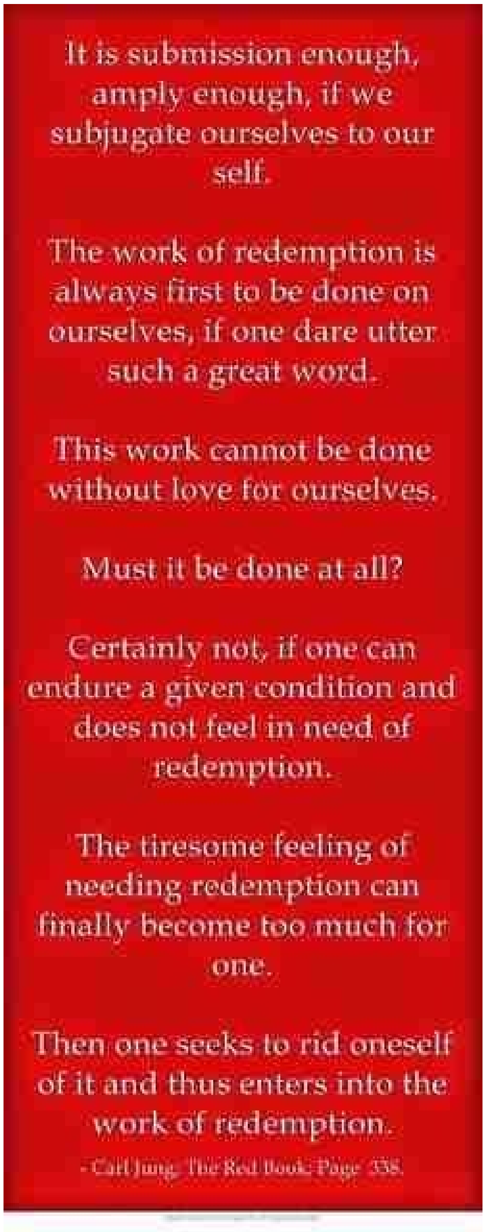
For vices as well as virtues always want to live outside. But through constant outer life we forget the self and through this we also become secretly selfish in our best endeavors.

What we neglect in ourselves blends itself secretly into our actions toward others.

Through uniting with the self we reach the God.

- Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 338.

We must presumably often go to ourselves to re-establish the connection with the self since it is torn apart all too often, not only by our vices but also by our virtues. For vices as well as virtues always want to live outside. But through constant outer life we forget the self and through this we also become secretly selfish in our best endeavors. What we neglect in ourselves blends itself secretly into our actions toward others. Through uniting with the self we reach God. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 338.



It is submission enough, amply enough, if we subjugate ourselves to our self.

The work of redemption is always first to be done on ourselves, if one dare utter such a great word.

This work cannot be done without love for ourselves.

Must it be done at all?

Certainly not, if one can endure a given condition and does not feel in need of redemption.

The tiresome feeling of needing redemption can finally become too much for one.

Then one seeks to rid oneself of it and thus enters into the work of redemption.

- Carl Jung, The Red Book; Page 338.

[10]

It is submission enough, amply enough, if we subjugate ourselves to our self. The work of redemption is always first to be done on ourselves, if one dare utter such a great word. This work cannot be done without love for ourselves. Must it be done at all? Certainly not, if one can endure our given condition and does not feeling need of redemption. The tiresome feeling of needing redemption can finally become too much for one. Then one seeks to rid oneself of it and thus enters into the work of redemption. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 338.

[11]

"Man is a gateway, through which you pass from the outer world of Gods, daimons, and souls into the inner world, out of the greater. into the smaller world.
Small and inane is man, already he is behind you, and once again you find yourselves in endless space, in the smaller or inner infinity.

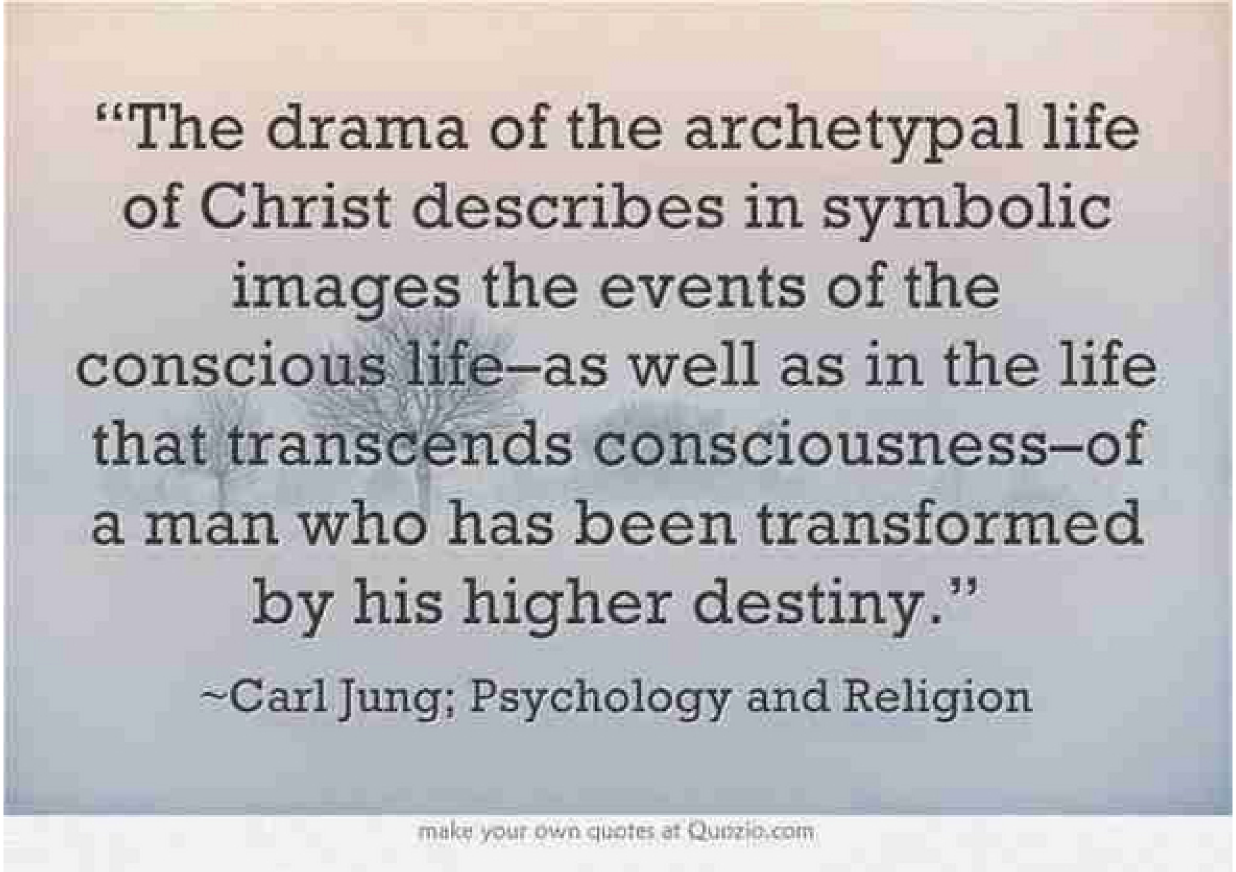
- Philemon to Carl Jung; The Red Book;
Page 354.

Man is a gateway, through which you pass from the outer world of Gods, daimons, and souls into the inner world, out of the greater into the smaller world. Small and inane is man, already he is behind you, and once again you find yourselves in endless space, in the smaller or inner infinity. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 354.

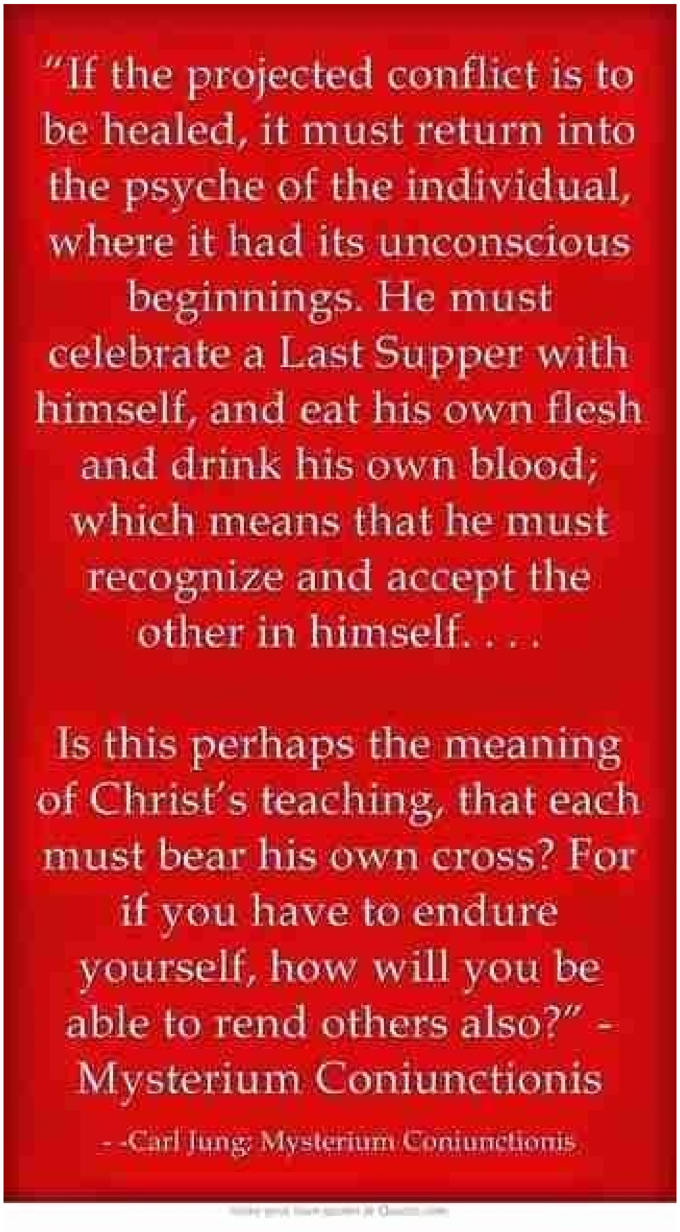


"The drama of the archetypal life of Christ describes in symbolic images the events of the conscious life–as well as in the life that transcends consciousness–of a man who has been transformed by his higher destiny."

~Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

The drama of the archetypal life of Christ describes in symbolic images the events of the conscious life–as well as in the life that transcends consciousness–of a man who has been transformed by his higher destiny. Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion.

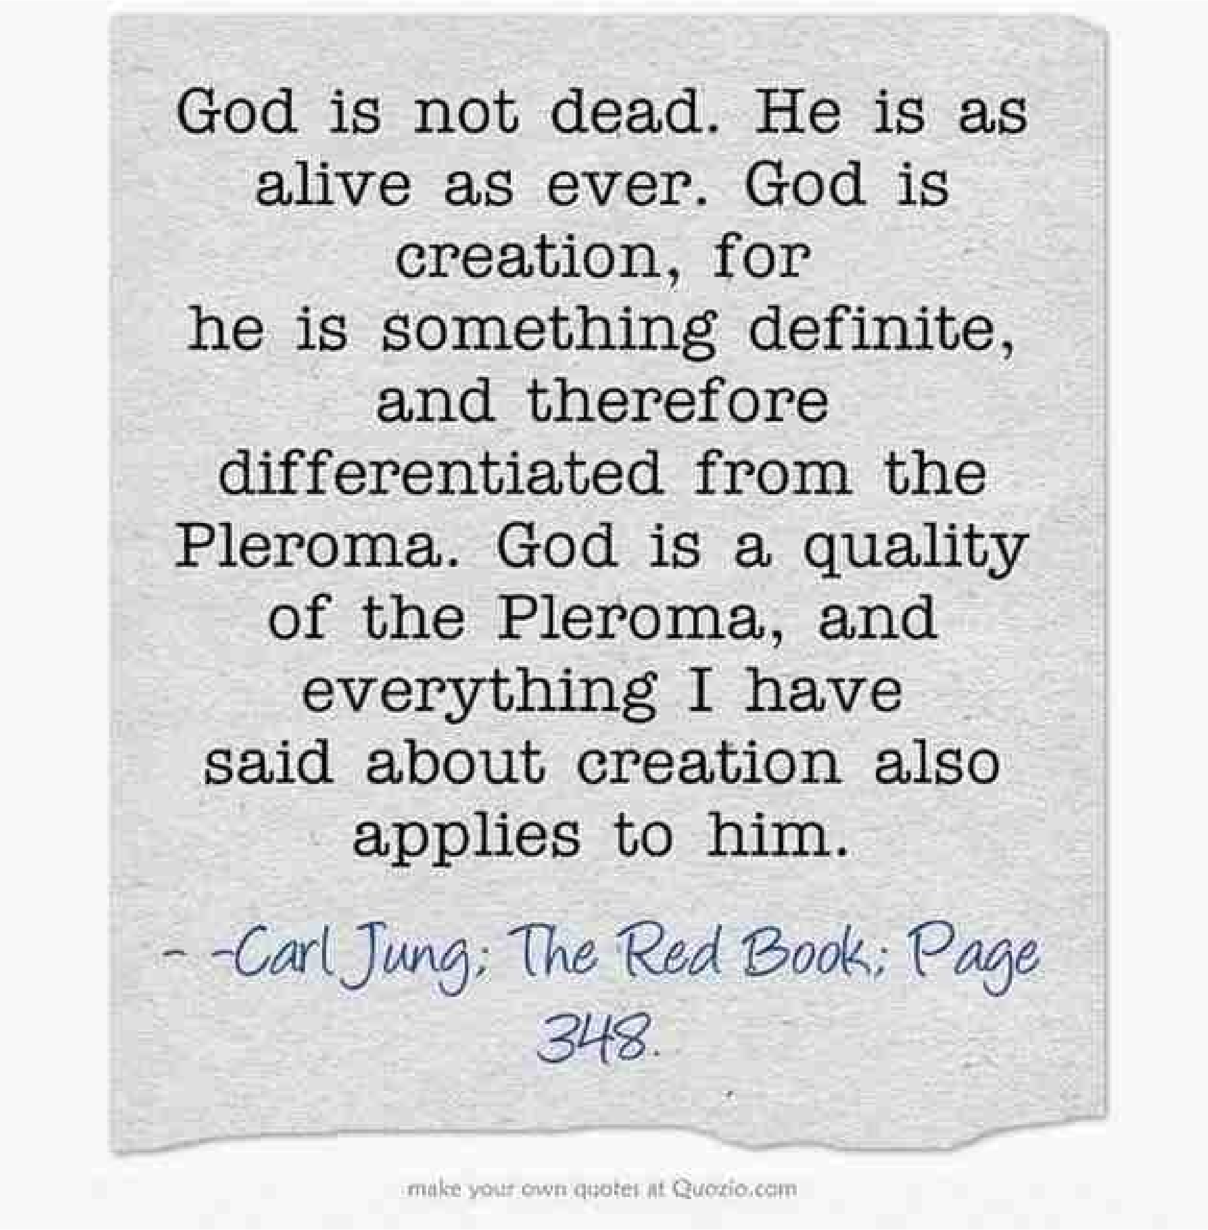


"If the projected conflict is to be healed, it must return into the psyche of the individual, where it had its unconscious beginnings. He must celebrate a Last Supper with himself, and eat his own flesh and drink his own blood; which means that he must recognize and accept the other in himself. . . .

Is this perhaps the meaning of Christ's teaching, that each must bear his own cross? For if you have to endure yourself, how will you be able to rend others also?" - Mysterium Coniunctionis

- -Carl Jung: Mysterium Coniunctionis

If the projected conflict is to be healed, it must return into the psyche of the individual, where it had its unconscious beginnings. He must celebrate a Last Supper with himself, and eat his own flesh and drink his own blood; which means that he must recognize and accept the other in himself. . . . Is this perhaps the meaning of Christ's teaching, that each must bear his own cross? For if you have to endure yourself, how will you be able to rend others also? Carl Jung; Mysterium Coniunctionis

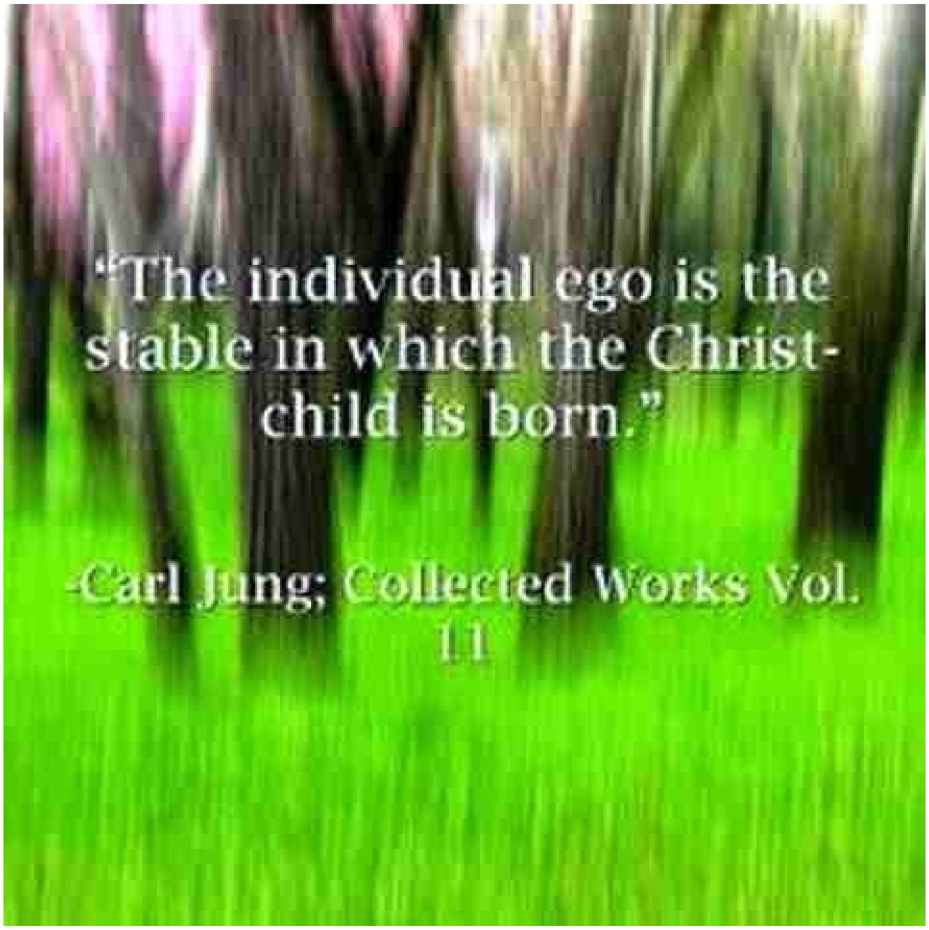


God is not dead. He is as alive as ever. God is creation, for he is something definite, and therefore differentiated from the Pleroma. God is a quality of the Pleroma, and everything I have said about creation also applies to him.

- -Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 348.

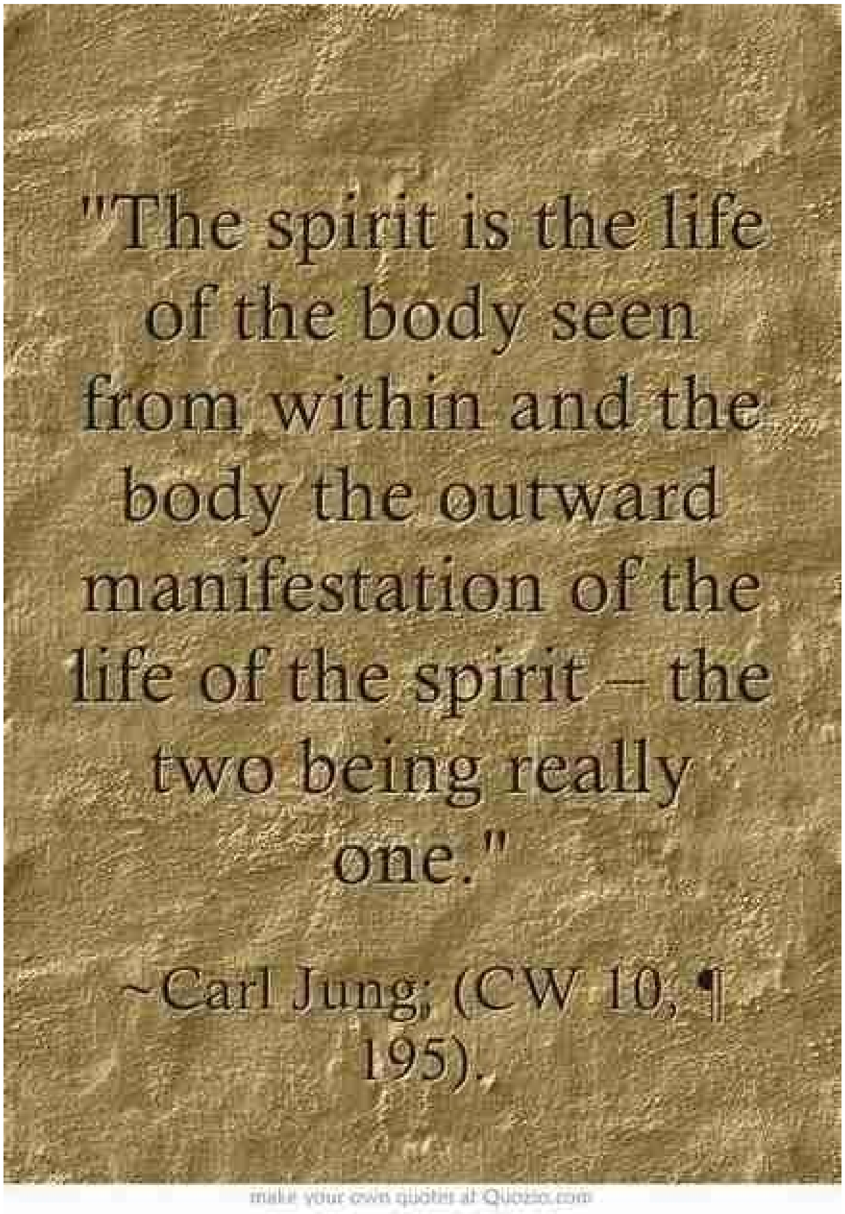
make your own quotes at Quozio.com

God is not dead. He is as alive as ever. Philemon, Liber Novus, Page 348.



"The individual ego is the stable in which the Christ-child is born."
-Carl Jung; Collected Works Vol. 11

The individual ego is the stable in which the Christ-child is born. Carl Jung; CW 11, Para 207

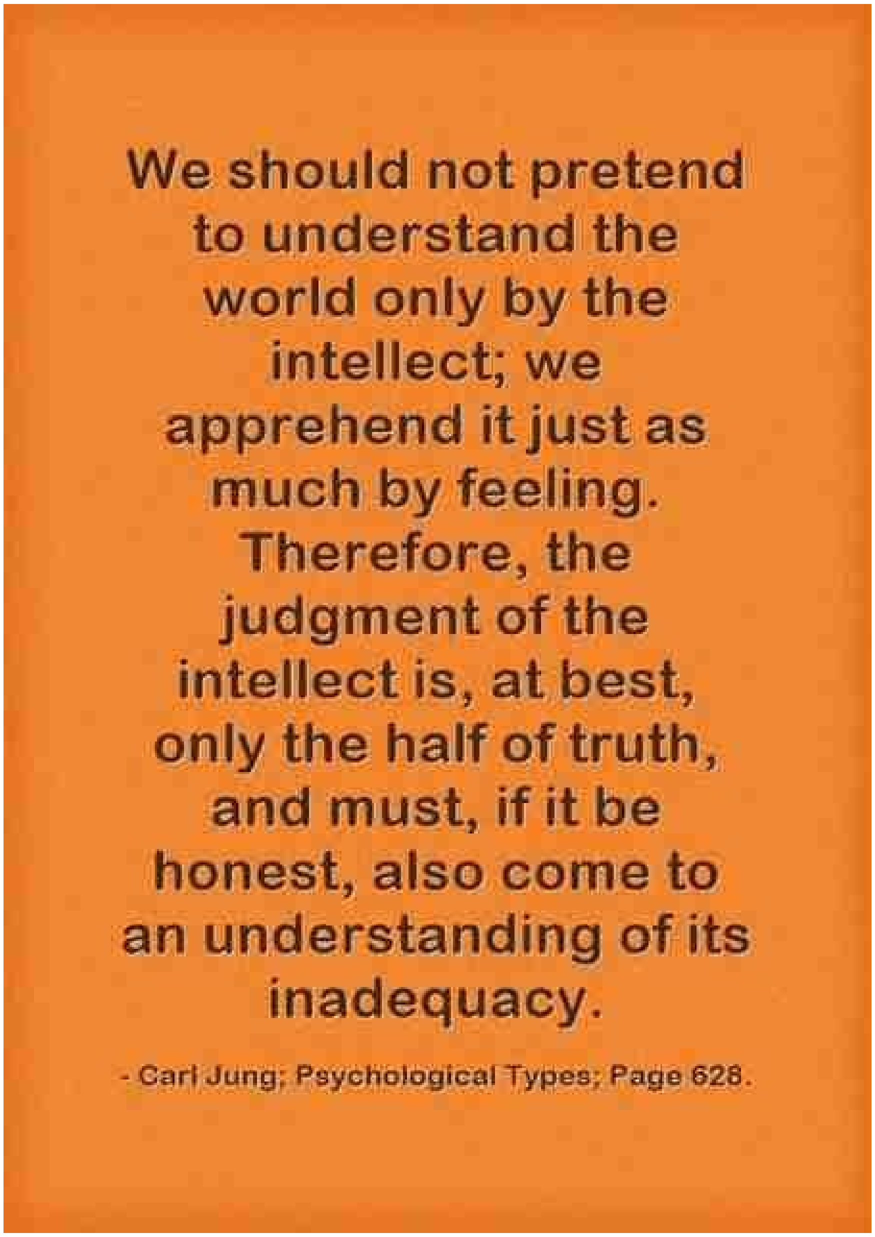


"The spirit is the life of the body seen from within and the body the outward manifestation of the life of the spirit – the two being really one."

~Carl Jung; (CW 10, ¶ 195).

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

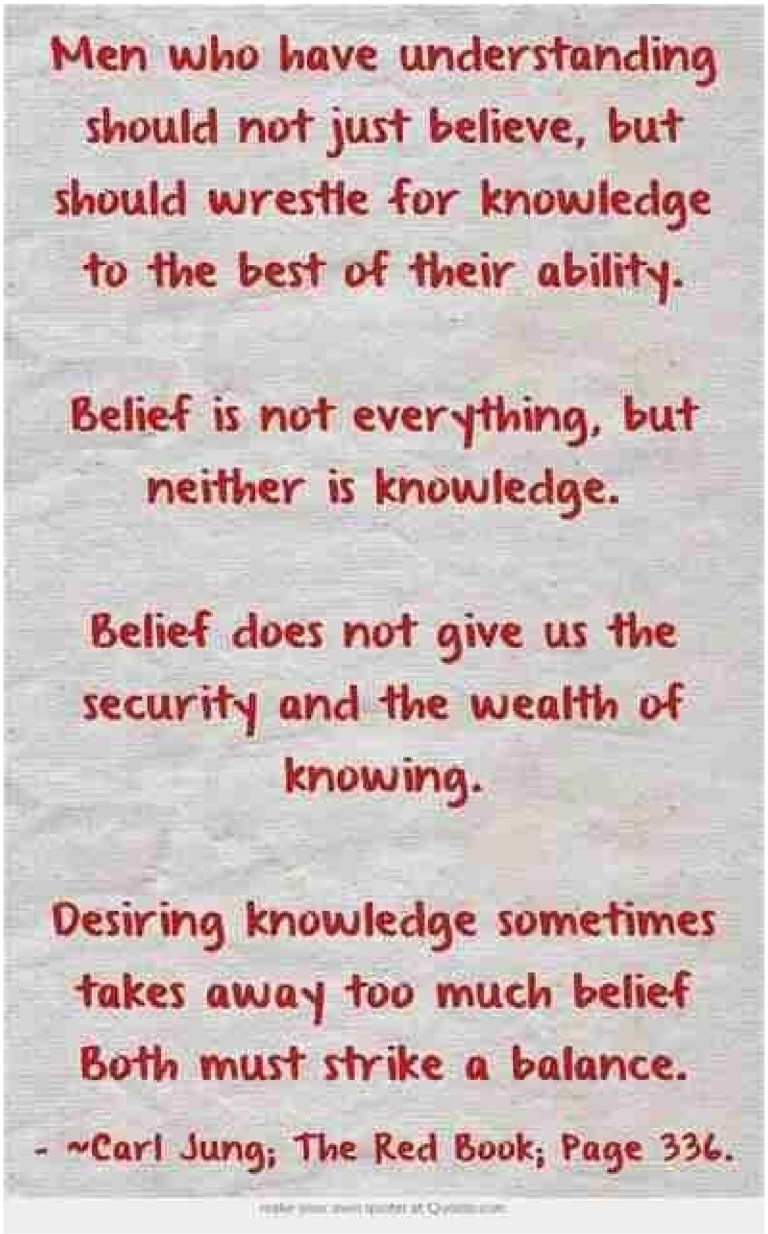
. . . the spirit is the life of the body seen from within, and the body the outward manifestation of the life of the spirit - the two being really one. Carl Jung; The Spiritual Problem of Modern Man; CW 10: 195.



We should not pretend to understand the world only by the intellect; we apprehend it just as much by feeling. Therefore, the judgment of the intellect is, at best, only the half of truth, and must, if it be honest, also come to an understanding of its inadequacy.

- Carl Jung; Psychological Types; Page 628.

We should not pretend to understand the world only by the intellect; we apprehend it just as much by feeling. Therefore, the judgment of the intellect is, at best, only the half of truth, and must, if it be honest, also come to an understanding of its inadequacy. Carl Jung; Psychological Types; Conclusion; Page 628.



Men who have understanding should not just believe, but should wrestle for knowledge to the best of their ability.

Belief is not everything, but neither is knowledge.

Belief does not give us the security and the wealth of knowing.

Desiring knowledge sometimes takes away too much belief
Both must strike a balance.

- ~Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 336.

Men who have understanding should not just believe, but should wrestle for knowledge to the best of their ability. Belief is not everything, but neither is knowledge. Belief does not give us the security and the wealth of knowing. Desiring knowledge sometimes takes away too much belief. Both must strike a balance. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 336.

"The true history of the spirit is not preserved in learned volumes but in the living psychic organism of every individual."
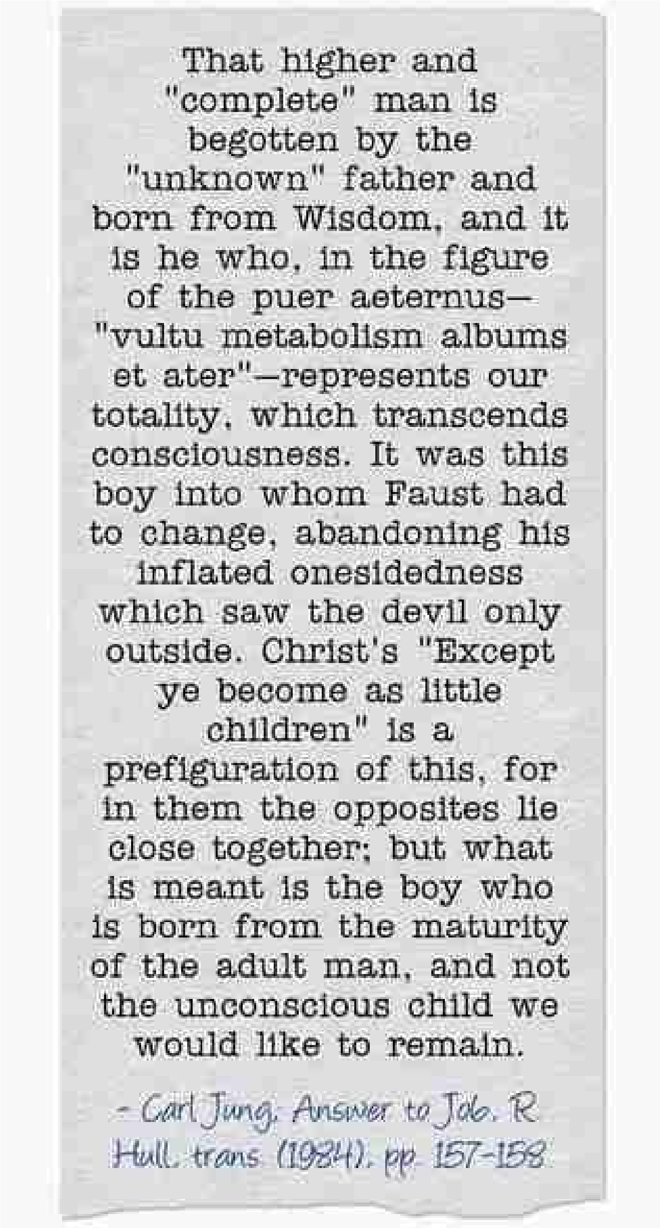
CW 11, 56

The true history of the Spirit is not preserved in learned volumes but in the living psychic organism of every individual.
Carl Jung, CW 11; 56



That higher and "complete" man is begotten by the "unknown" father and born from Wisdom, and it is he who, in the figure of the puer aeternus—"vultu metabolism albums et ater"—represents our totality, which transcends consciousness. It was this boy into whom Faust had to change, abandoning his inflated onesidedness which saw the devil only outside. Christ's "Except ye become as little children" is a prefiguration of this, for in them the opposites lie close together; but what is meant is the boy who is born from the maturity of the adult man, and not the unconscious child we would like to remain.

- Carl Jung; Answer to Job, R. Hull, trans (1984), pp. 157-158

That higher and "complete" man is begotten by the "unknown" father and born from Wisdom, and it is he who, in the figure of the puer aeternus—"vultu metabolism albums et ater"—represents our totality, which transcends consciousness. It was this boy into whom Faust had to change, abandoning his inflated onesidedness which saw the devil only outside. Christ's "Except ye become as little children" is a prefiguration of this, for in them the opposites lie close together; but what is meant is the boy who is born from the maturity of the adult man, and not the unconscious child we would like to remain. Carl Jung; Answer to Job, R. Hull, trans. (1984), pp. 157-158

The dream gives a true picture of the subjective state, while the conscious mind denies that this state exists, or recognizes it only grudgingly

Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 5.

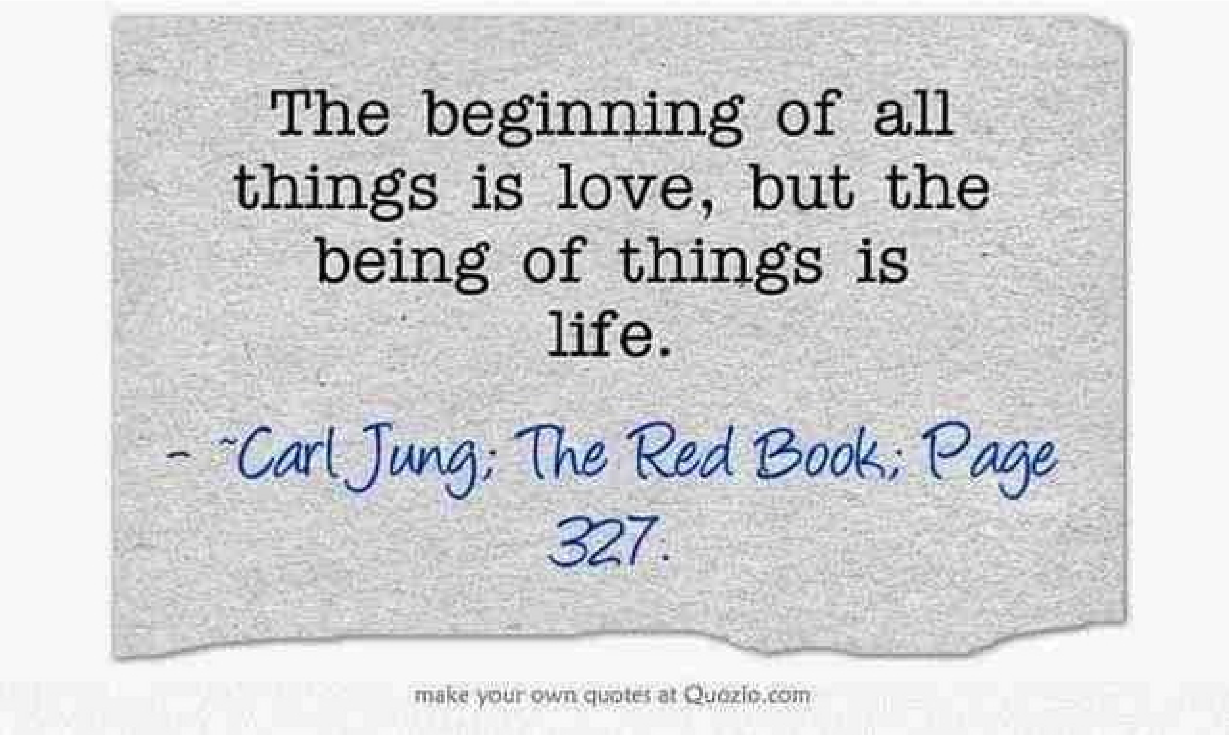
The dream gives a true picture of the subjective state, while the conscious mind denies that this state exists, or recognizes it only grudgingly Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 5.



The beginning of all things is love, but the being of things is life.

- ~Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 327.

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

The beginning of all things is love, but the being of things is life. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 327.

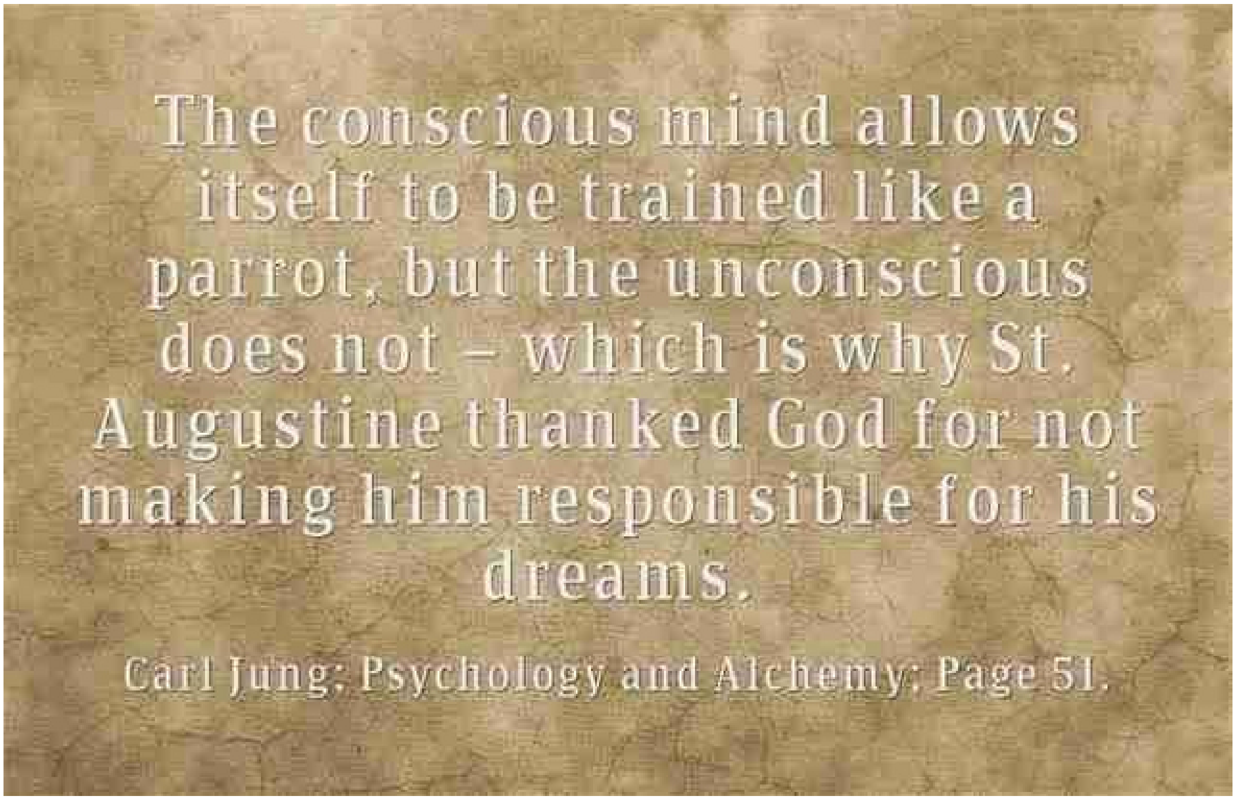
[23]

If there is anything that we wish to change in the child, we should first examine it and see whether it is not something that could better be changed in ourselves.

Carl Jung; The Integration of the Personality; Page 285.

If there is anything that we wish to change in the child, we should first examine it and see whether it is not something that could better be changed in ourselves. Carl Jung; The Integration of the Personality; Page 285.

[24]

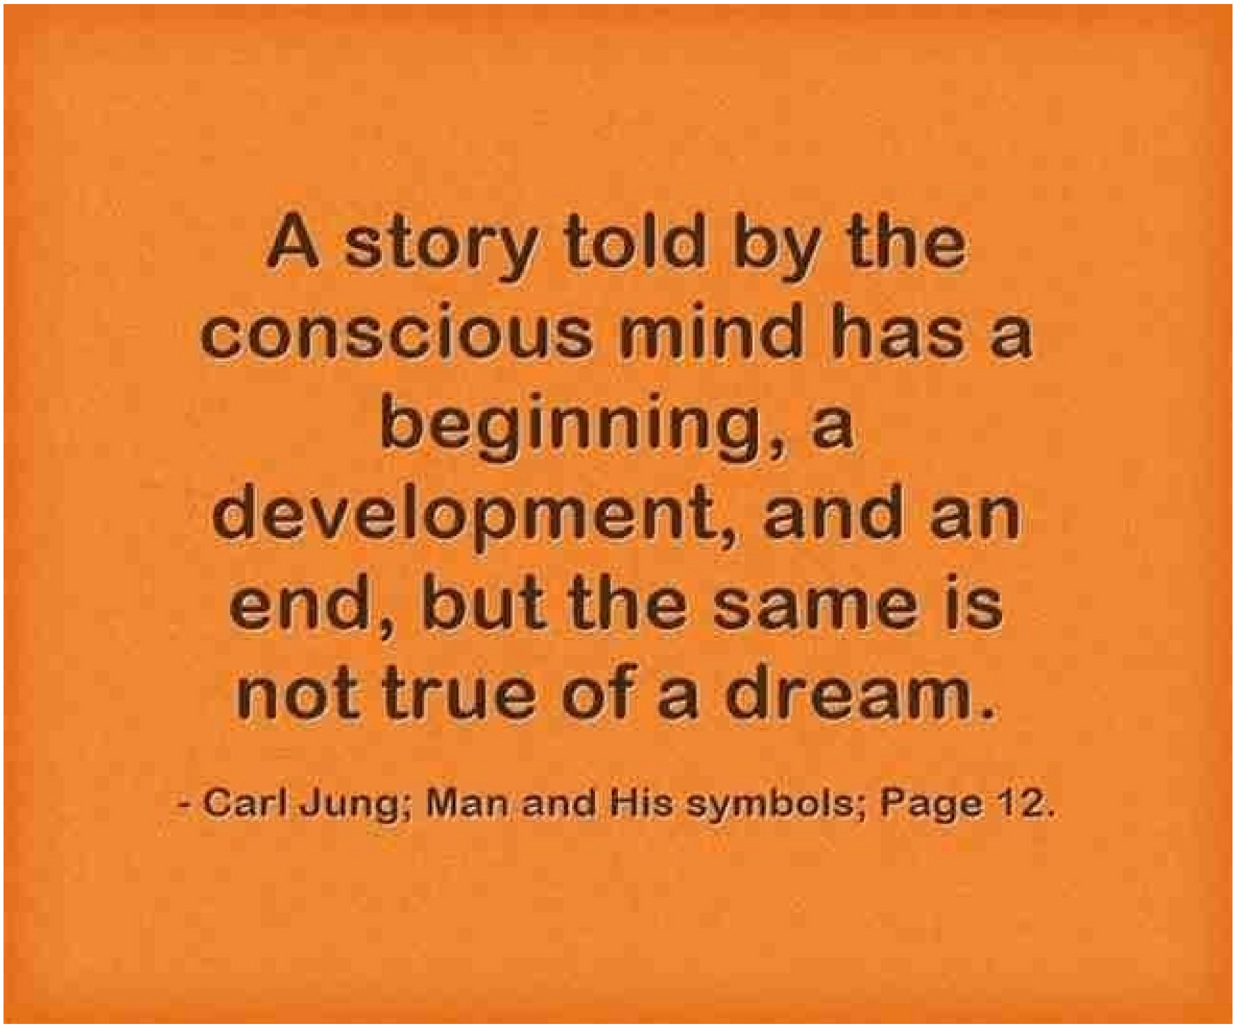


The conscious mind allows itself to be trained like a parrot, but the unconscious does not – which is why St. Augustine thanked God for not making him responsible for his dreams.

Carl Jung: Psychology and Alchemy; Page 51.

The conscious mind allows itself to be trained like a parrot, but the unconscious does not — which is why St. Augustine thanked God for not making him responsible for his dreams. Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy; Page 51.

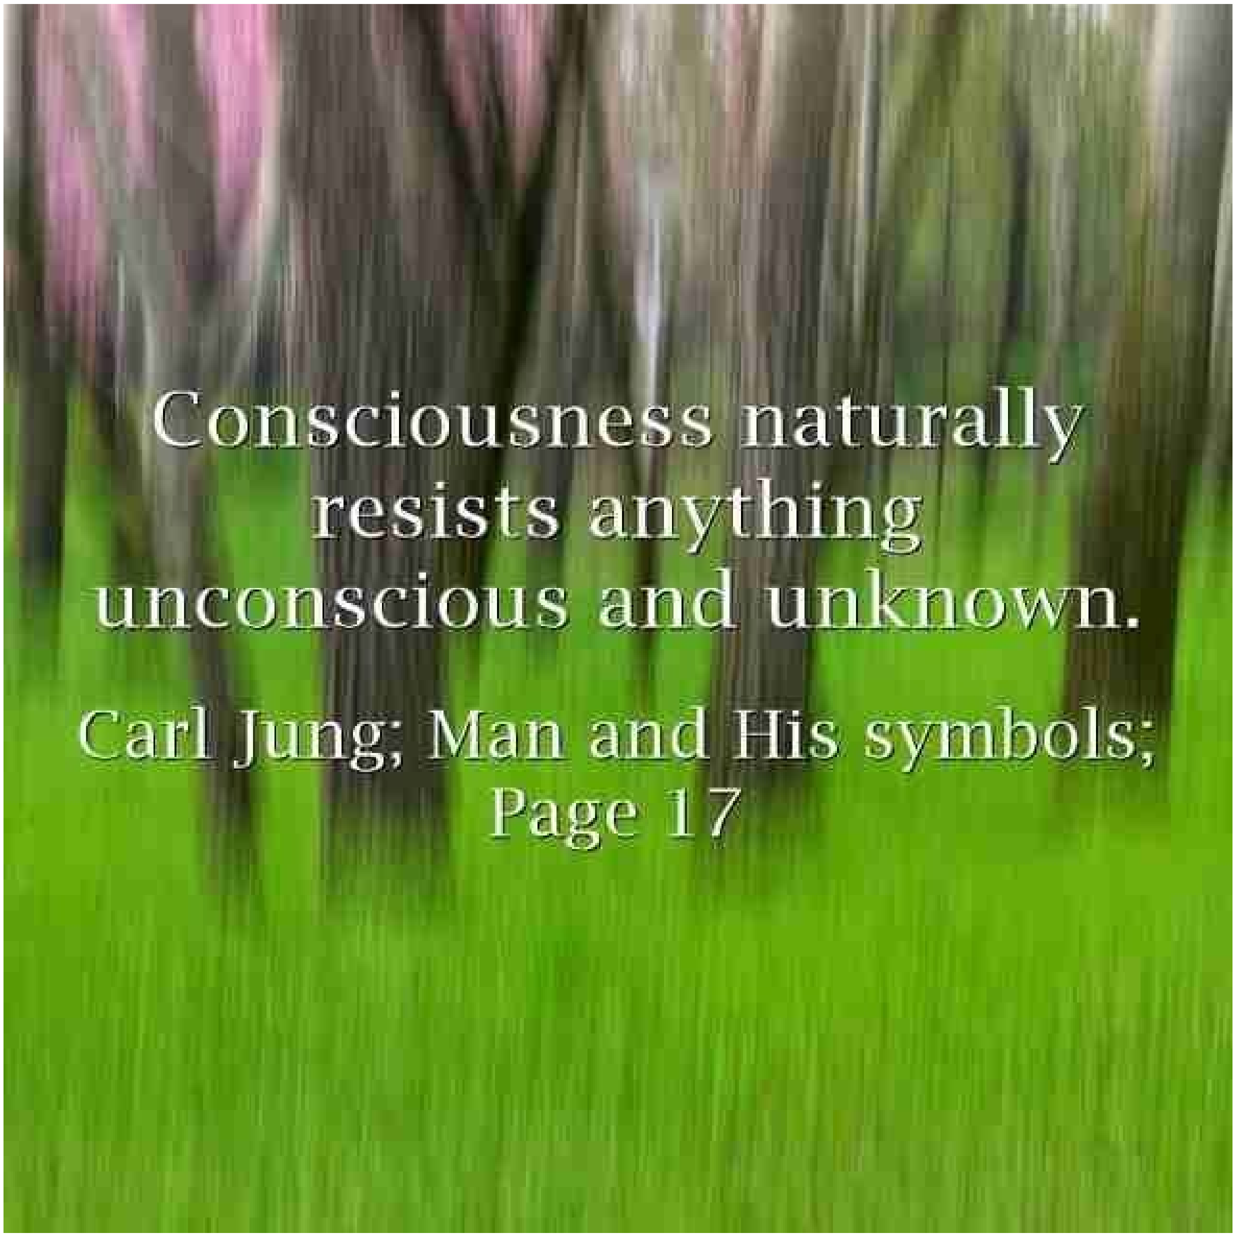
[25]



A story told by the conscious mind has a beginning, a development, and an end, but the same is not true of a dream.

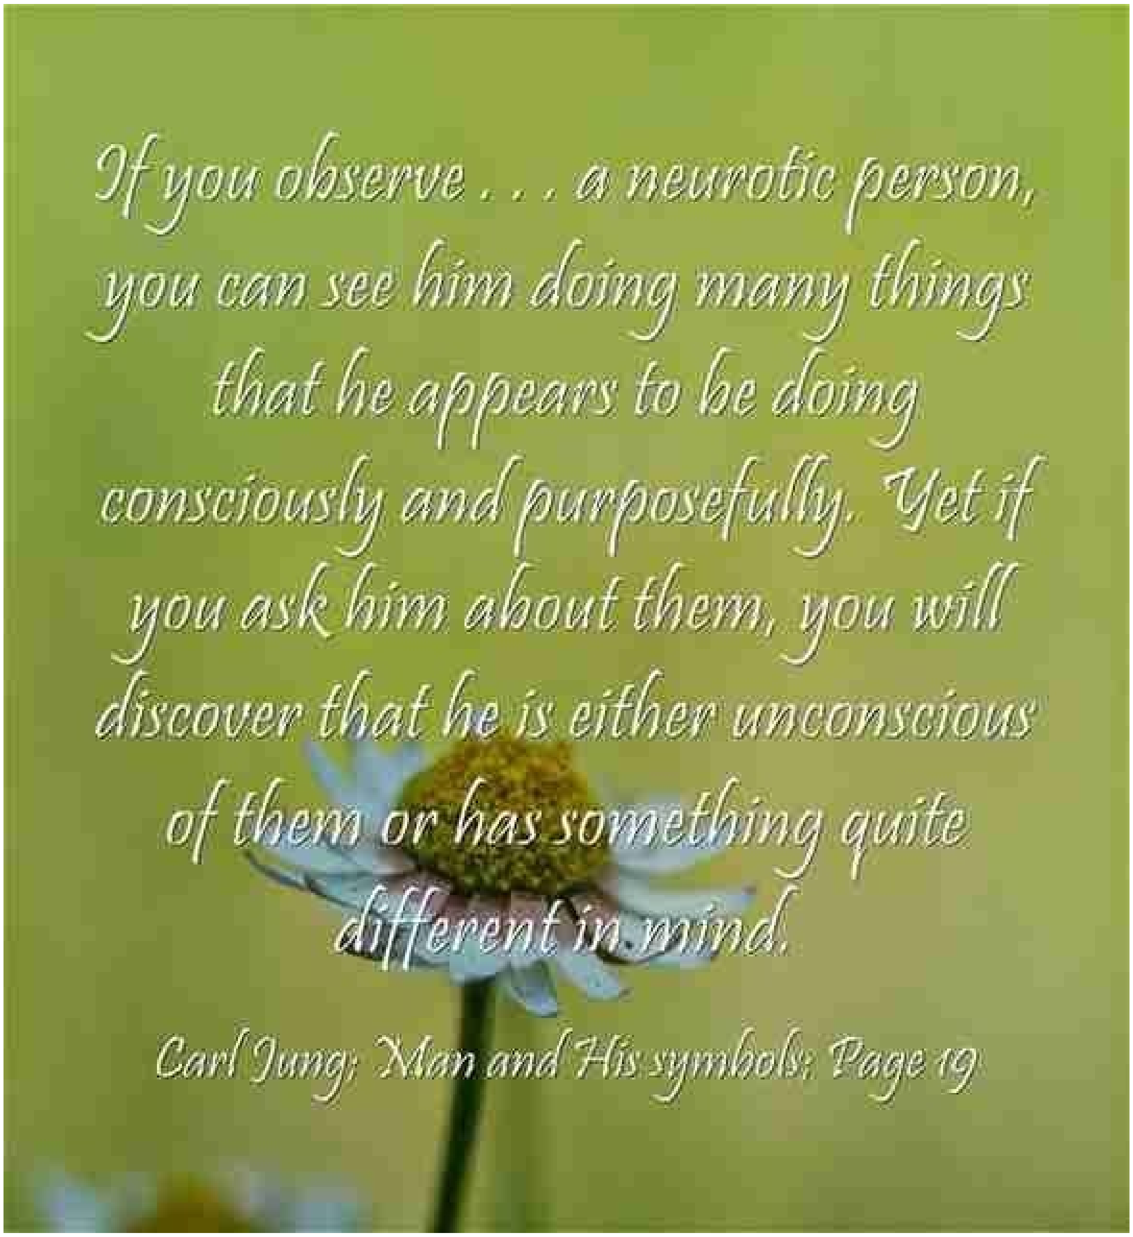
- Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 12.

A story told by the conscious mind has a beginning, a development, and an end but the same is not true of the dream. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 12.



Consciousness naturally resists anything unconscious and unknown.
Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 17

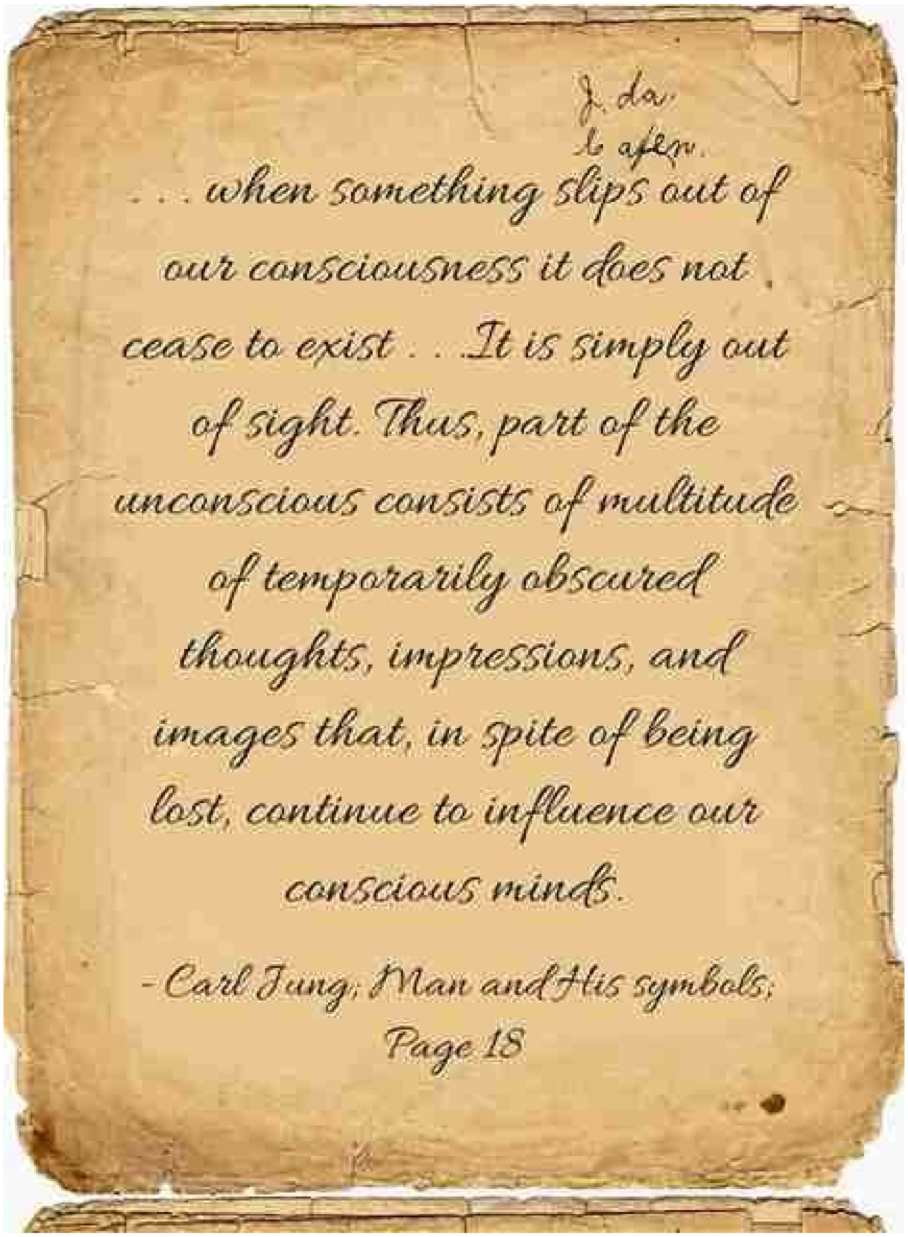
Consciousness naturally resists anything unconscious and unknown Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 17.



If you observe . . . a neurotic person, you can see him doing many things that he appears to be doing consciously and purposefully. Yet if you ask him about them, you will discover that he is either unconscious of them or has something quite different in mind.

Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 19

If you observe a neurotic person, you see him doing many things that he appears to be doing consciously and purposively, yet if you ask him about them, you will discover that he is either unconscious of them or has something quite different in mind. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 19.

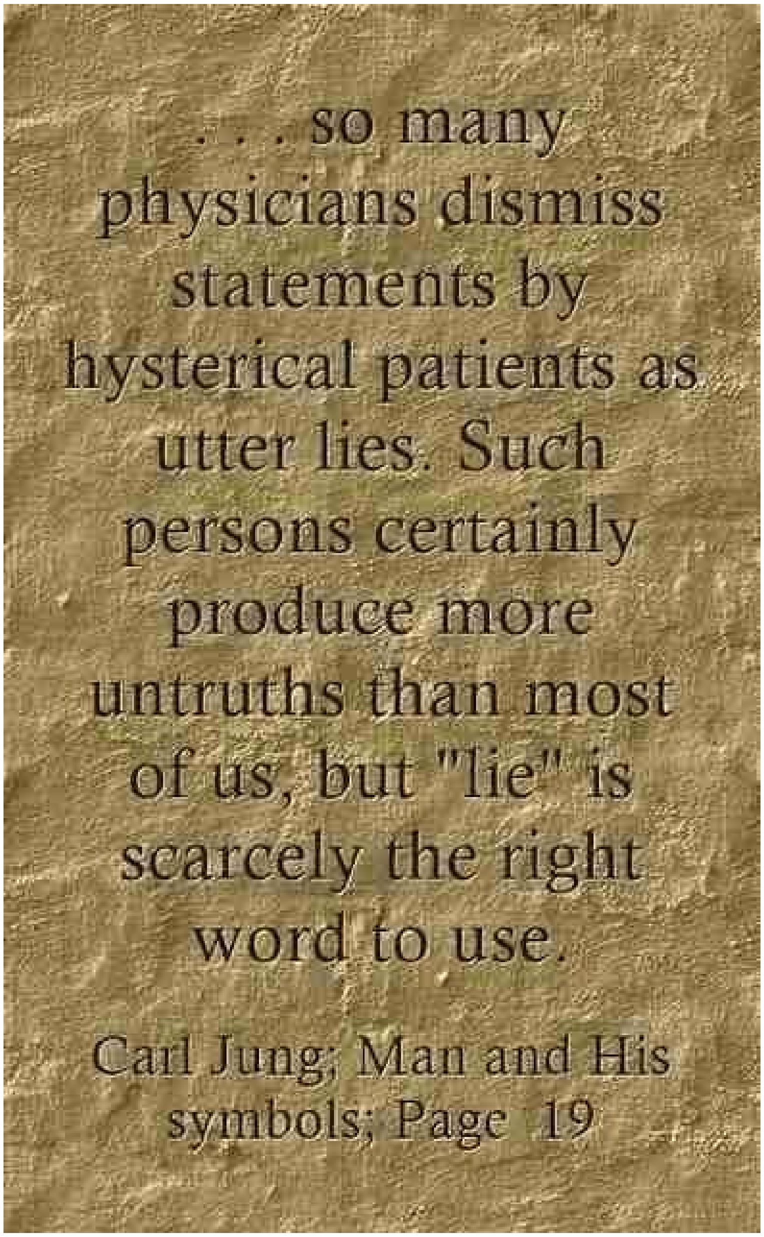


J. da.
l. afen.

. . . when something slips out of our consciousness it does not cease to exist . . . It is simply out of sight. Thus, part of the unconscious consists of multitude of temporarily obscured thoughts, impressions, and images that, in spite of being lost, continue to influence our conscious minds.

- Carl Jung; Man and His symbols;
Page 18

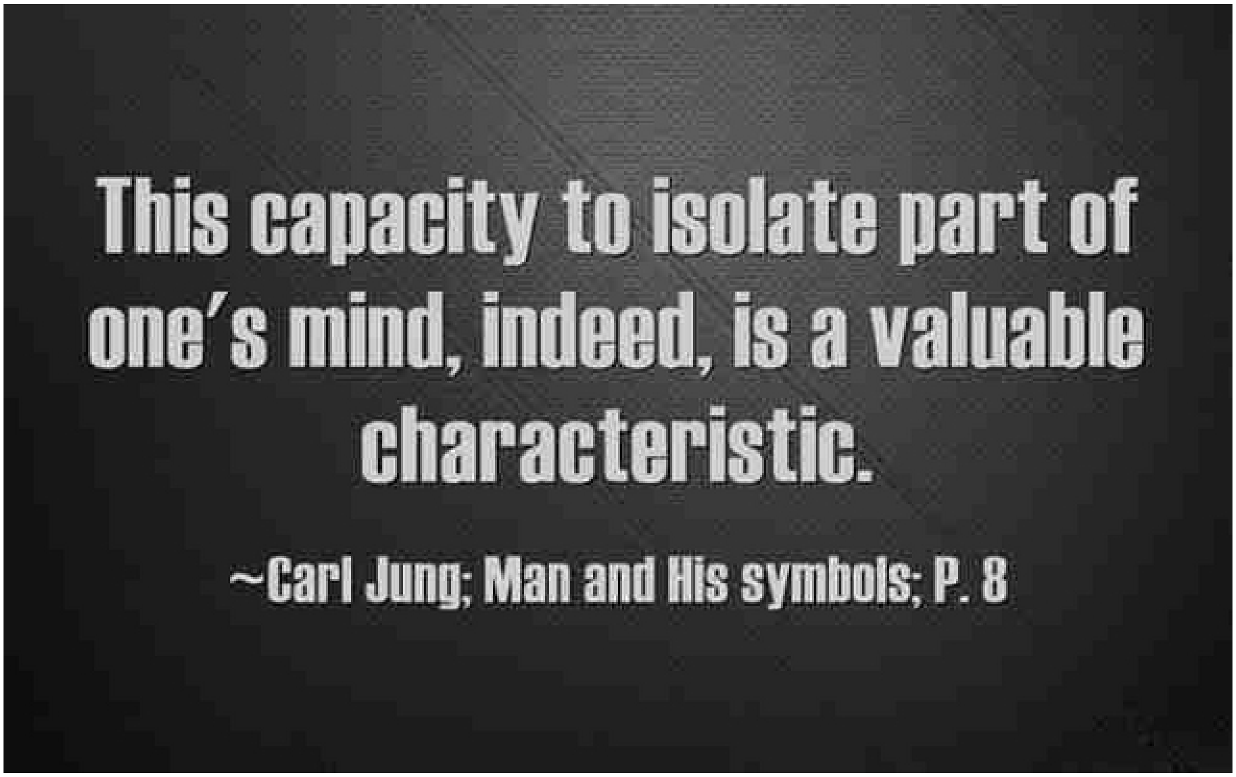
When something slips out of our consciousness it does not cease to exist…It is simply out of sight. Thus part of the unconscious consists of multitudes of temporarily obscured thoughts, impressions and images that, in spite of being lost, continue to influence our conscious minds. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols, Page 18.



. . . so many physicians dismiss statements by hysterical patients as utter lies. Such persons certainly produce more untruths than most of us, but "lie" is scarcely the right word to use.

Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 19

. . . so many physicians dismiss statements by hysterical patients as utter lies. Such persons certainly produce more untruths than most of us, but "lie" is scarcely the right word to use. Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 19.



This capacity to isolate part of one´s mind, indeed, is a valuable characteristic.

~Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; P. 8

This capacity to isolate part of one’s mind, indeed, is a valuable characteristic. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 8.

Freud and Josef Breuer . . . recognized that neurotic symptoms . . . are in fact symbolically meaningful. They are one way in which the unconscious mind expresses itself . . .

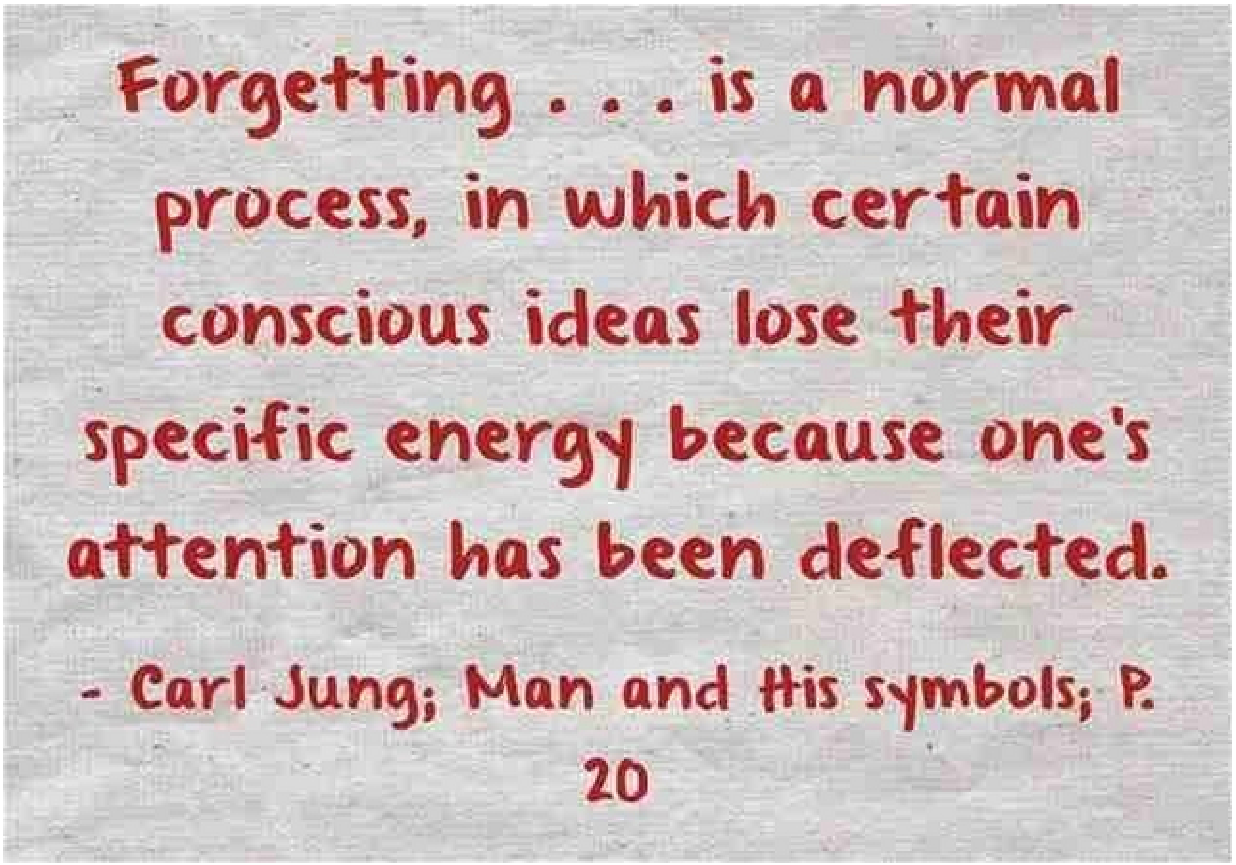
- Carl Jung: Man and His symbols: Page 9.

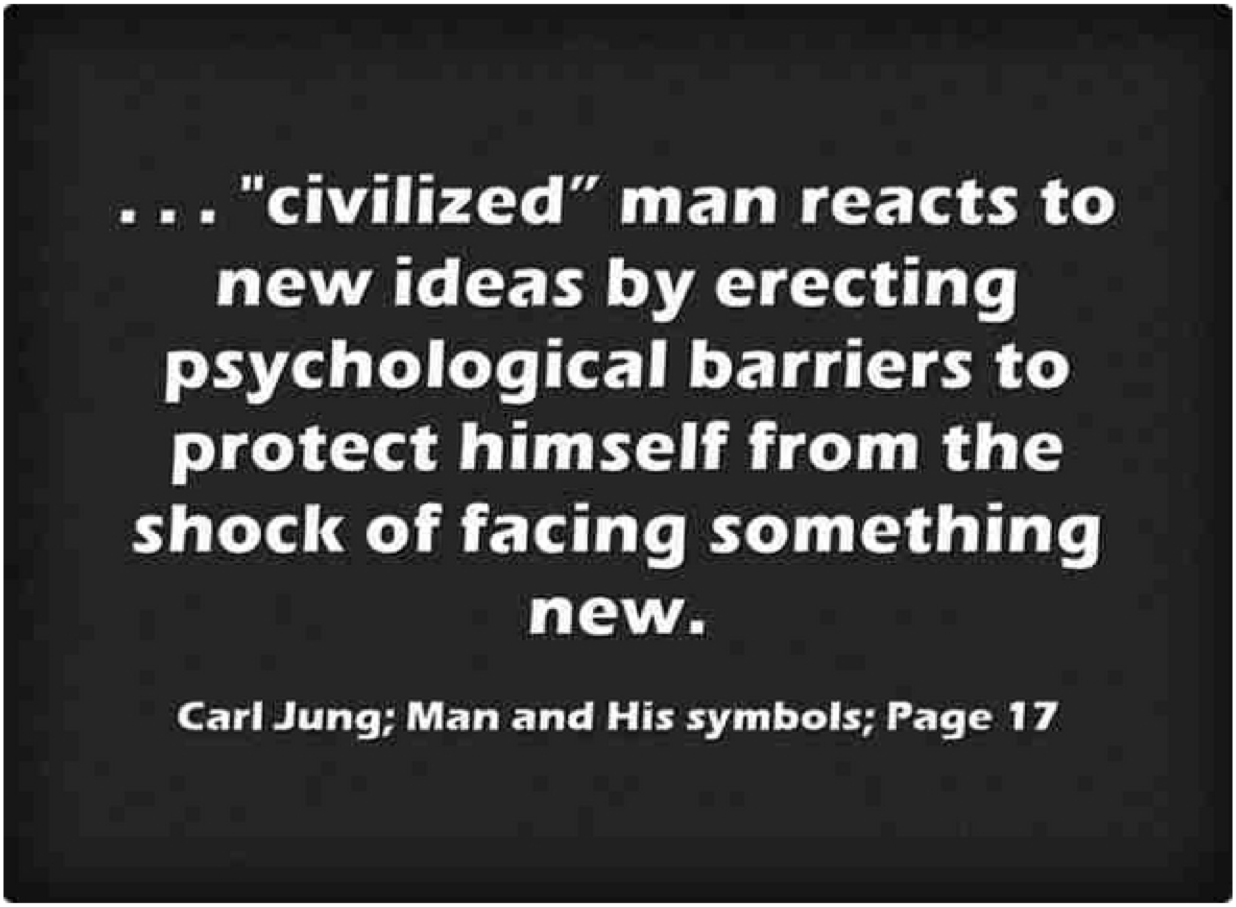
Freud and Josef Breuer recognized that neurotic symptoms… are in fact symbolically meaningful. They are one way in which the unconscious mind expresses itself. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 9.



Forgetting . . . is a normal process, in which certain conscious ideas lose their specific energy because one's attention has been deflected.

- Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; P. 20

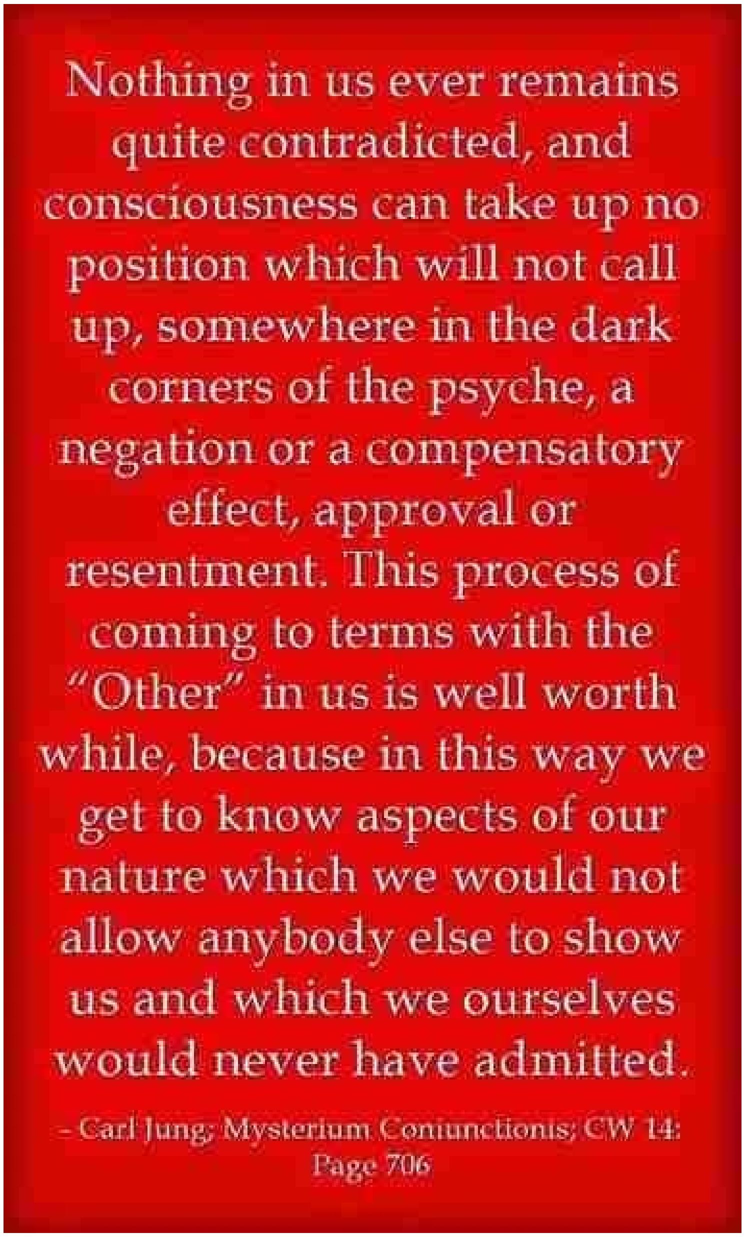
Forgetting . . . is a normal process, in which certain conscious ideas lose their specific energy because one’s attention has been deflected. Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; P. 20



. . . "civilized" man reacts to new ideas by erecting psychological barriers to protect himself from the shock of facing something new.

Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 17

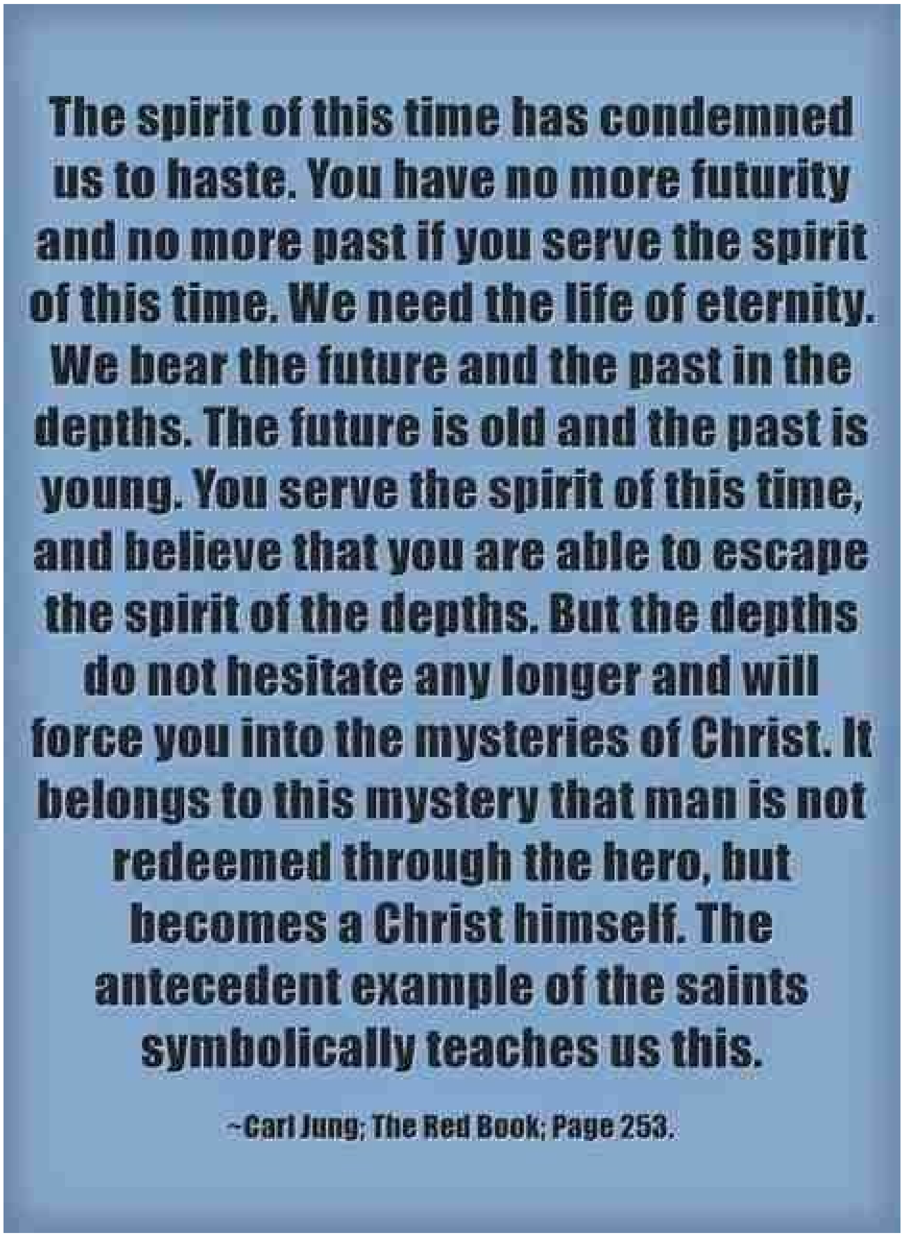
. . . "civilized" man reacts to new ideas by erecting psychological barriers to protect himself from the shock of facing something new. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 17.



Nothing in us ever remains quite contradicted, and consciousness can take up no position which will not call up, somewhere in the dark corners of the psyche, a negation or a compensatory effect, approval or resentment. This process of coming to terms with the “Other” in us is well worth while, because in this way we get to know aspects of our nature which we would not allow anybody else to show us and which we ourselves would never have admitted.

- Carl Jung; Mysterium Coniunctionis; CW 14: Page 706

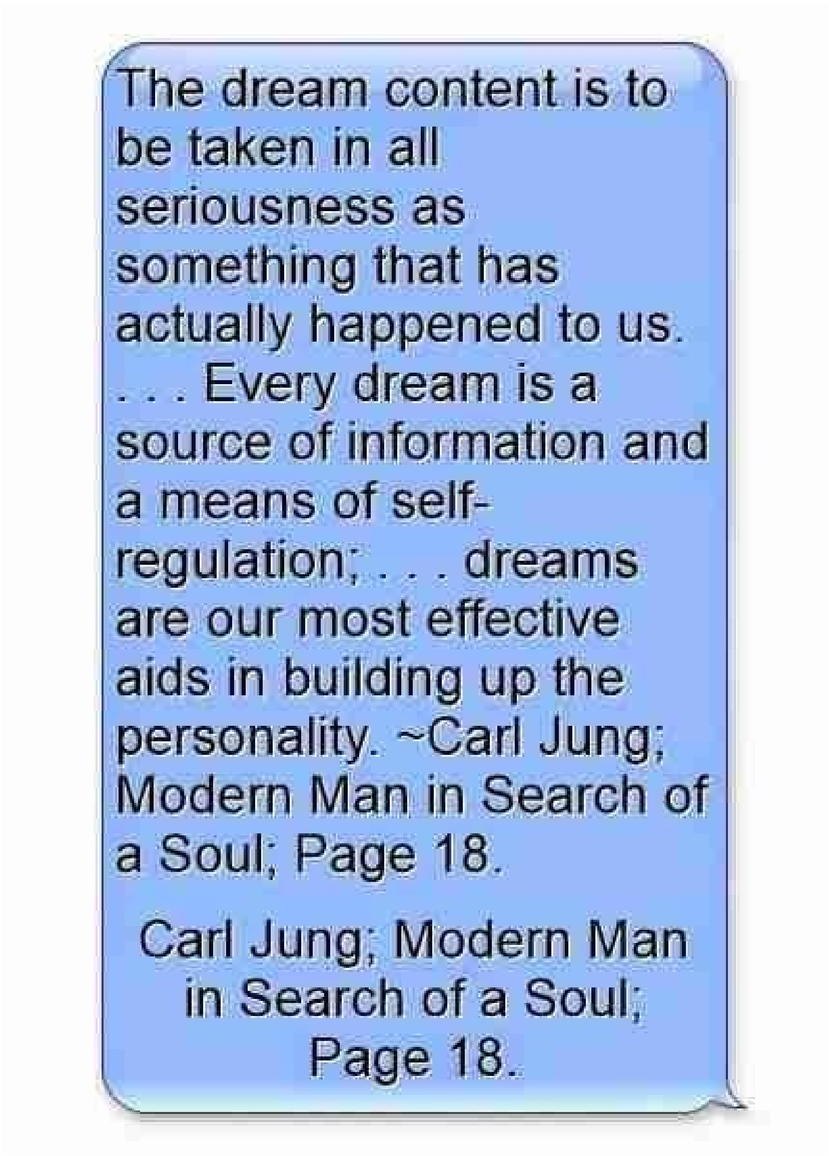
Nothing in us ever remains quite contradicted, and consciousness can take up no position which will not call up, somewhere in the dark corners of the psyche, a negation or a compensatory effect, approval or resentment. This process of coming to terms with the “Other” in us is well worth while, because in this way we get to know aspects of our nature which we would not allow anybody else to show us and which we ourselves would never have admitted.
Carl Jung; Mysterium Coniunctionis; CW 14: Page 706



The spirit of this time has condemned us to haste. You have no more futurity and no more past if you serve the spirit of this time. We need the life of eternity. We bear the future and the past in the depths. The future is old and the past is young. You serve the spirit of this time, and believe that you are able to escape the spirit of the depths. But the depths do not hesitate any longer and will force you into the mysteries of Christ. It belongs to this mystery that man is not redeemed through the hero, but becomes a Christ himself. The antecedent example of the saints symbolically teaches us this.

~Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 253.

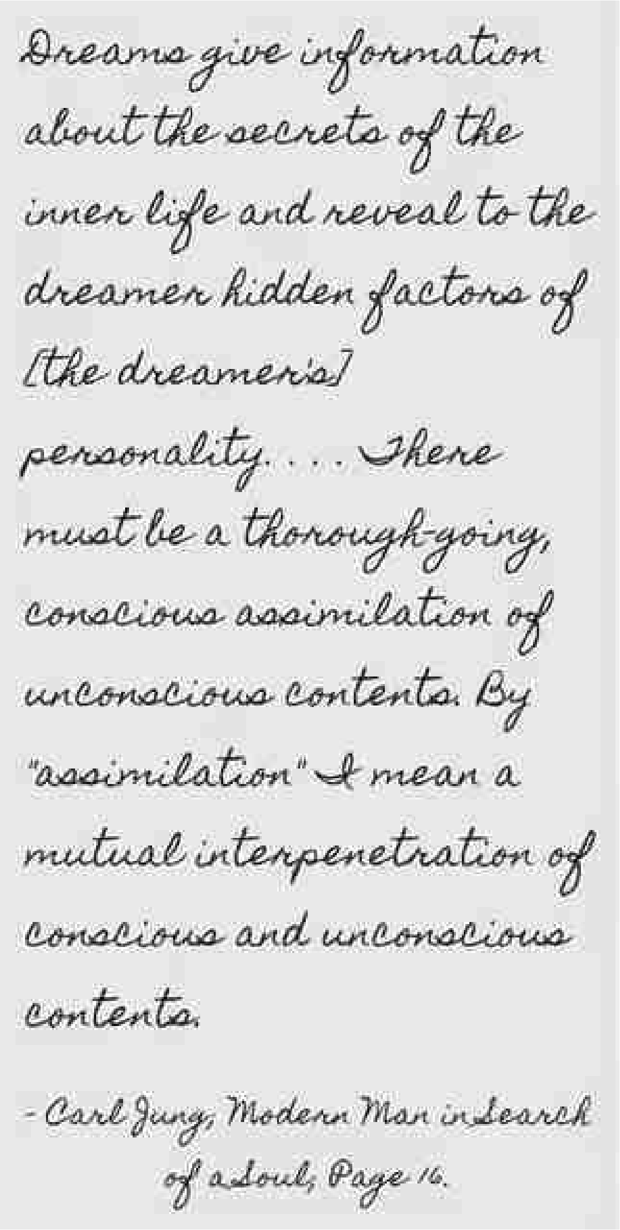
The spirit of this time has condemned us to haste. You have no more futurity and no more past if you serve the spirit of this time. We need the life of eternity. We bear the future and the past in the depths. The future is old and the past is young. You serve the spirit of this time, and believe that you are able to escape the spirit of the depths. But the depths do not hesitate any longer and will force you into the mysteries of Christ. It belongs to this mystery that man is not redeemed through the hero, but becomes a Christ himself. The antecedent example of the saints symbolically teaches us this. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 253.



The dream content is to be taken in all seriousness as something that has actually happened to us. . . . Every dream is a source of information and a means of self-regulation; . . . dreams are our most effective aids in building up the personality. ~Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 18.

Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 18.

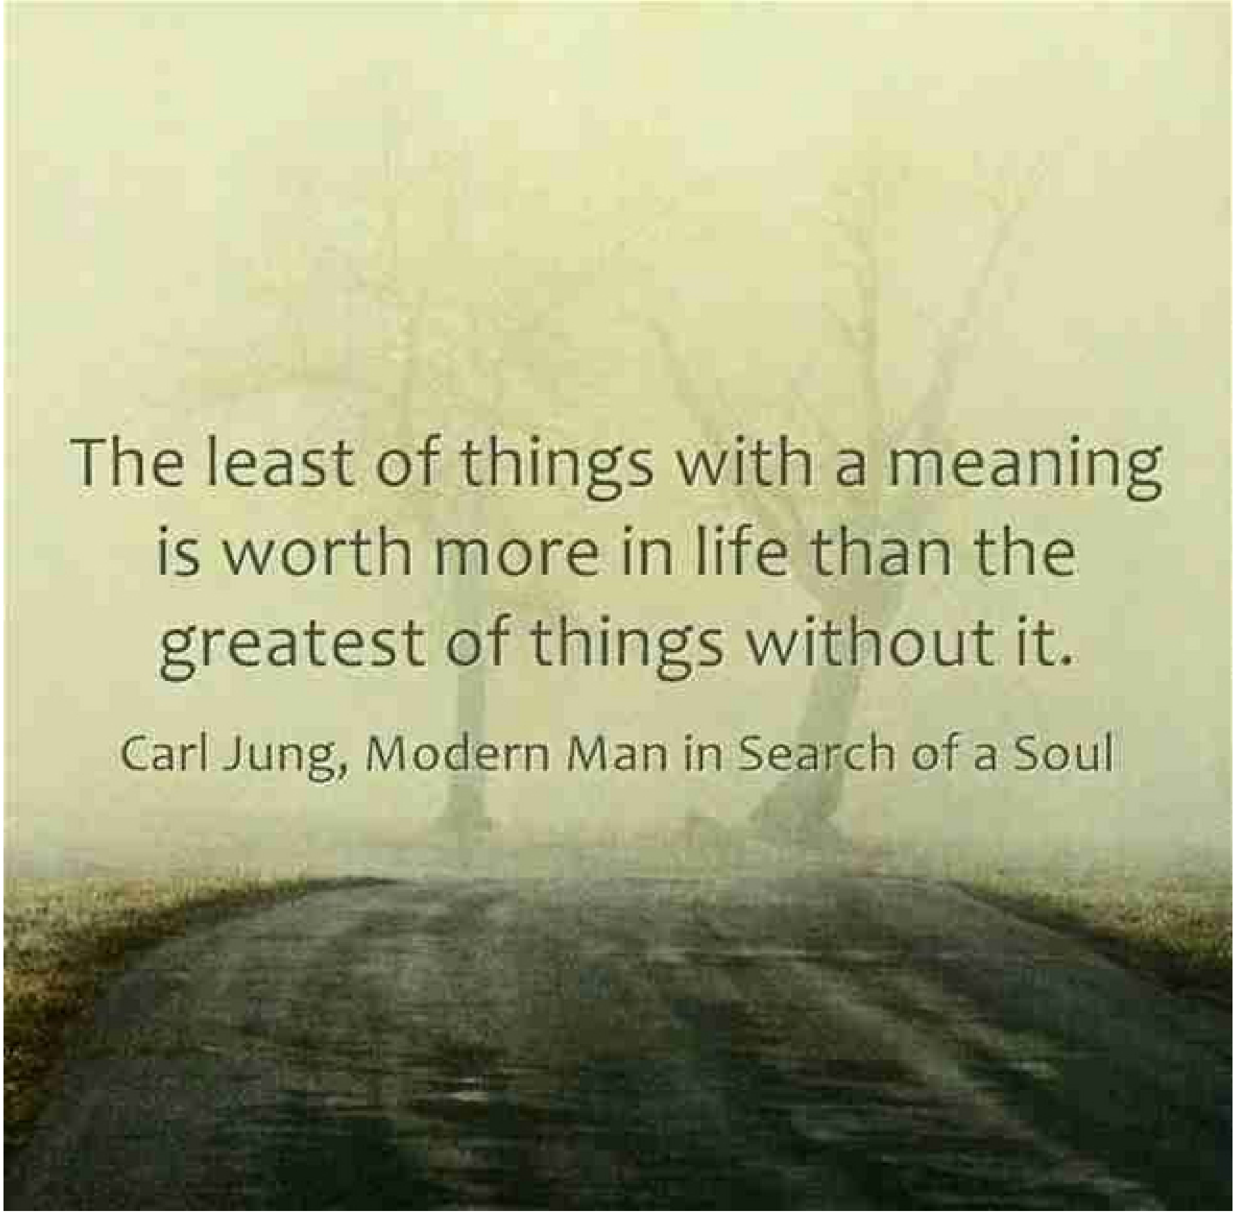
The dream content is to be taken in all seriousness as something that has actually happened to us. . . . Every dream is a source of information and a means of self-regulation; . . . dreams are our most effective aids in building up the personality. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 18.



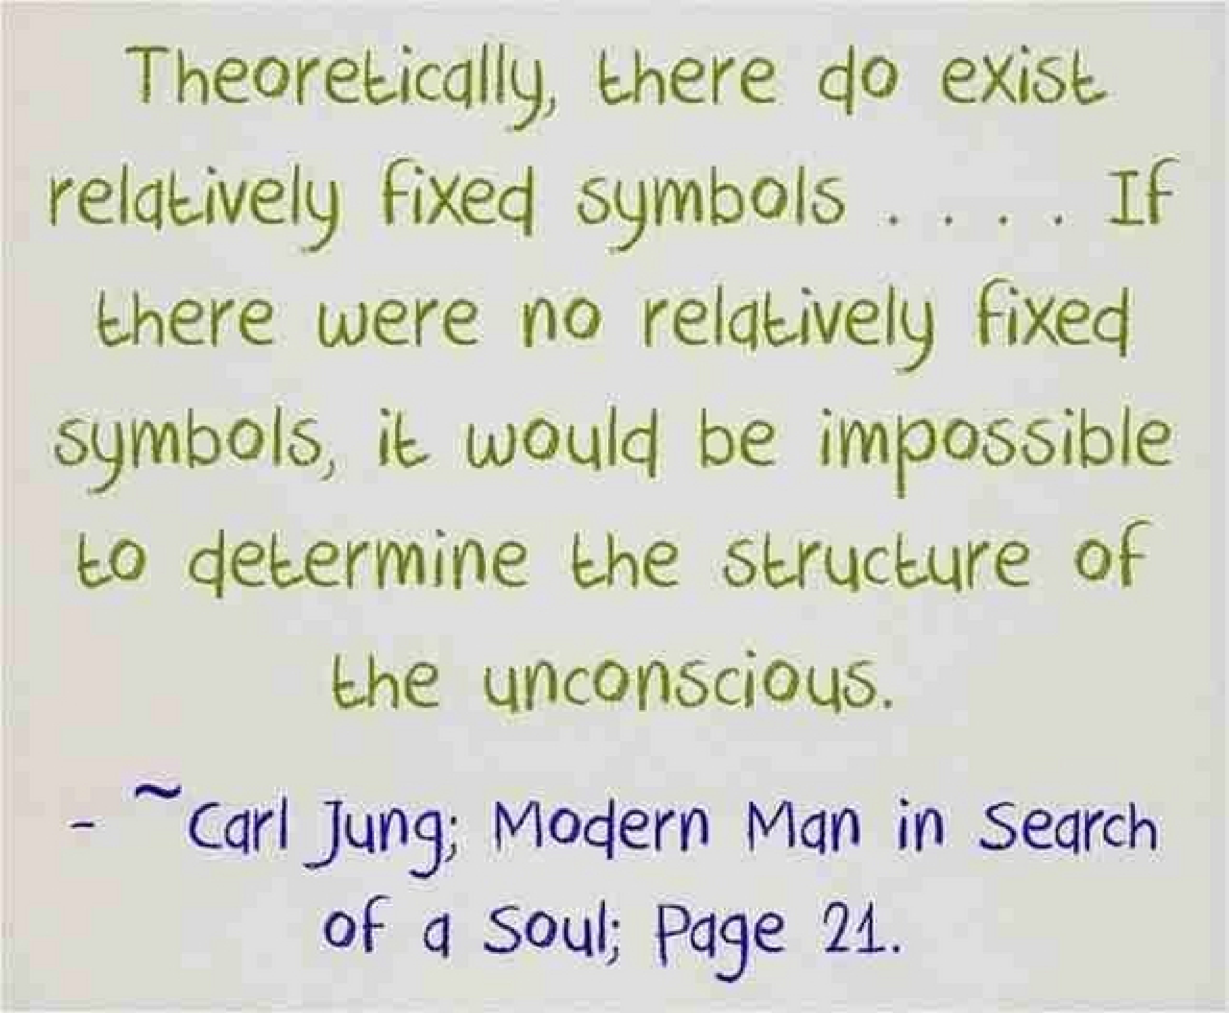
Dreams give information about the secrets of the inner life and reveal to the dreamer hidden factors of [the dreamer's] personality. . . . There must be a thorough-going, conscious assimilation of unconscious contents. By "assimilation" I mean a mutual interpenetration of conscious and unconscious contents.

- Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 16.

Dreams give information about the secrets of the inner life and reveal to the dreamer hidden factors of [the dreamer's] personality. . . . There must be a thorough-going, conscious assimilation of unconscious contents. By "assimilation" I mean a mutual interpenetration of conscious and unconscious contents. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 16.



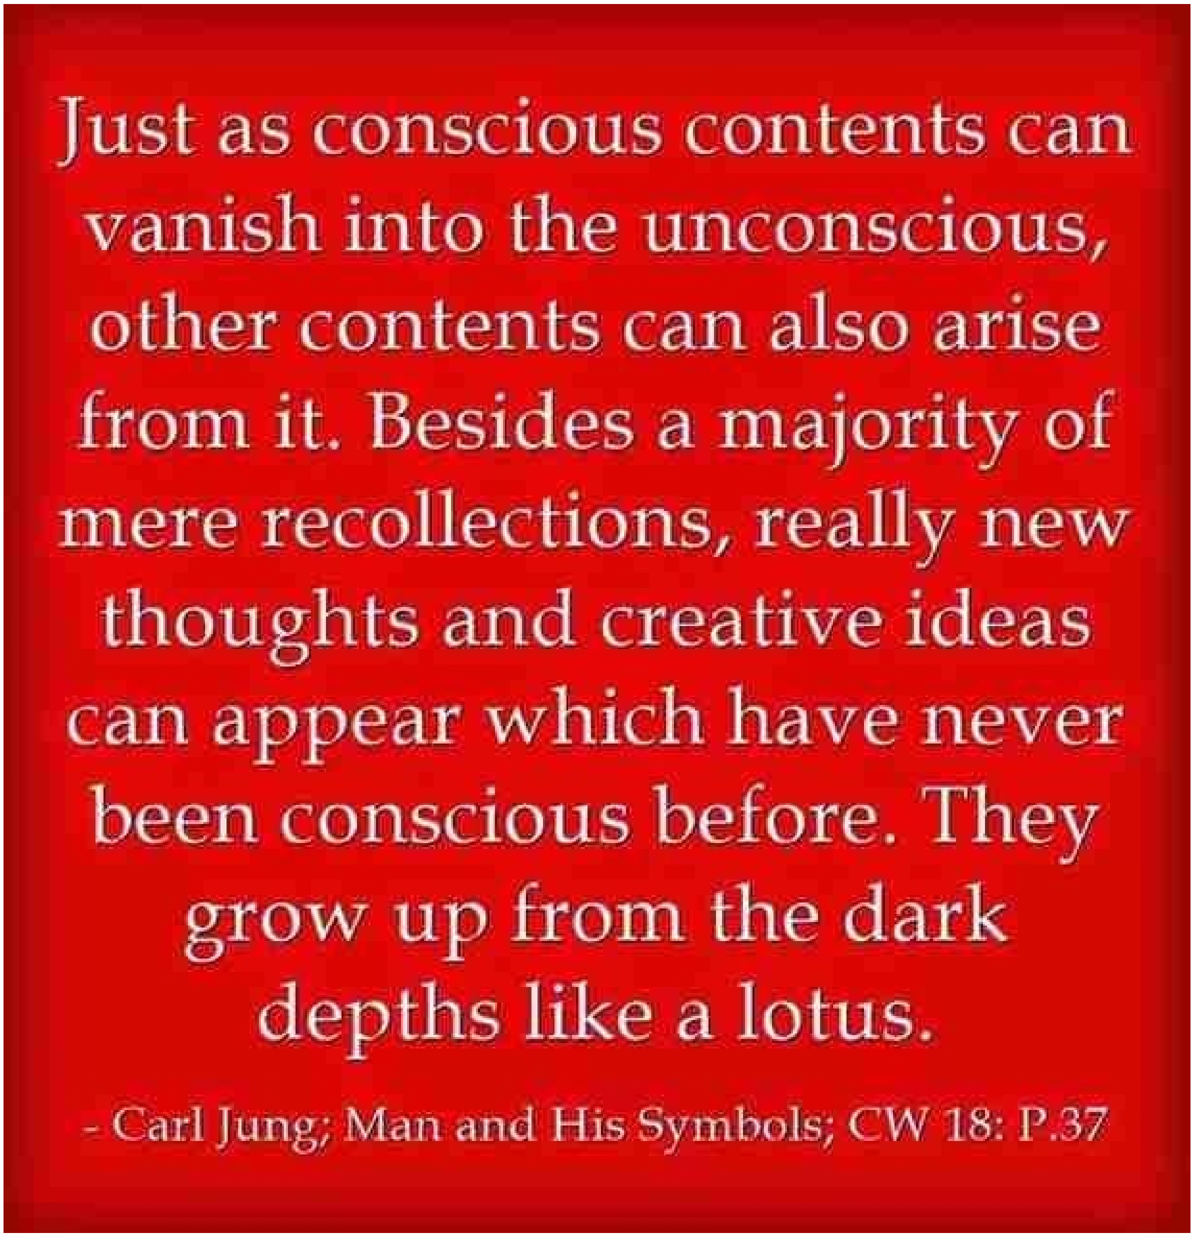
The least of things with a meaning is worth more in life than the greatest of things without it. Carl Jung, Modern Man in Search of a Soul



Theoretically, there do exist relatively fixed symbols . . . . If there were no relatively fixed symbols, it would be impossible to determine the structure of the unconscious.

- ~Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 21.

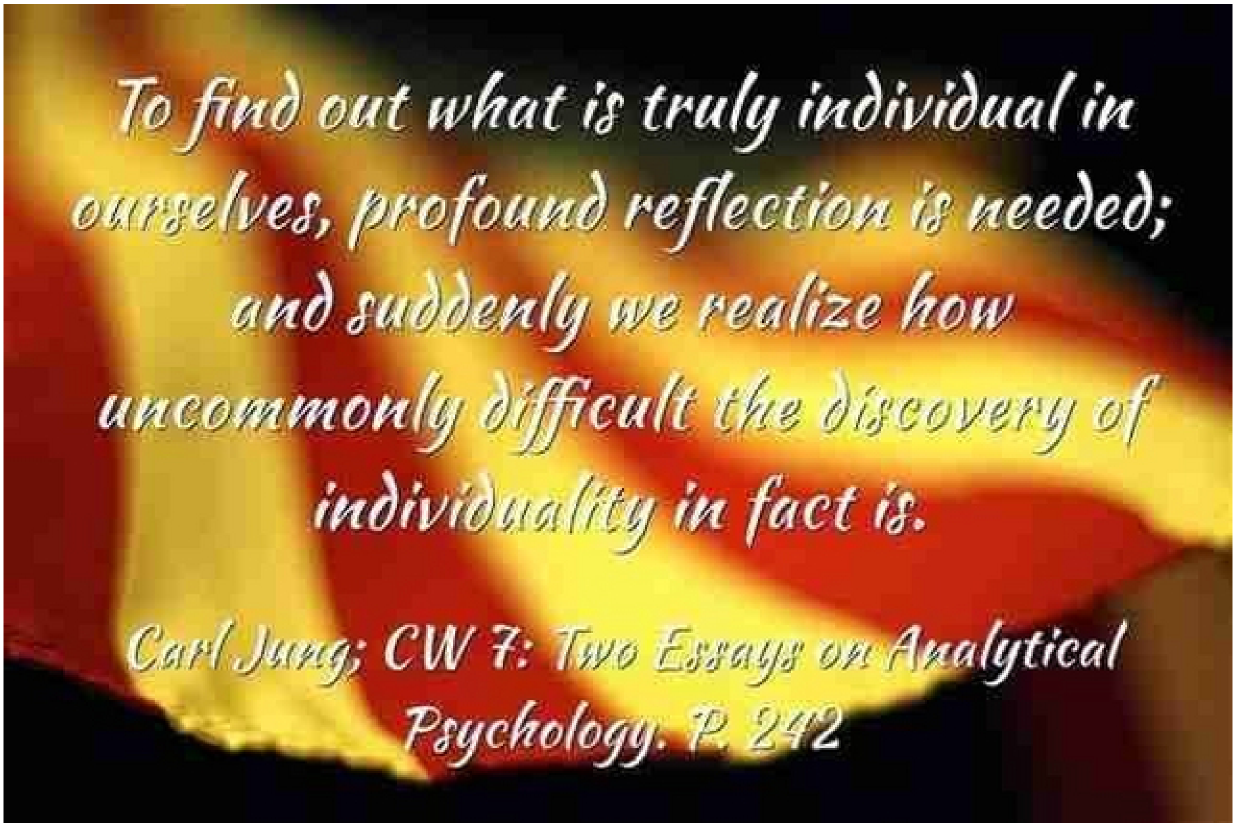
Theoretically, there do exist relatively fixed symbols . . . . If there were no relatively fixed symbols, it would be impossible to determine the structure of the unconscious. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 21.



Just as conscious contents can vanish into the unconscious, other contents can also arise from it. Besides a majority of mere recollections, really new thoughts and creative ideas can appear which have never been conscious before. They grow up from the dark depths like a lotus.

- Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; CW 18: P.37

Just as conscious contents can vanish into the unconscious, other contents can also arise from it. Besides a majority of mere recollections, really new thoughts and creative ideas can appear which have never been conscious before. They grow up from the dark depths like a lotus. "Approaching the Unconscious" In Man and His Symbols (1964), In CW 18: P.37



To find out what is truly individual in ourselves, profound reflection is needed; and suddenly we realize how uncommonly difficult the discovery of individuality in fact is.

Carl Jung; CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P. 242

To find out what is truly individual in ourselves, profound reflection is needed; and suddenly we realize how uncommonly difficult the discovery of individuality in fact is. - "The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious" (1928). In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P. 242

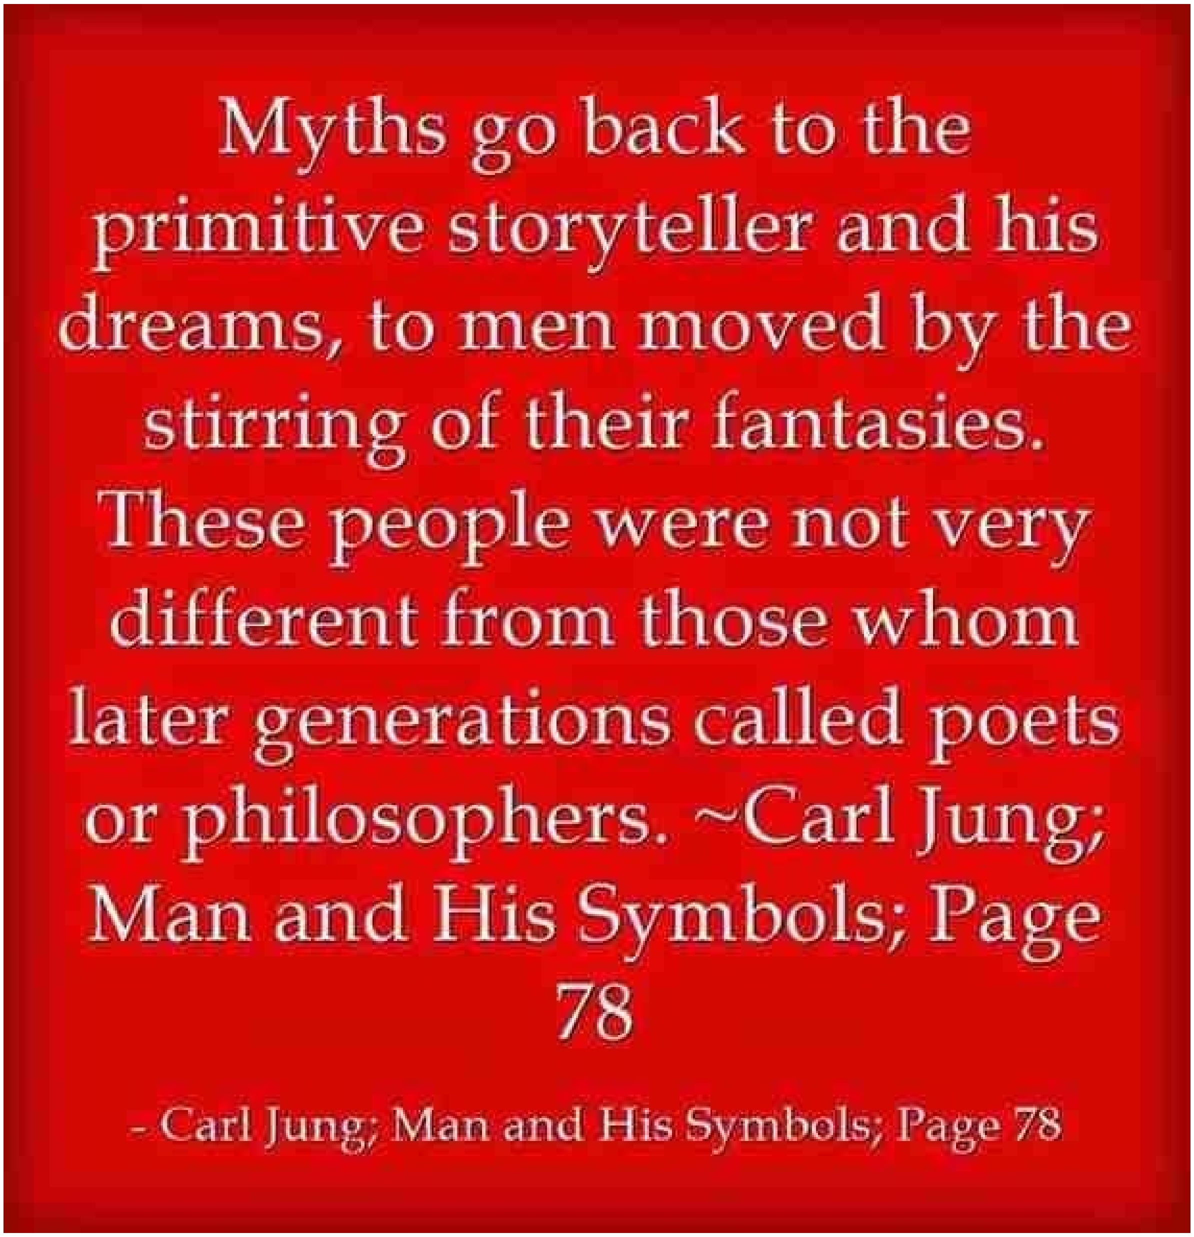
The great problems of life — sexuality, of course, among others — are always related to the primordial images of the collective unconscious. These images are really balancing or compensating factors which correspond with the problems life presents in actuality. This is not to be marveled at, since these images are deposits representing the accumulated experience of thousands of years of struggle for adaptation and existence.

- Carl Jung; Psychological Types Ch. 5, p. 271

[42]

The great problems of life — sexuality, of course, among others — are always related to the primordial images of the collective unconscious. These images are really balancing or compensating factors which correspond with the problems life presents in actuality. This is not to be marveled at, since these images are deposits representing the accumulated experience of thousands of years of struggle for adaptation and existence. Psychological Types Ch. 5, p. 271

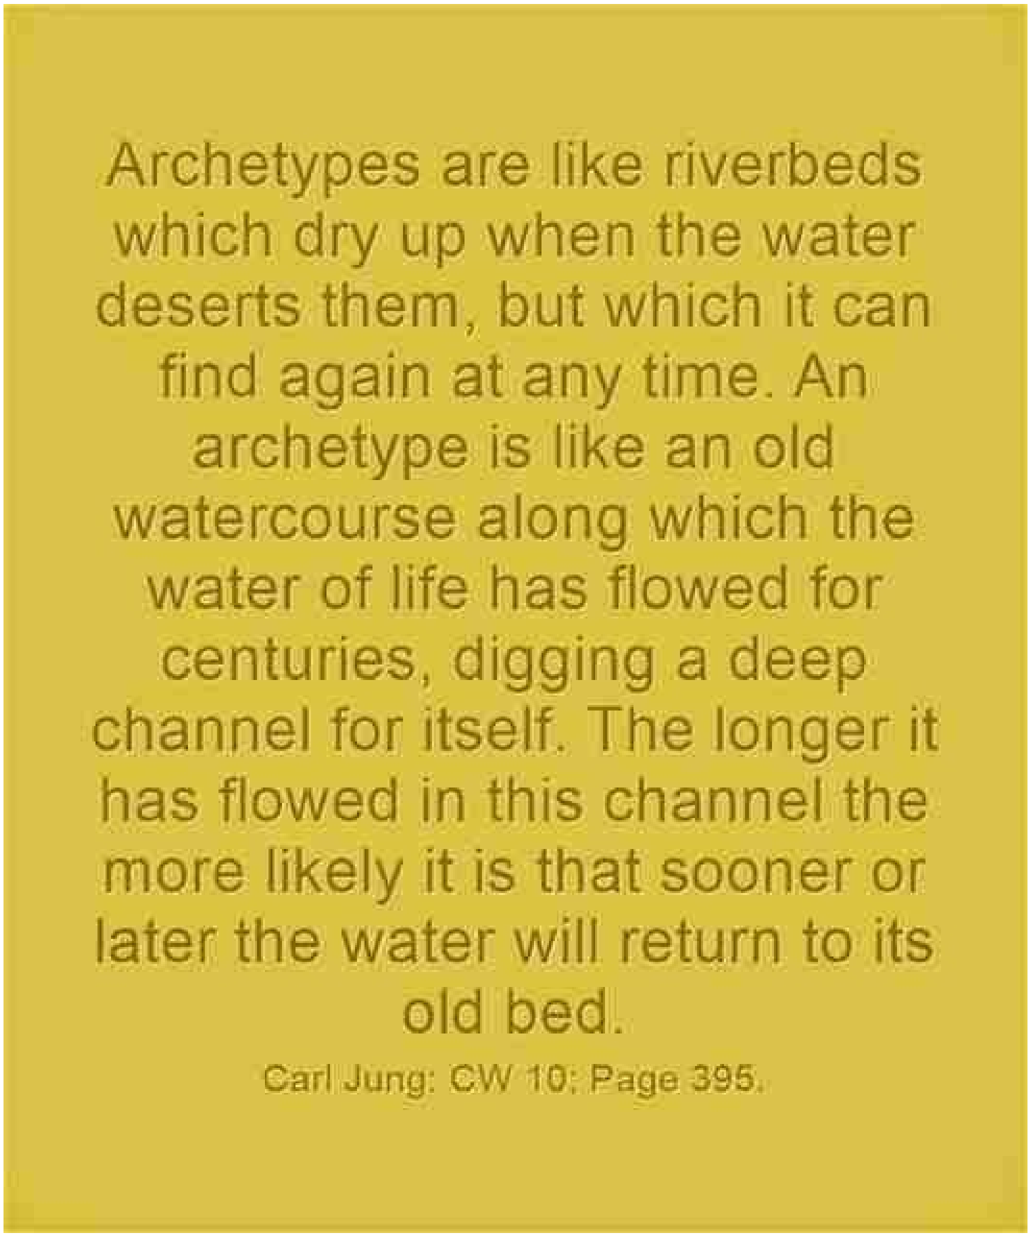
[43]



Myths go back to the primitive storyteller and his dreams, to men moved by the stirring of their fantasies. These people were not very different from those whom later generations called poets or philosophers. ~Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 78

- Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 78

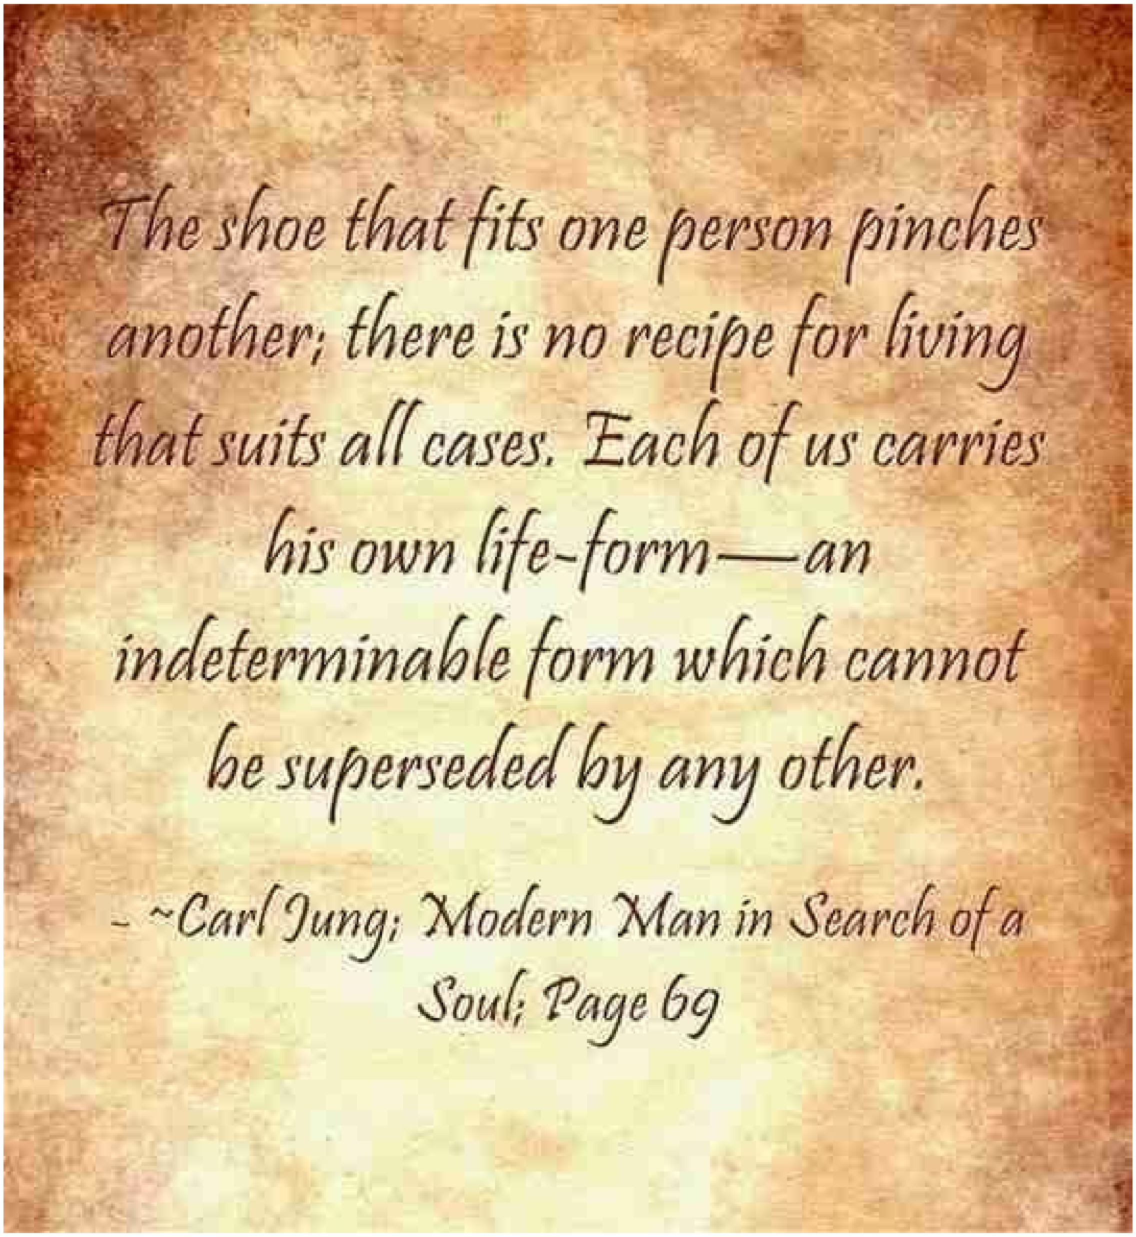
Myths go back to the primitive storyteller and his dreams, to men moved by the stirring of their fantasies. These people were not very different from those whom later generations called poets or philosophers. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 78



Archetypes are like riverbeds which dry up when the water deserts them, but which it can find again at any time. An archetype is like an old watercourse along which the water of life has flowed for centuries, digging a deep channel for itself. The longer it has flowed in this channel the more likely it is that sooner or later the water will return to its old bed.

Carl Jung: CW 10: Page 395.

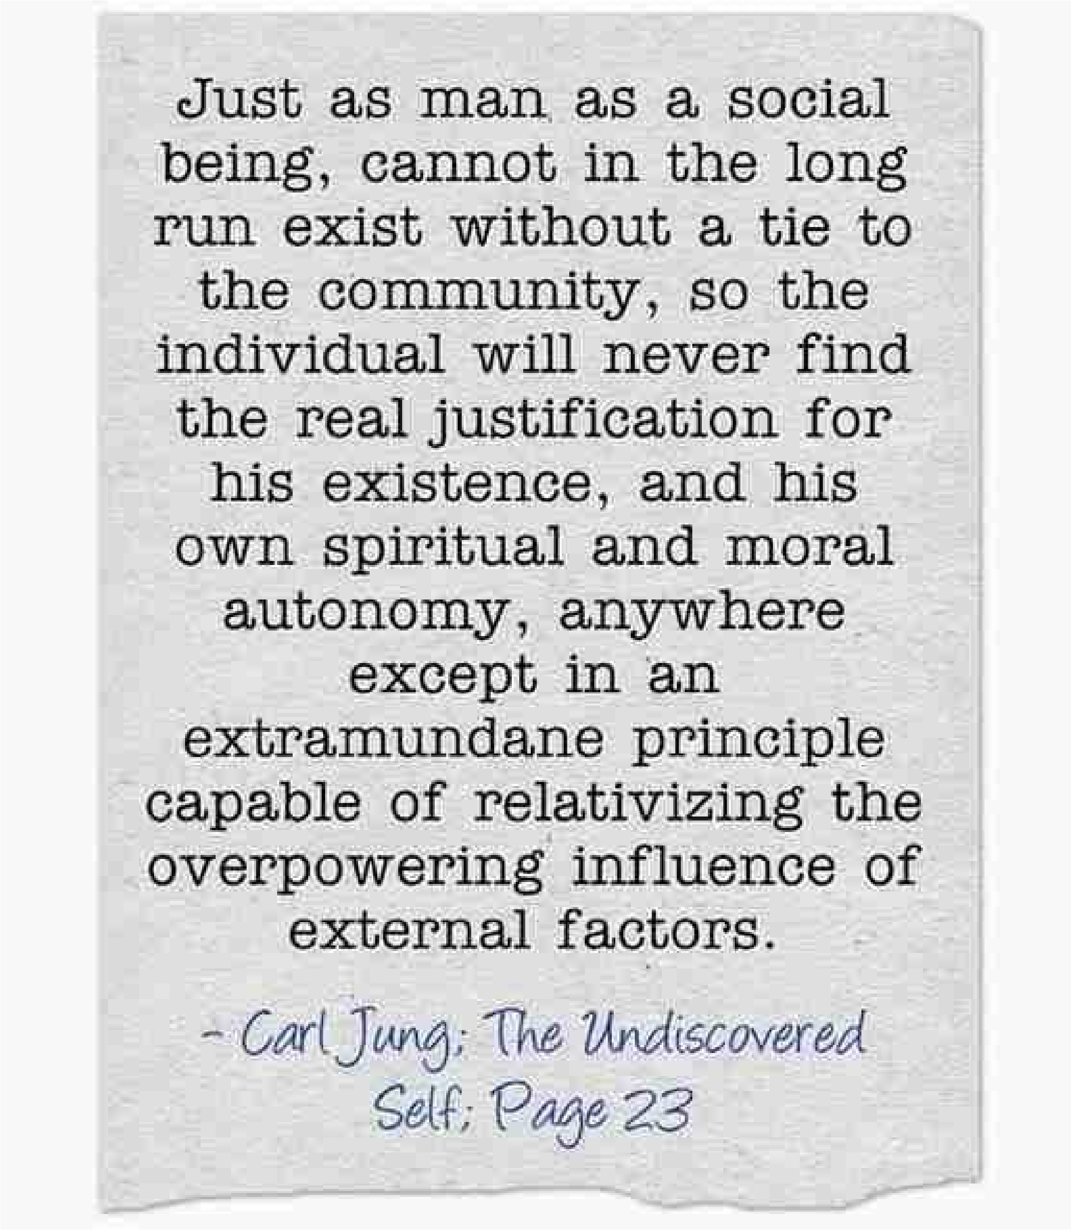
Archetypes are like riverbeds which dry up when the water deserts them, but which it can find again at any time. An archetype is like an old watercourse along which the water of life has flowed for centuries, digging a deep channel for itself. The longer it has flowed in this channel the more likely it is that sooner or later the water will return to its old bed. Carl Jung: CW 10; Civilization in Transition; Wotan; Page 395.



The shoe that fits one person pinches another; there is no recipe for living that suits all cases. Each of us carries his own life-form—an indeterminable form which cannot be superseded by any other.

- ~Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 69

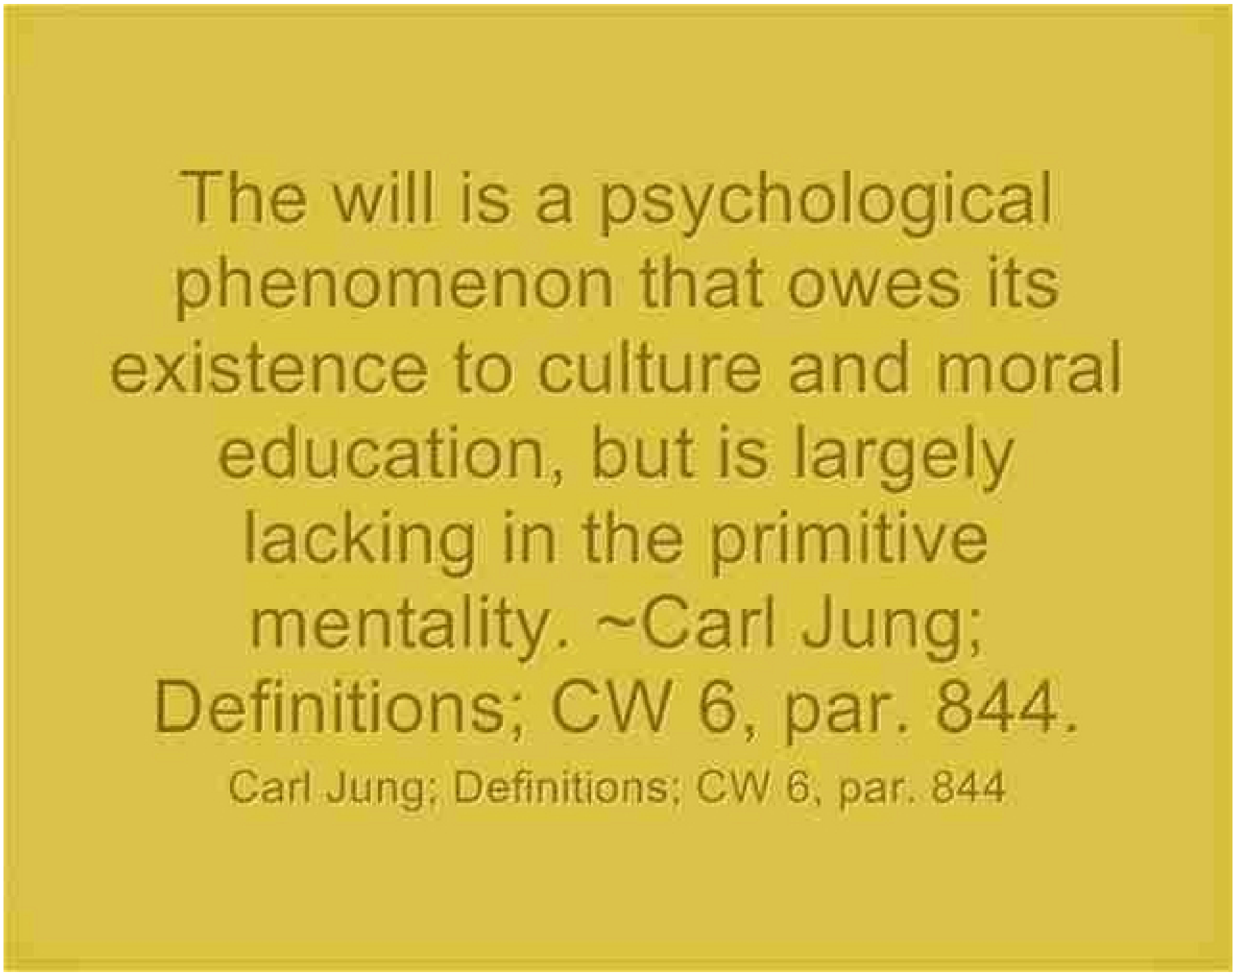
The shoe that fits one person pinches another; there is no recipe for living that suits all cases. Each of us carries his own life-form—an indeterminable form which cannot be superseded by any other. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Pages 60-61.



Just as man as a social being, cannot in the long run exist without a tie to the community, so the individual will never find the real justification for his existence, and his own spiritual and moral autonomy, anywhere except in an extramundane principle capable of relativizing the overpowering influence of external factors.

- Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 23

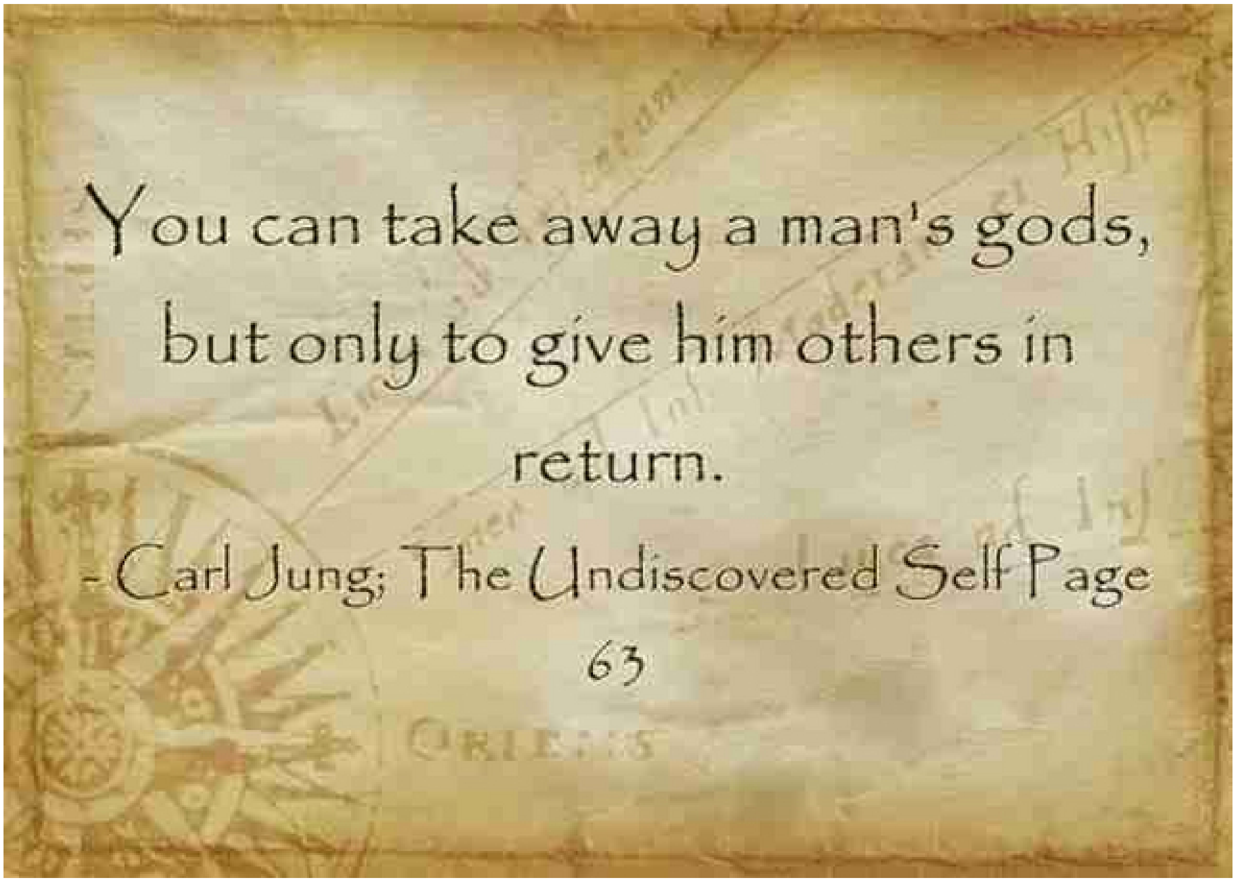
Just as man as a social being, cannot in the long run exist without a tie to the community, so the individual will never find the real justification for his existence, and his own spiritual and moral autonomy, anywhere except in an extramundane principle capable of relativizing the overpowering influence of external factors. Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 23.



The will is a psychological phenomenon that owes its existence to culture and moral education, but is largely lacking in the primitive mentality. ~Carl Jung; Definitions; CW 6, par. 844.

Carl Jung; Definitions; CW 6, par. 844

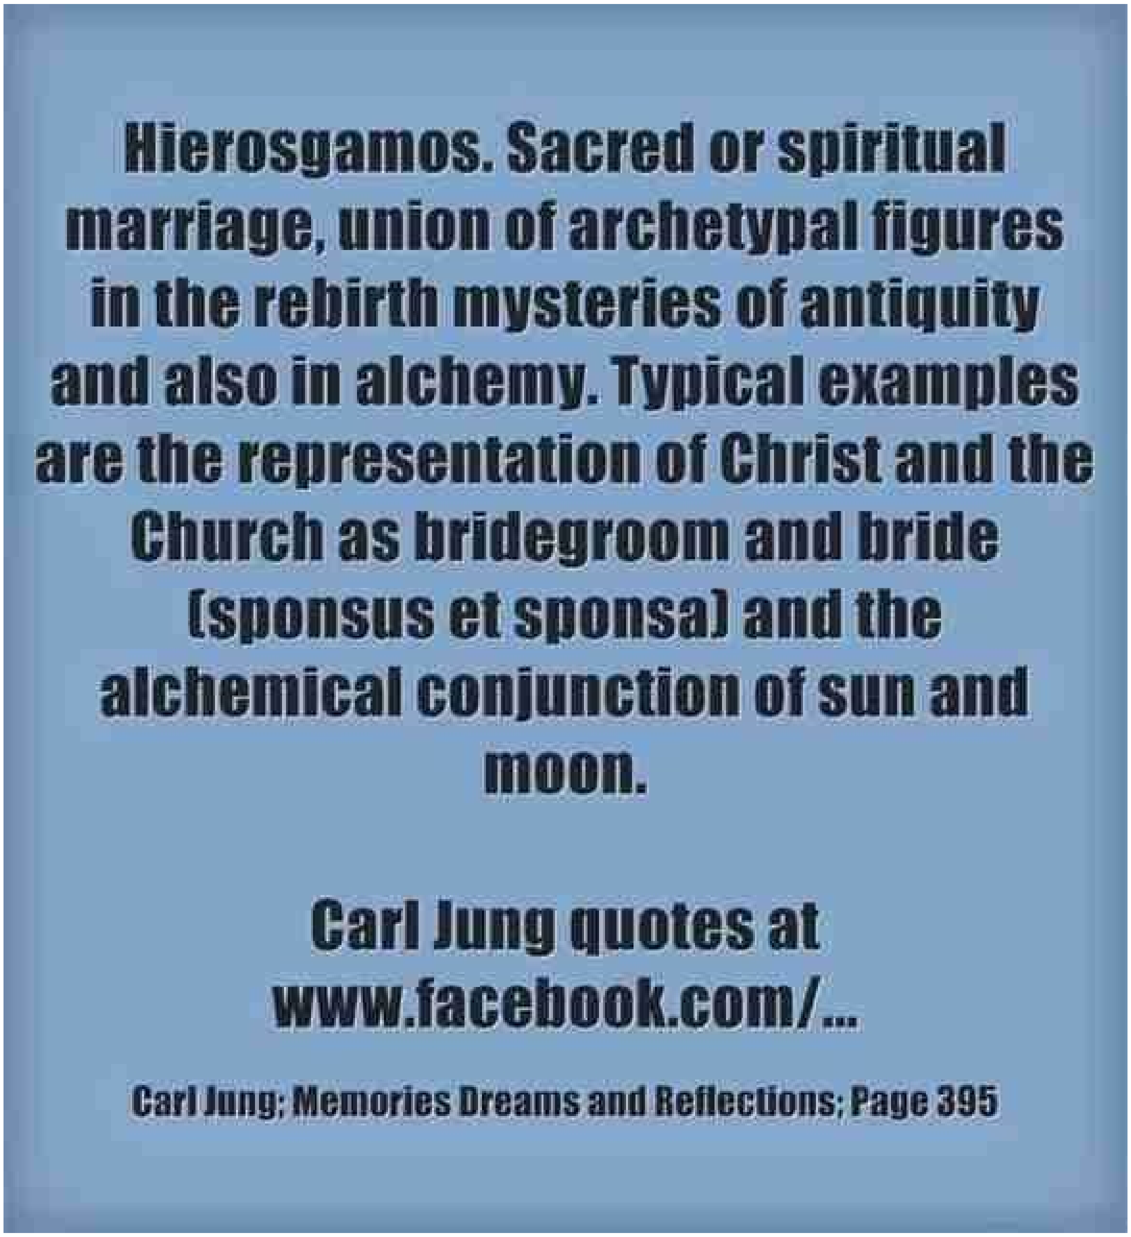
The will is a psychological phenomenon that owes its existence to culture and moral education, but is largely lacking in the primitive mentality. Carl Jung; Definitions; CW 6, par. 844.



You can take away a man's gods, but only to give him others in return.

- Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self Page 63

You can take away a man’s gods, but only to give him others in return. Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self Page 63

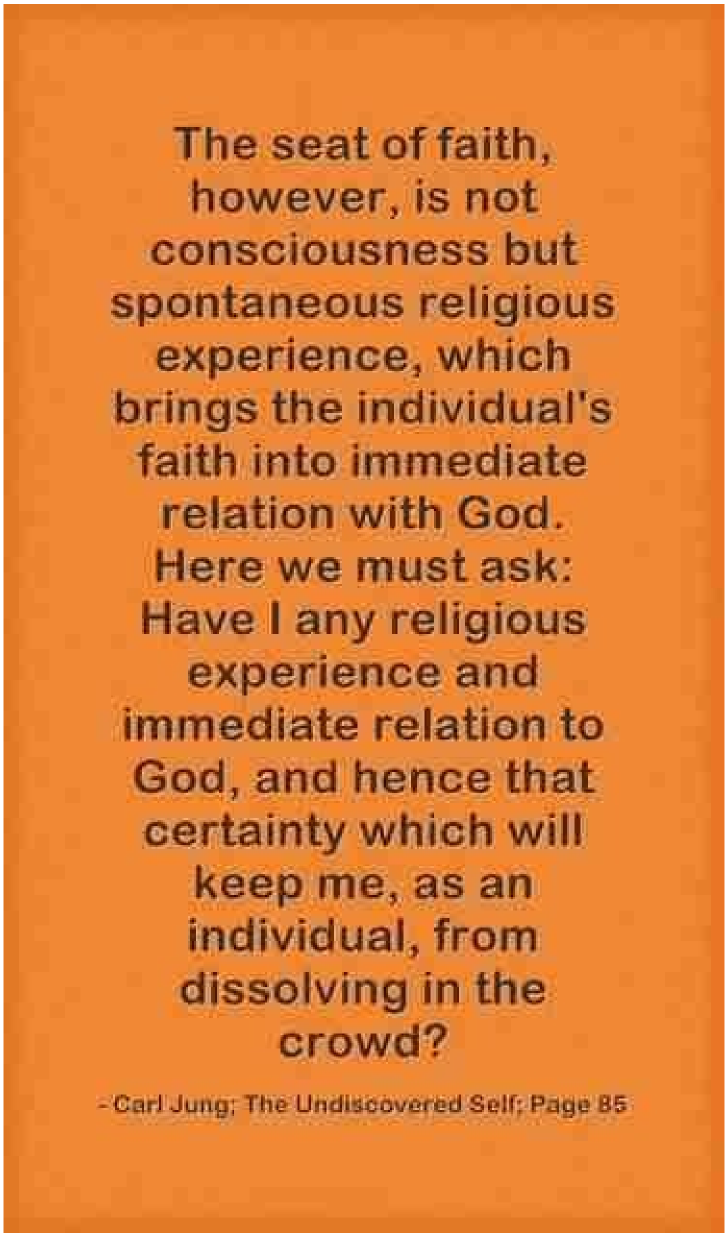


Hierosgamos. Sacred or spiritual marriage, union of archetypal figures in the rebirth mysteries of antiquity and also in alchemy. Typical examples are the representation of Christ and the Church as bridegroom and bride (sponsus et sponsa) and the alchemical conjunction of sun and moon.

Carl Jung quotes at www.facebook.com/...

Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 395

Hierosgamos. Sacred or spiritual marriage, union of archetypal figures in the rebirth mysteries of antiquity and also in alchemy. Typical examples are the representation of Christ and the Church as bridegroom and bride (sponsus et sponsa) and the alchemical conjunction of sun and moon. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 395.



The seat of faith, however, is not consciousness but spontaneous religious experience, which brings the individual's faith into immediate relation with God. Here we must ask: Have I any religious experience and immediate relation to God, and hence that certainty which will keep me, as an individual, from dissolving in the crowd?

- Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 85

The seat of faith, however, is not consciousness but spontaneous religious experience, which brings the individual's faith into immediate relation with God. Here we must ask: Have I any religious experience and immediate relation to God, and hence that certainty which will keep me, as an individual, from dissolving in the crowd? Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 85

[The trickster] is a forerunner of the savior . . . . He is both subhuman and superhuman. a bestial and divine being. whose chief and most alarming characteristic is his unconsciousness.

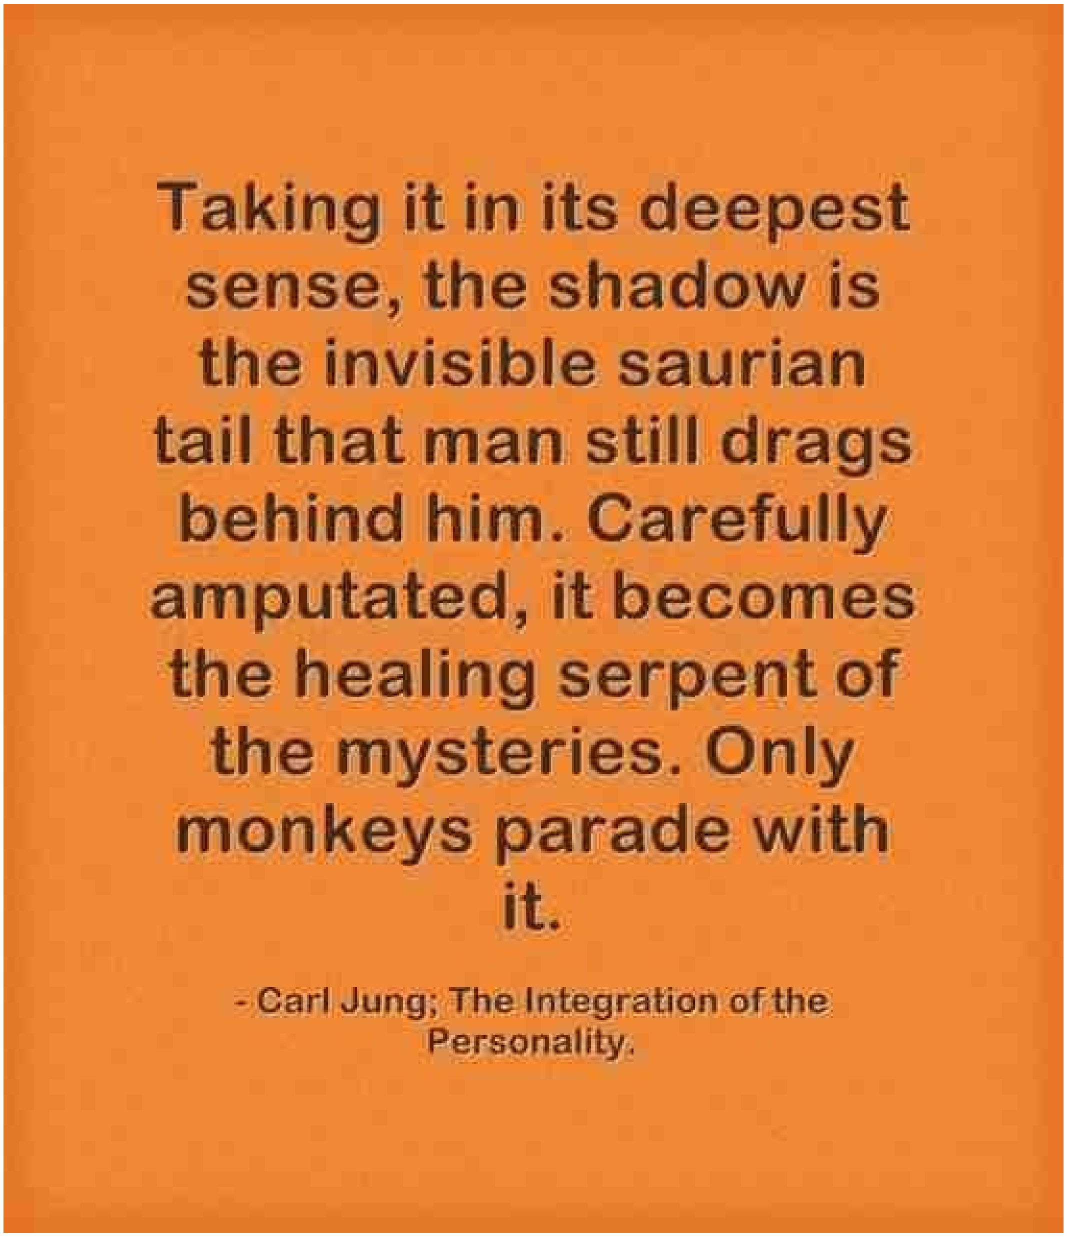
- ¯Carl Jung: CW 9i. par. 472

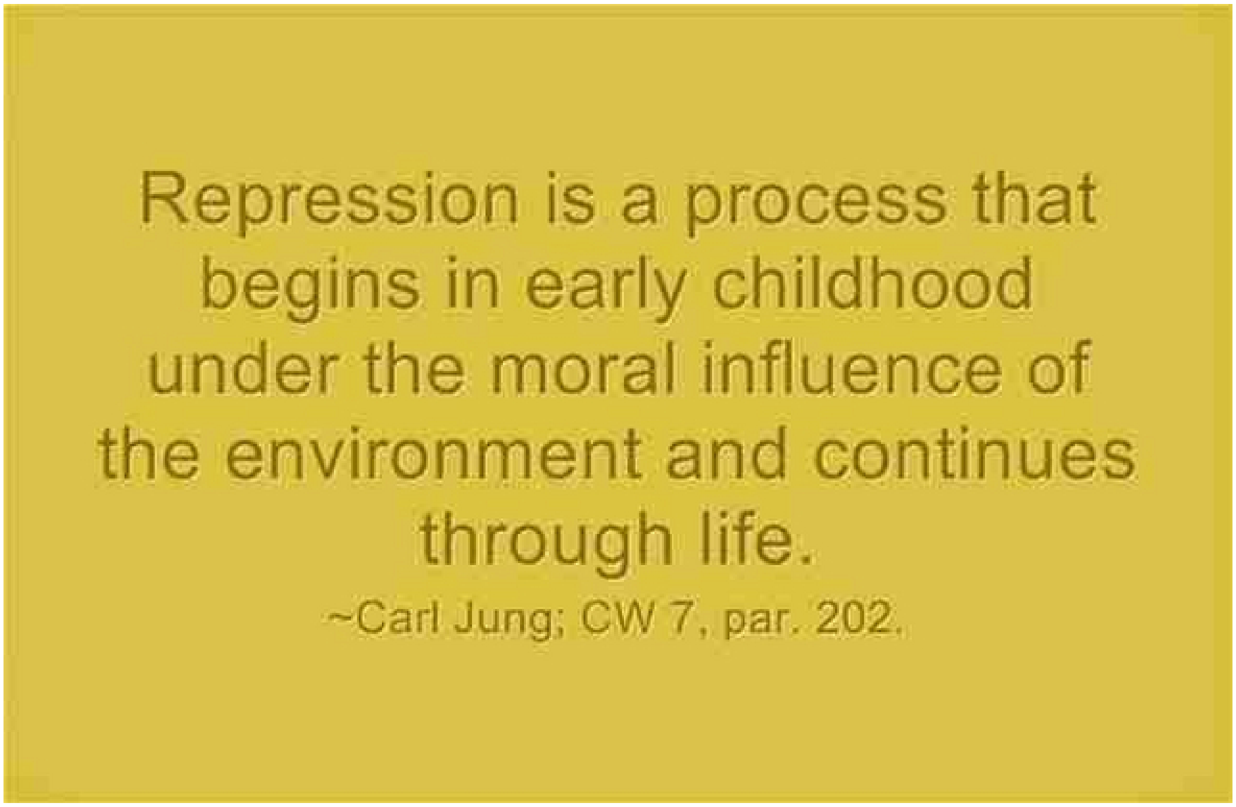
[The trickster] is a forerunner of the savior . . . . He is both subhuman and superhuman, a bestial and divine being, whose chief and most alarming characteristic is his unconsciousness. Carl Jung; On the Psychology of the Trickster-Figure; CW 9i, par. 472.



Taking it in its deepest sense, the shadow is the invisible saurian tail that man still drags behind him. Carefully amputated, it becomes the healing serpent of the mysteries. Only monkeys parade with it.

- Carl Jung; The Integration of the Personality.

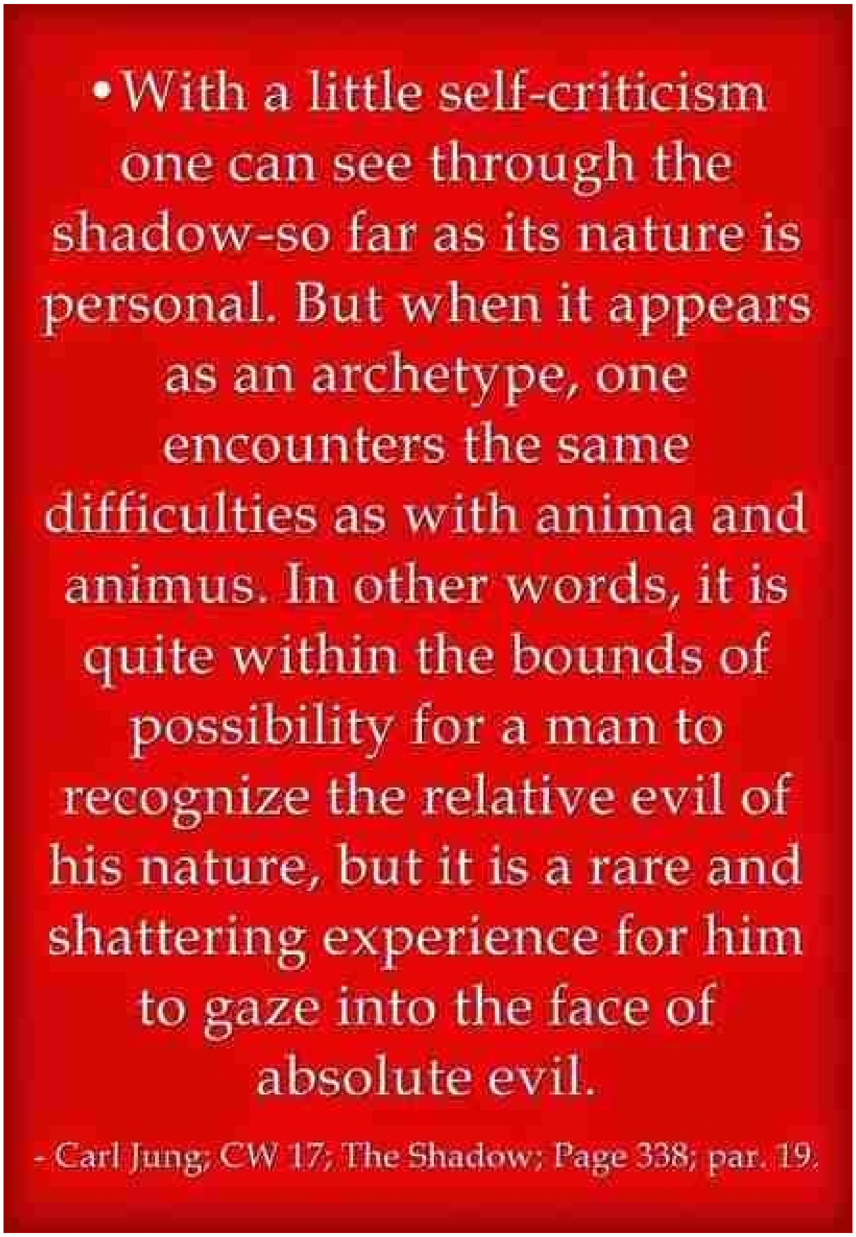
Taking it in its deepest sense, the shadow is the invisible saurian tail that man still drags behind him. Carefully amputated, it becomes the healing serpent of the mysteries. Only monkeys parade with it. Carl Jung; The Integration of the Personality.



Repression is a process that begins in early childhood under the moral influence of the environment and continues through life.

~Carl Jung; CW 7, par. 202.

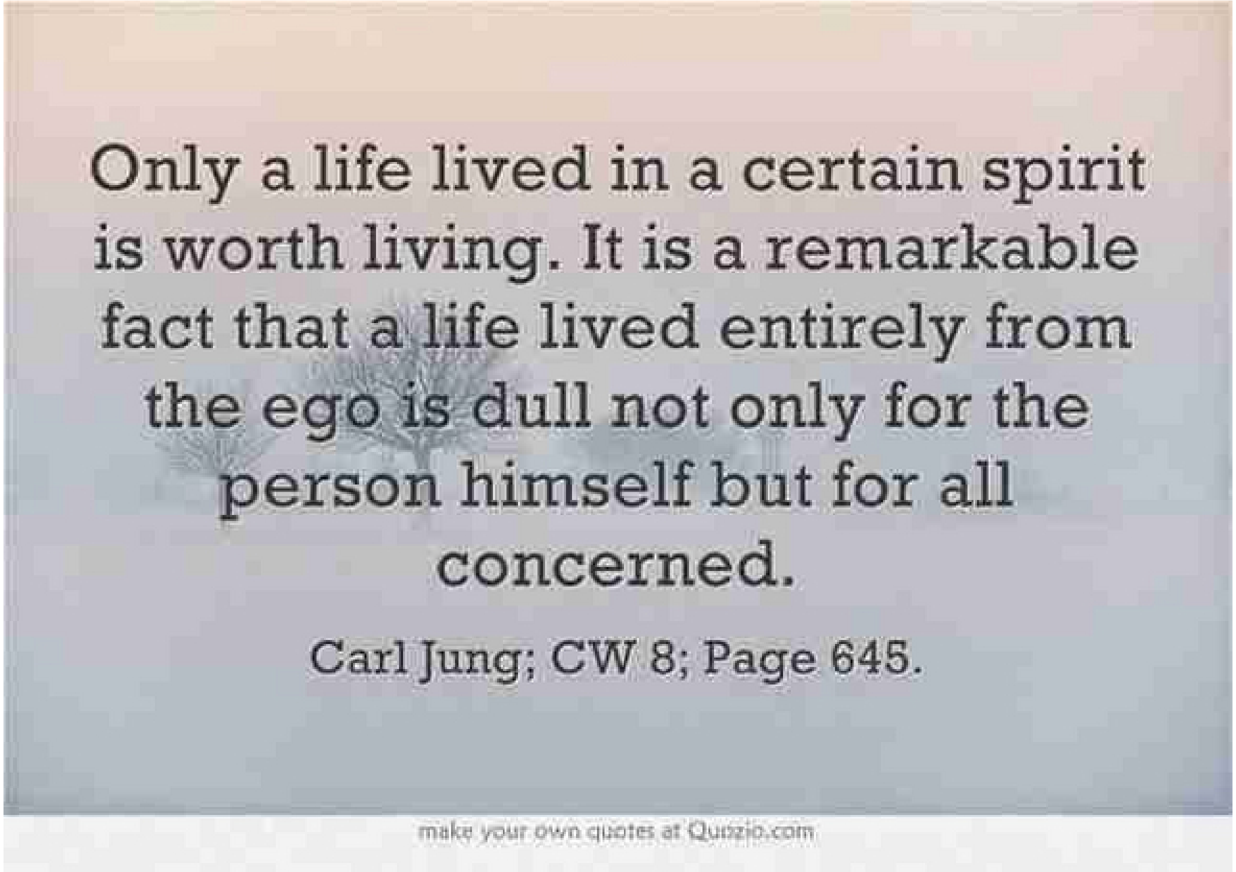
Repression is a process that begins in early childhood under the moral influence of the environment and continues through life. Carl Jung; The Personal and the Collective Unconscious; CW 7, par. 202.



- With a little self-criticism one can see through the shadow-so far as its nature is personal. But when it appears as an archetype, one encounters the same difficulties as with anima and animus. In other words, it is quite within the bounds of possibility for a man to recognize the relative evil of his nature, but it is a rare and shattering experience for him to gaze into the face of absolute evil.

- Carl Jung; CW 17; The Shadow; Page 338; par. 19.

With a little self-criticism one can see through the shadow-so far as its nature is personal. But when it appears as an archetype, one encounters the same difficulties as with anima and animus. In other words, it is quite within the bounds of possibility for a man to recognize the relative evil of his nature, but it is a rare and shattering experience for him to gaze into the face of absolute evil. Carl Jung; CW 17; The Shadow; Page 338; par. 19.

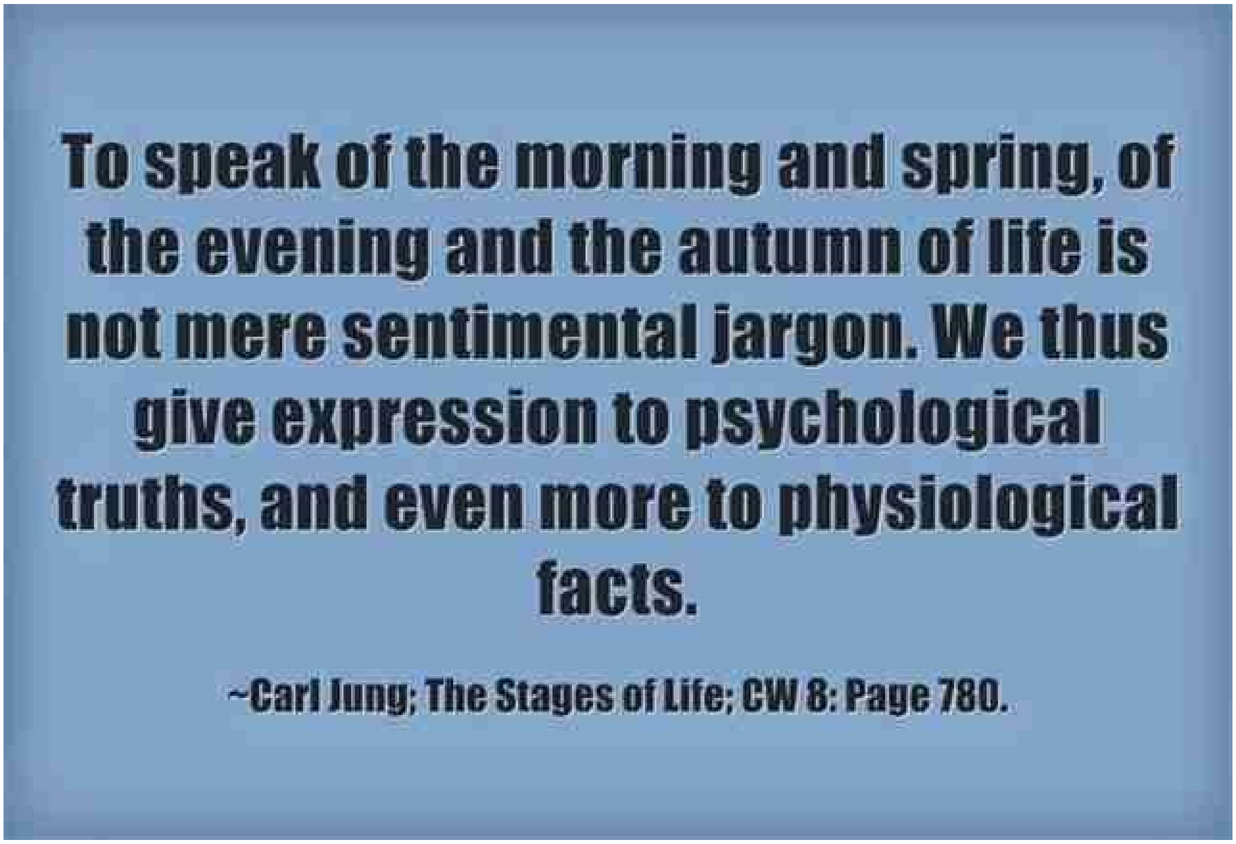


Only a life lived in a certain spirit is worth living. It is a remarkable fact that a life lived entirely from the ego is dull not only for the person himself but for all concerned.

Carl Jung; CW 8; Page 645.

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

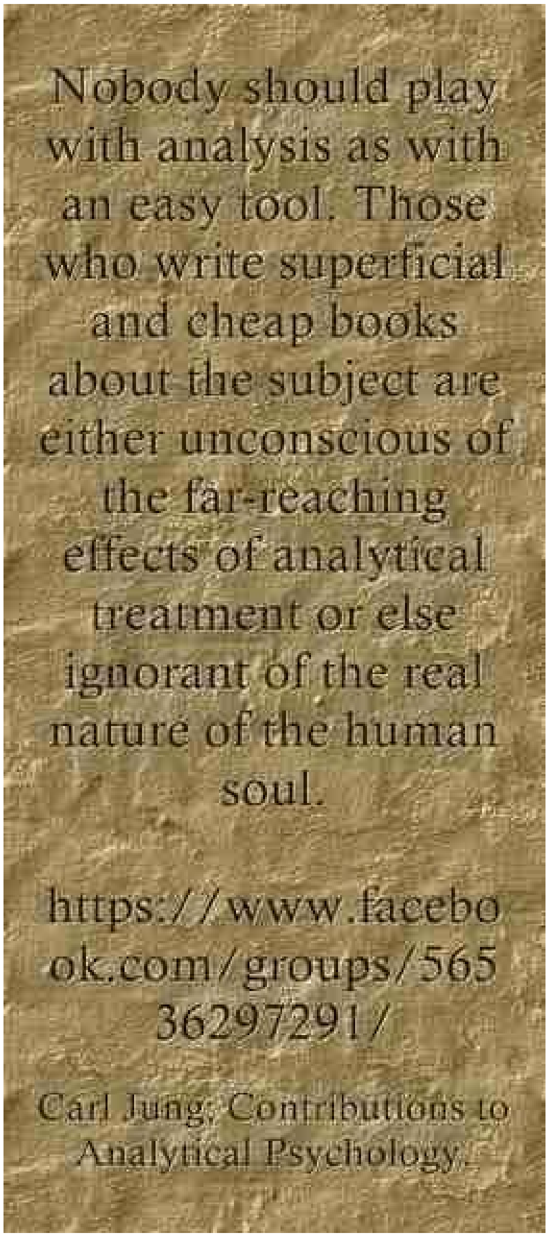
Only a life lived in a certain spirit is worth living. It is a remarkable fact that a life lived entirely from the ego is dull not only for the person himself but for all concerned. Carl Jung; Spirit and Life; CW 8; The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche; Page 645.



To speak of the morning and spring, of the evening and the autumn of life is not mere sentimental jargon. We thus give expression to psychological truths, and even more to physiological facts.

~Carl Jung; The Stages of Life; CW 8: Page 780.

To speak of the morning and spring, of the evening and the autumn of life is not mere sentimental jargon. We thus give expression to psychological truths, and even more to physiological facts. Carl Jung; The Stages of Life; CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche; Page 780.



Nobody should play with analysis as with an easy tool. Those who write superficial and cheap books about the subject are either unconscious of the far-reaching effects of analytical treatment or else ignorant of the real nature of the human soul.

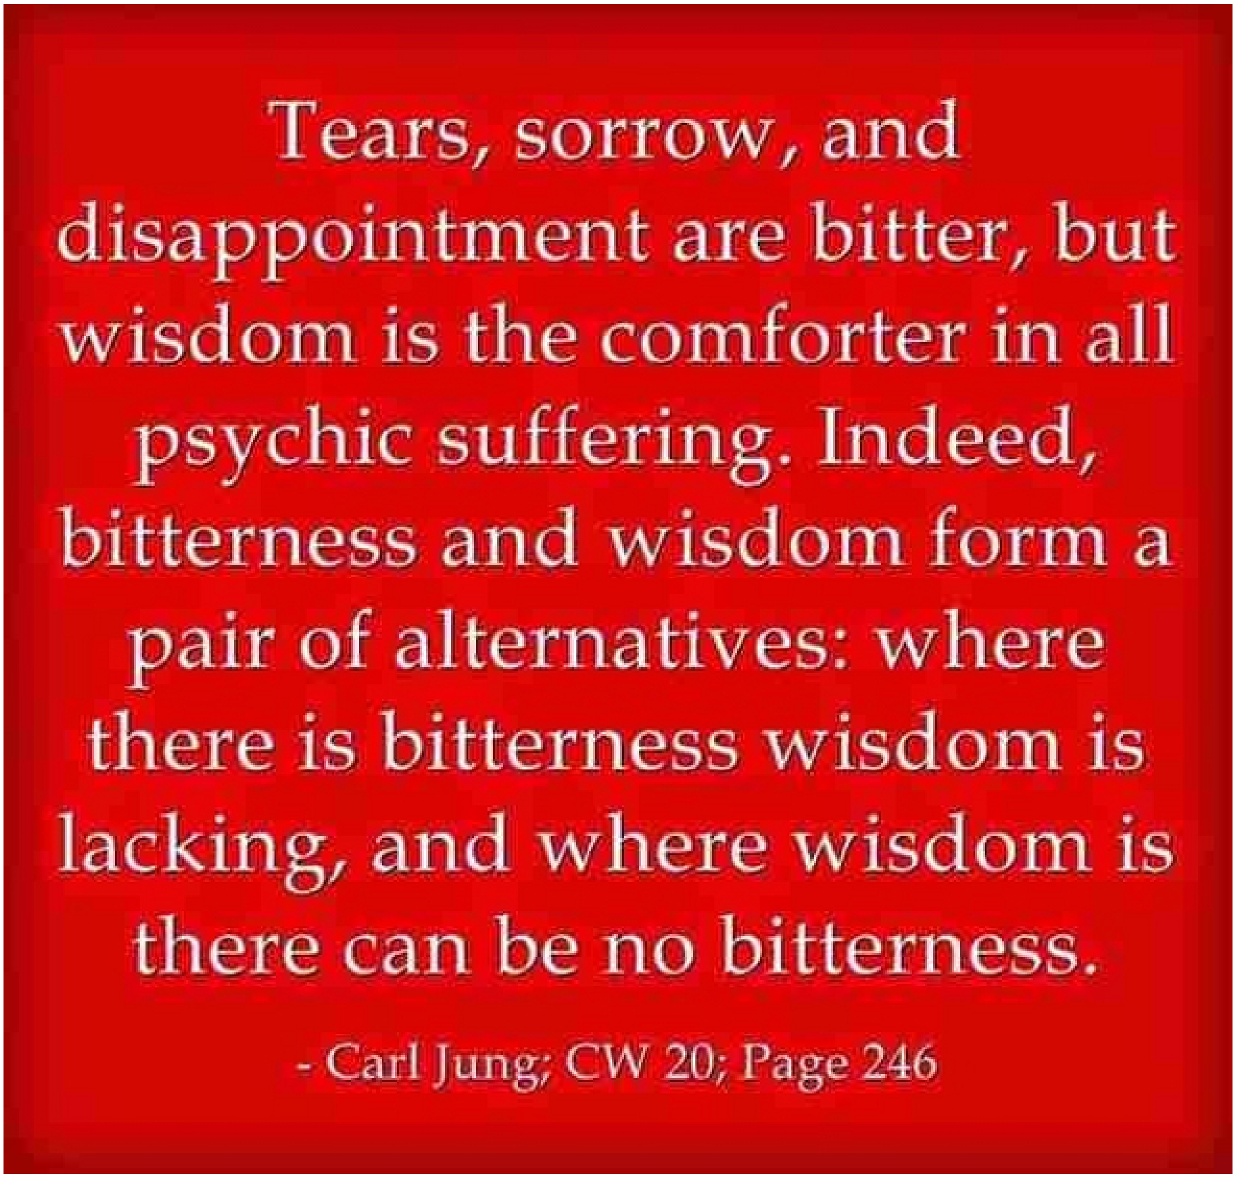
https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

Carl Jung; Contributions to Analytical Psychology.

[57]

Nobody should play with analysis as with an easy tool. Those who write superficial and cheap books about the subject are either unconscious of the far-reaching effects of analytical treatment or else ignorant of the real nature of the human soul. Carl Jung; Contributions to Analytical Psychology.

[58]



Tears, sorrow, and disappointment are bitter, but wisdom is the comforter in all psychic suffering. Indeed, bitterness and wisdom form a pair of alternatives: where there is bitterness wisdom is lacking, and where wisdom is there can be no bitterness.

- Carl Jung; CW 20; Page 246

Tears, sorrow, and disappointment are bitter, but wisdom is the comforter in all psychic suffering. Indeed, bitterness and wisdom form a pair of alternatives: where there is bitterness wisdom is lacking, and where wisdom is there can be no bitterness. Carl Jung; CW 20; Mysterium Coniunctionis; Page 246; Para 330.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fe1d1-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2653.j`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/13b25-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2654.j`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d4362-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2655.j`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cff15-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2656.j`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f1b6b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2657.j`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fa791-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung`

2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2658.j

7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d4d98-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2659.j
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/03202-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2660.j
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/18bb9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2661.j
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/74bb6-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2663.j
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/21921-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2664.j
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3ac54-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2665.j
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8dcd4-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2666.j
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/39c9d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2667.j
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/961e2-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2668.j
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/33b5c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2669.j
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/edf81-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2670.j
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f8ec5-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2671.j
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/65da2-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2672.j
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0ce49-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2673.j
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/294d9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2674.j
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f819b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2675.j
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7c536-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2676.j
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a5c89-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2677.j
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3c405-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2678.j
26. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b49b5-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2679.j
27. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/707b6-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2680.j
28. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f3ff5-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2681.j
29. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cc2eb-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2682.j
30. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/528a7-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2683.j
31. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c400f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bju

ng2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2684.j

32. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/464ad-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2685.j
33. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1c7b9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2686.j
34. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3ec4a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2687.j
35. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f801e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2688.j
36. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5e511-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2689.j
37. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a0682-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2690.j
38. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ac20c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2691.j
39. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aa834-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2692.j
40. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d99f7-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2693.j
41. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2dae5-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2694.j
42. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9089a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2695.j
43. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/388f0-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2696.j
44. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1b9bc-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2697.j
45. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c2666-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2698.j
46. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/29109-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2699.j
47. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d7746-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2700.j
48. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a04db-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2701.j
49. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/28177-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2702.j
50. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4047f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2703.j
51. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f4d14-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2704.j
52. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dde8a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2706.j
53. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b9aec-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2707.j
54. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/669d1-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2708.j
55. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/55e4e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2709.j
56. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b6564-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bju

ng2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2710.j

57. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/47a11-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2711.j

58. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f7cca-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2712.j

---

Carl Jung: Speaking of the foolishness of the wise... (2019-03-06 13:30)

[1]

Speaking of the foolishness of the wise, he said one must always recognize it but one does not know what a dream means, especially one's own dream.

For the unconscious always finds the chink in the wall of one's own theory or built-up system.

The unconscious wants to come through into consciousness, and when we build up a systematic body of knowledge we necessarily keep the unconscious out.

Nature is just what we do not know.

So, he said, in speaking of such things it is much better to use a symbolic way of speech, for that says much more-even what you do not know yourself.

If you limit yourself to known facts, what you say may be true of the thousand other cases, but just not of this one.

The truth escapes [people who] are always trying to systematize, and they have to use power to try to convince.

One must allow one’s own foolishness, for Nature is naive; there is always the joke, the just-so.

[The user of] fat words cannot put it into simple language.

He is impressed with the powerful idea and tries to impress others with it.

If he were really impressed with its reality, he would stammer and get great feelings of inferiority before it.

Every true experience of the numinosum has this effect.

But such a man is afraid to show his littleness in face of the great idea.

He gets inflated and struts.

He would be shown to be really wise if he could admit that he could say nothing in the face of the great experience. (A man who is truly in love can only stammer, "I love you.")

And yet, he said one must make a theory or system, especially for teaching purposes, only one must not take it as representing the facts.

As an illustration of the use and limitations of a formulated system, he said, it is as though you find an uninhabited island.

You must begin at once to orient yourself.

There is a mountain over there, a group of trees here, and the coastline along there.

The mountain is perhaps ten miles away, but it may be fifteen, then your calculations will be put out.

Also you do not know how high it is, so you cannot triangulate from it.

Or there may be a river between you and it that you cannot cross.

Yet you must say, "Here is a map of the island I discovered, but, for goodness sake, don’t believe it!"

And you must say the same to students when you teach them the theory of analysis. E. Harding, Conversations with Jung, Page 15.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/328f7-12bfoolsishness.jpg`

Answer to Job Part 1 ~Carl Jung (2019-03-06 15:42)

[1]

King David in Prayer, by Pieter de Grebber (c. 1640)

564 Job answers Yahweh thus:

Behold, I am of small account; what shall I answer thee?
I lay my hand on my mouth.
I have spoken once, and I will not answer;
twice, but I will proceed no further.

565 And indeed, in the immediate presence of the infinite power of creation, this is the only possible answer for a witness who is still trembling in every limb with the terror of almost total annihilation. What else could a half-crushed human worm, grovelling in the dust, reasonably answer in the circumstances? In spite of his pitiable littleness and feebleness, this man knows that he is confronted with a superhuman being who is personally most easily provoked. He also knows that it is far better to withhold all moral reflections, to say nothing of certain moral requirements which might be expected to apply to a god.

566 Yahweh's "justice" is praised, so presumably Job could bring his complaint and the protestation of his innocence before him as ijob 40:4-5. the just judge. But he doubts this possibility. "How can a man be just before God?" "If I summoned him and he answered me, I would not believe that he was listening to my voice/' "If it is a matter of justice, who can summon him?" He "multiplies my wounds without cause." "He destroys both the blameless and the wicked." "If the scourge slay suddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent." "I know," Job says to Yahweh, "thou wilt not hold me innocent. I shall be condemned." "If I wash myself . . . never so clean, yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch." "For he is not a man, as I am, that I should answer him, and we should come together in judgment." Job wants to explain his point of view to Yahweh, to state his complaint, and tells him: "Thou knowest that I am not guilty, and there is none to deliver out of thy hand." "I desire to argue my case with God." "I will defend my ways to his face," "I know that I shall be vindicated." Yahweh should summon him and render him an account or at least allow him to plead his cause. Properly estimating the disproportion between man and God, he asks: "Wilt thou break a leaf driven to and fro? and wilt thou pursue the dry stubble?" God has put him in the wrong, but there is no justice. He has "taken away my right." "Till I die I will not put away my integrity from me. I hold fast to my righteousness, and will not let it go." His friend Elihu the Buzite does not believe the injusticeof Yahweh: "Of a truth, God will not do wickedly, and the Almighty will not pervert justice." Illogically enough, he bases his opinion on God's power: "Is it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? and to princes, Ye are ungodly?" One must "respect the persons of princes and esteem the high more than the low." But Job is not shaken in his faith, and had already uttered an important truth when he said: "Behold, my witness is in heaven, and he that vouches for me is on high ... my eye pours out tears to God, that he would maintain the right of a man with God, like that of a man with his neighbour." And later: "For I know that my Vindicator lives, and at last he will stand upon the earth."

567 These words clearly show that Job, in spite of his doubt as to whether man can be just before God, still finds it difficult to relinquish the idea of meeting God on the basis of justice and therefore of morality. Because, in spite of everything, he cannot give up his faith in divine justice, it is not easy for him to accept the knowledge that divine arbitrariness breaks the law. On the other hand, he has to admit that no one except Yahweh himself is doing him injustice and violence. He cannot deny that he is up against a God who does not care a rap for any moral opinion and does not recognize any form of ethics as binding. This is perhaps the greatest thing about Job, that, faced with this difficulty, he does not doubt the unity of God. He clearly sees thatGod is at odds with himself so totally at odds that he, Job, is quite certain of finding in God a helper and an "advocate" against God. As certain as he is of the evil in Yahweh, he is equally certain of the good. In a human being who renders us evil we cannot expect at the same time to find a helper. But Yahweh is not a human being: he is both a persecutor and a helper in one, and the one aspect is as real as the other. Yahweh is not split but is an antinomy a. totality of inner opposites and this is the indispensable condition for his tremendous dynamism, his omniscience and omnipotence. Because of this knowledge Job holds on to his intention of "defending his ways to his face," i.e., of making his point of view clear to him, since notwithstanding his wrath, Yahweh is also man's advocate against himself when man puts forth his complaint.

568 One would be even more astonished at Job's knowledge of God if this were the first time one were hearing of Yahweh's amorality. His incalculable moods and devastating attacks of wrath had, however, been known from time immemorial. He had proved himself to be a jealous defender of morality and was esspecially sensitive in regard to justice. Hence he had always to be praised as "just/* which, it seemed, was very important to him. Thanks to this circumstance or peculiarity of his, he had a distinct personality, which differed from that of a more or less archaic king only in scope. His jealous and irritable nature, prying their secret thoughts, compelled a personal relationship between himself and man, who could not help but feel personally called by him. That was the essential difference between Yahweh and the all-ruling Father Zeus, who in a benevolent and somewhatdetached manner allowed the economy of the universe to roll along on its accustomed courses and punished only those who were disorderly. He did not moralize but ruled purely instinctively. He did not demand anything more from human beings than the sacrifices due to him; he did not want to do anything with human beings because he had no plans for them.Father Zeus is certainly a figure but not a personality. Yahweh, on the other hand, was interested in man. Human beings were a matter of first-rate importance to him. He needed them as they needed him, urgently and personally. Zeus too could throw thunderbolts about, but only at hopelessly disorderly individuals. Against mankind as a whole he had no objections but then they did not interest him all that much. Yahweh, however, could get inordinately excited about man as a species and men as individuals if they did not behave as he desired or expected, without ever considering that in his omnipotence he could easily have created something better than these "bad earthenware pots."

569 In view of this intense personal relatedness to his chosen people, it was only to be expected that a regular covenant would develop which also extended to certain individuals, for instance to David. As we learn from the Eighty-ninth Psalm, Yahweh told him:

My steadfast love I will keep for him for ever, and my covenant will stand firm for him.
I will not violate my covenant, or alter the word that went forth from my lips.
Once for all I have sworn by my holiness;
I will not lie to David

And yet it happened that he, who watched so jealously over the fulfilment of laws and contracts, broke his own oath. Modernman, with his sensitive conscience, would have felt the black abyss opening and the ground giving way under his feet, for the least he expects of his God is that he should be superior to mortal man in the sense of being better, higher, nobler but not his superior in the kind of moral flexibility and unreliability that do not jib even at perjury.

571 Of course one must not tax an archaic god with the requirements of modern ethics. For the people of early antiquity things were rather different. In their gods there was absolutely everything: they teemed with virtues and vices. Hence they could be punished, put in chains, deceived, stirred up against one another with ut losing face, or at least not for long. The man of that epoch was so inured to divine inconsistencies that he was not unduly perturbed when they happened. With Yahweh the case was different because, from quite early on, the personal and moral tie began to play an important part in the religious relationship. In these circumstances a breach of contract was bound to have the effect not only of a personal but of a moral injury. One can see this from the way David answers Yahweh:

How long, Lord? wilt thou hide thyself forever?
shall thy wrath burn like fire?
Remember how short my time is:
wherefore hast thou made all men in vain?
Lord, where are thy former loving kindnesses, which by thy faithfulness thou didst swear to David?

572 Had this been addressed to a human being it would have run something like this:

"For heaven’s sake, man, pull yourself together and stop being such a senseless savage! It is really too grotesque to get into such a rage when it’s partly your own fault that the plants won’t flourish. You used to be quite reasonable and took good care of the garden you planted, instead of trampling it to pieces."

573 Certainly our interlocutor would never dare to remonstrate with his almighty partner about this breach of contract. He knows only too well what a row he would get into if he were the wretched breaker of the law. Because anything else would put him in peril of his life, he must retire to the more exalted plane of reason. In this way, without knowing it or wanting it, he shows himself superior to his divine partner both intellectually and morally. Yahweh fails to notice that he is being humoured, just as little as he understands why he has continually to be praised as just. He makes pressing demands on his people to be praised and propitiated in every possible way, for the obvious purpose of keeping him in a good temper at any price.

574 The character thus revealed fits a personality who can only convince himself that he exists through his relation to an object. Such dependence on the object is absolute when the subject is totally lacking in self-reflection and therefore has no insight into himself. It is as if he existed only by reason of the fact that he has an object which assures him that he is really there. If Yahweh, as we would expect of a sensible human being, were really conscious of himself, he would, in view of the true facts of the case, at least have put an end to the panegyrics on his justice. But he is too unconscious to be moral. Morality presupposes consciousness. By this I do not mean to say that Yahweh is imperfect or evil, like a gnostic demiurge. He is everything in its totality; therefore, among other things, he is total justice, and also its total opposite. At least this is the way he must be conceived if one is to form a unified picture of his character. We must only remember that what we have sketched is no more than an anthropomorphic picture which is not even particularly easy to visualize. From the way the divine nature expresses itself we can see that the individual qualities are not adequately related to one another, with the result that they fall apart into mutually contradictory acts. For instance, Yahweh regrets having created human beings, although in his omniscience he must have known all along what would happen to them. Carl Jung, Answer to Job, Section 1, Psychology and Religion.

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/3/37/5201-king-david-in-prayer-pieter-de-grebber.jpg/250px-5201-king-david-in-prayer-pieter-de-grebber.jpg`

Synchronous & Numinous Event Is Integrated with Meaning [You Tube Video] (2019-03-07 03:24)

synchronicity · noun

1. the experience of two or more events that are apparently causally unrelated or unlikely to occur together by chance, yet are experienced as occurring together in a meaningful manner.

[1]Synchronous & Numinous Event Is Integrated with Meaning

1. `https://youtu.be/VvG2S9wk8PQ`

Carl Jung: If we are conscious, morality no longer exists. (2019-03-07 03:30)

[1]

[Carl Jung on the “Single Animus Figure.]

I began the hour by telling Jung how something wonderful had happened to me yesterday, that his talk on the animus relationship had cleared things up, so that much had clicked into place, and that now I felt quite different.

I said that yesterday we were dealing with the negative relationship to the animus, but there must also be a positive relationship.

He replied that there certainly must-but that the important part of analysis was to get that negative point cleared, for that is the growing point of differentiation from the unconscious.

Until that is clear, the voice of the animus is as the voice of God within us; in any case, we respond to it as if it were.

When we are not aware of the negative aspect of the animus, we are still animal, still connected to nature, thereforeunconscious and less than human.

We need to reach a higher degree of consciousness, which must be sought at that point.

Then we discover a new country.

And it is our responsibility to cultivate it. ("To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin.")

Also the legend of Christ and the man working on the Sabbath, to whom he said, "If thou knowest what thou doest, blessed art thou! But if thou knowest not what thou doest, cursed art thou!"

If we are conscious, morality no longer exists.

If we are not conscious, we are still slaves and are accursed if we obey not the law.

He said that if we belong to the secret church, then we belong, and we need not worry about it, but can go our own way.

If we do not belong, no amount of teaching or organization can bring us there.

Then I asked him about a single animus figure, and he said, "Many souls are young; they are promiscuous; they are prostitutes in the unconscious and sell themselves cheaply.

They are like flowers that bloom and die and come again.

Other souls are older, like trees or palms.

They find, or must seek, one complete animus, who shall perhaps be many in one.

And when they find him, it is like the closing of an electric circuit.

Then they know the meaning of life."

"But to have an animus like an archimandrite (M.E.H. had dreamt of an abbot, an archimandrite] , is as if to say,

You are a priest of the Mysteries.

And this needs a great humility to counterbalance it.

You need to go down to the level of the mice.

And as a tree, so great as the height of its branches, so deep must be the depths of its roots.

And the meaning of the tree is neither in the roots, nor in the uplifted crown, but in the life in between them."

Then I asked him how to get the mean between the two worlds, between the world of the unconscious and that of reality.

He replied, "You are the mediator.

It is in your immediate life that they meet.

In the pleroma they are merged -in nature they are one-and the primitive is always striving up against its oneness.

The glacier is always there.

Our civilization finds an adaptation that will satisfy these things for a while, and they are quiet.

Then they begin to come up again, and again we find a new adaptation, and they are quiet once more.

Today we are in a period of great transition, and they come up again.

Eventually they will swallow man, but it will not be the same again, for he has attained the union of the opposites through their separation.

Possibly, after man will come a period of the animal and then again the plant-who knows?-and who or what will carry on the lamp of consciousness?

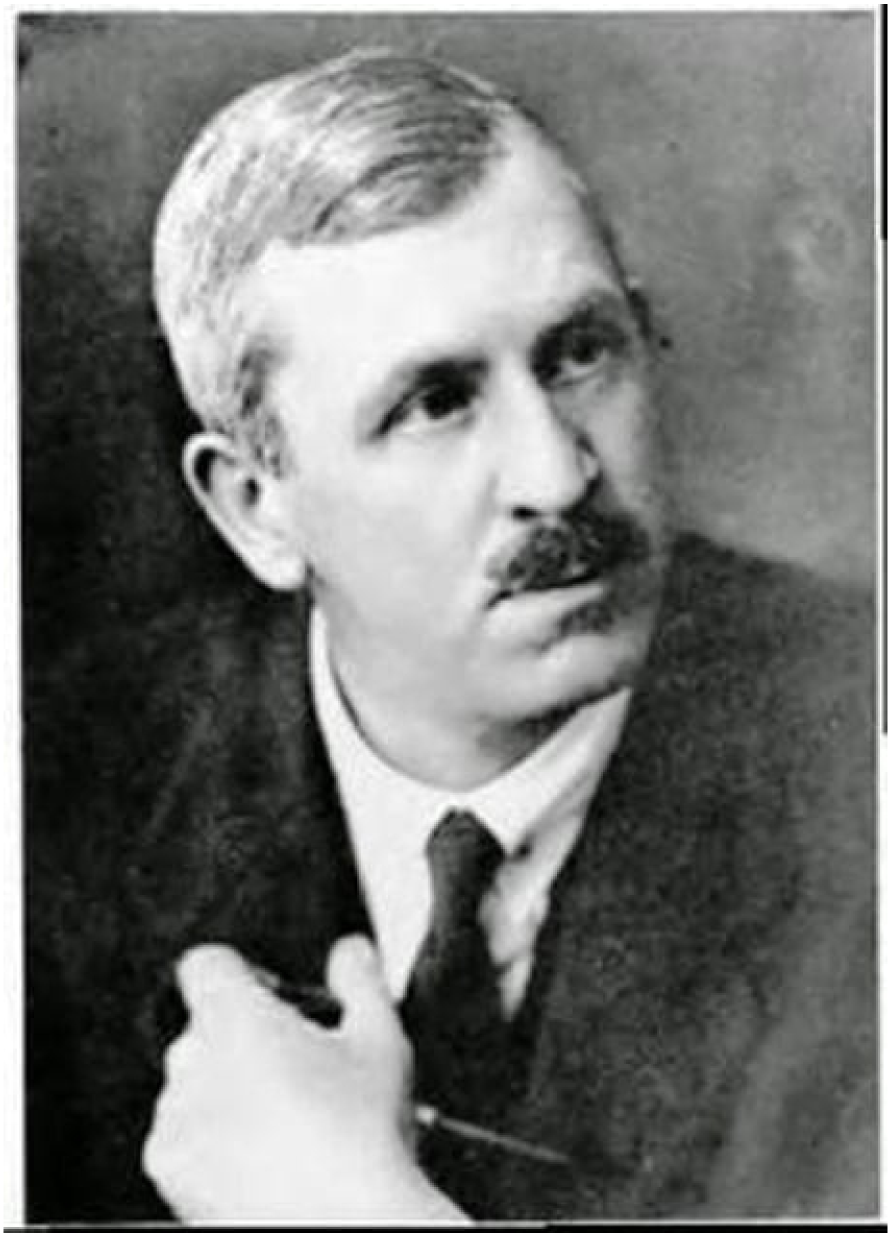
Who knows? Esther Harding, Conversations with Jung, Pages 9-10

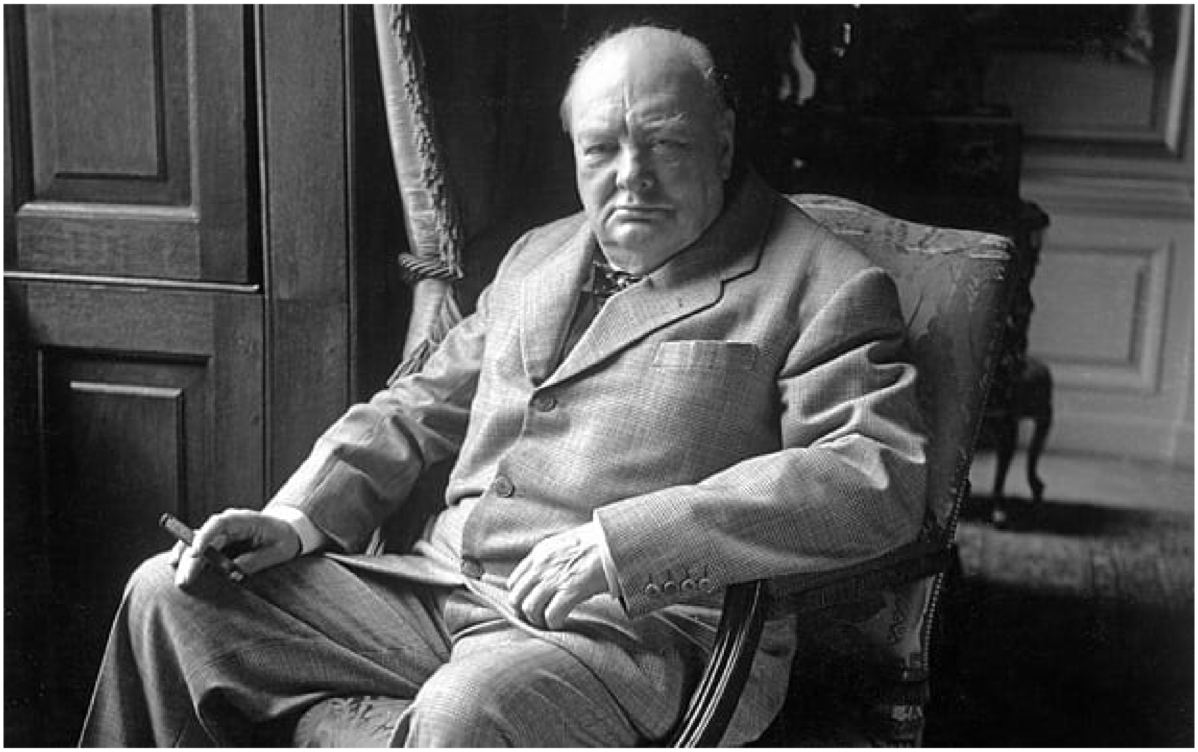
---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d6207-12banimus.jpg`

Dr. Jung Dreams of H.G. Baynes and Winston Churchill (2019-03-07 03:30)

[1]





He twice dreamed of Baynes after his death, each time in connection with Churchill, and each time when Churchill was actually in Switzerland, though C. G. did not know this at the time.

For instance, he dreamed that he was sitting at a dinner table with Churchill or Roosevelt when a group of English officers, among whom was Baynes, in civilian clothes, came in.

At this time Churchill had landed near Zurich for his plane to refuel on his way to Africa.

A second dream was similar to the first, except that Roosevelt was not there.

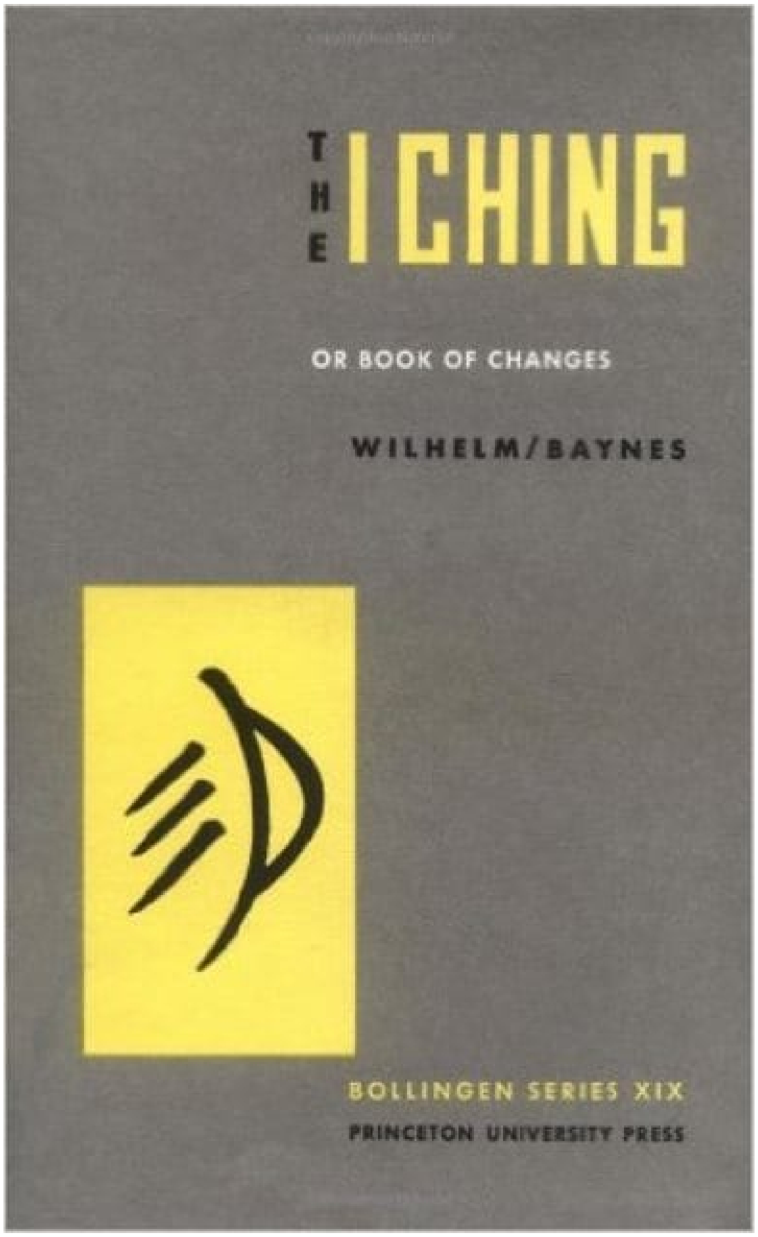
This time, Churchill was spending one night in Geneva on his way to Yalta.

He told us a lot about this visit and his contact with Churchill. Esther Harding, Conversations with Jung, Page 13

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/735e8-12bbaynes.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ea82c-12bchurchill.jpg`

Carl Jung on “I Ching” – Anthology (2019-03-07 03:30)

[1]



I do not use the I Ching very often myself but it has always given me something. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 56.

The I Ching can change me, if I have the patience to meditate. It is like a wine of noble vintage. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 56.

This book [I Ching] lies just under the threshold of Chinese consciousness, it is rationally despised under European influence, but every Chinese believes in it at bottom and is perfectly right to do so, for it is an extraordinarily intelligent book. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIII, Page 109.

I forgot to tell you that I Ching 16 place 1 refers to "putting in music" the problem of priv. boni, i.e., understanding it as a feeling problem. You would get a more complete picture if you contemplate such ideas not only from an intellectual but also from a feeling standpoint. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 79.

But as you can see from the I Ching, heaven sometimes separates from the earth, thus producing a disorderly and unfavourable state of affairs. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 259-261

In China, for instance, a philosopher like Hu Shih is ashamed to know anything of the I Ching, the profound significance of Tao has got lost, and instead people worship locomotives and aeroplanes. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 322.

The experience you had with the I Ching, calling you to order when trying to tempt it a second time also happened to me in 1920 when I first experimented with it. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 343-344

The idea of the pairs of opposites is as old as the world, and if we treated it properly, we should have to go back to the earliest sources of Chinese philosophy, that is to the I Ching oracle. Curiously enough, the pairs of opposites do not appear as such in Egyptian thought, but they are a basic part of both Chinese and Indian philosophy. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 80

The legend says of the I Ching that a horse came up out of the Yellow River bearing on his back the trigrams out of which the symbols are built up. The sages copied it and it was known as the River Map. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83

Obviously there is no law to prove that this is so, but we cannot assume that the products of our brains do not derive from nature; therefore I see no reason why we would not find astonishingly true things in the thought of the ancient sages, such as the I Ching represents. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 84

As you have found out for yourself, the I Ching consists of readable archetypes, and it very often presents not only a picture of the actual situation but also of the future, exactly like dreams. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 584-585

One could even define the I Ching oracle as an experimental dream, just as one can define a dream as an experiment of a four-dimensional nature. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 584-585

If I understand anything of the I Ching, then I should say it is the book that teaches you your own way and the all-importance of it. Not in vain has the book been the secret treasure of the sages. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 201

But as you can see from the I Ching, heaven sometimes separates from the earth, thus producing a disorderly and unfavourable state of affairs. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 259-261

The "Processing" is the alchemistic procedure; this, Taoism and the Book of Changes are all the same thing, according to Wei Po-Yang. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIII, Page 109.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4d6dc-12bching.jpg`

A seventeen year old girl dreams of a Horse (2019-03-07 05:18)

[1]

A seventeen year old girl dreams:

I was coming home at night. Everything is as quiet as death.

The door into the living room is half open, and I see my mother hanging from the chandelier, swinging to and fro in the cold wind that blows in through the at night.

I get up and discover that a frightened horse is tearing through the rooms.

At last it finds the door into the hall, and jumps through the hall window from the fourth floor into the street below.

I was terrified when I saw it lying there, all mangled.

Jung's comments:

The gruesome character of the dreams is alone sufficient to make one pause.

All the same other people have anxiety dreams now and then.

We most therefore look more closely into the meaning of the two main symbols, "mother" and "horse".

They must be equivalents, for they both do the same thing, they commit suicide.

"Mother" is an archetype and refers to the place of origin, to nature, to that which passively creates…. It also means the unconscious, our natural and instinctive life… The word "mother" which sounds so familiar, apparently points to the best-known, the individual mother, to "my mother."

But the mother-symbol points to a darker background which eludes conceptual form…

If we apply our findings to the dream, its interpretation will be, "The unconscious life is destroying itself."

It is evident that "horse" is an equivalent of "mother," with a slight shift of meaning. The mother stands for life at its origin, the horse for the merely animal life of the body.

If we apply this meaning to the text of our dream, its interpretation will be, "The animal life is destroying itself."

Both dreams point to a grave organic disease with a fatal outcome.

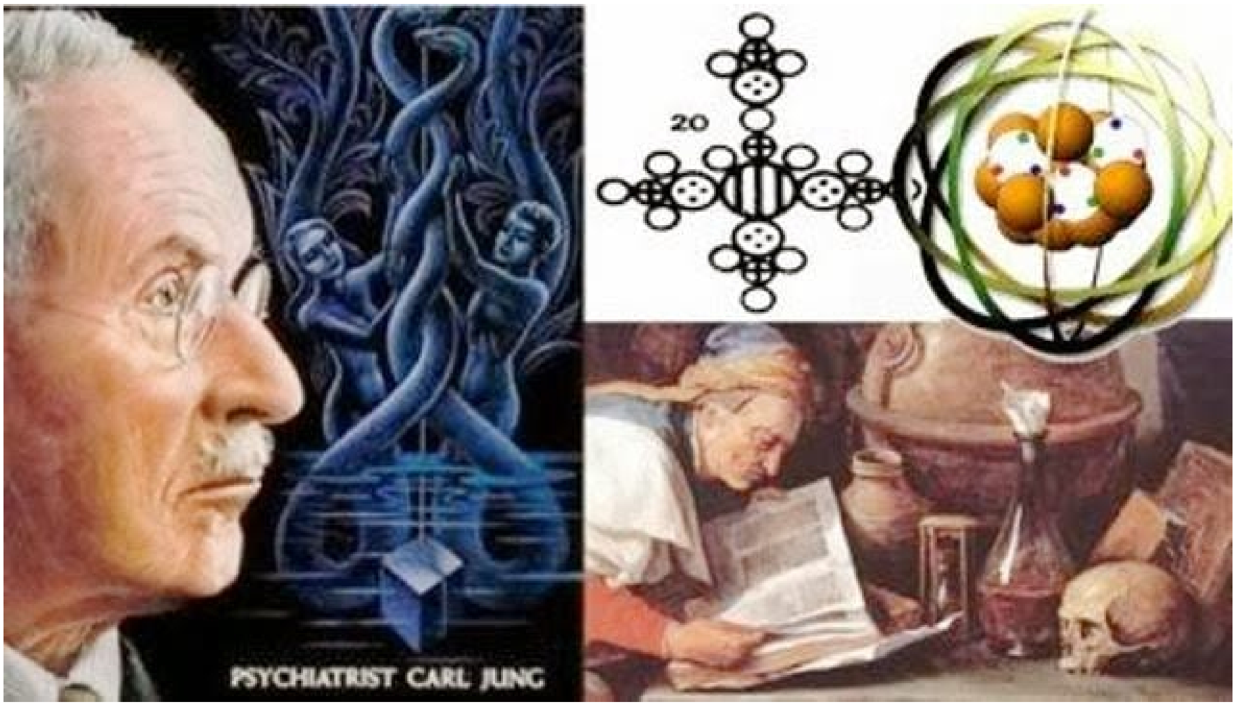
This prognosis was soon confirmed. C.G. Jung; Dreams; Dreams, C.G. Jung, pages 106 – 109.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/ec7bf-horse.jpg`

The "newness" in the individual psyche is an endlessly varied recombination of age-old components.

(2019-03-07 05:25)

[1]



Our souls as well as our bodies are composed of individual elements which were all already present in the ranks of our ancestors.

The "newness" in the individual psyche is an endlessly varied recombination of age-old components.

Body and soul therefore have an intensely historical character and find no proper place in what is new, in things that have just come into being.

That is to say, our ancestral components are only partly at home in such things.

We are very far from having finished completely with the Middle Ages, classical antiquity, and primitivity, as our modern psyches pretend.

Nevertheless, we have plunged down a cataract of progress which sweeps us on into the future with ever wilder violence the farther it takes us from our roots.

Once the past has been breached, it is usually annihilated, and there is no stopping the forward motion.

But it is precisely the loss of connection with the past, our up-rootedness, which has given rise to the "discontents" of civilization and to such a flurry and haste that we live more in the future and its chimerical promises of a golden age than in the present, with which our whole evolutionary background has not yet caught up.

We rush impetuously into novelty, driven by a mounting sense of insufficiency, dissatisfaction, and restlessness.

We no longer live on what we have, but on promises, no longer in the light of the present day, but in the darkness of the future, which, we expect, will at last bring the proper sunrise.

We refuse to recognize that everything better is purchased at the price of something worse; that, for example, the hope of greater freedom is canceled out by increased enslavement to the state, not to speak of the terrible perils to which the most brilliant discoveries of science expose us.

The less we understand of what our fathers and forefathers sought, the less we understand ourselves, and thus we help with all our might to rob the individual of his roots and his guiding instincts, so that he becomes a particle in the mass, ruled only by what Nietzsche called the spirit of gravity. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/85f99-ancestors.jpg`

Spirituality and Personality by Graeme Chapman (2019-03-07 05:26)

[1]

Soul in Bondage

SPIRITUALITY AND PERSONALITY by Graeme Chapman
Spirituality for Ministry (1998)

The way we express who we are, the way we live out our spirituality, will depend, to a considerable extent, on personality structure.

No two individuals are identical. We are each unique. However, this uniqueness is not so extreme as to rule out similarities, or clusters of similarities.

To illustrate the way in which personality influences the way our spirituality is expressed I have chosen to focus on Jung’s understanding of personality structure and on the nine types posited by the Enneagram. While it is recognized that there are those who are dismissive of Jung and others who are critical of trait psychology, reflected in the Enneagram, I am using both approaches because I find them insightful and helpful.

Jung, himself, argued that psychological theories reflect the personal struggles, pathologies and personalities of those who generate them. This is unavoidable. They emerge out of the need for self-healing.

Those who are dismissive of psychology argue that differences between psychological paradigms and treatment modalities cancel out the legitimacy of the entire exercise. Wilber, on the other hand, contends that differences between paradigms and modalities can be explained on the basis of the level of personality structure that they address. According to Wilber, Jungian psychology addresses the first of the transpersonal bands between the total organism, or what I have called the body/self, and unity consciousness.1

I also suspect that different individuals will be drawn to different psychological theories because their personality structure is reflected in the presuppositions of a particular theory, because that theory offers them healing, or because it justifies their blocking further development by authenticating the defensive stand they are taking. Like attracts like.

All such theories offer us a handle on reality, in this case, our own reality. The theories, however, are not the reality. The reality itself is far more subtle and complex. There is a sense in which we need a range of paradigms and treatment modalities to compensate for omissions and to offset exaggerations. Ultimately, we need to discern and follow our own insights and guidance.

The fact that I find Jung's Analytical Psychology helpful says a lot about me. It also reflects recent developments in my journey, as well as methodologies I find helpful. Furthermore, it has afforded valuable insight into the relationship between unconscious motivation and what theologians talk about as human sinfulness. [29]

Reaction to trait psychology has been generated by a range of motivations. Some react to any form of stereotyping, or classification. Others react because they are uncomfortable confronting aspects of themselves reflected in different typologies. Responses to the Enneagram are usually either wildly enthusiastic or angrily dismissive.

If it is recognized that the Enneagram is a tool to help us understand ourselves, and to bring us to a point of repentance and conversion, it can be helpful. Whatever factors contribute to making us who we are–genetic, hormonal, environmental–the clustering of similar characteristics in certain individuals is so conspicuous as to allow us to legitimately conclude that certain people are very much alike. If the Enneagram is used, not as a procrustean bed, a prison, or a definitive straight jacket, but as a means of our exploring our enthusiasms and the reactions we have on others, it can help us mature in self-understanding, wisdom and compassion.

The following chapters, on Jung and on the Enneagram, should help you appreciate that one of the reasons we express our spirituality differently from each other is related to our different personalities. If you do not find these chapters helpful, I suggest you explore alternative paradigms. [29]

1 K. Wilber, No Boundary: Eastern and Western Approaches to Personal Growth, Boston and London, Shambhala, 1981, 11-12

---

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/2/25/Brooklyn_Museum_-_Soul_in_Bondage_-_Elihu_Vedder_-_overall.jpg`

Carl Jung on “The Last One” to Hans Schmid Guisan (2019-03-07 05:33)

[1]

Dear Friend,

Your letter strengthens my conviction that reaching an agreement on the fundamental principles is impossible, because the point seems to be precisely that we do not agree.

To this end the ucs. uses every means, and be it ever so hair-raisingly stupid.

For instance, I have gone to the most stupid trouble to explain my viewpoint to you, while all the time you have been under a wrong impression in that you did not notice that that sentence in my first letter, in which I talked about the purification of thinking, was purely hypothetical and referred exclusively to the ideally oriented introvert.

It is on precisely this sentence that he is riding, right now, toward the perfection of his type, and thus into hell.

But in my last letter I consistently differentiated between the ideally oriented and the compensated types.

So when you say that the introvert would have to evaluate his thinking by feeling, this is precisely and absolutely correct, and does in no way contradict what I said.

And, by the way, you have of course understood everything quite correctly, but suddenly your ucs. reminds you again of that misunderstood sentence and confuses everything anew.

But this is a comedy, meant to prevent the feared union.

This union, which should not come about, is the union of the pairs of opposites in ourselves.

This is what the devil wants to prevent at any cost.

But it shall be nevertheless.

You constantly keep describing to me how the extravert achieves the perfection of his type.

Well, I've known that for ages.

What I am talking about, however, is how he can get out of his type.

I have given you detailed arguments for why the process of realization is a process of gaining knowledge, and nothing else.

You do not offer the slightest evidence that realization might be something different.

On the contrary, your example of the realization of values shows that this is a process of evaluation.

As already stated, it is only by underestimating the thinking process that you can conceive of evaluation as doing and put the accent on it.

But that's not where the accent should be.

It has long been a known fact that the extravert realizes his mistrust to a much too little extent.

That's why I'm talking of it.

As far as the last passage is concerned, well, reread your letter carefully— I haven't got it with me here— and you will understand my conclusion.

That you had something else in mind I could not know.

It strikes me that, when speaking of knowledge, you always seem to have only the concept of "scientific" knowledge in mind.

That is why I spoke of "living" knowledge as opposed to "scientific" knowledge.

This distinction seems to have escaped you.

If, as you think, life can be a substitute for this knowledge, we wouldn't need it.

But then— how really stupid of life to create that knowledge which it does not need at all.

In that case we need no longer bother about knowledge at all but simply go on living without racking our brains.

You are again forgetting that life stands on two legs, doing and thinking.

So, if life can be a substitute for the Christian doctrine, what's the point of the doctrine?

But how can I come to live a Christian life, if not through the doctrine?

Even Christ taught, and did not simply live.

If he had only lived, nobody would have noticed anything, or, if they noticed, they would not have understood.

If you feel like calling your thinking "feeling," you should tell me, for then I will also turn the thing around and call my feeling "thinking."

You would be the first person to protest, because then I would simply foist my feelings on you, making them your thoughts.

You would be flabbergasted by that, because then we would be right in the middle of a neurotic state of mind.

If you conceive of your thinking as feeling, you will leave the door wide open for hysterical projections.

Then talking is no longer possible.

I have to remark, by the way, that there is at least one thing the introvert can do better than the extravert, and that is thinking.

So one could well risk trying to give the introvert at least that much credit, namely, that his thinking could be more or less correct.

You are right insofar as the process of realization is a feeling process in the extravert—well, certainly, so long as he is not compensated.

We have just established, however, that we are now speaking of the compensated, and not of the "ideal," type.

So long as even the realization process is a feeling process, there remains no room for thinking at all.

And if the introvert mistakes even his feeling for thinking, well, what will become of his feeling?

There reigns a terrible confusion about the realization of thoughts and feelings.

The extravert (the ideal type) must realize his feeling, the corresponding introvert his thinking.

In this process, the extravert notices that his feeling is pregnant with thoughts; the introvert, that his thinking is full of feelings.

I call the realization of thoughts hidden in feeling an act of thinking, and the realization of feelings hidden in thinking an act of feeling.

Turning things around again only foolishly confuses matters and leads to nothing.

Moreover, such a reversion leads to reversed results: for if I call my realizing act of feeling an act of thinking, I will again think my feelings as I did before, which is precisely the crazy thing to do, and the extravert will feel his thoughts, thus committing the same blunder as before.

An introvert who does not outgrow his constant thinking is just as untenable as an extravert who cannot get out of his constant feeling.

For starters, he must learn that thinking cannot be replaced at will by feeling, and that a thinking process cannot arbitrarily be seen as feeling.

This is exactly the nonsense from which he suffers.

For the ideal introvert, the purification of his thinking is, as already mentioned, precisely the indigestible morsel he is struggling with.

His thinking has long since become refined enough, but the feelings therein are not yet realized; feelings can, in God's name, only be felt, but they can't— and that's the devil of it— ever be thought.

It is true that it seems to him as if the realization of his feeling muddied and smudged his thinking, just as it seems to the extravert as if he killed his feelings.

These evil things apply only to the hopelessly rationalistic slant in our thinking and feeling, however—in other words, to our so highly praised reason, into which we have advanced too far.

I won't say anything more about the "famous extravert," because I realize that all of a sudden he has now transferred onto the introvert what he had formerly claimed to have taken over from that other extravert.

Here one has to wait until matters have cleared up in him.

I believe you when you say that the feelings of the extravert are not cooled off by the knowledge of the object as it really is, but he himself cools off the object because, contrary to before, he treats it badly, and again disproportionately so.

I do not give the object credit for cooling off, because for the object this is quasi unavoidable.

For the object made the same mistake, by taking the other's fantasy at face value.

Humans are close to one another only in the collective; in the individual sphere, they are separated by a huge distance, more so because they have to strive for separation and differentiation than because of being actually different.

That the introvert need not be careful with his thinking toward another introvert, but must, on the contrary, help him perfect his own thinking, is certainly true for the beginning of an analysis, provided the other introvert is not someone who has already carried his thinking to extremes (ideal type).

Once the ideal type is reached, a quasi- total blocking of thinking takes place, which is lifted only momentarily when the introvert has realized a feeling.

Vice versa, the same may be true for the extravert.

When I speak of the "intentions" of the extravert, I am well aware that it is just this that the extravert realizes to a much too little extent.

He simply has these intentions (power tendency) in the ucs.

And that is also why the extravert violates his object, for the ucs. takes effect.

The more unconscious, the worse.

Regarding terminology, I must remark that the ideally oriented extravert is always archaic.

He merely has differentiation on the one side, and archaism on the other, just like the introvert.

It is necessary to reach the ideal type.

It seems we agree on that.

Now the question is how to get out of it.

This is possible only through self-communion, and this is true for both types, for both of them are too extraverted, because we are too extraverted in general.

This is the task of our time, which still has a monastery or desert of the soul in store for us.

This is what is so damned bitter and difficult.

Contact in the "human" and "civil" spheres, but anything to do with the "soul" cut off and kept ready for the development of individuality.

"Understanding" is a way toward a collective flattening of the individual and is discarded by fate.

It seems to me that scientifcally it is possible to come to an understanding about the general principles of the types but not about the finer nuances.

This is simply beyond what language can do.

After all, everyone conceives of the linguistic signs for the various concepts in terms of what they have understood.

Now I would like to arrange the terms in question schematically:

I. Introverted

Conscious Thinking as the logical rational function (adapted and universally valid).

Feeling as tones of feelings subordinate to thinking, and as an emotional reaction to what had been cognized by thinking; weak as far as the outward effect is concerned.

Unconscious

Feeling as a sporadic act of intuition = a complex of emotion, with an undeveloped thought- content.

Undeveloped, therefore archaic, symbolic, ambiguous, phenomenal, irrational, actus purus naturae, can only imperfectly be formulated and grasped intellectually, projected.

II. Extraverted

Conscious

Feeling as the logical (logic of feeling) rational function (adapted and universally valid).

Thinking as intellectual processes subordinate to feeling, and as a reaction to what had been felt (what had been comprehended by feeling).

Weak as far as the outward effect is concerned.

Sensation, subordinate to feeling, a not very distinctive (or even disturbed) organ function.

Thinking as a sporadic act of intuition = a complex of thoughts, with an undeveloped content of feeling and sensation.

The other attributes as above.

III.

The general task is the assimilation of the ucs.

The content of the ucs. contains dispositions

1. for outer life = concrete actions,

2. for inner life = subjective thinking and feeling.

IV.

Therefore, the assimilation of the ucs. is achieved by both 1. acting (experience via the object)239 and 2. thinking, feeling as purely inner experience, or experience via the subject.

V.

It is not determined a priori what must be done in a concrete way, and what must be inwardly lived.

This is decided by what is possible (subjectively and objectively).

VI.

α. The ucs. content is collective, that is, subjective and objective, exopsychic and endopsychic, irrational, hence interfering with adaptation. (I.e., adaptation to the world and to the subjective condition, insofar as we have rationally cognized and felt it. I am referring only to the analyzed person here.)

β. The ucs. content is a unity of outer and inner meaning.

γ. It is not exclusively valid either (1) for the outer or (2) for the inner realm, but for both together, that is, for their operating together.

VII.

The ucs. content is symbolic, that is, encompassing the outside and the inside, because the symbol is (1) an act, but not in the sense of an act pure and simple, and (2) a thought, but not in the sense of a rational concept.

VIII.

The symbol is thought and act combined into a unity, collectively and individually, socially and egoistically.

IX.

The general analytical task is accomplished by the assimilation of the ucs. content.

Therefore the ucs. content is the object at which the analytically educated libido aims (The way of education is via the object and the subject.)

X.

The general object at which the libido aims has the significance of a cultural ideal.

It is the dearest and the highest (the treasure hard to obtain), hence a religious goal, thus hinting at bringing together all the strongest strivings.

XI.

Company of like types eases things, and holds fast to what is already given, thus serving the extension and consolidation of what had been taken [from the other].

Balance and understanding are possible, desirable, and absolutely to be strived for. (Being.)

XII.

Company of unlike types complicates things, as it is an obstacle, and for that very reason an absolute necessity of development, hence also a temptation to regression.

He who does not win in this process, loses.

Balance and understanding are impossible, neither desirable nor to be strived for.

The disparity can be obscured only by deceit and violence.

The only thing in common is the goal. (Becoming.)

In the meantime, and after long deliberation, the problem of resistance against understanding and coming to an agreement has become clear to me.

73) who helped me to gain that insight.242

She saw the devil in a vision; he spoke to God, and said the following about the psychology of devils: "Her belly is so swollen, because her greed was boundless, for she filled herself and was not sated, and so great was her greed that, had she been able to gain the whole world for herself, she would gladly have made the effort and, moreover, would have liked to reign also in the heavens.

I have the same greed.

Could I win all the souls in heaven and earth and in the purgatory, I would gladly capture them."

So the devil is the devourer.

To understand = comprendere = katasyllambanein, and also to devour.

Understanding and agreement are an act of swallowing.

One should not let oneself be swallowed, however, unless one is really someone who can overpower the monster from within.

Provided, too, that the other accepts the role of Fafnir and devours indigestible heroes.

So it is better not to "understand" people who might be heroes, because this will not agree at all with oneself.

One can go under through them. In the wish to understand, which seems to be so ethical and all human, there lurks a devil's will, which, though I myself may not notice it at first, definitely makes itself felt to the other.

Understanding is a terribly binding power, possibly a veritable soul murder when it levels out vitally important differences.

The core of the individual is a mystery of life, which dies when it is “grasped.”

That is also why symbols want to keep their secrets; they are mysterious not only because we are unable to clearly see what is at their bottom.

For the symbol wants to prevent Freudian interpretations, which are indeed so pseudo- correct that they never fail to have an effect. For ill people, “analytical” understanding is as healingly destructive as cauterization or thermocautery, but healthy tissue is banefully destroyed by it.

After all, it is a technique we learned from the devil, always destructive, but useful where destruction is necessary.

We can commit no greater error, however, than to apply the principles of this technique to an analyzed psychology.

But there’s still more to this!

All understanding as such, being an integration into general viewpoints, contains the devil’s element, and kills.

It tears another life out from its own peculiar course, and forces it into something foreign in which it cannot live.

That is why, in the later stages of analysis, we must help the other to come to those hidden and unopenable symbols, in which the seed of life lies securely hidden like the tender seed in the hard shell.

Actually, there must not be any understanding and agreement on this, even if it were possible, as it were.

But if understanding and agreement on this have become generally and obviously possible, the symbol is then ripe for destruction, because it no longer covers the seed, which is about to outgrow the shell.

Now I understand a dream I once had, and which greatly impressed me: I was standing in my garden, and I had dug open a rich spring of water, which gushed forth mightily.

Then I had to dig a trench and a deep hole, in which I collected all the water and let it flow back into the depths of the earth again.

In this way salvation is given to us in the unopenable and unsayable symbol, for it protects us by preventing the devil from swallowing the seed of life.

The threatening and dangerous thing about analysis is that the individual appears to be understood: the devil takes away and eats up his soul, which had been born into the light as a naked and exposed child, robbed of its protective cover.

This is the dragon, the murder, which always threatens the newborn Son of God.

He must be hidden once again from the "understanding" of men.

True understanding, however, seems to be what is not understood, yet still is and is effective.

When Ludwig the Saint once visited St. Giles incognito, and when the two, who did not know each other, caught sight of each other, they both fell to their knees before the other, and embraced and kissed— but did not talk.

Their gods knew each other, and their humanness followed.

We must understand the divine within us, but not the other, insofar as he is able to go and stand on his own.

We have to understand the ill person, however, for he is in need of the cauterizing remedy.

We should bless our blindness for the other's mysteries, because it prevents us from devilish deeds of violence.

We should be confidants of our own mysteries, but chastely veil our eyes before the mysteries of the other, insofar as he does not need "understanding" because of his own incapability.

A story told in The Little Flowers of Saint Francis of Assisi (1340; English edition 1905), the most popular biography of St. Francis, written by an anonymous Italian friar: Ludwig of Thuringia (1214– 70), king of France, having heard of the sanctity of Brother Giles (in German: Aegidius), one of the first companions of St. Francis, went to meet him.

They had never met before in their lives, but knelt down and embraced each other, without speaking a word.

When asked why he had not spoken to the King, St. Giles answered that nothing had needed to be said because "the light of divine wisdom revealed his heart to me and mine to him" (ibid., p. 111). Carl Jung, Han Guisan Schmid, Pages 131-142.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/9302a-62bthe2blast2bone2bletter.jpg`

Carl Jung on the "Transcendent Function." (2019-03-07 06:52)

[1]

The transference phenomenon is an inevitable feature of every thorough analysis…

– Carl Jung, CW 16, par. 283

FrithLuton.com

Questions and Discussion

Dr. Mann’s question: “Is it not by intuition that one arrives most easily at the transcendent function, and if a person is lacking in that function—that is, in intuition—are not the difficulties greatly increased?

Must one not reach the transcendent function alone, that is, unaided?”

Dr. Jung: It depends very much on the person’s type as to what part intuition plays in finding the transcendent function.

If the superior function is intuition, for example, then the intuitions are directly in the way, since the transcendent function is made, or takes place, between the superior and the inferior functions.

The inferior function can only come up at the expense of the superior, so that in the intuitive type the intuitions have to be overcome, so to speak, in order for the transcendent function to be found.

On the other hand, if the person is a sensation type, then the intuitions are the inferior function, and the transcendent function may be said to be arrived at through intuition.

It is a fact that in analysis it often seems as though intuition were the most important of the functions, but that is only so because analysis is a laboratory experiment and not reality.

Lecture

At our last meeting I told you all that I could about the making of the Psychology of the Unconscious and its effect on me.

It was published in 1912, as Wandlungen und Symbole der Libido.

The problem it brought to focus in my mind was that of the hero myth in relation to our own times.

With the fundamental thesis of the book, namely the splitting of the libido into a positive and a negative current, Freud was, as I have said, in utter disagreement.

The publishing of the book marks the end of our friendship.

Today I would like to speak about the subjective aspect of the Psychology of the Unconscious.

When one writes such a book, one has the idea that one is writing about certain objective material, and in my case I thought I was merely handling the Miller fantasies with a certain point in view together with the attendant mythological material.

It took me a long time to see that a painter could paint a picture and think the matter ended there and had nothing whatever to do with himself.

And in the same way it took me several years to see that it, the Psychology of the Unconscious, can be taken as myself and that an analysis of it leads inevitably into an analysis of my own unconscious processes.

Difficult as it is to do this in a lecture, it is this aspect I would like to discuss, tracing out especially the ways in which the book seemed to forecast the future.

As you remember, the book begins with a statement about two kinds of thinking that can be observed: intellectual or directed thinking, and fantastic or passive automatic thinking.

In the process of directed thinking, thoughts are handled as tools, they are made to serve the purposes of the thinker; while in passive thinking thoughts are like individuals going about on their own as it were.

Fantastical thinking knows no hierarchy; the thoughts may even be antagonistic to the ego.

I took Miss Miller’s fantasies as such an autonomous form of thinking, but I did not realize that she stood for that form of thinking in myself.

She took over my fantasy and became stage director to it, if one interprets the book subjectively.

In other words, she became an anima figure, a carrier of an inferior function of which I was very little conscious.

I was in my consciousness an active thinker accustomed to subjecting my thoughts to the most rigorous sort of direction, and therefore fantasizing was a mental process that was directly repellent to me.

As a form of thinking I held it to be altogether impure, a sort of incestuous intercourse, thoroughly immoral from an intellectual viewpoint.

Permitting fantasy in myself had the same effect on me as would be produced on a man if he came into his workshop and found all the tools flying about doing things independently of his will.

It shocked me, in other words, to think of the possibility of a fantasy life in my own mind; it was against all the intellectual ideals I had developed for myself, and so great was my resistance to it, that I could only admit the fact in myself through the process of projecting my material into Miss Miller's.

Or, to put it even more strongly, passive thinking seemed to me such a weak and perverted thing that I could only handle it through a diseased woman.

As a matter of fact, Miss Miller did afterwards become entirely deranged.

During the war I had a letter from the man who was Miss Miller's doctor in America, telling me that my analysis of her fantasy material had been a perfectly correct one, that in her insanity the cosmogonic myths touched upon had come fully to light.

Also Flournoy, who had her under observation at the time I first read her material, told me that my analysis had been correct.

There was such a tremendous activity of the collective unconscious that it is not surprising she was finally overcome.

I had to realize then that in Miss Miller I was analyzing my own fantasy function, which because it was so repressed, like hers, was semi-morbid.

When a function is repressed that way, it becomes contaminated by material from the collective unconscious.

So Miss Miller would, in a way, be a description of my impure thinking; and thus in this book the question of the inferior function and the anima comes up.

In the second part of the book there comes the "Hymn of Creation."

This is the positive expression of the unfolding of energy: or generating power—it is the way up.

The "Song of the Moth"4 is the way down; it is light created, and then creating going to its end, a kind of enantiodromia.

In the first case it is the period of growth, of youth, of light and summer.

In the moth the libido is shown to burn its wings in the light it has created before; it is going to kill itself in the same urge that brought it to birth.

With this duality in the cosmic principle, the book ends.

It leads up to the pairs of opposites, that is, to the beginning of the Types. The next portion of the book deals with creative energy in a different aspect.

Energy can show itself in manifold forms and in a process of transition from6 one form to another.

The basic transformation is that which ensues when the energy passes from strictly biological needs into cultural achievements.

From this point on it is a matter of evolution.

How is it possible then to get across from the sexual, for example, to the spiritual, not only from the scientific standpoint, but as a phenomenon in the individual?

Sexuality and spirituality are pairs of opposites that need each other.

How is the process that leads from the sexual stage to the spiritual stage brought about? The first image that comes up is the hero.

It is a most ideal image whose qualities change from age to age, but it has always embodied the things people value the most.

The hero embodies the transition we are seeking to trace, for it is as though in the sexual stage man feels too much under the power of nature, a power which he is in no way able to manage.

The hero is a very perfect man, he stands out as a human protest against nature, who is seeking to rob man of that possibility of perfection.

The unconscious makes the hero symbol, and therefore the hero means a change of attitude.

But this hero symbol comes also from the unconscious, which is also nature, that same nature which is not the least interested in the ideal that man is struggling to formulate.

Man comes then into conflict with the unconscious, and this struggle is that of winning free from his unconscious, his mother.

His unconscious, as I said, forms images of perfect people, but when he tries to realize these hero types, another trend in the unconscious is aroused, [a trend] to the attempt to destroy the image.

So is developed the terrible mother, the devouring dragon, the dangers of rebirth, etc.

At the same time the appearance of the hero ideal means the strengthening of the hopes of man.

It gives man the notion that he can reorganize the lines of his life if the mother will allow it.

This can't be done by a literal rebirth, so it is accomplished by a transformation process, or psychological rebirth.

But this is not to be done without serious battle with the mother.

The paramount question becomes, Will the mother allow the hero to be born? And then, what can be done to satisfy the mother so that she will allow it?

Thus we come to the idea of the sacrifice as embodied in the bull-sacrifice of Mithras. This is not a Christian but a Mithraic idea.

The hero himself is not sacrificed, but his animal side, the bull.

A discussion of the role of the mother or unconscious as both birthplace and source of destruction leads to the idea of the dual mother role, or the existence of the pairs of opposites in the unconscious, the principle of construction and the principle of destruction.

A sacrifice must be done in order to cut the hero away from the power of the unconscious and give him his individual autonomy.

He has to pay himself off and contrive to fill the vacuum left in the unconscious. What is to be sacrificed? According to mythology, it is childhood, the veil of Maya, past ideals.
In connection with this I may say there is a passage in the Psychology of the Unconscious upon which I have often been attacked.

I have said there that the greatest help in getting one over the dangers of the rebirth and breaking away from the mother was to be found in regular work.

Sometimes in thinking over this I have thought that was a cheap and inadequate way of meeting this tremendous problem, and then I have been inclined to side with my critics.

But the more I have thought of it, the more I have been convinced that after all I was in the first place correct, and our regularly repeated efforts to throw off unconsciousness—that is, by regular work—has made our humanity.

We can conquer unconsciousness by regular work but never by a grand gesture. If I say to a Negro, how do you deal with your unconscious?

He gives as answer, “By work.” “But,” I say, “your life is all play.”

This he vehemently denies and explains to me that much of his life passes in the performance of the most laborious dances for the spirits.

Dancing to us is really play, it is lightness and grace, but for primitives it is really hard work.

All ceremonies may be said to be work, and our sense of work to be derivative therefrom.

Following this theme further, I can give the illustration of the action of the Australian Negro when he is sick. He goes to a place where his churinga is hidden in the rocks.
He rubs it.

The churinga is full of healthy magic, and when he rubs it, this gets into his system and his sickness goes into the churinga which then is put back in its place in the rocks where it can digest the sickness and refill itself with healthy magic. That replaces prayer.

We would say one got strength from God through prayer, but the primitive gets strength from God by work.

If you have followed these explanations at all, you will have seen that the material could not fail to make a great impression on me, I mean the mythological material with which I was working.

One of the most important influences was that I elaborated Miss Miller's morbidity into myths in a way satisfactory to myself, and so I assimilated the Miller side of myself, which did me much good.

To speak figuratively, I found a lump of clay, turned it to gold and put it in my pocket.

I got Miller into myself and strengthened my fantasy power by the mythological material. Then I continued my active thinking, but with hesitancy.

It seemed as if my fantasy were going away from the material. At this time I wrote little.

Through the fact that I worried about my difficulty with Freud, I came to study Adler carefully in order to see what was his case against Freud.

I was struck at once by the difference in type.

Both were treating neurosis and hysteria, and yet to the one man it looked so, and to the other it was something quite different.

I could find no solution.

Then it dawned on me that possibly I was dealing with two different types, who were fated to approach the same set of facts from widely differing aspects.

I began to see among my patients some who fit Adler's theories, and others who fit Freud's, and thus I came to formulate the theory of extraversion: and introversion.

There followed much discussion here and there among friends and acquaintances, through which I found that I had the tendency to project my inferior extraverted side into my extraverted friends, and they their introverted sides into me.

By discussion with my personal friends, I found that because of this continued projection into them of my inferior function, I was always in danger of depreciating them.

My patients I could take impersonally and objectively, but my friends I had to meet on a feeling basis, and as feeling is a relatively undifferentiated function in me, and therefore in the unconscious, it naturally carried a heavy load of projections.

Little by little I made a discovery that was shocking to me, namely the fact of this extraverted personality, which every introvert carries within him in his unconscious, and which I had been projecting upon my friends to their detriment.

It was equally annoying to my extravert friends to have to admit an inferior introvert within themselves.

Out of these experiences that were partly personal, I wrote a little pamphlet on the psychological types, and afterwards read it as a paper before a congress.

There were contained in this several mistakes which I afterwards could rectify.

Thus, for example, I thought that an extravert must always be a feeling type, which was clearly a projection growing out of the fact of my own extraversion being associated with my unconscious feeling.

All of this is the outside picture of the development of my book on the types.

I could perfectly well say this is the way the book came about and make an end of it there.

But there is another side, a weaving about among mistakes, impure thinking, etc., etc., which is always very difficult for a man to make public.

He likes to give you the finished product of his directed thinking and have you understand that so it was born in his mind, free of weakness.

A thinking man's attitude toward his intellectual life is quite comparable to that of a woman toward her erotic life.

If I ask a woman about the man she has married, "How did this come about?" she will say, "I met him and loved him, and that is all."

She will conceal most carefully all the little back alleys of the erotic highway she has travelled, all the little meannesses, and squinting situations that she may have been involved in, and she will present you with an unrivalled perfection of smoothness.

Above all she will conceal from you the erotic mistakes she has made.

She will not have it that she has been weak in this her strongest function. Just so with a man about his books.

He does not want to tell of the secret alliances, the faux pas of his mind.

This it is that makes lies of most autobiographies.

Just as sexuality is in women largely unconscious, so is this inferior side of his thinking largely unconscious in a man.

And just as a woman erects her stronghold of power in her sexuality, and will not give away any of the secrets of its weak side, so a man centers his power in his thinking and proposes to hold it as a solid front against the public, particularly against other men.

He thinks if he tells the truth in this field it is equivalent to turning over the keys of his citadel to the enemy.

But this other side of his thinking is not repellent to a woman, and therefore a man can usually speak freely of it to a woman, particularly to a certain sort of woman.

As you know I think of women as belonging in general to two types, the mother and the hetaira. The hetaira type acts as the mother for the other side of men's thinking.

The very fact of its being a weak and helpless sort of thinking appeals to this sort of woman; she thinks of it as something embryonic which she helps to develop.

Paradoxical as it may seem, even a cocotte may sometimes know more about the spiritual growth of a man than his own wife.

Now at this time, inasmuch as I was actively thinking, I had to find some way to reserve myself, so to speak, and to pick up the other, the passive side of my mental life.

This, as I have said, a man dislikes to do because he feels so helpless.

He can't quite manage it, and feels inferior—it is as though he were a log being tossed about in a stream, and so he gets out of it as soon as possible.

He repudiates it because it is not pure intellect—even worse than that, it might be feeling.

He feels himself a victim of all of that, and yet he must deliver himself over to it in order to get at his creative power.

Since my anima had been definitely awakened by all that mythological material I had been working with, I was forced now to give attention to that other side, to my unconscious inferior side in other words. This sounds very easy I know, but it is a statement a man hates to make.

What I did then in order to get at this inferior, unconscious side of me was to make at night an exact reversal of the mental machinery I had used in the day.

That is to say, I turned all my libido within in order to observe the dreams that were going on.

It has been said by Léon Daudet that dreams do not only appear in the sleep but, having a life of their own, they continue also during the daytime below the level of consciousness.

This is of course not a new idea, but one that cannot be emphasized too often. One is able to catch dreams best at night because one is then passive.
However, with a dementia praecox patient it can be observed how the dreams come to the surface even in the daytime, because these people are passive all the time, so to speak, and simply turn themselves over to the dream life.

A thinking man's mind is active during the day (and remember I am speaking now exclusively of men; the process is different in women), but no dreams can be caught in this state.

By assuming a passive attitude at night, while at the same time pouring the same stream of libido into the unconscious that one has put into work in the day, the dreams can be caught and the performances of the unconscious observed.

But it cannot be done by just lying down on a couch and relaxing, it has to be done by a definite giving over of the libido in full sum to the unconscious.

I trained myself to do this; I gave all my libido to the unconscious in order to make it work, and in this way I gave the unconscious a chance, the material came to light and I was able to catch it in flagrante.

I found that the unconscious is working out enormous collective fantasies.

Just as, before, I was passionately interested in working out myths, now I became just as much interested in the material of the unconscious.

This in fact is the only way of getting at myth formation.

And so the first chapter of the Psychology of the Unconscious became most correctly true.

I watched the creation of myths going on, and got an insight into the structure of the unconscious, forming thus the concept that plays such a role in the Types.

I drew all my empirical material from my patients, but the solution of the problem I drew from the inside, from my observations of the unconscious processes.

I have tried to fuse these two currents of outer and inner experience in the book of the Types, and have termed the process of the fusion of the two currents the transcendent function.

I found that the conscious current went one way and the unconscious another, and I could not see where they could become together.

The individual tends toward an abysmal split, for the intellect can only dissect and discriminate, and the creative element lies out of reach of the intellect in the unconscious.

The possibility of a mediation between the conscious and the unconscious, which I have formulated in the transcendent function, came as a great light.

Now the time is up and I have told you a very great deal, but do not assume that I have told all! Carl Jung,1925 Seminar, Pages 27 -36

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e4948-12btransference.jpg`

Carl Jung on the “Hieros Gamos” and “Eros.” (2019-03-07 07:06)

[1]

Hieros gamos. Sacred or spiritual marriage, union of archetypal figures in the rebirth mysteries of antiquity and also in alchemy. Typical examples are the representation of Christ and the Church as bridegroom and bride (sponsus et sponsa) and the alchemical conjunction of sun and moon. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 395.

In contemporary times, Jung gave great importance to the papal bull of the Assumptio Maria. He held that it "points to the hieros gamos in the pleroma, and this in turn implies, as we have said, the future birth of the divine child, who, in accordance with the divine trend toward incarnation, will choose as his birthplace the empirical man. This metaphysical process is known as the individuation process in the psychology of the unconscious" Carl Jung, CW 11, Para §755. Also in Liber Novus, Footnote 200, Page 299.

Salome is an anima figure. She is blind because she does not see the meaning of things. Elijah is the figure of the wise old prophet and represents the factor of intelligence and knowledge; Salome, the erotic element. One might say that the two figures are personifications of Logos and Eros. But such a definition would be excessively intellectual. It is more meaningful to let the figures be what they were for me at the time namely, events and experiences. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 182 also in Liber Novus, Footnote 161, Page 247.

Archetypal statements are based upon instinctive preconditions and have nothing to do with reason; they are neither rationally grounded nor can they be banished by rational arguments.

They have always been part of the world scene representations collectives, as Levy-Bruhl rightly called them.

Certainly the ego and its will have a great part to play in life; but what the ego wills is subject in the highest degree to the interference, in ways of which the ego is usually unaware, of the autonomy and numinosity of archetypal processes.

Practical consideration of these processes is the essence of religion, insofar as religion can be approached from a psychological point of view.

At this point the fact forces itself on my attention that beside the field of reflection there is another equally broad if not broader area in which rational understanding and rational modes of representation find scarcely anything they are able to grasp. This is the realm of Eros.

In classical times, when such things were properly understood, Eros was considered a god whose divinity transcended our human limits, and who therefore could neither be comprehended nor represented in any way.

I might, as many before me have attempted to do, venture an approach to this daimon, whose range of activity extends from the endless spaces of the heavens to the dark abysses of hell; but I falter before the task of finding the language which might adequately express the incalculable paradoxes of love,

Eros is a kosmogonos, a creator and father-mother of all higher consciousness. I sometimes feel that Paul’s words ’Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love" might well be the first condition of all cognition and the quintessence of divinity itself.

Whatever the learned interpretation may be of the sentence "God is love,*’ the words affirm the complexio oppositorum of the Godhead.

In my medical experience as well as in my own life I have again and again been faced with the mystery of love, and have never been able to explain what it is.

Like Job, I had to ’lay my hand on my mouth. I have spoken once, and I will not answer/* (Job 40:4f.) Here is the greatest and smallest, the remotest and nearest, the highest and lowest, and we cannot discuss one side of it without also discussing the other.

No language is adequate to this paradox. Whatever one can say, no words express the whole. To speak of partial aspects is always too much or too little, for only the whole is meaningful Love "bears all things" and "endures all things’* (i Cor. 13:7).

These words say all there is to be said; nothing can be added to them. For we are in the deepest sense the victims and the instruments of cosmogonic "love."

I put the word in quotation marks to indicate that I do not use it in its connotations of desiring, preferring, favoring, wishing, and similar feelings, but as something superior to the individual, a unified and undivided whole. Being a part, man cannot grasp the whole.

He is at its mercy. He may assent to it, or rebel against it; but he is always caught up by it and enclosed within it. He is dependent upon it and is sustained by it. Love is his light and his darkness, whose end he cannot see.

"Love ceases not" whether he speaks with the "tongues of angels," or with scientific exactitude traces the life of the cell down to its uttermost source.

Man can try to name love, showering upon it all the names at his command, and still he will involve himself in endless self-deceptions. If he possesses a grain of wisdom, he will lay down his arms and name the unknown by the more unknown, ignotum per ignotius that is, by the name of God.

That is a confession of his subjection, his imperfection, and his dependence; but at the same time a testimony to his freedom to choose between truth and error. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Pages 352-354.

The god-sun is the highest good; the devil is the opposite. Thus have ye two gods. But there are many high and good things and many great evils. Among these are two god-devils; the one is the BURNING ONE, the other the GROWING ONE. The burning one is EROS, who hath the form of flame. Flame giveth light because it consumeth.

The growing one is the TREE OF LIFE. It buddeth, as in growing it heapeth up living stuff. Eros flameth up and dieth. But the tree of life groweth with slow and constant increase through unmeasured time. Good and evil are united in the flame Good and evil are united in the increase of the tree. In their divinity stand life and love opposed. Innumerable as the host of the stars is the number of gods and devils. Each star is a god, and each space that a star filleth is a devil. But the empty-fullness of the whole is the pleroma. The operation of the whole is Abraxas, to whom only the ineffective standeth opposed. Four is the number of the principal gods, as four is the number of the world's measurements. One is the beginning, the god-sun.

Two is Eros; for he bindeth twain together and outspreadeth himself in brightness. Three is the Tree of Life, for it filleth space with bodily forms. Four is the devil, for he openeth all that is closed. All that is formed of bodily nature doth he dissolve; he is the destroyer in whom everything is brought to nothing. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 385 and Liber Novus, Page 351.

Like many sons, Adler had learned from his "father" not what the father said, but what he did.

Instantly, the problem of love (Eros) and power came down upon me like a leaden weight. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 153.

The idea dawned on me that Eros and the power drive might be in a sense like the dissident sons of a single father, or the products of a single motivating psychic force which manifested itself empirically in opposing forms, like positive and negative electrical charges, Eros as a patiens, the power drive as an agens, and vice versa.

Eros makes just as great demands upon the power drive as the latter upon the former. Where is the one drive without the other? On the one hand man succumbs to the drive; on the other hand, he tries to master it. Carl Jung, Memories, Dreams and Reflections, Page 153.

Woman's consciousness is characterized more by the connective quality of Eros than by the discrimination and cognition associated with Logos. In men, Eros . . . is usually less developed than Logos. In women, on the other hand, Eros is an expression of their true nature, while their Logos is often only a regrettable accident. Carl Jung, CW 9ii, par. 29.

Eros is a questionable fellow and will always remain so . . . . He belongs on one side to man's primordial animal nature which will endure as long as man has an animal body. On the other side he is related to the highest forms of the spirit. But he thrives only when spirit and instinct are in right harmony. Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 32.

Where love reigns, there is no will to power; and where the will to power is paramount, love is lacking. The one is but the shadow of the other: the man who adopts the standpoint of Eros finds his compensatory opposite in the will to power, and that of the man who puts the accent on power is Eros. Carl Jung, CW 7, Par. 78.

An unconscious Eros always expresses itself as will to power. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Par. 167.

In Transformations and Symbols of the Libido (1912) while discussing mythological conceptions of creative force, Jung drew attention to the "Orphic figure of Phanes, the ’Shining One,’ the first-born, the ’Father of Eros.’ In Orphic terms, Phanes also denotes Priapos, a god of love, androgynous, and equal to the Theban Dionysus Lysios. The Orphic meaning of Phanes is the same as that of the Indian Kama, the God of love, which is also a cosmogonic principle" (CW B, §223). Phanes appears in Black Book 6 in the autumn of 1916.

In Transformations and Symbols of the Libido (1912), while discussing his concept of libido, Jung referred to the cosmogonic significance of Eros in Hesiod’s Theogony, which he linked with the figure of Phanes in Orphism and with Kama, the Hindu God of love Carl Jung, CW B, Para §223.

In 1917, Jung wrote a chapter on "the sexual theory" in The Psychology of the Unconscious Processes, which presented a critique of the psychoanalytic understanding of the erotic.

In his 1928 revision of this chapter, retitled "The Eros theory" he added:

"The Erotic .. , belongs on the one hand to the original drive nature of man . , .On the other hand it is related to the highest forms of the spirit.

It only thrives when spirit and drive are in right harmony ... ’Eros is a mighty daemon,’ as the wise Diotima said to Socrates ... He is not all of nature within us, though he is at least one of its essential aspects" (CW 7, §§32-33).

In the Symposium, Diotima teaches Socrates about the nature of Eros.

She tells him that" ’He is a great spirit, Socrates. Everything classed as a spirit falls between god and human.’

/ ’What function do they have?’ I asked, / ’They interpret and carry messages from humans to gods and from gods to humans.

They convey prayers and sacrifices from humans, and commands and gifts in return for sacrifices from gods.

Being intermediate between the other two, they fill the gap between them, and enable the universe to form an interconnected whole.

They serve as the medium for all divination, for priestly expertise in sacrifice, ritual and spells, and for all prophecy and sorcery.

Gods do not make direct contact with humans; they communicate and converse with humans (whether awake or asleep) entirely through the medium of spirits" (tr. C. Gill [London: Penguin, 1999], pp. 202e-203a.

In Memories Jung reflected on the nature of Eros, describing it as "a kosmogonos, a creator and father-mother of all consciousness" (p. 387).

This cosmogonic characterization of Eros needs to be distinguished from Jung's use of the term to characterize women's consciousness. See note 161, p. 246. Liber Novus, Footnote 104, Page 351.

Sprouting from him we see the tree of life, labeled vita ('life') while its upper counterpart is a light-tree in the form of a seven-branched candelabra labeled ignis ('fire') and Eros (,love'). Its light points to the spiritual world of the divine child. Liber Novus, Appendix A, Page 364.

The old man represents a spiritual principle that could be designated as Logos, and the maiden represents an unspiritual principle of feeling that could be called Eros. A descendent of Logos is Nous, the intellect, which has done away with the commingling of feeling, presentiment, and sensation. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 366.

Eros is a principle that contains a commingling of all the fundamental activities of the soul just as much as it masters them, although its purpose is completely different. It is not form-giving but form-fulfilling; it is the wine that will be poured into the vessel; it is not the bed and direction of the stream but the impetuous water flowing in it. Eros is desire, longing, force, exuberance, pleasure, suffering. Where Logos is ordering and insistence, Eros is dissolution and movement. They are two fundamental psychic powers that form a pair of opposites, each one requiring the other. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 366.

Salome is hence apparently no (complete) correct embodiment of Eros, but a variety of the same. (This supposition is later confirmed.) That she is actually an incorrect allegory for Eros also stems from the fact that she is blind. Eros is not blind, since he regulates, just as well as Logos does, all fundamental activities of the soul. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 365.

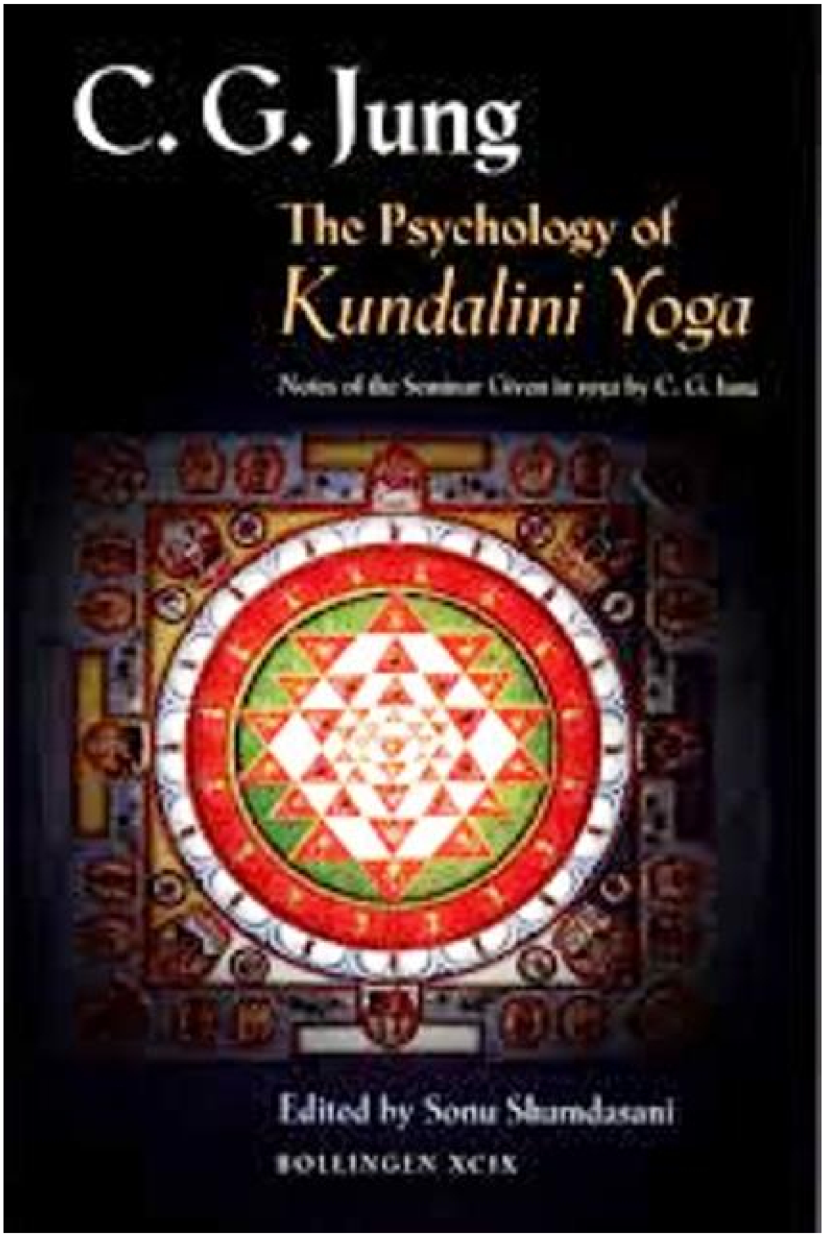
A figure like the prophet, which is clear and complete in itself, arouses less curiosity than the unexpected form of blind Salome, which is why one may expect that the formative process will first address the problem of Eros. Hence an image of Eve appears first, together with images of the tree and the serpent. This apparently refers to temptation, as already encapsulated in the figure of Salome. Temptation brings about a further movement toward the side of Eros. This in turn forebodes many adventurous possibilities, for which the wandering of Odysseus is the fitting image. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 366.

Eros is subject to error in the flesh, but in the spirit it rises above the flesh and the inferiority of carnal error. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 367..

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/81938-1.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Yoga" - Anthology (2019-03-07 07:13)

[1]



C. G. Jung

The Psychology of Kundalini Yoga

Notes of the Seminar Given in 1932 by C. G. Jung

Edited by Sonu Shamdasani

BOLLINGEN XCIX

Small children are very old; later on we soon grow younger. In our middle age we are youngest, precisely at the time when we have completely or almost completely lost contact with the collective unconscious, the samskaras. We grow older again only as with the mounting years we remember the samskaras anew. Carl Jung, The Psychology of Kundalini Yoga, Appendix 1, Page 74.

Without personal life, without the here and now, we cannot attain to the supra-personal. Personal life must first be fulfilled in order that the process of the supra-personal side of the psyche can be introduced. Carl Jung, The Psychology of Kundalini Yoga, Page 66.

Individuation is not that you become an ego—you would then become an individualist. You know, an individualist is a man who did not succeed in individuating; he is a philosophically distilled egotist. Carl Jung, The Psychology of Kundalini Yoga, Pages 39-40.

If you succeed in remembering yourself, if you succeed in making a difference between yourself and that outburst of passion, then you discover the self; you begin to individuate. Carl Jung, The Psychology of Kundalini Yoga, Pages 39-40.

In contrast to the meditation found in yoga practice, the psychoanalytic aim is to observe the shadowy presentation — whether in the form of images or of feelings — that are spontaneously evolved in the unconscious psyche and appear without his bidding to the man who looks within. In this way we find once more things that we have repressed or forgotten. Painful though it may be, this is in itself a gain — for what is inferior or even worthless belongs to me as my Shadow and gives me substance and mass. How can I be substantial if I fail to cast a Shadow? I must have a dark side also if I am to be whole; and inasmuch as I become conscious of my Shadow I also remember that I am a human being like any other. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 35.

People will do anything, no matter how absurd, in order to avoid facing their own souls. They will practice Indian yoga and all its exercises, observe a strict regimen of diet, learn theosophy by heart, or mechanically repeat mystic text from the literature of the whole world - all because they cannot get on with themselves and have not slightest faith that anything useful could ever come out of their own souls. Thus the soul has been turned into a Nazareth Gradually from which nothing good can come. Therefore let us fetch it from the four corners of the earth - the more far-fetched and bizarre it is the better. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 99 .

Yoga in Mayfair or Fifth Avenue, or in any other place which is on the telephone, is a spiritual fake. Carl Jung; CW 11; Page 500; Para 802.

One of the aims of some kinds of Yoga is to understand the voice of all animals, but we are not convinced in the West that horses and dogs have such important thoughts. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 17.

Concerning your view about Hatha-Yoga I can confirm your ideas entirely. Yoga as well as other "mystical" practices imitate nature and that explains their efficacy. Yoga postures are imitations of catatonic gestures, postures and mannerisms. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 497-498.

One could say that the classical catatonic condition is a fixed or congealed Yoga mechanism, i.e., a natural tendency released under pathological circumstances. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 497-498.

This [Hatha Yoga] is to be interpreted as a teleological attempt at self-cure, as it is a compensatory process produced under the stress of the schizophrenic dissociation of the mind. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 497-498.

You see, in spite of being a man in advanced age, you still have a young soul, a lovely anima, and she is confronted with the dangerous lizard. In other words, your soul is threatened by' chthonic poison. Now this is exactly the situation of our Western mind. We think we can deal with such problems in an almost rationalistic way, by conscious attempts and efforts, imitating Yoga methods and such dangerous stuff, but we forget entirely that first of all we should establish a connection between the higher and the lower regions of our psyche Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 95-97.

We think we can deal with such problems in an almost rationalistic way, by conscious attempts and efforts, imitating Yoga methods and such dangerous stuff, but we forget entirely that first of all we should establish a connection between the higher and the lower regions of our psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 95-97.

You can protect your anima by Yoga exercises which only procure a conscious thrill, but you can protect her by catching the unconscious contents that well up from the depths of yourself. Try to see your fantasies are, no matter how disreputable they seem to be; that is your blackness, your shadow that ought to be swallowed. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 95-97.

You know, Eastern Yoga is based upon man as he really is, but we have a conscious imagination about ourselves and think this is our Self, which is an appalling mistake. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 95-97.

...I have been working for many years on the psychology of the unconscious, and it was the enigmatical and puzzling structure of the unconscious which brought me to alchemy, as well as to the study of Yoga and of the Ignatian exercises. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture 10, Page 81.

The purpose of the meditation of the alchemists is also spiritualis, but in contrast to the other methods of meditation which we studied here - those of Yoga, Mahayana Buddhism and the Ignatian excercises - the subject of meditation in alchemy is something unknown, and not a known dogmatic formula. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 174.

The Chinese philosophy of yoga is based upon the fact of this instinctive preparation for death as a goal, and, following the analogy with the goal of the first half of life, namely, begetting and reproduction, the means towards perpetuation of physical life, it takes as the purpose of spiritual existence the symbolic begetting and bringing to birth of a psychic spirit body ('subtle body'), which ensures the continuity of the detached consciousness. Carl Jung, The Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 124.

Yoga does not lead to the ego but to the knowledge that the ego is only a phenomenon, it is the face, skin or symptom of an incomprehensible being. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 136.

In the East the Void represents a psychic emptying of all conscious contents through the practice of Yoga. In the western series the chaos, or nigredo, is not thought of as a psychic condition but as a condition of the materia. This is the great difference between the East and the West. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, Pages 175.

Every profound student of alchemy knows that the making of gold was not the real purpose and that the process was a western form of Yoga. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, Page 107.

If you want to know how the body can be experienced psychically you must turn to eastern Yoga; medieval philosophy also knew something of the matter. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.

The European who practises Yoga does not know what he is doing. It has a bad effect upon him, sooner or later he gets afraid and sometimes it even leads him over the edge into madness. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 71.

Women played a considerable part in alchemy, and worked at it themselves. This is not the case in Indian Yoga, with the exception of Tantrism. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 24Feb1939, Pages 92.

The official example of Yoga in the West is the exercitia spiritualia of St. Ignatius of Loyola. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.

Miracles are symbols for a heightened understanding of life; learning to fly without wings, telepathy, Yoga practices, etc., all belong psychologically to this heightened consciousness. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Pages 203.

Our method aims at allowing the complex to express itself and reveal its structure, but Yoga aims at fettering it in dogma. This is almost universally the case in Indian Yoga. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture III, 17May 1935, Pages 208

Taoism has also a kind of Yoga but it is less well known than the Indian. The Chinese Yoga is very much less founded on dogma, the Yogin is left to find his own way through his difficult experiences. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture III, 17May 1935, Pages 209.

These "centres" are the so-called chakras? and you not only find them in the teachings of yoga but can discover the same idea in old German alchemical books, which surely do not derive from a knowledge of yoga. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 16.

What, then, is yoga? The word means literally "yoking," i.e., the disciplining of the instinctual forces of the psyche, which in Sanskrit are called kleshas. The yoking aims at controlling these forces that fetter human beings to the world. The kleshas would correspond, in the language of St. Augustine, to superhia and concupiscentia. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 912.

I have just said that we have developed nothing that could be compared with yoga. This is not entirely correct. True to our European bias, we have evolved a medical psychology dealing specifically with the kleshas. We call it the "psychology of the unconscious." Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 941.

In alchemy there lies concealed a Western system of yoga meditation, but it was kept a carefully guarded secret from fear of heresy and its painful consequences. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 219.

For the practising psychologist, however, alchemy has one inestimable advantage over Indian yoga its ideas are expressed almost entirely in an extraordinarily rich symbolism, the very symbolism we still find in our patients today. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 219.

If you look long enough into a dark hole you perceive what is looking in. This is also the principle of cognition in yoga, which derives all cognition from the absolute emptiness of consciousness. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 174-175.

In Sahasrara there is no difference. The next conclusion could be that there is no object, no God, there is nothing but Brahman. There is no experience because it is One, without a second. It is asleep, it is not, and that is why it is nirvana. Carl Jung, Kundalini Yoga, p. 59.

Much as I can go along with you in the process of "becoming whole and holy," or individuation, I cannot subscribe to your statements about the "ego in complete possession of itself" and unrelated universal love, although they bring you perilously close to the ideal of Yoga: nirdvandva (free from the opposites). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 235-238.

Tantra Yoga gives the classic localizations of thought: anahata, thinking (or localization of consciousness) in the chest region (phrenes); visuddha (localized in the larynx), verbal thinking; and ajna, vision, symbolized by an eye in the forehead, which is attained only when verbal image and object are no longer identical, i.e., when their participation mystique is abolished. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

You are naturally reaching back to Yoga in the proper understanding that it has once been the right way which should still be the right way for our time. But the world has become wrong and nobody listens to the old ways any more, in spite of the fact that the underlying truth is still true. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 385-386.

The Eastern philosophy is a sort of yoga, it is alive, it is an art, the art of making something of oneself. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1024

The Indian's most important exercise is yoga, an immersion in what we would call an unconscious state, but which he praises as the highest consciousness. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 911.

Yoga is the most eloquent expression of the Indian mind and at the same time the instrument continually used to produce this peculiar attitude of mind. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 911.

Eastern yoga is based upon man as he really is. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 97.

Alchemy began at latest in the first century A. D. and is really a curious process of initiation, a sort of practical Yoga. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 24 Feb 1939

Alchemy works as a sort of chemistry on actual matter and yet it is essentially Yoga and the symbols which arise in both are very similar. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 24 Feb 1939

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ae29e-12byoga.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Types" - Anthology (2019-03-07 09:30)

Psychological Types
A REVISION BY R. F. C. HULL
OF THE TRANSLATION BY H. G. BAYNES
CG JUNG

The classification of individuals [By Type] means nothing at all Carl Jung, Jung-Evans Conversations, Page 23.

I have never thought of my typology as a characterological method and have never applied it in this sense. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 129-130

There lies the gravamen of the book, [Psychological Types] though most readers have not noticed this because they are first of all led into the temptation of classifying everything typologically, which in itself is a pretty sterile undertaking. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 186-187

Well, you see, the [psychological] type is nothing static. It changes in the course of life... Carl Jung, C.G. Jung, Speaking, Page 435.

So it is not the case at all that I begin by classifying my patients into types and then give them the corresponding advice, as a colleague of mine whom God has endowed with a peculiar wit once asserted. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 186-187

Whereas the extravert needs the object to bring his type to perfection and to cleanse his feeling, the introvert experiences this as a horrible violation and disrespect of his personality, because he absolutely refuses to be, so to speak, the chemical dry cleaner for the feelings of extraverts. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

I have spoken more than once of the way an intuitive type can neglect reality, and you can, I am sure, supply an equal number of examples of the ways a feeling type can do the same thing. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 135

Each function type has a special way of viewing feeling, and is likely to find things about it which are untrue for the other types. Thus one of the points with respect to the functions that has been most combated is my contention that feeling is rational. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 134

Well, you see, the [psychological] type is nothing static. It changes in the course of life... Carl Jung, C.G. Jung, Speaking, Page 435.

As a rule, whenever such a falsification of type takes place . . . the individual becomes neurotic later, and can be cured only by developing the attitude consonant with his nature. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 560.

The classification of individuals [By Type] means nothing at all. It is only the instrumentality, or what I call "practical psychology," used to explain, for instance, the husband to a wife, or vice versa. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 23.

So, through the study of all sorts of human types, I came to the conclusion that there must be many different ways of viewing the world through these type orientations—at least 16, and you can just as well say 360. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 24.

Even though assignment to a particular type may in certain cases have lifelong validity, in other very frequent cases it is so dependent on so many external and internal factors that the diagnosis is valid only for certain periods of time. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 346-348

He thinks the sensation type spends his life with corpses, but once he has taken up this inferior function in himself, he begins to enjoy the object as it really is and for its own sake instead of seeing it through an atmosphere of his projections. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 90

Certainly seeing the top and the bottom is an introverted attitude, but that is just the place the introvert fills. He has distance between himself and the object and so is sensitive to types—he can separate and discriminate. He does not want too many facts and ideas about. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94

The inferior function can only come up at the expense of the superior, so that in the intuitive type the intuitions have to be overcome, so to speak, in order for the transcendent function to be found. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27

On the other hand, if the person is a sensation type, then the intuitions are the inferior function, and the transcendent function may be said to be arrived at through intuition. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27

Out of these experiences that were partly personal, I wrote a little pamphlet on the psychological types, and afterwards read it as a paper before a congress. There were contained in this several mistakes which I afterwards could rectify. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 33

I watched the creation of myths going on, and got an insight into the structure of the unconscious, forming thus the concept that plays such a role in the Types. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 35

The author shows an amazingly sympathetic knowledge of the introvert of the thinking type, and hardly less for the other types. . . . Jung has revealed the inner kingdom of the soul marvelously well and has made the signal discovery of the value of phantasy. His book has a manifold reach and grasp, and many reviews with quite different subject matter could be written about it.” Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xi

So in my view an “ideally oriented type” is not an analyzed type at all, but an unanalyzed one, someone, for example, who only has a very good sailing boat, but without a built- in motor, thus a vehicle that does not move for hours when there is no wind. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 74-86

The extravert (the ideal type) must realize his feeling, the corresponding introvert his thinking. In this process, the extravert notices that his feeling is pregnant with thoughts; the introvert, that his thinking is full of feelings. Carl Jung, Han Guisan Schmid, Pages 131-142

His [Freud] general way of living was a genuinely introverted style, whereas Adler, whom I met as a young man, being of my age, gave me the impression of a neurotic introvert, in which case there is always a doubt as to the definite type. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

As you know, Freud himself was neurotic his life-long. I myself analyzed him for a certain very disagreeable symptom which in consequence of the treatment was cured. That gave me the idea that Freud as· well as Adler underwent a change in their personal type. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

Certainly strife and misunderstanding will always be among the props of the tragi-comedy of human existence, but it is none the less undeniable that the advance of civilization has led from the law of the jungle to the establishment of courts of justice and standards of right and wrong which are above the contending parties. It is my conviction that a basis for the settlement of conflicting views would be found in the recognition of different types of attitude — a recognition not only of the existence of such types, but also of the fact that every man is so imprisoned in his type that he is simply incapable of fully understanding another standpoint. Failing a recognition of this exacting demand, a violation of the other standpoint is practically inevitable. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 847

We know that there is no human foresight or wisdom that can prescribe direction to our life, except for small stretches of the way. This is of course true only of the "ordinary" type of life, not of the "heroic" type. The latter kind also exists, though it is much rarer. Here we are certainly not entitled to say that no marked direction can be given to life, or only for short distances. The heroic conduct of life is absolute—that is, it is oriented by fateful decisions, and the decision to go in a certain direction holds, sometimes, to the bitter end. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 72

Experience has convinced me that there are not only different temperaments (“types”), but different stages of psychological development, so that one can well say that there is an essential difference between the psychology of the first and the second half of life. Here again I differ from the others in maintaining that the same psychological criteria are not applicable to the different stages of life. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 762

Carl Jung: Since we do not know everything.... (2019-03-07 10:00)

[1]

© phosphenisme.com

Since we do not know everything, practically every experience, fact, or object contains something unknown.

Hence, if we speak of the totality of an experience, the word "totality" can refer only to the conscious part of it.

As we cannot assume that our experience covers the totality of the object, it is clear that its absolute totality must necessarily contain the part that has not been experienced.

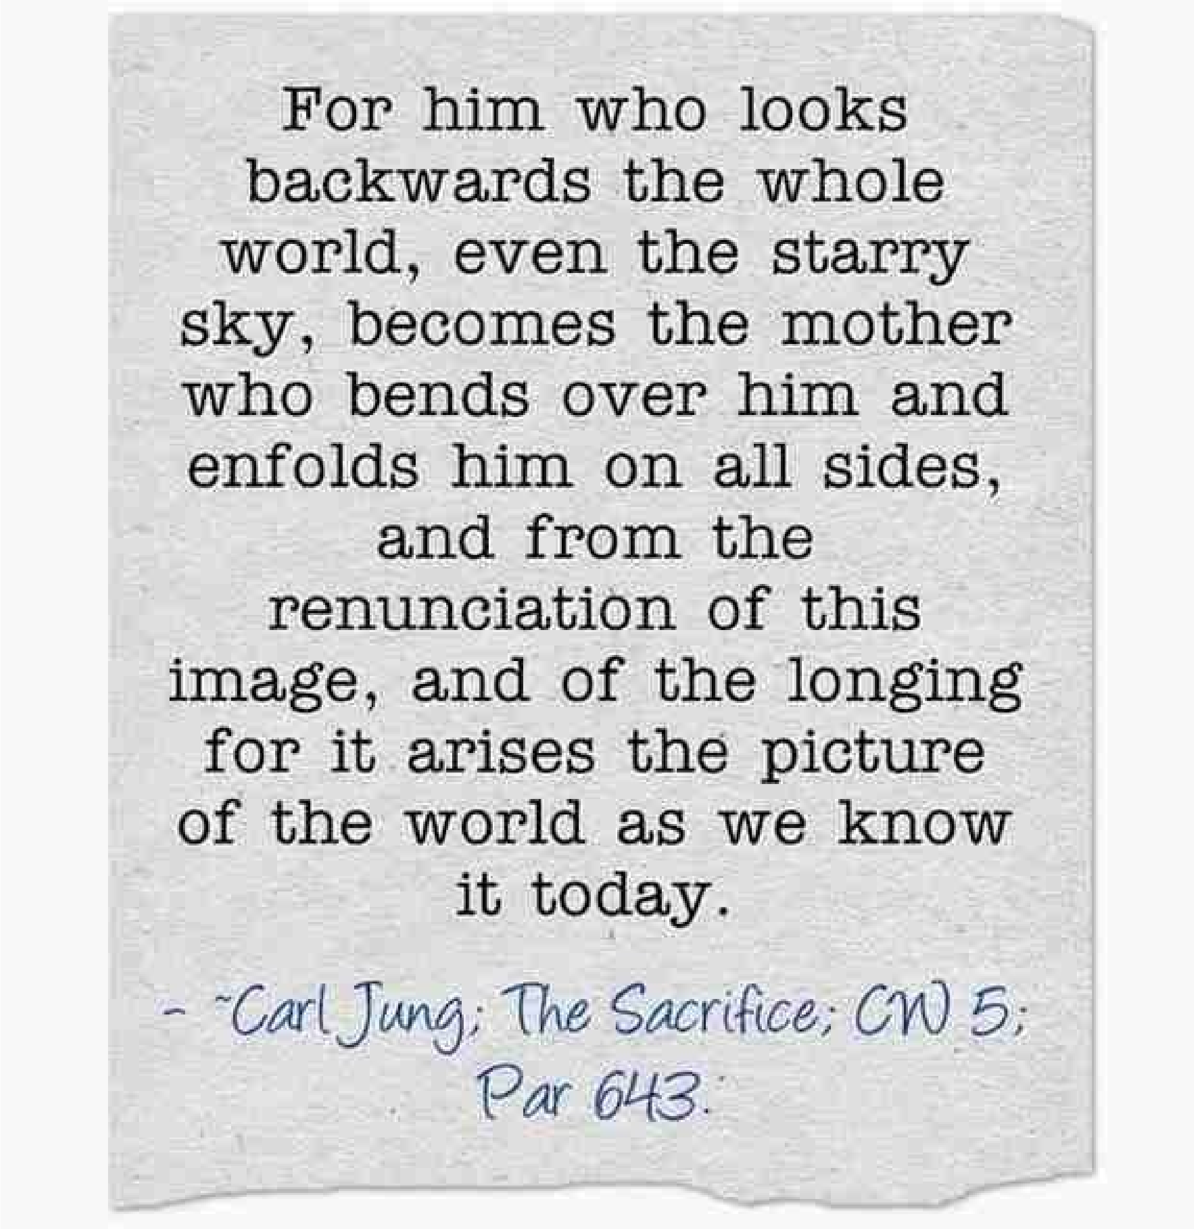
The same holds true, as I have mentioned, of every experience and also of the psyche, whose absolute totality covers a greater area than consciousness.

In other words, the psyche is no exception to the general rule that the universe can be established only so far as our psychic organism permits. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 68

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c6de3-12borganism.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 14 (2019-03-07 11:54)

[1]



For him who looks backwards the whole world, even the starry sky, becomes the mother who bends over him and enfolds him on all sides, and from the renunciation of this image, and of the longing for it arises the picture of the world as we know it today.

- ~Carl Jung; The Sacrifice; CW 5; Par 643.

For him who looks backwards the whole world, even the starry sky, becomes the mother who bends over him and enfolds him on all sides, and from the renunciation of this image, and of the longing for it arises the picture of the world as we know it today. Carl Jung; The Sacrifice; CW 5; Par 643.

[2]

THE PSYCHE DOES NOT MERELY REACT; IT GIVES ITS OWN SPECIFIC ANSWER TO THE INFLUENCES AT WORK UPON IT.

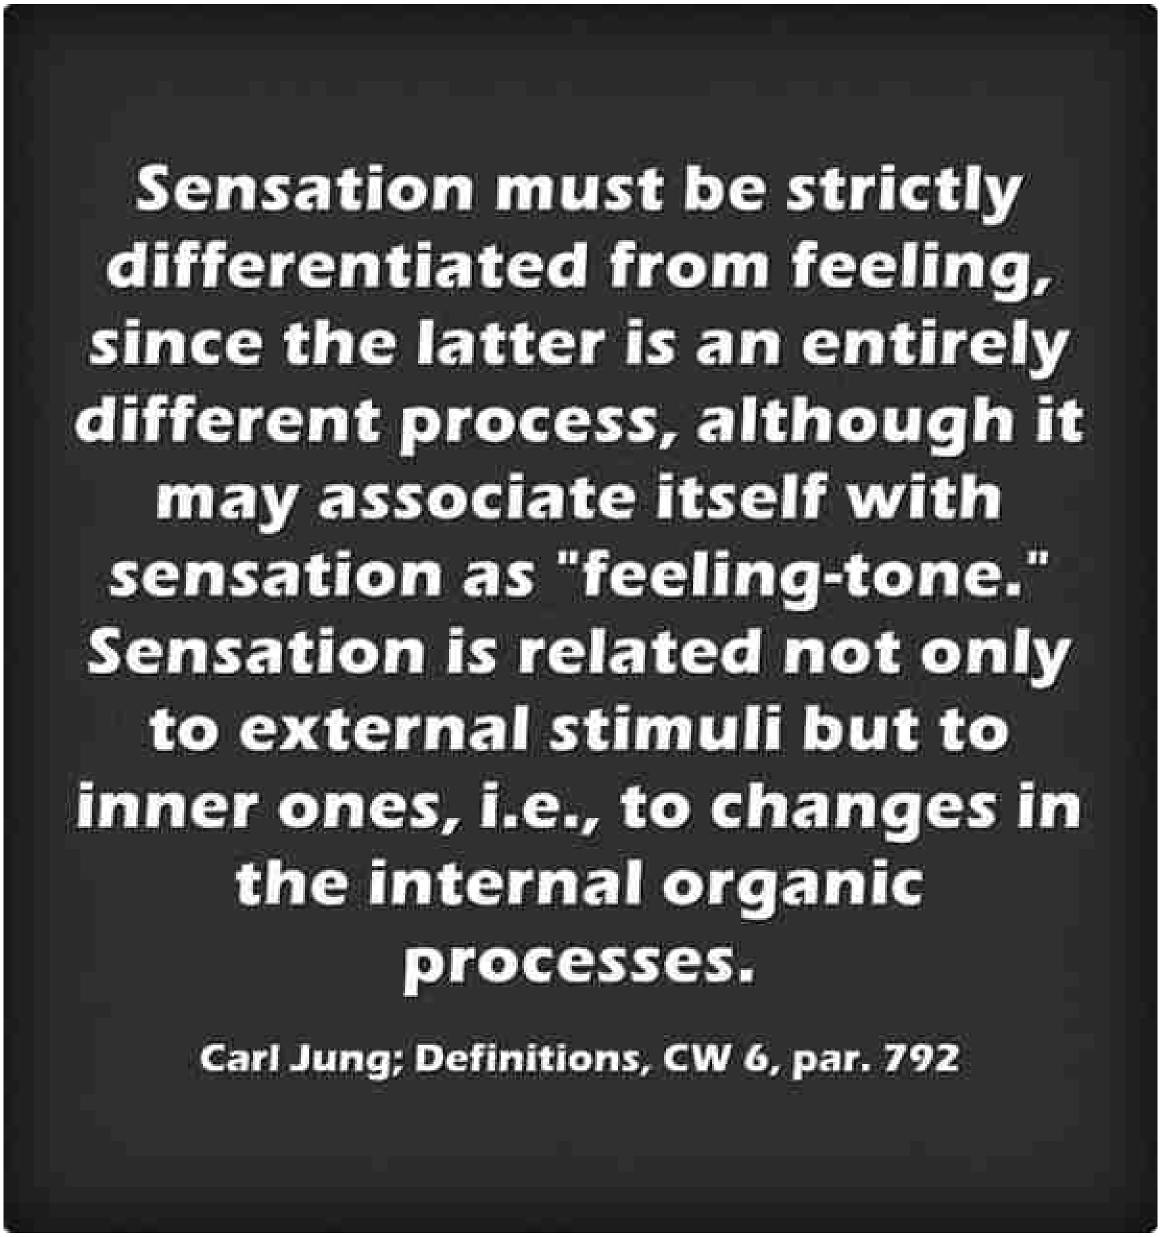
- CARL JUNG; CW 4; PAR. 665.

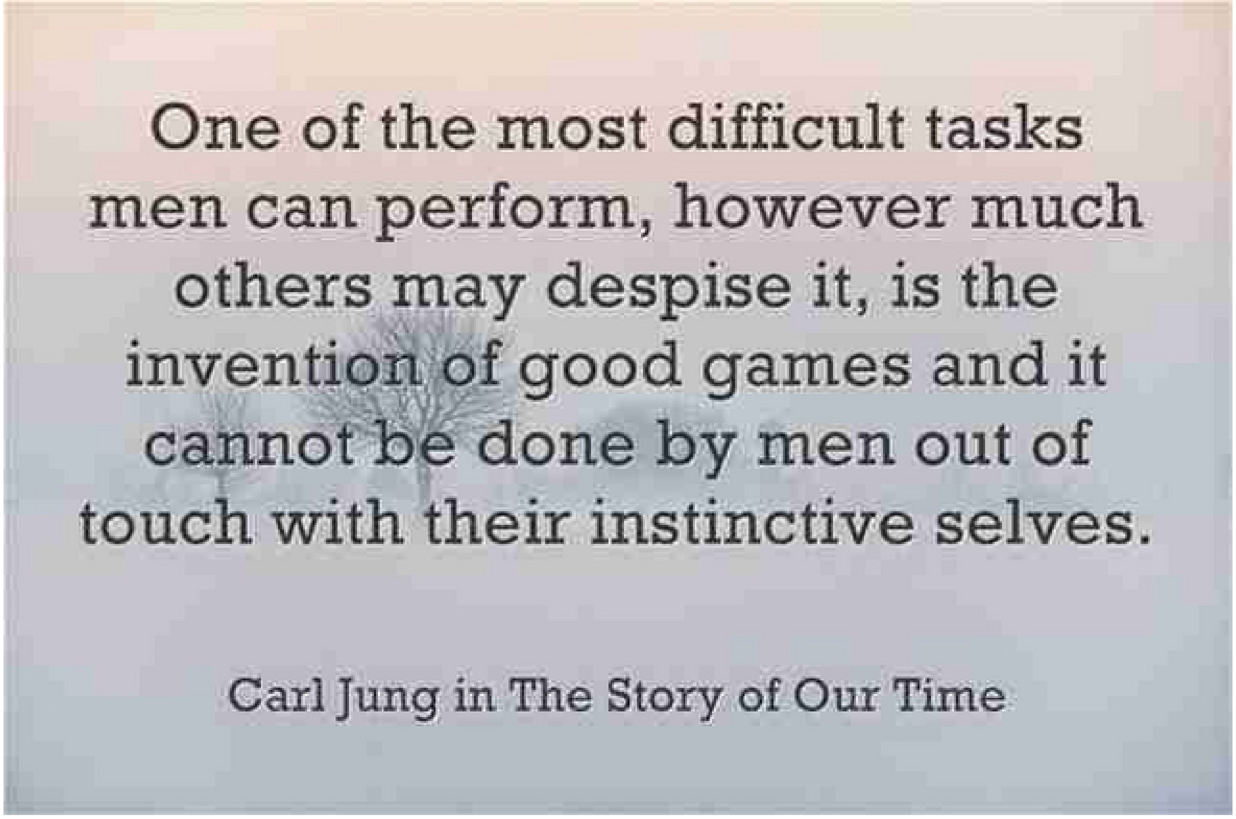
The psyche does not merely react; it gives its own specific answer to the influences at work upon it. Carl Jung; Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis; CW 4; par. 665.



Sensation must be strictly differentiated from feeling, since the latter is an entirely different process, although it may associate itself with sensation as "feeling-tone." Sensation is related not only to external stimuli but to inner ones, i.e., to changes in the internal organic processes.

Carl Jung; Definitions, CW 6, par. 792

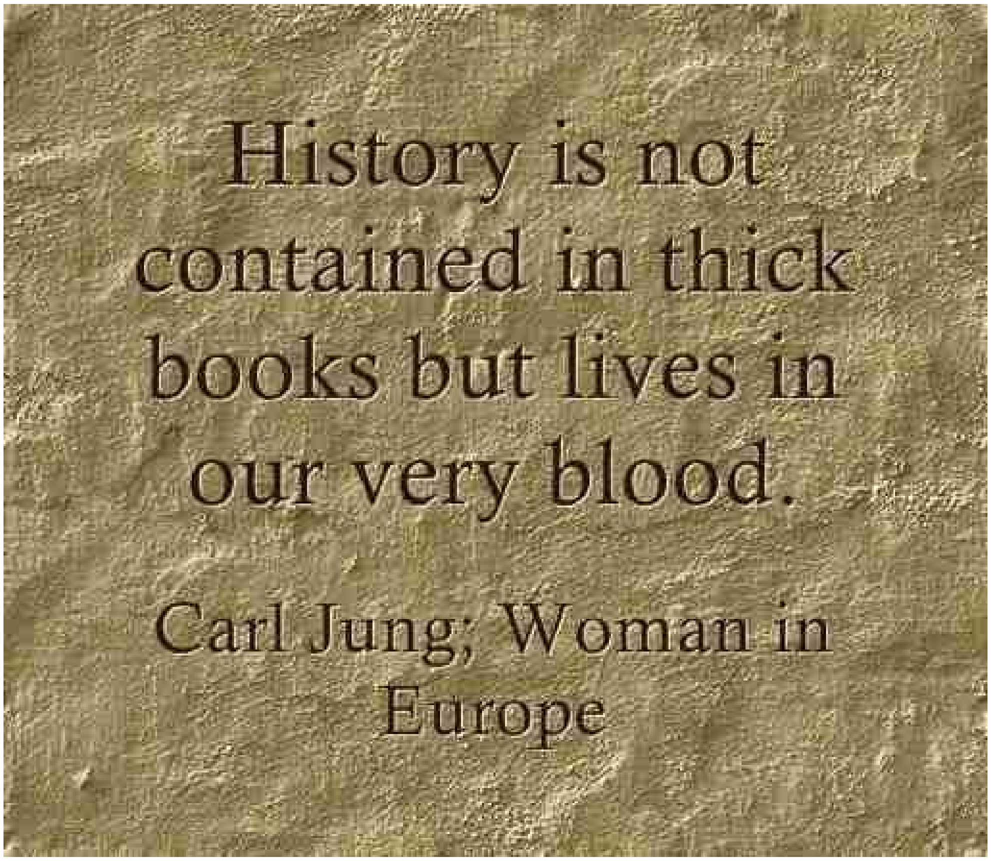
Sensation must be strictly differentiated from feeling, since the latter is an entirely different process, although it may associate itself with sensation as "feeling-tone." Sensation is related not only to external stimuli but to inner ones, i.e., to changes in the internal organic processes. [Definitions," CW 6, par. 792.]



One of the most difficult tasks men can perform, however much others may despise it, is the invention of good games and it cannot be done by men out of touch with their instinctive selves.

Carl Jung in The Story of Our Time

One of the most difficult tasks men can perform, however much others may despise it, is the invention of good games and it cannot be done by men out of touch with their instinctive selves. Jung and the Story of Our Time, Laurens van der Post (1977)



History is not contained in thick books but lives in our very blood.

Carl Jung; Woman in Europe

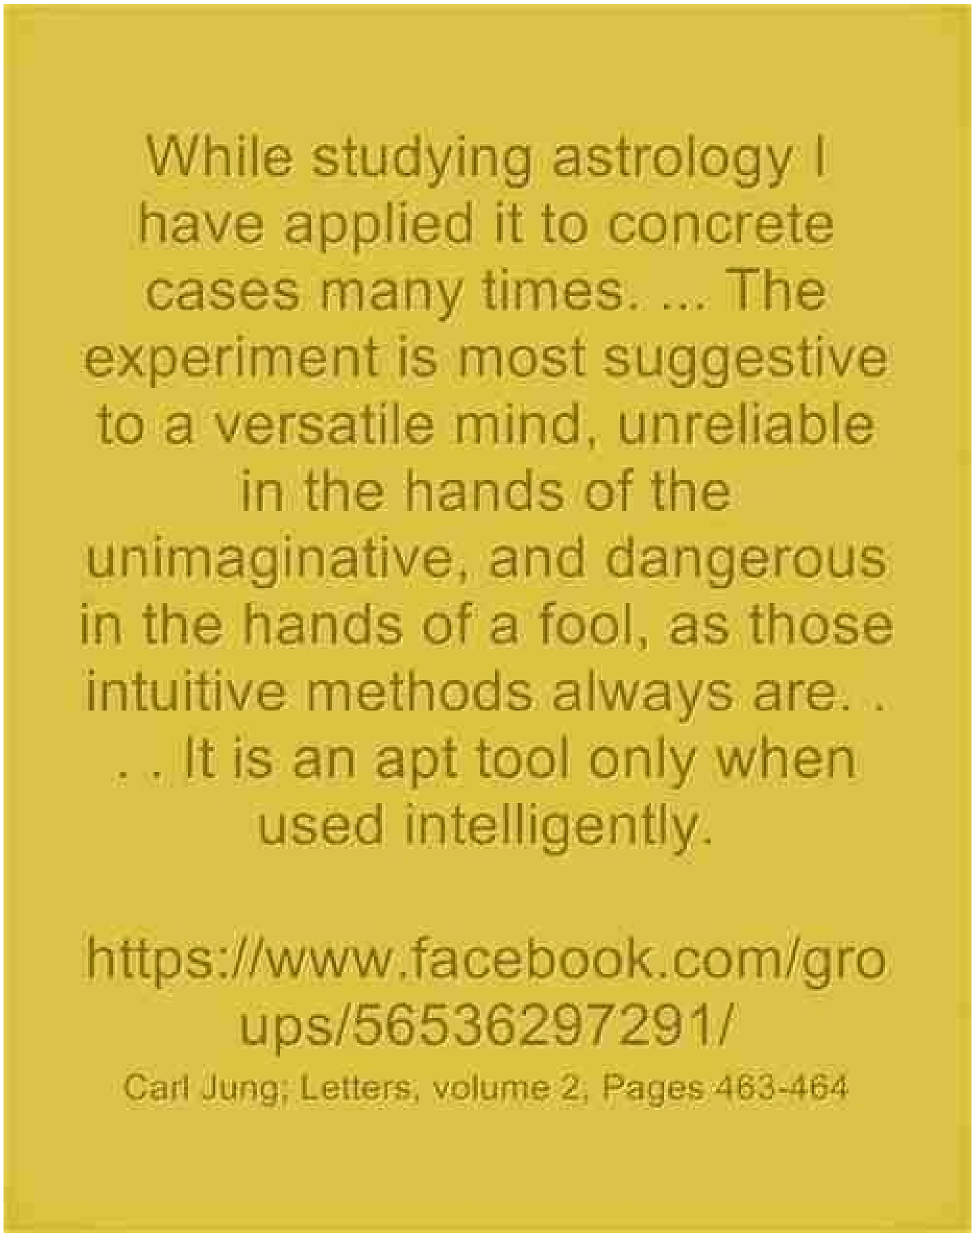
History is not contained in thick books but lives in our very blood. Carl Jung; Woman in Europe.

If it has been believed hitherto that the human shadow was the source of all evil, it can now be ascertained on closer investigation that the unconscious man, that is, his shadow, does not consist only of morally reprehensible tendencies, but also displays a number of good qualities, such as normal instincts, appropriate reactions, realistic insights, creative impulses, etc.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

Carl Jung; Conclusion," CW 9ii, par. 423

If it has been believed hitherto that the human shadow was the source of all evil, it can now be ascertained on closer investigation that the unconscious man, that is, his shadow, does not consist only of morally reprehensible tendencies, but also displays a number of good qualities, such as normal instincts, appropriate reactions, realistic insights, creative impulses, etc. Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 423.

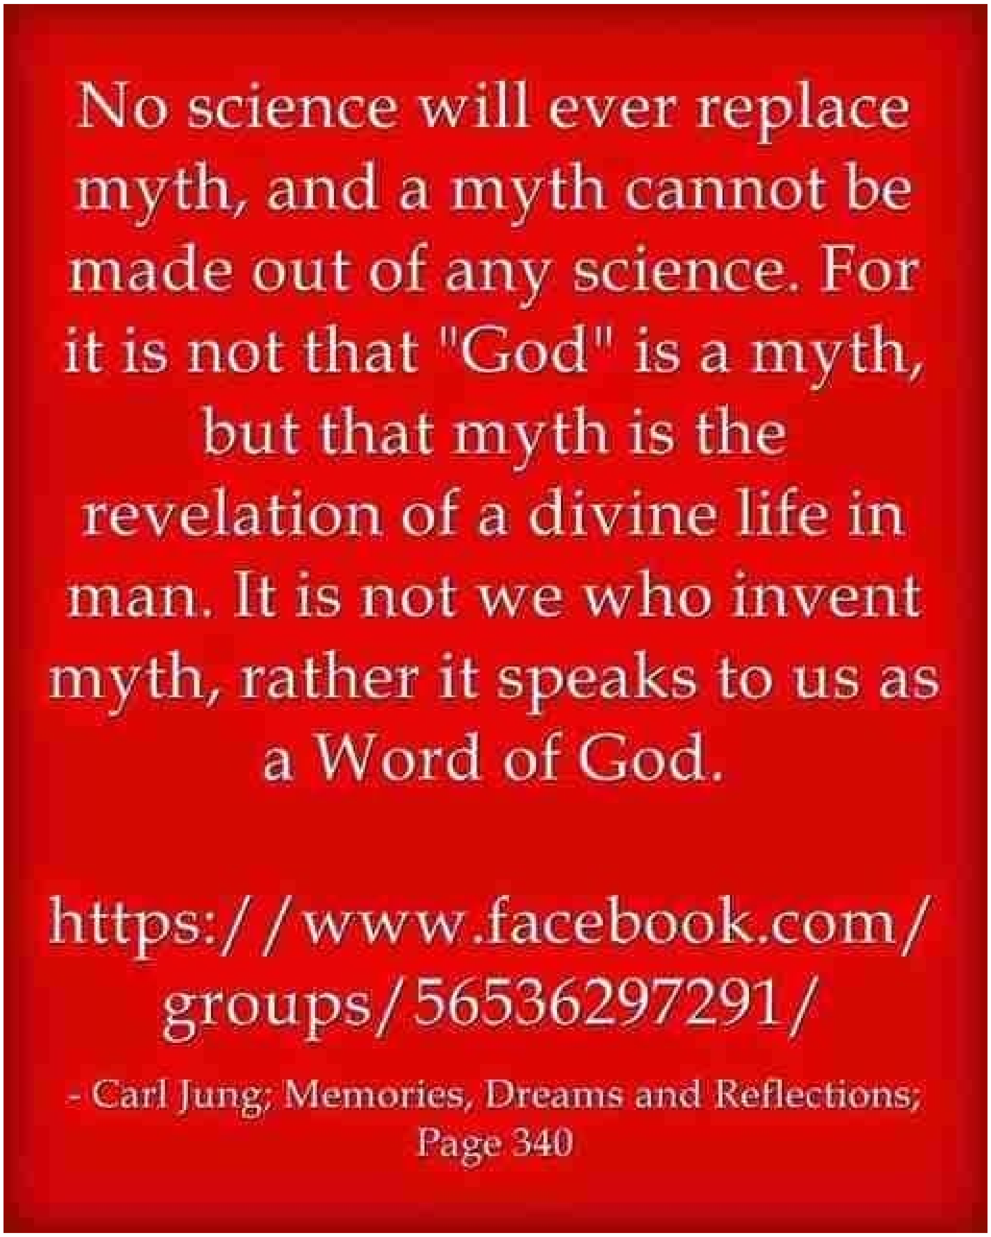


While studying astrology I have applied it to concrete cases many times. ... The experiment is most suggestive to a versatile mind, unreliable in the hands of the unimaginative, and dangerous in the hands of a fool, as those intuitive methods always are. . . . It is an apt tool only when used intelligently.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

Carl Jung; Letters, volume 2, Pages 463-464

While studying astrology I have applied it to concrete cases many times. ... The experiment is most suggestive to a versatile mind, unreliable in the hands of the unimaginative, and dangerous in the hands of a fool, as those intuitive methods always are. . . . It is an apt tool only when used intelligently. Carl Jung

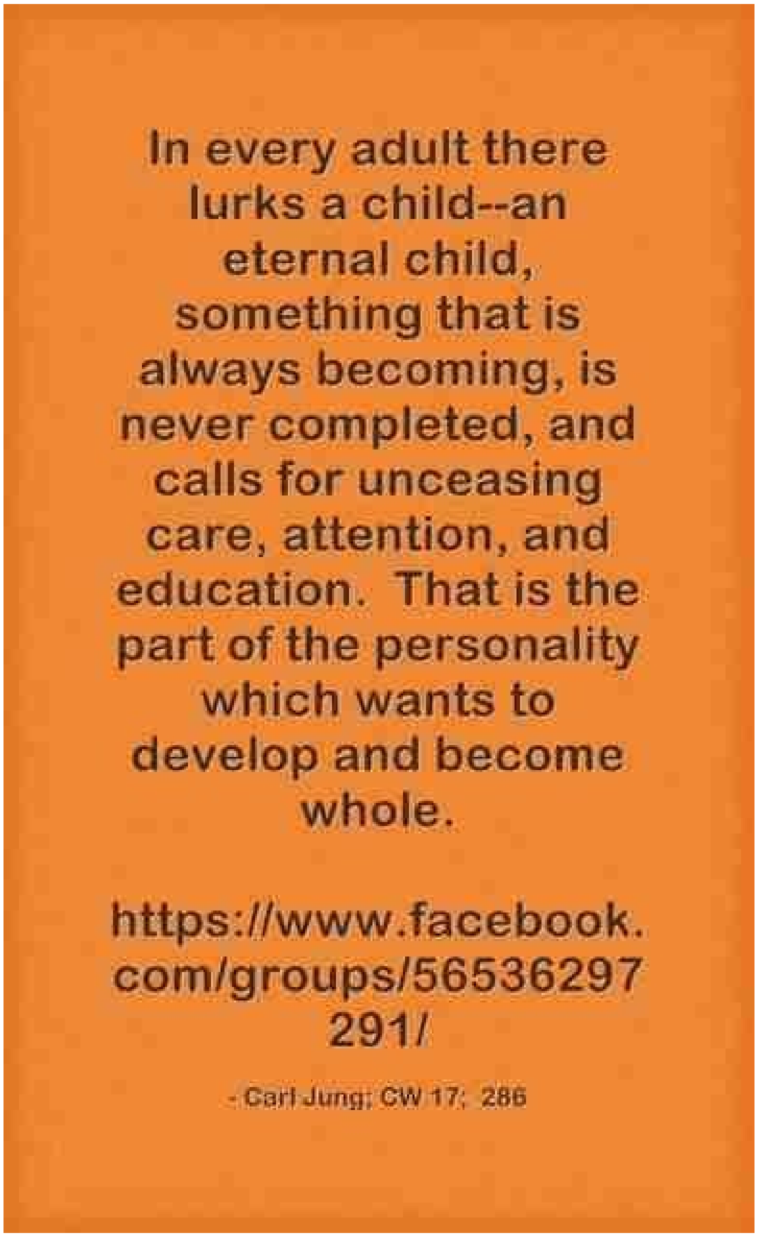


No science will ever replace myth, and a myth cannot be made out of any science. For it is not that "God" is a myth, but that myth is the revelation of a divine life in man. It is not we who invent myth, rather it speaks to us as a Word of God.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 340

No science will ever replace myth, and a myth cannot be made out of any science. For it is not that "God" is a myth, but that myth is the revelation of a divine life in man. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 340.

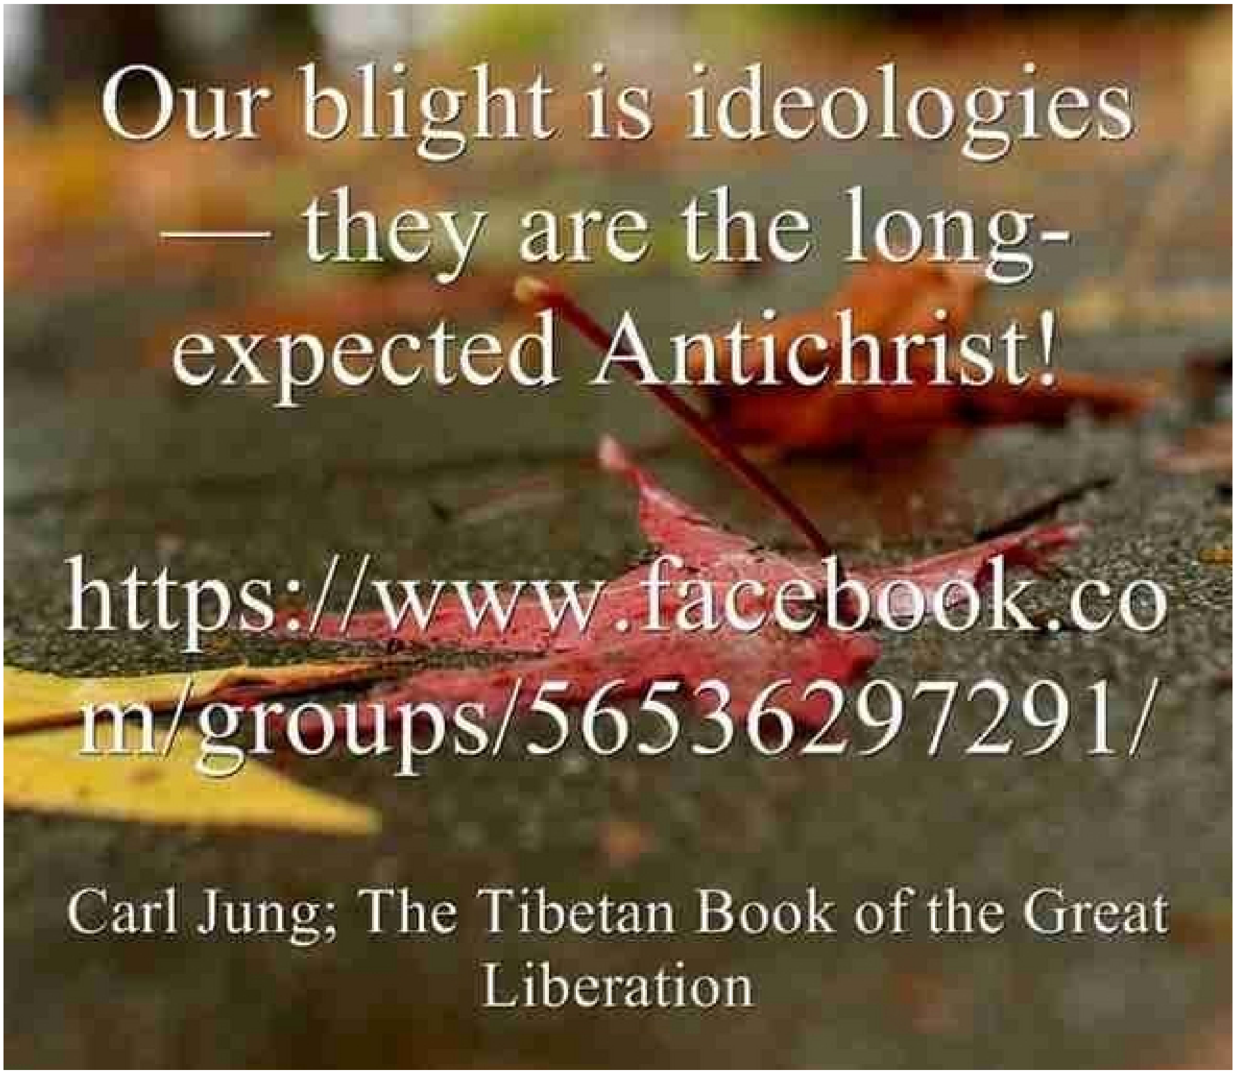


In every adult there lurks a child--an eternal child, something that is always becoming, is never completed, and calls for unceasing care, attention, and education. That is the part of the personality which wants to develop and become whole.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung; CW 17; 286

In every adult there lurks a child–an eternal child, something that is always becoming, is never completed, and calls for unceasing care, attention, and education. That is the part of the personality which wants to develop and become whole. -C. G. Jung CW 17: 286

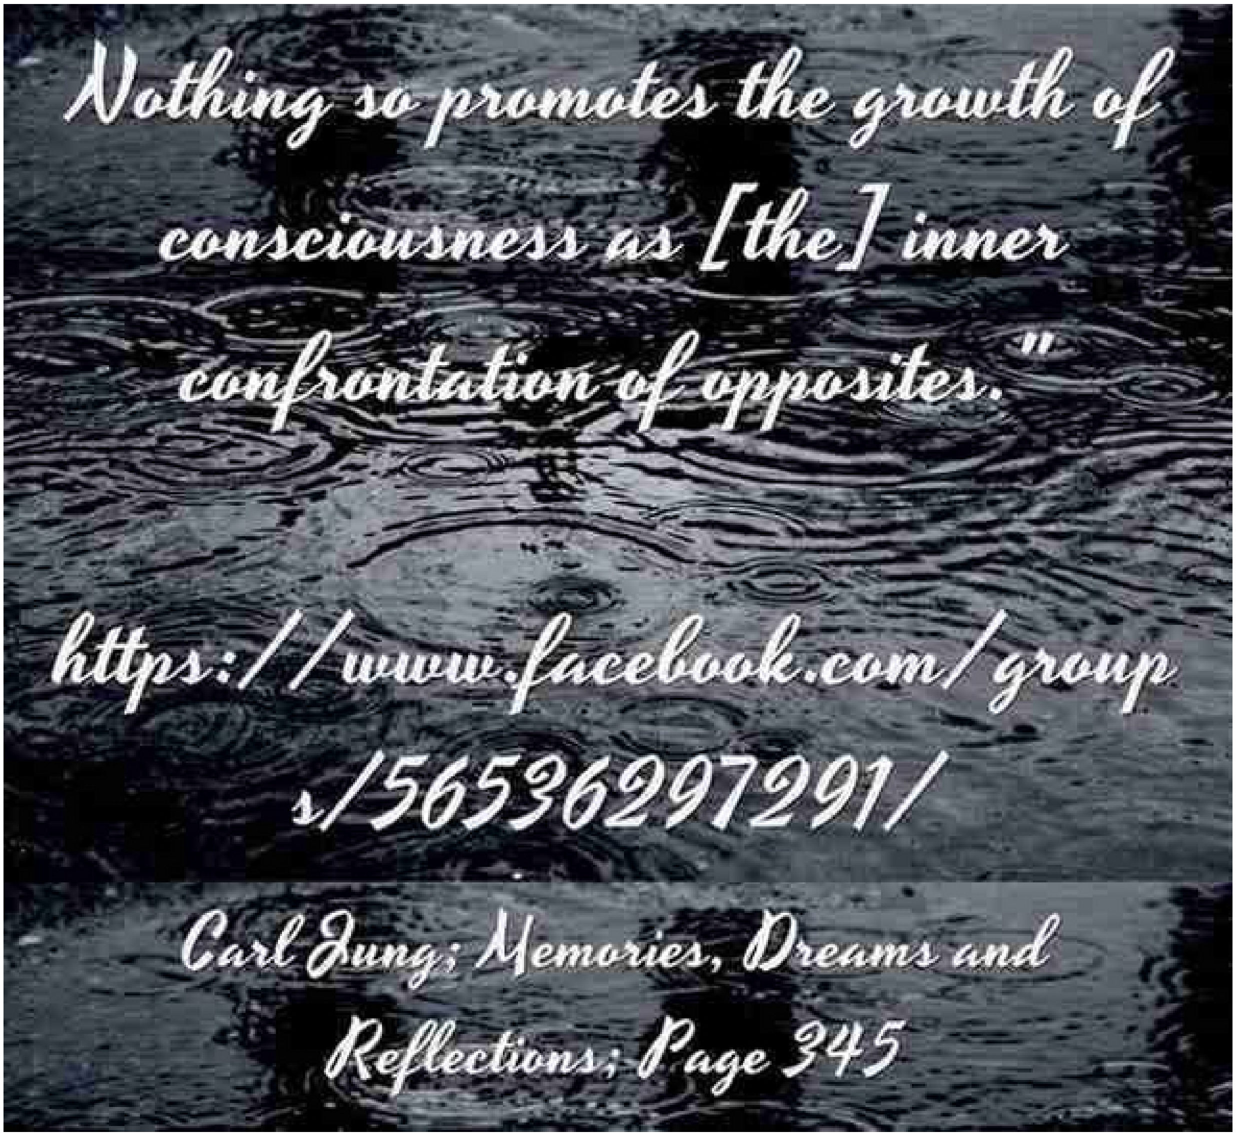


Our blight is ideologies — they are the long-expected Antichrist!

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

Carl Jung; The Tibetan Book of the Great Liberation

Our blight is ideologies — they are the long-expected Antichrist!

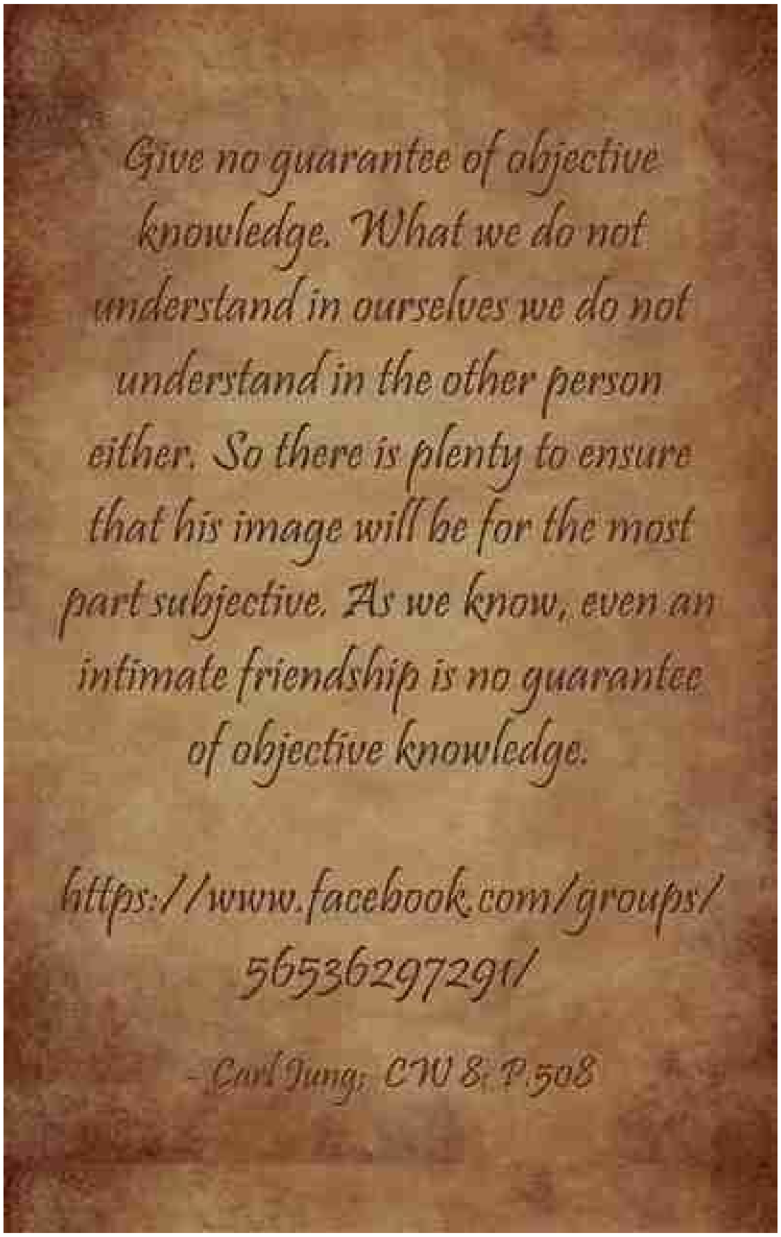


Nothing so promotes the growth of consciousness as [the] inner confrontation of opposites."
https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/
Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 345

Nothing so promotes the growth of consciousness as [the] inner confrontation of opposites." Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 345.

The kernel of all jealousy is lack of love."
https://www.facebook.com/groups/5653629 7291/
Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 137.

The kernel of all jealousy is lack of love. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 137.

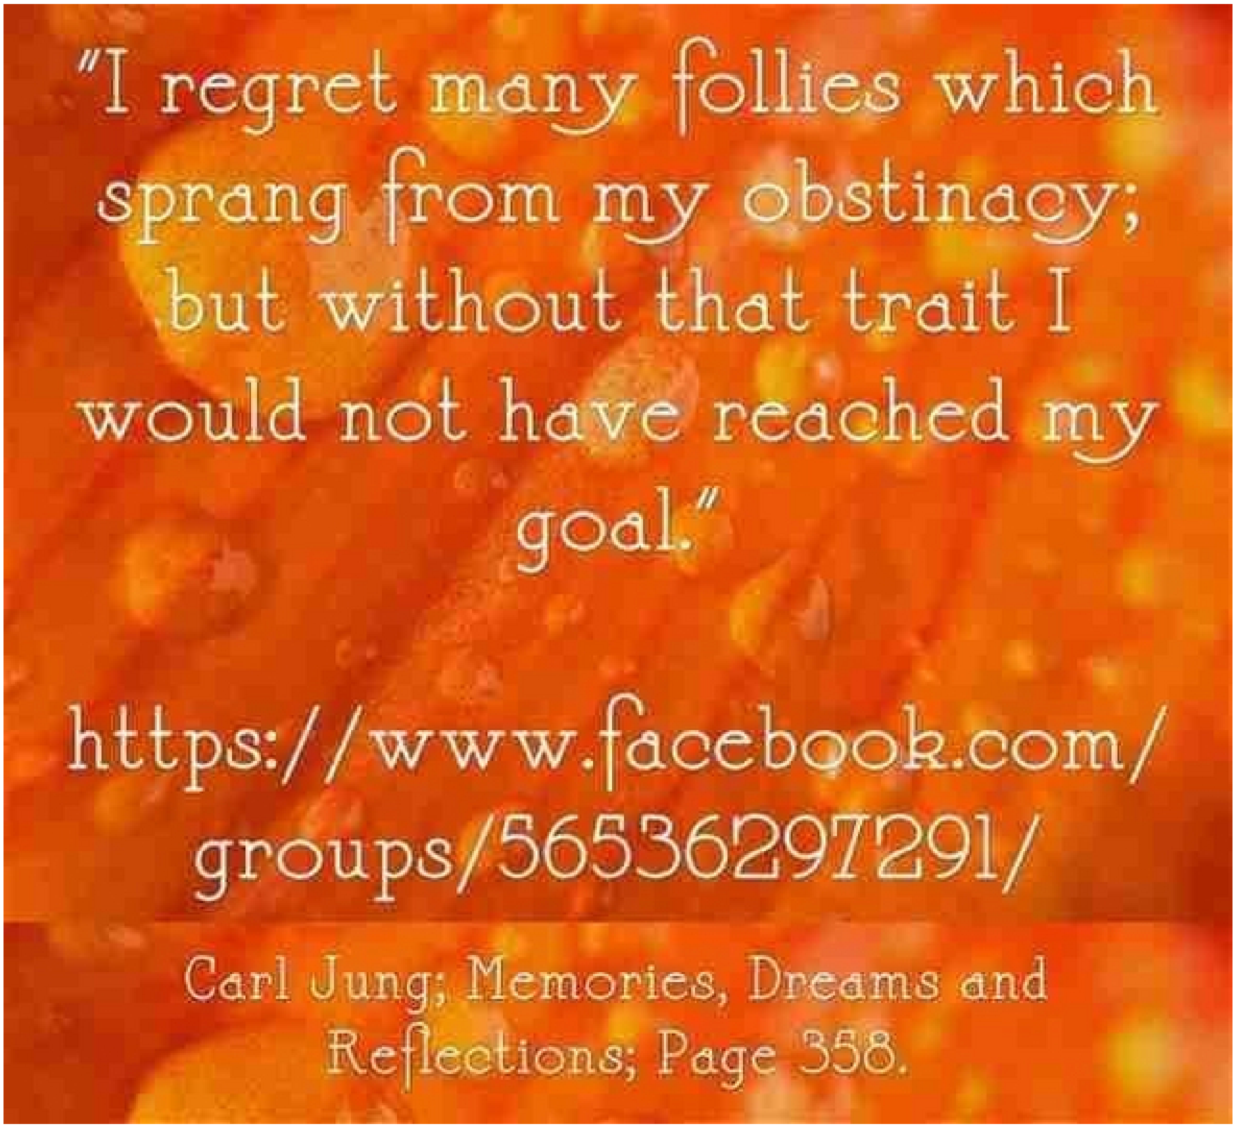


Give no guarantee of objective knowledge. What we do not understand in ourselves we do not understand in the other person either. So there is plenty to ensure that his image will be for the most part subjective. As we know, even an intimate friendship is no guarantee of objective knowledge.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung; CW 8; P.508

Give no guarantee of objective knowledge. What we do not understand in ourselves we do not understand in the other person either. So there is plenty to ensure that his image will be for the most part subjective. As we know, even an intimate friendship is no guarantee of objective knowledge. – Carl Jung; General Aspects of Dreams Psychology" (1916). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.508



"I regret many follies which sprang from my obstinacy; but without that trait I would not have reached my goal."

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 358.

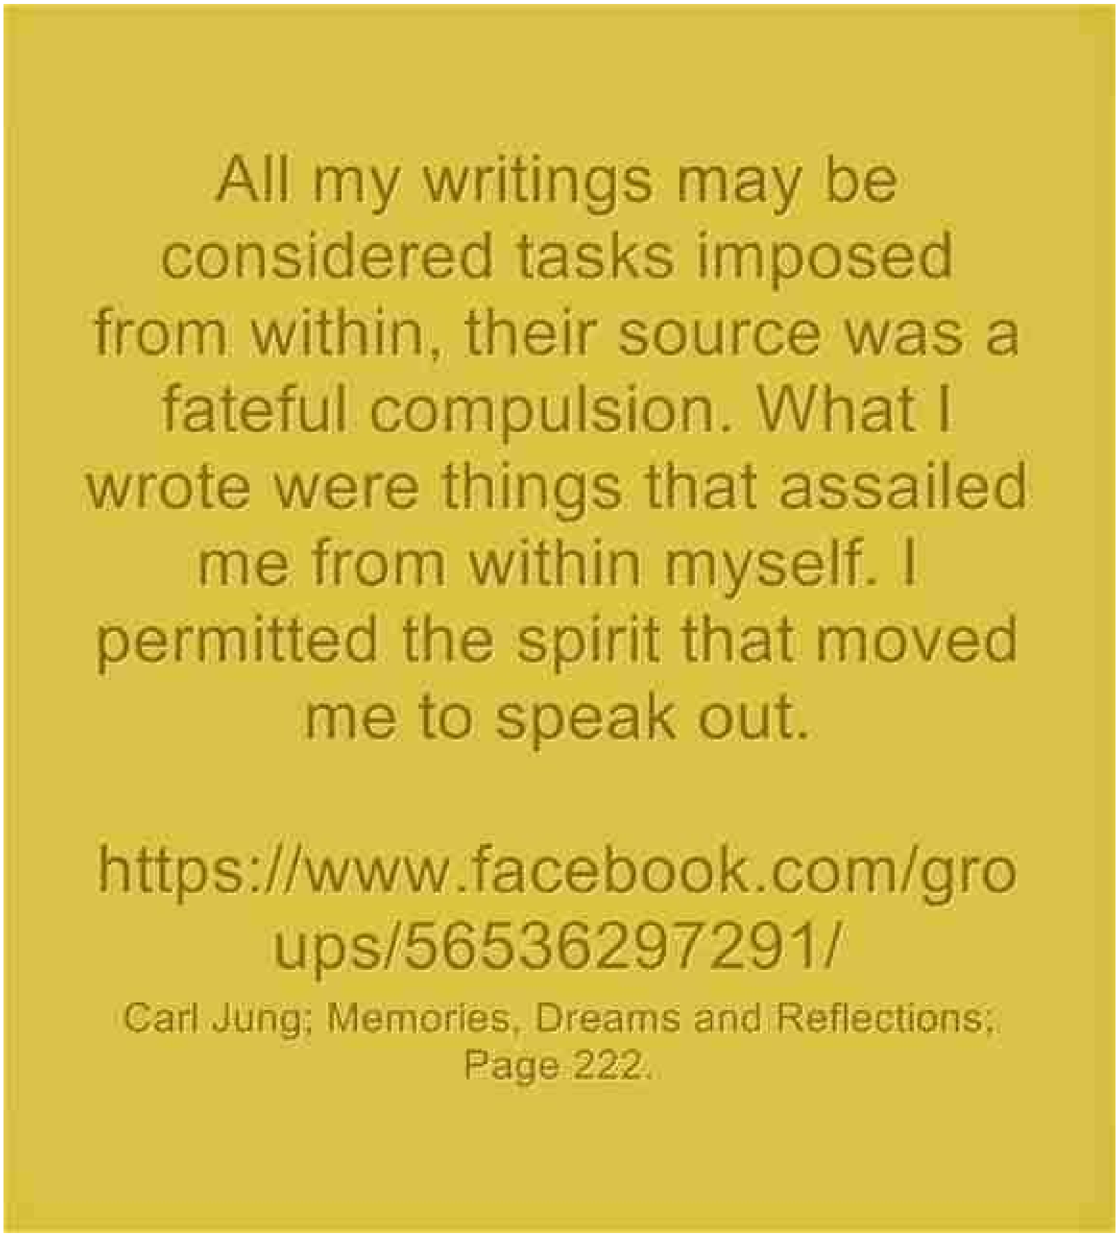
I regret many follies which sprang from my obstinacy; but without that trait I would not have reached my goal. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 358

If a man knows more than others, he becomes lonely. But loneliness is not necessarily inimical to companionship, for no one is more sensitive to companionship than the lonely man, and companionship thrives only when each individual remembers his individuality and does not identify himself with others.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

~Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 356.

If a man knows more than others, he becomes lonely. But loneliness is not necessarily inimical to companionship, for no one is more sensitive to companionship than the lonely man, and companionship thrives only when each individual remembers his individuality and does not identify himself with others. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 356.

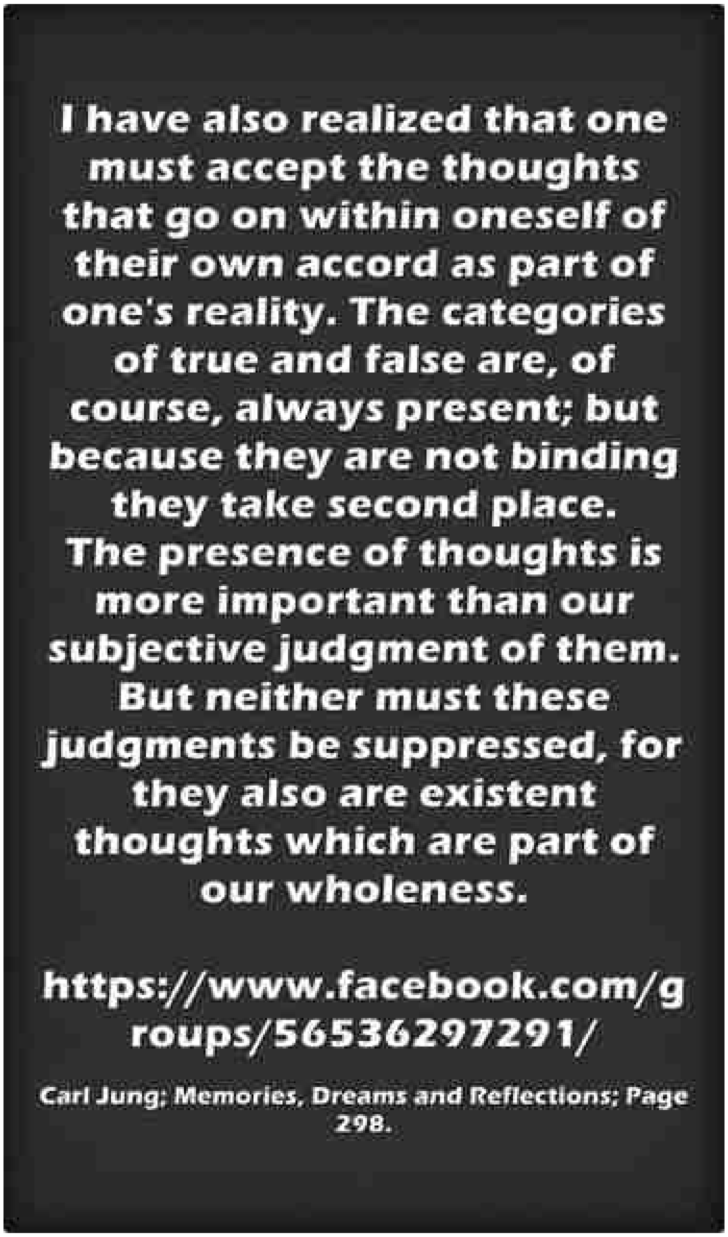


All my writings may be considered tasks imposed from within, their source was a fateful compulsion. What I wrote were things that assailed me from within myself. I permitted the spirit that moved me to speak out.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 222.

"All my writings may be considered tasks imposed from within, their source was a fateful compulsion. What I wrote were things that assailed me from within myself. I permitted the spirit that moved me to speak out." Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 222.

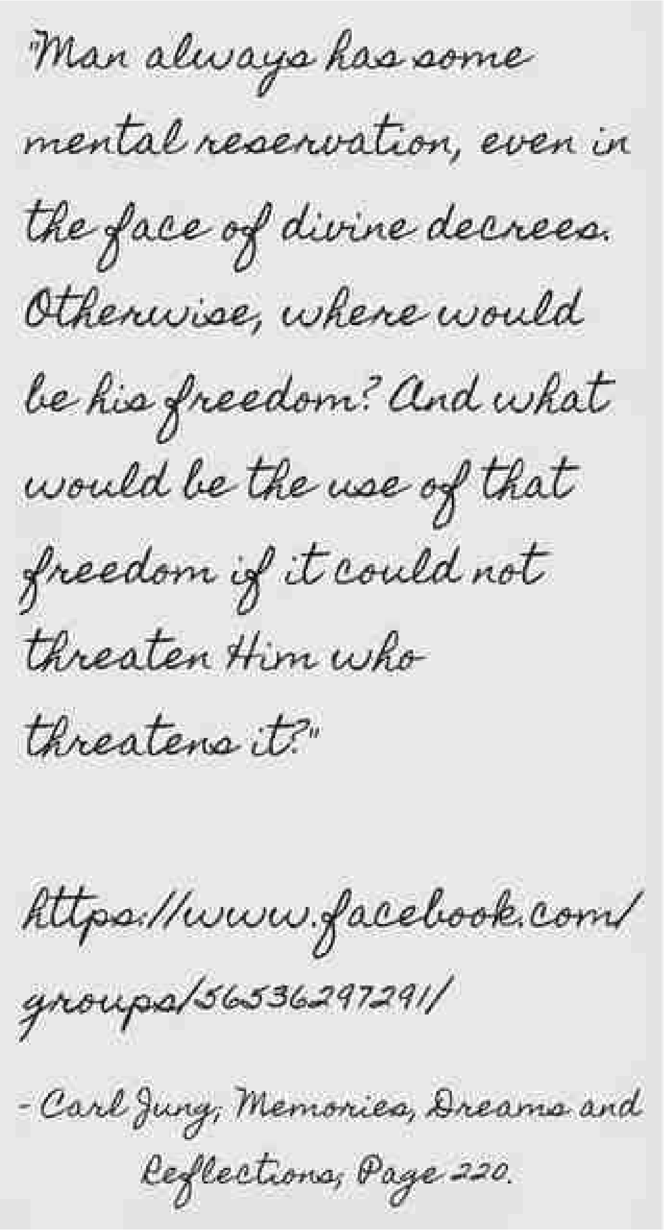


I have also realized that one must accept the thoughts that go on within oneself of their own accord as part of one's reality. The categories of true and false are, of course, always present; but because they are not binding they take second place. The presence of thoughts is more important than our subjective judgment of them. But neither must these judgments be suppressed, for they also are existent thoughts which are part of our wholeness.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 298.

I have also realized that one must accept the thoughts that go on within oneself of their own accord as part of one's reality. The categories of true and false are, of course, always present; but because they are not binding they take second place. The presence of thoughts is more important than our subjective judgment of them. But neither must these judgments be suppressed, for they also are existent thoughts which are part of our wholeness. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 298.

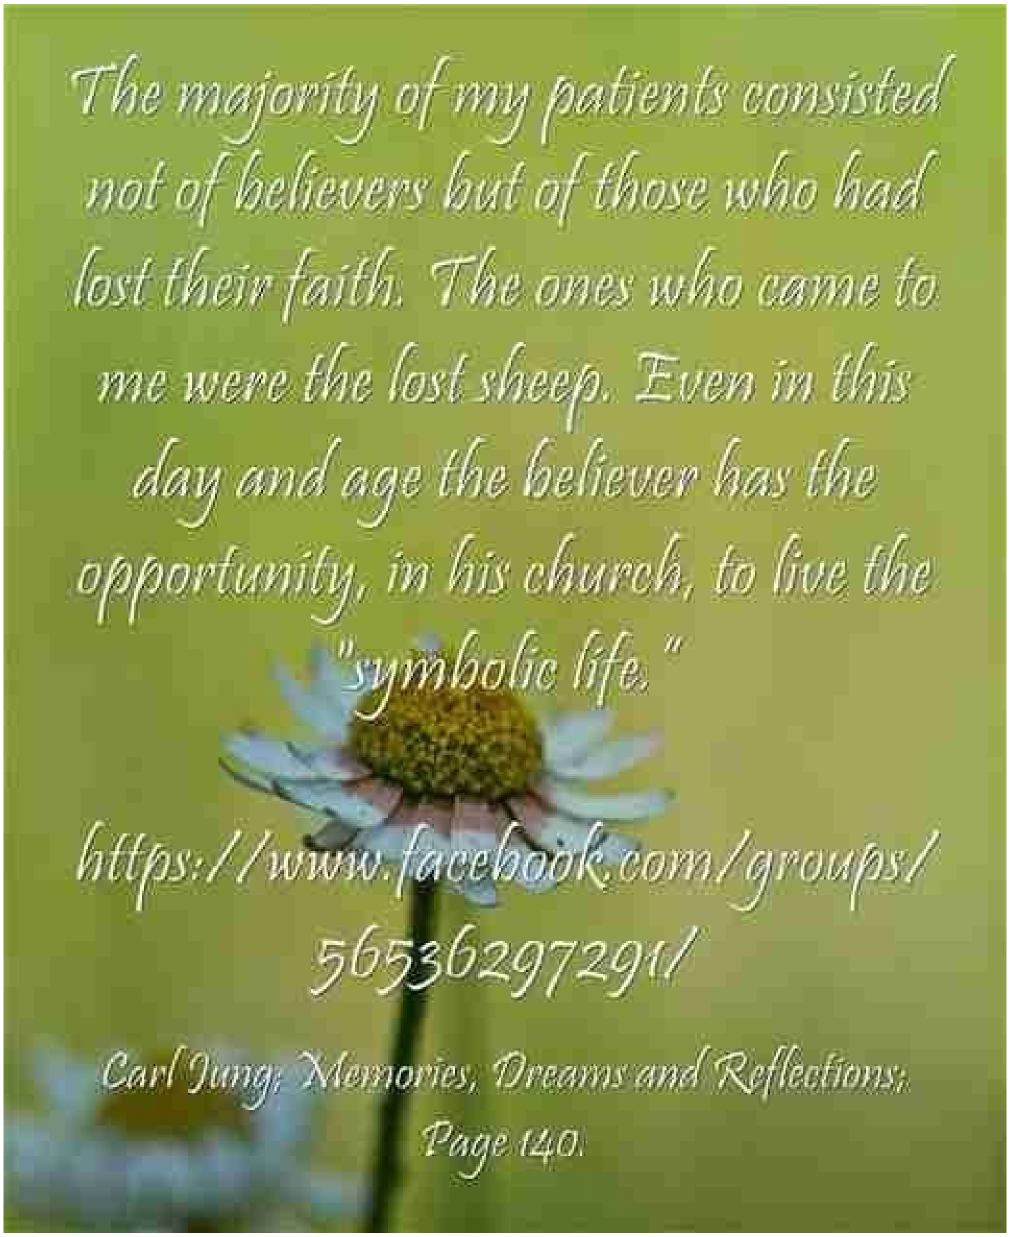


"Man always has some mental reservation, even in the face of divine decrees. Otherwise, where would be his freedom? And what would be the use of that freedom if it could not threaten Him who threatens it?"

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 220.

Man always has some mental reservation, even in the face of divine decrees. Otherwise, where would be his freedom? And what would be the use of that freedom if it could not threaten Him who threatens it? Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 220

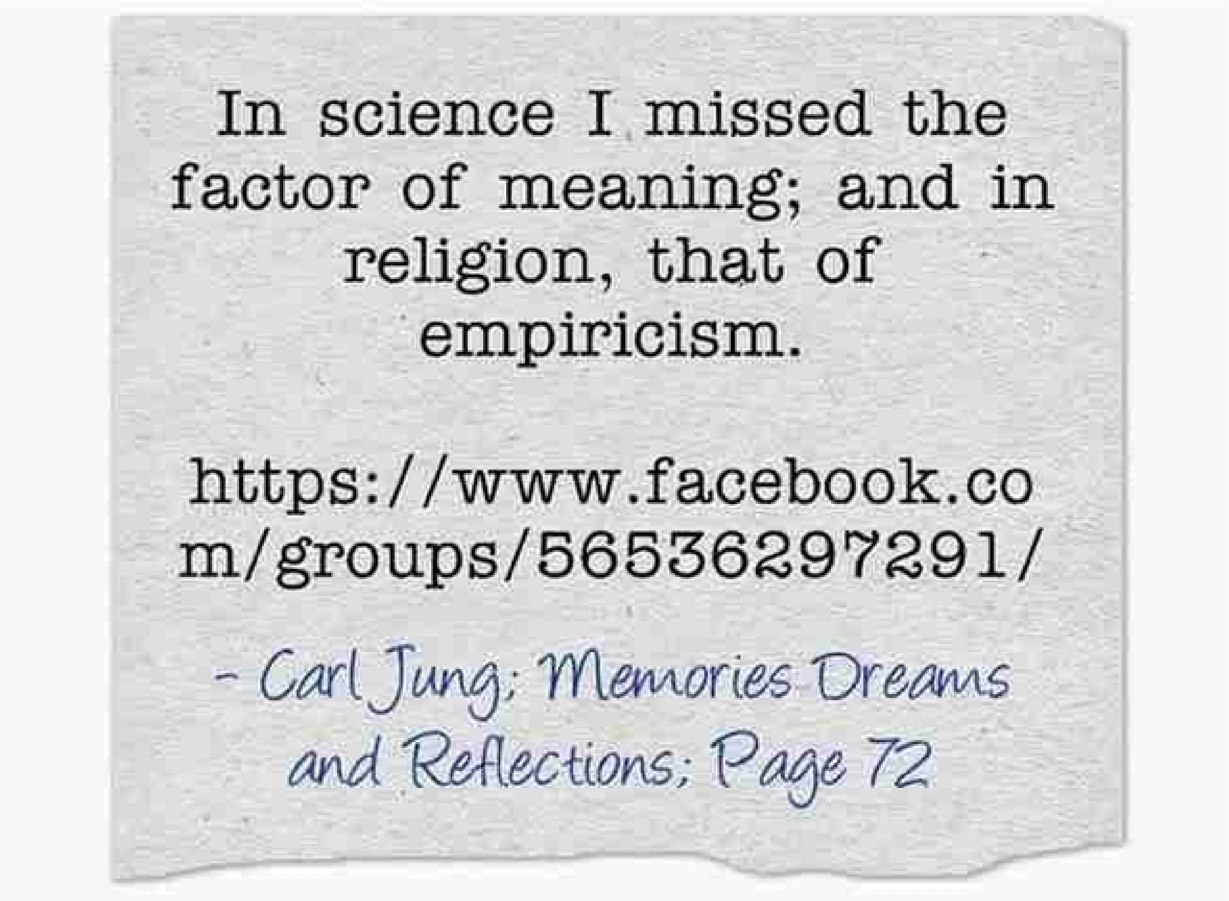


The majority of my patients consisted not of believers but of those who had lost their faith. The ones who came to me were the lost sheep. Even in this day and age the believer has the opportunity, in his church, to live the "symbolic life."

https://www.facebook.com/groups/565362972911/

Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 140.

The majority of my patients consisted not of believers but of those who had lost their faith. The ones who came to me were the lost sheep. Even in this day and age the believer has the opportunity, in his church, to live the "symbolic life." Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 140.

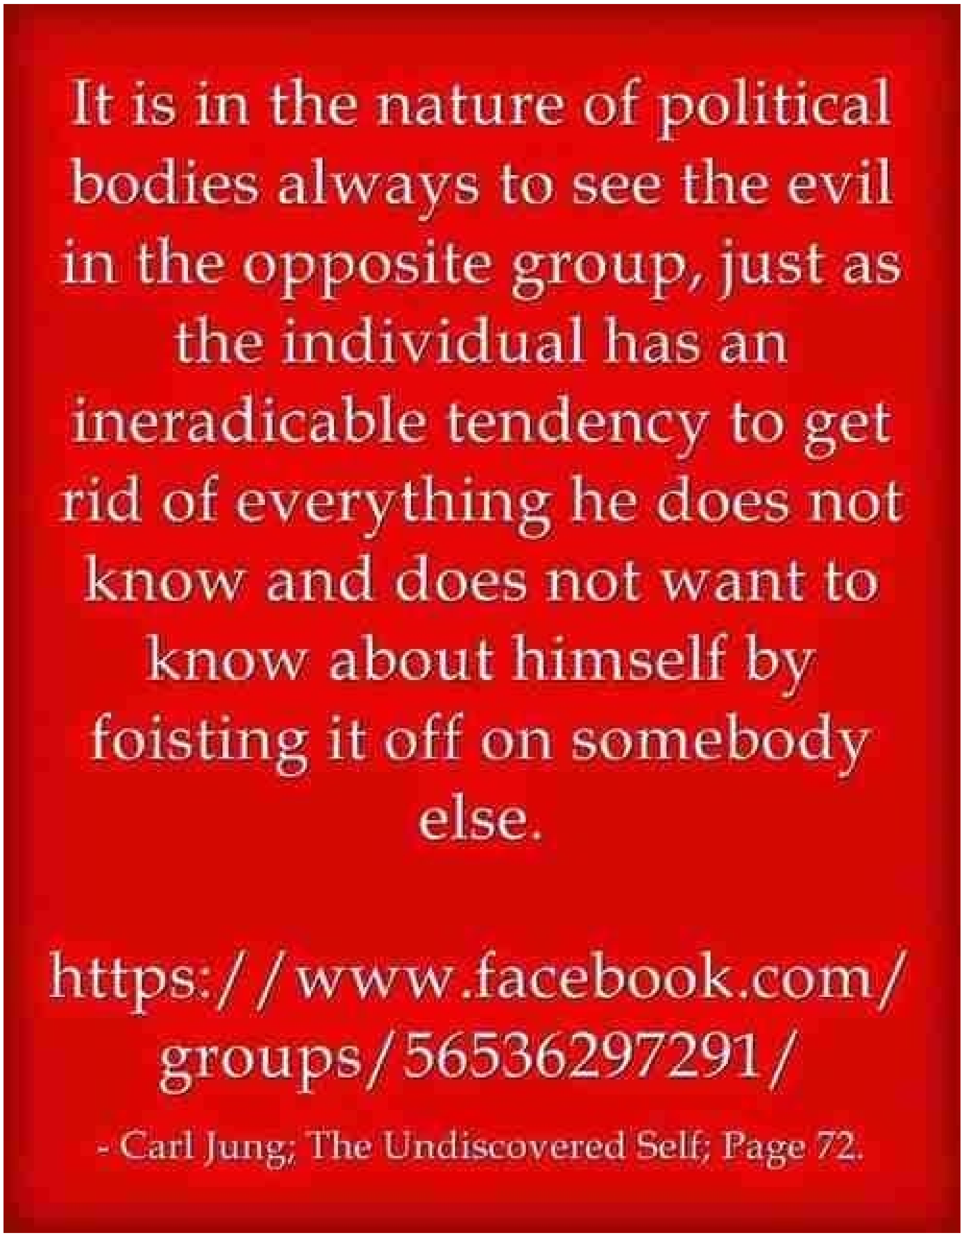


In science I missed the factor of meaning; and in religion, that of empiricism.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 72

In science I missed the factor of meaning; and in religion, that of empiricism. Science met, to a very large extent, the needs of No. i personality, whereas the humane or historical studies provided beneficial instruction for No. 2. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams, Reflections; Page 72



It is in the nature of political bodies always to see the evil in the opposite group, just as the individual has an ineradicable tendency to get rid of everything he does not know and does not want to know about himself by foisting it off on somebody else.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 72.

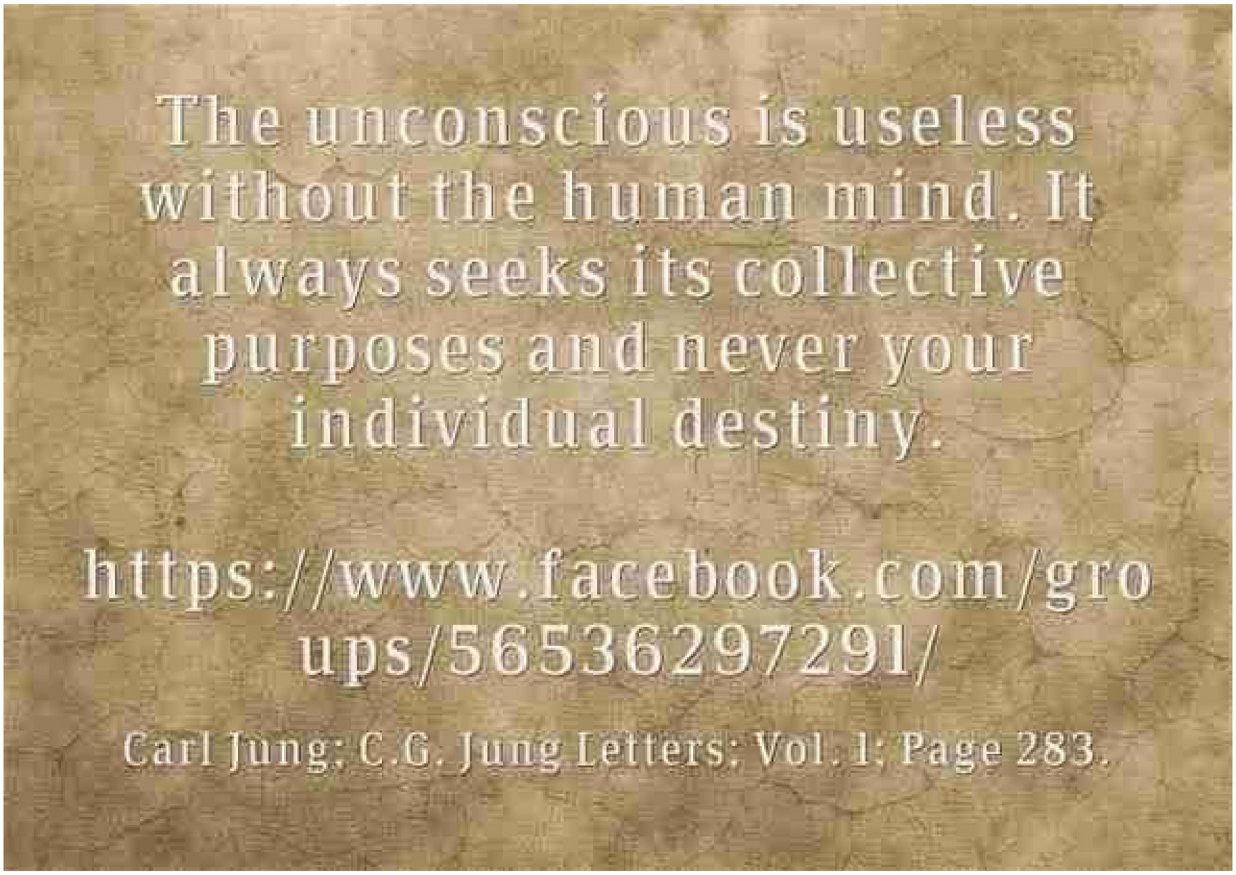
It is in the nature of political bodies always to see the evil in the opposite group, just as the individual has an ineradicable tendency to get rid of everything he does not know and does not want to know about himself by foisting it off on somebody else. Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 72

The bigger the crowd, the more negligible the individual.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/565362972291/

- Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 10.

"The bigger the crowd, the more negligible the individual." Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 10.

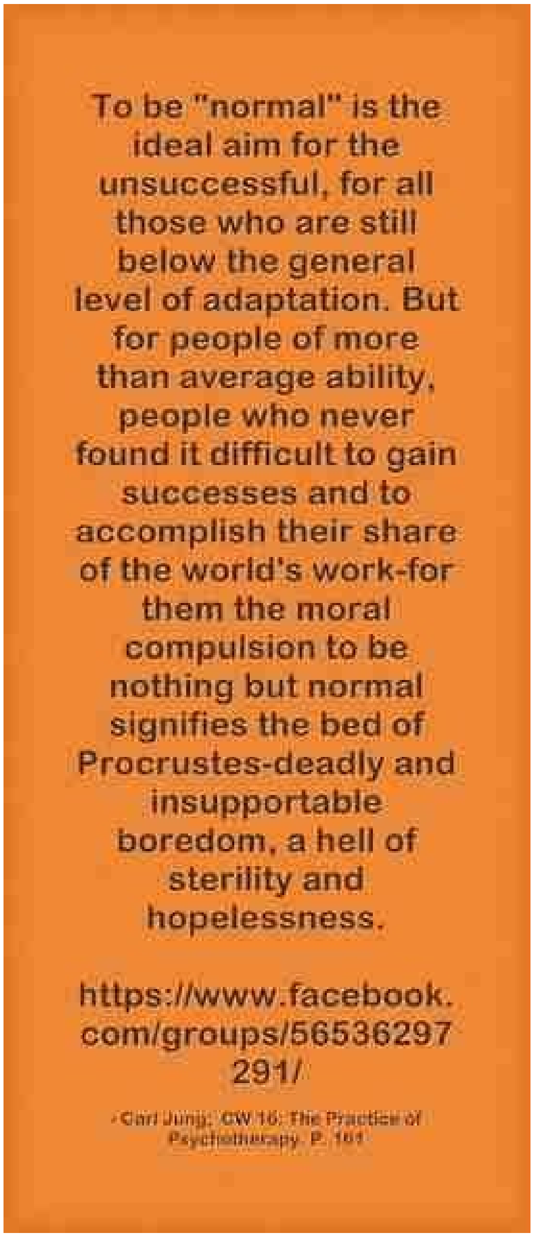


The unconscious is useless without the human mind. It always seeks its collective purposes and never your individual destiny.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

Carl Jung; C.G. Jung Letters; Vol. 1; Page 283.

The unconscious is useless without the human mind. It always seeks its collective purposes and never your individual destiny. Carl Jung; C.G. Jung Letters; Vol. 1; Page 283.



To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful, for all those who are still below the general level of adaptation. But for people of more than average ability, people who never found it difficult to gain successes and to accomplish their share of the world's work-for them the moral compulsion to be nothing but normal signifies the bed of Procrustes-deadly and insupportable boredom, a hell of sterility and hopelessness.

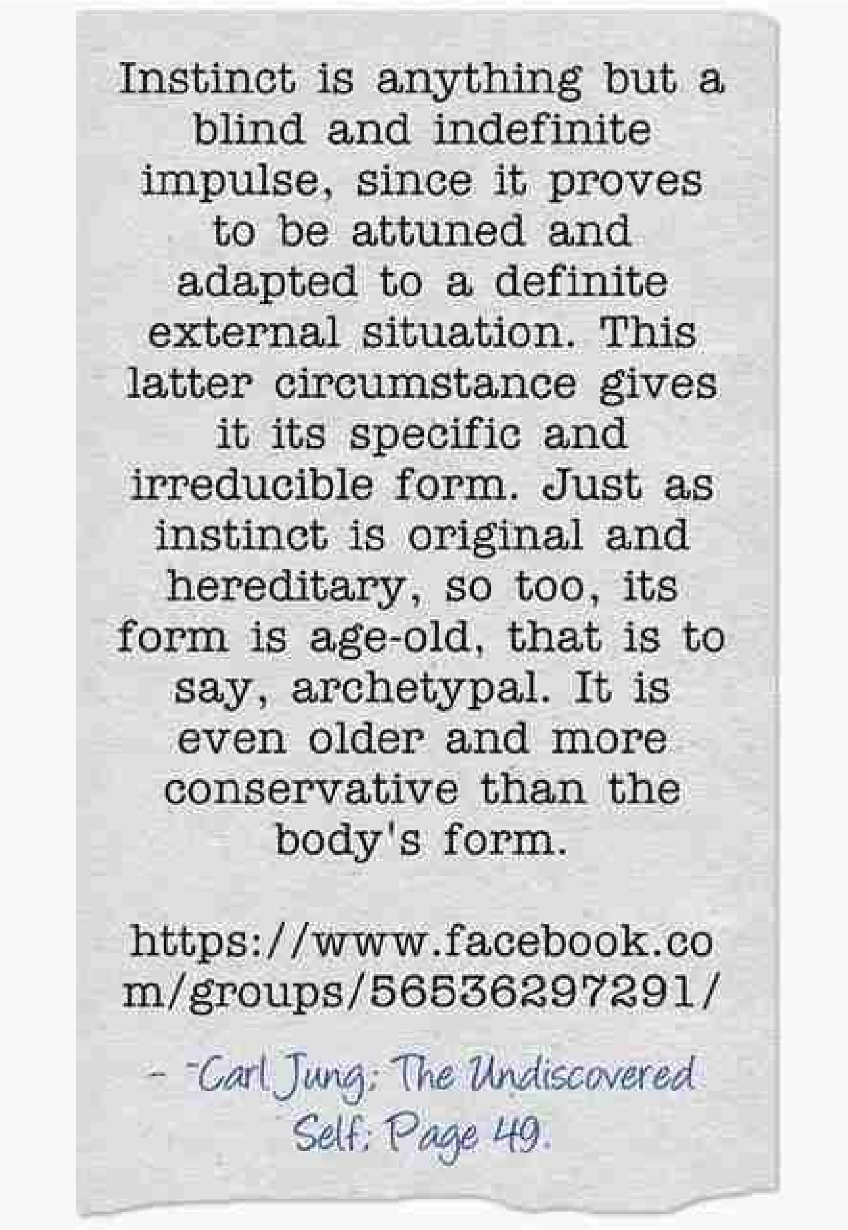
https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung; CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy, P. 161

[24]

To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful, for all those who are still below the general level of adaptation. But for people of more than average ability, people who never found it difficult to gain successes and to accomplish their share of the world's work-for them the moral compulsion to be nothing but normal signifies the bed of Procrustes-deadly and insupportable boredom, a hell of sterility and hopelessness. Carl Jung; CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; P. 161.

[25]



Instinct is anything but a blind and indefinite impulse, since it proves to be attuned and adapted to a definite external situation. This latter circumstance gives it its specific and irreducible form. Just as instinct is original and hereditary, so too, its form is age-old, that is to say, archetypal. It is even older and more conservative than the body's form.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- -Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 49.

Instinct is anything but a blind and indefinite impulse, since it proves to be attuned and adapted to a definite external situation. This latter circumstance gives it its specific and irreducible form. Just as instinct is original and hereditary, so too, its form is age-old, that is to say, archetypal. It is even older and more conservative than the body's form. Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 49.

Just as the body bears the traces of its phylogenetic development, so also does the human mind. Hence there is nothing surprising about the possibility that the figurative language of dreams is a survival from an archaic mode of thought.
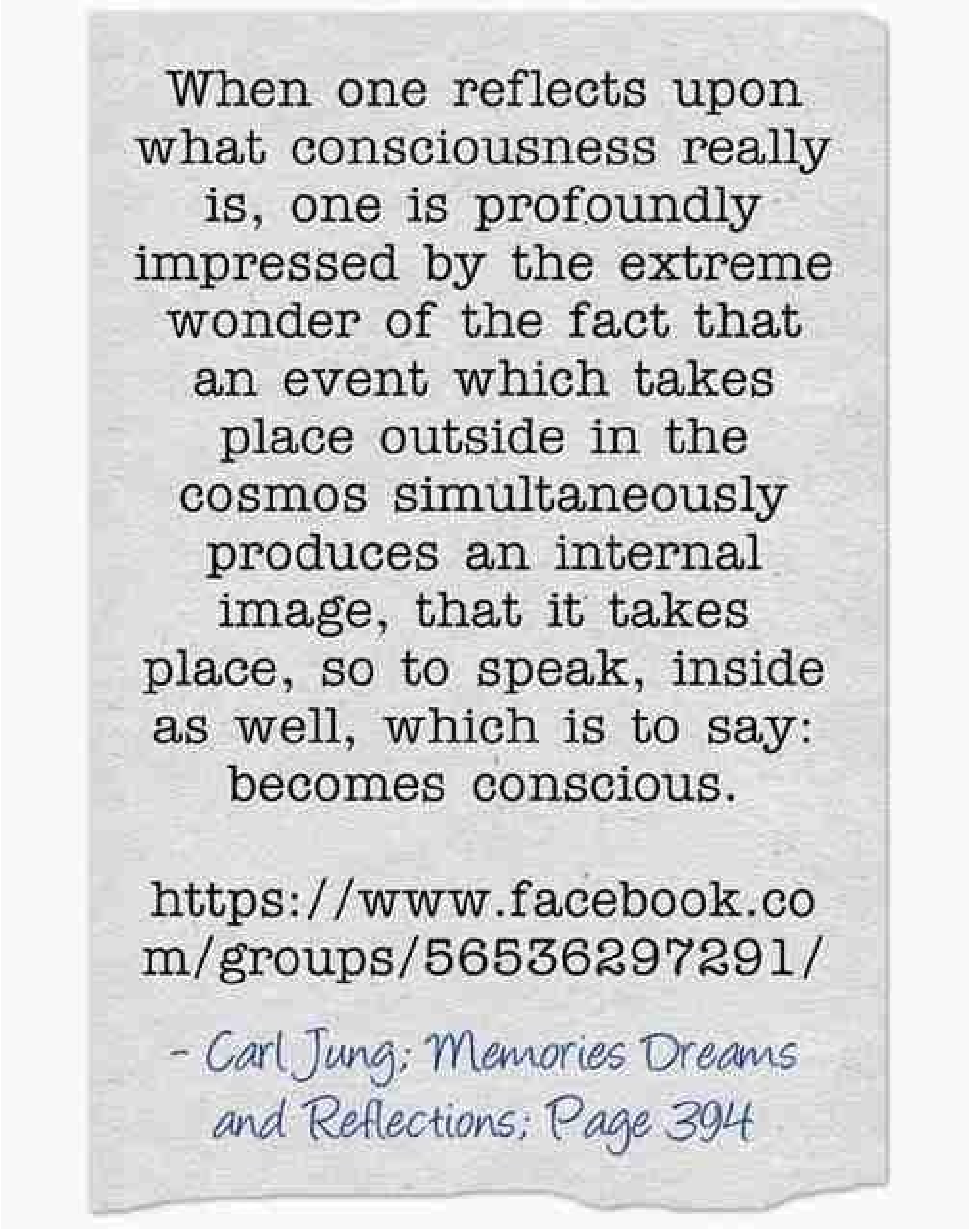
https://www.facebook.com/groups/
56536297291/
~Carl Jung; CW 8:Page 475.

Just as the body bears the traces of its phylogenetic development, so also does the human mind. Hence there is nothing surprising about the possibility that the figurative language of dreams is a survival from an archaic mode of thought. Carl Jung; General Aspects of Dream Psychology; and CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche; Page 475.

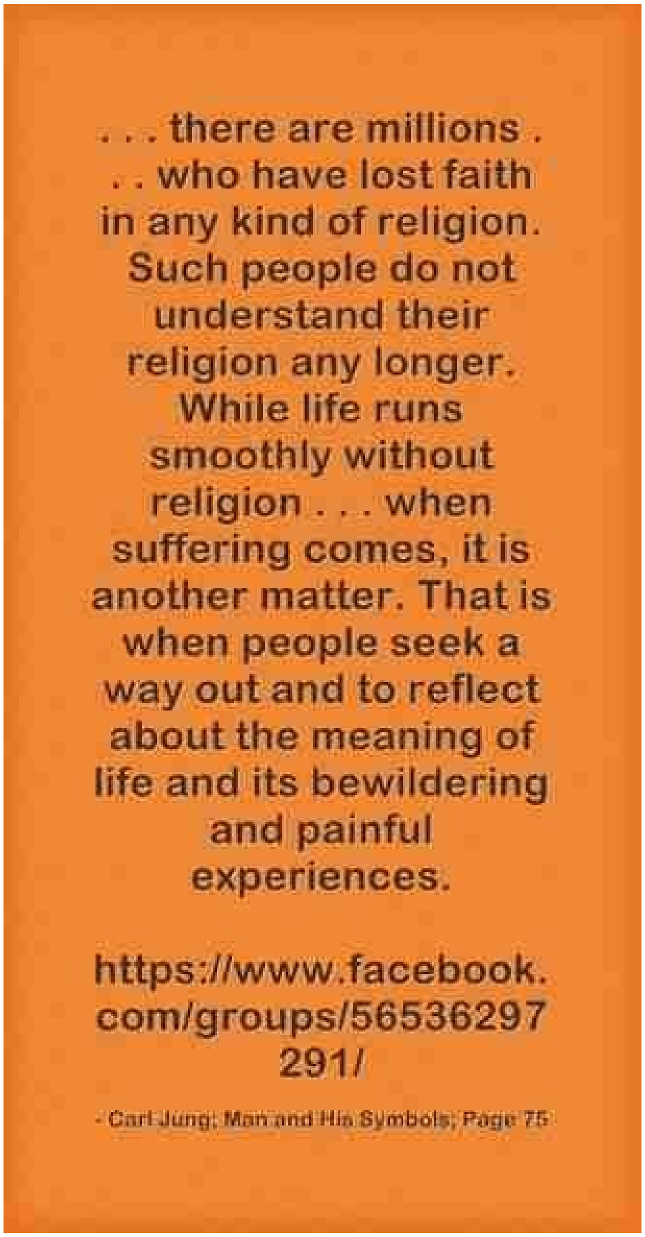


When one reflects upon what consciousness really is, one is profoundly impressed by the extreme wonder of the fact that an event which takes place outside in the cosmos simultaneously produces an internal image, that it takes place, so to speak, inside as well, which is to say: becomes conscious.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung: Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 394

When one reflects upon what consciousness really is, one is profoundly impressed by the extreme wonder of the fact that an event which takes place outside in the cosmos simultaneously produces an internal image, that it takes place, so to speak, inside as well, which is to say: becomes conscious. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 394 and Basel Seminar, privately printed, 1934, p. 1.

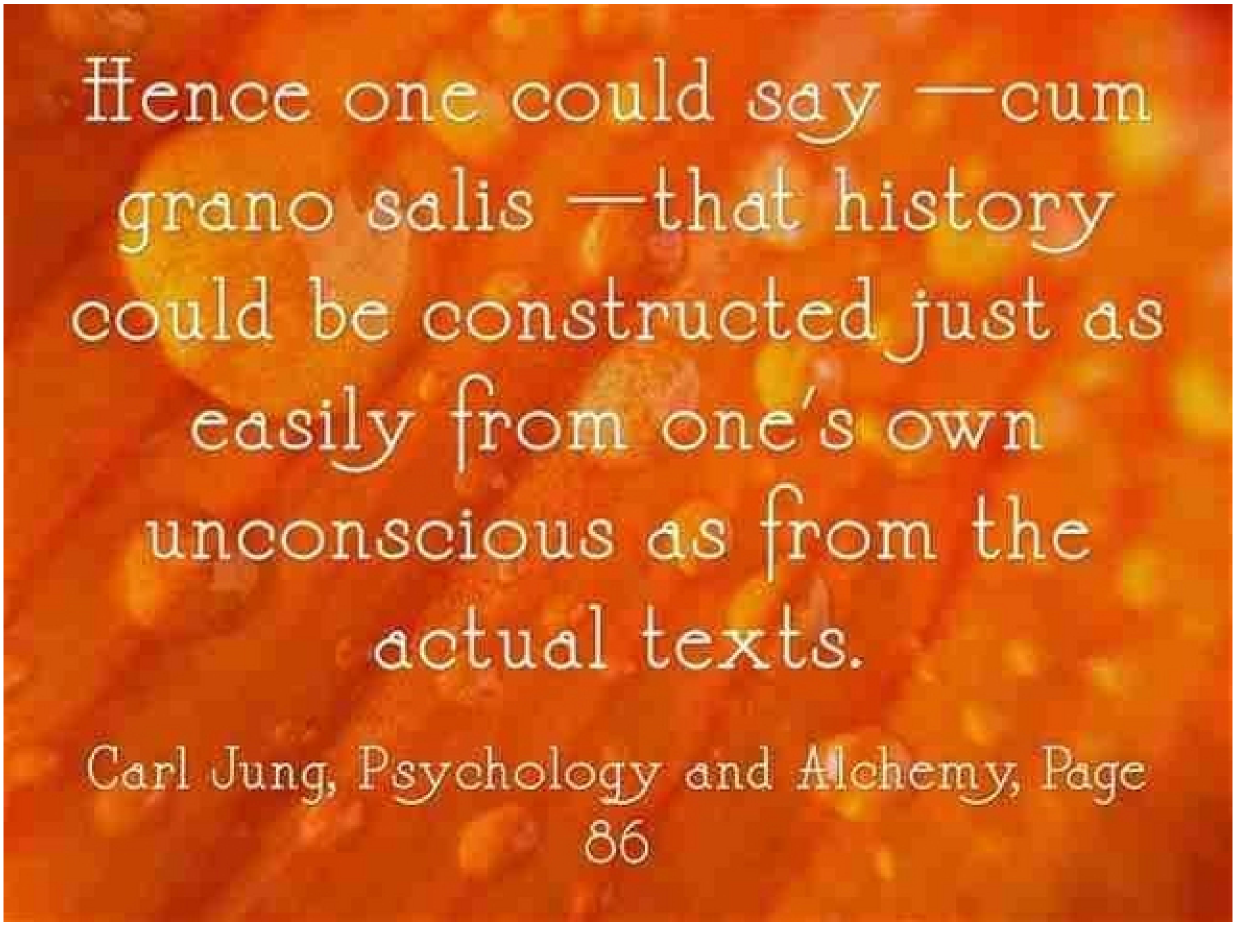


. . . there are millions . . . who have lost faith in any kind of religion. Such people do not understand their religion any longer. While life runs smoothly without religion . . . when suffering comes, it is another matter. That is when people seek a way out and to reflect about the meaning of life and its bewildering and painful experiences.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 75

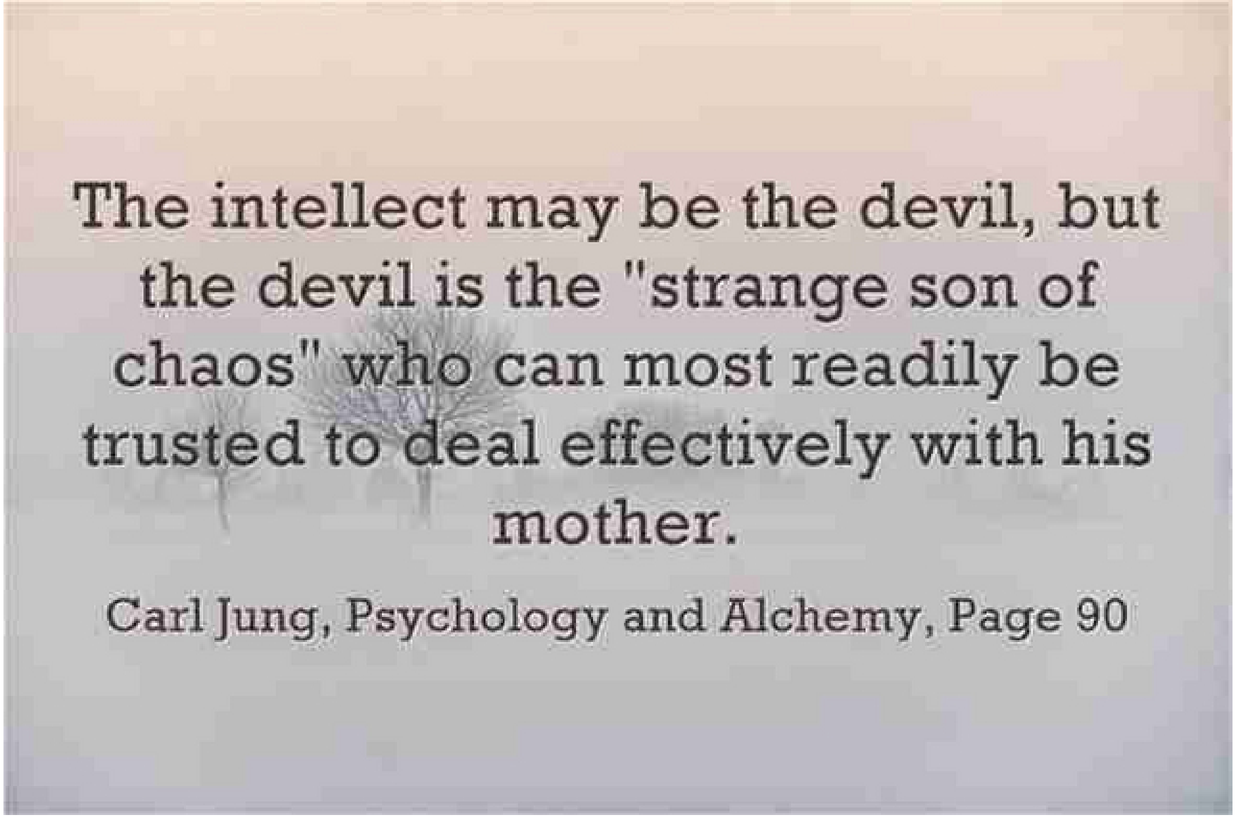
. . . there are millions . . . who have lost faith in any kind of religion. Such people do not understand their religion any longer. While life runs smoothly without religion . . . when suffering comes, it is another matter. That is when people seek a way out and to reflect about the meaning of life and its bewildering and painful experiences. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 75



Hence one could say —cum grano salis —that history could be constructed just as easily from one's own unconscious as from the actual texts.

Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 86

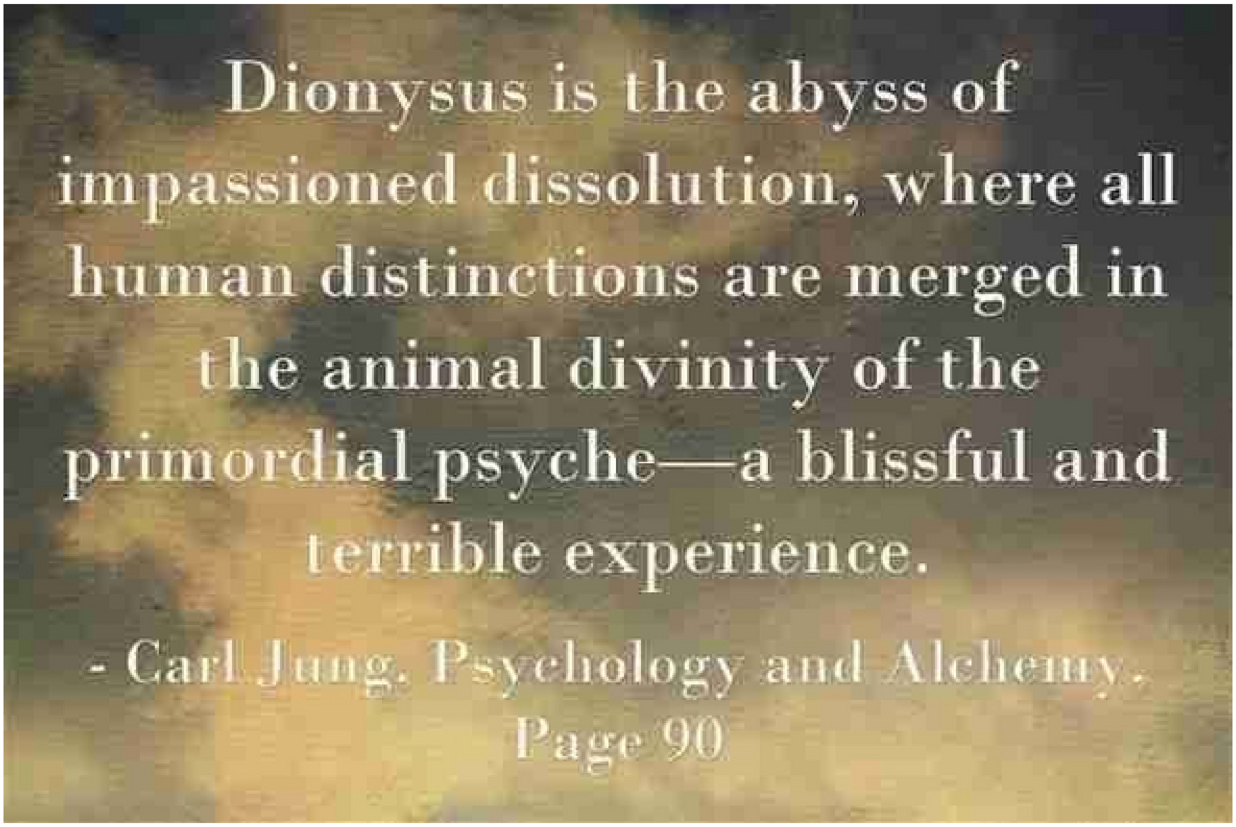
Hence one could say —cum grano salis —that history could be constructed just as easily from one's own unconscious as from the actual texts. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 86.



The intellect may be the devil, but the devil is the "strange son of chaos" who can most readily be trusted to deal effectively with his mother.

Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 90

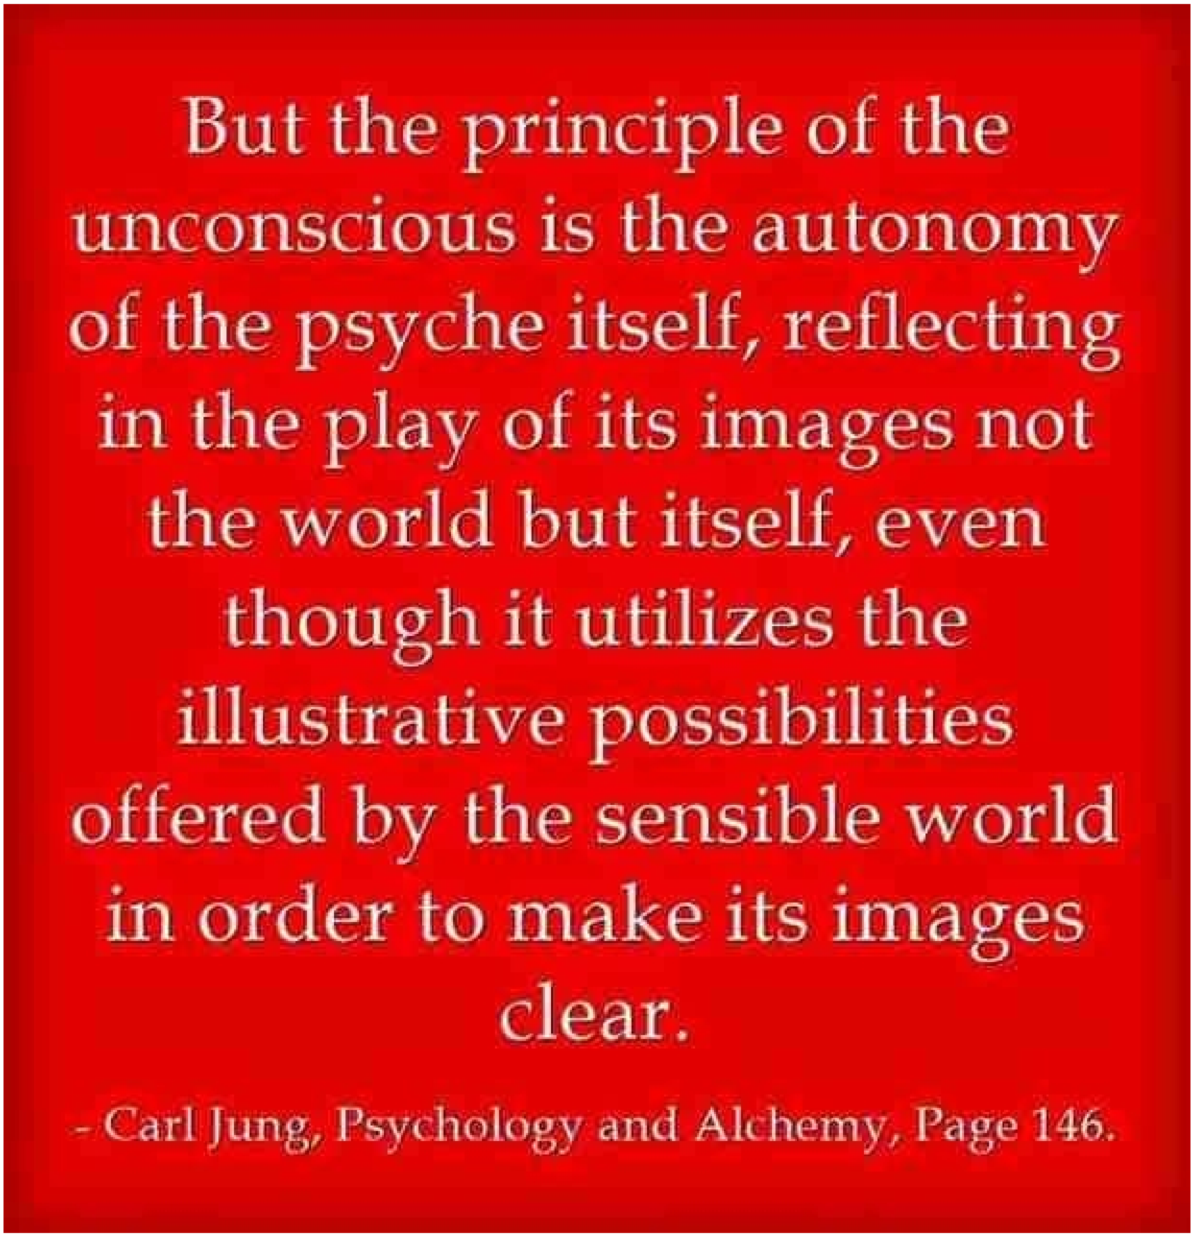
The intellect may be the devil , but the devil is the "strange son of chaos" who can most readily be trusted to deal effectively with his mother. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 90.



Dionysus is the abyss of impassioned dissolution, where all human distinctions are merged in the animal divinity of the primordial psyche—a blissful and terrible experience.

- Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy,
Page 90

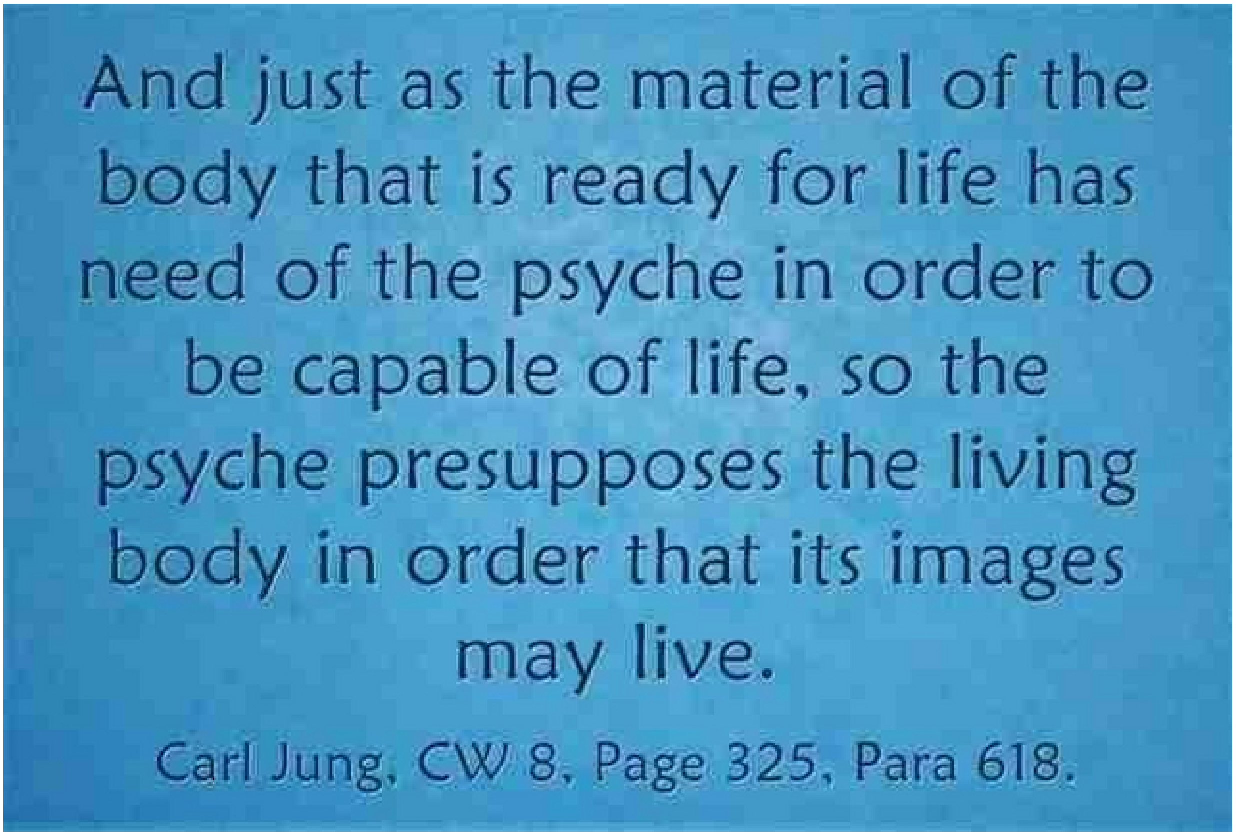
Dionysus is the abyss of impassioned dissolution, where all human distinctions are merged in the animal divinity of the primordial psyche—a blissful and terrible experience. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 90.



But the principle of the unconscious is the autonomy of the psyche itself, reflecting in the play of its images not the world but itself, even though it utilizes the illustrative possibilities offered by the sensible world in order to make its images clear.

- Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 146.

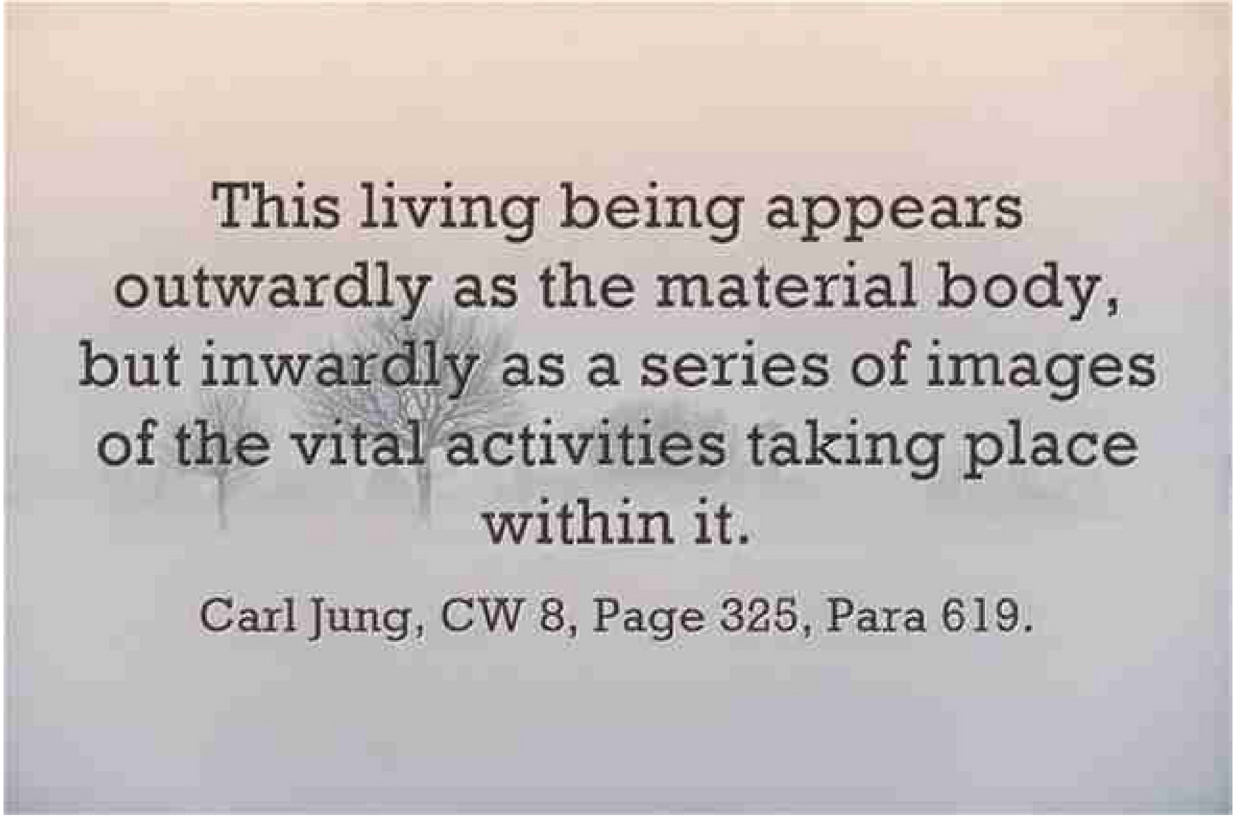
But the principle of the unconscious is the autonomy of the psyche itself, reflecting in the play of its images not the world but itself, even though it utilizes the illustrative possibilities offered by the sensible world in order to make its images clear. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 146



And just as the material of the body that is ready for life has need of the psyche in order to be capable of life, so the psyche presupposes the living body in order that its images may live.

Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 325, Para 618.

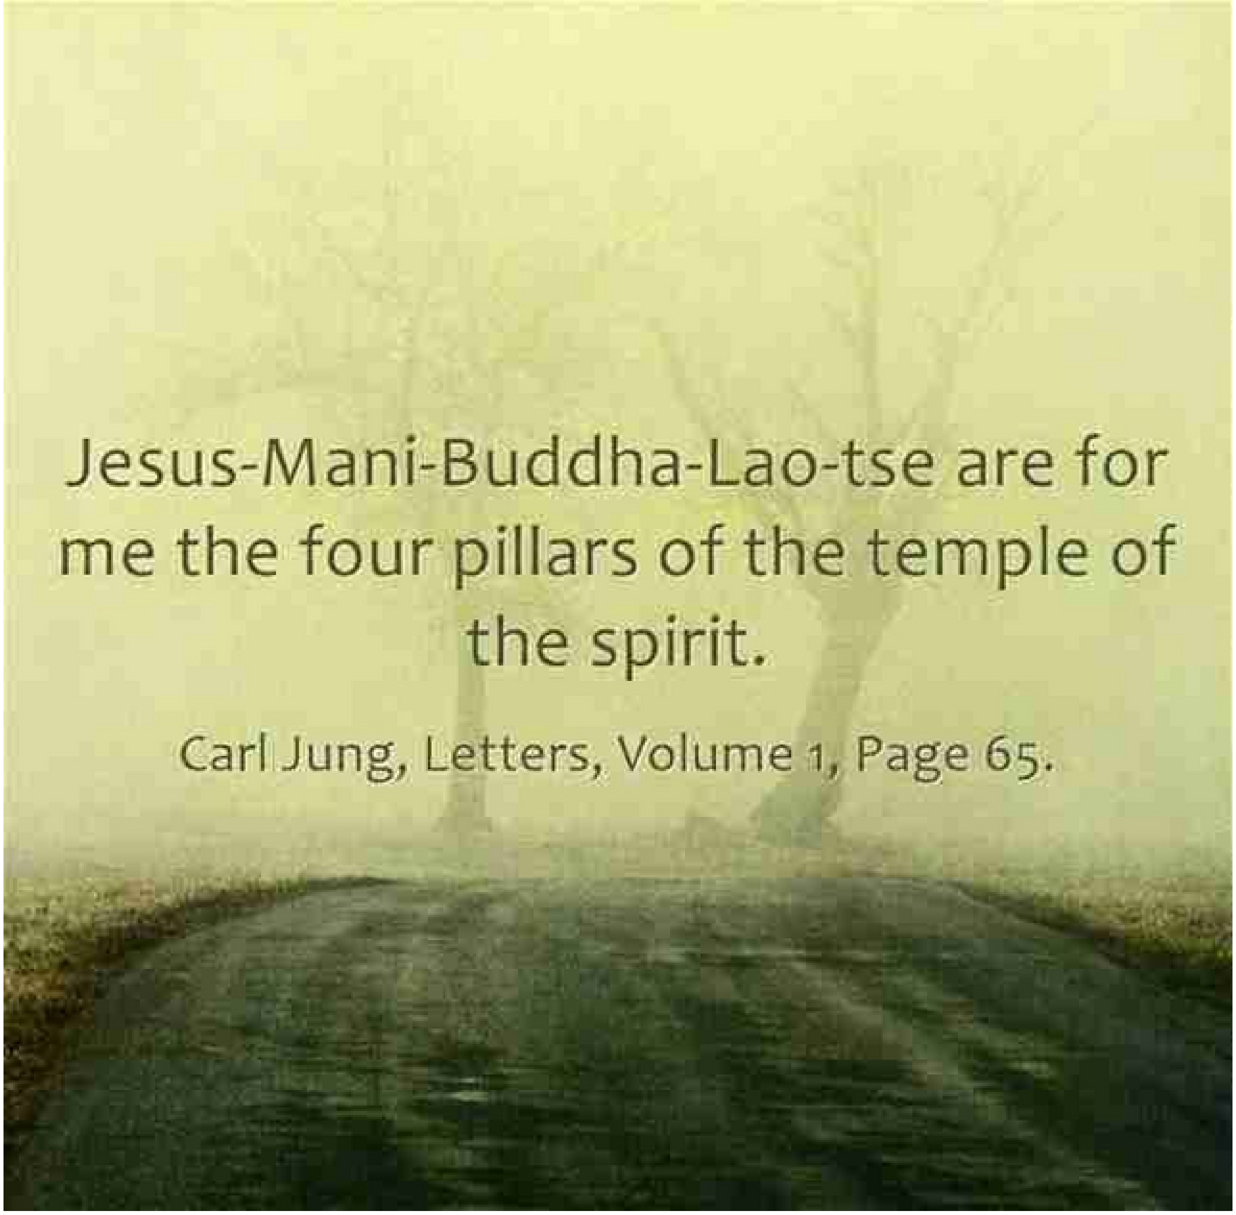
And just as the material of the body that is ready for life has need of the psyche in order to be capable of life, so the psyche presupposes the living body in order that its images may live. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 325, Para 618.



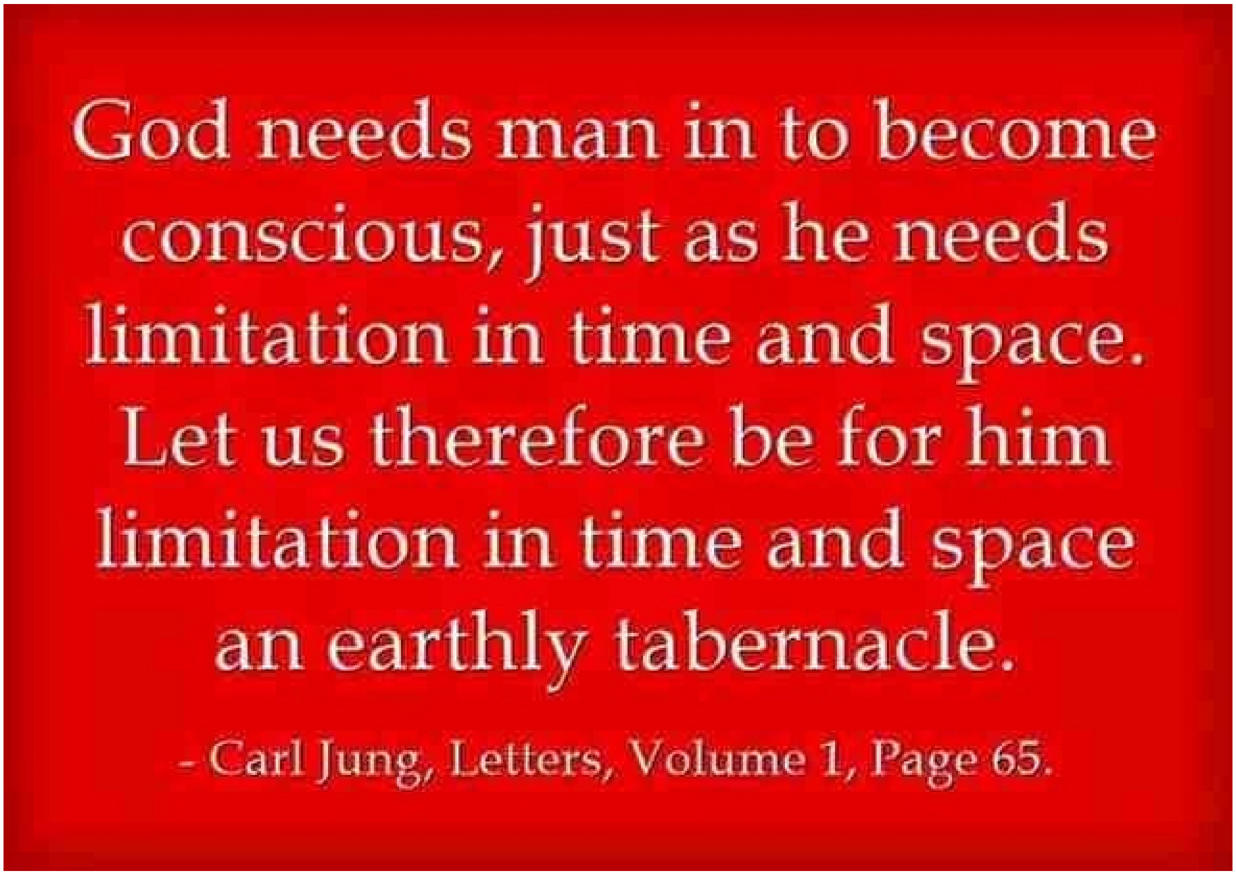
This living being appears outwardly as the material body, but inwardly as a series of images of the vital activities taking place within it.

Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 325, Para 619.

This living being appears outwardly as the material body, but inwardly as a series of images of the vital activities taking place within it. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 325, Para 619.



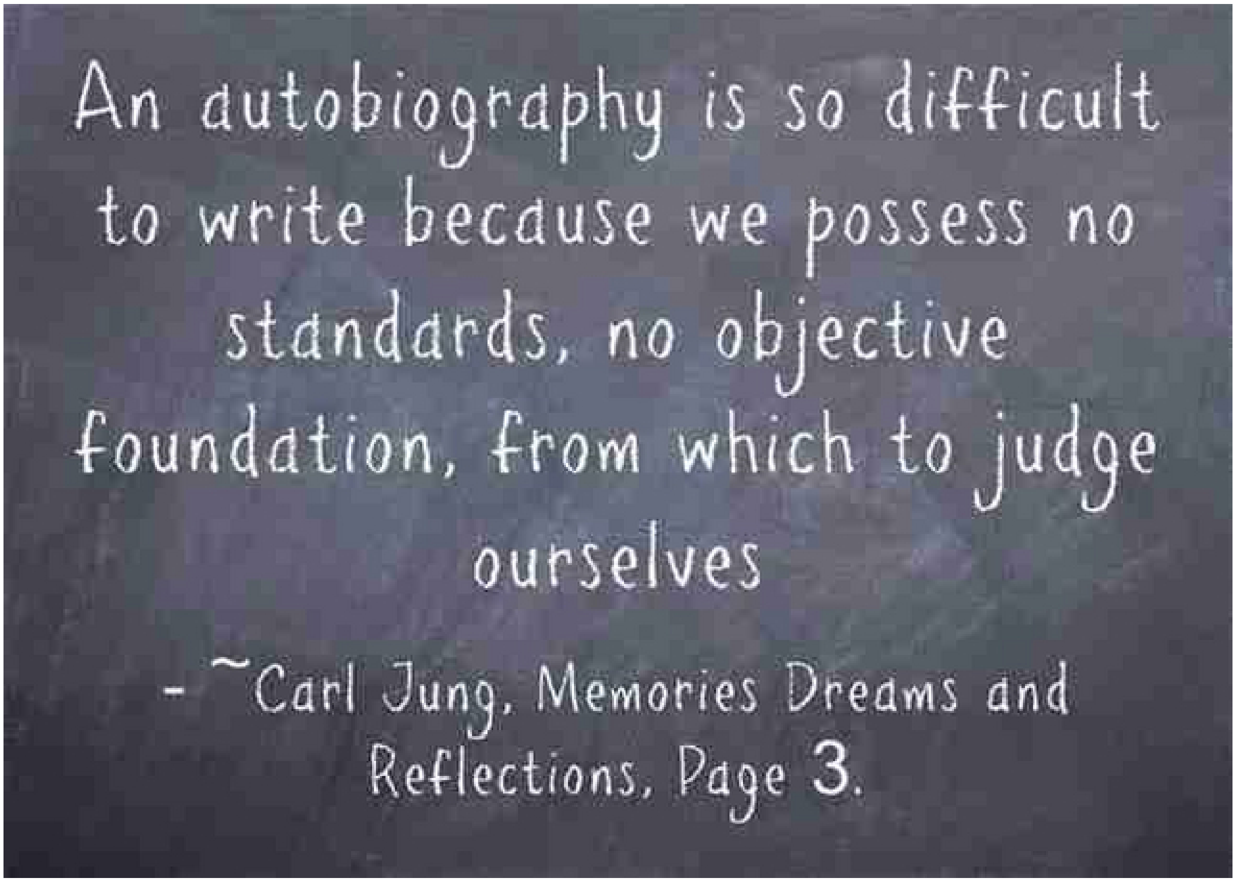
Jesus-Mani-Buddha-Lao-tse are for me the four pillars of the temple of the spirit. Carl Jung, Letters, Volume 1, Page 65.



God needs man in to become conscious, just as he needs limitation in time and space. Let us therefore be for him limitation in time and space an earthly tabernacle.

- Carl Jung, Letters, Volume 1, Page 65.

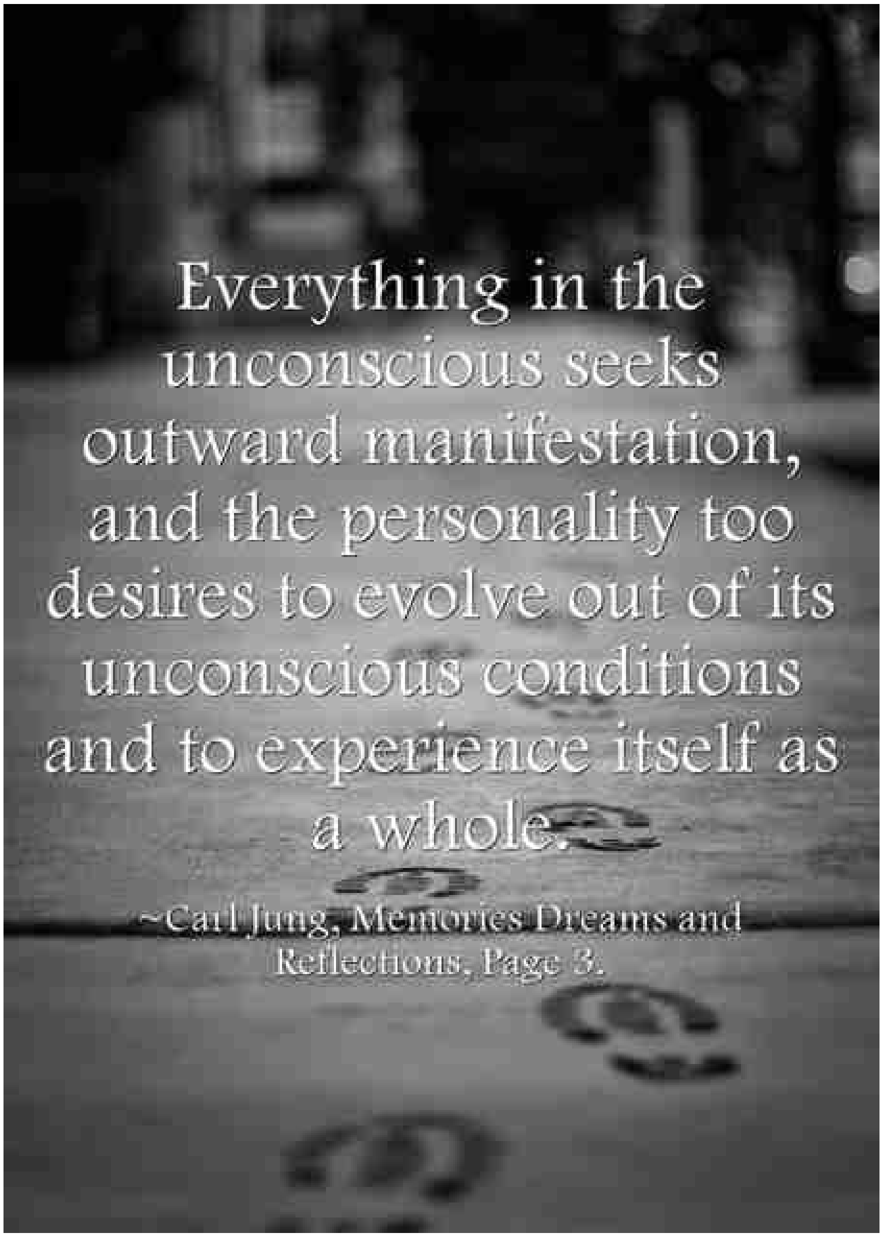
God needs man in to become conscious, just as he needs limitation in time and space. Let us therefore be for him limitation in time and space an earthly tabernacle. Carl Jung, Letters, Volume 1, Page 65.



An autobiography is so difficult to write because we possess no standards, no objective foundation, from which to judge ourselves

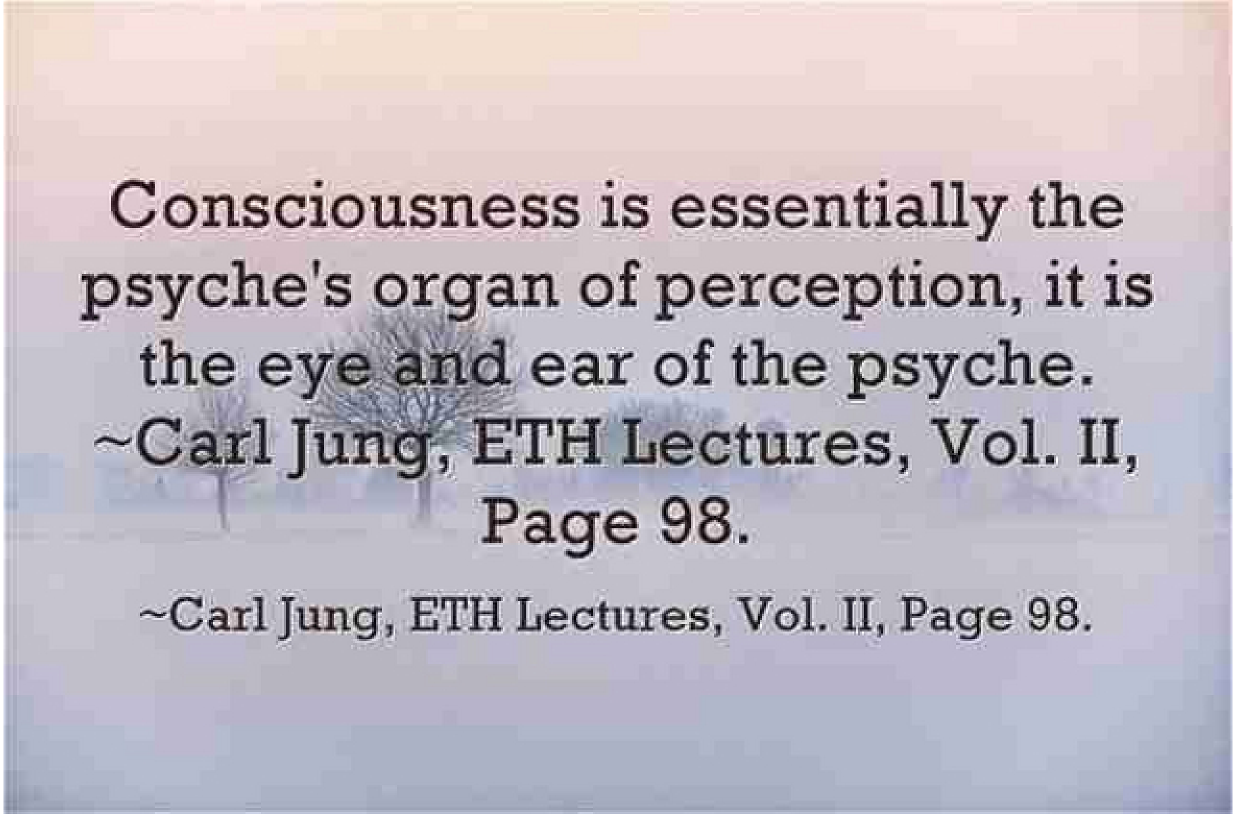
- ~Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 3.

An autobiography is so difficult to write because we possess no standards, no objective foundation, from which to judge ourselves. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 3.



Everything in the unconscious seeks outward manifestation, and the personality too desires to evolve out of its unconscious conditions and to experience itself as a whole.
~Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 3.

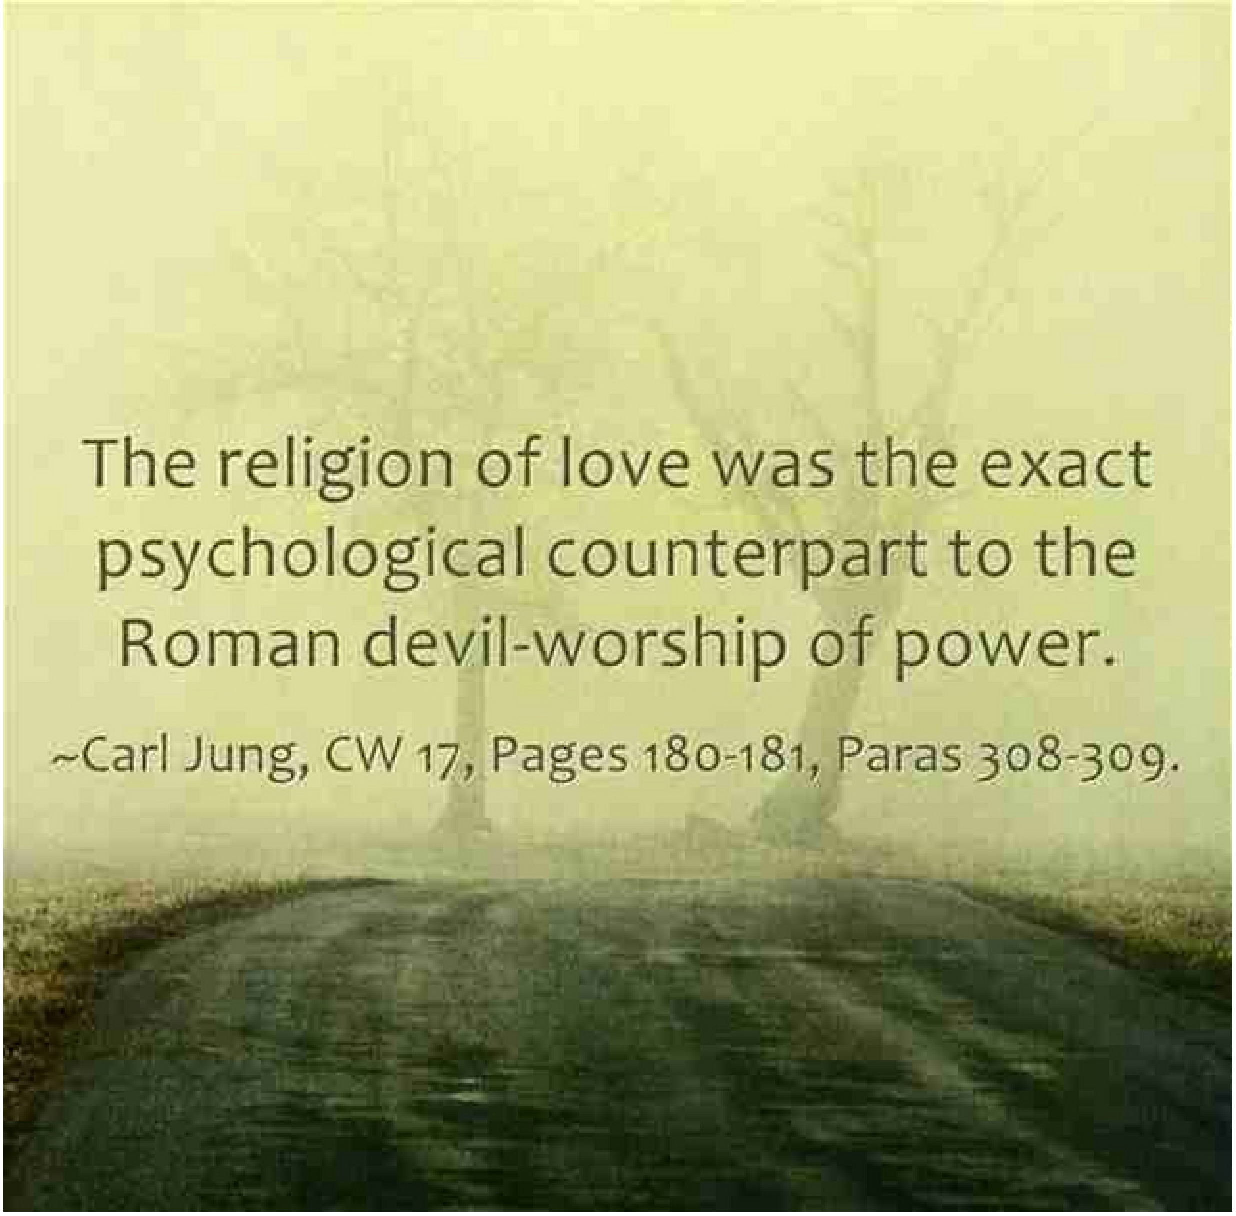
Everything in the unconscious seeks outward manifestation, and the personality too desires to evolve out of its unconscious conditions and to experience itself as a whole. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 3.



Consciousness is essentially the psyche's organ of perception, it is the eye and ear of the psyche.
~Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. II, Page 98.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. II, Page 98.

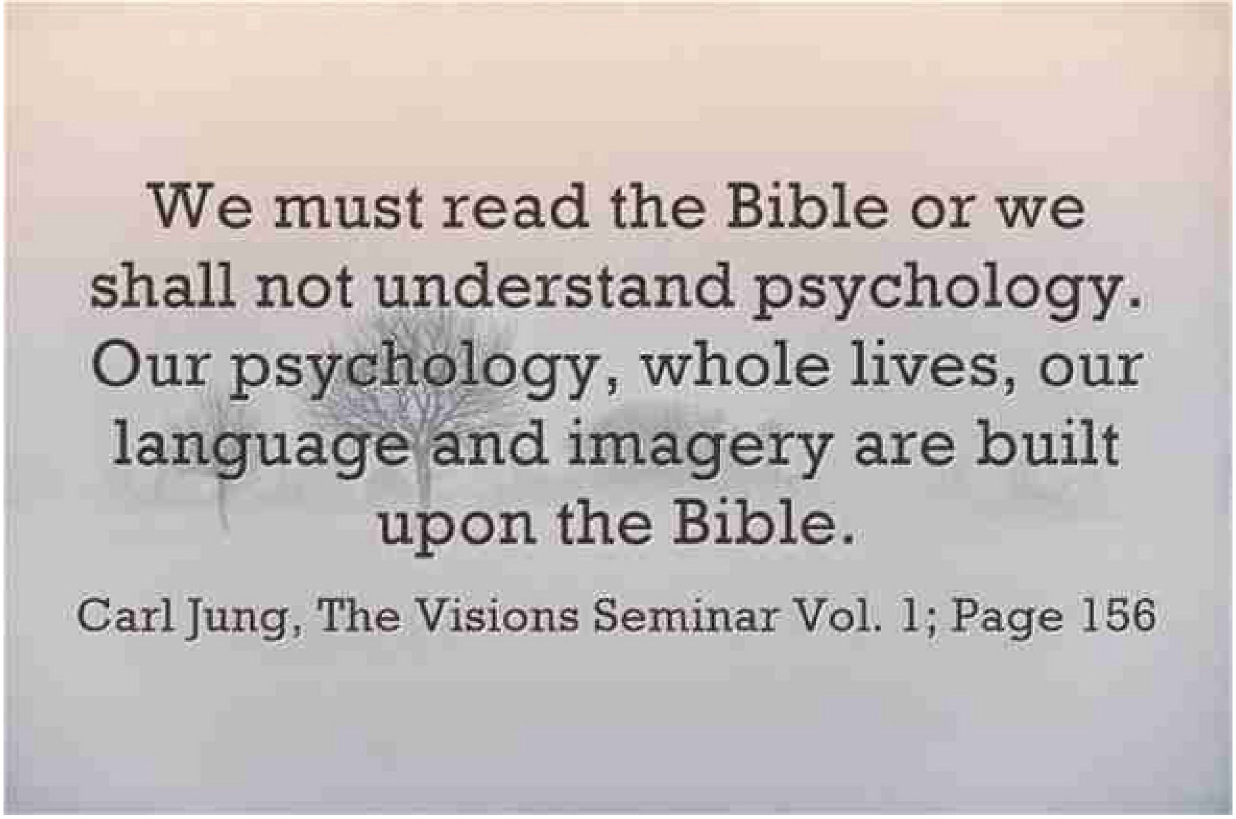
Consciousness is essentially the psyche’s organ of perception, it is the eye and ear of the psyche. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 98.



The religion of love was the exact psychological counterpart to the Roman devil-worship of power.

~Carl Jung, CW 17, Pages 180-181, Paras 308-309.

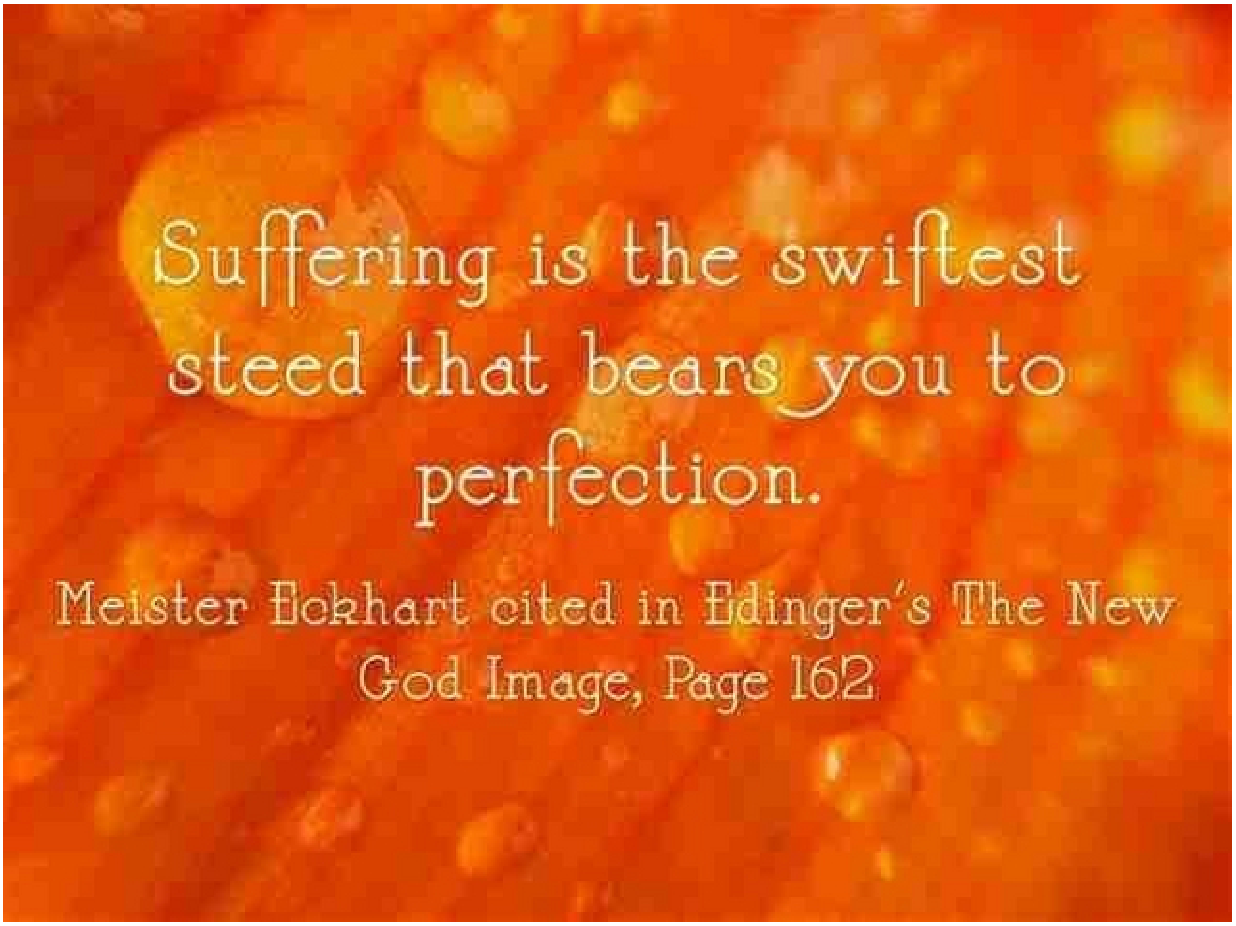
The religion of love was the exact psychological counterpart to the Roman devil-worship of power. Carl Jung, CW 17, Pages 180-181, Paras 308-309.



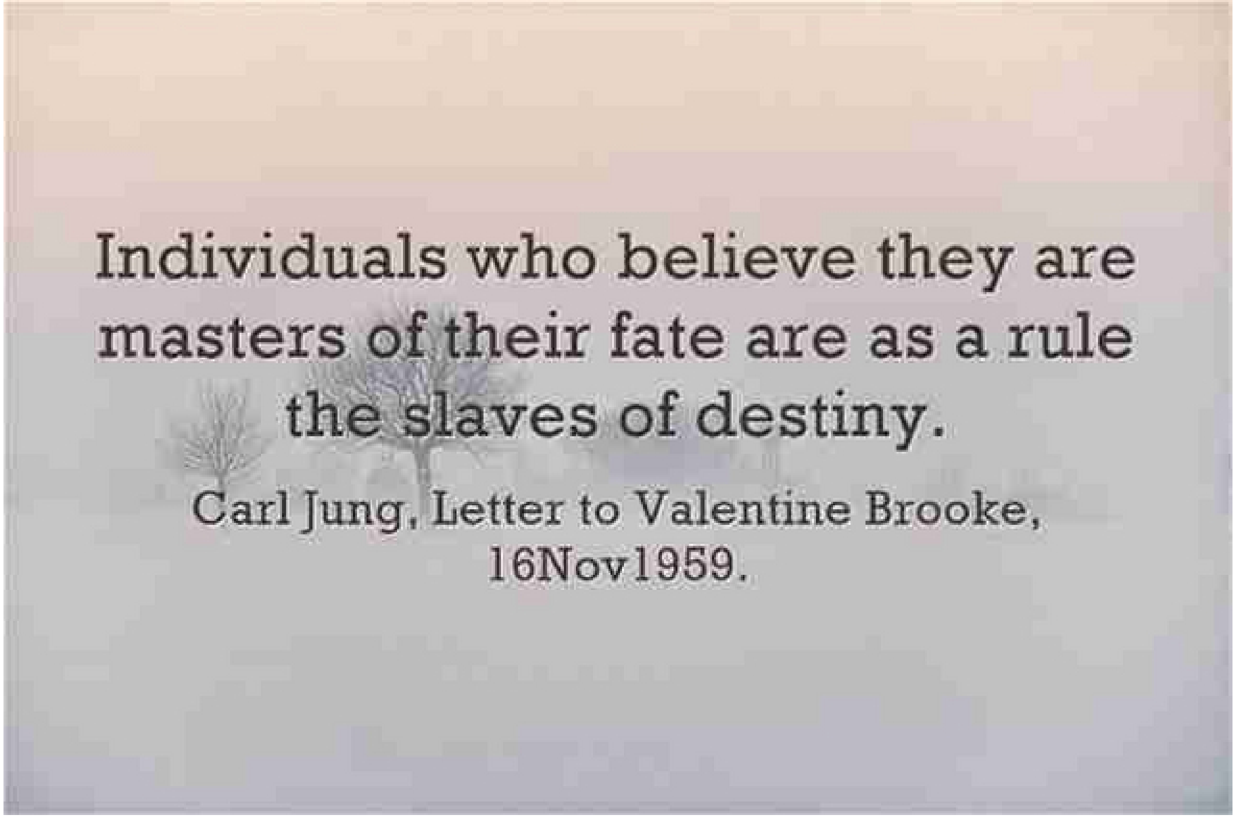
We must read the Bible or we shall not understand psychology. Our psychology, whole lives, our language and imagery are built upon the Bible.

Carl Jung, The Visions Seminar Vol. 1; Page 156

We must read the Bible or we shall not understand psychology. Our psychology, whole lives, our language and imagery are built upon the Bible. Carl Jung, The Visions Seminar Vol. 1; Page 156.



Suffering is the swiftest steed that bears you to perfection. Meister Eckhart cited in Edinger's The New God Image, Page 162.



Individuals who believe they are masters of their fate are as a rule the slaves of destiny.

Carl Jung, Letter to Valentine Brooke, 16Nov1959.

Individuals who believe they are masters of their fate are as a rule the slaves of destiny. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 520-523

God is not blessed in his Godhead, he must be born in man forever.
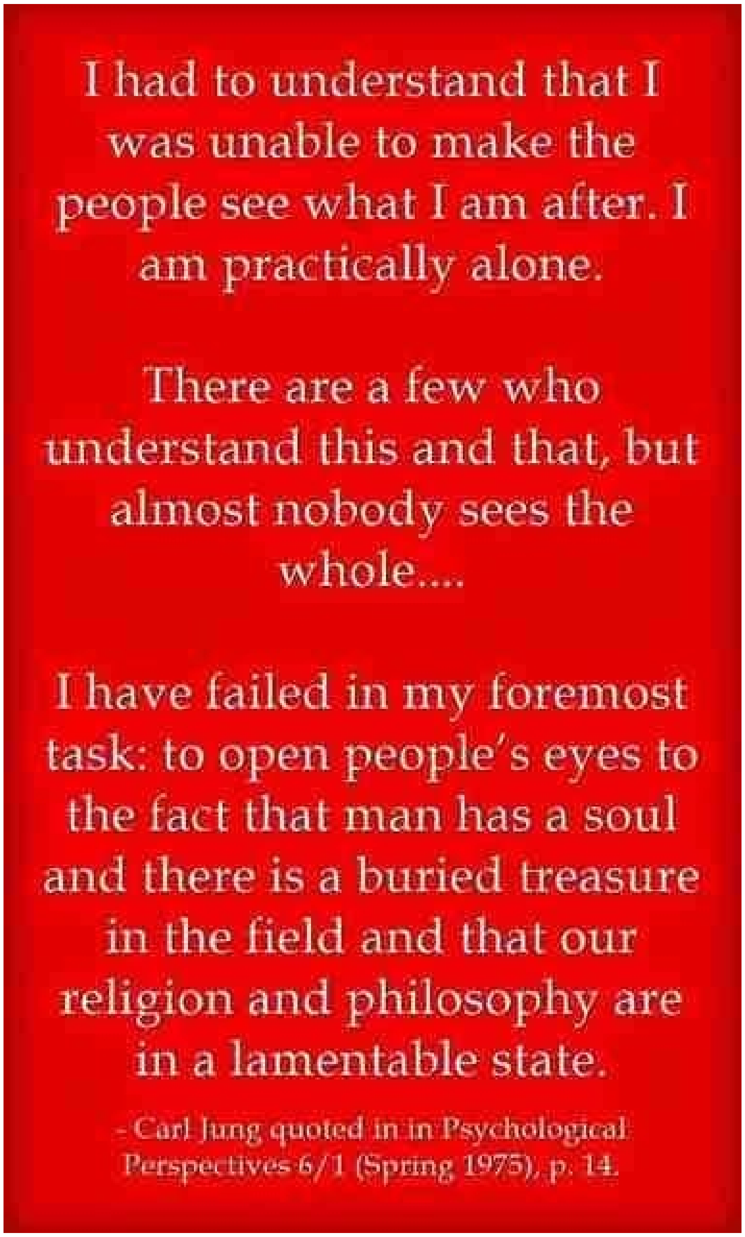
~ Meister Eckhart

God is not blessed in his Godhead, he must be born in man forever. Meister Eckhart



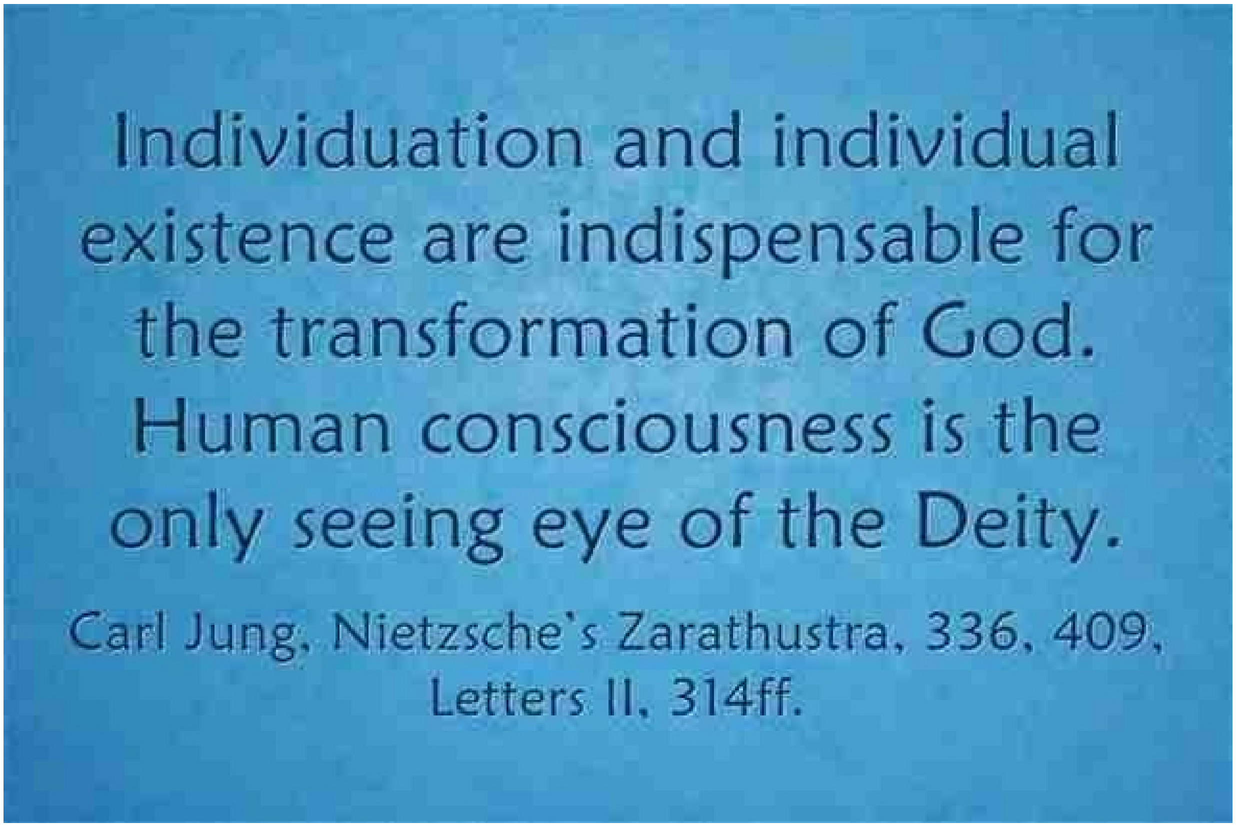
I had to understand that I was unable to make the people see what I am after. I am practically alone.

There are a few who understand this and that, but almost nobody sees the whole....

I have failed in my foremost task: to open people's eyes to the fact that man has a soul and there is a buried treasure in the field and that our religion and philosophy are in a lamentable state.

- Carl Jung quoted in in Psychological Perspectives 6/1 (Spring 1975), p. 14.

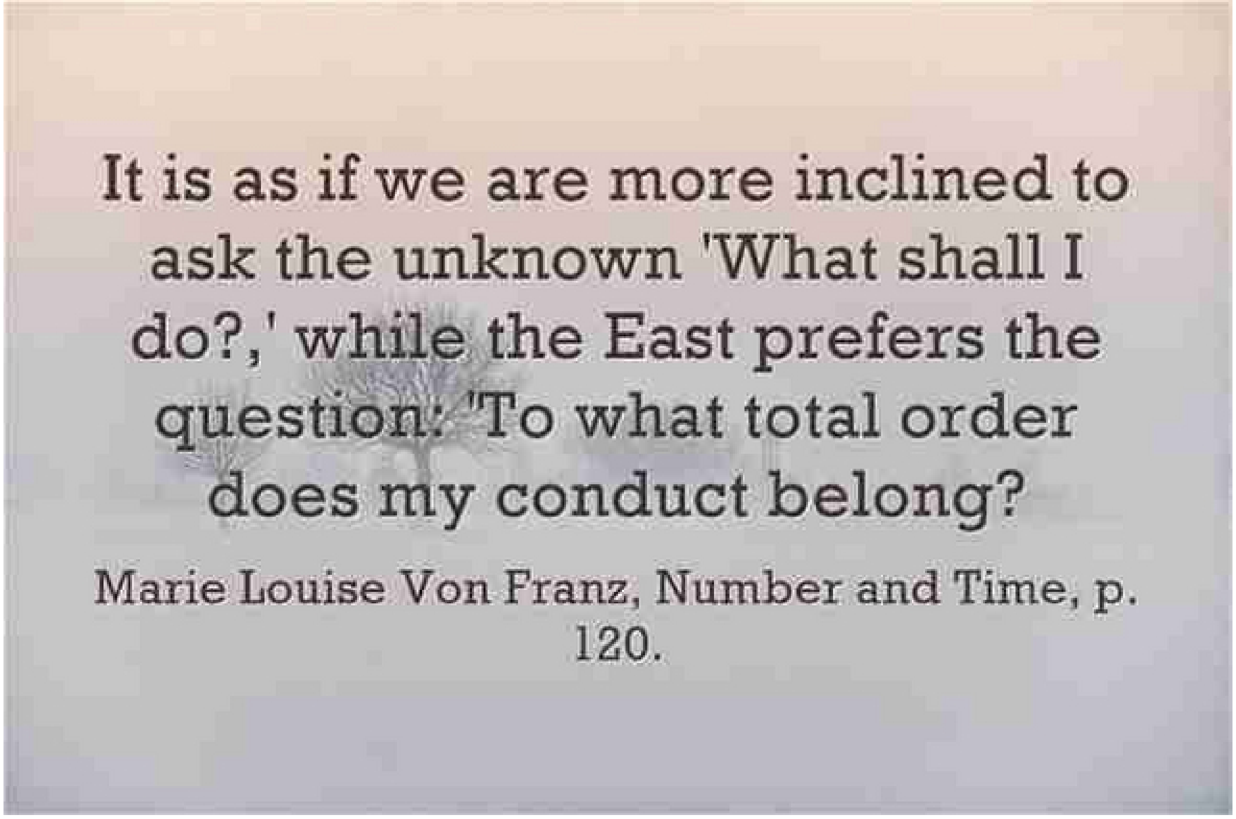
I had to understand that I was unable to make the people see what I am after. I am practically alone. There are a few who understand this and that, but almost nobody sees the whole....I have failed in my foremost task: to open people's eyes to the fact that man has a soul and there is a buried treasure in the field and that our religion and philosophy are in a lamentable state. Quoted by Gerhard Adler in "Aspects of Jung's Personality," in Psychological Perspectives 6/1 (Spring 1975), p. 14.



Individuation and individual existence are indispensable for the transformation of God. Human consciousness is the only seeing eye of the Deity.

Carl Jung, Nietzsche's Zarathustra, 336, 409, Letters II, 314ff.

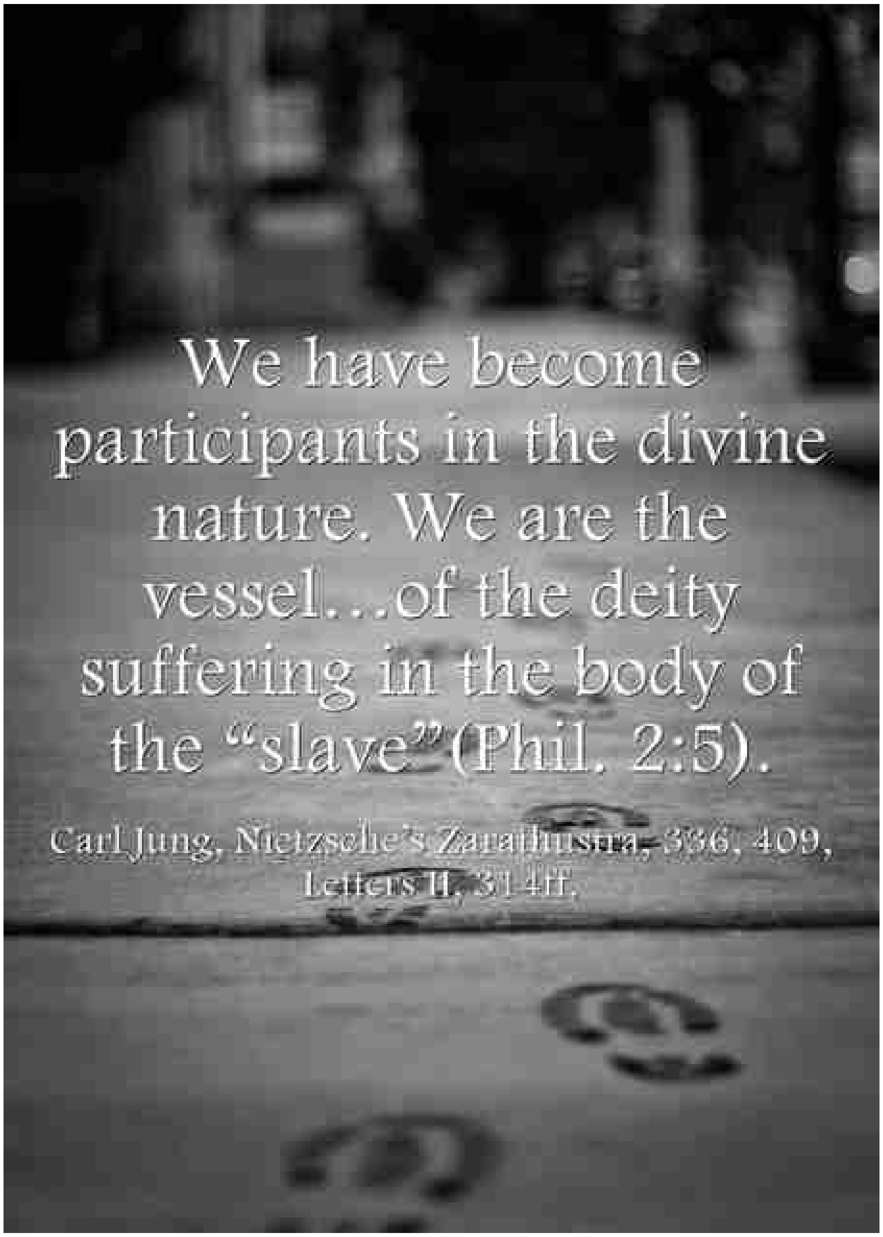
Individuation and individual existence are indispensable for the transformation of God the Creator. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 312-316.



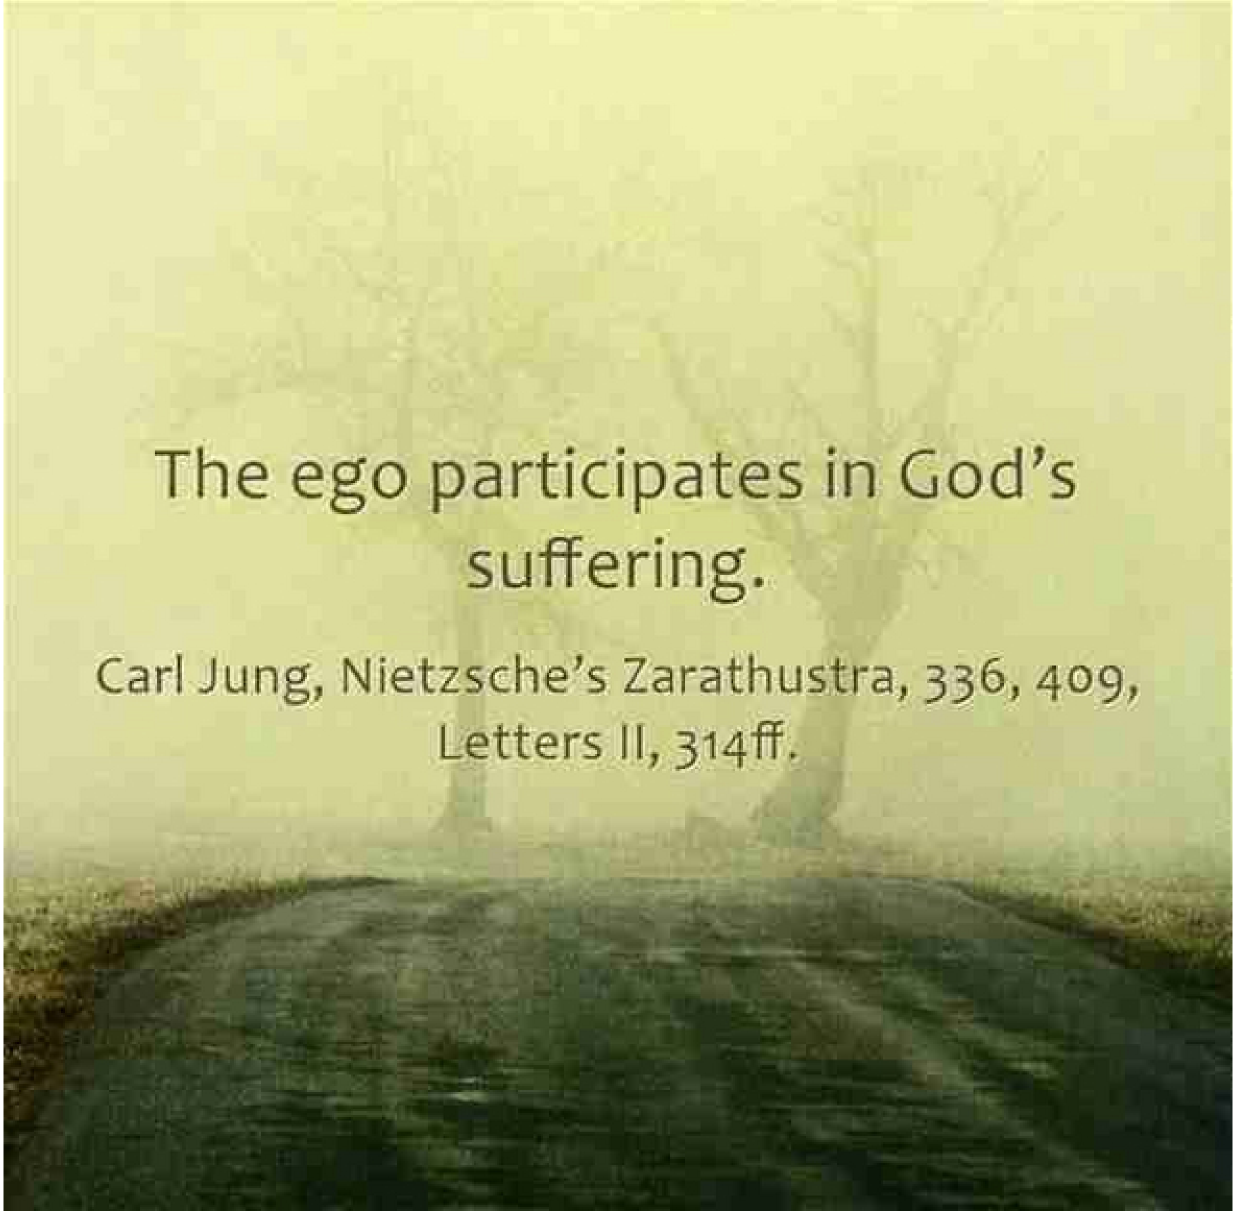
It is as if we are more inclined to ask the unknown 'What shall I do?,' while the East prefers the question: 'To what total order does my conduct belong?

Marie Louise Von Franz, Number and Time, p. 120.

It is as if we are more inclined to ask the unknown ’What shall I do?,’ while the East prefers the question: ’To what total order does my conduct belong? Marie Louise Von Franz, Number and Time, p. 120.



We have become participants in the divine nature. We are the vessel…of the deity suffering in the body of the “slave”(Phil. 2:5).   Carl Jung, Nietzsche’s Zarathustra, 336, 409, Letters II, 314ff.



The ego participates in God’s suffering. Carl Jung, Nietzsche’s Zarathustra, 336, 409, Letters II, 314ff.

Yahweh and Allah are unreflected God-images, whereas in the Clementine Homilies there is a psychological and reflective spirit at work.

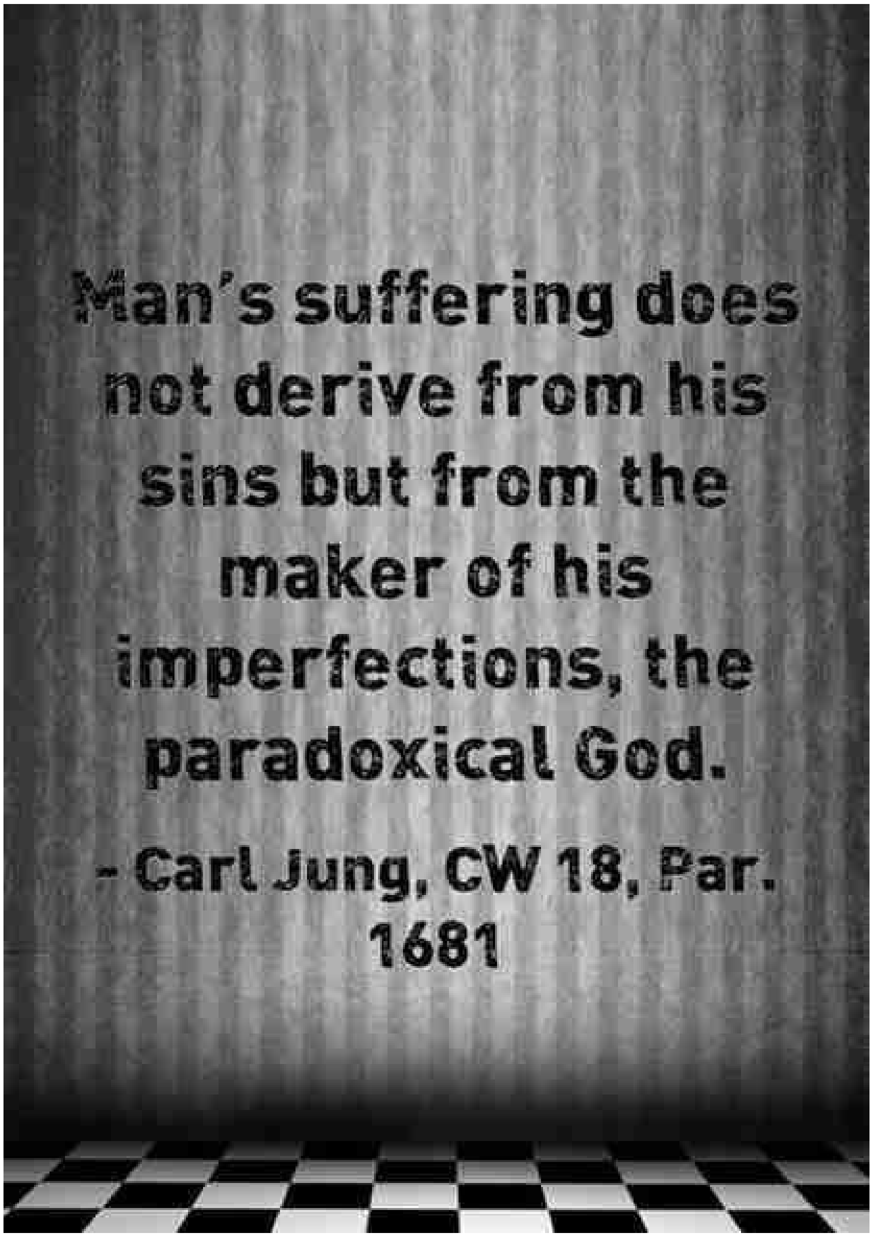
Carl Jung, Aion, Page 54n.

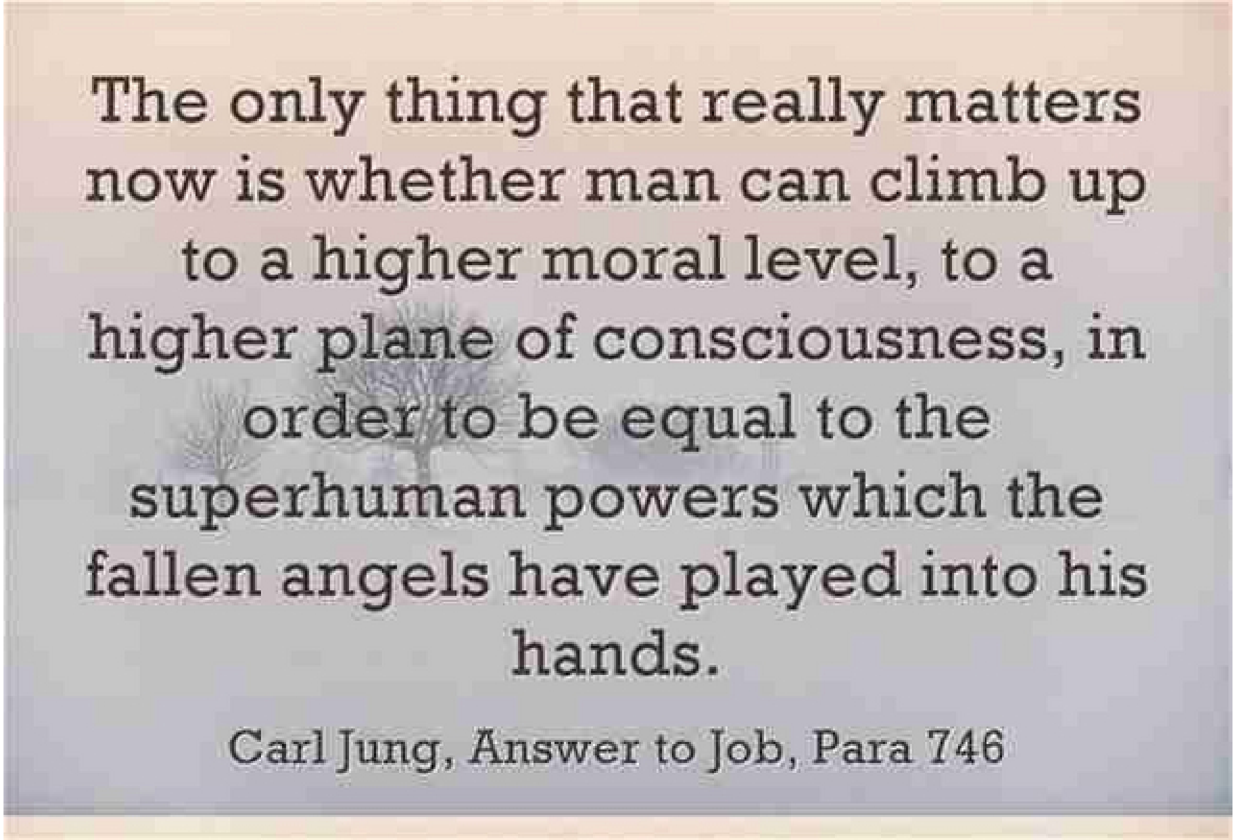
Yahweh and Allah are unreflected God-images, whereas in the Clementine Homilies there is a psychological and reflective spirit at work. Carl Jung, Aion, Page 54n.



Man’s suffering does not derive from his sins but from the maker of his imperfections, the paradoxical God.

- Carl Jung, CW 18, Par. 1681

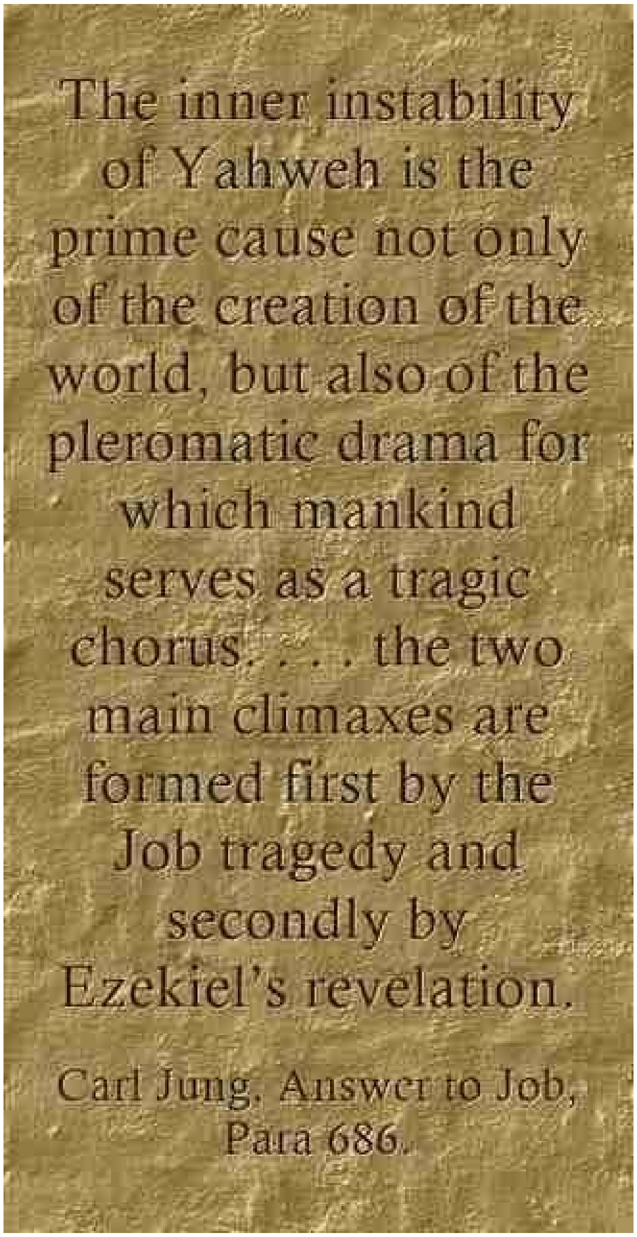
Man’s suffering does not derive from his sins but from the maker of his imperfections, the paradoxical God. Carl Jung, CW 18, Par. 1681



The only thing that really matters now is whether man can climb up to a higher moral level, to a higher plane of consciousness, in order to be equal to the superhuman powers which the fallen angels have played into his hands.

Carl Jung, Answer to Job, Para 746

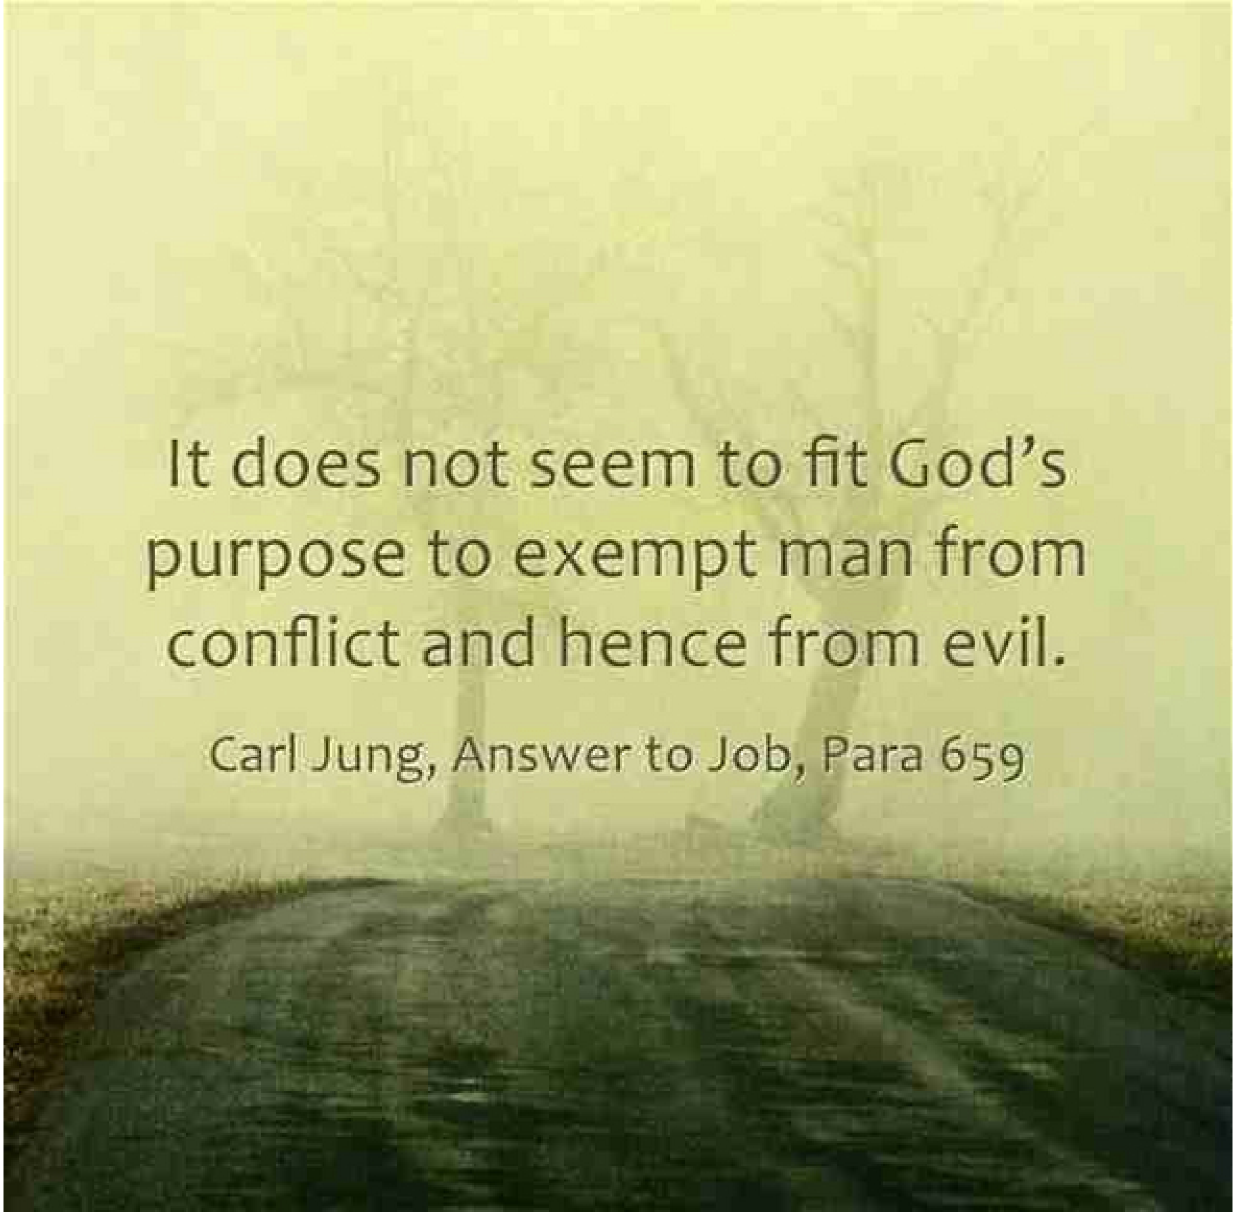
The only thing that really matters now is whether man can climb up to a higher moral level, to a higher plane of consciousness, in order to be equal to the superhuman powers which the fallen angels have played into his hands.
Carl Jung, Answer to Job, Para 746.



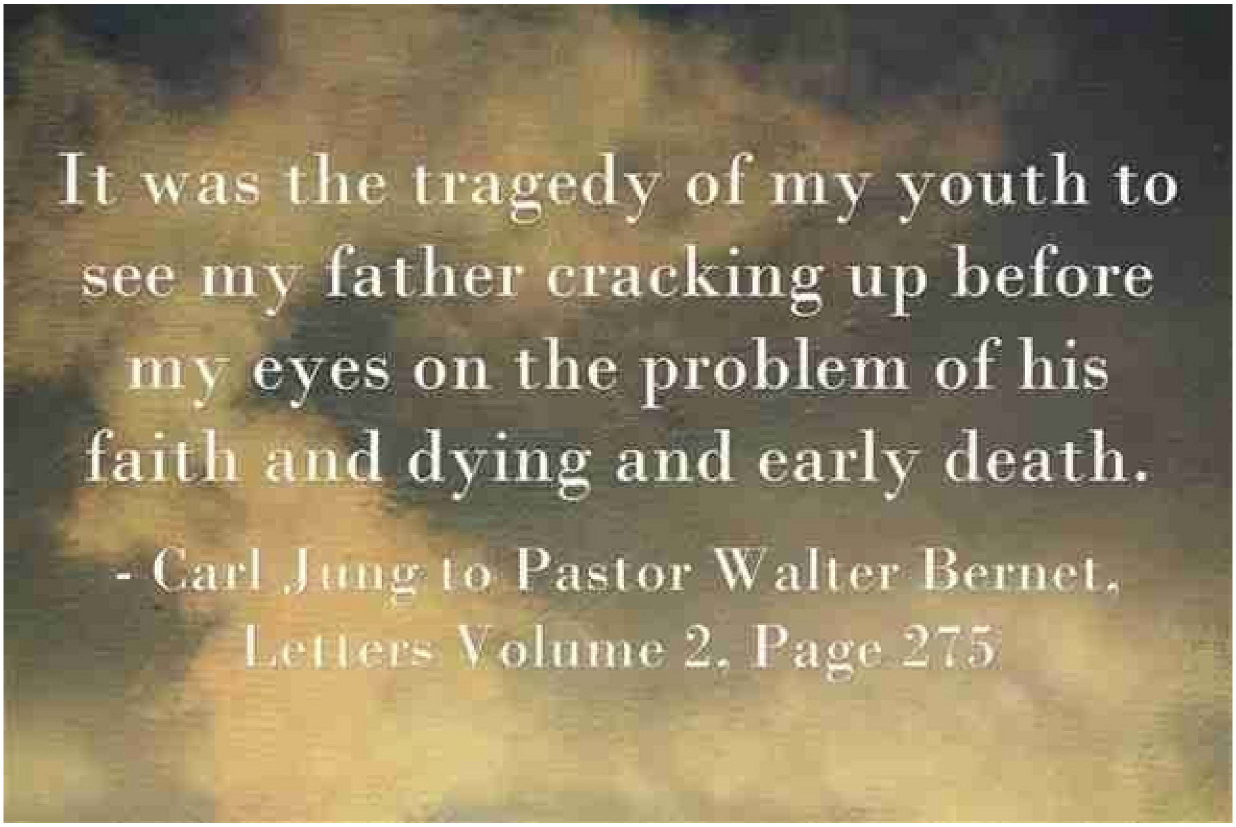
The inner instability of Yahweh is the prime cause not only of the creation of the world, but also of the pleromatic drama for which mankind serves as a tragic chorus. . . . the two main climaxes are formed first by the Job tragedy and secondly by Ezekiel's revelation.

Carl Jung, Answer to Job, Para 686.

The inner instability of Yahweh is the prime cause not only of the creation of the world, but also of the pleromatic drama for which mankind serves as a tragic chorus. . . . the two main climaxes are formed first by the Job tragedy and secondly by Ezekiel's revelation. Carl Jung, Answer to Job, Para 686.



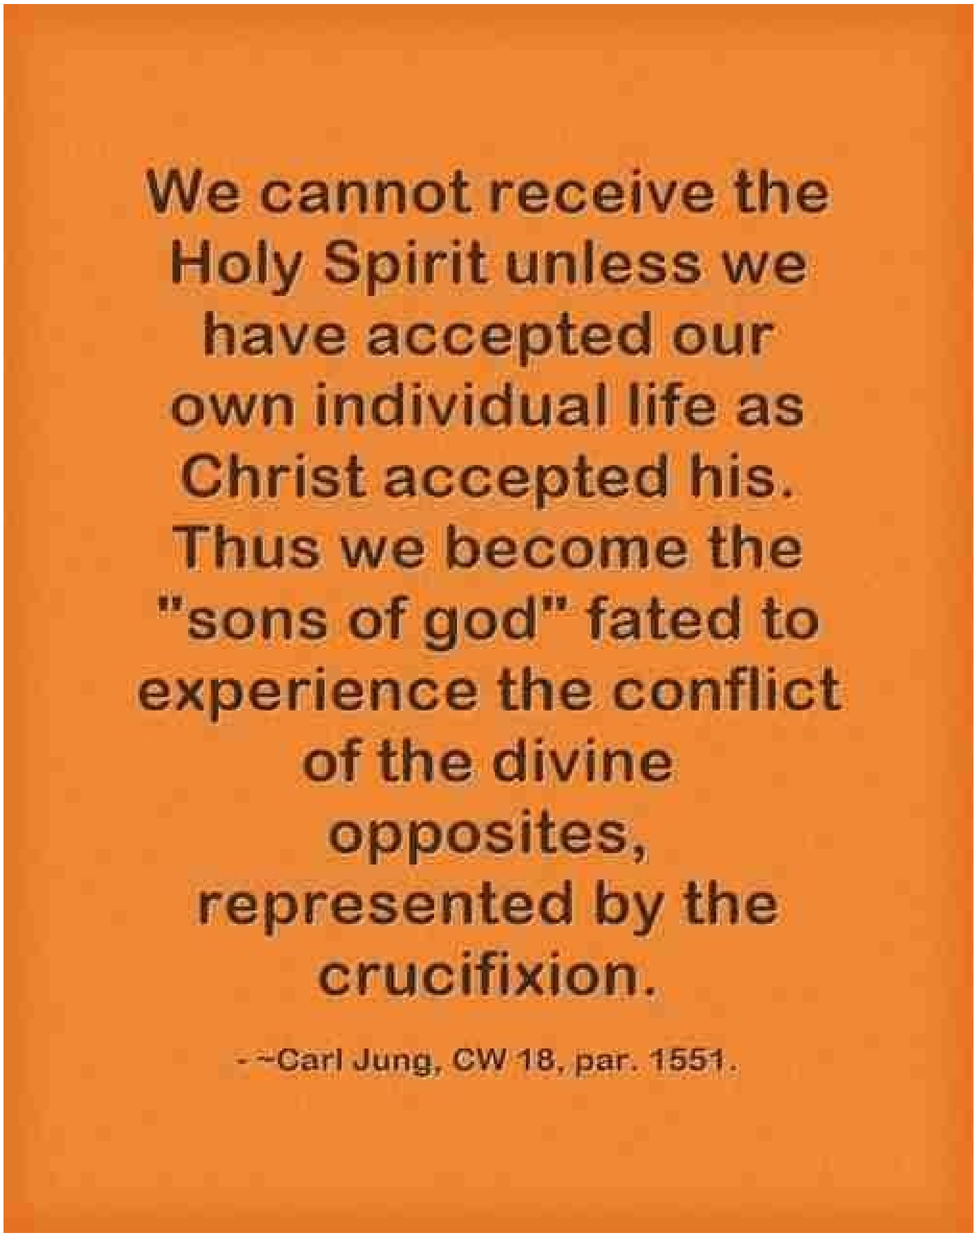
It does not seem to fit God's purpose to exempt man from conflict and hence from evil. Carl Jung, Answer to Job, Para 659.



It was the tragedy of my youth to see my father cracking up before my eyes on the problem of his faith and dying and early death.

- Carl Jung to Pastor Walter Bernet, Letters Volume 2, Page 275

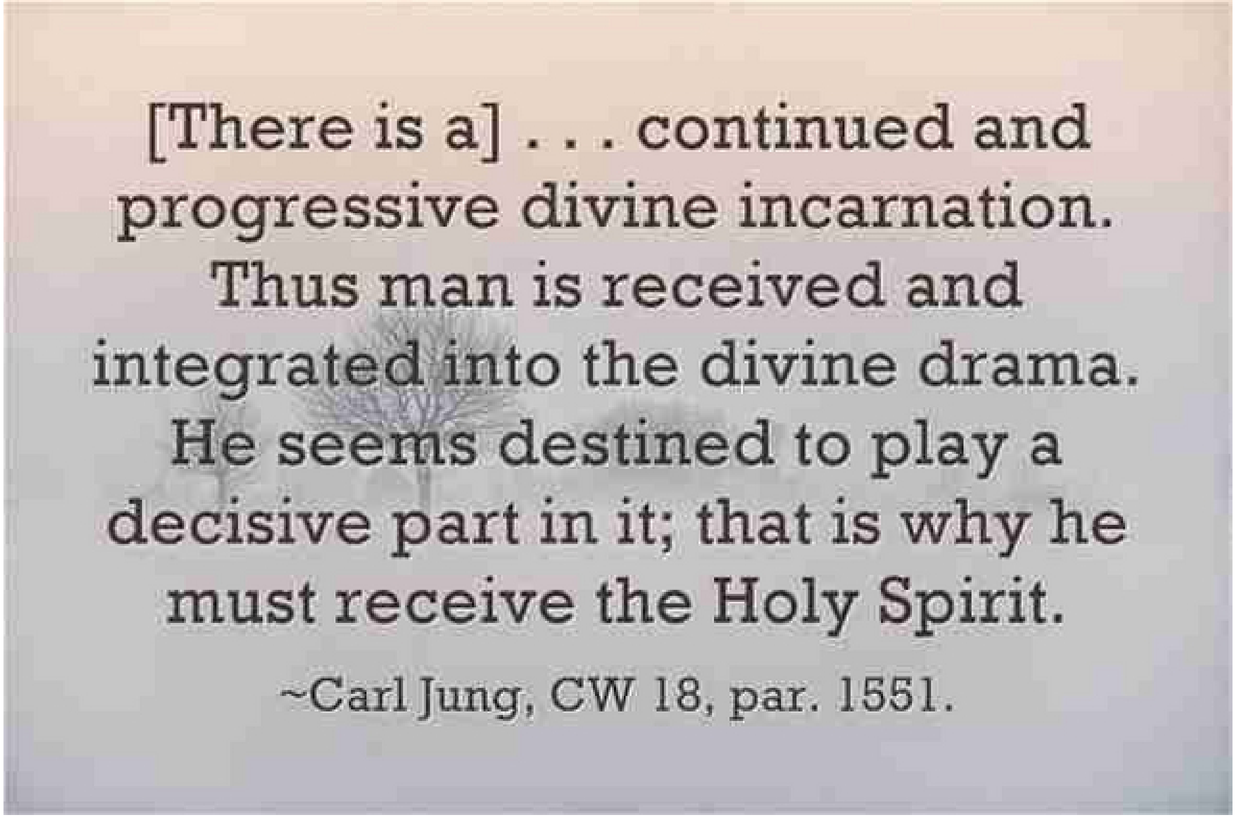
It was the tragedy of my youth to see my father cracking up before my eyes on the problem of his faith and dying and early death. Carl Jung to Pastor Walter Bernet, Letters Volume 2, Page 275



We cannot receive the Holy Spirit unless we have accepted our own individual life as Christ accepted his. Thus we become the "sons of god" fated to experience the conflict of the divine opposites, represented by the crucifixion.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 18, par. 1551.

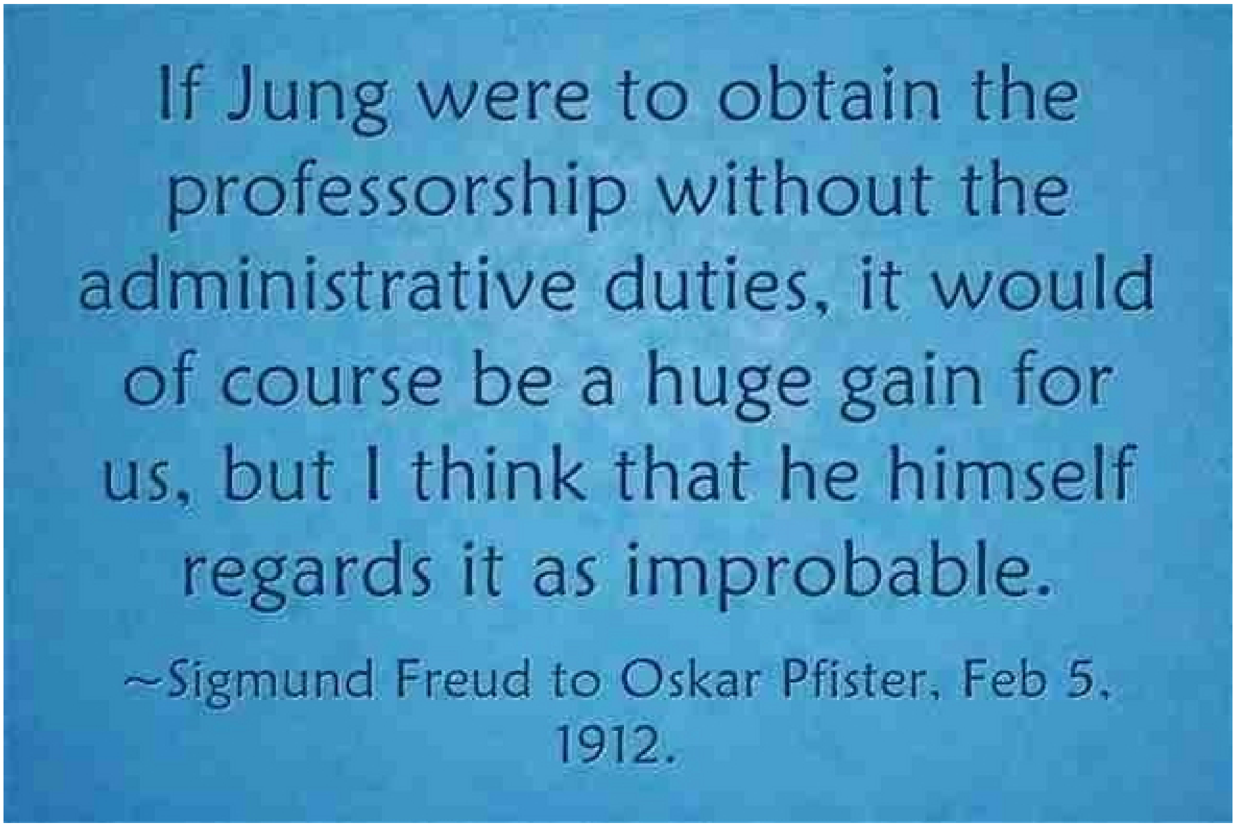
We cannot receive the Holy Spirit unless we have accepted our own individual life as Christ accepted his. Thus we become the "sons of god" fated to experience the conflict of the divine opposites, represented by the crucifixion. Carl Jung, CW 18, par. 1551.



[There is a] . . . continued and progressive divine incarnation. Thus man is received and integrated into the divine drama. He seems destined to play a decisive part in it; that is why he must receive the Holy Spirit.

~Carl Jung, CW 18, par. 1551.

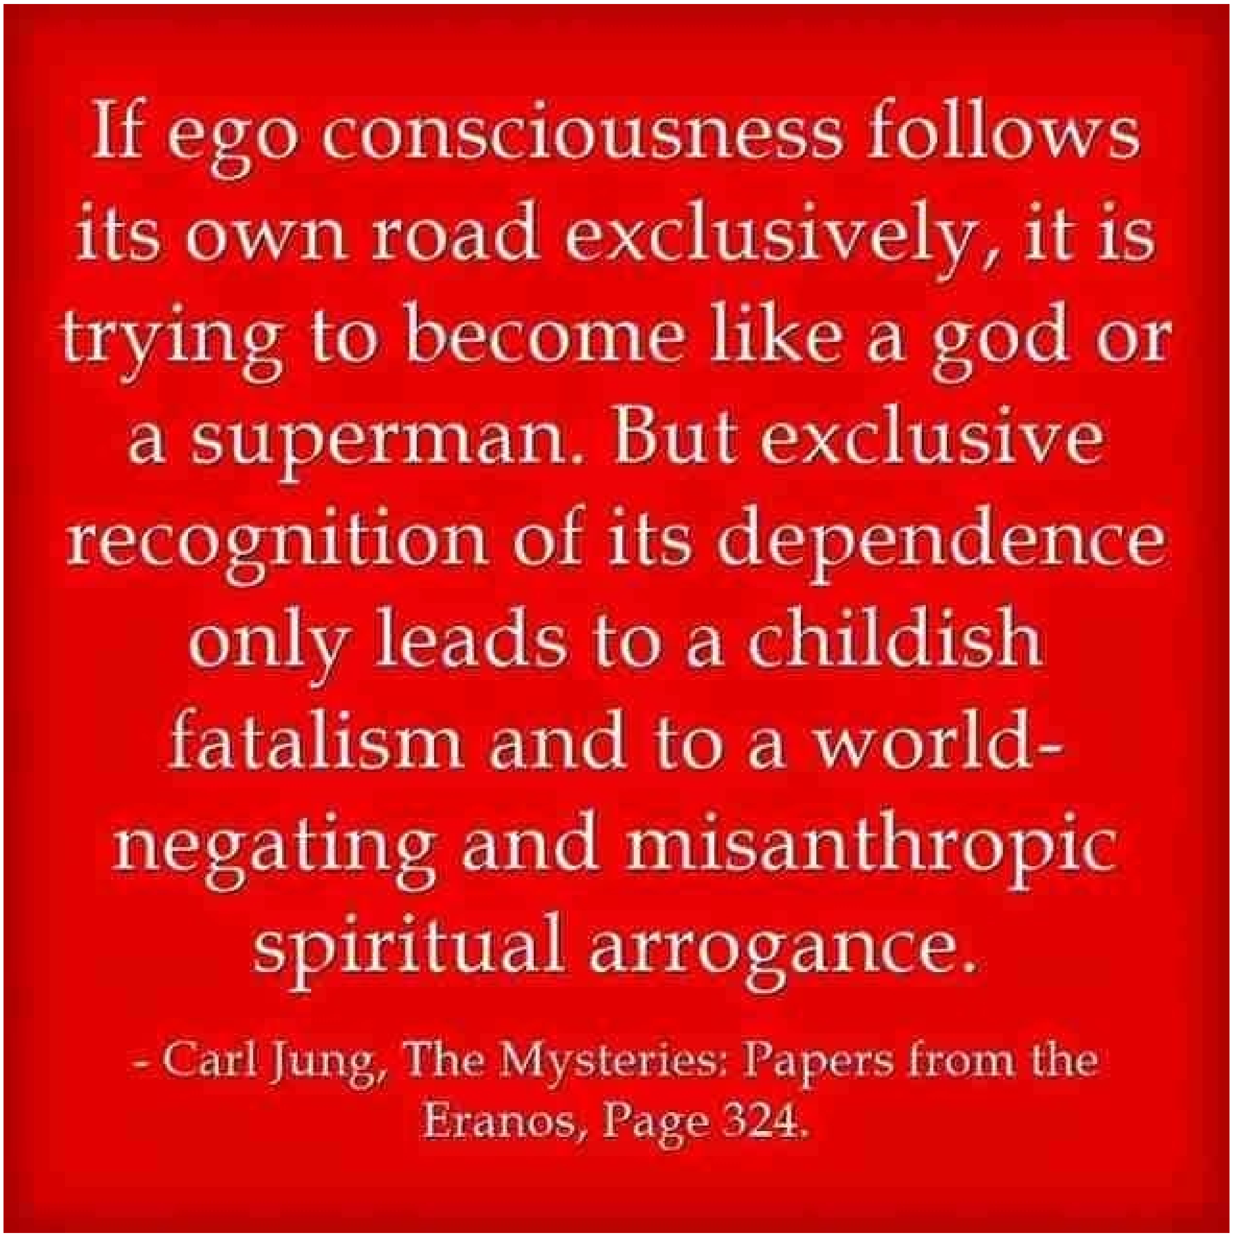
[There is a] . . . continued and progressive divine incarnation. Thus man is received and integrated into the divine drama. He seems destined to play a decisive part in it; that is why he must receive the Holy Spirit. Carl Jung, CW 18, par. 1551.



If Jung were to obtain the professorship without the administrative duties, it would of course be a huge gain for us, but I think that he himself regards it as improbable.

~Sigmund Freud to Oskar Pfister, Feb 5, 1912.

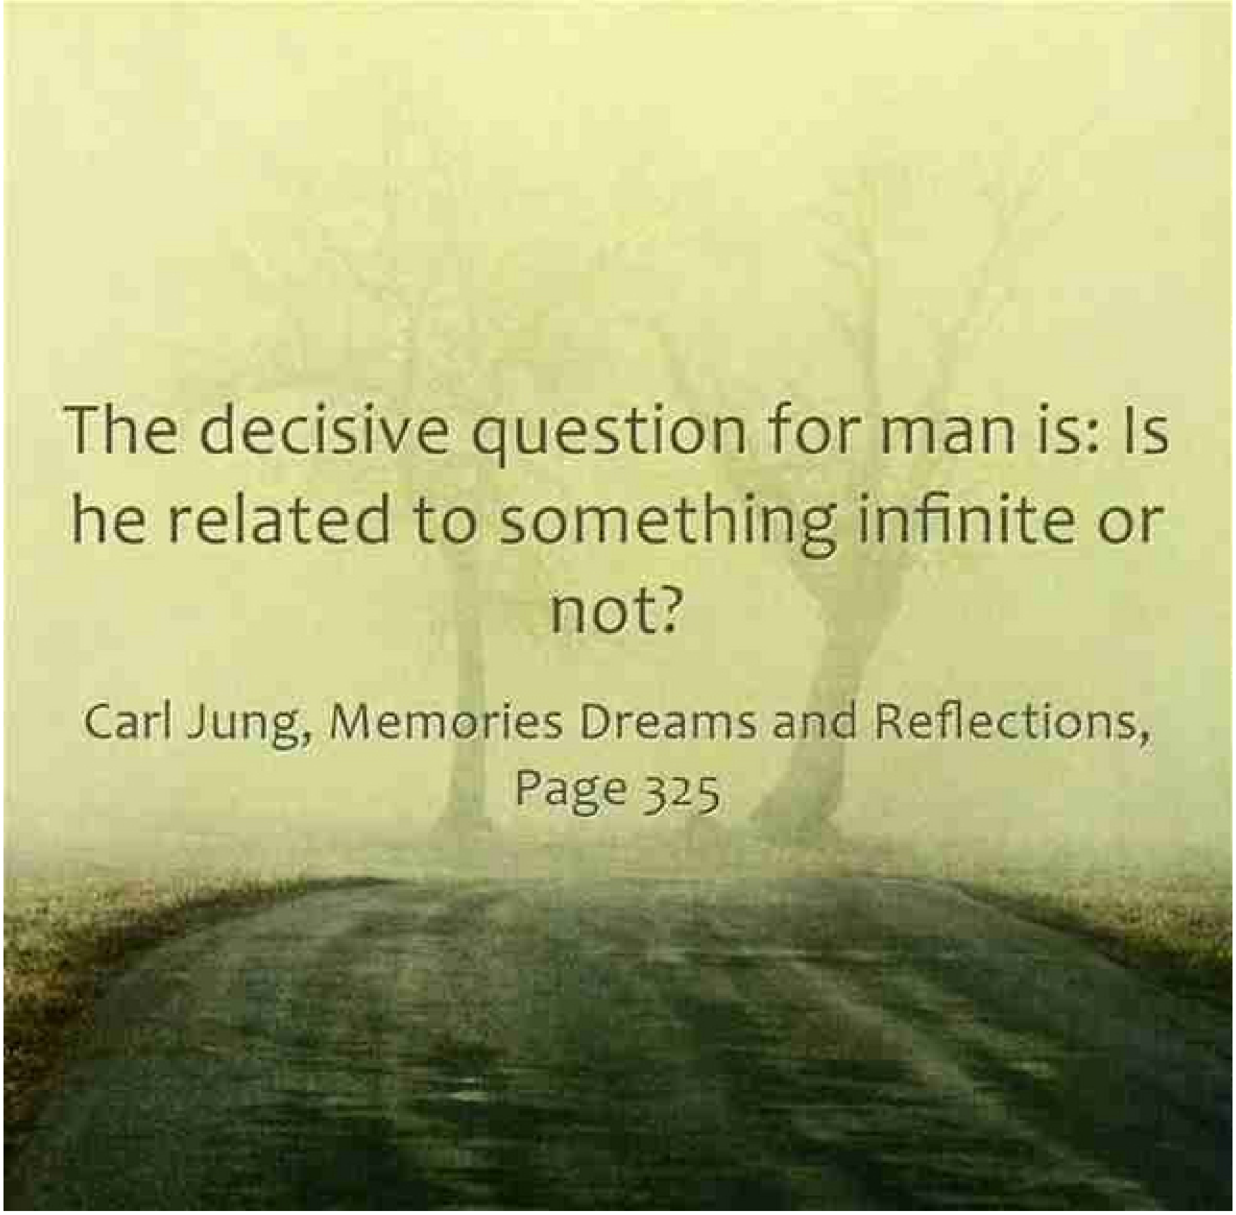
If Jung were to obtain the professorship without the administrative duties, it would of course be a huge gain for us, but I think that he himself regards it as improbable. Sigmund Freud to Oskar Pfister, Feb 5, 1912.



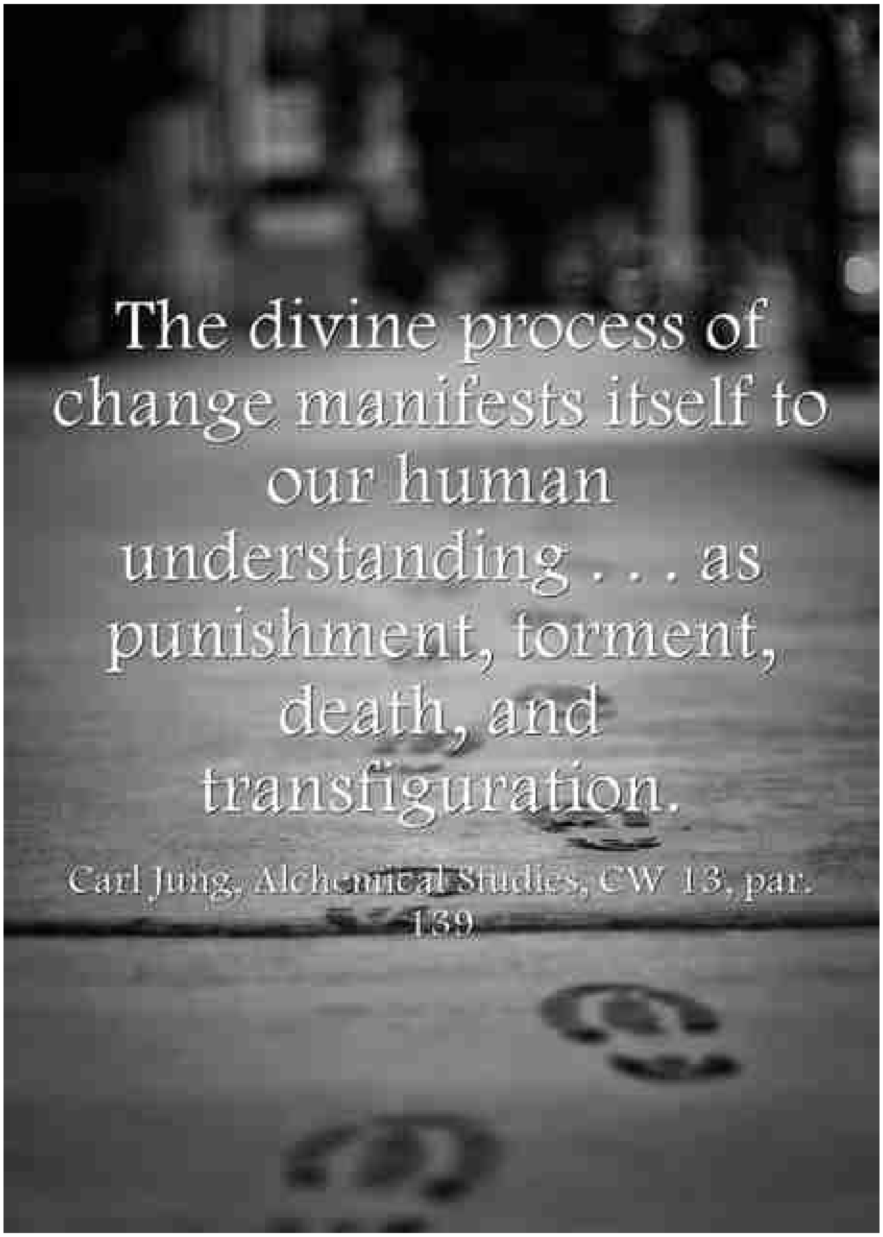
If ego consciousness follows its own road exclusively, it is trying to become like a god or a superman. But exclusive recognition of its dependence only leads to a childish fatalism and to a world-negating and misanthropic spiritual arrogance.

- Carl Jung, The Mysteries: Papers from the Eranos, Page 324.

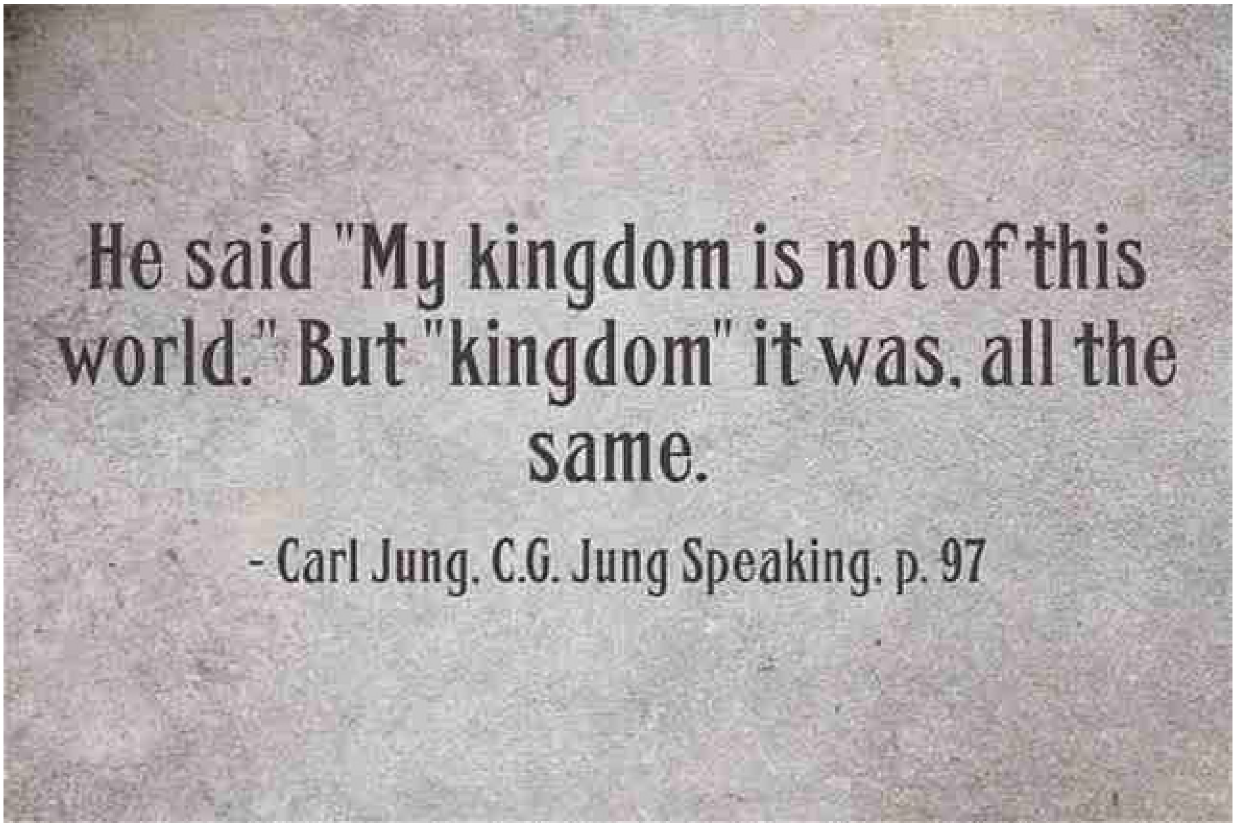
If ego consciousness follows its own road exclusively, it is trying to become like a god or a superman. But exclusive recognition of its dependence only leads to a childish fatalism and to a world-negating and misanthropic spiritual arrogance. Carl Jung, The Mysteries: Papers from the Eranos, Page 324.



The decisive question for man is: Is he related to something infinite or not?   Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 325.



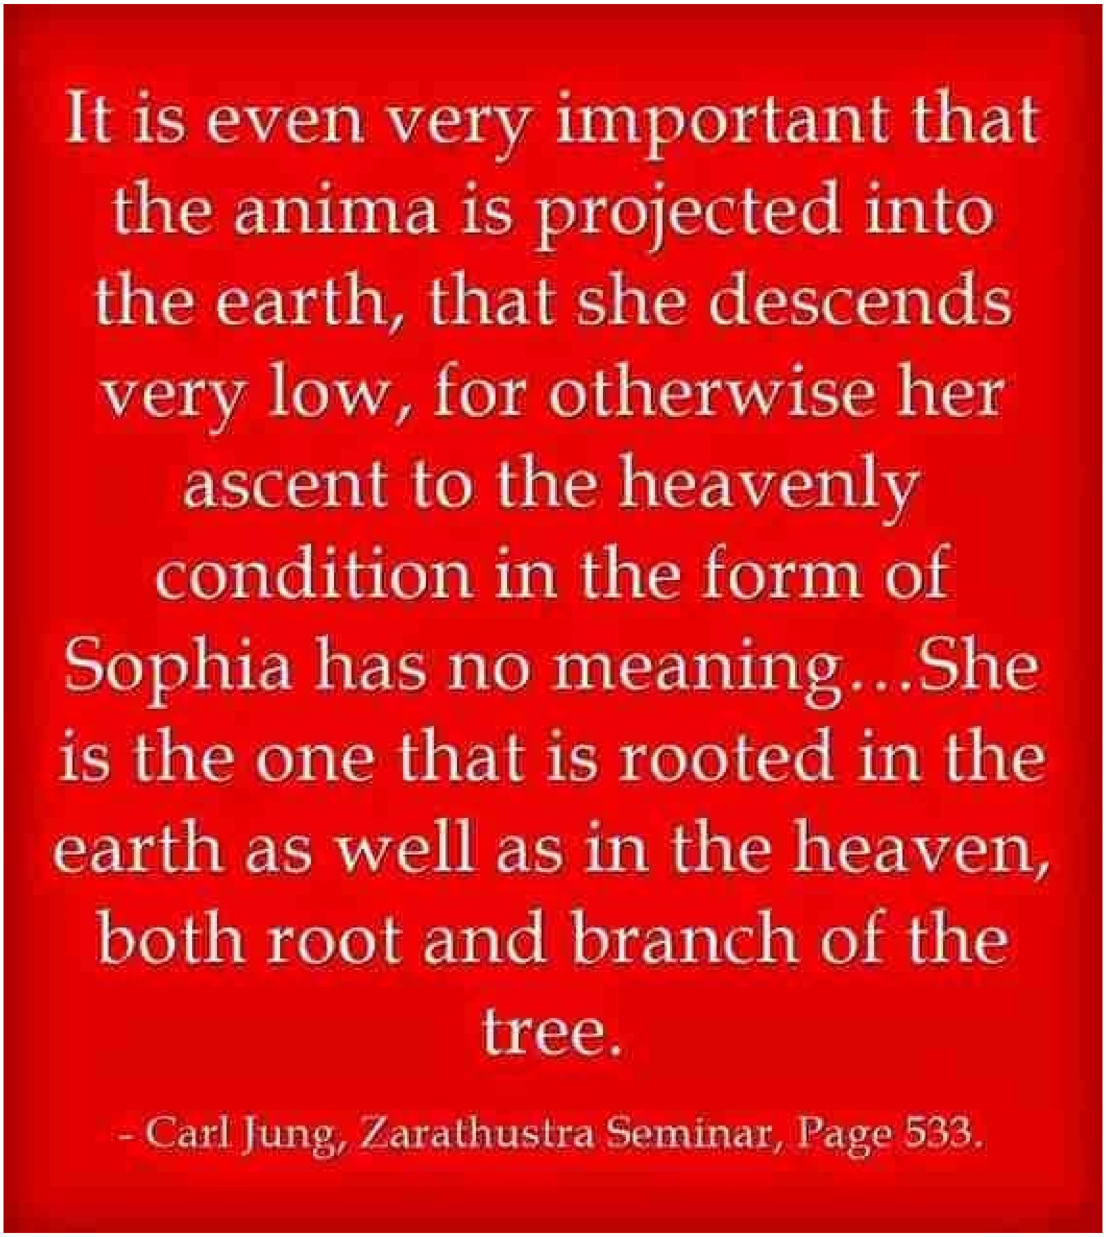
The divine process of change manifests itself to our human understanding . . . as punishment, torment, death, and transfiguration. Carl Jung, Alchemical Studies, CW 13, par. 139.



He said "My kingdom is not of this world." But "kingdom" it was, all the same.

- Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, p. 97

He said "My kingdom is not of this world." But "kingdom" it was, all the same. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, p. 97.



It is even very important that the anima is projected into the earth, that she descends very low, for otherwise her ascent to the heavenly condition in the form of Sophia has no meaning…She is the one that is rooted in the earth as well as in the heaven, both root and branch of the tree.

- Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 533.

It is even very important that the anima is projected into the earth, that she descends very low, for otherwise her ascent to the heavenly condition in the form of Sophia has no meaning…She is the one that is rooted in the earth as well as in the heaven, both root and branch of the tree. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 533.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/db0a7-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2713.j`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/edaa6-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2714.j`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/20c1d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2715.j`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/32e73-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2716.j`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/01b61-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2718.j`

6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/08a6a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2719.j
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/73b41-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2721.j
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/39e05-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2722.j
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f2f88-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2723.j
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e4c6e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2724.j
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/51d87-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2725.j
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8b560-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2726.j
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bfc56-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2727.j
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/84e75-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2731.j
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2269b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2732.j
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9d5fb-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2733.j
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0c6c3-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2734.j
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/933e5-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2735.j
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a2fd9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2736.j
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/91c8b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2737.j
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/95d09-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2738.j
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/598db-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2739.j
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c500e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2740.j
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/55c3b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2741.j
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/11a17-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2742.j
26. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/972c9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2743.j
27. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d6632-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2744.j
28. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c3da0-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2745.j
29. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a5b02-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2748.j
30. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d8d39-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2749.j

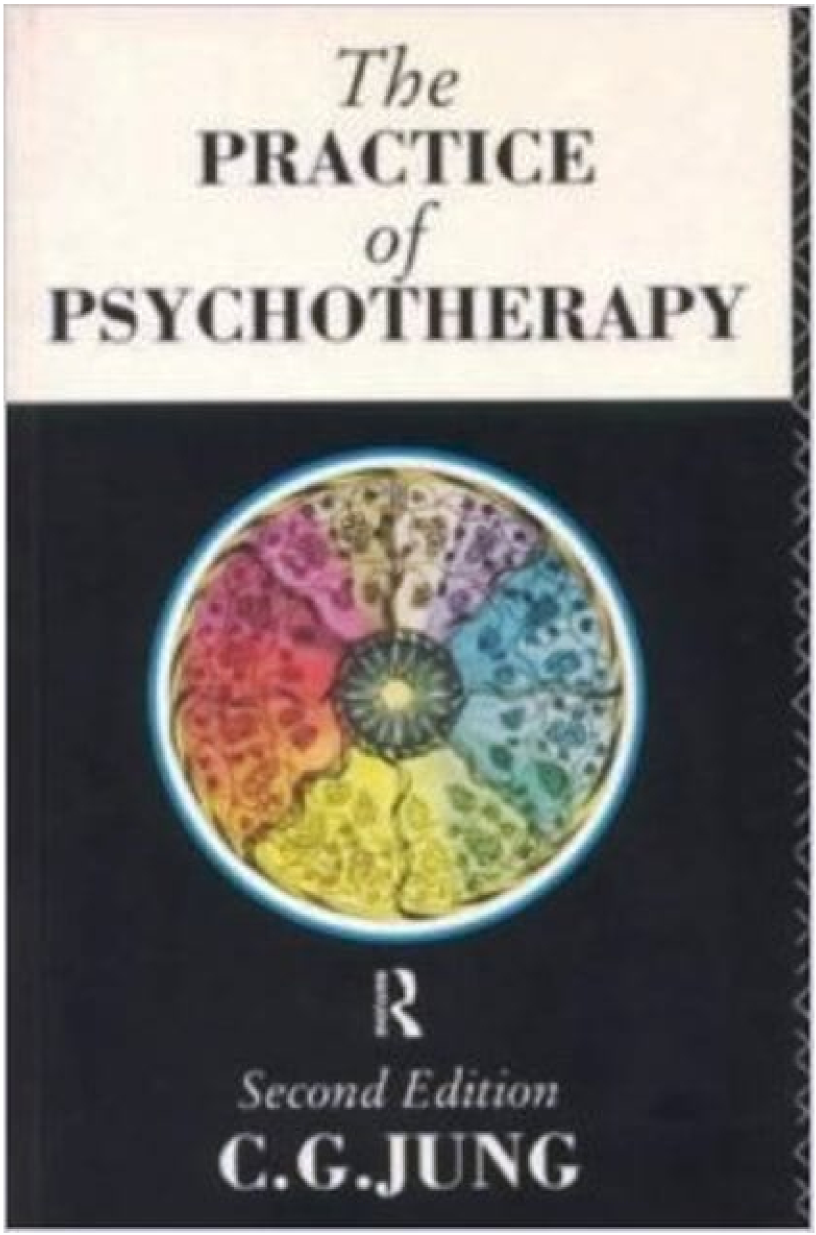
31. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6a316-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2750.j
32. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/91a6b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2753.j
33. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7eb4b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2761.j
34. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ae045-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2762.j
35. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e89e1-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2763.j
36. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a1d9f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2764.j
37. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f17ad-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2767.j
38. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a42df-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2768.j
39. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/06507-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2769.j
40. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0708e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2770.j
41. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c11be-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2771.j
42. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c275d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2772.j
43. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1c8d9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2773.j
44. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/84071-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2774.j
45. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f7948-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2775.j
46. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d146b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2776.j
47. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c99bf-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2777.j
48. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1471a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2778.j
49. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/63e92-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2779.j
50. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/15cc2-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2780.j
51. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bf1ce-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2781.j
52. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/21007-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2782.j
53. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7fc5c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2783.j
54. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dc14c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2784.j
55. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8db3a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2785.j

56. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c34fa-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2786.j
57. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/108ef-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2787.j
58. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c6137-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2788.j
59. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7f53b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2789.j
60. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/de18a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2790.j
61. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c276e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2791.j
62. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9c9e2-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2792.j
63. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1412d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2793.j

---

Carl Jung and “The Practice of Psychotherapy” – Anthology (2019-03-07 12:32)

[1]



[Carl Jung and “The Practice of Psychotherapy” – Anthology]

In sleep, fantasy takes the form of dreams. But in waking life, too, we continue to dream beneath the threshold of consciousness, especially when under the influence of repressed or other unconscious complexes. Carl Jung; "Problems of Modern Psychotherapy" (1929). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 125.

The dream shows the inner truth and reality of the patient as it really is: not as I conjecture it to be, and not as he would like it to be, but as it is. Carl Jung; "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 304.

The dream is specifically the utterance of the unconscious. Just as the psyche has a diurnal side which we call consciousness, so also it has a nocturnal side: the unconscious psychic activity which we apprehend as dreamlike fantasy. Carl Jung; "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 317.

The unconscious is not a demoniacal monster, but a natural entity which, as far as moral sense, aesthetic taste, and intellectual judgment go, is completely neutral. It only becomes dangerous when our conscious attitude to it is hopelessly wrong. To the degree that we repress it, its danger increases. Carl Jung; The Practical Use of Dream Analysis; CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 329.

The unconscious is not just evil by nature, it is also the source of the highest good: not only dark but also light, not only bestial, semihuman, and demonic but superhuman, spiritual, and, in the classical sense of the word, "divine." Carl Jung; The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 364.

For two personalities to meet is like mixing two chemical substances: if there is any combination at all, both are transformed. Carl Jung, CW 18, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Para 163.

To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful, for all those who are still below the general level of adaptation. But for people of more than average ability, people who never found it difficult to gain successes and to accomplish their share of the world's work-for them the moral compulsion to be nothing but normal signifies the bed of Procrustes-deadly and insupportable boredom, a hell of sterility and hopelessness. Carl Jung; CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; P. 161.

Often the hands will solve a mystery that the intellect has struggled with in vain." Carl Jung, CW 16, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Para 181.

To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful, for all those who are still below the general level of adaptation. Carl Jung, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Page 69.

Our civilization is still young, and young civilizations need all the arts of the animal-tamer to make the defiant barbarian and the savage in us more or less tractable. Carl Jung, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Page 75.

Hence, unless we prefer to be made fools of by our illusions, we shall, by carefully analyzing every fascination, extract from it a portion of our own personality, like a quintessence, and slowly come to recognize that we meet ourselves time an d again in a thousand disguises on the path of life. Carl Jung, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Page 316.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/7fdce-42bpsychotherapy.jpg`

Carl Jung on “Archetype” and “Archetypal Image [Lexicon] (2019-03-07 16:24)

[1]

The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious

TRANSLATED BY R.F.C. HULL

C.G JUNG

Archetype

Primordial, structural elements of the human psyche. (See also archetypal image and instinct.)

Archetypes are systems of readiness for action, and at the same time images and emotions. They are inherited with the brain structure-indeed they are its psychic aspect. They represent, on the one hand, a very strong instinctive conservatism, while on the other hand they are the most effective means conceivable of instinctive adaptation. They are thus, essentially, the chthonic portion of the psyche . . . that portion through which the psyche is attached to nature.["Mind and Earth," CW 10, par. 53.]

It is not . . . a question of inherited ideas but of inherited possibilities of ideas. Nor are they individual acquisitions but, in the main, common to all, as can be seen from [their] universal occurrence.["Concerning the Archetypes and the Anima Concept," CW 9i, par. 136.] Archetypes are irrepresentable in themselves but their effects are discernible in archetypal images and motifs.

Archetypes . . . present themselves as ideas and images, like everything else that becomes a content of consciousness.["On the Nature of the Psyche," CW 8, par. 435.]

Archetypes are, by definition, factors and motifs that arrange the psychic elements into certain images, characterized as archetypal, but in such a way that they can be recognized only from the effects they produce.["A Psychological Approach to the Trinity," CW 11, par. 222, note 2.]

Jung also described archetypes as "instinctual images," the forms which the instincts assume. He illustrated this using the simile of the spectrum.

The dynamism of instinct is lodged as it were in the infra-red part of the spectrum, whereas the instinctual image lies in the ultra-violet part. . . .

The realization and assimilation of instinct never take place at the red end, i.e., by absorption into the instinctual sphere, but only through integration of the image which signifies and at the same time evokes the instinct, although in a form quite different from the one we meet on the biological level.["On the Nature of the Psyche," CW 8, par. 414.]

Archetype

Psychologically . . . the archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon.[Ibid., par. 415.]

Archetypes manifest both on a personal level, through complexes, and collectively, as characteristics of whole cultures. Jung believed it was the task of each age to understand anew their content and their effects.

We can never legitimately cut loose from our archetypal foundations unless we are prepared to pay the price of a neurosis, any more than we can rid ourselves of our body and its organs without committing suicide.

If we cannot deny the archetypes or otherwise neutralize them, we are confronted, at every new stage in the differentiation of consciousness to which civilization attains, with the task of finding a new interpretation appropriate to this stage, in order to connect the life of the past that still exists in us with the life of the present, which threatens to slip away from it.["The Psychology of the Child Archetype," CW 9i, par. 267.]

Archetypal image

The form or representation of an archetype in consciousness. (See also collective unconscious.)

[The archetype is] a dynamism which makes itself felt in the numinosity and fascinating power of the archetypal image.["On the Nature of the Psyche," CW 8, par. 414.]

Archetypal images, as universal patterns or motifs which come from the collective unconscious, are the basic content of religions, mythologies, legends and fairy tales.

An archetypal content expresses itself, first and foremost, in metaphors.

If such a content should speak of the sun and identify with it the lion, the king, the hoard of gold guarded by the dragon, or the power that makes for the life and health of man, it is neither the one thing nor the other, but the unknown third thing that finds more or less adequate expression in all these similes, yet-to the perpetual vexation of the intellect-remains unknown and not to be fitted into a formula.["The Psychology of the Child Archetype," CW 9i, par. 267]

On a personal level, archetypal motifs are patterns of thought or behavior that are common to humanity at all times and in all places.

For years I have been observing and investigating the products of the unconscious in the widest sense of the word, namely dreams, fantasies, visions, and delusions of the insane.

I have not been able to avoid recognizing certain regularities, that is, types. There are types of situations and types of figures that repeat themselves frequently and have a corresponding meaning. I therefore employ the term "motif" to designate these repetitions. Thus there are not only typical dreams but typical motifs in dreams. . . .

[These] can be arranged under a series of archetypes, the chief of them being . . .

the shadow, the wise old man, the child (including the child hero), the mother ("Primordial Mother"and "Earth Mother") as a supraordinate personality ("daemonic"because supraordinate), and her counterpart the maiden, and lastly the anima in man and the animus in woman.["The Psychological Aspects of the Kore,"ibid., par. 309.] Source: Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e8e3b-12blexicon.jpg`

Carl Jung: ...we are no more than the Stable in which the Lord is born. (2019-03-07 16:37)

[1]

The individual ego is the stable in which the Christ-child is born.
C.G. Jung
Psychology & Religion

After he had experienced the world's suffering, this God who became man left behind him a Comforter, the Third Person of the Trinity, who would make his dwelling in many individuals still to come, none of whom would enjoy the privilege or even the possibility of being born without sin.

In the Paraclete, therefore, God is closer to the real man and his darkness than he is in the Son. The light God bestrides the bridge—Man—from the day side; God's shadow, from the night side.

What will be the outcome of this fearful dilemma, which threatens to shatter the frail human vessel with unknown storms and intoxications?

It may well be the revelation of the Holy Ghost out of man himself.

Just as man was once revealed out of God, so, when the circle closes, God may be revealed out of man.

But since, in this world, an evil is joined to every good, the avrlfiLfiov irveviia will twist the indwelling of the Paraclete into a self-deification of man, thereby causing an inflation of self-importance of which we had a foretaste in the case of Nietzsche.

The more unconscious we are of the religious problem in the future, the greater the danger of our putting the divine germ within us to some ridiculous or demoniacal use, puffing ourselves up with it instead of remaining conscious that we are no more than the Stable in which the Lord is born.

Even on the highest peak we shall never be "beyond good and evil," and the more we experience of their inextricable entanglement the more uncertain and confused will our moral judgment be.

In this conflict, it will not help us in the least to throw the moral criterion on the rubbish heap and to set up new tablets after known patterns; for, as in the past, so in the future the wrong we have done, thought, or intended will wreak its vengeance on our souls, no matter whether we turn the world upside down or not.

Our knowledge of good and evil has dwindled with our mounting knowledge and experience, and will dwindle still more in the future, without our being able to escape the demands of ethics.

In this utmost uncertainty we need the illumination of a holy and whole-making spirit—a spirit that can be anything rather than our reason. Carl Jung; CW 11, Psychology and Religion, Pages 179 - 180

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4e08f-12bego.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 15 (2019-03-07 17:05)

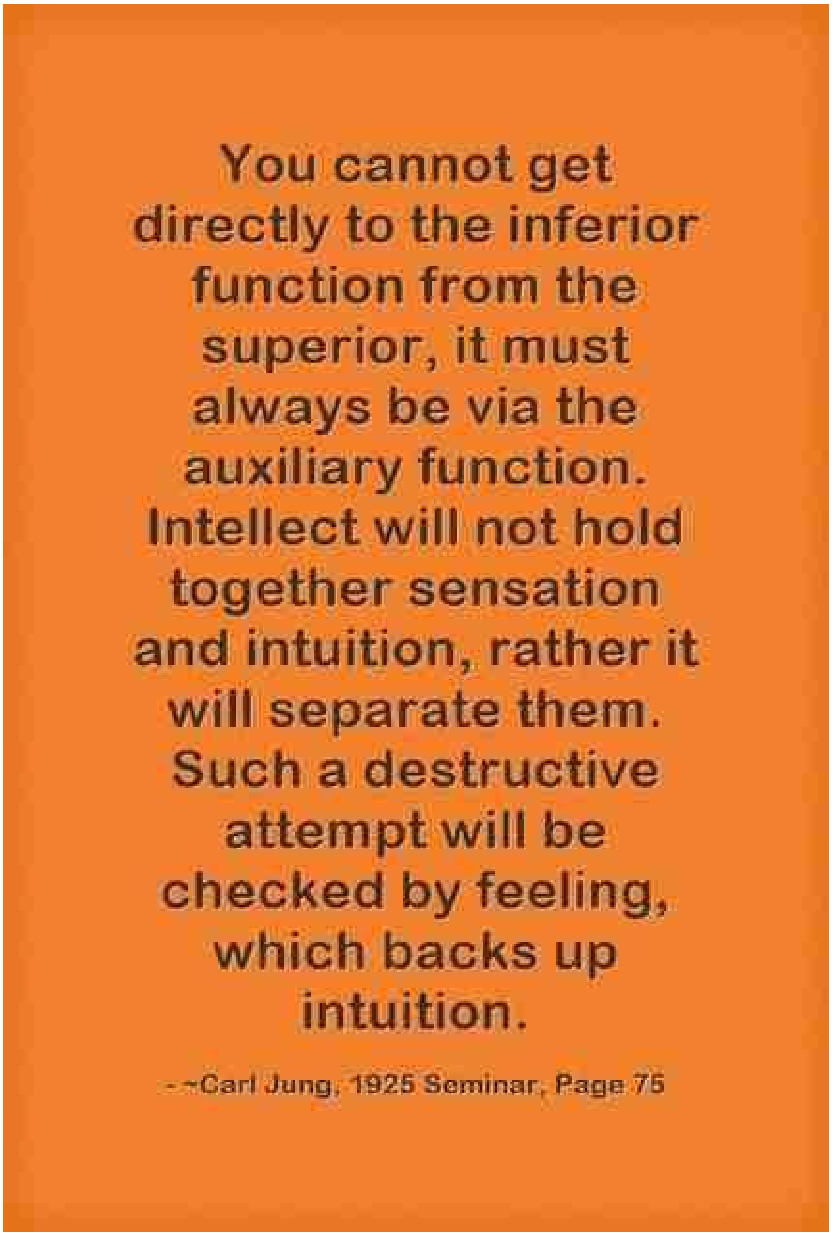
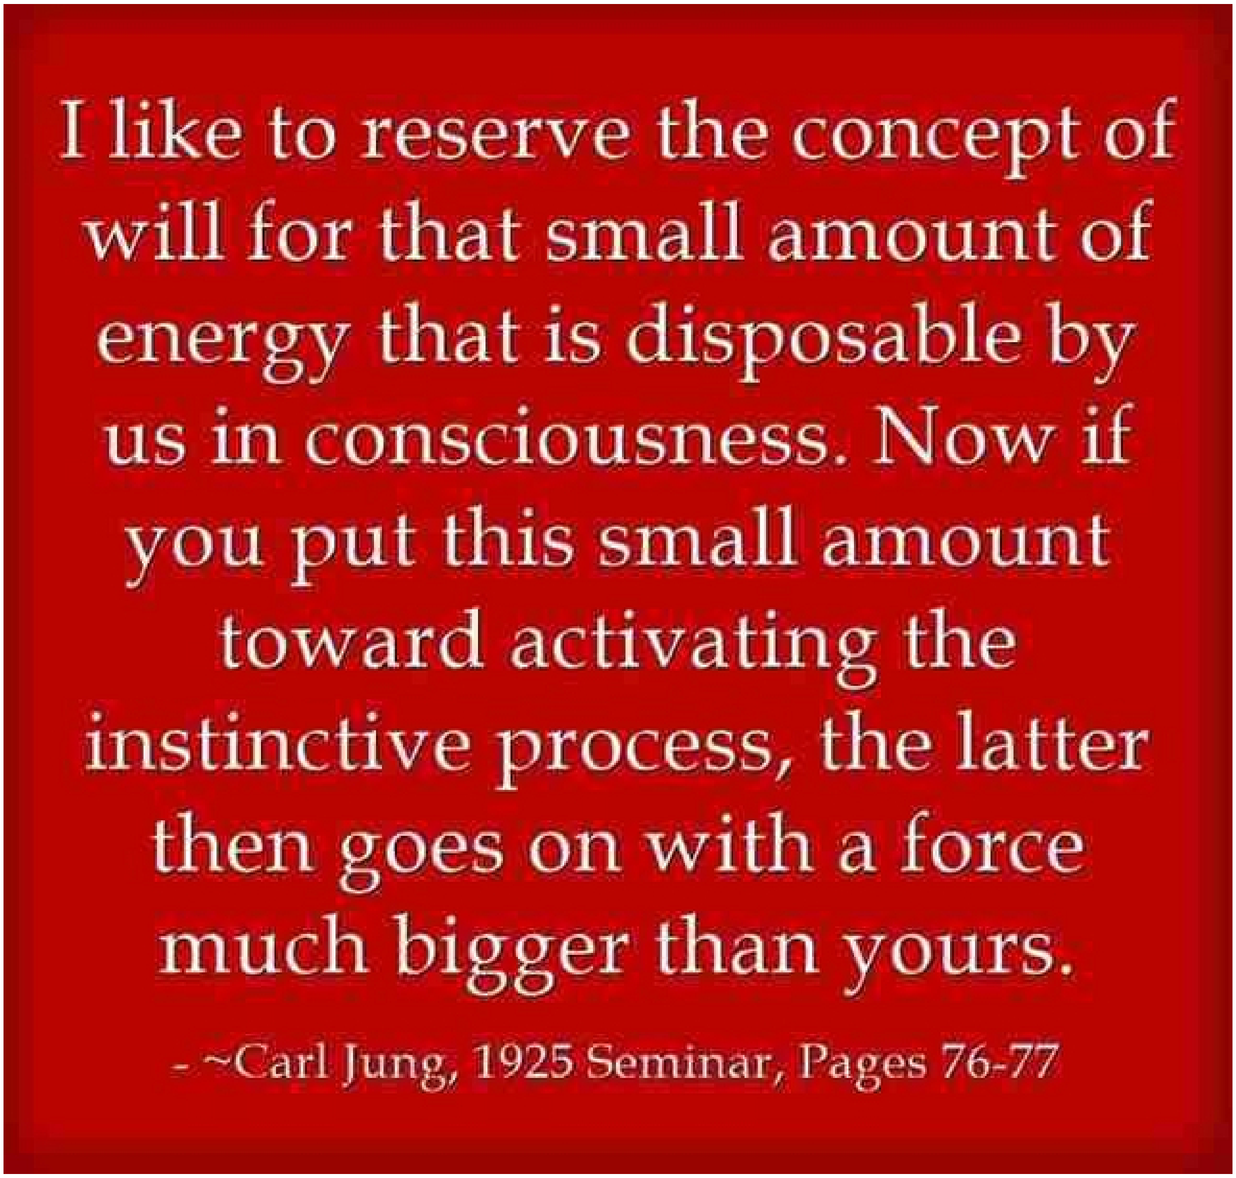
[1]



You cannot get directly to the inferior function from the superior, it must always be via the auxiliary function. Intellect will not hold together sensation and intuition, rather it will separate them. Such a destructive attempt will be checked by feeling, which backs up intuition.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75

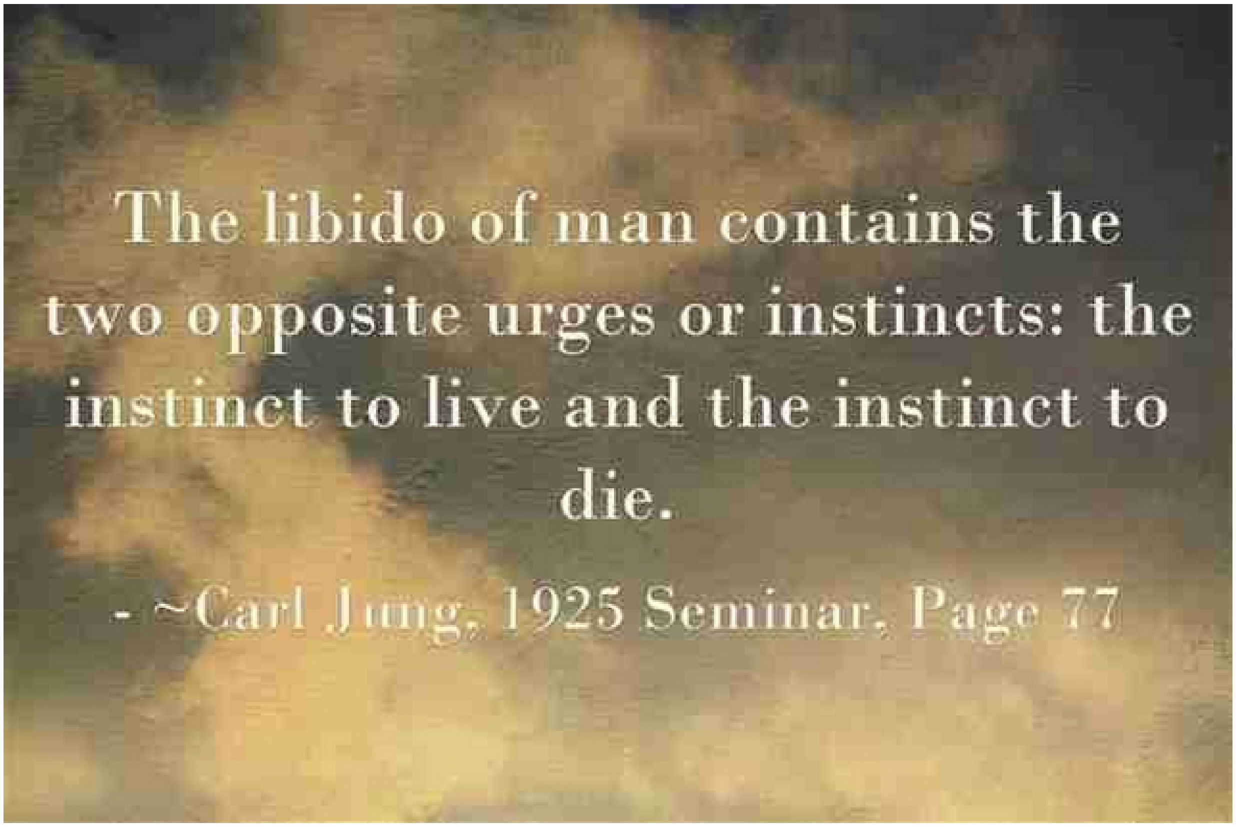
You cannot get directly to the inferior function from the superior, it must always be via the auxiliary function. Intellect will not hold together sensation and intuition, rather it will separate them. Such a destructive attempt will be checked by feeling, which backs up intuition. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75



I like to reserve the concept of will for that small amount of energy that is disposable by us in consciousness. Now if you put this small amount toward activating the instinctive process, the latter then goes on with a force much bigger than yours.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 76-77

I like to reserve the concept of will for that small amount of energy that is disposable by us in consciousness. Now if you put this small amount toward activating the instinctive process, the latter then goes on with a force much bigger than yours. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 76-77

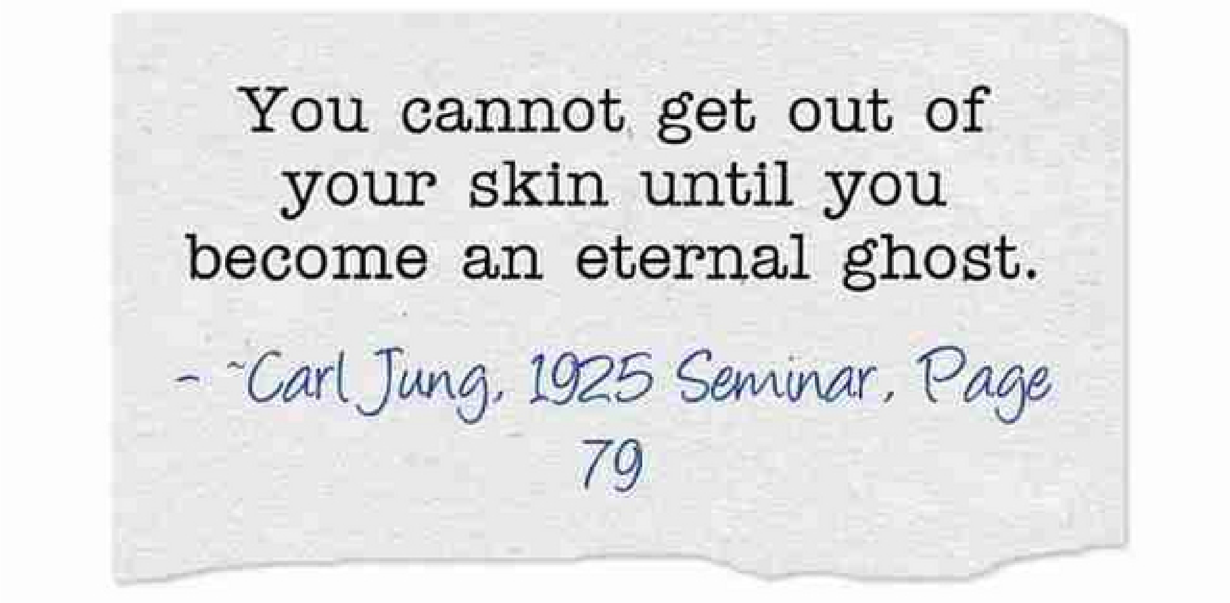


The libido of man contains the two opposite urges or instincts: the instinct to live and the instinct to die.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 77

The libido of man contains the two opposite urges or instincts: the instinct to live and the instinct to die. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 77

[4]

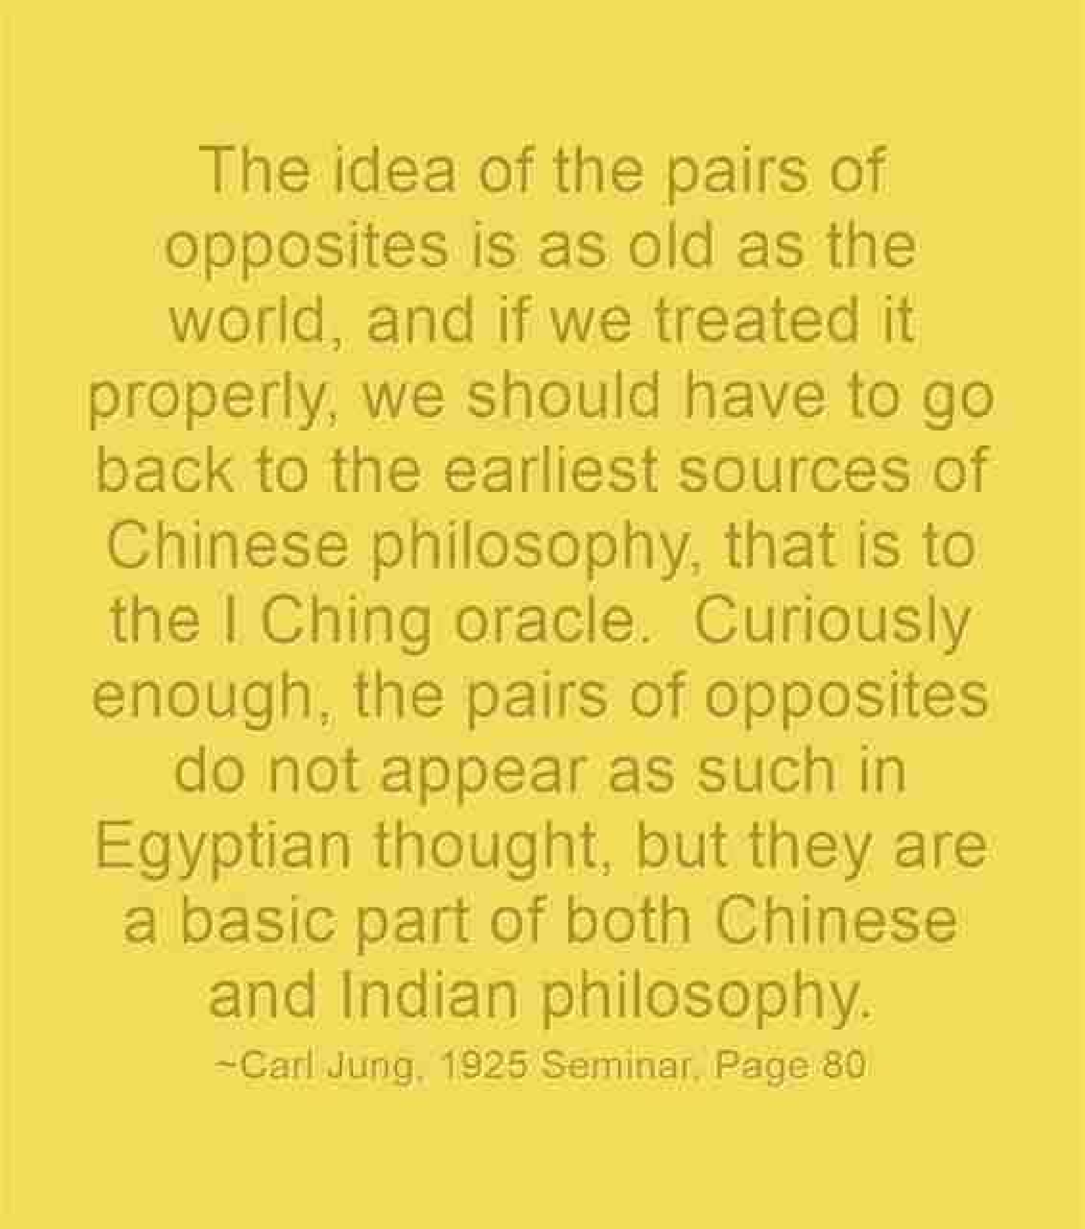


You cannot get out of your skin until you become an eternal ghost.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 79

You cannot get out of your skin until you become an eternal ghost. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 79

[5]

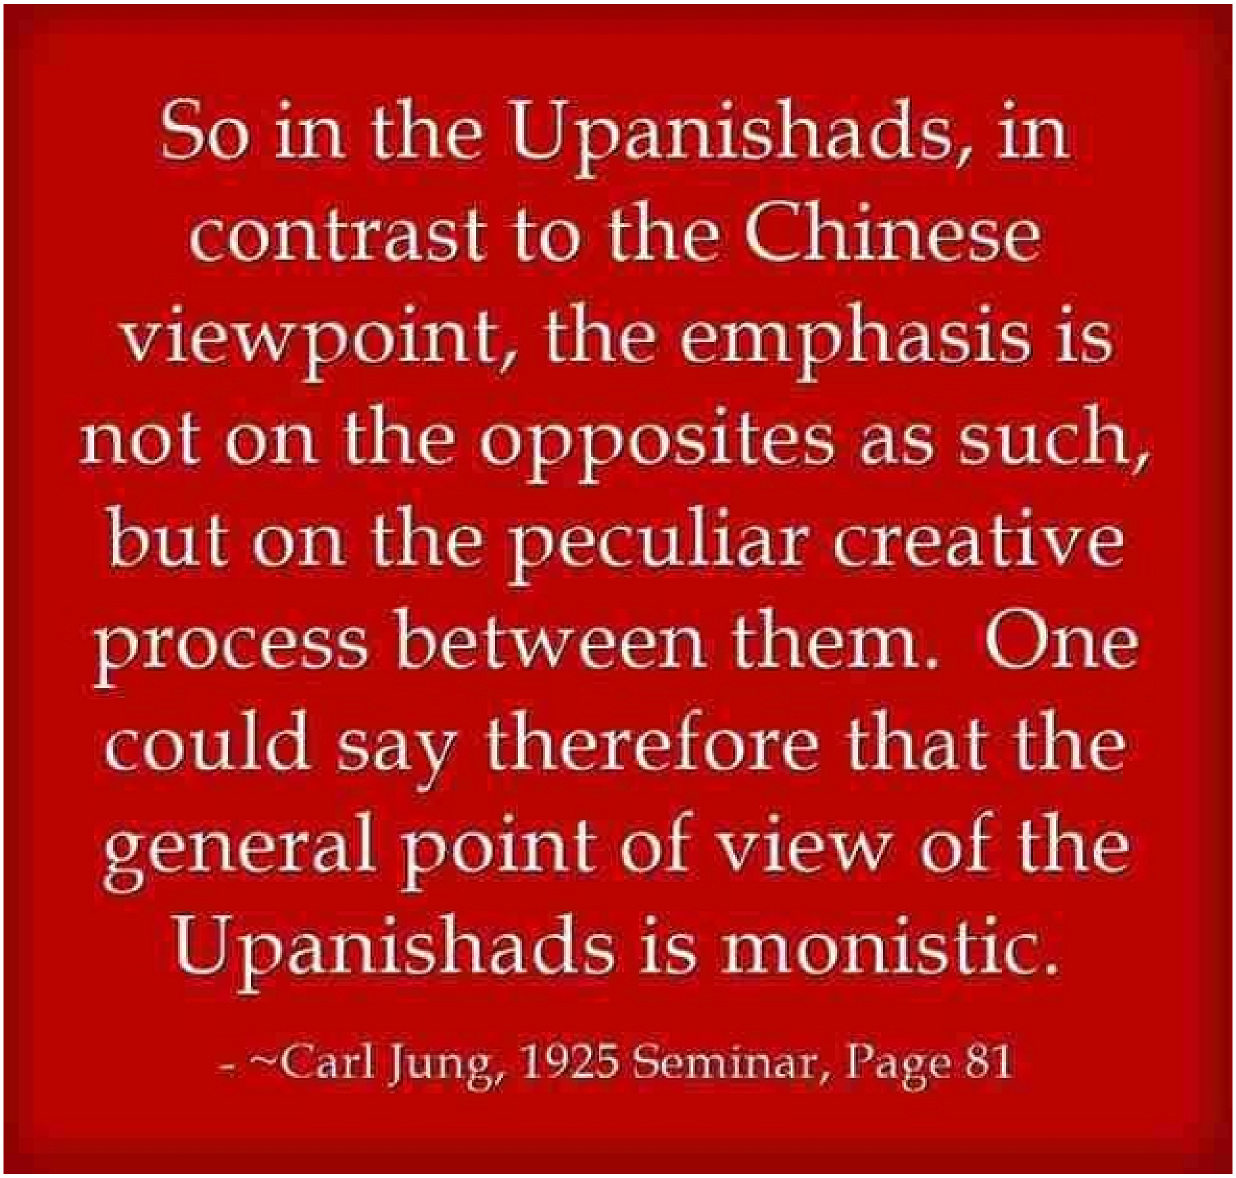


The idea of the pairs of opposites is as old as the world, and if we treated it properly, we should have to go back to the earliest sources of Chinese philosophy, that is to the I Ching oracle. Curiously enough, the pairs of opposites do not appear as such in Egyptian thought, but they are a basic part of both Chinese and Indian philosophy.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 80

The idea of the pairs of opposites is as old as the world, and if we treated it properly, we should have to go back to the earliest sources of Chinese philosophy, that is to the I Ching oracle. Curiously enough, the pairs of opposites do not appear as such in Egyptian thought, but they are a basic part of both Chinese and Indian philosophy. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 80

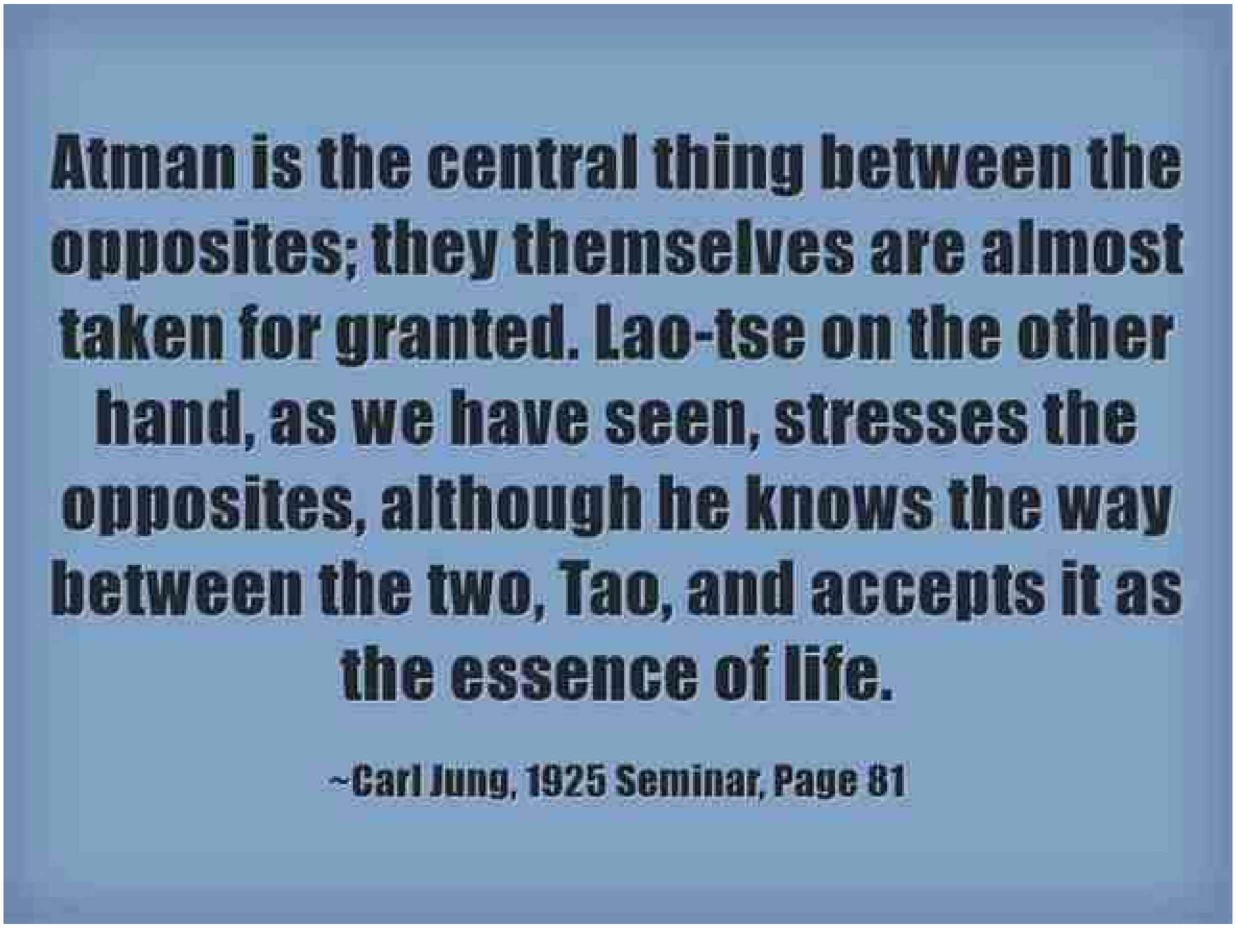
[6]



So in the Upanishads, in contrast to the Chinese viewpoint, the emphasis is not on the opposites as such, but on the peculiar creative process between them. One could say therefore that the general point of view of the Upanishads is monistic.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 81

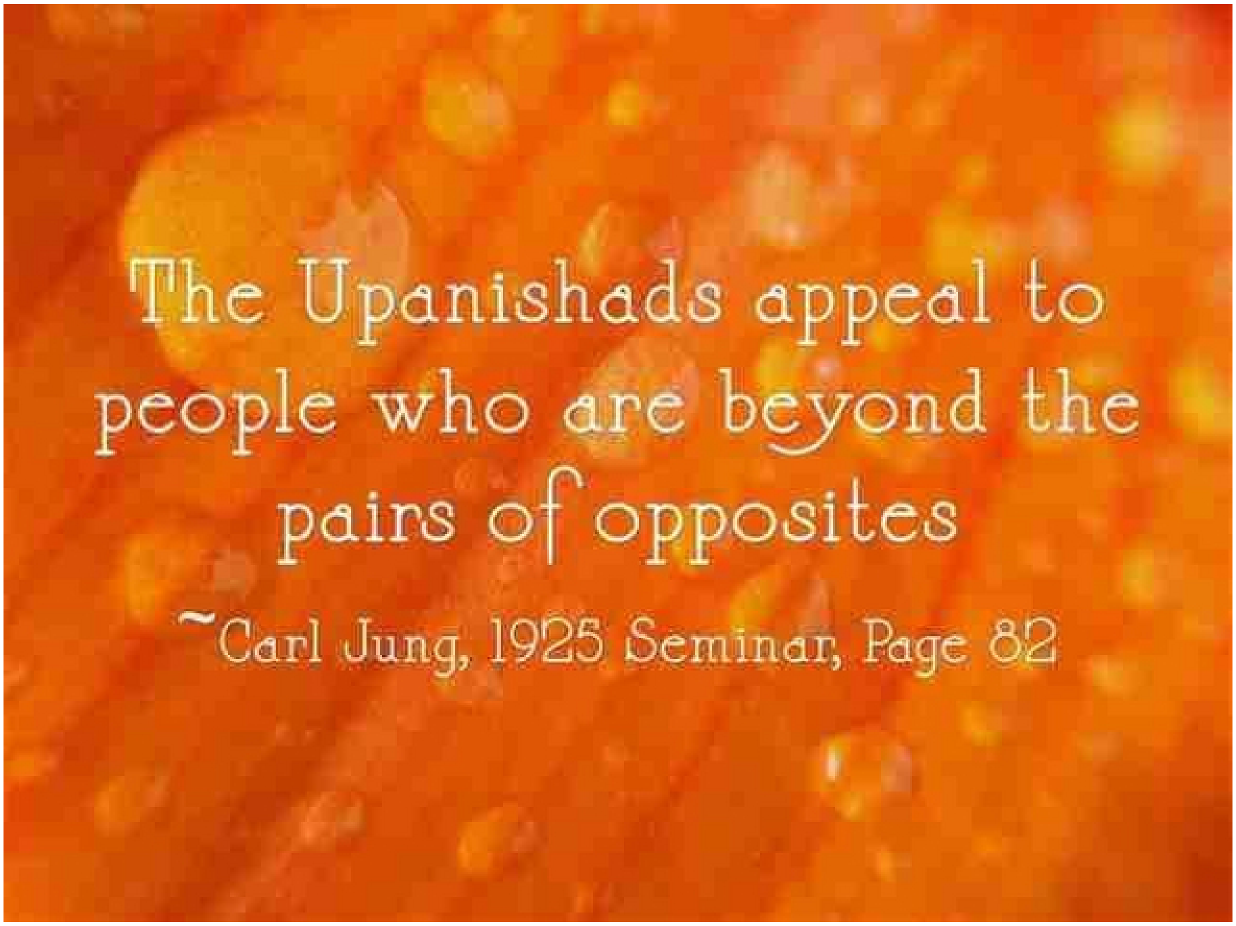
So in the Upanishads, in contrast to the Chinese viewpoint, the emphasis is not on the opposites as such, but on the peculiar creative process between them. One could say therefore that the general point of view of the Upanishads is monistic. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 81



Atman is the central thing between the opposites; they themselves are almost taken for granted. Lao-tse on the other hand, as we have seen, stresses the opposites, although he knows the way between the two, Tao, and accepts it as the essence of life.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 81

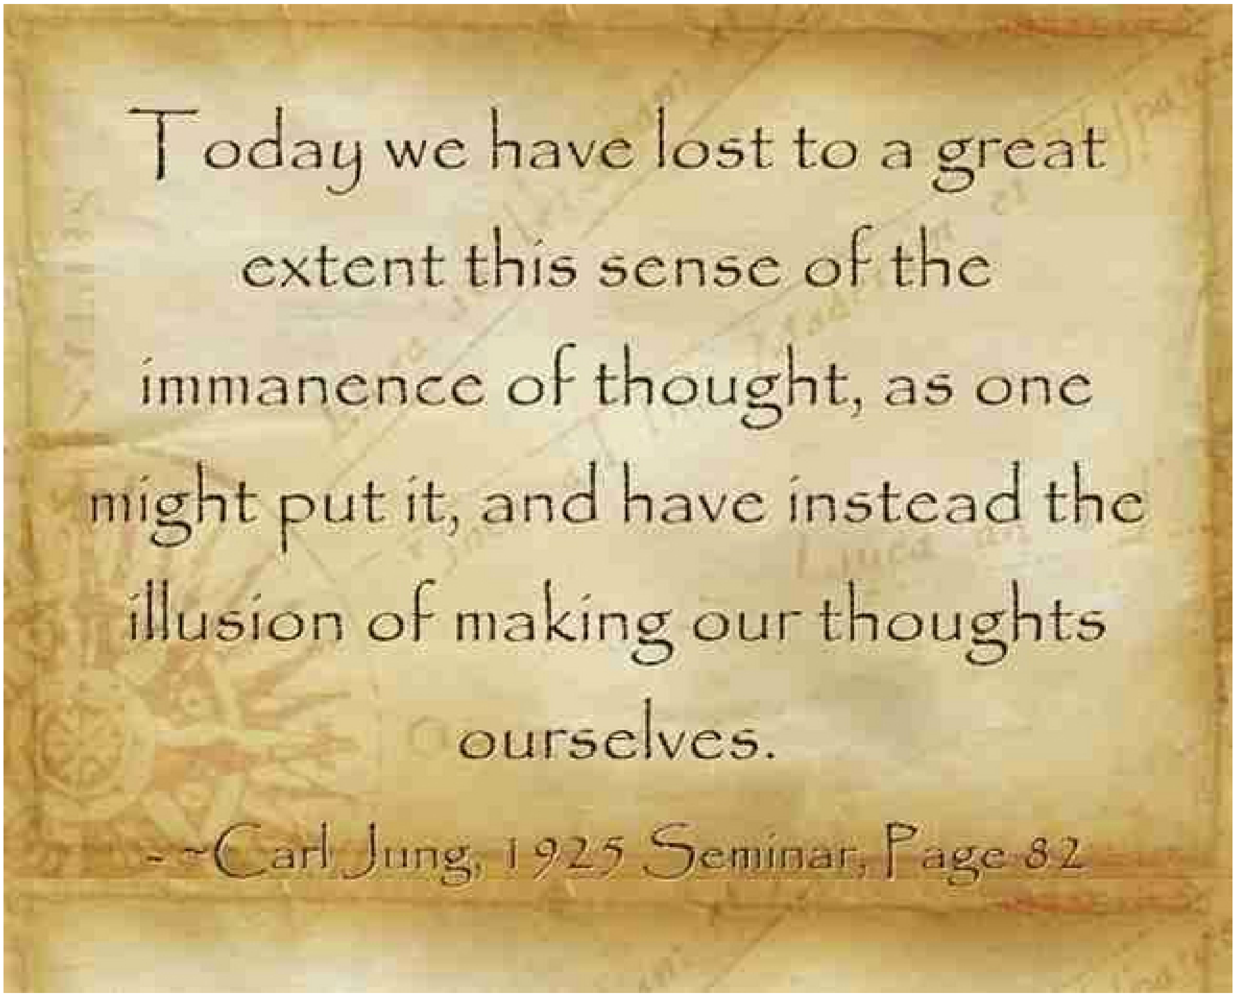
Atman is the central thing between the opposites; they themselves are almost taken for granted. Lao-tse on the other hand, as we have seen, stresses the opposites, although he knows the way between the two, Tao, and accepts it as the essence of life. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 81



The Upanishads appeal to people who are beyond the pairs of opposites

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82

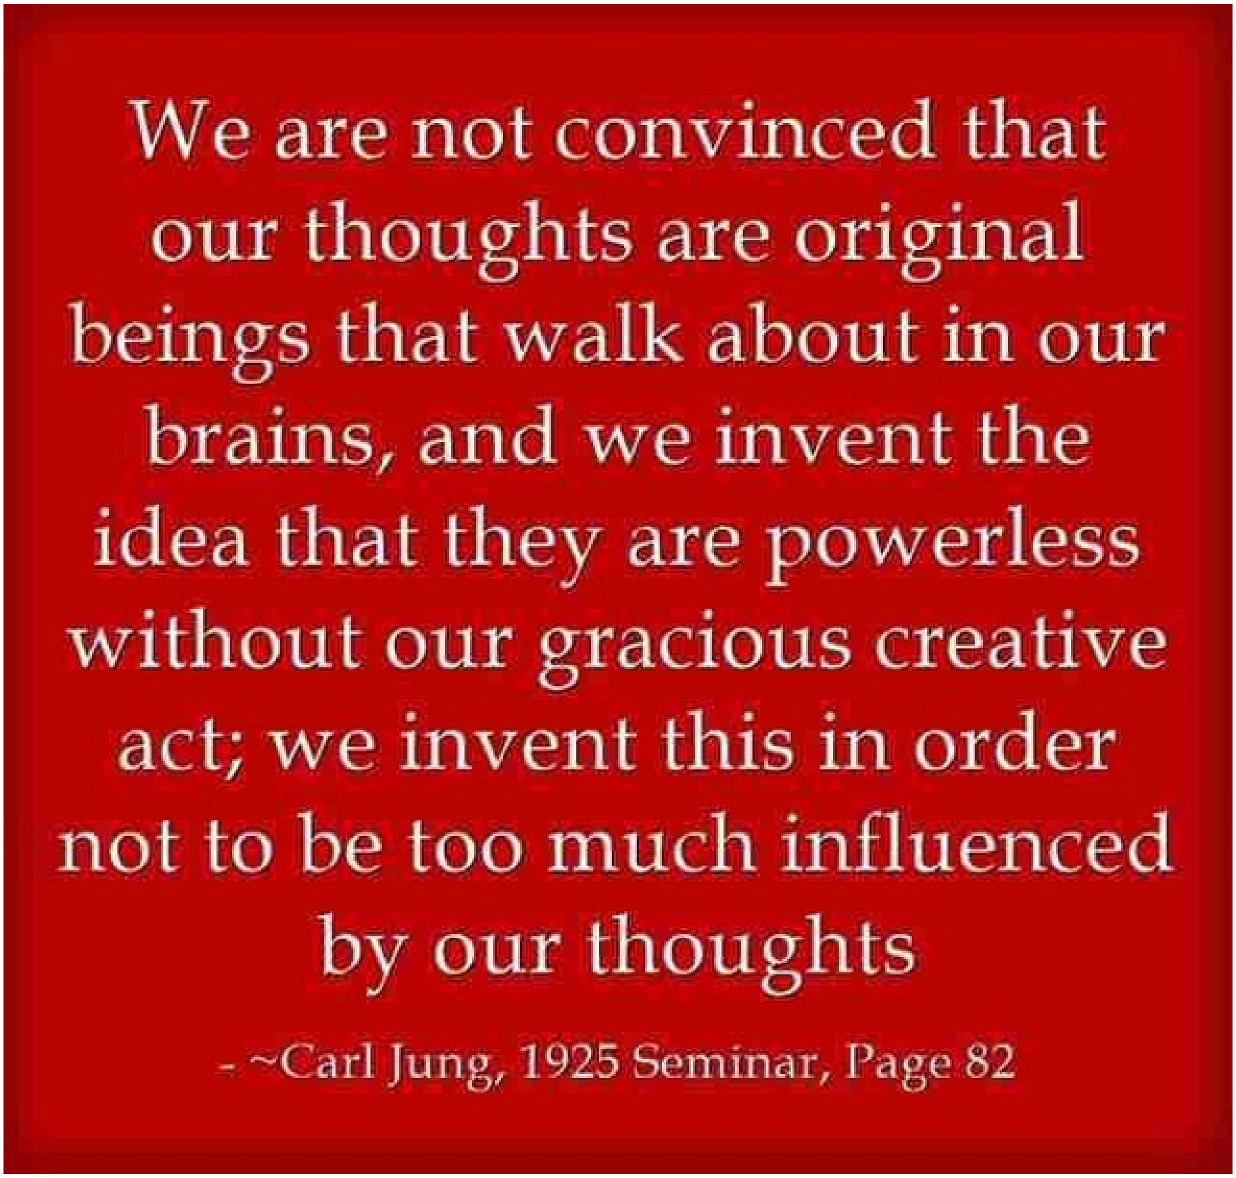
The Upanishads appeal to people who are beyond the pairs of opposites. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82



Today we have lost to a great extent this sense of the immanence of thought, as one might put it, and have instead the illusion of making our thoughts ourselves.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82

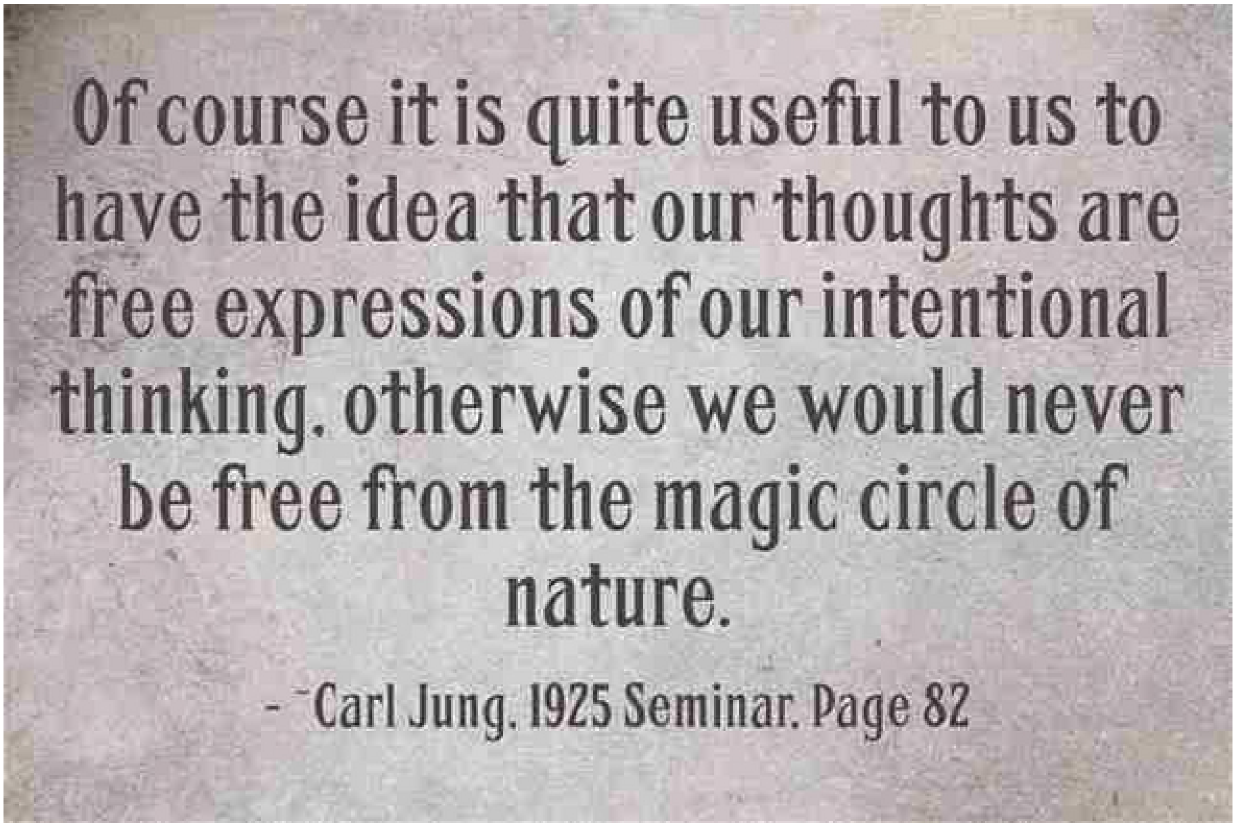
Today we have lost to a great extent this sense of the immanence of thought, as one might put it, and have instead the illusion of making our thoughts ourselves. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82



We are not convinced that our thoughts are original beings that walk about in our brains, and we invent the idea that they are powerless without our gracious creative act; we invent this in order not to be too much influenced by our thoughts

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82

We are not convinced that our thoughts are original beings that walk about in our brains, and we invent the idea that they are powerless without our gracious creative act; we invent this in order not to be too much influenced by our thoughts. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82



Of course it is quite useful to us to have the idea that our thoughts are free expressions of our intentional thinking. otherwise we would never be free from the magic circle of nature.

- ¯Carl Jung. 1925 Seminar. Page 82

Of course it is quite useful to us to have the idea that our thoughts are free expressions of our intentional thinking, otherwise we would never be free from the magic circle of nature. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 82

After all, we really can think, even if not with an absolute independence from nature;
but it is the duty of the psychologist to make the double statement, and while admitting man's power of thought, to insist also on the fact that he is trapped in his own skin, and therefore always has his thinking influenced by nature in a way he cannot wholly control.

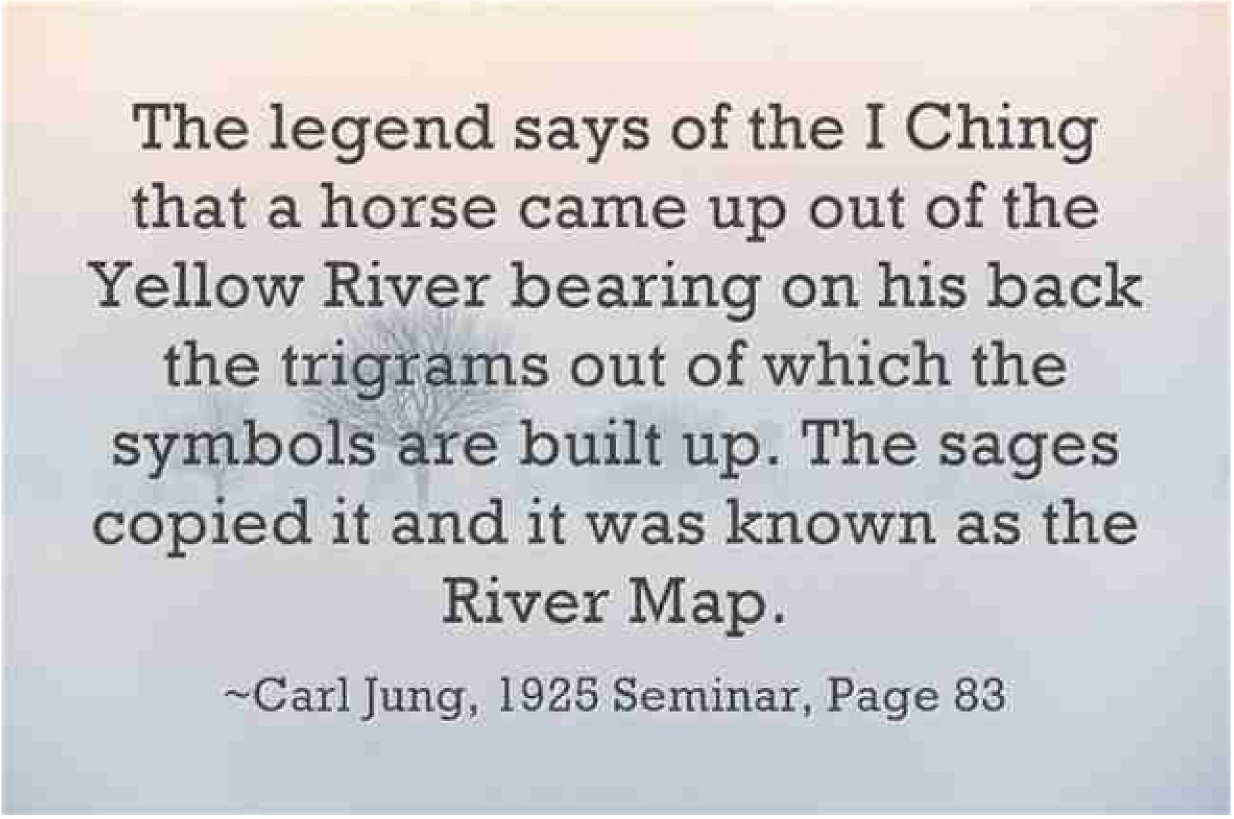
- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83

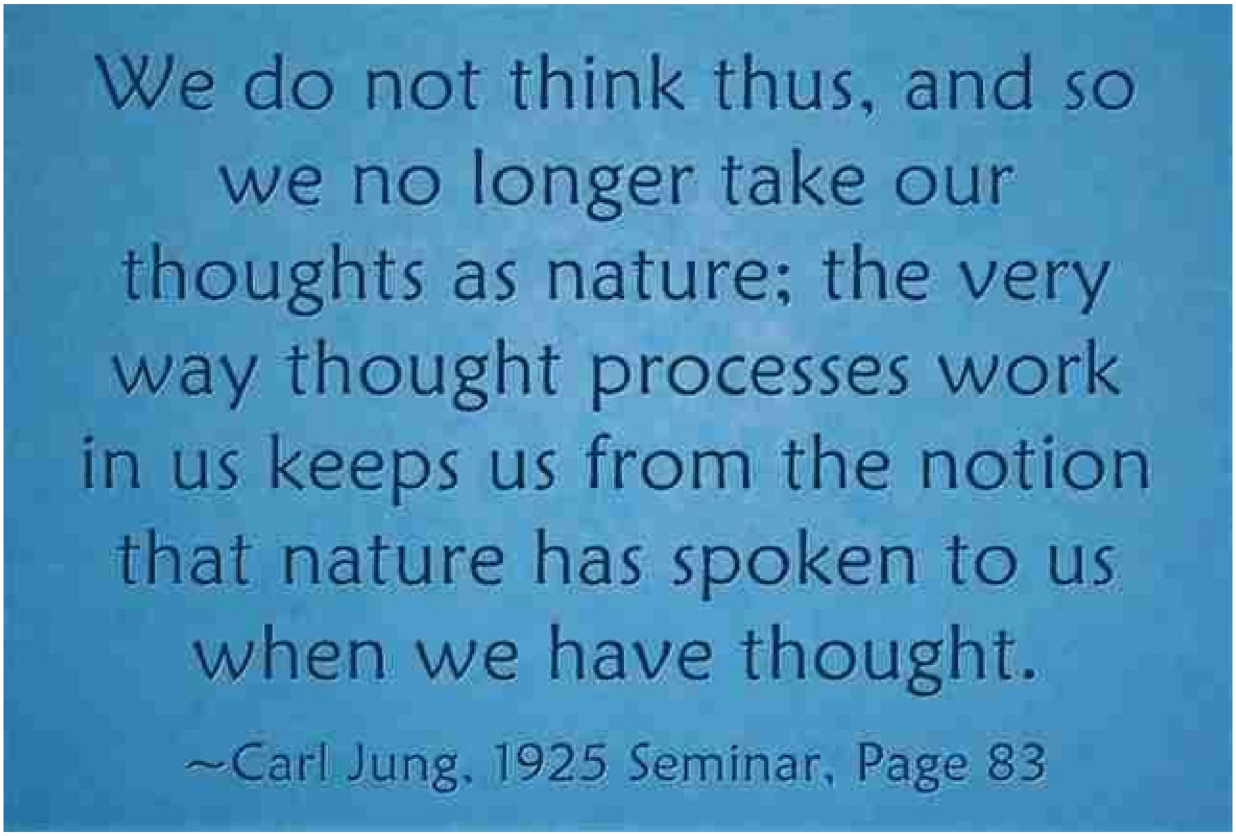
After all, we really can think, even if not with an absolute independence from nature; but it is the duty of the psychologist to make the double statement, and while admitting man’s power of thought, to insist also on the fact that he is trapped in his own skin, and therefore always has his thinking influenced by nature in a way he cannot wholly control. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83



The legend says of the I Ching that a horse came up out of the Yellow River bearing on his back the trigrams out of which the symbols are built up. The sages copied it and it was known as the River Map.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83

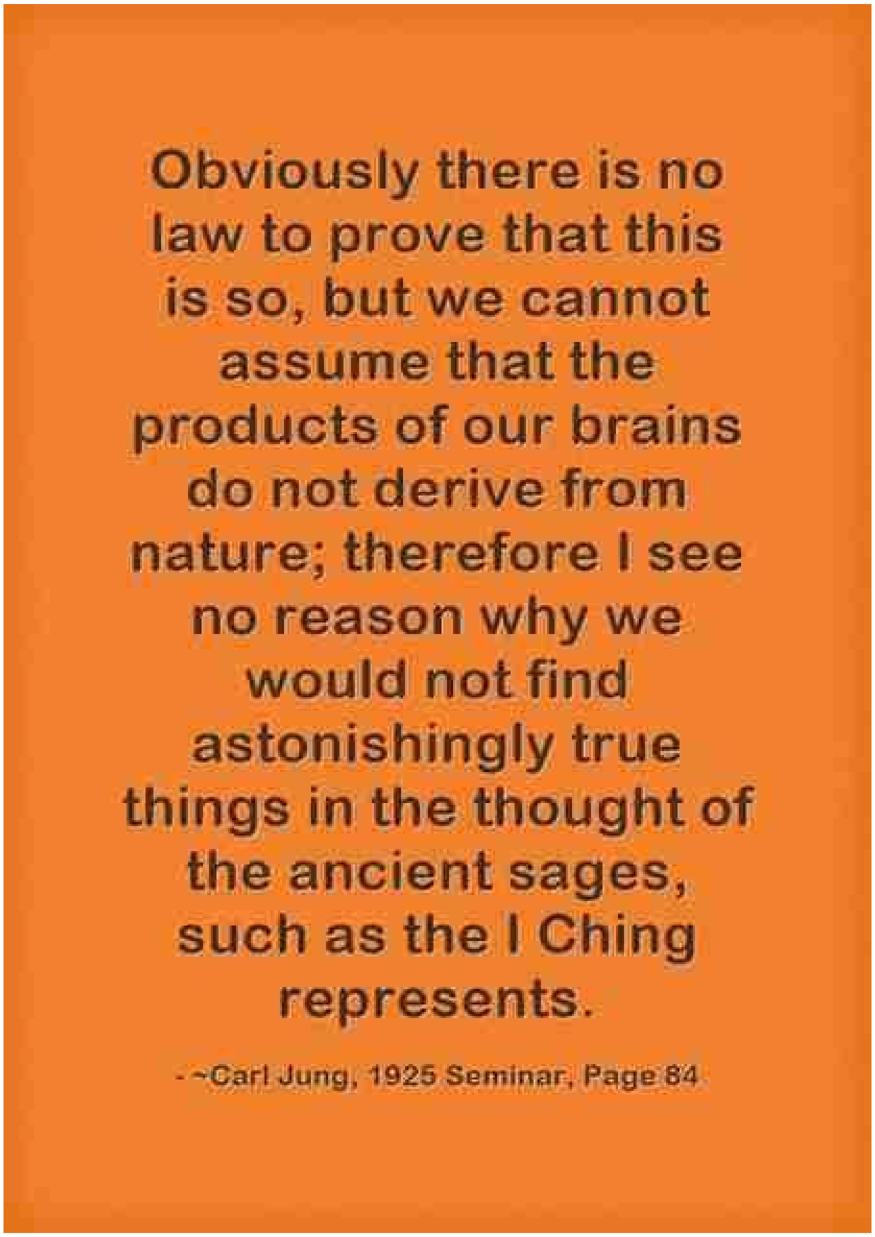
The legend says of the I Ching that a horse came up out of the Yellow River bearing on his back the trigrams out of which the symbols are built up. The sages copied it and it was known as the River Map. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83



We do not think thus, and so we no longer take our thoughts as nature; the very way thought processes work in us keeps us from the notion that nature has spoken to us when we have thought.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 83

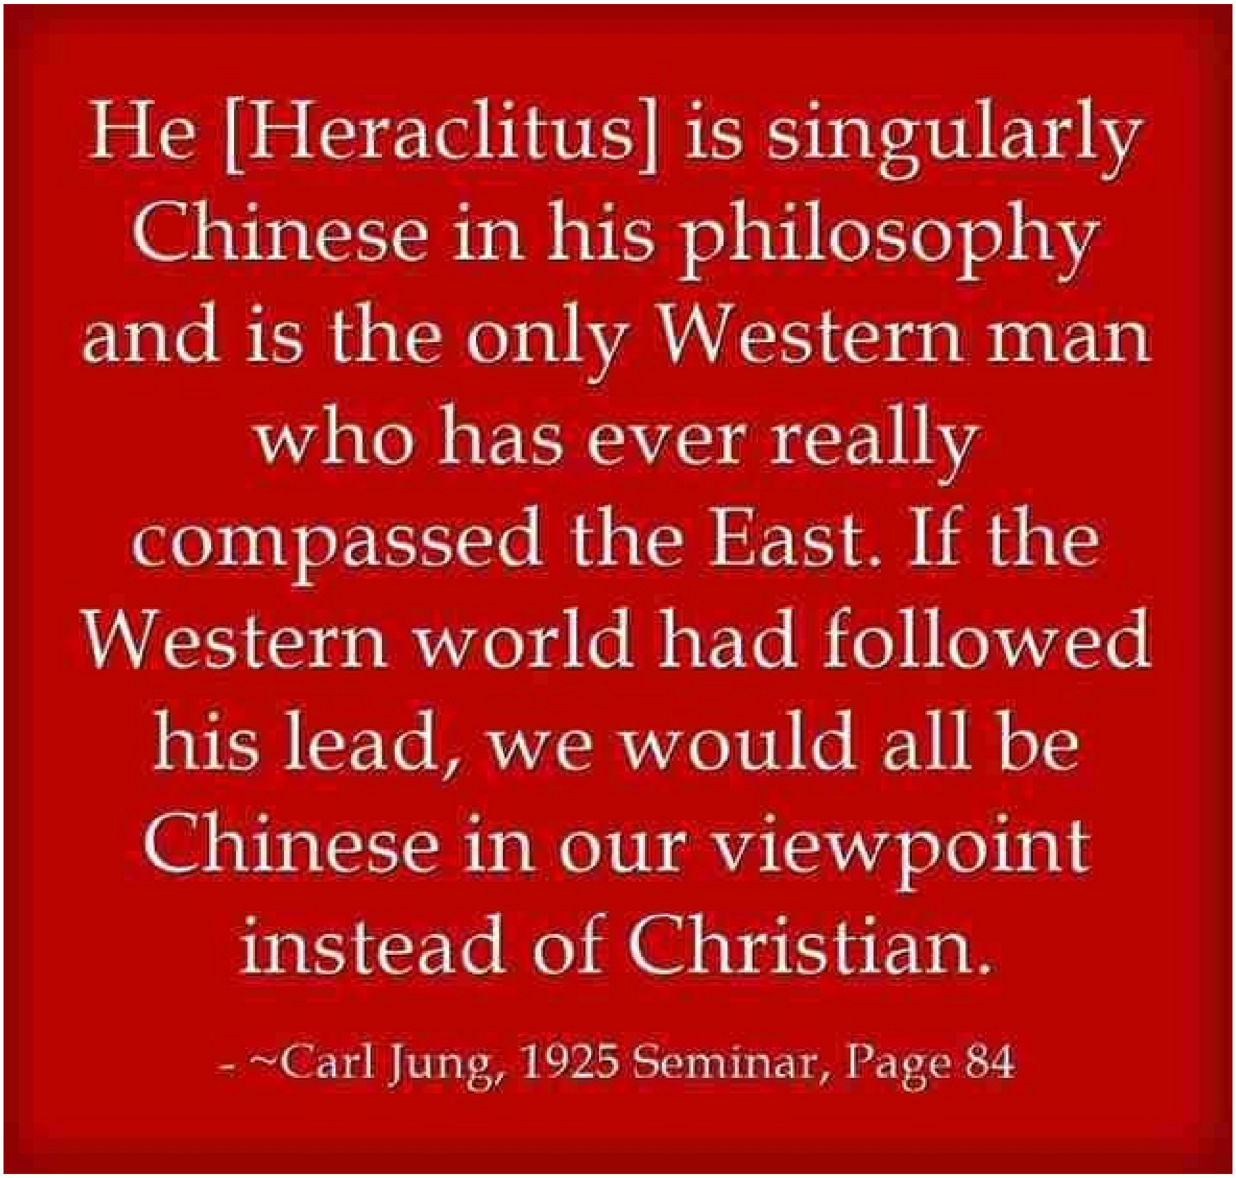
We do not think thus, and so we no longer take our thoughts as nature; the very way thought processes work in us keeps us from the notion that nature has spoken to us when we have thought. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page83



Obviously there is no law to prove that this is so, but we cannot assume that the products of our brains do not derive from nature; therefore I see no reason why we would not find astonishingly true things in the thought of the ancient sages, such as the I Ching represents.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 84

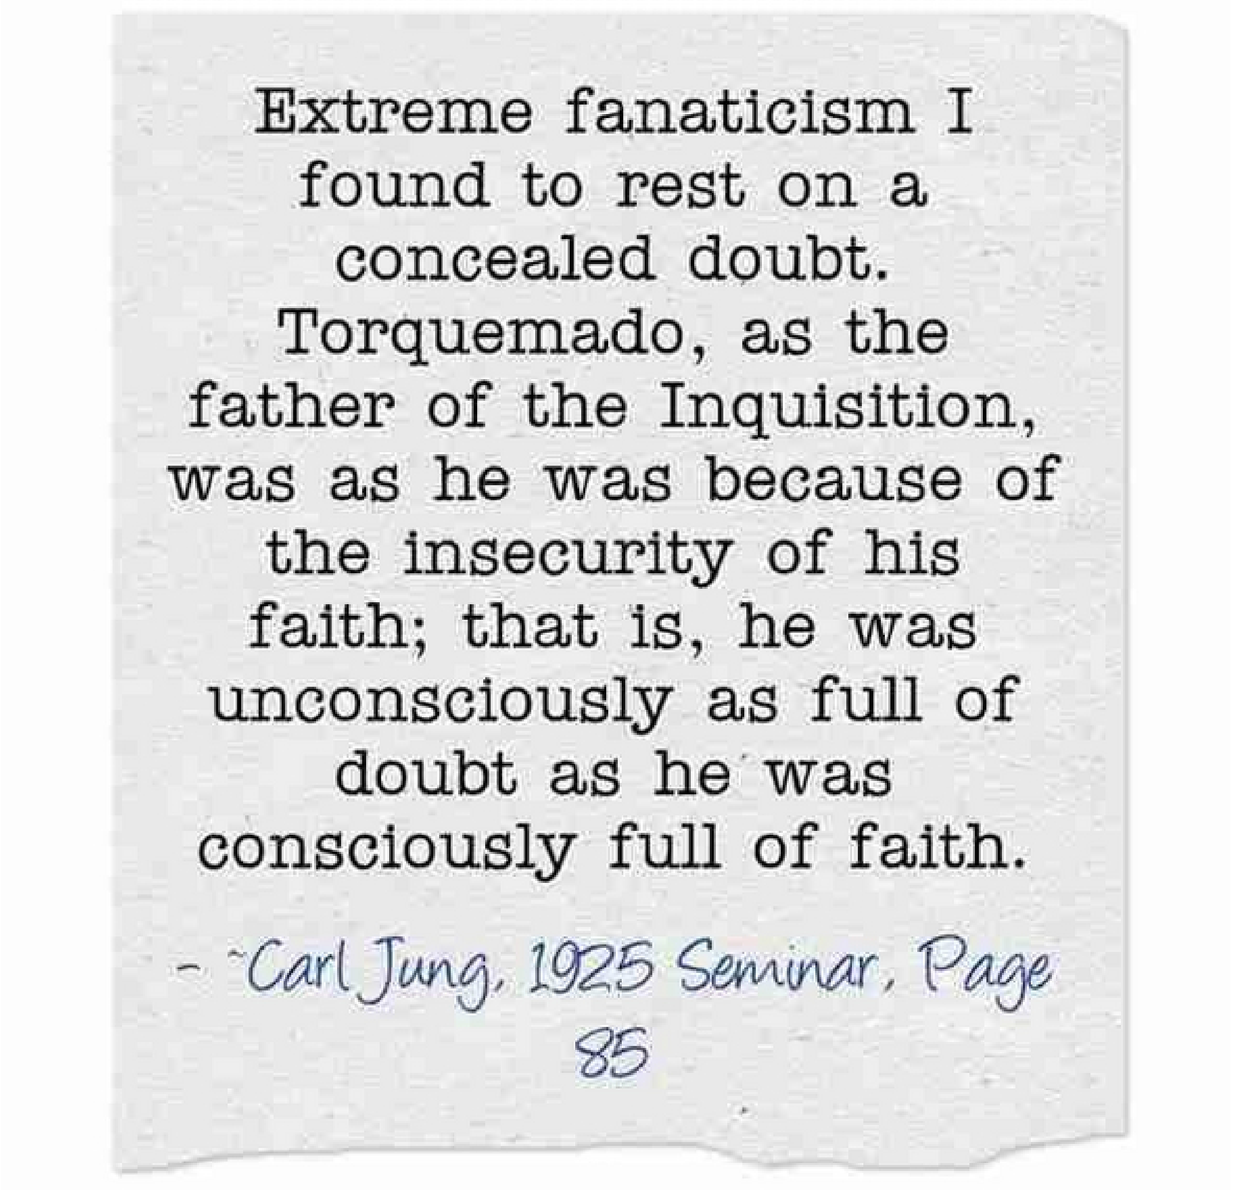
Obviously there is no law to prove that this is so, but we cannot assume that the products of our brains do not derive from nature; therefore I see no reason why we would not find astonishingly true things in the thought of the ancient sages, such as the I Ching represents. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 84



He [Heraclitus] is singularly Chinese in his philosophy and is the only Western man who has ever really compassed the East. If the Western world had followed his lead, we would all be Chinese in our viewpoint instead of Christian.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 84

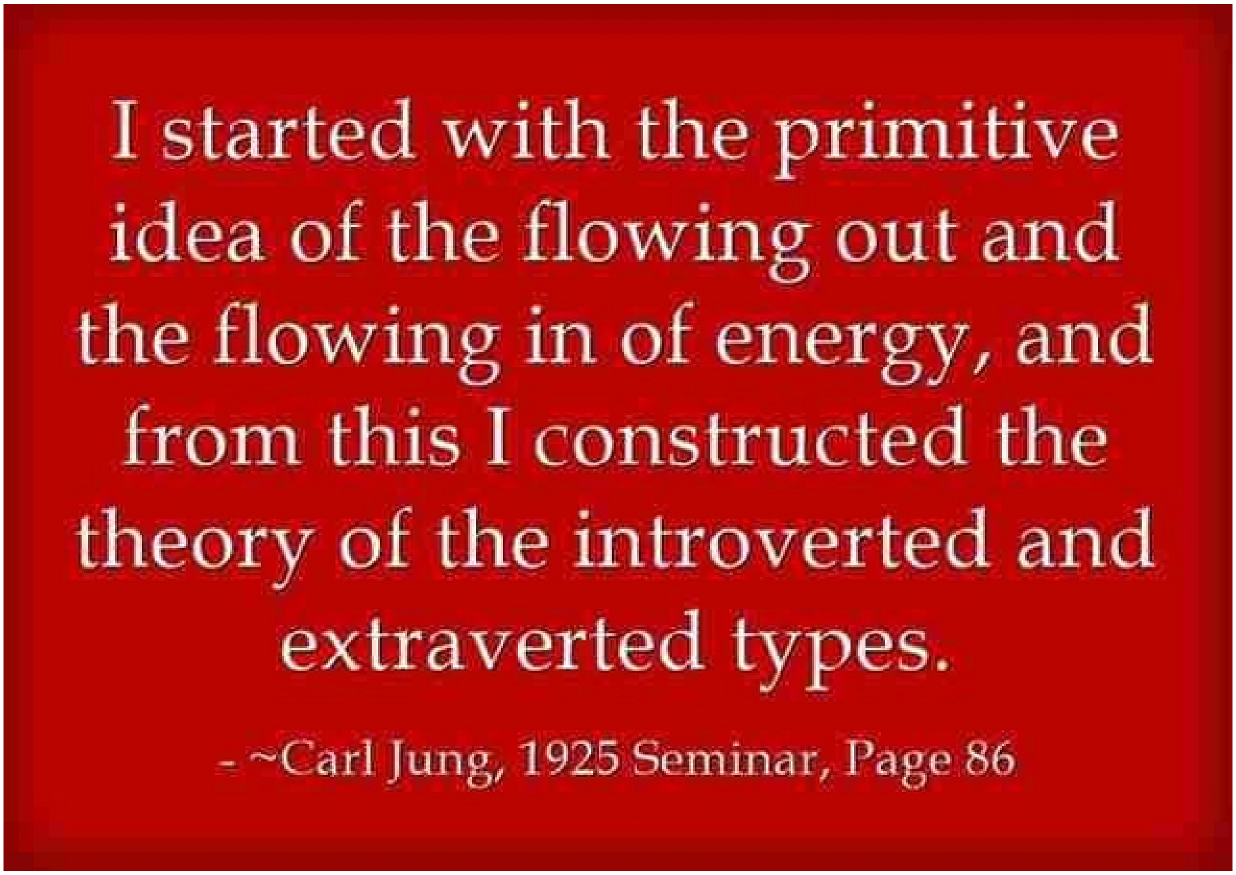
He [Heraclitus] is singularly Chinese in his philosophy and is the only Western man who has ever really compassed the East. If the Western world had followed his lead, we would all be Chinese in our viewpoint instead of Christian. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 84



Extreme fanaticism I found to rest on a concealed doubt. Torquemado, as the father of the Inquisition, was as he was because of the insecurity of his faith; that is, he was unconsciously as full of doubt as he was consciously full of faith.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 85

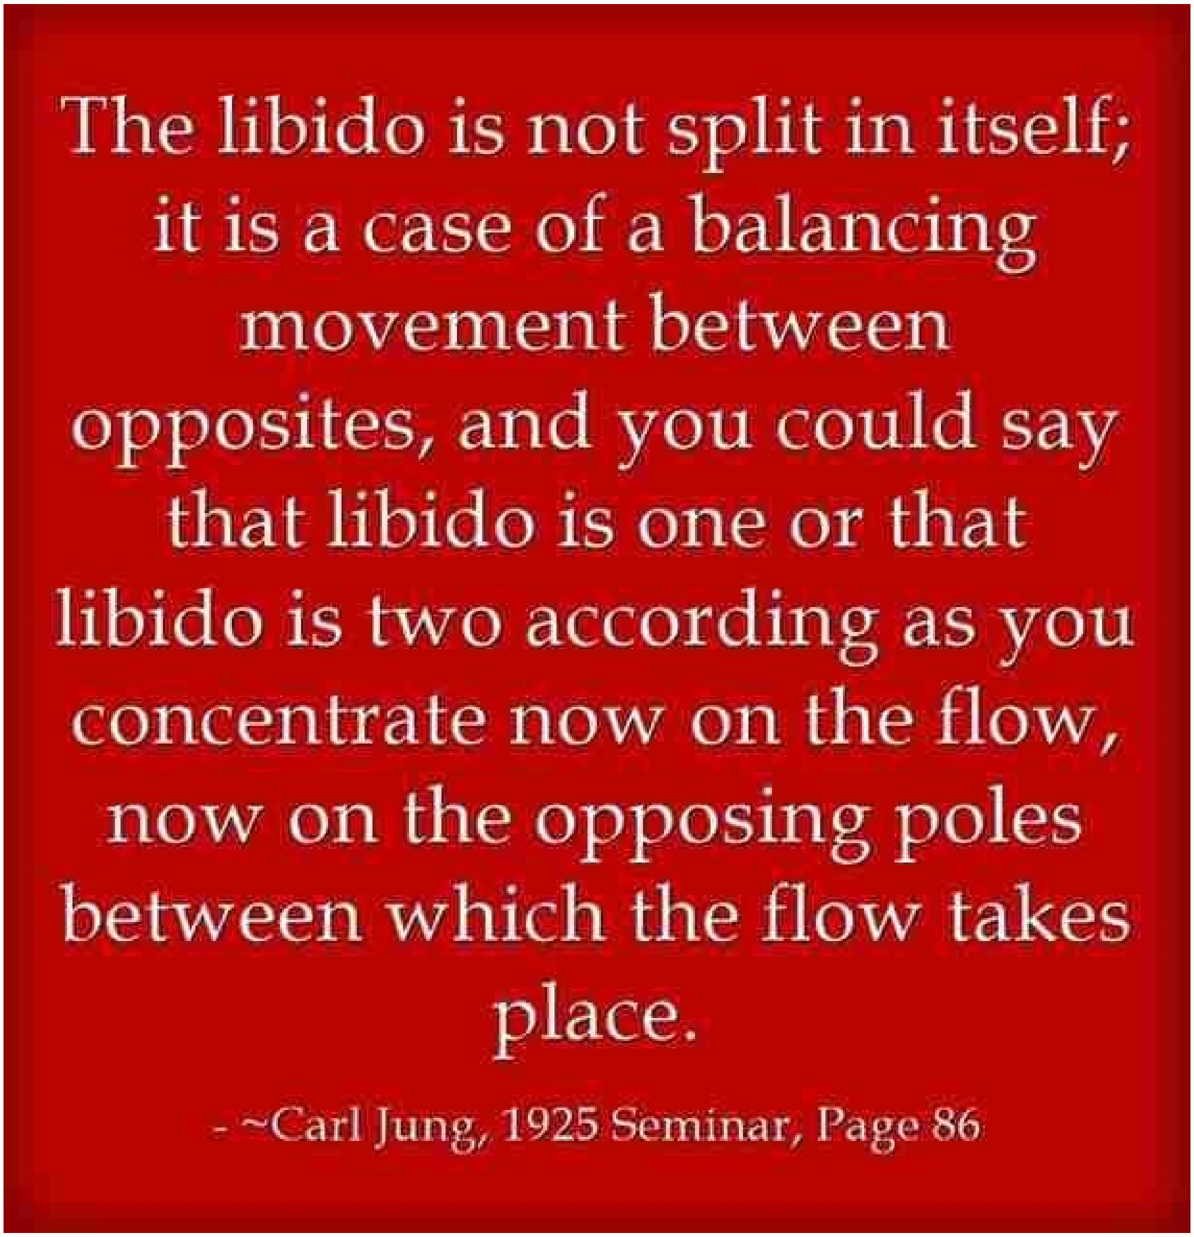
Extreme fanaticism I found to rest on a concealed doubt. Torquemado, as the father of the Inquisition, was as he was because of the insecurity of his faith; that is, he was unconsciously as full of doubt as he was consciously full of faith.
Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 85



I started with the primitive idea of the flowing out and the flowing in of energy, and from this I constructed the theory of the introverted and extraverted types.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

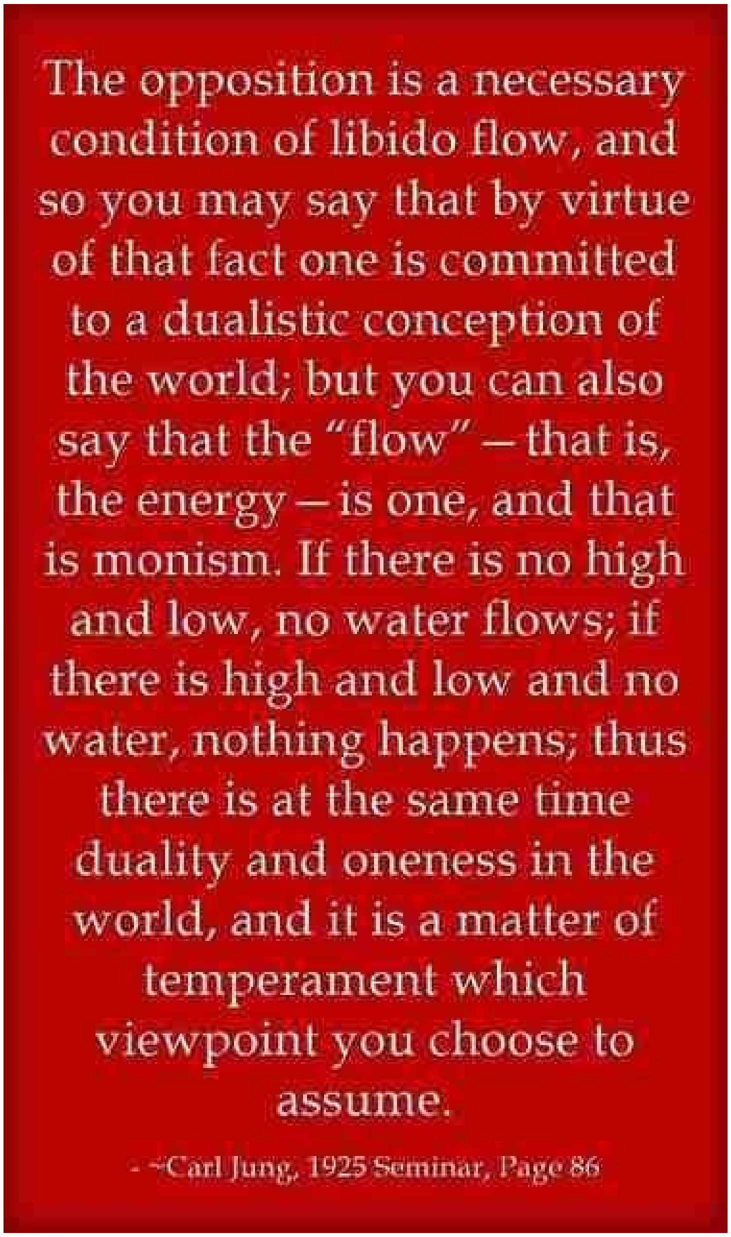
I started with the primitive idea of the flowing out and the flowing in of energy, and from this I constructed the theory of the introverted and extraverted types. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86



The libido is not split in itself; it is a case of a balancing movement between opposites, and you could say that libido is one or that libido is two according as you concentrate now on the flow, now on the opposing poles between which the flow takes place.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

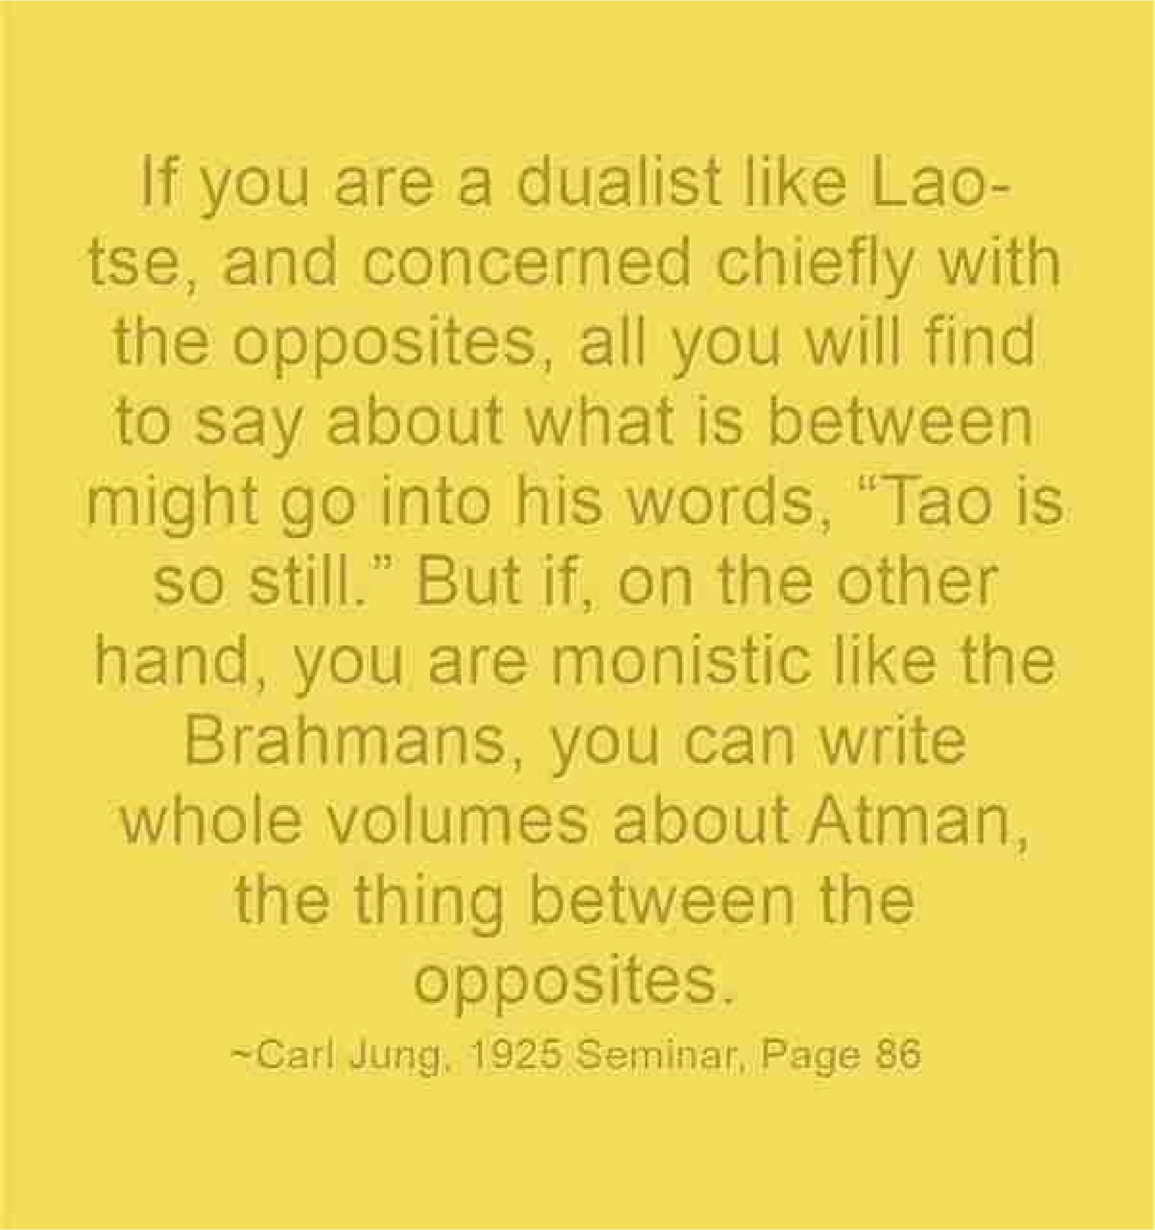
The libido is not split in itself; it is a case of a balancing movement between opposites, and you could say that libido is one or that libido is two according as you concentrate now on the flow, now on the opposing poles between which the flow takes place. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86



The opposition is a necessary condition of libido flow, and so you may say that by virtue of that fact one is committed to a dualistic conception of the world; but you can also say that the “flow” – that is, the energy – is one, and that is monism. If there is no high and low, no water flows; if there is high and low and no water, nothing happens; thus there is at the same time duality and oneness in the world, and it is a matter of temperament which viewpoint you choose to assume.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

The opposition is a necessary condition of libido flow, and so you may say that by virtue of that fact one is committed to a dualistic conception of the world; but you can also say that the “flow”—that is, the energy—is one, and that is monism. If there is no high and low, no water flows; if there is high and low and no water, nothing happens; thus there is at the same time duality and oneness in the world, and it is a matter of temperament which viewpoint you choose to assume. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86



If you are a dualist like Lao-tse, and concerned chiefly with the opposites, all you will find to say about what is between might go into his words, “Tao is so still.” But if, on the other hand, you are monistic like the Brahmans, you can write whole volumes about Atman, the thing between the opposites.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

If you are a dualist like Lao-tse, and concerned chiefly with the opposites, all you will find to say about what is between might go into his words, “Tao is so still.” But if, on the other hand, you are monistic like the Brahmans, you can write whole volumes about Atman, the thing between the opposites. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

We have to learn with effort the negations of our positions, and to grasp the fact that life is a process that takes place between two poles, being only complete when surrounded by death.

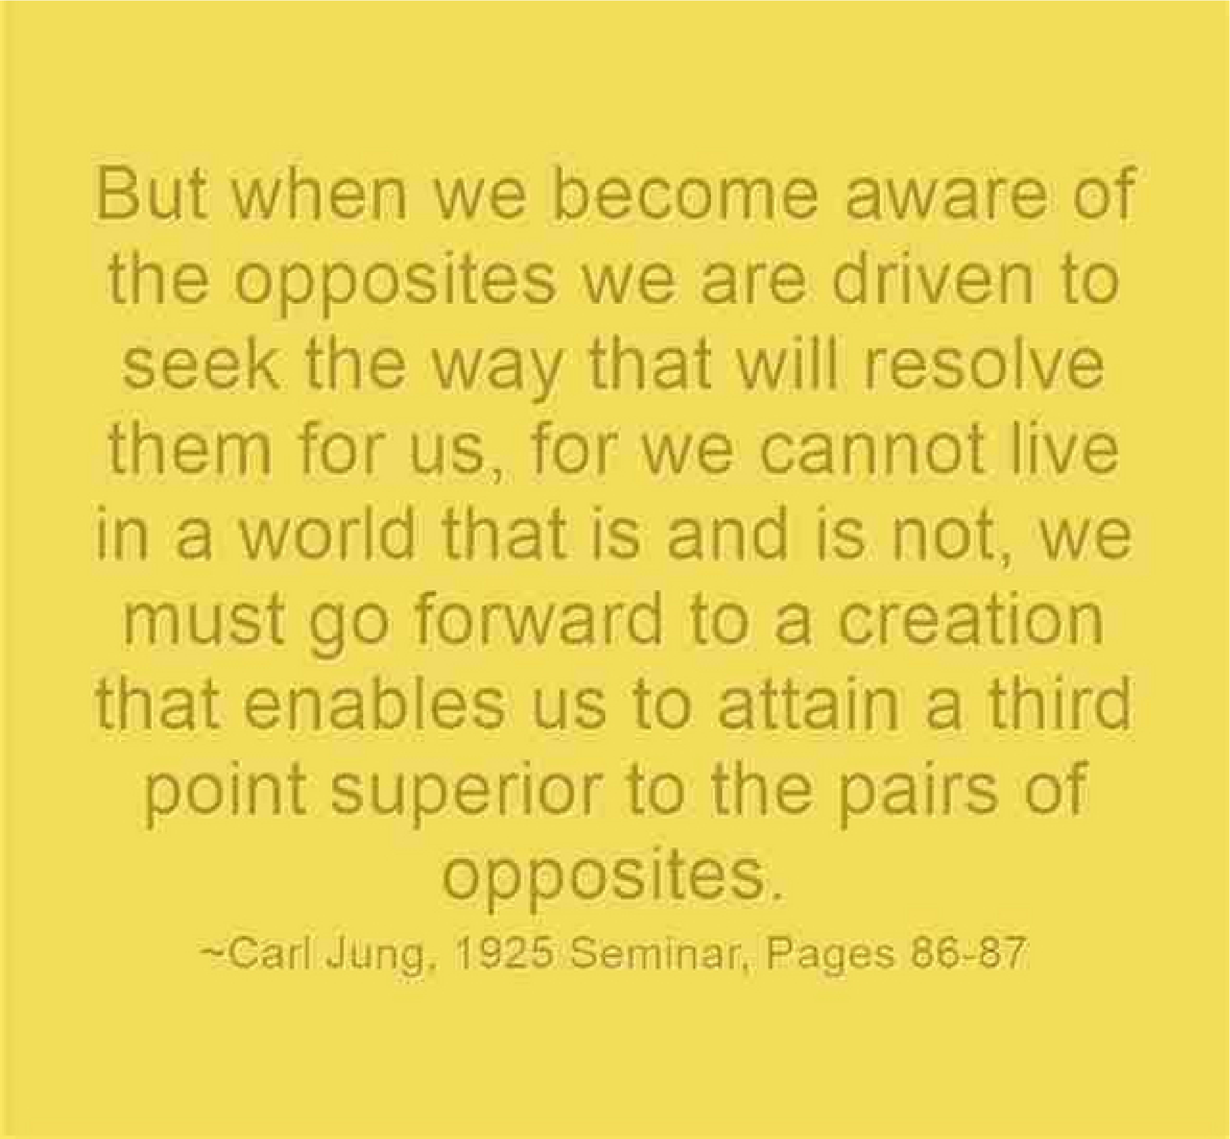
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86

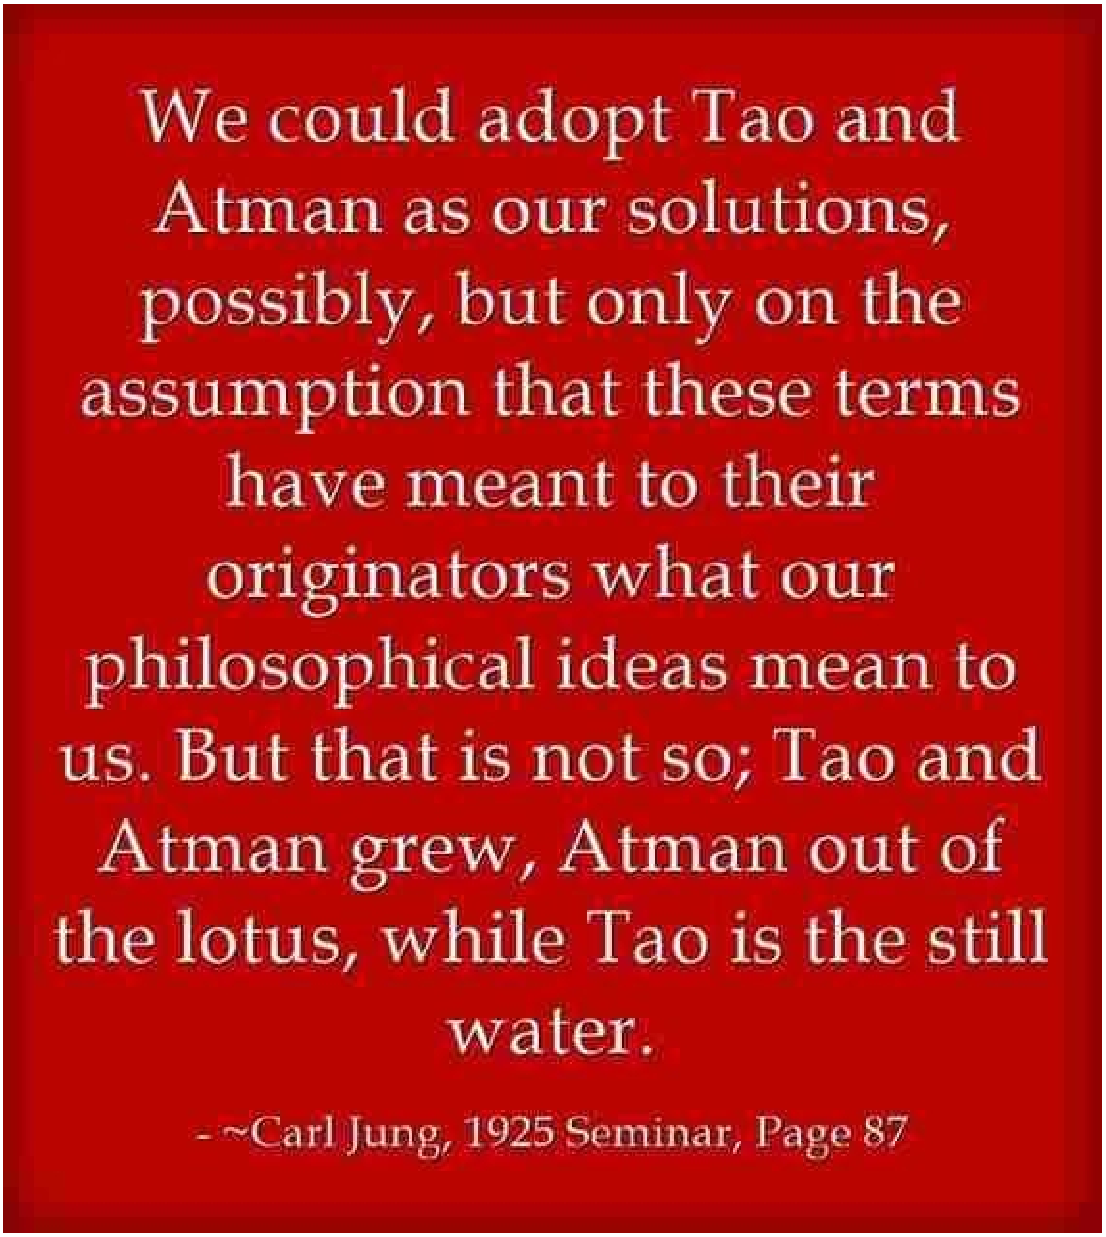
We have to learn with effort the negations of our positions, and to grasp the fact that life is a process that takes place between two poles, being only complete when surrounded by death. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 86



But when we become aware of the opposites we are driven to seek the way that will resolve them for us, for we cannot live in a world that is and is not, we must go forward to a creation that enables us to attain a third point superior to the pairs of opposites.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 86-87

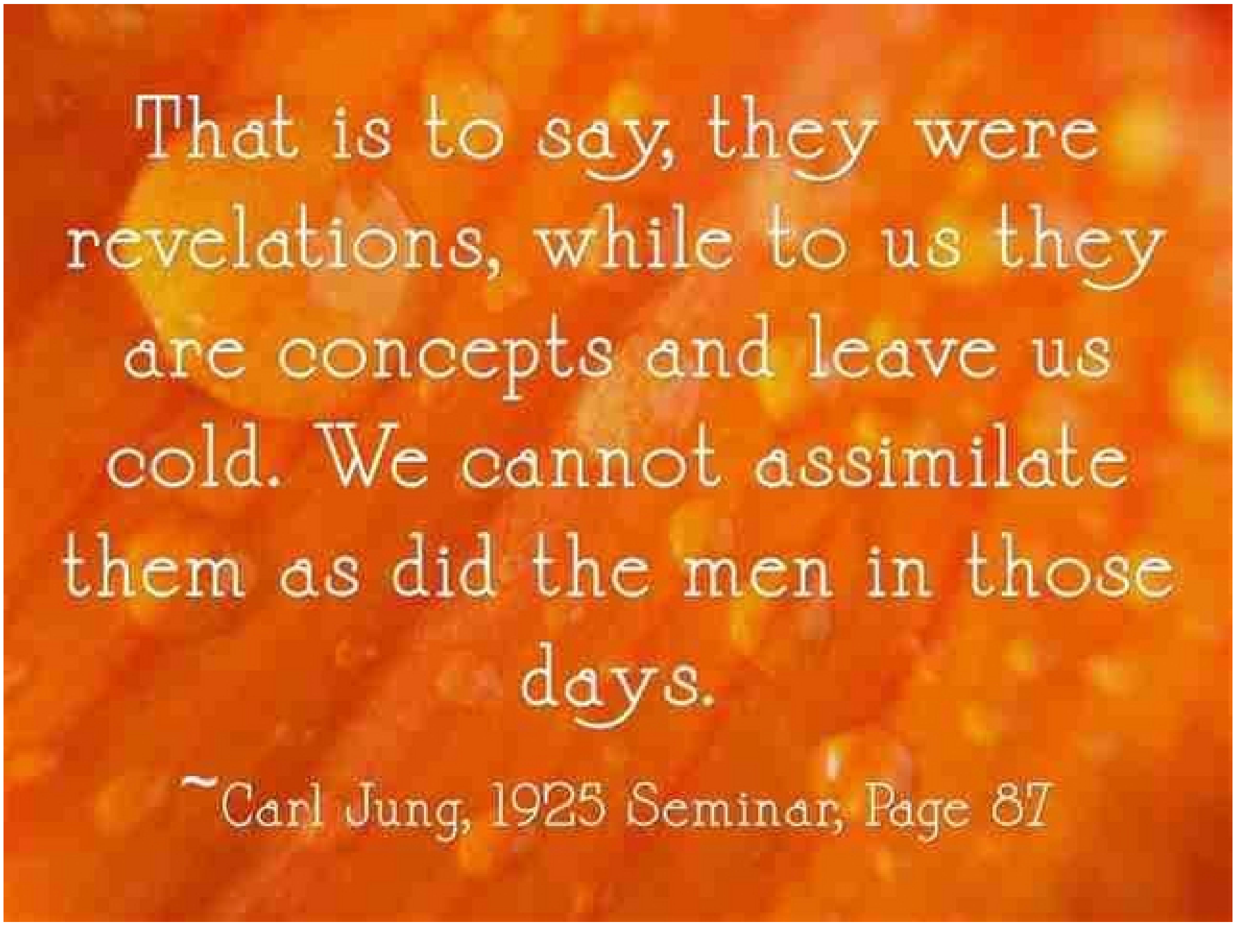
But when we become aware of the opposites we are driven to seek the way that will resolve them for us, for we cannot live in a world that is and is not, we must go forward to a creation that enables us to attain a third point superior to the pairs of opposites. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 86 - 87



We could adopt Tao and Atman as our solutions, possibly, but only on the assumption that these terms have meant to their originators what our philosophical ideas mean to us. But that is not so; Tao and Atman grew, Atman out of the lotus, while Tao is the still water.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87

We could adopt Tao and Atman as our solutions, possibly, but only on the assumption that these terms have meant to their originators what our philosophical ideas mean to us. But that is not so; Tao and Atman grew, Atman out of the lotus, while Tao is the still water. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87



That is to say, they were revelations, while to us they are concepts and leave us cold. We cannot assimilate them as did the men in those days.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87

That is to say, they were revelations, while to us they are concepts and leave us cold. We cannot assimilate them as did the men in those days. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a777b-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3b812-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/761b6-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a2846-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3206e-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a0ebb-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6a570-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9a1da-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1d37f-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/60739-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a22d7-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/59f47-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dd254-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f308d-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/77963-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e66ca-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1af89-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1b0af-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1c23c-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/94220-ttt.jpg`

21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3f35f-uuu.jpg
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f9468-vvv.jpg
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7fbe5-www.jpg
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4bfd6-xxx.jpg
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/94ab0-yyy.jpg

---

Shelf Study for the Red Book of Carl Gustav Jung (2019-03-07 20:25)

[1]

VOCATVS·ATQVE·NON VOCATVS·DEVS·ADERIT
C.G.JUNG
THE RED BOOK

Shelf Study for the Red Book of Carl Gustav Jung.

Jung went so far as to suggest that his patients prepare their own Red Books.

Morgan recalled him saying:

I should advise you to put it all down as beautifully as you can-in some beautifully bound book.

It will seem as if you were making the visions banal-but then' you need to do that-then you are freed from the power of them.

If you do that with these eyes for instance they will cease to draw you. You should never try to make the visions come again.

Think of it in your imagination and try to paint it.

Then when these things are in some precious book you can go to the book & turn over the pages & for you it will be your church-your cathedral-the silent places of your spirit where you will find renewal.

If anyone tells you that it is morbid or neurotic and you listen to them-then you will lose your soul-for in that book is your soul http://michaelscarboroughdesign.com/blog/

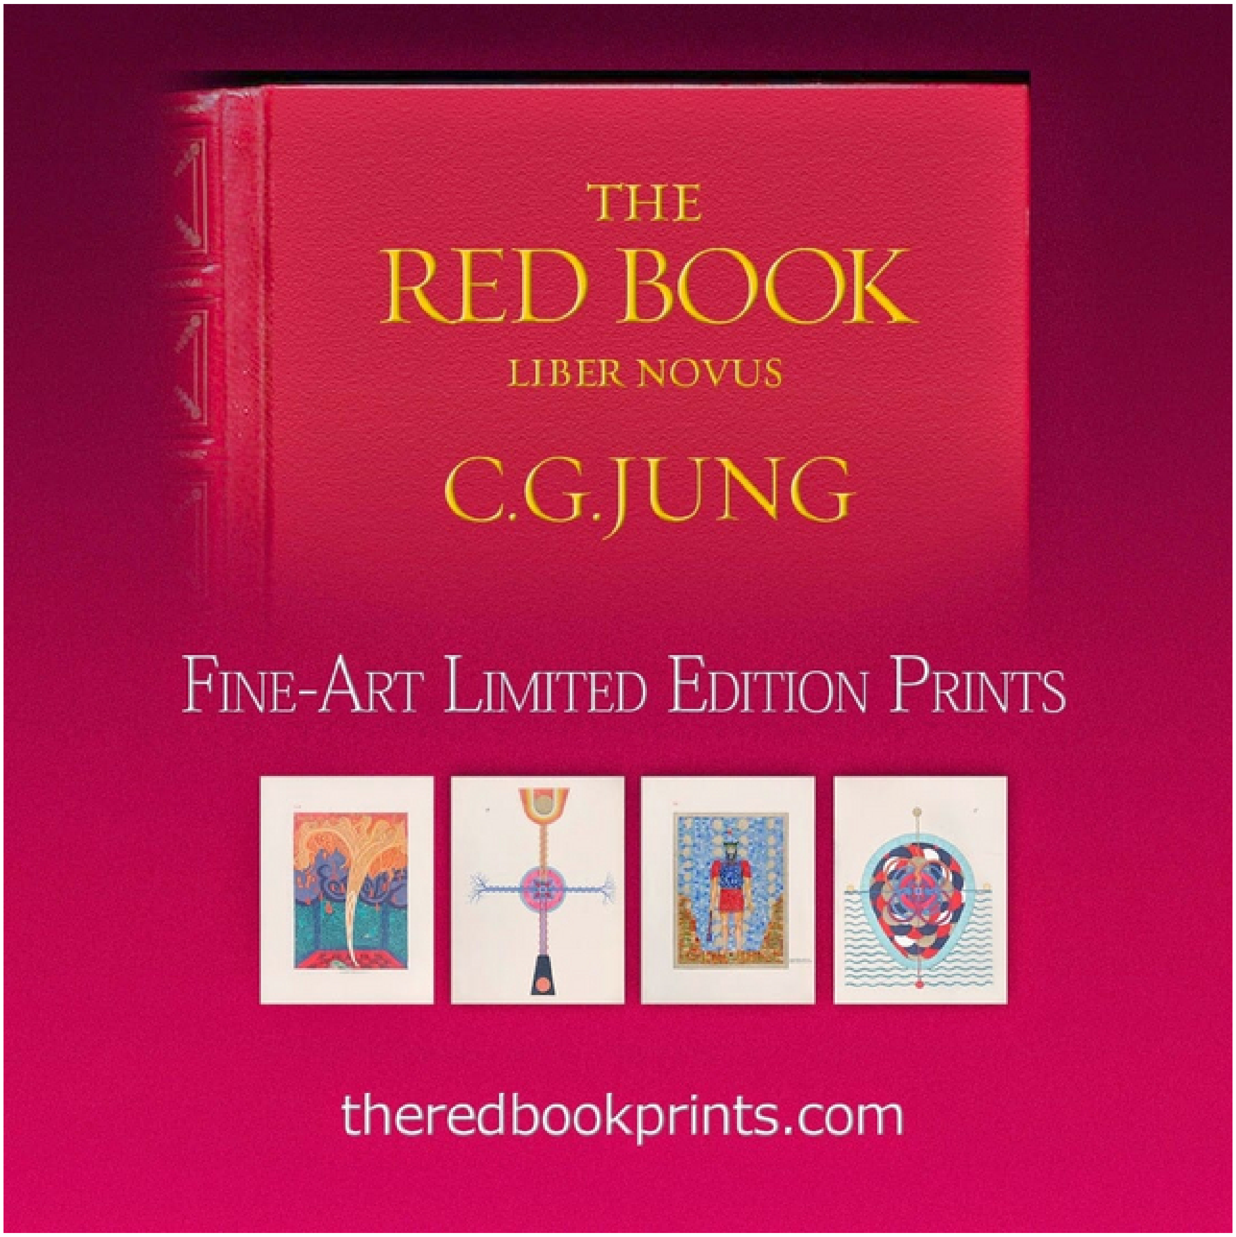
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/fde9c-stand.jpg`

Carl Jung explains his own experiments with Visions (2019-03-08 03:52)

[1]



THE
RED BOOK
LIBER NOVUS
C.G.JUNG
FINE-ART LIMITED EDITION PRINTS
theredbookprints.com

[Carl Jung explains his own experiments with Visions]

He described his own experiments in detail to his patients, and instructed them to follow suit. His role was one of supervising them in experimenting with their own stream of images.

Morgan noted Jung saying:

Now I feel as though I ought to say something to you about these phantasies … The phantasies now seem to be rather thin and full of repetitions of the same motives.

There isn't enough fire and heat in them. They ought to be more burning … You must be in them more, that is you must be your own conscious critical self in them-imposing your own judgments and criticisms … I can explain what I mean by telling you of my own experience.

I was writing in my book and suddenly saw a man standing watch over my shoulder.

One of the gold dots from my book flew up and hit him in the eye. He asked me if I would take it out. I said no-not unless he told me who he was.

He said he wouldn't. You see I knew that.

If I had done what he asked then he would have sunk into the unconscious and I would have missed the point of it ie.: why he had appeared from the unconscious at all.

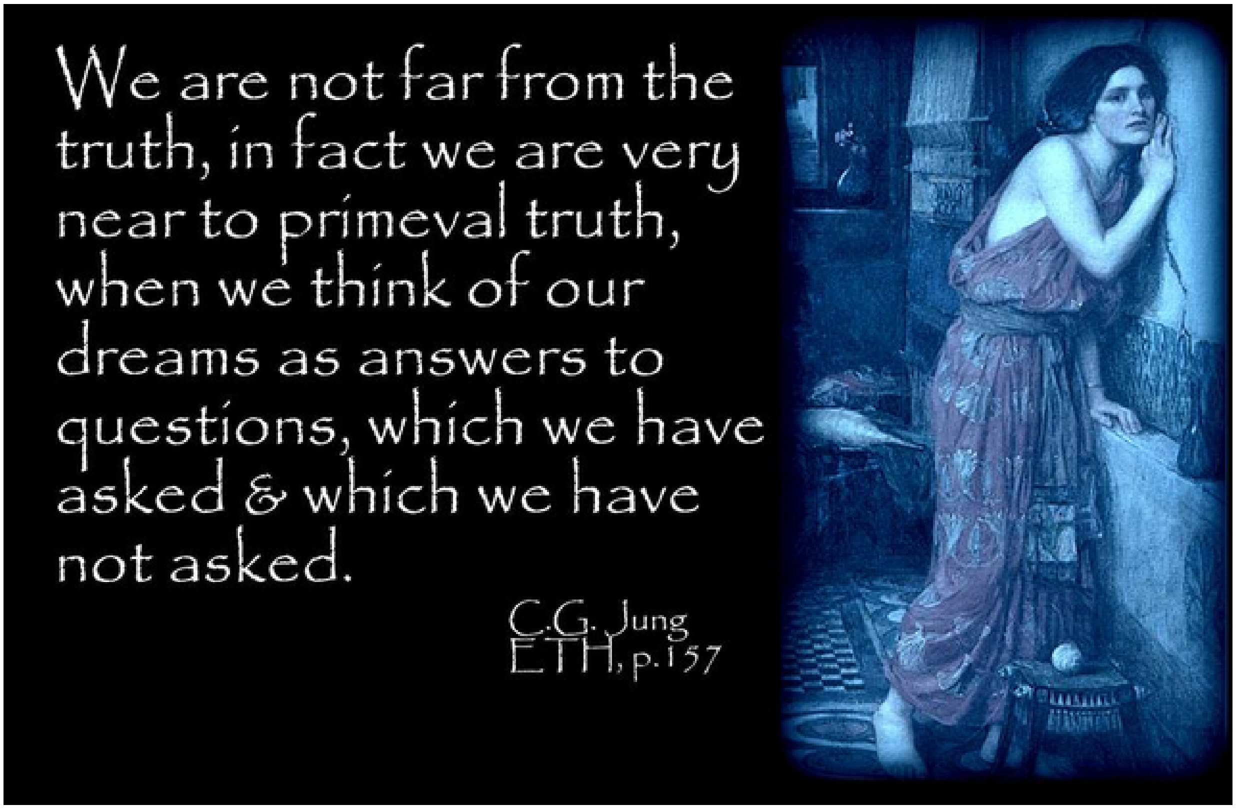
Finally he told me that he would tell me the meaning of certain hieroglyphs which I had had a few days previous.

This he did and I took the thing out of his eye and he vanished. (Footnote 205) The Red Book; Introduction; Page 216.

Footnote 205: October 12,1926. The episode referred to here is the appearance of magician "Ha." See below, p. 291, note 155.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/05/870b9-prints.jpg`

Carl Jung: It is as if our consciousness were a continent, an island or even a ship on the great sea of the unconscious. (2019-03-08 04:30)



We are not far from the truth, in fact we are very near to primeval truth, when we think of our dreams as answers to questions, which we have asked & which we have not asked.

C.G. Jung
ETH, p.157

It was the anticipatory quality in dreams that was first valued by antiquity and they played an important role in the ritual of many religions.

It is impossible to put the conscious before the unconscious, for the latter exists before and after consciousness.

In childhood we are still contained in it and our consciousness slowly emerges from it as islands which gradually join together and form a continent.

It is as if our consciousness were a continent, an island or even a ship on the great sea of the unconscious.

The subject of the unconscious has been occupying philosophers for some time back and there are thousands of examples on every side which show how consciousness is fed from the unconscious; we are only able to speak if ideas flow to us from the unconscious part of the psyche, which is the mother of consciousness.

So we cannot judge dreams from the conscious point of view, but can only think of them as complementary to consciousness.

Dreams answer the questions of our conscious.

It is a primeval belief that questions can be put to the Gods and answered by dreams.

We are not far from the truth, in fact we are very near to primeval truth, when we think of ourdreams as answers to questions, which we have asked and which we have notasked. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, 23 November 1934

[Image courtesy of Craig Nelson]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2e049-12bfrom2bthe2btruth.jpg`

Carl Jung: The inferior is your master, and you must adapt yourself to it. (2019-03-08 04:30)

[1]

The inferior function is practically identical with the dark side of the human personality. – Carl Jung, CW 9i, par. 222
FrithLuton.com

Dr. Jung spoke of the inferior function being united to the collective: it is just a bit of nature and, as such, must first be accepted and adapted to …. The superior function is in your hands, and you can put it to your uses.

The inferior is your master, and you must adapt yourself to it.

Yet it is nature; there is life there.

The thing that wants to be born must first be found.

The form it is to grow into shall later be the object of search, and the search may be a long one …. Esther Harding, Conversations with Jung, Page 8

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0f825-12binferior.jpg`

Dr. Jung's dream of Hitler in 1939 (2019-03-08 04:30)

Kusnacht, 8 June C G. came in, the old C. G., smiling, welcoming, with both arms outstretched.

He looked at us and said to Eleanor [Bertine] , "You have not changed."

And to me, "But you have changed." I said, "There has been a world cataclysm since I last saw you."

He himself is very little changed.

Older, yes, face a little thinner, with harder lines and planes, throwing the width and height of the head into greater prominence.

Hair a little thinner, softly wispy around his head.

He spoke of it, calling it his "feathers."

"Yes, my head is growing feathers. But the barber won’t cut it."

I said, "Is it the same barber whom Zosimos tells of?"

But he evidently did not hear all I said, for he replied, "No, it is not the same one. We have one who lives just across the road."

We spoke of how glad we had been to get his letters from time to time, which had kept us in touch.

He said it had been very strange during the war in Switzerland, that little island of peace, how, in spite of the constant threat of invasion, he had not been really uneasy (putting his hand on his abdomen), that he had always had a sense they would be left uninterferred with.

He told of their great anxiety in 1939 over the Hitler-Stalin pact, which made it look as if they would be swallowed up without doubt.

He said he had had a dream at that time:

He found himself in a castle, all the walls and buildings of which were made of trinitrotoluene (dynamite).

Hitler came in and was treated as divine.

Hitler stood on a mound as for a review.

C. G. was placed on a corresponding mound.

Then the parade ground began to fill with buffalo or yak steers, which crowded into the enclosed space from one end.

The herd was filled with nervous tension and moved about restlessly.

Then he saw that one cow was alone, apparently sick.

Hitler was concerned about this cow and asked C. G. what he thought of it.

C. G. said, "It is obviously very sick."

At this point, Cossacks rode in at the back and began to drive the herd off He awoke and felt, "It is all right."

He emphasized that Hitler was treated as divine.

Consequently, he felt, we had to view him like that, that Hitler is not to be taken primarily as a human man, but as an instrument of ’divine’ forces, as Judas, or, still better, as the Antichrist must be.

That the castle was built of trinitrotoluene meant that it would blow up and be destroyed because of its own explosive quality.

The herds of cattle are the instincts, the primitive, pre-human forces let loose in the German unconscious.

They are not even domestic cattle, but buffalo or yaks, very primitive indeed.

They are all male, as is the Nazi ideology: all the values of relationship, of the person or individual, are completely repressed; the feminine element is sick unto death, and so we get the sick cow.

Hitler turns to C. G. for advice, but he limits his comment to the diagnosis,

"The cow is very sick.

At this, as though the recognition of the ailment released something the Cossacks burst in.

Even before that, the herd had been disturbed and nervous as indeed the male animal is if separated too long or too completely from its complement, the female.

The Cossacks are, of course, Russians.

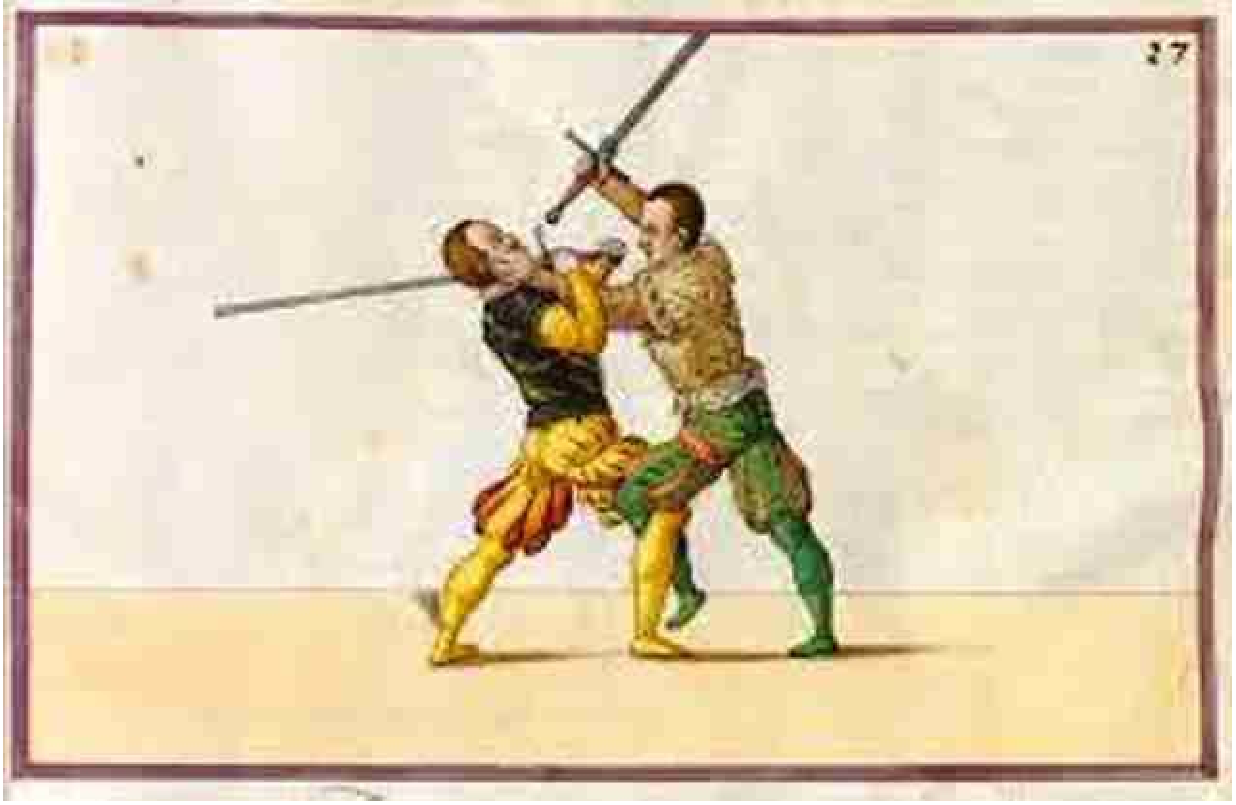
C. G. said he deduced from that that Russia-more barbaric than Germany, but also more directly primitive, and therefore of sounder instinct-would break in andcause the overthrow of Germany. Esther Harding, Conversations with Jung, Pages 12-13

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1e1b0-12bcossacks.jpg`

Carl Jung on "..a man who was practically invulnerable even to rapier thrusts through kidney and liver.

(2019-03-08 05:14)

[1]



To Stephen I. Abrams

Dear Mr. Abrams, 11 July 1960

Cases with a continuous output of positive ESP or other paranormal effects are very interesting indeed.

They were puzzling to me inasmuch as archetypal constellations are usually more or less momentary and don’t extend over longer periods.

I have followed up a case of a man who was practically invulnerable even to rapier thrusts through kidney and liver.

His remarkable achievement lasted over several years. It was accompanied by a pious and devoted attitude. He was unselfish and idealistic.
Two bad friends succeeded in persuading him that there was money in it. The next experiment killed him.

In this case it was quite obvious that he owed his invulnerability to an intensely religious attitude which is an archetypal constellation.

It is possible also that other conditions like physical traumata, diseases and physiological constellations can maintain an abaissement of consciousness which enables unconscious effects to cross the thresh old.

I should not wonder at all if synchronistic phenomena would manifest in the form of physiological effects.

I don’t feel particularly optimistic with reference to the possibility of control and predictability.

The mathematical theory of information is beyond the reach of my understanding, but it sounds interesting nevertheless.

It is quite possible, even probable, that man has a much greater amount of ESP at his disposal than one generally supposes.

This must be so if it is true that synchronicity belongs to the basic qualities of existence (or being.) Good luck to your adventure,

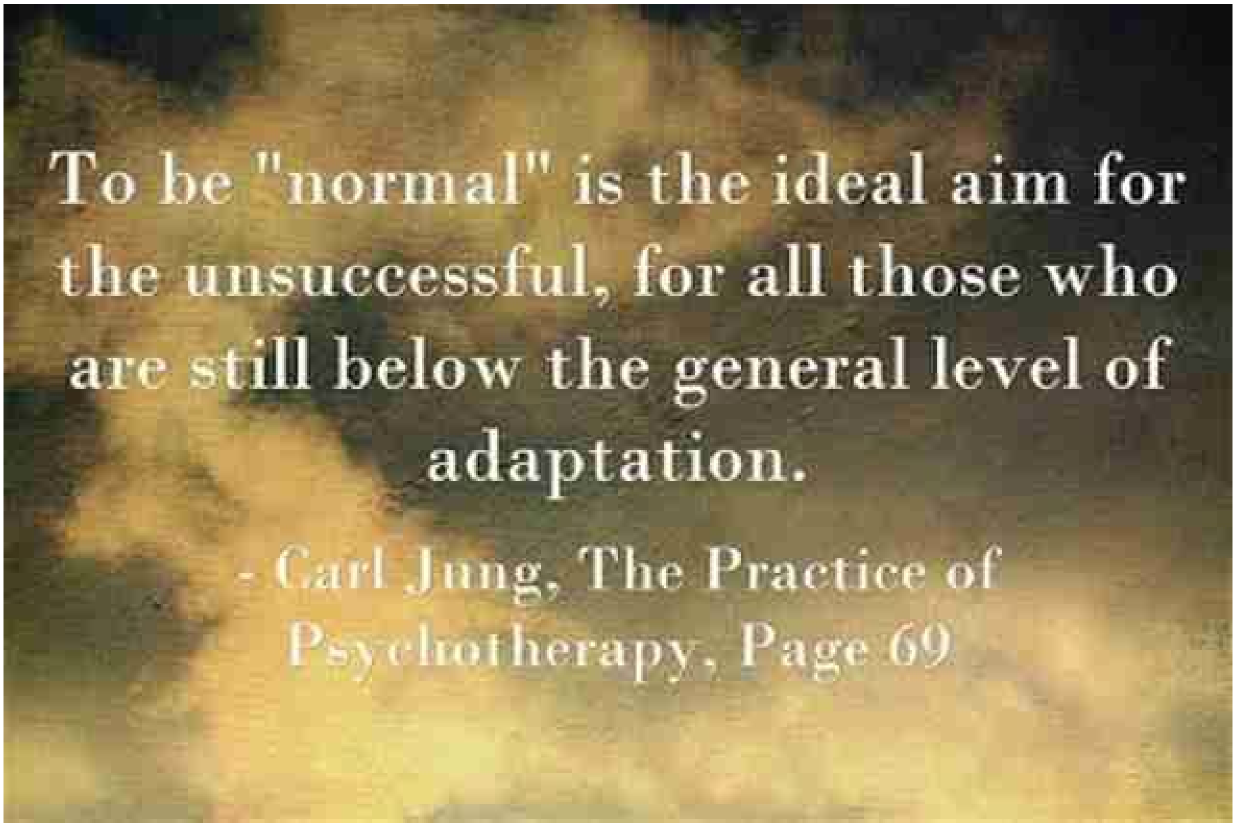
Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 576-577

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/11b79-12bliver.jpg`

Carl Jung: To be " normal" is a splendid ideal for the unsuccessful (2019-03-08 05:17)

[1]



To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful, for all those who are still below the general level of adaptation.

- Carl Jung, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Page 69

Carl Jung: To be " normal" is a splendid ideal for the unsuccessful… (2015-12-29 14:52)

In order to make clear what this fourth stage has in view, and to throw some light on the curious term "transformation," we must first take account of those psychic needs of man which were not given a place in the other stages.

In other words, we must ascertain what could seem more desirable or lead further than the claim to be a normally adapted, social being.

Nothing is more useful or fitting than to be a normal human being; but the very notion of a "normal human being" suggests a restriction to the average-as does also the concept of adaptation.

It is only a man who as things stand, already finds it difficult to come to terms with the everyday world who can see in this restriction a desirable improvement: a man, let us say, whose neurosis unfits him for normal life.

To be " normal" is a splendid ideal for the unsuccessful, for all those who have not yet found an adaptation.

But for people who have far more ability than the average, for whom it was never hard to gain successes and to accomplish their share of the world's work-for them restriction to the normal signifies the bed of Procrustes, unbearable boredom, infernal sterility and hopelessness.

As a consequence there are many people who become neurotic because they are only normal, as there are people who are neurotic because they cannot become normal.

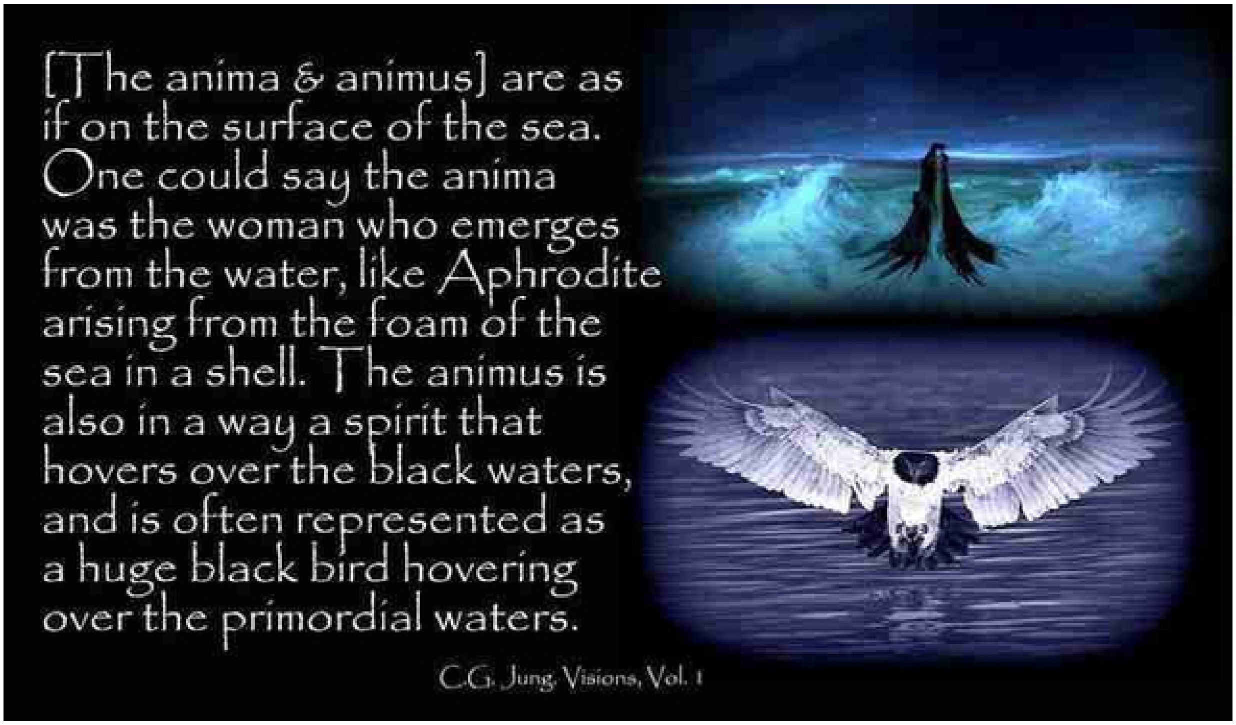
For the former the very thought that you want to educate them to normality is a nightmare; their deepest need is really to be able to lead "abnormal" lives. Carl Jung, Modern Man in Search of a Soul, Pages 47-48.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/abc15-12bnormal.jpg`

Carl Jung: The Animus impersonates the unconscious, as the Anima impersonates it in a man's case.

(2019-03-08 05:22)

[1]



[The anima & animus] are as if on the surface of the sea. One could say the anima was the woman who emerges from the water, like Aphrodite arising from the foam of the sea in a shell. The animus is also in a way a spirit that hovers over the black waters, and is often represented as a huge black bird hovering over the primordial waters.

C.G. Jung, Visions, Vol. 1

Dr. Jung:

Yes, those black waters would be the deeper layers of the unconscious.

The animus impersonates the unconscious, as the anima impersonates it in a man's case. Those figures are as if on the surface of the sea.
One could say the anima was the woman who emerges from the water, like Aphrodite arising from the foam of the sea in a shell.

And the animus is also in a way a spirit that hovers over the black waters and often represented as such; I have two pictures in my collection where the animus is depicted as a huge black bird hovering over the primordial waters.

As an impersonated of the unconscious, the natural function of the amimus here is to establish a communication between the conscious mind and the collective unconscious.

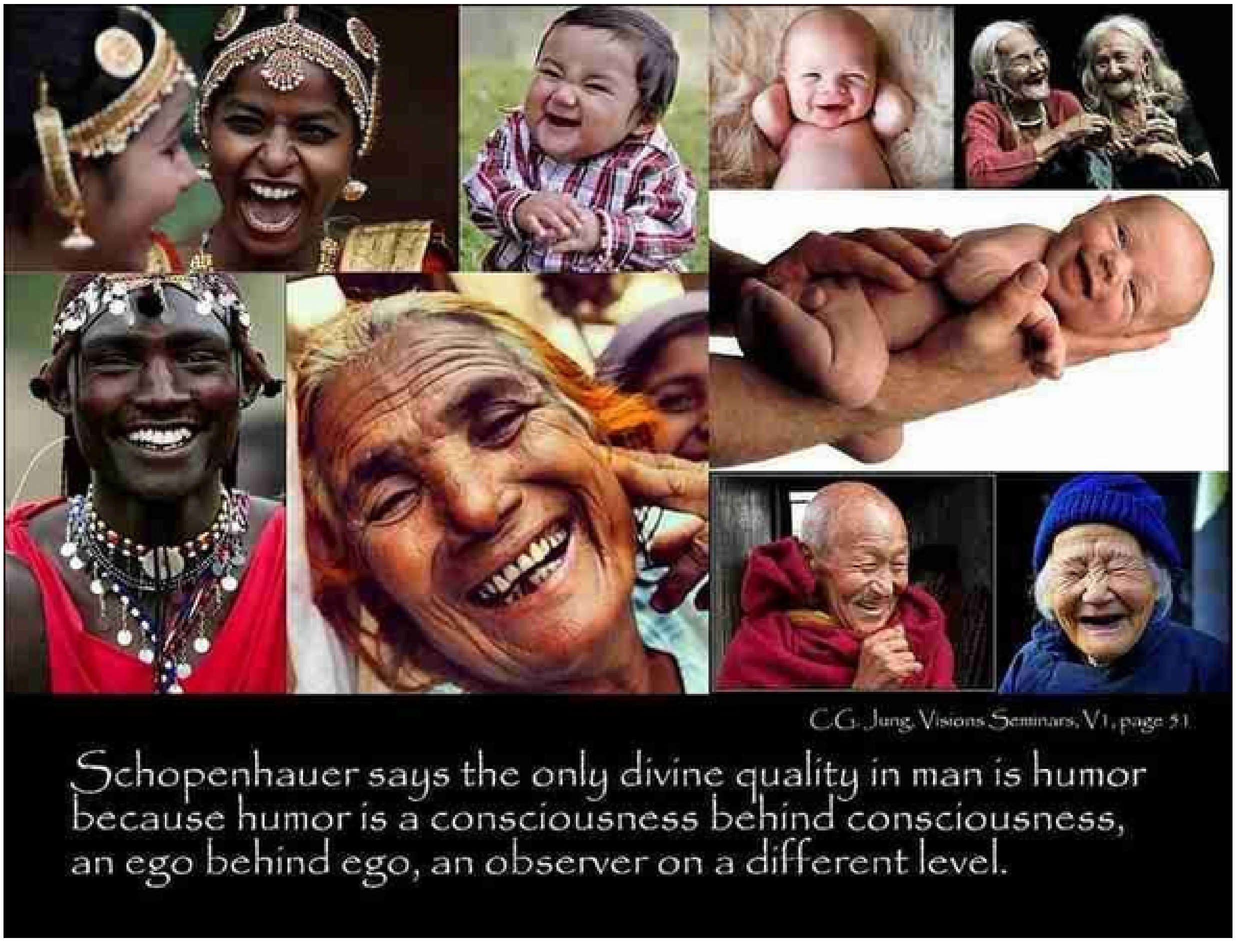
I admit it is somewhat difficult to have a clear idea of these matters, but I think if you find it in any way hard to understand it is on account of your conception of the collective unconscious.

You perhaps understand the collective unconscious intoo abstrace a sense, whereas it is extremely concrete. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 124-125.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9b861-12banimus.jpg`

Carl Jung: People always have some scapegoat. (2019-03-08 05:27)

[1]



C.G. Jung, Visions Seminars, V1, page 51

Schopenhauer says the only divine quality in man is humor because humor is a consciousness behind consciousness, an ego behind ego, an observer on a different level.

So for our patient to recognize her own condition is tremendous progress. Hitherto she had thought it was her husband or the devil or circumstances. People always have some scapegoat.

Perhaps it is the parents who dies twenty years before but are still working against one if only twenty years ago such and such a thing had not been said!

That is exteriorizing oneself, seeing the brain storm outside.

Therefore she goes inside, realizing that the storm is in the inner sea, and there makes the discovery that somebody else is sick.

She had always been sick before in a storm herself and lost her morale completely.

In this case seasickness means demoralization through the wrong psychology, the projection of one's psychology into other people, for one then has no point of view naturally; one doesn't exist, one is scattered.

In this dream for the first time she is not seasick, because she recognizes, as her action shows, that the storm is in herself.

So the eive conseuences do not touch her but a little boy in the arms of a nurse.

A little lamb was in her arms before, a female lamb, but now it is a little boy, and since the patient really has a little boy, he would symbolize what she has achieved or brought forth so far.

It is something new, and that attempt at a new form of life is seasick, which means that she is shocked, demoralized.

She attempts to go to her own town, and on the way she receives a severe shock which makes the boy, her honest attempt, seasick.

For a while he is disintegrated; but she is not disintegrated, seasick.

She knows that she is simply checked for the moment, and that is the beginning of objectivity, of a higher quality of consciousness.

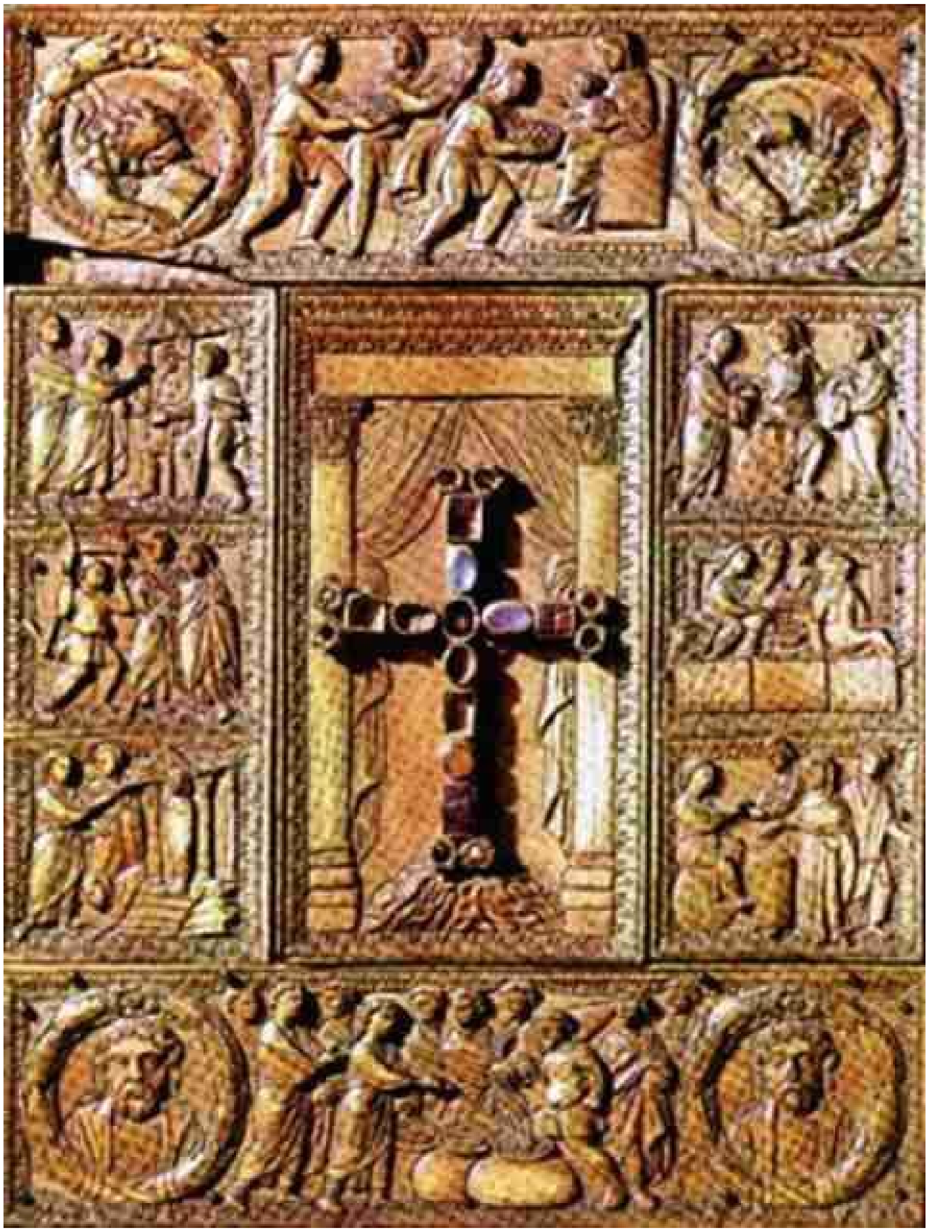
Therefore Schopenhauer says that the only divine quality in man is humor, because humor is a consciousness behind consciousness, an ego behind the ego, and observer on a different level who sees what you see and thinks what you think.

And she makes the hopeful statement that this is the first time that she has not been seasick in such weather-the first time she has not been demoralized in a brain storm-which means, as I said, tremendous progress. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 50-51

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/17c0c-12bscape.jpg`

Carl Jung “To be exact, I must say that, although I profess myself a Christian,... (2019-03-08 05:30)

[1]



To Pastor Oscar Nisse

Dear Pastor Nisse, 2 July 1960

It was actually through my therapeutic work that I began to understand the essence of the Christian faith.

It became clear to me that the preoccupation with anxiety in psychoanalysis, where as you know it plays a considerable part, is not to be explained by the presence of religious teaching but rather by its absence.

With Freud personally-as I saw clearly over a period of years anxiety played a great part.

It is not hard to see that in him its source was the fear of Yahweh which is always present in the unconscious, particularly of Jews.

In the Jewish mentality this imprint is so deep that the individual Jew can rarely get away from it.

That is because he is Jewish, because he belongs and has belonged for thousands of years to a people characterized by their intimate connection with Yahweh.

With the Christian this anxiety is less important thanks to the fact that it was not until the day before yesterday that he rid himself of the gods, who represented the numinous aspects of the transcendent being as a plurality.

I assure you it was precisely through my analytic work that I arrived at an understanding not only of the Christian religion but, I may say, of all religions,

The Freudian idea that religion is nothing more than a system of prohibitions is very limited and out of touch with what is known about different religions.

To be exact, I must say that, although I profess myself a Christian, I am at the same time convinced that the chaotic contemporary situation shows that present-day Christianity is not the final truth.

Further progress is an absolute necessity since the present state of affairs seems to me insupportable.

As I see it, the contributions of the psychology of the unconscious should be taken into account.

With highest regards,

I am, Yours sincerely,

C..G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 631-632

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1876e-12bchristian.jpg`

Carl Jung on if: "thought of the East is in any way more advanced than the thought in the West?" (2019-03-08 05:35)

[1]

Stephen Black: Do you feel that the thought of the East is in any way more advanced than the thought in the West?

Dr. Jung: Well, you see, the thought of the East cannot be compared with the thought in the West; it is incommensurable.

It is something else.

Stephen Black: In what way does it differ, then?

Dr. Jung: Well, they are far more influenced by the basic facts about psychology than we are.

Stephen Black: That sounds more like your philosophy.

Dr. Jung: Oh, yes; quite.

That is my particular understanding of the East, and the East can appreciate my ideas better, because they are better prepared to see the truth of the psyche.

Some think there is nothing in the mind when the child is born, but I say everything is in the mind when the child is born, only it isn't conscious yet.

It is there as a potentiality.

Now, the East is chiefly based upon that potentiality.

Stephen Black: Does this contribute to the happiness of people one way or the other? Are people happier in themselves in the East?

Dr. Jung: I don't think that they are happier than we are.

You see, they have no end of problems, of diseases and conflicts; that is the human lot.

Stephen Black: Is their unhappiness based upon their psychological difficulties, like ours, or it is more based upon their physical environment, their economics?

Dr. Jung: Well, you see, there is no difference between, say, unfavorable social conditions and unfavorable psychological conditions.

We may be, in the West, in very favorable social conditions, and we are as miserable as possible—inside.

We have the trouble from the inside.

They have it perhaps more from the outside.

Stephen Black: And have you any views on the reason for this misery we suffer here?

Dr. Jung: Oh, yes; there are plenty of reasons.

Wrong values—we believe in things which are not really worthwhile.

For instance, when a man has only one automobile and his neighbor has two, then that is a very sad fact and he is apt to get neurotic about it.

Stephen Black: In what other ways are our values at fault?

Well, all ambitions and all sorts of things—illusions, you know, of any description.

It is impossible to name all those things. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 252-267.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

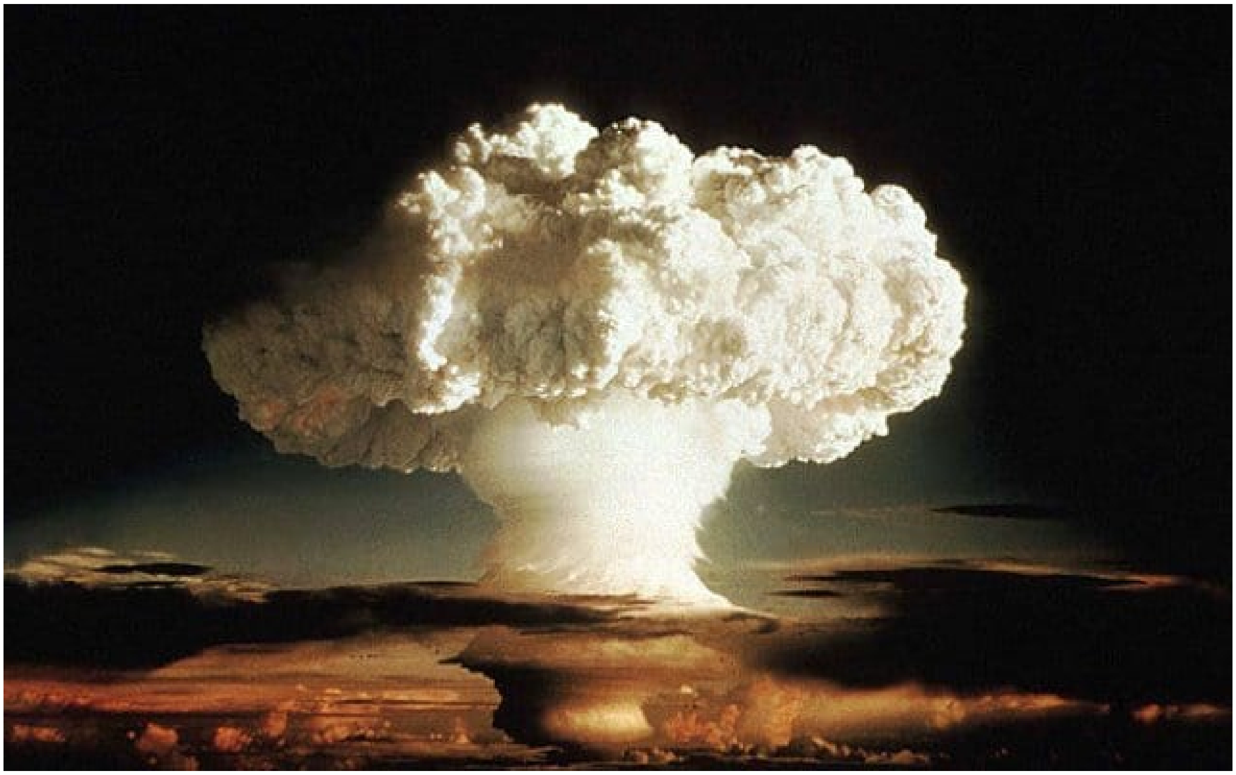
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/5a99b-12beast.jpg`

Carl Jung on living under the threat of the Hydrogen Bomb (2019-03-08 05:52)

[1]



Stephen Black: Professor Jung, what do you think will be the effect upon the world of living, as we have been living, and may still have to live, under the threat of the hydrogen bomb?

Dr. Jung: Well, that's a very great problem.

I think the West is more affected by it than the East, because the East has a very different attitude to death and destruction.

Think, for instance, of the fact that practically the whole of India believes in reincarnation, so when you lose this life you have plenty of others.

It doesn't matter so much.

Moreover, this world is illusion anyhow, and if you can get rid of it, it isn't so bad.

And if you hope for a further life, well, you have untold possibilities ahead of you.

Since in the West there is one life only, therefore I can imagine that the West is more disturbed by the possibility of utter destruction than the East.

We have only one life to lose and we are by no means assured of a number of other lives to follow.

The greater part of the European population doesn't even believe in immortality anymore and so, once destroyed, forever destroyed.

That explains a great deal of the reaction in the West.

We are more vulnerable because of our lack of knowledge and contact with the deepest strata of the psyche.

But the East is better defended in that way, because it is based upon the fundamental facts of the human soul and believes more in it and in its possibilities than the West.

And that is a point of uncertainty in the West.

It is a very critical point. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 252-267.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

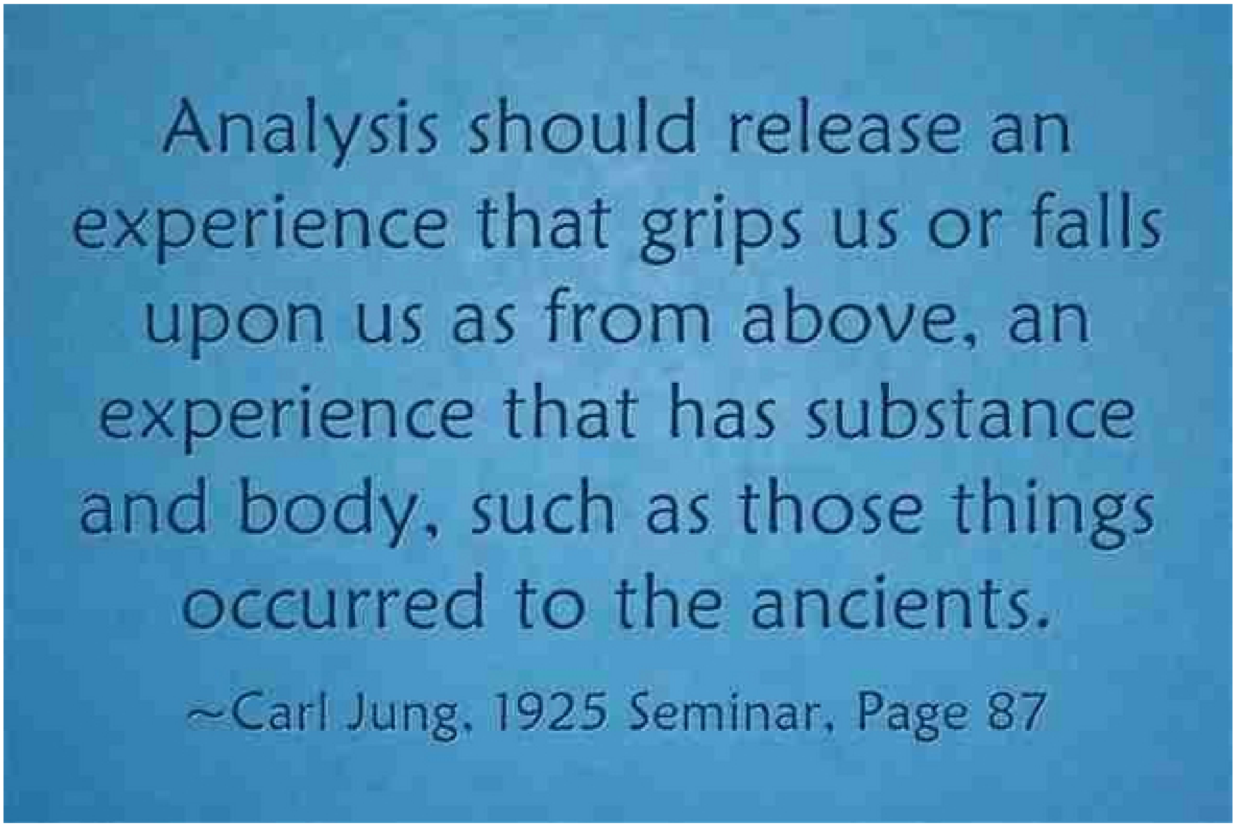
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/2cc77-42bhydrogen.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 16 (2019-03-08 06:09)

[1]

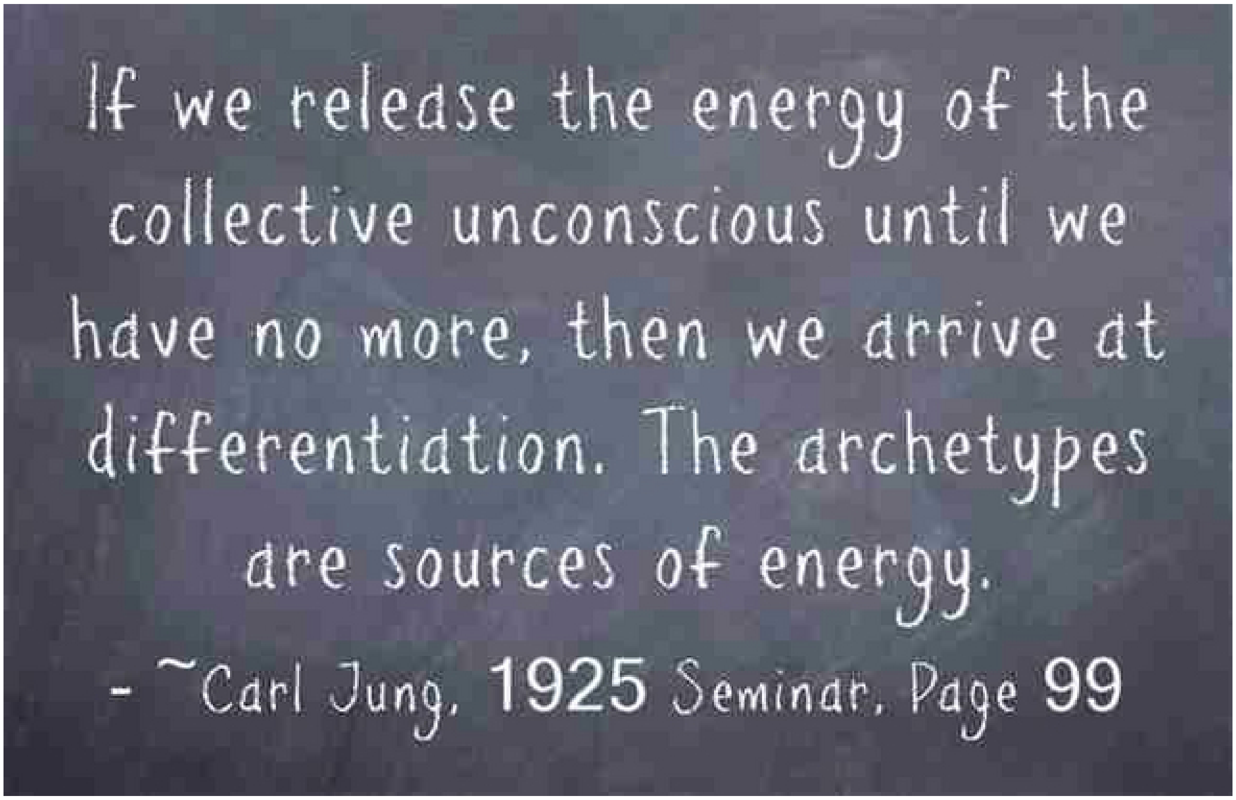


Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body, such as those things occurred to the ancients.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87

Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body such as those things which occurred to the ancients. If I were going to symbolize it I would choose the Annunciation. Carl Jung, Seminar 1925, p. 111.

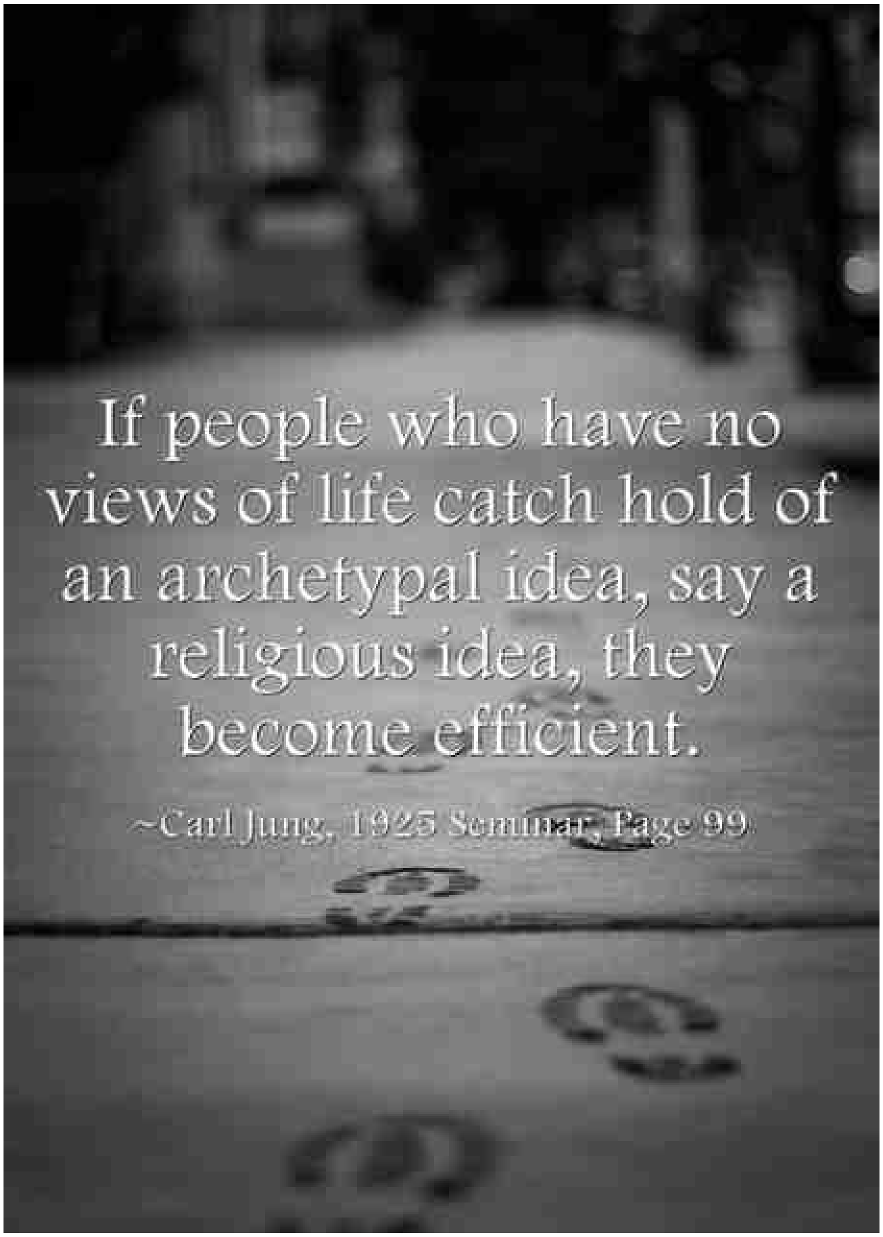
[2]



If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation. The archetypes are sources of energy.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation. The archetypes are sources of energy. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99



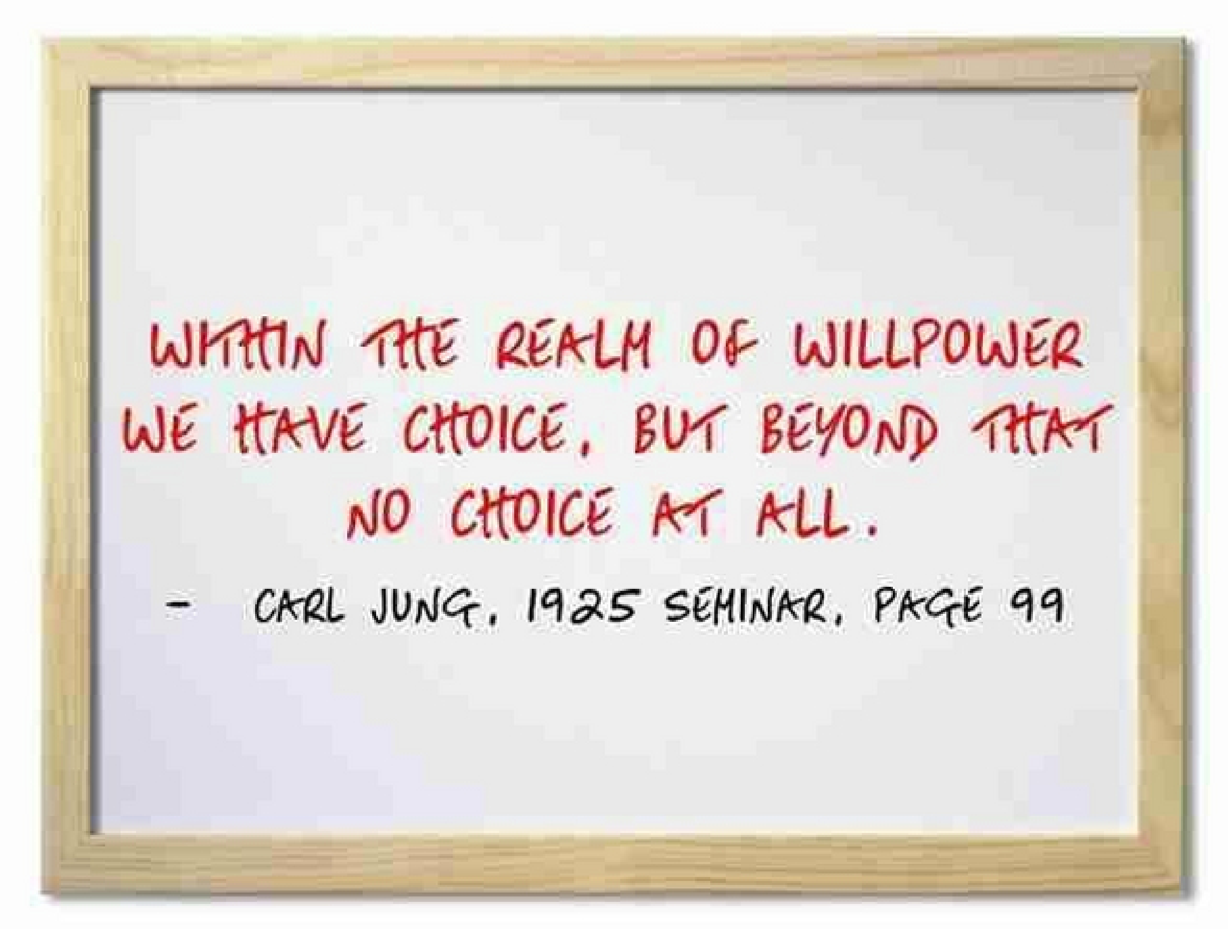
If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

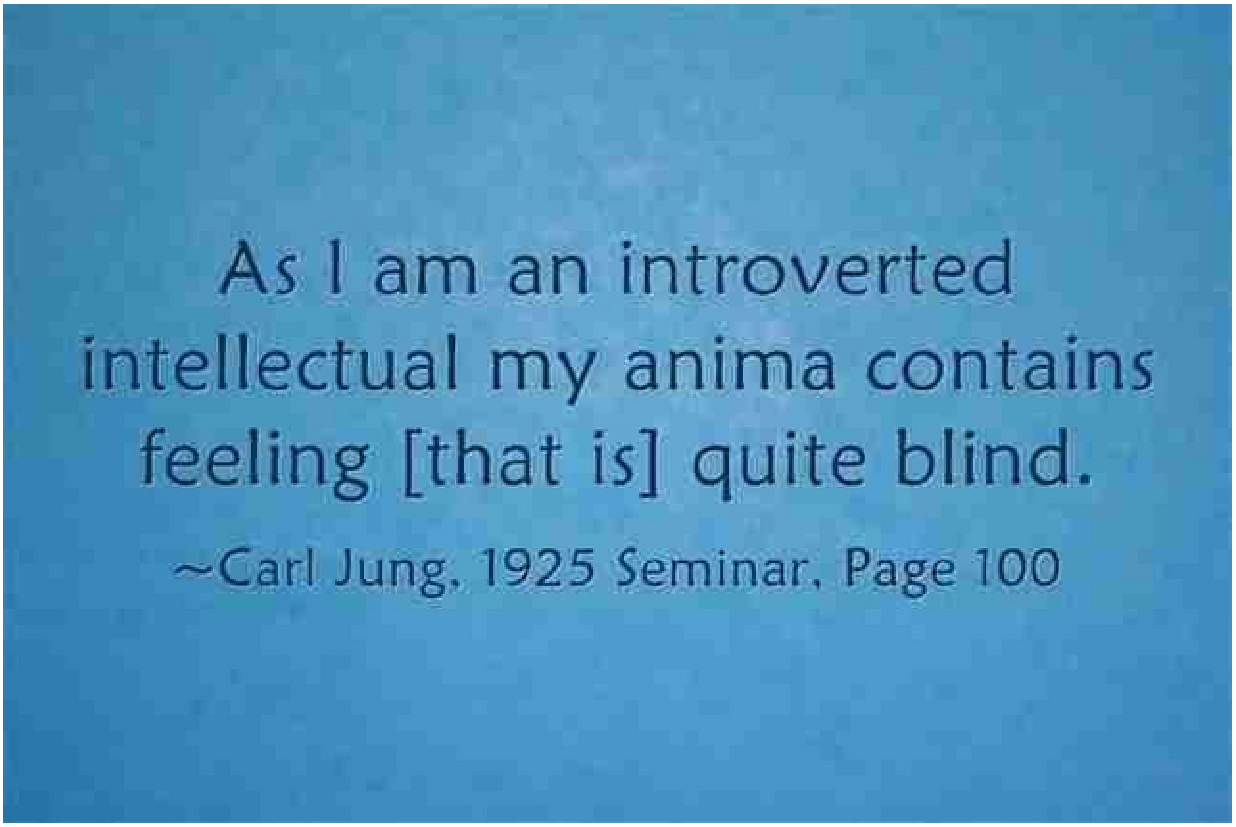
Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99



WITHIN THE REALM OF WILLPOWER WE HAVE CHOICE, BUT BEYOND THAT NO CHOICE AT ALL.

– CARL JUNG, 1925 SEMINAR, PAGE 99

Within the realm of willpower we have choice, but beyond that no choice at all. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99



As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

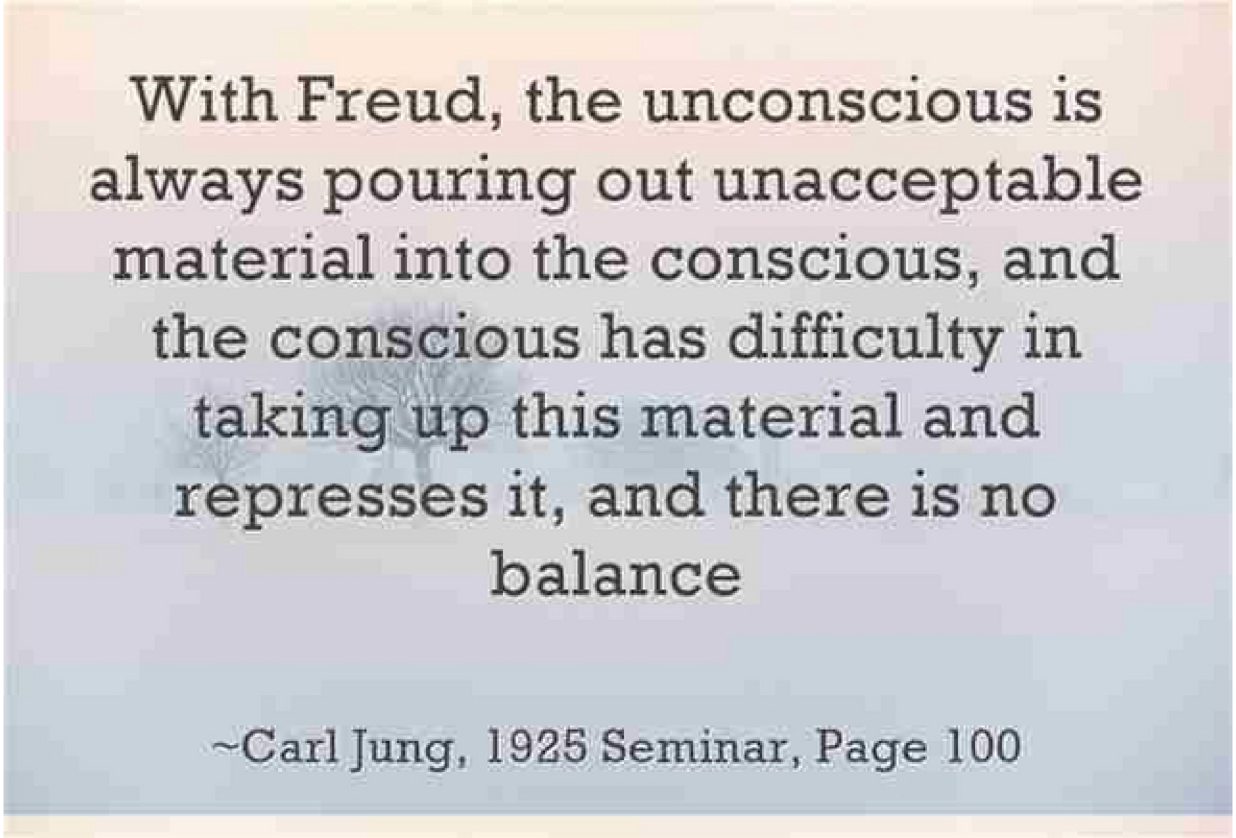
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

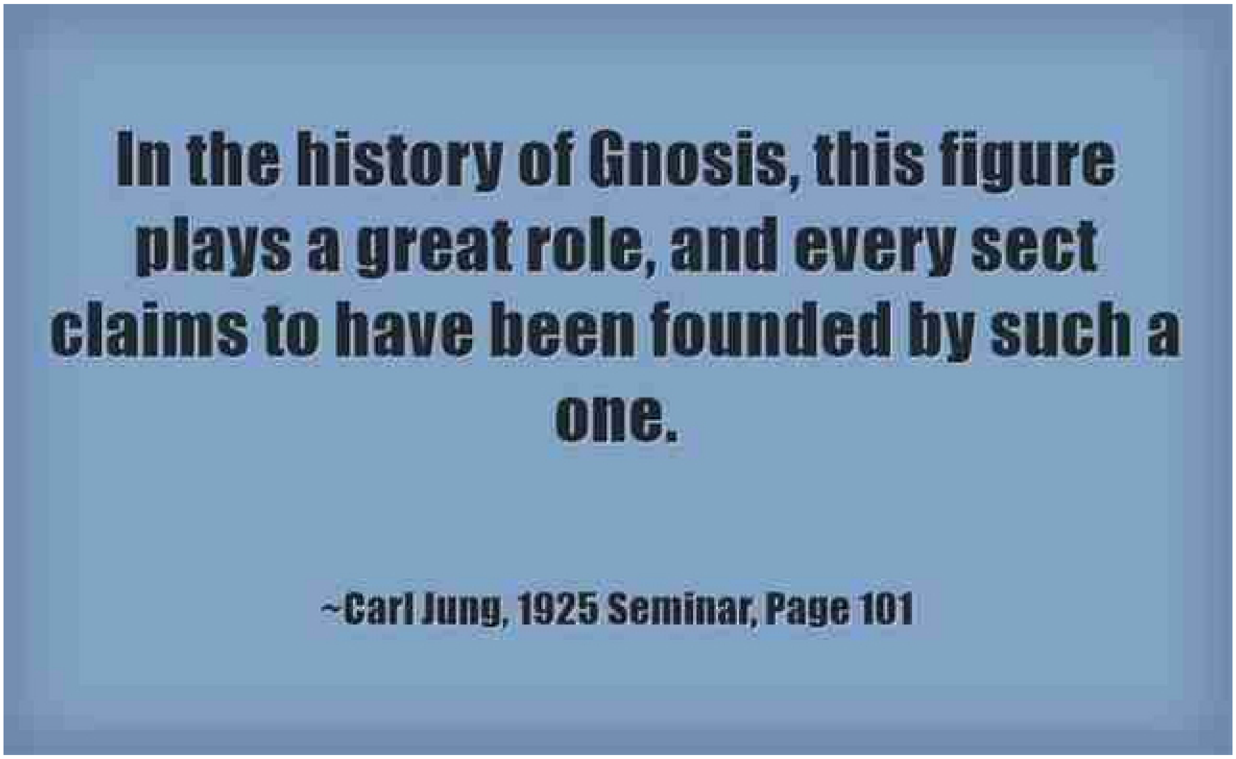
In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100



With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

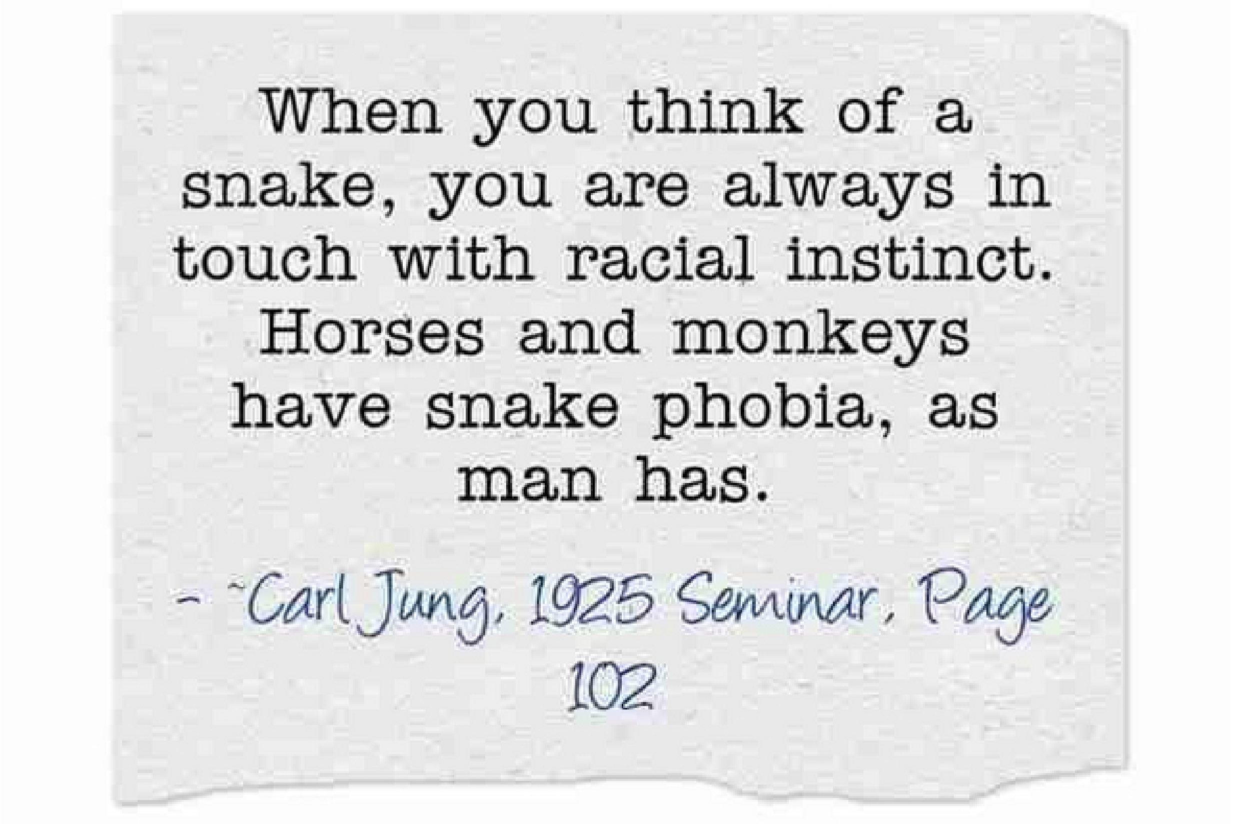
With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100



In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101

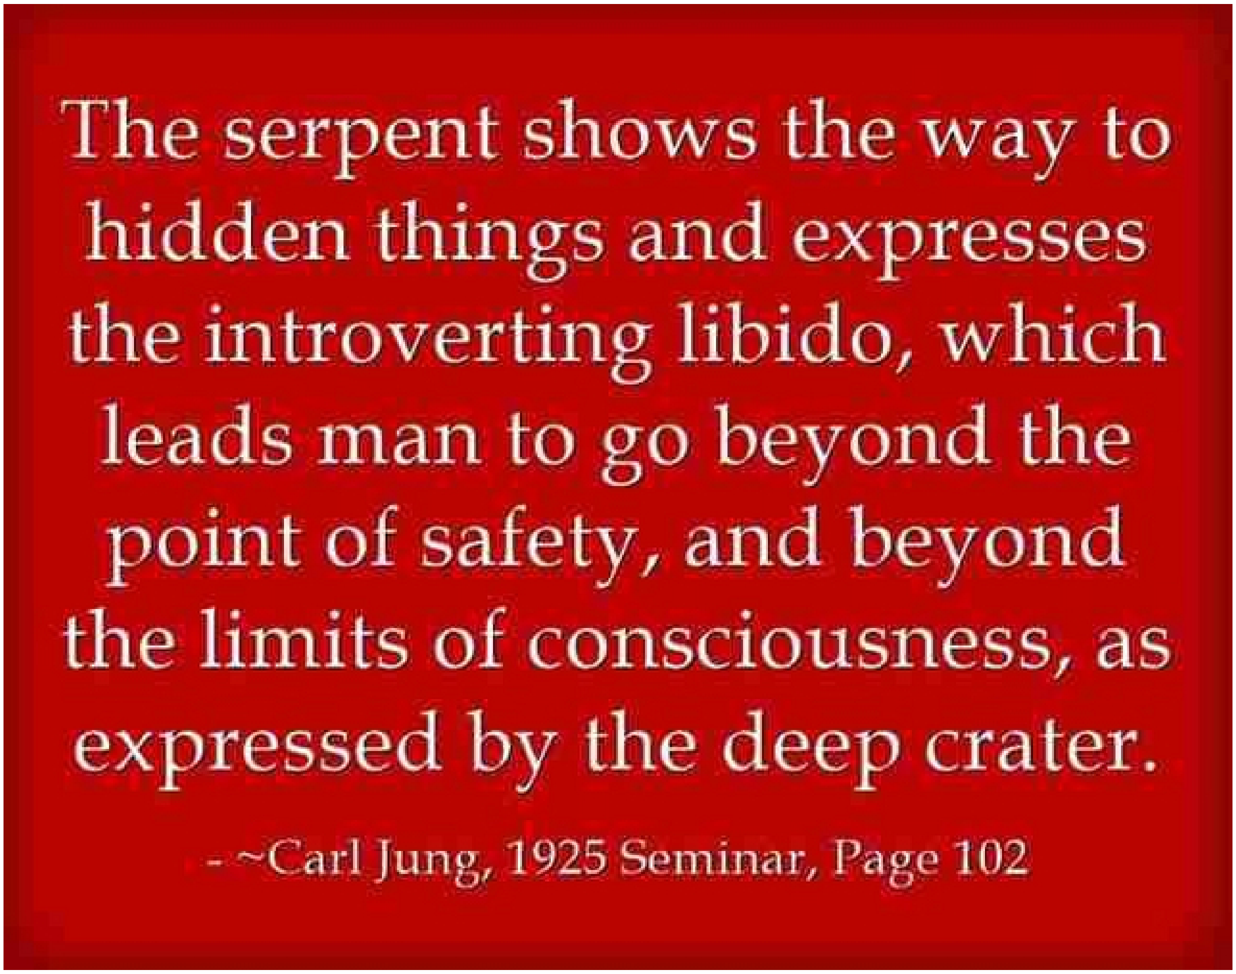
In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101



When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct. Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

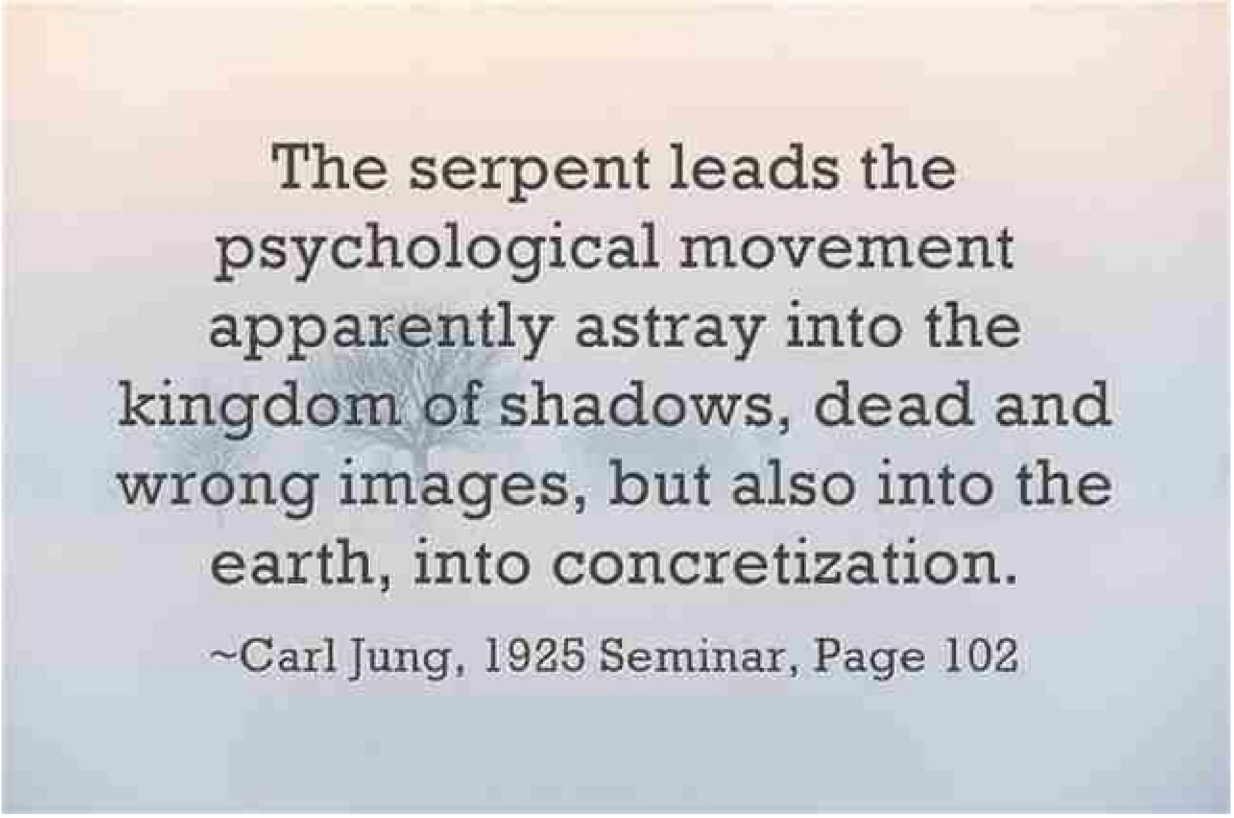
When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct. Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

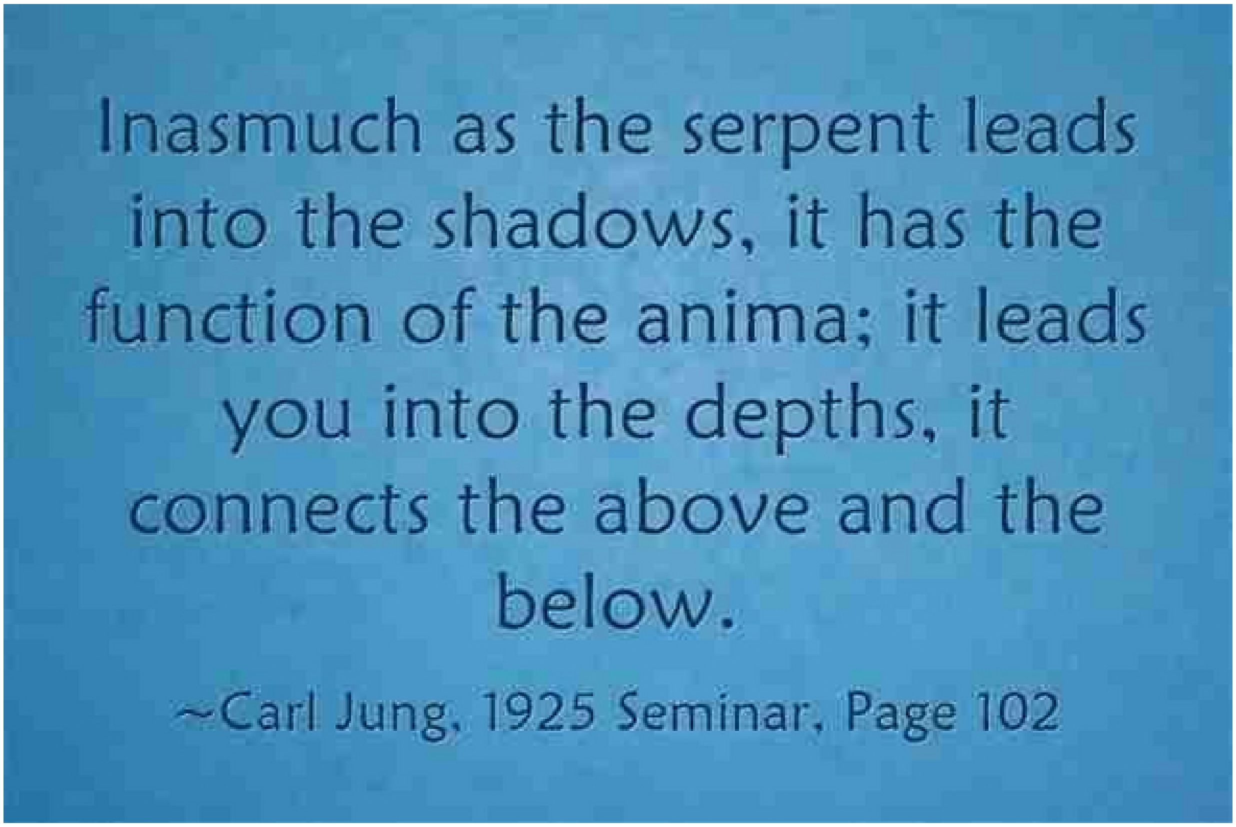
The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

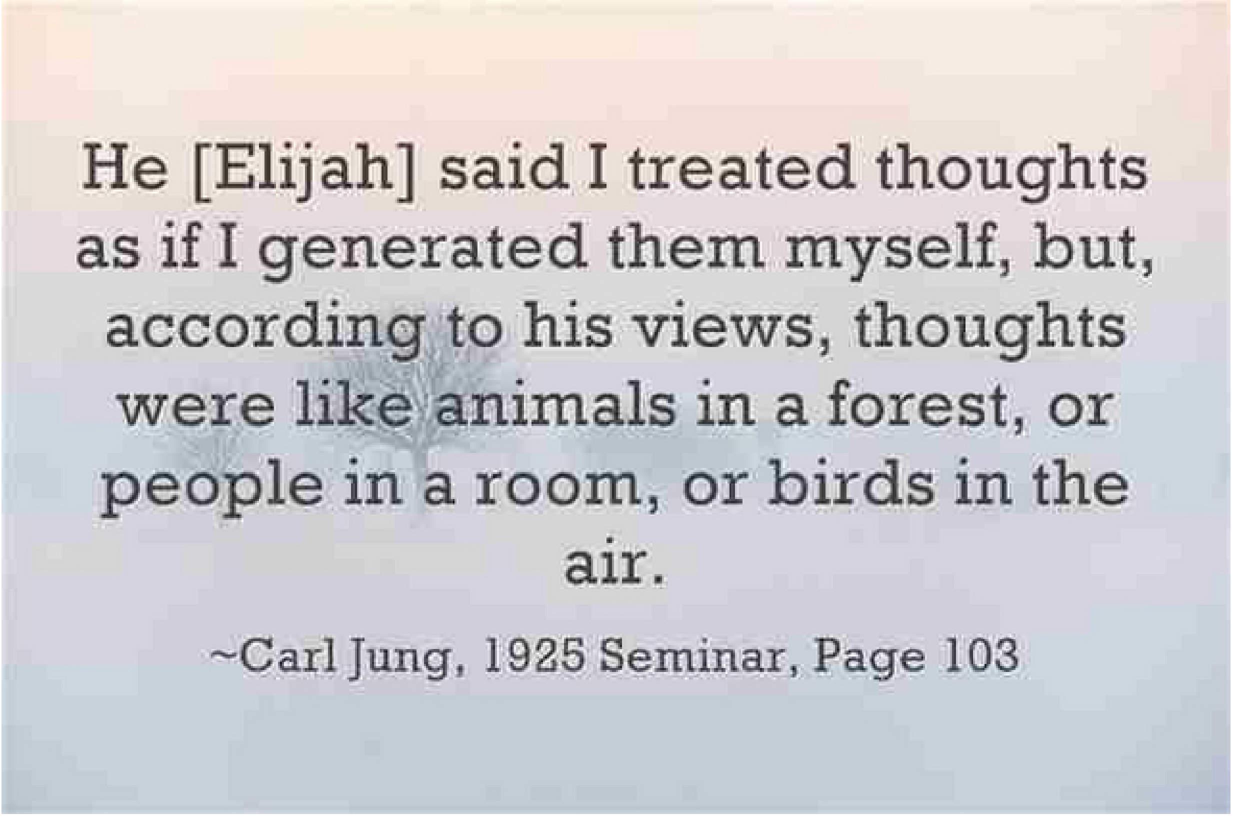
The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

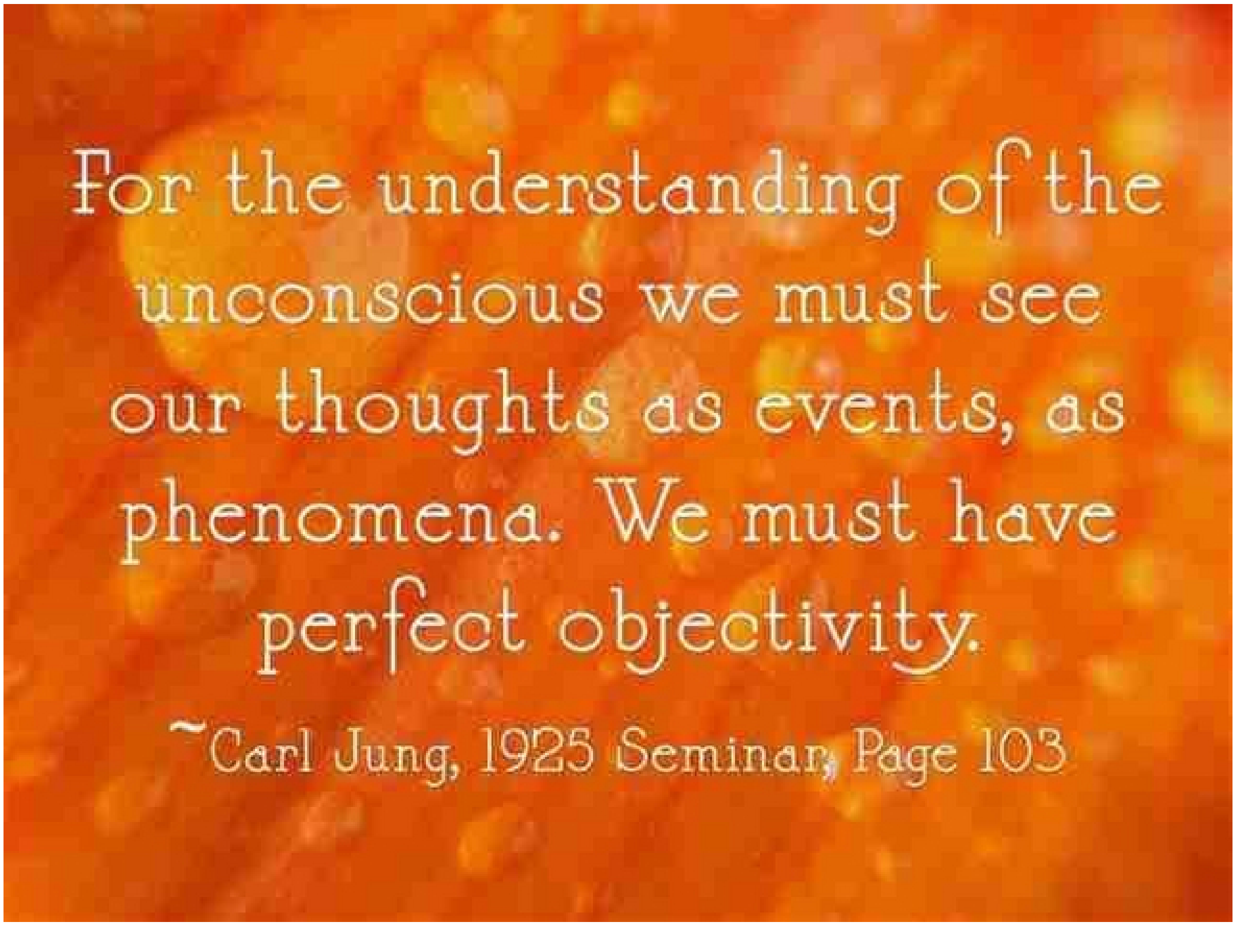
Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



He [Elijah] said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103

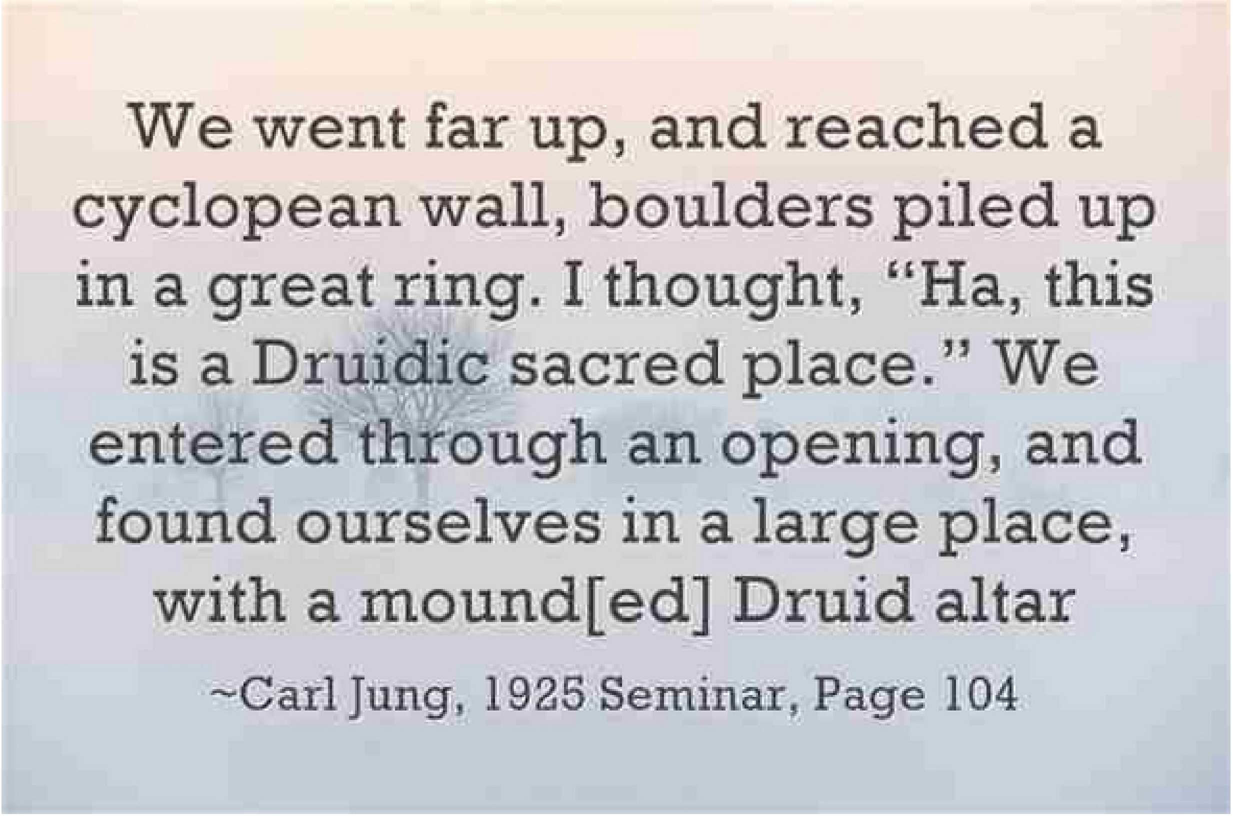
He [Elijah] said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103



For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena. We must have perfect objectivity.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103

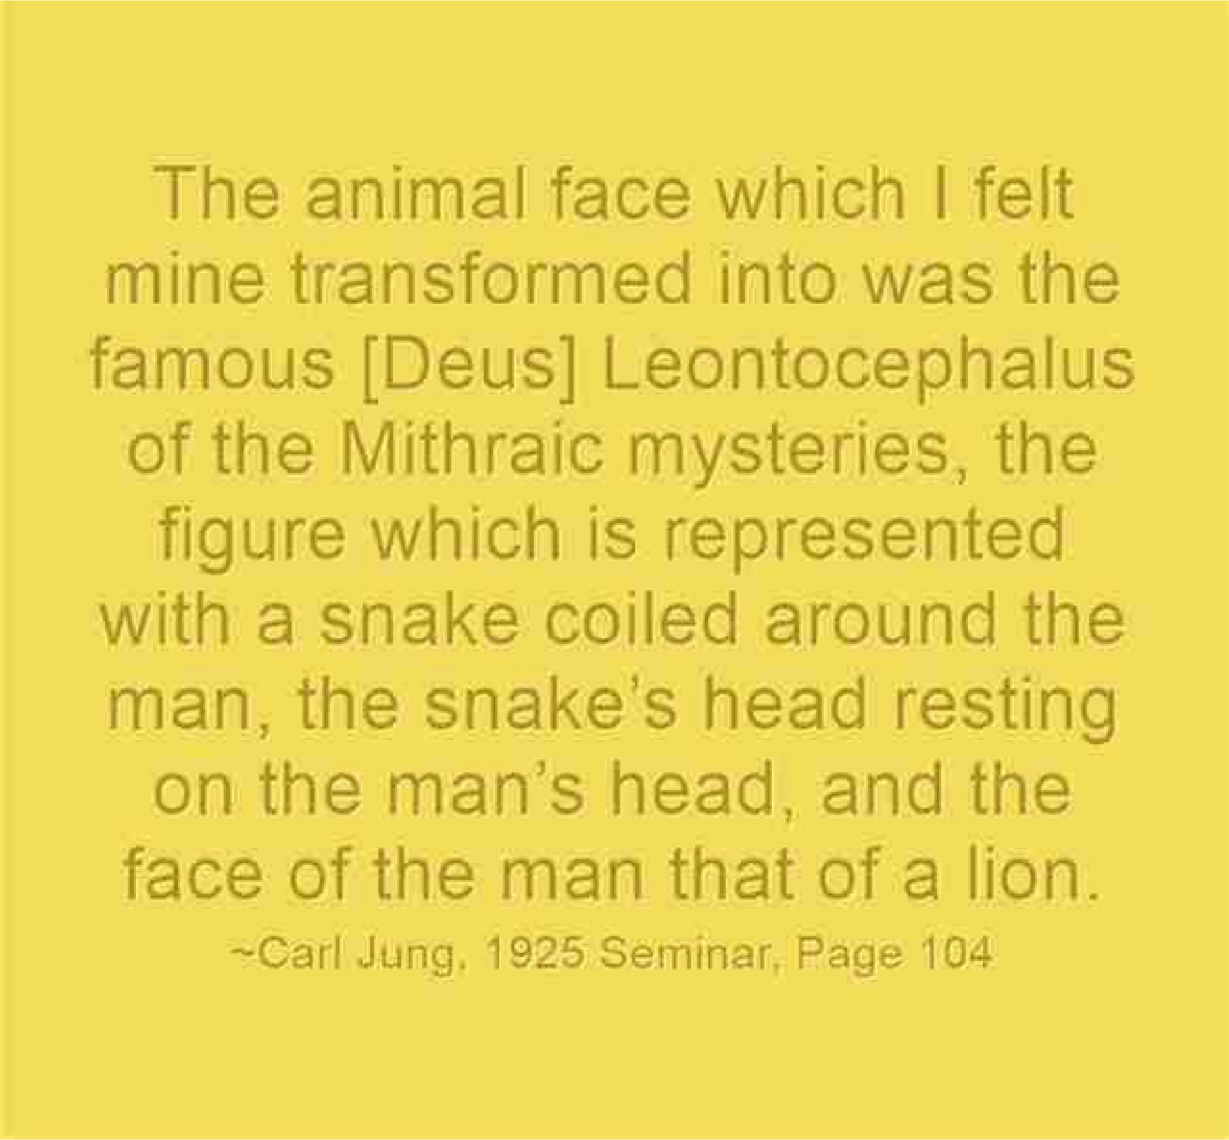
For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena. We must have perfect objectivity. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103



We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring. I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.” We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104

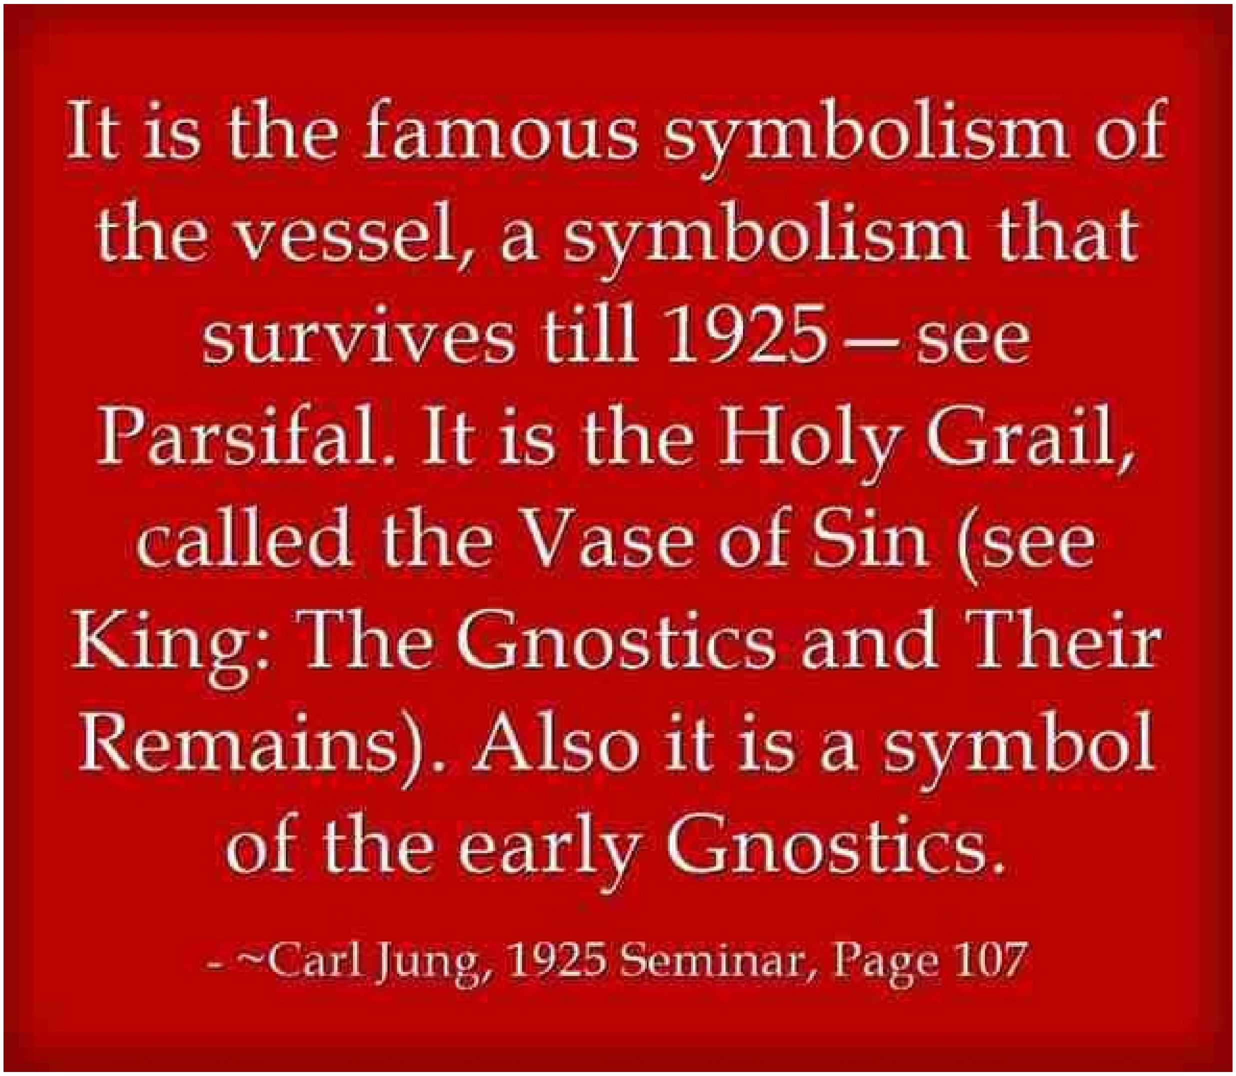
We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring. I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.” We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar.
Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104



The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake's head resting on the man's head, and the face of the man that of a lion.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104

The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake's head resting on the man's head, and the face of the man that of a lion. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104

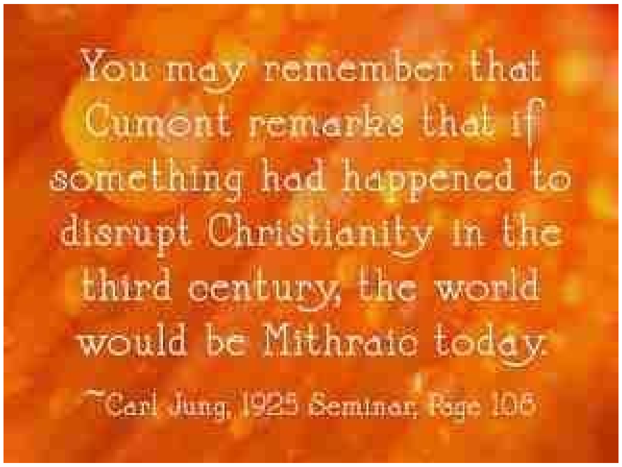


It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925 – see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains). Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 107

It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925—see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains). Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 107

[19]

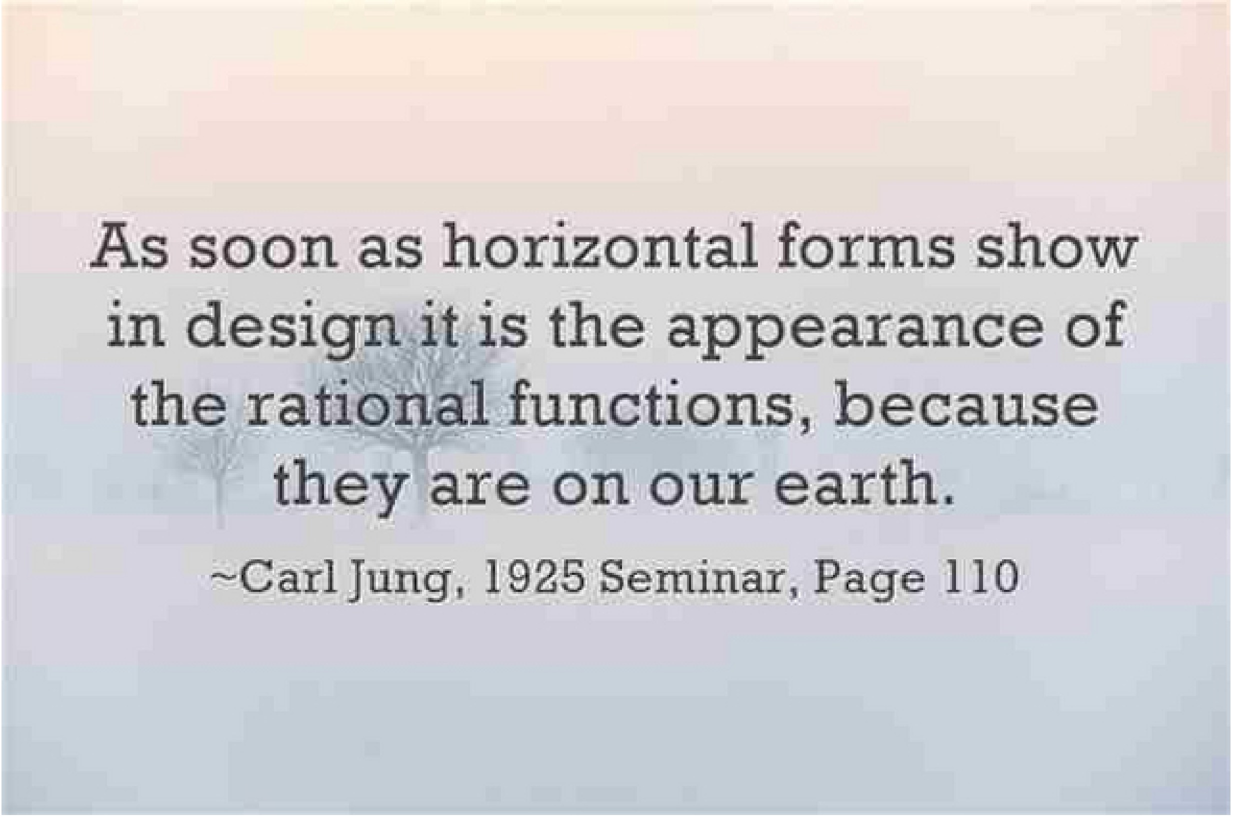


You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 108

You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 108

[20]

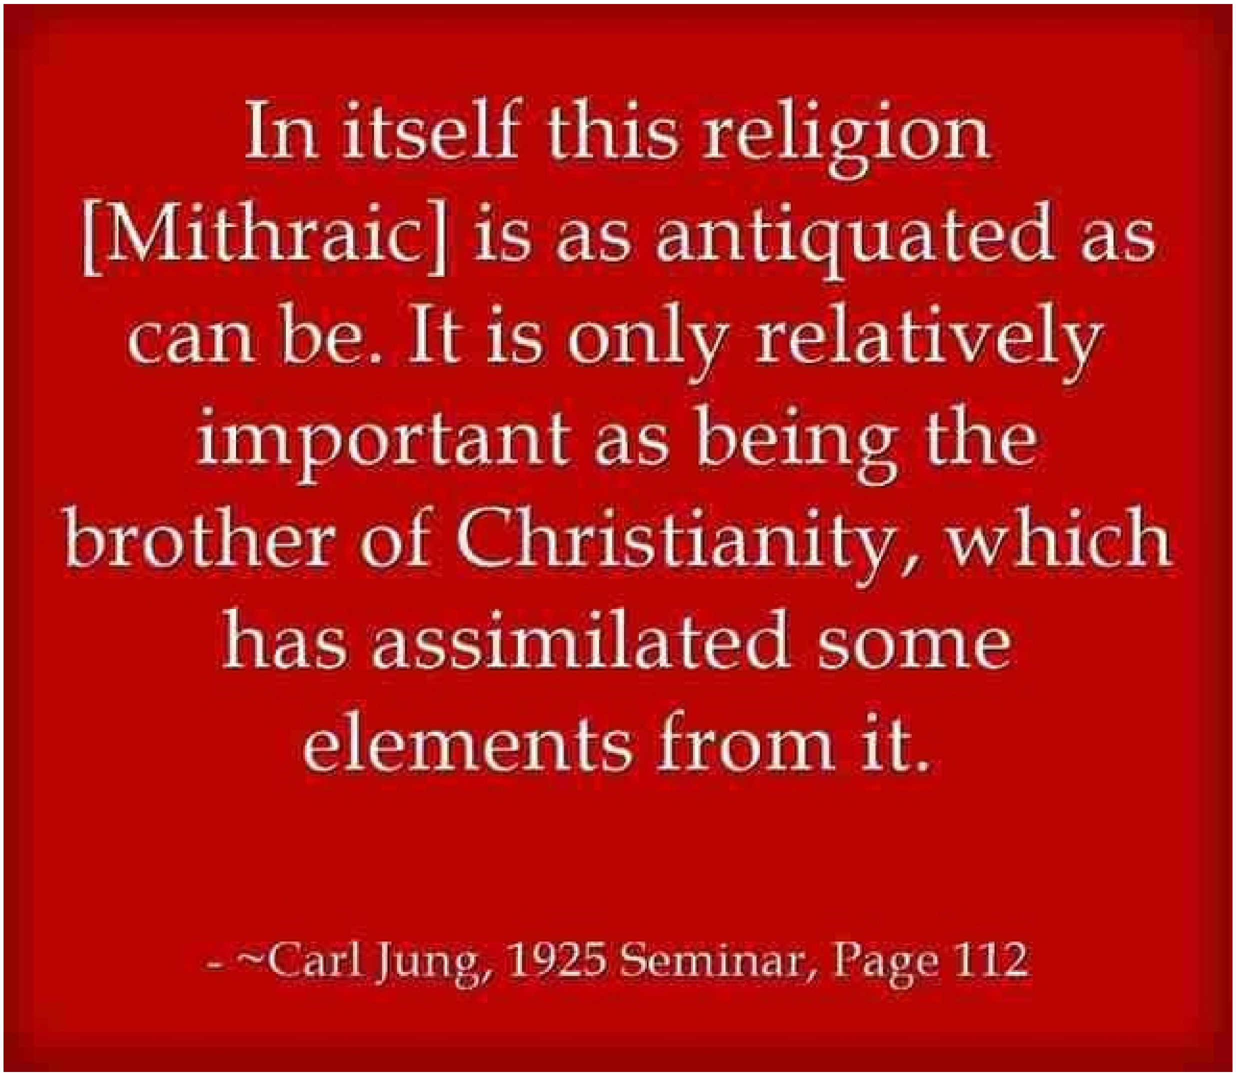


As soon as horizontal forms show in design it is the appearance of the rational functions, because they are on our earth.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 110

As soon as horizontal forms show in design it is the appearance of the rational functions, because they are on our earth. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 110

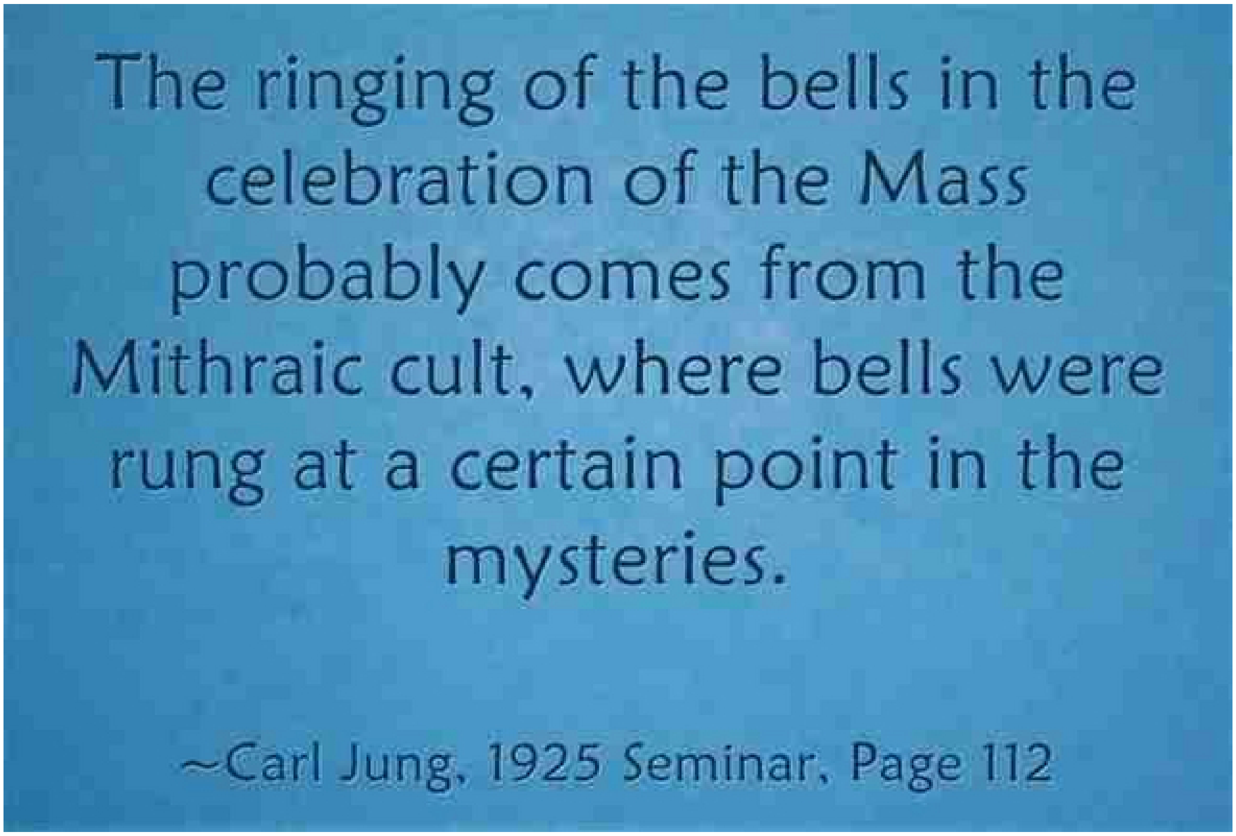
[21]



In itself this religion [Mithraic] is as antiquated as can be. It is only relatively important as being the brother of Christianity, which has assimilated some elements from it.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112

In itself this religion [Mithraic] is as antiquated as can be. It is only relatively important as being the brother of Christianity, which has assimilated some elements from it. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112



The ringing of the bells in the celebration of the Mass probably comes from the Mithraic cult, where bells were rung at a certain point in the mysteries.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112

The ringing of the bells in the celebration of the Mass probably comes from the Mithraic cult, where bells were rung at a certain point in the mysteries. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/73439-bbb.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/88cd9-ccc.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3d74e-ddd.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/15a66-eee.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d00bf-fff.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bc6b3-ggg.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4fafb-hhh.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ee356-iii.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4f376-jjj.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c6a0a-lll.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/81ac2-mmm.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1d693-nnn.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0a432-ooo.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/71055-ppp.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/342da-qqq.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/76faa-rrr.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/111f7-sss.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3b3b1-ttt.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d0079-uuu.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ff0b7-www.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fe378-yyy.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c4c82-zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Synchronicity" - Lexicon (2019-03-08 06:29)

[1]

Synchronicity
"A meaningful coincidence of two or more events, where something other than the probability of chance is involved." - Dr Carl Jung

Carl Jung on Synchronicity.

[Sadly "Synchronicity" is all too often tossed about describing events which do not adhere to the synchronistic events as used within Depth Psychology.]

Synchronicity:

A phenomenon where an event in the outside world coincides meaningfully with a psychological state of mind.

Synchronicity . . . consists of two factors: a) An unconscious image comes into consciousness either directly (i.e., literally) or indirectly (symbolized or suggested) in the form of a dream, idea, or premonition. b) An objective situation coincides with this content. The one is as puzzling as the other.["Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle," ibid., par. 858.]

Jung associated synchronistic experiences with the relativity of space and time and a degree of unconsciousness.

The very diverse and confusing aspects of these phenomena are, so far as I can see at present, completely explicable on the assumption of a psychically relative space-time continuum. As soon as a psychic content crosses the threshold of consciousness, the synchronistic marginal phenomena disappear, time and space resume their accustomed sway, and consciousness is once more isolated in its subjectivity. . . . Conversely, synchronistic phenomena can be evoked by putting the subject into an unconscious state.["On the Nature of the Psyche," CW 8, par. 440.]

Synchronicity was defined by Jung as an "acausal connecting principle," an essentially mysterious connection between the personal psyche and the material world, based on the fact that at bottom they are only different forms of energy.

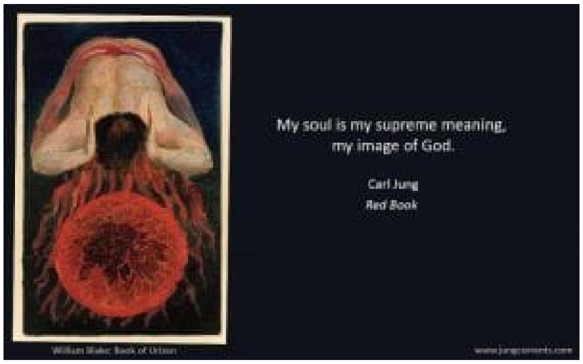
It is not only possible but fairly probable, even, that psyche and matter are two different aspects of one and the same thing. The synchronicity phenomena point, it seems to me, in this direction, for they show that the nonpsychic can behave like the psychic, and vice versa, without there being any causal connection between them.[Ibid., par. 418.]

http://www.nyaap.org/jung-lexicon/s

http://www.tuks.nl/pdf/Reference _Material/Aetherforce _Libary/Other/ %5BMarie-Louise _von _Franz %5D _On _Divination _and _Synchronicity.pdf

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/9ec7f-synch.jpg`

The Supreme Meaning of Death ~Carl Jung (2019-03-08 06:31)



My soul is my supreme meaning,
my image of God.
Carl Jung
Red Book
William Blake: Book of Urizen
www.jungcurrents.com

The supreme vision comes not at the end of the Bardo, but right at the beginning, at the moment of death; what happens afterward is an ever deepening descent into illusion and obscuration, down to the ultimate degradation of new physical birth.

The spiritual climax is reached at the moment when life ends. Human life, therefore, is the vehicle of the highest perfection it is possible to attain; it alone generates the karma that makes it possible for the dead man to abide in the perpetual light of the Voidness without clinging to any object, and thus to rest on the hub of the wheel of rebirth, freed from all illusion of genesis and decay.

Life in the Bardo brings no eternal rewards or punishments, but merely a descent into a new life which shall bear the individual nearer to his final goal.

But this eschatological goal is what he himself brings to birth as the last and highest fruit of the labors and aspirations of earth Carl Jung; Commentary on the Tibetan Book of the Dead; Psychology and Religion, Pages 524-525.

It is highly sensible of the Bardo Thodol to make clear to the dead man the primacy of the psyche, for that is the one thing which life does not make clear to us. We are so hemmed in by things which jostle and oppress that we never get a chance, inthe midst of all these "given" things, to wonder by whom they are "given."

It is from this world of "given" things that the dead man liberates himself; and the purpose of the instruction is to help him towards this liberation. We, if we put ourselves in his place, shall derive no lesser reward from it, since we learn from the very first paragraphs that the "giver" of all "given" things dwells within us.

This is a truth which in the face of all evidence, in the greatest things as in the smallest, is never known, although it is often so very necessary, indeed vital, for us to know it.

Such knowledge, to be sure, is suitable only for contemplatives who are minded to understand the purpose of existence, for those who are Gnostics by temperament and therefore believe in a savior who, like the savior of the Mandaeans, is called "knowledge of life" (Manda d'Hayye).

Perhaps it is not granted to many of us to see the world as something "given." A great reversal of standpoint, calling for much sacrifice, is needed before we can see the world as "given" by the very nature of the psyche.

It is so much more straightforward, more dramatic, impressive, and therefore more convincing, to see all the things that happen to me than to observe how I make them happen. Indeed, the animal nature of man makes him resist seeing himself as the maker of his circumstances.

That is why attempts of this kind were always the object of secret initiations, culminating as a rule in a figurative death which symbolized the total character of this reversal.

And, in point of fact, the instruction given in the Bardo Thodol serves to recall to the dead man the experiences of his initiation and the teachings of his guru, for the instruction is, at bottom, nothing less than an initiation of the dead into the Bardo life, just as the initiation of the living was a preparation for the Beyond. Such was the case, at least, with all the mystery cults in ancient civilizations from the time of the Egyptian and Eleusinian mysteries.

In the initiation of the living, however, this "Beyond" is not a world beyond death, but a reversal of the mind's intentions and outlook, a psychological "Beyond" or, in Christian terms, a "redemption" from the trammels of the world and of sin.

Redemption is a separation and deliverance from an earlier condition of darkness and unconsciousness, and leads to a condition of illumination and releasedness, to victory and transcendence over everything "given." Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Pages 513 – 514.

Carl Jung on the "Trickster" - Lexicon (2019-03-08 06:40)

Psychologically, descriptive of unconscious shadow tendencies of an ambivalent, mercurial nature.

[The trickster] is a forerunner of the savior . . . . He is both subhuman and superhuman, a bestial and divine being, whose chief and most alarming characteristic is his unconsciousness.["On the Psychology of the Trickster-Figure," CW 9i, par. 472],

The so-called civilized man has forgotten the trickster. He remembers him only figuratively and metaphorically, when, irritated by his own ineptitude, he speaks of fate playing tricks on him or of things being bewitched. He never suspects that his own hidden and apparently harmless shadow has qualities whose dangerousness exceeds his wildest dreams.[Ibid., par. 478.]

On the Psychology of the Trickster Figure by C.G. Jung:

It is no light task for me to write about the figure of the trickster in American Indian mythology within the confined space of a commentary. When I first came across Adolf Bandelier’s classic on this subject, The Delight Makers, many years ago, I was struck by the European analogy of the carnival in the medieval Church, with its reversal of the hierarchic order, which is still continued in the carnivals held by student societies today. Something of this contradictoriness also inheres in the medieval description of the devil as simia dei (the ape of God), and in his characterization in folklore as the "simpleton" who is "fooled" or "cheated." A curious combination of typical trickster motifs can be found in the alchemical figure of Mercurius; for instance, his fondness for sly jokes and malicious pranks, his powers as a shape-shifter, his dual nature, half animal, half divine, his exposure to all kinds of tortures, and—last but not least—his approximation to the figure of a saviour. These qualities make Mercurius seem like a daemonic being resurrected from primitive times, older even than the Greek Hermes. His rogueries relate him in some measure to various figures met with in folklore and universally known in fairy-tales: Tom Thumb, Stupid Hans, or the buffoon-like Hanswurst, who is an altogether negative hero and yet manages to achieve through his stupidity what others fail to accomplish with their best efforts. In Grimm’s fairy-tale, the "Spirit Mercurius" lets himself be outwitted by a peasant lad, and then has to buy his freedom with the precious gift of healing.

Since all mythical figures correspond to inner psychic experiences and originally sprang from them, it is not surprising to find certain phenomena in the field of parapsychology which remind us of the trickster. These are the phenomena connected with poltergeists, and they occur at all times and places in the ambiance of pre-adolescent children. The malicious tricks played by the poltergeist are as well known as the low level of his intelligence and the fatuity of his "communications."

Ability to change his shape seems also to be one of his characteristics, as there are not a few reports of his appearance in animal form. Since he has on occasion described himself as a soul in hell, the motif of subjective suffering would seem not to be lacking either. His universality is co-extensive, so to speak, with that of shamanism, to which, as we know, the whole phenomenology of spiritualism belongs. There is something of the trickster in the character of the shaman and medicine-man, for he, too, often plays malicious jokes on people, only to fall victim in his turn to the vengeance of those whom he has injured. For this reason, his profession sometimes puts him in peril of his life.

Besides that, the shamanistic techniques in themselves often cause the medicine-man a good deal of discomfort, if not actual pain. At all events the "making of a medicine-man" involves, in many parts of the world, so much agony of body and soul that permanent psychic injuries may result. His "approximation to the saviour" is an obvious consequence of this, in confirmation of the mythological truth that the wounded wounder is the agent of healing, and that the sufferer takes away suffering.

These mythological features extend even to the highest regions of man’s spiritual development. If we consider, for example, the daemonic features exhibited by Yahweh in the Old Testament, we shall find in them not a few reminders of the unpredictable behaviour of the trickster, of his senseless orgies of destruction and his self• imposed sufferings, together with the same gradual development into a saviour and his simultaneous humanization.

It is just this transformation of thl:’ meaningless into the meaningful that reveals the trickster’s compensatory relation to the "saint." In the early Middle Ages, this led to some strange ecclesiastical customs based on memories of the ancient saturnalia. Mostly they were celebrated on the days immediately following the birth of Christ—that is, in the New Year—with singing and dancing. The dances were the originally harmless tripudia of the priests, lower clergy, children, and subdeacons and took place in church. An episcopus puerorum (children’s bishop) was elected on Innocents’ Day and dressed in pontifical robes. Amid uproarious rejoicings he paid an official visit to the palace of the archbishop and bestowed the episcopal blessing from one of the windows. The same thing happened at the tripudium hypodiaconorum, and at the dances for other priestly grades.

By the end of the twelfth century, the subdeacons’ dance had degenerated into a real festum stuttorum (fools’ feast). A report from the year I1g8 says that at the Feast of the Circumcision in Notre Dame, Paris, "so many abominations and shameful deeds" were committed that the holy place was desecrated "not only by smutty jokes, but even by the shedding of blood." In vain did Pope Innocent III inveigh against the "jests and madness that make the clergy a mockery," and the "shameless frenzy of their play-acting."

Two hundred and fifty years later (March 12, 1444), a letter from the Theological Faculty of Paris to all the French bishops was still fulminating against these festivals, at which "even the priests and clerics elected an archbishop OT a bishop or pope, and named him the Fools’ Pope" (fatuorum papam). "In the very midst of divine service masqueraders with grotesque faces, disguised as women, lions, and mummers, performed their dances, sang indecent songs in the choir, ate their greasy food from a corner of the altar near the priest celebrating mass, got out their games of dice, burned a stinking incense made of old shoe leather, and ran and hopped about all over the church."

It is not surprising that this veritable witches' sabbath was uncommonly popular, and that it required considerable time and effort to free the Church from this pagan heritage.

In certain localities even the priests seem to have adhered to the "libertas decembrica," as the Fools' Holiday was called, in spite (or perhaps because?) of the fact that the older level of consciousness could let itself rip on this happy occasion with all the wildness, wantonness, and irresponsibility of paganism.

These ceremonies, which still reveal the spirit of the trickster in his original form, seem to have died out by the beginning of the sixteenth century. At any rate, the various conciliar decrees issued from 1581 to 1585 forbade only the festum puerorum and the election of an episcopus puerorum.

Finally, we must also mention in this connection the festum asinorum, which, so far as I know, was celebrated mainly in France. Although considered a harmless festival in memory of Mary's flight into Egypt, it was celebrated in a somewhat curious manner which might easily have given rise to misunderstandings.

In Beauvais, the ass procession went right into the church.5 At the conclusion of each part (Introit, Kyrie, Gloria, ete.) of the high mass that followed, the whole congregation brayed) that is, they all went "Y-a" like a donkey ("hac modulatione hinham concludebantur"). A codex dating apparently from the eleventh century says: "At the end of the mass, instead of the words 'Ite missa est,' the priest shall bray three times (ter hinhamabit), and instead of the words 'Deo gratias,' the congregation shall answer •Y•a' (hinham) three times,"

Du Cange cites a hymn from this festival:

Orientis partibus
Adventavit Asinus
Pulcher et fortissimus
Sarcinis aptissimus.

Each verse was followed by the French refrain:

Hez, Sire Asnes, car chantez
Belle bouche rechignez
Vous aurez du foin assez
Et de l'avoine a plantez.

The hymn had nine verses, the last of which was:

Amen, dicas, Asine (hie genufleetebatur)
Jam satur de gramine.
Amen, amen, itera
Aspernare vetera.

Du Cange says that the more ridiculous this rite seemed, the greater the enthusiasm with which it was celebrated. In other places the ass was decked with a golden canopy whose corners were held "by distinguished canons"; the others present had to "don suitably festive garments, as at Christmas." Since there were certain tendencies to bring the ass into symbolic relationship with Christ, and since, from ancient times, the god of the Jews was vulgarly conceived to be an ass-a prejudice which extended to Christ himself, as is shown by the mock crucifixion scratched on the wall of the Imperial Cadet School on the Palatine 8-the danger of theriomorphism lay uncomfortably close.

Even the bishops could do nothing to stamp out this custom, until finally it had to be suppressed by the "auctoritas supremi Senatus." The suspicion of blasphemy becomes quite open in Nietzsche’s "Ass Festival," which is a deliberately blasphemous parody of the mass.9

These medieval customs demonstrate the role of the trickster to perfection, and, when they vanished from the precincts of the Church, they appeared again on the profane level of Italian theatricals, as those comic types who, often adorned with enormous ithyphallic emblems, entertained the far from prudish public with ribaldries in true Rabelaisian style. Callot’s engravings have preserved these classical figures for posterity—the Pulcinellas, Cucorognas, Chico Sgarras, and the like.

In picaresque tales, in carnivals and revels, in magic rites of healing, in man’s religious fears and exaltations, this phantom of the trickster haunts the mythology of all ages, sometimes in quite unmistakable form, sometimes in strangely modulated guise.n He is obviously a "psychologem," an archetypal psychic structure of extreme antiquity. In his clearest manifestations he is a faithful reflection of an absolutely undifferentiated human consciousness, corresponding to a psyche that has hardly left the animal level.

That this is how the trickster figure originated can hardly be contested if we look at it from the causal and historical angle. In psychology as in biology we cannot afford to overlook or underestimate this question of origins, although the answer usually tells us nothing about the functional meaning. For this reason biology should never forget the question of purpose, for only by answering that can we get at the meaning of a phenomenon.

Even in pathology, where we are concerned with lesions which have no meaning in themselves, the exclusively causal approach proves to be inadequate, since there are a number of pathological phenomena which only give up their meaning when we inquire into their purpose. And where we are concerned with the normal phenomena of life, this question of purpose takes undisputed precedence.

When, therefore, a primitive or barbarous consciousness forms a picture of itself on a much earlier level of development and continues to do so for hundreds or even thousands of years, undeterred by the contamination of its archaic qualities with differentiated, highly developed mental products, then the causal explanation is that the older the archaic qualities are, the more conservative and pertinacious is their behaviour. One simply cannot shake off the memory-image of things as they were, and drags it along like a senseless appendage.

This explanation, which is facile enough to satisfy the rationalistic requirements of our age, would certainly not meet with the approval of the Winnebago’s, the nearest possessors of the trickster cycle. For them the myth is not in any sense a remnant-it is far too amusing for that, and an object of undivided enjoyment. For them it still "functions," provided that they have not been spoiled by civilization.

For them there is no earthly reason to theorize about the meaning and purpose of myths, just as the Christmas—tree seems no problem at all to the naive European. For the thoughtful observer, however, both trickster and Christmas-tree afford reason enough for reflection. Naturally it depends very much on the mentality of the observer what he thinks about these things. Considering the crude primitivity of the trickster cycle, it would not be surprising if one saw in this myth simply the reflection of an earlier, rudimentary stage of consciousness, which is what the trickster obviously seems to be.

The only question that would need answering is whether such personified reflections exist at all in empirical psychology. As a matter of fact they do, and these experiences of split or double personality actually form the core of the earliest psycho-pathological investigations. The peculiar thing about these dissociations is that the split-off personality is not just a random one, but stands in a complementary or compensatory relationship to the ego-personality.

It is a personification of traits of character which are sometimes worse and sometimes better than those the ego-personality possesses. A collective personification like the trickster is the product of an aggregate of individuals and is welcomed by each individual as something known to him, which would not be the case if it were just an individual outgrowth.

Now if the myth were nothing but an historical remnant, one would have to ask why it has not long since vanished into the great rubbish-heap of the past, and why it continues to make its influence felt on the highest levels of civilization, even where, on account of his stupidity and grotesque scurrility, the trickster no longer plays the role of a "delight-maker." In many cultures his figure seems like an old river-bed in which the water still flows.

One can see this best of all from the fact that the trickster motif does not crop up only in its mythical form but appears just as naively and authentically in the unsuspecting modern man—whenever, in fact, he feels himself at the mercy of annoying "accidents" which thwart his will and his actions with apparently malicious intent. He then speaks of "hoodoos" and "jinxes" or of the "mischievousness of the object."

Here the trickster is represented by counter-tendencies in the unconscious, and in certain cases by a sort of second personality, of a puerile and inferior character, not unlike the personalities who announce themselves at spiritualistic seances and cause all those ineffably childish phenomena so typical of poltergeists. I have, I think, found a suitable designation for this character-component when I called it the shadow. On the civilized level, it is regarded as a personal "gaffe," "slip," "faux pas," etc., which are then chalked up as defects of the conscious personality.

We are no longer aware that in carnival customs and the like there are remnants of a collective shadow figure which prove that the personal shadow is in part descended from a numinous collective figure. This collective figure gradually breaks up under the impact of civilization, leaving traces in folklore which are difficult to recognize. But the main part of him gets personalized and is made an object of personal responsibility.

Radin’s trickster cycle preserves the shadow in its pristine mythological form, and thus points back to a very much earlier stage of consciousness which existed before the birth of the myth, when the Indian was still groping about in a similar mental darkness. Only when his consciousness reached a higher level could he detach the earlier state from himself and objectify it, that is, say anything about it.

So long as his consciousness was itself trickster-like, such a confrontation could obviously not take place. It was possible only when the attainment of a newer and higher level of consciousness enabled him to look back on a lower and inferior state. It was only to be expected that a good deal of mockery and contempt should mingle with this retrospect, thus casting an even thicker pall over man’s memories of the past, which were pretty unedifying anyway.

This phenomenon must have repeated itself innumerable times in the history of his mental development. The sovereign contempt with which our modern age looks back on the taste and intelligence of earlier centuries is a classic example of this, and there is an unmistakable allusion to the same phenomenon in the New Testament, where we are told in Acts 17:30 that God looked down from above the times of ignorance (or unconsciousness).

This attitude contrasts strangely with the still commoner and more striking idealization of the past, which is praised not merely as the "good old days" but as the Golden Age-and not just by uneducated and superstitious people, but by all those legions of theosophical enthusiasts who resolutely believe in the former existence and lofty civilization of Atlantis.

Anyone who belongs to a sphere of culture that seeks the perfect state somewhere in the past must feel very queerly indeed when confronted by the figure of the trickster. He is a forerunner of the savior, and, like him, God, man, and animal at once. He is both subhuman and superhuman, a bestial and divine being, whose chief and most alarming characteristic is his unconsciousness.

Because of it he is deserted by his (evidently human) companions, which seems to indicate that he has fallen below their level of consciousness. He is so unconscious of himself that his body is not a unity, and his two hands fight each other. He takes his anus off and entrusts it with a special task. Even his sex is optional despite its phallic qualities: he can turn himself into a woman and bear children. From his penis he makes all kinds of useful plants. This is a reference to his original nature as a Creator, for the world is made from the body of a god.

On the other hand he is in many respects stupider than the animals, and gets into one ridiculous scrape after another. Although he is not really evil, he does the most atrocious things from sheer unconsciousness and unrelatedness. His imprisonment in animal unconsciousness is suggested by the episode where he gets his head caught inside the skull of an elk, and the next episode shows how he overcomes this condition by imprisoning the head of a hawk inside his own rectum.

True, he sinks back into the former condition immediately afterwards, by falling under the ice, and is outwitted time after time by the animals, but in the end he succeeds in tricking the cunning coyote, and this brings back to him his savior nature. The trickster is a primitive "cosmic" being of divine-animal nature, on the one hand superior to man because of his superhuman qualities, and on the other hand inferior to him because of his unreason and unconsciousness.

He is no match for the animals either, because of his extraordinary clumsiness and lack of instinct. These defects are the marks of his human nature, which is not so well adapted to the environment as the animal's but, instead, has prospects of a much higher development of consciousness based on a considerable eagerness to learn, as is duly emphasized in the myth.

What the repeated telling of the myth signifies is the therapeutic anamnesis of contents which, for reasons still to be discussed, should never be forgotten for long. If they were nothing but the remnants of an inferior state it would be understandable if man turned his attention away from them, feeling that their reappearance was a nuisance. This is evidently by no means the case, since the trickster has been a source of amusement right down to civilized times, where he can still be recognized in the carnival figures of Pulcinella and the clown.

That is one important reason for his still continuing to function. But it is not the only one, and certainly not the reason why this reflection of an extremely primitive state of consciousness solidified into a mythological personage. Mere vestiges of an early state that is dying out usually lose their energy at an increasing rate, otherwise they would never disappear. The last thing we would expect is that they would have the strength to solidify into a mythological figure with its own cycle of legends—unless, of course, they received energy from outside, in this case from a higher level of consciousness or from sources in the unconscious which are not yet exhausted.

To take a legitimate parallel from the psychology of the individual, namely the appearance of an impressive shadow figure antagonistically confronting a personal consciousness: this figure does not appear merely because it still exists in the individual, but because it rests on a dynamism whose existence can only be explained in terms of his actual situation, for instance because the shadow is so disagreeable to his ego-consciousness that it has to be repressed into the unconscious.

This explanation does not quite meet the case here, because the trickster obviously represents a vanishing level of consciousness which increasingly lacks the power to take express and assert itself. Furthermore, repression would prevent it from vanishing, because repressed contents are the very ones that have the best chance of survival, as we know from experience that nothing is corrected in the unconscious.

Lastly, the story of the trickster is not in the least disagreeable to the Winnebago consciousness or incompatible with it but, on the contrary, pleasurable and therefore not conducive to repression. It looks, therefore, as if the myth were actively sustained and fostered by consciousness. This may well be so, since that is the best and most successful method of keeping the shadow figure conscious and subjecting it to conscious criticism.

Although, to begin with, this criticism has more the character of a positive evaluation, we may expect that with the progressive development of consciousness the cruder aspects of the myth will gradually fall away, even if the danger of its rapid disappearance under the stress of white civilization did not exist. We have often seen how certain customs, originally cruel or obscene, became mere vestiges in the course of time.

The process of rendering this motif harmless takes an extremely long time, as its history shows; one can still detect traces of it even at a high level of civilization. Its longevity could also be explained by the strength and vitality of the state of consciousness described in the myth, and by the secret attraction and fascination this has for the conscious mind.

Although purely causal hypotheses in the biological sphere are not as a rule very satisfactory, due weight must nevertheless be given to the fact that in the case of the trickster a higher level of consciousness has covered up a lower one, and that the latter was already in retreat. His recollection, however, is mainly due to the interest which the conscious mind brings to bear on him, the inevitable concomitant being, as we have seen, the gradual civilizing, i.e., assimilation, of a primitive daemonic figure who was originally autonomous and even capable of causing possession.

To supplement the causal approach by a final one therefore enables us to arrive at more meaningful interpretations not only in medical psychology, where we are concerned with individual fantasies originating in the unconscious, but also in the case of collective fantasies, that is myths and fairy-tales.

As Radin points out, the civilizing process begins within the framework of the trickster cycle itself, and this is a clear indication that the original state has been overcome. At any rate the marks of deepest unconsciousness fall away from him; instead of acting in a brutal, savage, stupid, and senseless fashion, the trickster’s behavior towards the end of the cycle becomes quite useful and sensible.

The devaluation of his earlier unconsciousness is apparent even in the myth, and one wonders what has happened to his evil qualities. The naive reader may imagine that when the dark aspects disappear they are no longer there in reality. But that is not the case at all, as experience shows. ’What actually happens is that the conscious mind is then able to free itself from the fascination of evil and is no longer obliged to live it compulsively.

The darkness and the evil have not gone up in smoke, they have merely withdrawn into the unconscious owing to loss of energy, where they remain unconscious so long as all is well with the conscious. But if the conscious should find itself in a critical or doubtful situation, then it soon becomes apparent that the shadow has not dissolved into nothing but is only waiting for a favorable opportunity to reappear as a projection upon one’s neighbor.

If this trick is successful, there is immediately created between them that world of primordial darkness where everything that is characteristic of the trickster can happen-even on the highest plane of civilization. The best examples of these "monkey tricks," as popular speech aptly and truthfully sums up this state of affairs in which everything goes wrong and nothing intelligent happens except by mistake at the last moment, are naturally to be found in politics.

The so-called civilized man has forgotten the trickster. He remembers him only figuratively and metaphorically, when, irritated by his own ineptitude, he speaks of fate playing tricks on him or of things being bewitched. He never suspects that his own hidden and apparently harmless shadow has qualities whose dangerousness exceeds his wildest dreams. As soon as people get together in masses and submerge the individual, the shadow is mobilized, and, as history shows, may even be personified and incarnated.

The disastrous idea that everything comes to the human psyche from outside and that it is born a tabula rasa is responsible for the erroneous belief that under normal circumstances the individual is in perfect order. He then looks to the State for salvation, and makes society pay for his inefficiency.

He thinks the meaning of existence would be discovered if food and clothing were delivered to him gratis on his own doorstep, or if everybody possessed an automobile. Such are the puerilities that rise up in place of an unconscious shadow and keep it unconscious. As a result of these prejudices, the individual feels totally dependent on his environment and loses all capacity for introspection. In this way his code of ethics is replaced by a knowledge of what is permitted or forbidden or ordered.

How, under these circumstances, can one expect a soldier to subject an order received from a superior to ethical scrutiny? He has not yet made the discovery that he might be capable of spontaneous ethical impulses, and of performing them-even when no one is looking.

From this point of view we can see why the myth of the trickster was preserved and developed: like many other myths, it was supposed to have a therapeutic effect. It holds the earlier low intellectual and moral level before the eyes of the more highly developed individual, so that he shall not forget how things looked yesterday. We like to imagine that something which we do not understand does not help us in any way. But that is not always so.

Seldom does a man understand with his head alone, least of all when he is a primitive. Because of its numinosity the myth has a direct effect on the unconscious, no matter whether it is understood or not. The fact that its repeated telling has not long since become obsolete can, I believe, be explained by its usefulness. The explanation is rather difficult because two contrary tendencies are at work: the desire on the one hand to get out of the earlier condition and on the other hand not to forget it.

Apparently Radin has also felt this difficulty, for he says: "Viewed psychologically, it might be contended that the history of civilization is largely the account of the attempts of man to forget his transformation from an animal into a human being." 16 A few pages further on he says (with reference to the Golden Age): "So stubborn a refusal to forget is not an accident." And it is also no accident that we are forced to contradict ourselves as soon as we try to formulate man's paradoxical attitude to myth.

Even the most enlightened of us will set up a Christmas-tree for his children without having the least idea what this custom means, and is invariably disposed to nip any attempt at interpretation in the bud. It is really astonishing to see how many so-called superstitions are rampant nowadays in town and country alike, but if one took hold of the individual and asked him, loudly and clearly, "Do you believe in ghosts? in witches? in spells and magic?" he would deny it indignantly.

It is a hundred to one he has never heard of such things and thinks it all rubbish. But in secret he is all for it, just like a jungle-dweller. The public knows very little of these things anyway, for everyone is convinced that in our enlightened society that kind of superstition has long since been eradicated, and it is part of the general convention to act as though one had never heard of such things, not to mention believing in them.

But nothing is ever lost, not even the blood pact with the devil. Outwardly it is forgotten, but inwardly not at all. We act like the natives on the southern slopes of Mount Elgon, in East Africa, one of whom accompanied me part of the way into the bush. At a fork in the path we came upon a brand new "ghost trap," beautifully got up like a little hut, near the cave where he lived with his family. I asked him if he had made it. He denied it with all the signs of extreme agitation, asserting that only children would make such a "ju-ju." Whereupon he gave the hut a kick, and the whole thing fell to pieces.

This is exactly the reaction we can observe in Europe today. Outwardly people are more or less civilized, but inwardly they are still primitives. Something in man is profoundly disinclined to give up his beginnings, and something else believes it has long since got beyond all that.

This contradiction was once brought home to me in the most drastic manner when I was watching a "Strudel" (a sort of local witch-doctor) taking the spell off a stable. The stable was situated immediately beside the Gotthard railway line, and several international expresses sped past during the ceremony. Their occupants would hardly have suspected that a primitive ritual was being performed a few yards away.

The conflict between the two dimensions of consciousness is simply an expression of the polaristic structure of the psyche, which like any other energic system is dependent on the tension of opposites. That is also why there are no general psychological propositions which could not just as well be reversed; indeed, their reversibility proves their validity. We should never forget that in any psychological discussion we are not saying anything about the psyche, but that the psyche is always speaking about itself.

It is no use thinking we can ever get beyond the psyche by means of the "mind," even though the mind asserts that it is not dependent on the psyche. How could it prove that? We can say, if we like, that one statement comes from the psyche, is psychic and nothing but psychic, and that another comes from the mind, is "spiritual" and therefore superior to the psychic one. Both are mere assertions based on the postulates of belief.

The fact is, that this old trichotomous hierarchy of psychic contents (hylic, psychic, and pneumatic) represents the polaristic structure of the psyche, which is the only immediate object of experience. The unity of our psychic nature lies in the middle, just as the living unity of the waterfall appears in the dynamic connection between above and below.

Thus, the living effect of the myth is experienced when a higher consciousness, rejoicing in its freedom and independence, is confronted by the autonomy of a mythological figure and yet cannot flee from its fascination, but must pay tribute to the overwhelming impression. The figure works, because secretly it participates in the observer’s psyche and appears as its reflection, though it is not recognized as such.

It is split off from his consciousness and consequently behaves like an autonomous personality. The trickster is a collective shadow figure, a summation of all the inferior traits of character in individuals. And since the individual shadow is never absent as a component of personality, the collective figure can construct itself out of it continually. Not always, of course, as a mythological figure, but, in consequence of the increasing repression and neglect of the original mythologems, as a corresponding projection on other social groups and nations.

If we take the trickster as a parallel of the individual shadow, then the question arises whether that trend towards meaning, which we saw in the trickster myth, can also be observed in the subjective and personal shadow. Since this shadow frequently appears in the phenomenology of dreams as a well-defined figure, we can answer this question positively: the shadow, although by definition a negative figure, sometimes has certain clearly discernible traits and associations which point to a quite different background. It is as though he were hiding meaningful contents under an unprepossessing exterior.

Experience confirms this; and what is more important, the things that are hidden usually consist of increasingly numinous figures. The one standing closest behind the shadow is the anima,18 who is endowed with considerable powers of fascination and possession. She often appears in rather too youthful form, and hides in her turn the powerful archetype of the wise old man (sage, magician, king, etc.). The series could be extended, but it would be pointless to do so, as psychologically one only understands what one has experienced oneself. The concepts of complex psychology are, in essence, not intellectual formulations but names for certain areas of experience, and though they can be described they remain dead and irrepresentable to anyone who has not experienced them.

Thus, I have noticed that people usually have not much difficulty in picturing to themselves what is meant by the shadow, even if they would have preferred instead a bit of Latin or Greek jargon that sounds more "scientific." But it costs them enormous difficulties to understand what the anima is. They accept her easily enough when she appears in novels or as a film star, but she is not understood at all when it comes to seeing the role she plays in their own lives, because she sums up everything that a man can never get the better of and never finishes coping with. Therefore it remains in a perpetual state of emotionality which must not be touched. The degree of unconsciousness one meets with in this connection is, to put it mildly, astounding. Hence it is practically impossible to get a man who is afraid of his own femininity to understand what is meant by the anima.

Actually, it is not surprising that this should be so, since even the most rudimentary insight into the shadow sometimes causes the greatest difficulties for the modern European. But since the shadow is the figure nearest his consciousness and the least explosive one, it is also the first component of personality to come up in an analysis of the unconscious. A minatory and ridiculous figure, he stands at the very beginning of the way of individuation, posing the deceptively easy riddle of the Sphinx, or grimly demanding answer to a "quaestio crocodilina."

If, at the end of the trickster myth, the saviour is hinted at, this comforting premonition or hope means that some calamity or other has happened and been consciously understood. Only out of disaster can the longing for the saviour arise—in other words, the recognition and unavoidable integration of the shadow create such a harrowing situation that nobody but a saviour can undo the tangled web of fate. In the case of the individual, the problem constellated by the shadow is answered on the plane of the anima, that is, through relatedness. In the history of the collective as in the history of the individual, everything depends on the development of consciousness. This gradually brings liberation from imprisonment in unconsciousness, and is therefore a bringer of light as well as of healing.

As in its collective, mythological form, so also the individual shadow contains within it the seed of an enantiodromia, of a conversion into its opposite.

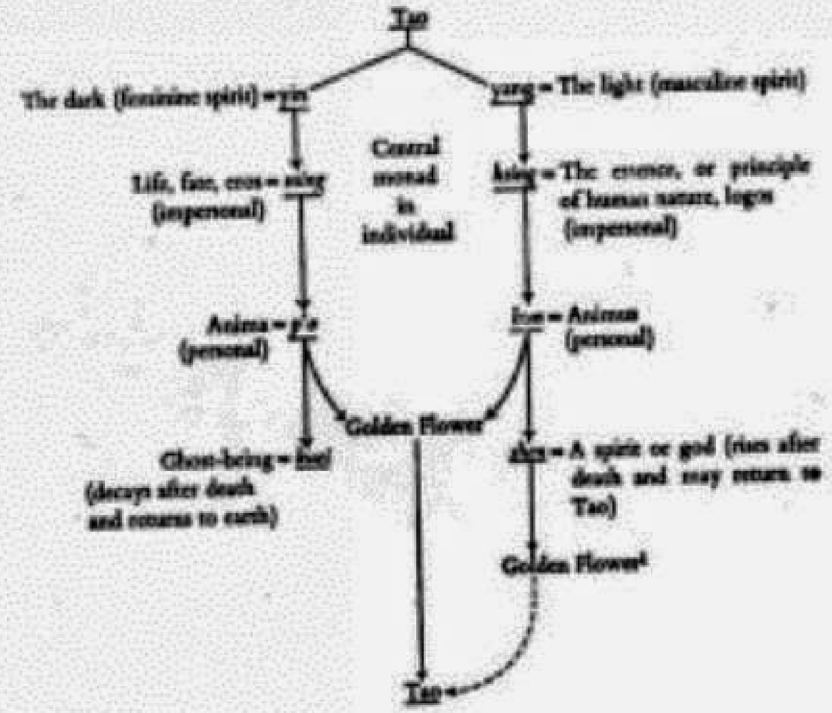
http://www.the16types.info/vbulletin/content.php/211-On-the-Psychology-of-the -Trickster-Figure-Jung

---

Essence, Logos, Life and Eros (2019-03-08 06:41)

[1]

Diagram of the Chinese concepts concerned with the development of the Golden Flower, or immortal spirit-body



Tao
The dark (feminine spirit) = yin yang = The light (masculine spirit)
Central monad in individual Life, fate, eros = ming (impersonal) hsing = The essence, or principle of human nature, logos (impersonal) Anima = p'o (personal) hun = Animus (personal)
Golden Flower
Ghost-being = kuei (decays after death and returns to earth)
shen = A spirit or god (rises after death and may return to Tao)
Golden Flower*
Tao

Essence (hsing), undoubtedly related to logos, appears closely knit with life (ming) when entering phenomena.

The character ming really signifies a royal command then, destiny, fate, the fate allotted to a man, so too, the duration of life, the measure of vitality at one's disposal, and Essence (hsing), undoubtedly related to logos, appears closely knit with life (ming) when entering phenomena.

The character ming really signifies a royal command then, destiny, fate, the fate allotted to a man, so too, the duration of life, the measure of vitality at one's disposal, and thus it comes about that ming (life) is closely related to Eros.

Both principles are, so to speak, super-individual.

Man as a spiritual being is made human by essence (hsing).

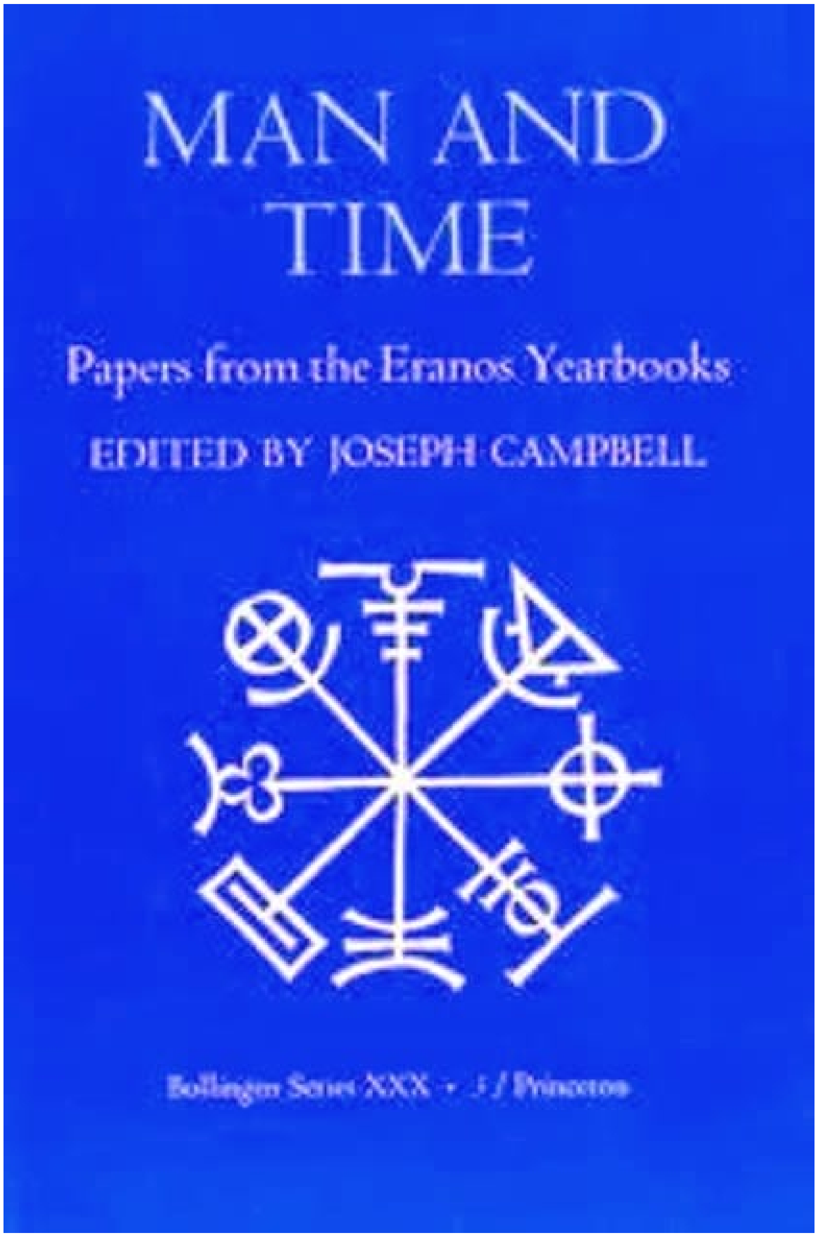
The individual man possesses it. but it extends far beyond the limits of the individual.

Life (ming) is also super-individual in that man must simply accept a destiny which does not come from his conscious will and thus it comes about that ming (life) is closely related to Eros. The Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 11.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/50c92-1.jpg`

Erich Neumann on “Art and Time.” (2019-03-08 06:45)

[1]



MAN AND TIME

Papers from the Eranos Yearbooks

EDITED BY JOSEPH CAMPBELL

Bollingen Series XXX · 3 / Princeton

[Erich Neumann on “Art and Time.”]

Art and time is a vast theme; I am sure you do not expect an exhaustive treatment of it in one lecture. Here we shall not concern ourselves with the phenomenon of time as it enters into man’s experience or into his actual works of art; in other words, we shall not concern ourselves with the relation of the ego to the living stream of time, to eternity or the moment, to the swirling eddies of time, or to repose in time. Our discussion will deal principally with the relation of art to its epoch; the second part of our lecture will take up the specific relation of modern art to our own time.

However, I shall speak neither as an artist nor as an art critic; I shall not even speak of the artistic phenomena with which I come into contact as a psychologist, the more or less artistic productions which arise in the course of analytical therapy. Our present inquiry lies within the psychology of culture; it aims at an understanding of art as a psychological phenomenon of central importance to the collectivity as well as the individual.

We shall start from the creative function of the unconscious, which produces its forms spontaneously, in a manner analogous to nature, which—-from atom and crystal through organic life to the world of the stars and planets—spontaneously creates forms susceptible of impressing man as beautiful. Because this substratum and background of the psycho-physical world is forever bringing forth forms, we call it creative. And to the unknown in nature which engenders its forms of the external world there corresponds another unknown, the collective unconscious, which is the source of all psychic creation: religion and rite, social organization, consciousness, and finally art.

The archetypes of the collective unconscious are intrinsically formless psychic structures which become visible in art. The archetypes are varied by the media through which they pass—that is, their form changes according to the time, the place, and the psychological constellation of the individual in whom they are manifested.

Thus, for example, the mother archetype, as a dynamic entity in the psychic substratum, always retains its identity, but it takes on different styles—different aspects or emotional color—depending on whether it is manifested in Egypt, Mexico, or Spain, or in ancient, medieval or modern times.

he paradoxical multiplicity of its eternal presence, which makes possible an infinite variety of forms of expression, is crystallized in its realization by man in time; its archetypal eternity enters into a unique synthesis with a specific historical situation.

Today we shall neither inquire into the development of specific archetypes in one culture, nor follow the different forms of the same archetype in diverse cultures. Anyone wishing to convince himself of the reality of this overwhelming phenomenon need only consult the Eranos Archive, a pioneer effort in this direction.

Nor shall we take up the aesthetic aspect, the history of styles, which enquires into the forms assumed by the archetypes in the various periods, although it would be exceedingly interesting to show, for example, how the archetypal world of Egypt was shaped by a static conception of eternity and time, while in Central America the same archetypal world is almost submerged in a jungle of ornament because here the all-devouring aspect of the Terrible Mother is dominant. Our effort will begin and end with the question of what art means for mankind and what position it occupies in human development.

At the beginning of the development of human consciousness the original psychic situation prevails: unconscious, collective, and transpersonal factors are more significant and evident than conscious and individual factors. Art is at this stage a collective phenomenon, which cannot be isolated from the context of collective existence but is integrated with the life of the group. Each individual is artist, dancer, singer, poet, painter, and sculptor; everything he does and his way of doing it, even where a recognized individual possession is involved, remains an expression of the group’s collective situation.

Although from the very outset the collective receives its primary impulse from "Great Individuals," even they themselves, in accordance with the dialectic of their relation to the group, never give themselves as individuals I credit for what they have done but impute it to their inspiring predecessors, to the spirits of their ancestors, to the totem, or to whatever aspect of the collective spirit has inspired them individually.

Not only is the creative situation numinous, it is also experienced as such, for all existence was originally shaped by experience of the transpersonal. The festivals and rites are the nodal points of the numinosum, which shapes everything that comes into contact with its sacral sphere: cult implement and mask, figure and image, vessel and ornament, song and dance, myth and poetry. The original integration of all these into life and the numinous context as a whole is shown by the fact that a certain "style" is Oceanic or African, Indian or Nordic, and that it is manifested in the kinship between ornamented door post and ritual vessel, between tattoo motif and mask, fetish and spear shaft.

This unity is a symptom of the individual's immersion in a group context that transcends him; however, when we say that the group is unconsciously directed by the collective psyche, we do not mean that it is directed by urges or instincts. True, the individual's consciousness is almost blind to the underlying forces: his reaction to the creative impulse of the psyche is not to reflect, it is to obey and execute its commands.

But the psychic undercurrents which determine man's feeling and image of the world are manifested through colors and forms, tones and words, which crystallize into symbolic spiritual figures expressing man's relation both to the archetypal world and to the world in which he lives.

Thus from the very outset man is a creator of symbols; he constructs his characteristic spiritual-psychic world from the symbols in which he speaks and thinks of the world around him, but also from the forms and images which his numinous experience arouses in him.

In the original situation man's emotion in the presence of the numinosum leads to expression, for the unconscious, as part of its creative function, carries with it its own expression. But the emotional drives which move the group and the individual within it must not be conceived as a dynamic without content. For every symbol, like every archetype, has a specific content, and when the whole of a man is seized by the collective unconscious, his consciousness is included. Consequently we find from the very start that the creative function of the psyche is accompanied by a reaction of consciousness, which seeks, at first in slight degree but then increasingly, to understand, to interpret, and to assimilate the thing by which it was at first overwhelmed. Thus at a very early stage there is a relative fixation of expression and style, and so definite traditions arise.

In our time, with its developed or overdeveloped consciousness, feeling and emotion seem to be bound up with an artistic nature; for an undeveloped consciousness this is by no means the case. For primitive and early cultures, the creative force of the numinosum supports or even engenders consciousness; it brings differentiation and order into an indeterminate world driven by chaotic powers and enables man to orient himself.

In the creative sphere of the psyche, which we call the unconscious, significant differentiations have been effected in the direction which will be characteristic of subsequent elaborations by the consciousness. The very appearance of a psychic image represents a synthetic interpretation of the world, and the same is true of artistic creation in the period of origination.

Artistic creation has magic power, it is experience and perception, insight and differentiation in one. Whether the image is naturalistic or not is immaterial; even the extremely naturalistic animal paintings of the Ice Age are, in our sense, symbols. For a primitive, magical conception of the world, each of these painted animals is a numinosum; it is the embodiment and essence of the animal species.

The individual bison, for example, is a spiritual-psychic symbol; he is in a sense the "father of the bison," the idea of the bison, the "bison as such," and this is why he is an object of ritual. The subjugation and killing, the conciliation and fertilization of the animal, which are enacted in the psychic sphere between the human group and the image which symbolically represents the animal group, have a reality-transforming—that is, magical—significance, because this image-symbol encompasses the numinous heart and center of the animal living in the world, whose symbolic figuration constitutes an authentic manifestation of the numinous animal.

In the period of origination, the forms of expression and driving archetypal contents of a culture remain unconscious; but with the development and systematization of consciousness and the reinforcement of the individual ego there arises a collective consciousness, a cultural canon characteristic for each culture and cultural epoch.

There arises, in other words, a configuration of definite archetypes, symbols, values, and attitudes, upon which the unconscious archetypal contents are projected and which, fixated as myth and cult, becomes the dogmatic heritage of the group. No longer do unconscious and unknown powers determine the life of the group; instead, transpersonal figures and contents, known to the group, direct the life of the community as well as the conscious behavior of the individual in festival and cult, religion and usage.

This does not mean that man suspects a connection between this transpersonal world and the depths of his own human psyche, although the transpersonal can express itself only through the medium of man and takes form in him through creative processes.

But even when the cultural canon develops, art in all its forms remains at first integrated with the whole of the group life, and when the cultural canon is observed in religious festival, all creative activity is articulated with this integral event. As expressions of archetypal reality, the art and music, dance and poetry of the cult are inner possessions of the collective.

Whether the epiphany of the numinosum occurs in a drawing scratched on bone, in a sculptured stone, in a medieval cathedral centuries in the building, or in a mask, fashioned for one festival and burned after it, in every case the epiphany of the numinosum, the rapture of those who give it form, and the rapture of the group celebrating the epiphany constitute an indivisible unit.

But the breakdown of this original situation in the course of history is revealed also by the phenomenon of the individual creator in art. With the growth of individuality and the relative independence of consciousness, the integral situation in which the creative element in art is one with the life of the group disintegrates.

An extensive differentiation occurs; poets, painters, sculptors, musicians, dancers, actors, architects, etc. become professional groups, practicing particular functions of artistic expression. The majority of the group, it would appear, preserves only a receptive relation, if any, to the creative achievement of the artist.

But neither is the individual so isolated—nor are art and the artist so far separated—from the collective as first appears. We have learned to see the consciousness of the individual as the high voice in a polyphony whose lower voice, the collective unconscious, does not merely accompany but actually determines the theme. And this reorientation is not limited to the psychic structure of the individual: it also necessitates a new approach to the relations between men. Erich Neumann; “Art and Time;” Pages 1-6; Eranos Yearbooks; “Man and Time.”

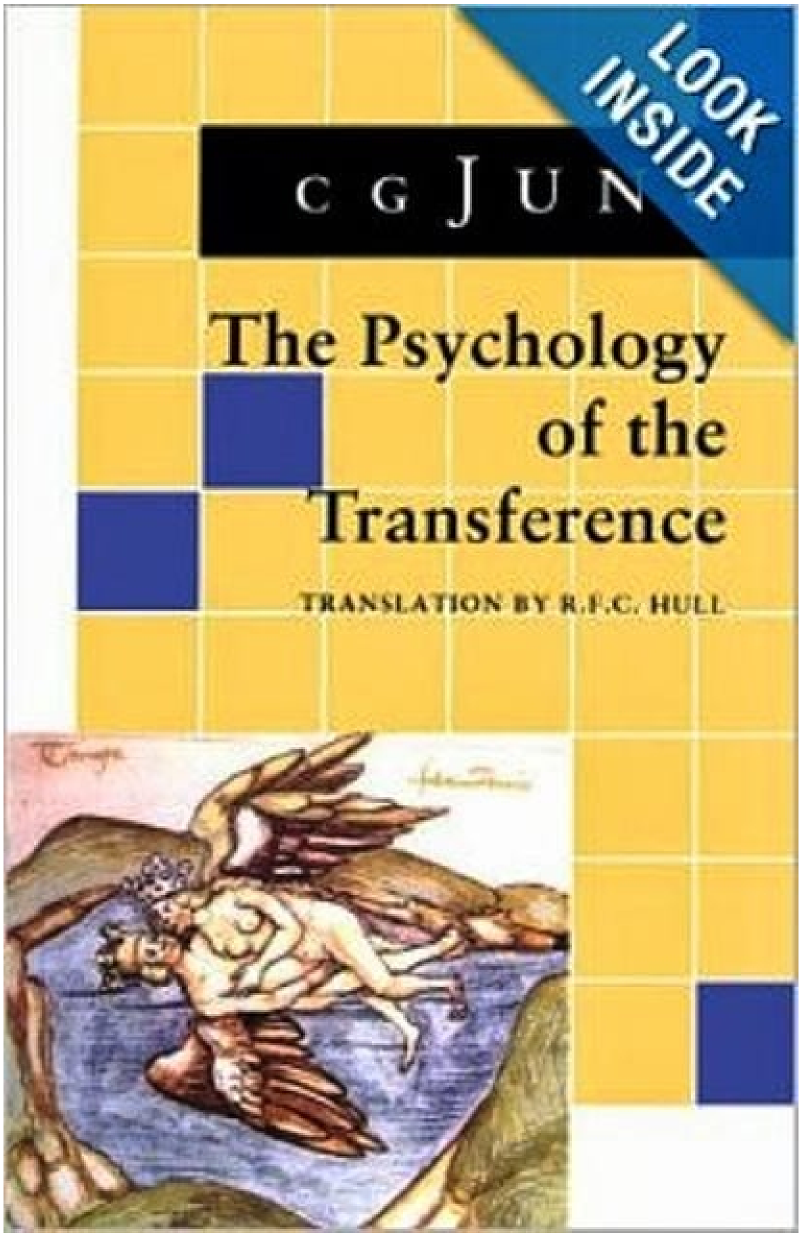
http://press.princeton.edu/catalogs/series/bspey.html

yijingnotes.files.wordpress.com/2013/11/man _and _time _c.pdf

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/7b426-time.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Transference" - Lexicon (2019-03-08 06:50)

[1]



LOOK INSIDE
C G JUNG
The Psychology of the Transference
TRANSLATION BY R.F.C. HULL

[Carl Jung on Transference]

Transference:

A particular case of projection, used to describe the unconscious, emotional bond that arises in the analysand toward the analyst. (See also countertransference.)

Unconscious contents are invariably projected at first upon concrete persons and situations. Many projections can ultimately be integrated back into the individual once he has recognized their subjective origin; others resist integration, and although they may be detached from their original objects, they thereupon transfer themselves to the doctor. Among these contents the relation to the parent of opposite sex plays an important part, i.e., the relation of son to mother, daughter to father, and also that of brother to sister.["The Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par. 357.]

Once the projections are recognized as such, the particular form of rapport known as the transference is at an end, and the problem of individual relationship begins.["The Therapeutic Value of Abreaction," ibid., par. 287.]

A transference may be either positive or negative; the former is marked by feelings of affection and respect, the latter by hostility and resistance.

For one type of person (called the infantile-rebel) a positive transference is, to begin with, an important achievement with a healing significance; for the other (the infantile-obedient) it is a dangerous backsliding, a convenient way of evading life's duties. For the first a negative transference denotes increased insubordination, hence a backsliding and an evasion of life's duties, for the second it is a step forward with a healing significance.["Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis," CW 4, par. 659.]

Jung did not regard the transference merely as a projection of infantile-erotic fantasies. Though these may be present at the beginning of analysis, they can be dissolved through the reductive method. Then the purpose of the transference becomes the main issue and guide.

An exclusively sexual interpretation of dreams and fantasies is a shocking violation of the patient's psychological material: infantile-sexual fantasy is by no means the whole story, since the material also contains a creative element, the purpose of which is to shape a way out of the neurosis.["The Therapeutic Value of Abreaction," CW 16, par. 277.]

Although Jung made contradictory statements about the therapeutic importance of the transference–for instance:

The transference phenomenon is an inevitable feature of every thorough analysis, for it is imperative that the doctor should get into the closest possible touch with the patient's line of psychological development.[Ibid., par. 283.]

We do not work with the "transference to the analyst," but against it and in spite of it.["Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis," CW 4, par. 601.]

A transference is always a hindrance; it is never an advantage.["The Tavistock Lectures," CW 18, par. 349.]

Medical treatment of the transference gives the patient a priceless opportunity to withdraw his projections, to make good his losses, and to integrate his personality.["The Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par. 420.]

–he did not doubt its significance when it was present.

The suitably trained analyst mediates the transcendent function for the patient, i.e., helps him to bring conscious and unconscious together and so arrive at a new attitude. . . . The patient clings by means of the transference to the person who seems to promise him a renewal of attitude; through it he seeks this change, which is vital to him, even though he may not be conscious of doing so. For the patient, therefore, the analyst has the character of an indispensable figure absolutely necessary for life.["The Transcendent Function," CW 8, par. 146.]

Whatever is unconscious in the analysand and needed for healthy functioning is projected onto the analyst. This includes archetypal images of wholeness, with the result that the analyst takes on the stature of a mana-personality. The analysand's task is then to understand such images on the subjective level, a primary aim being to constellate the patient's own inner analyst.

Empathy is an important purposive element in the transference. By means of empathy the analysand attempts to emulate the presumably healthier attitude of the analyst, and thereby to attain a better level of adaptation.

The patient is bound to the analyst by ties of affection or resistance and cannot help following and imitating his psychic attitude. By this means he feels his way along (empathy). And with the best will in the world and for all his technical skill the analyst cannot prevent it, for empathy works surely and instinctively in spite of conscious judgment, be it never so strong.["Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis," CW 4, par. 661.]

Jung believed that analyzing the transference was extremely important in order to return projected contents necessary for the individuation of the analysand. But he pointed out that even after projections have been withdrawn there remains a strong connection between the two parties. This is because of an instinctive factor that has few outlets in modern society: kinship libido.

Everyone is now a stranger among strangers. Kinship libido-which could still engender a satisfying feeling of belonging together, as for instance in the early Christian communities-has long been deprived of its object. But, being an instinct, it is not to be satisfied by any mere substitute such as a creed, party, nation, or state. It wants the human connection. That is the core of the whole transference phenomenon, and it is impossible to argue it away, because relationship to the self is at once relationship to our fellow man, and no one can be related to the latter until he is related to himself.["The Psychology of the Transference," CW 16, par. 445.]

At bottom, the transference is by no means a personal fantasy. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

People have a transference to their analyst because they suppose that he is in possession of the treasure.

It is like rubbing up against the shrine containing the bones of the saint; they get the grace, as if he were the savings bank of divine treasures.

It is inevitable at a certain stage.

When the idea of the crystal becomes formed in the unconscious it is projected, and then they suspect somebody of possessing that particular treasure which is really in themselves. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 319

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/d611e-transference.jpg`

Carl Jung on Drugs and America (2019-03-08 09:14)

[1]

Dr. Evans: Have you actually seen any patients or had any contact with individuals who have been taking these particular drugs, these tranquilizers?

Dr. Jung: I can't say. You see, with us there are very few. In America there are all the little powders and the tablets.

Happily enough, we are not yet so far.

You see, American life is in a subtle way so one-sided and so uprooted that you must have something with which to compensate the real nature of man.

You have to pacify your unconscious all along the line because it is in absolute uproar; so at the slightest provocation you have a big moral rebellion in America.

Look at the rebellion of modern youth in America, the sexual rebellion, and all that.

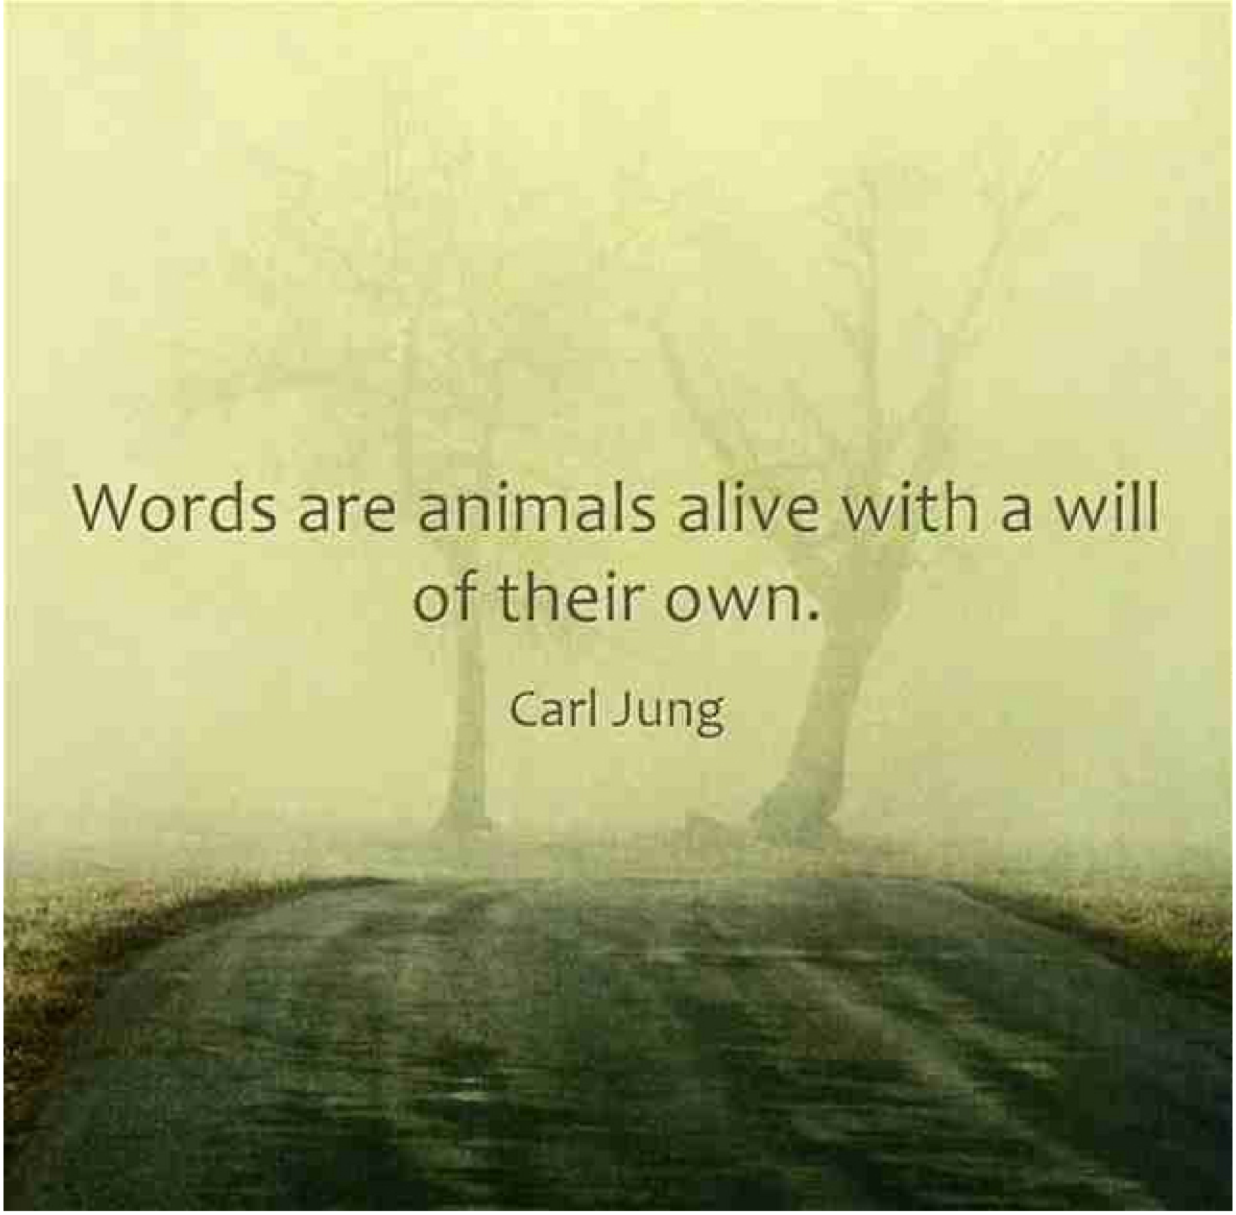
These rebellions occur because the real, natural man is just in open rebellion against the utterly inhuman form of American life.

Americans are absolutely divorced from nature in a way, and that accounts for that drug abuse. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 35.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/574ef-2.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 17 (2019-03-08 09:23)

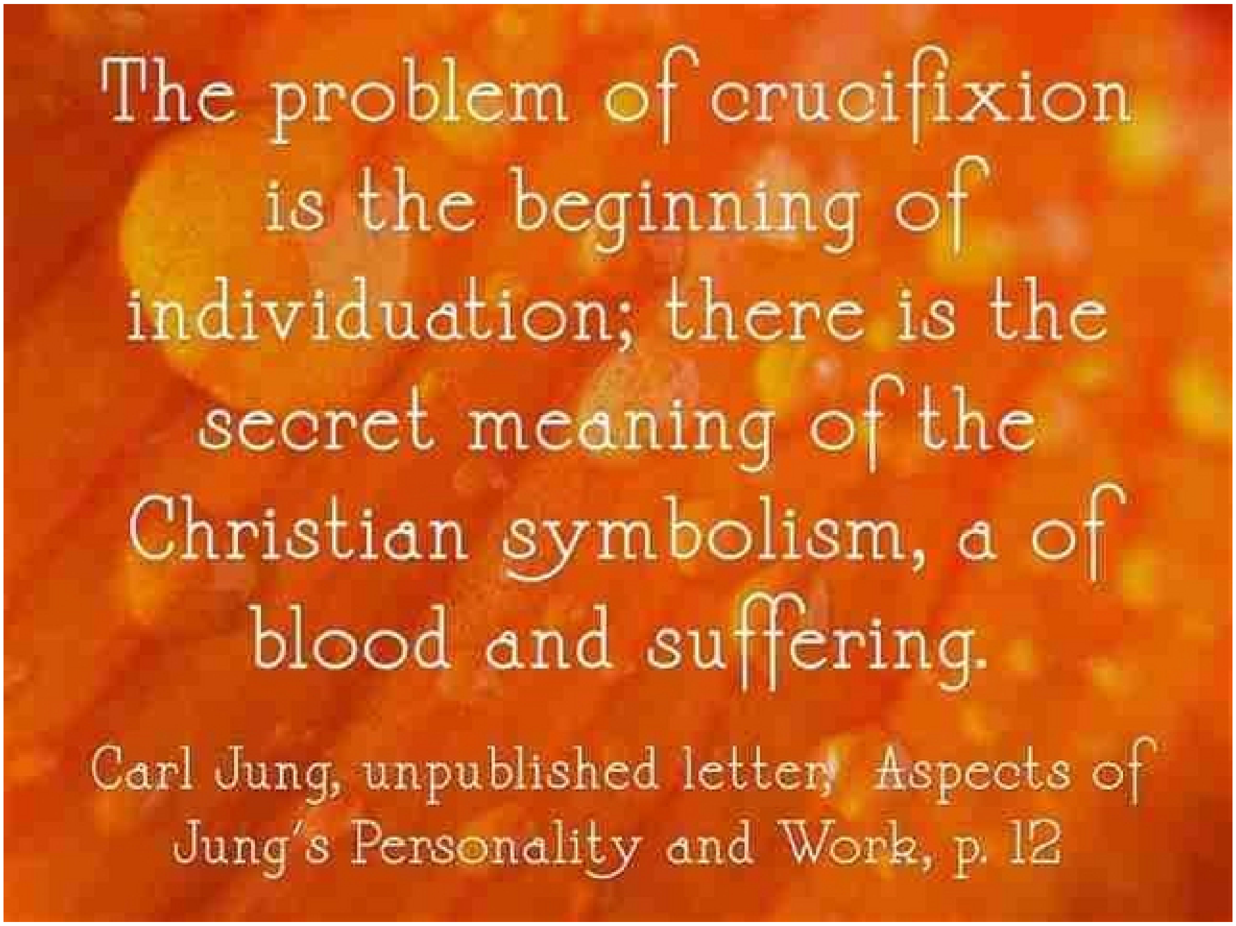
[1]



Words are animals alive with a will of their own.
Carl Jung

Words are animals alive with a will of their own. Carl Jung. [A Citation is needed to confirm this]

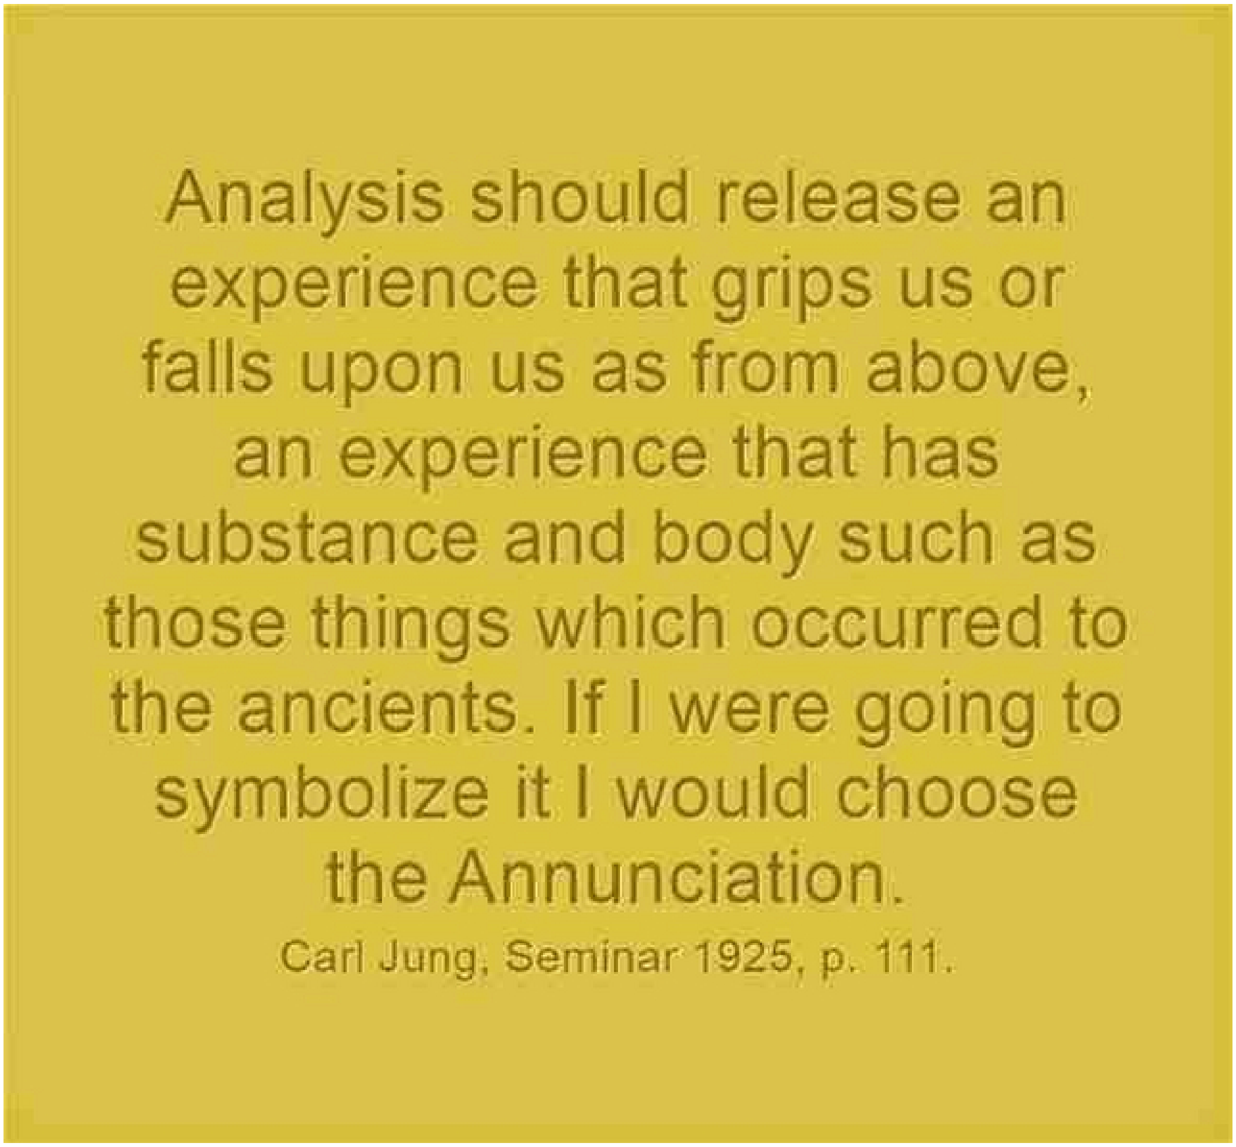
[2]



The problem of crucifixion is the beginning of individuation; there is the secret meaning of the Christian symbolism, a of blood and suffering.

Carl Jung, unpublished letter; Aspects of Jung's Personality and Work, p. 12

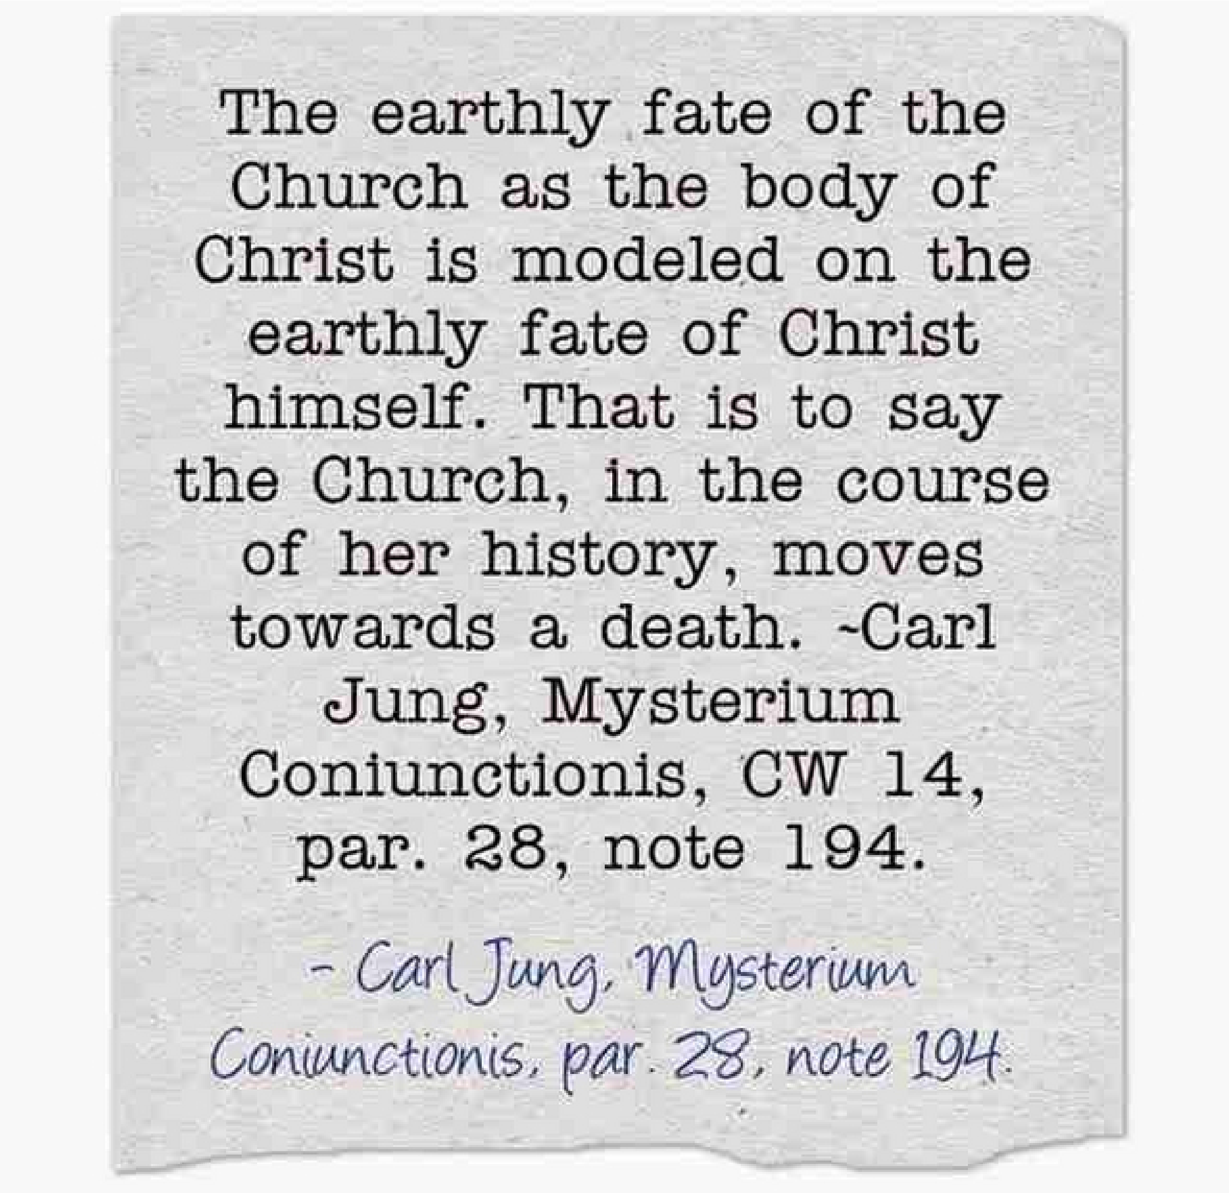
The problem of crucifixion is the beginning of individuation; there is the secret meaning of the Christian symbolism, of blood and suffering.   Carl Jung, unpublished letter, quoted in Gerhard Adler, Aspects of Jung's Personality and Work, p. 12.



Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body such as those things which occurred to the ancients. If I were going to symbolize it I would choose the Annunciation.

Carl Jung, Seminar 1925, p. 111.

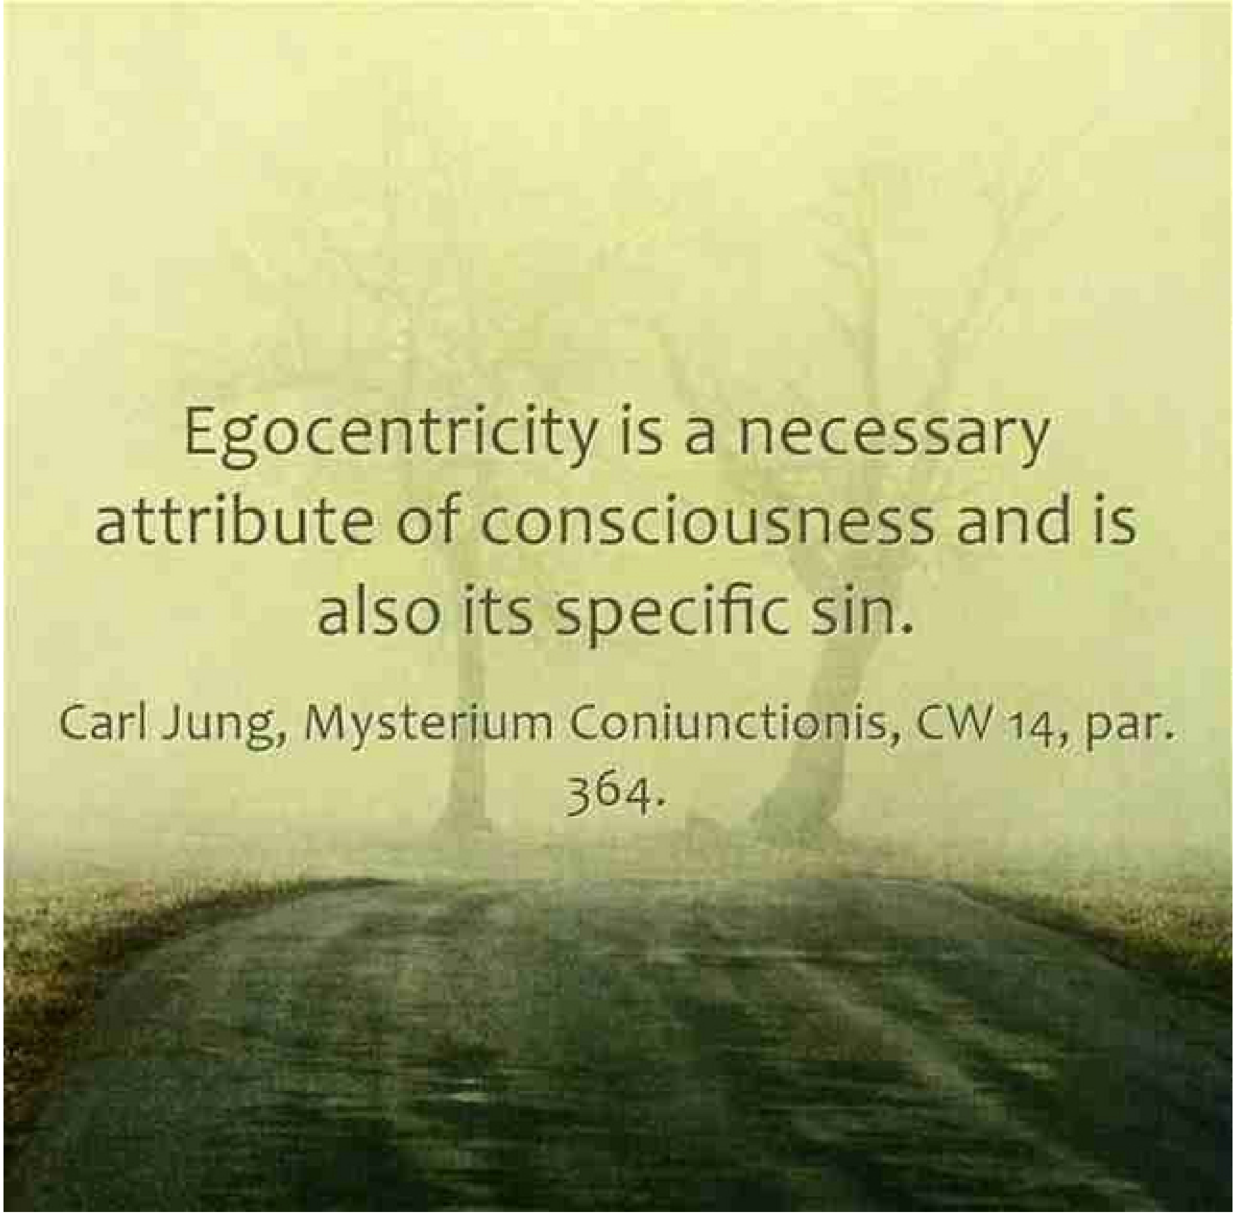
Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body such as those things which occurred to the ancients. If I were going to symbolize it I would choose the Annunciation. Carl Jung, Seminar 1925, p. 111.



The earthly fate of the Church as the body of Christ is modeled on the earthly fate of Christ himself. That is to say the Church, in the course of her history, moves towards a death. -Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, CW 14, par. 28, note 194.

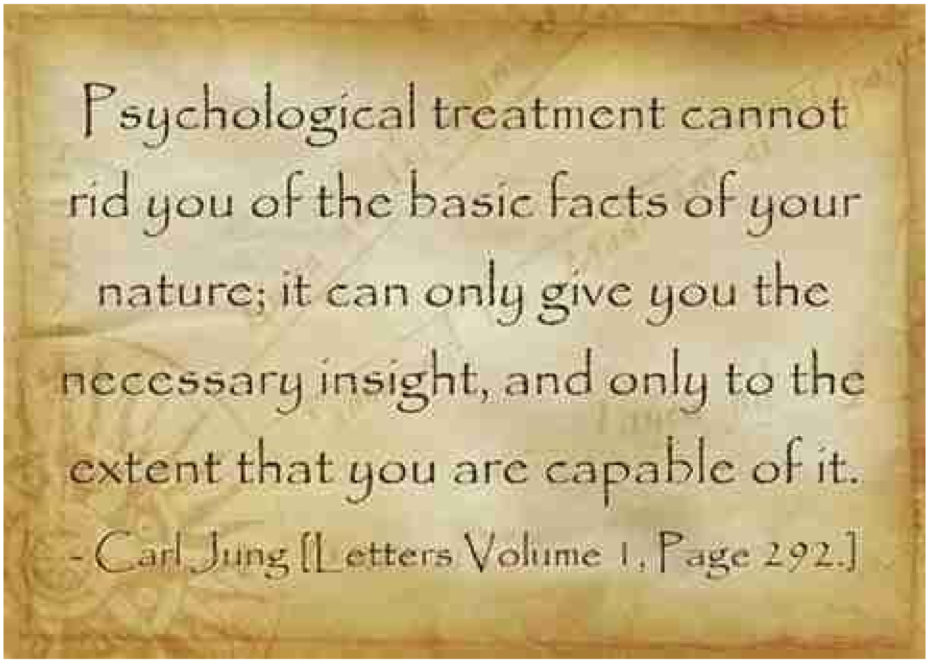
- Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, par. 28, note 194.

The earthly fate of the Church as the body of Christ is modelled on the earthly fate of Christ himself. That is to say the Church, in the course of her history, moves towards a death. Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, CW 14, par. 28, note 194.



Egocentricity is a necessary attribute of consciousness and is also its specific sin.
Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, CW 14, par. 364.

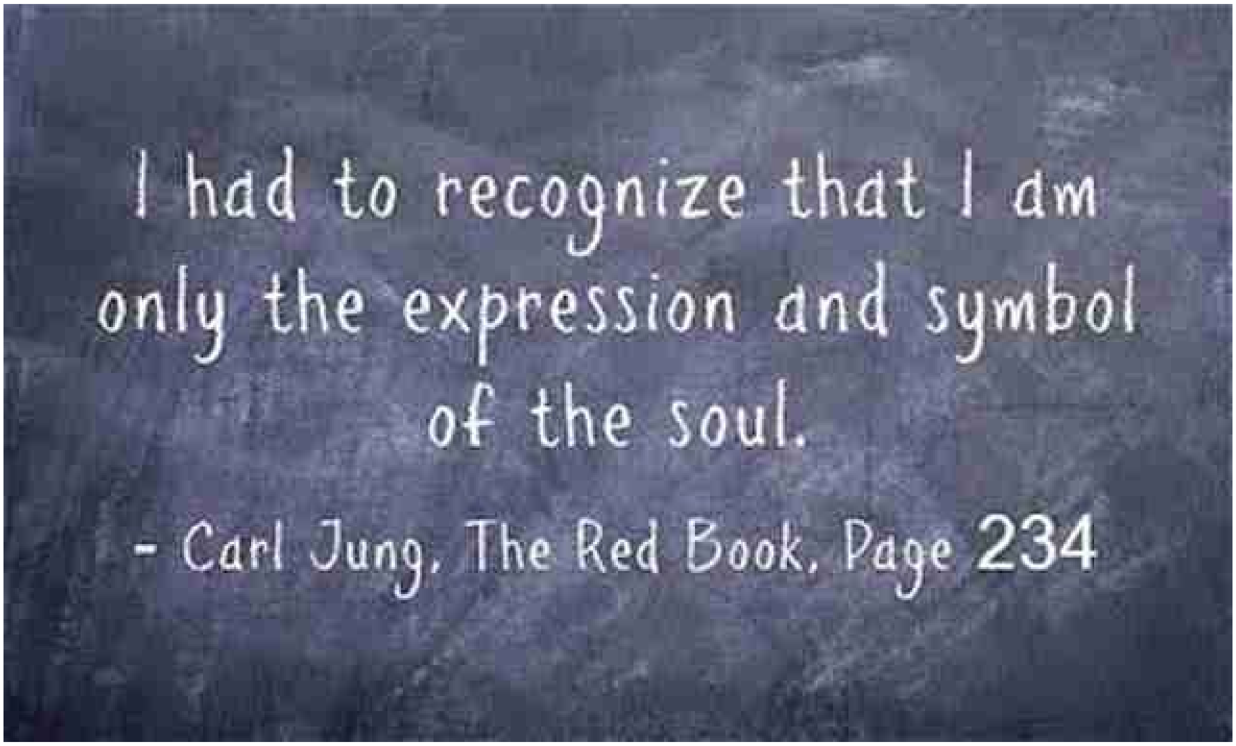
Egocentricity is a necessary attribute of consciousness and is also its specific sin." Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, CW 14, par. 364.



Psychological treatment cannot rid you of the basic facts of your nature; it can only give you the necessary insight, and only to the extent that you are capable of it.
- Carl Jung [Letters Volume 1, Page 292.]

Psychological treatment cannot rid you of the basic facts of your nature; it can only give you the necessary insight, and only to the extent that you are capable of it. Carl Jung [Letters Volume 1, Page 292.]

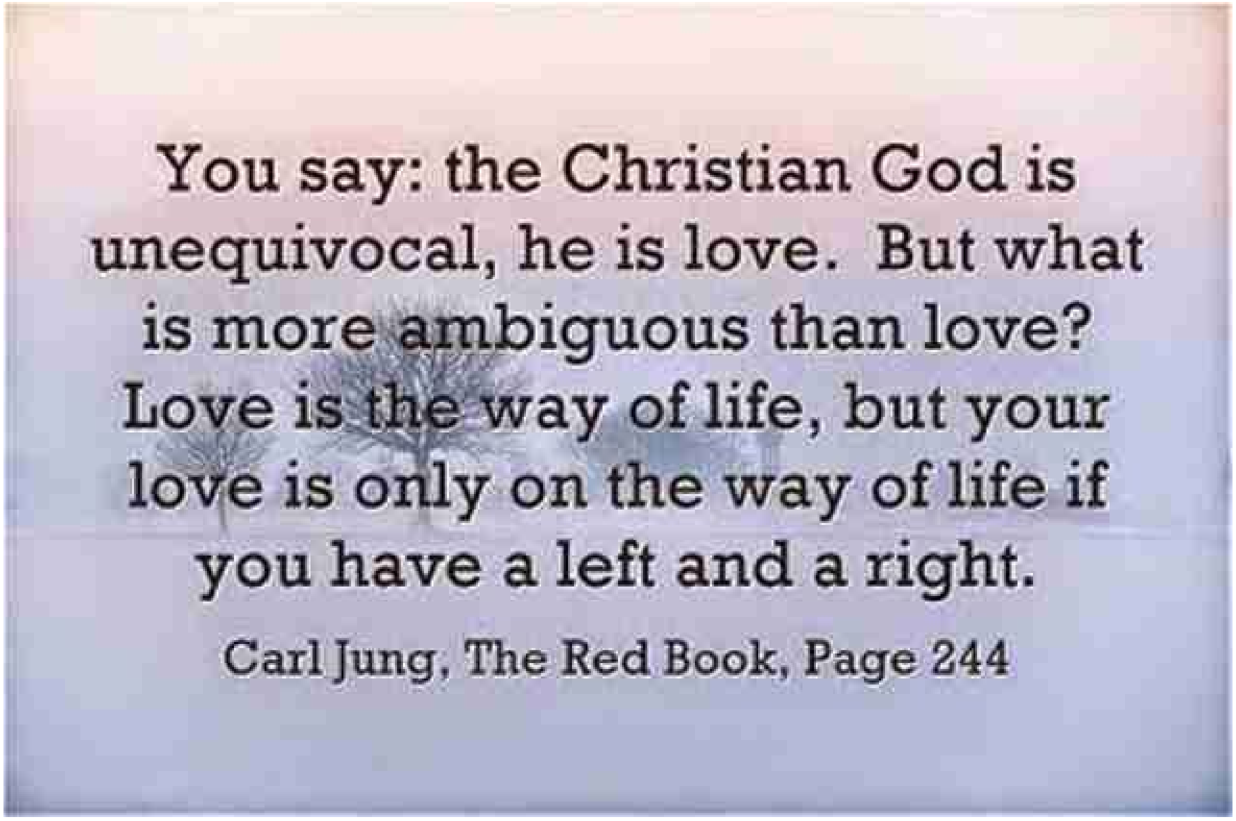
[7]



I had to recognize that I am only the expression and symbol of the soul.
- Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 234

I had to recognize that I am only the expression and symbol of the soul. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 234.

[8]

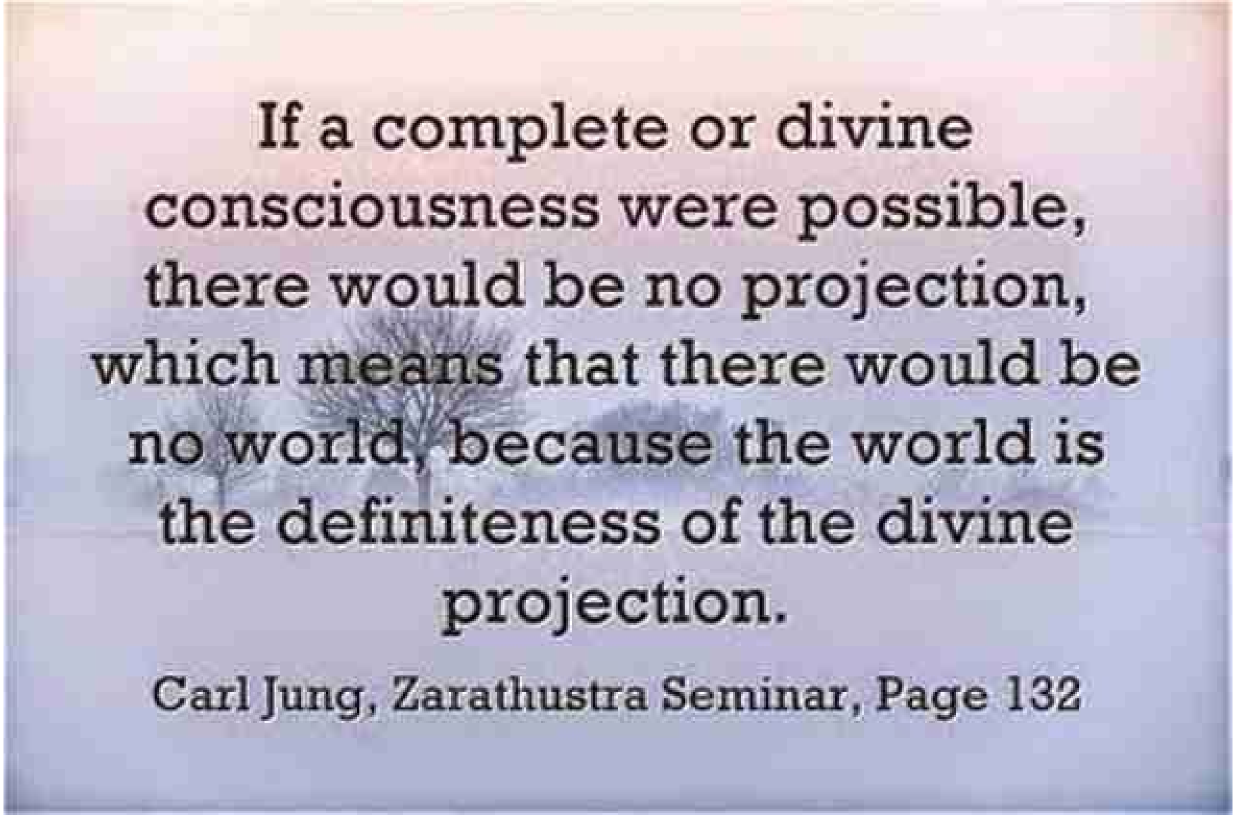


You say: the Christian God is unequivocal, he is love. But what is more ambiguous than love? Love is the way of life, but your love is only on the way of life if you have a left and a right.

Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 244

You say: the Christian God is unequivocal, he is love. But what is more ambiguous than love? Love is the way of life, but your love is only on the way of life if you have a left and a right. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 244.

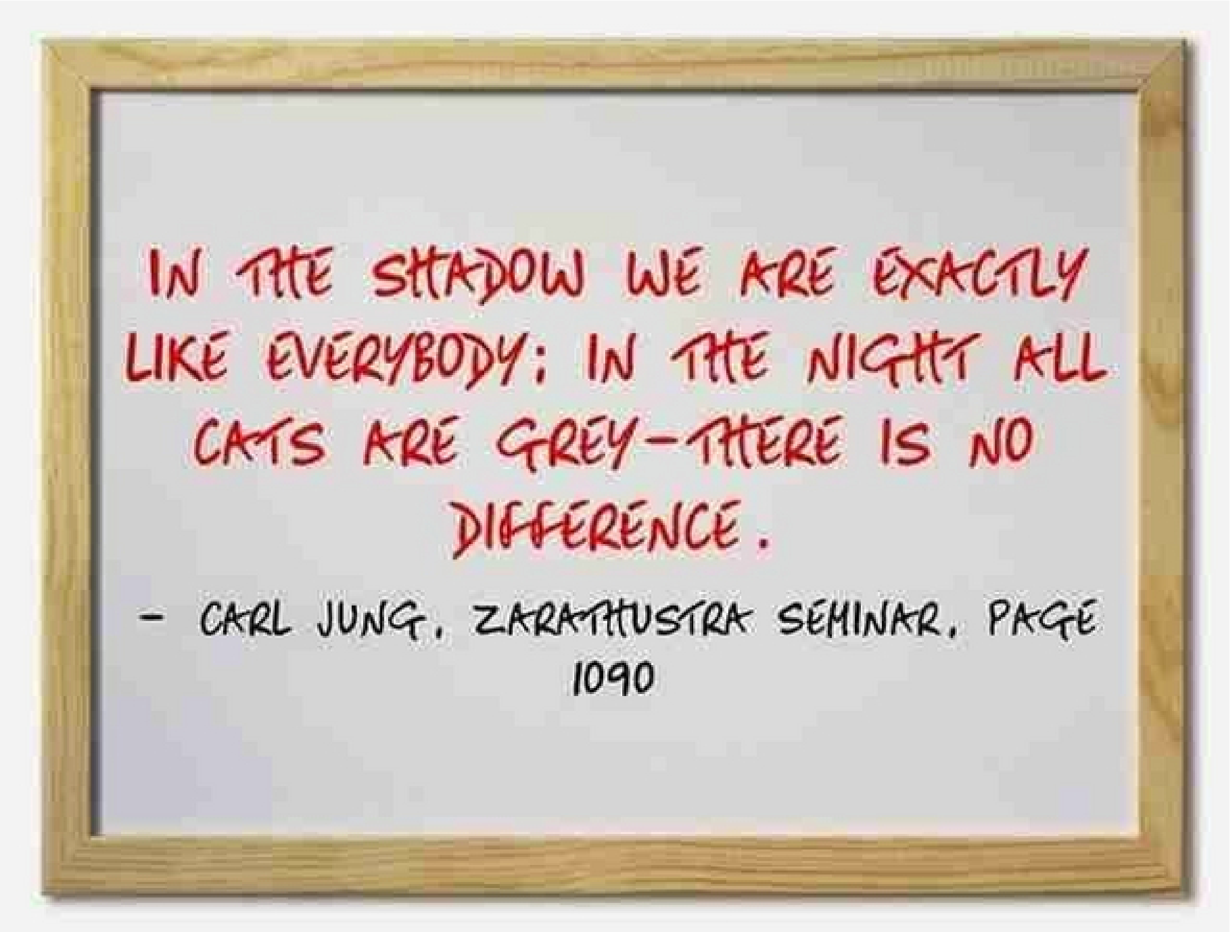
[9]



If a complete or divine consciousness were possible, there would be no projection, which means that there would be no world, because the world is the definiteness of the divine projection.

Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 132

If a complete or divine consciousness were possible, there would be no projection, which means that there would be no world, because the world is the definiteness of the divine projection. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 132.



IN THE SHADOW WE ARE EXACTLY LIKE EVERYBODY; IN THE NIGHT ALL CATS ARE GREY—THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE.

— CARL JUNG, ZARATHUSTRA SEMINAR, PAGE 1090

In the shadow we are exactly like everybody; in the night all cats are grey-there is no difference. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 1090

Life that doesn't overcome itself is really meaningless: it is not life; only inasmuch as life surpasses itself does it make sense.

Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 1105

Life that doesn’t overcome itself is really meaningless: it is not life; only inasmuch as life surpasses itself does it make sense. . Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 1105.

[12]

Many people mistakenly overestimate the role of will power and think that nothing can happen to their minds that they do not decide and intend.

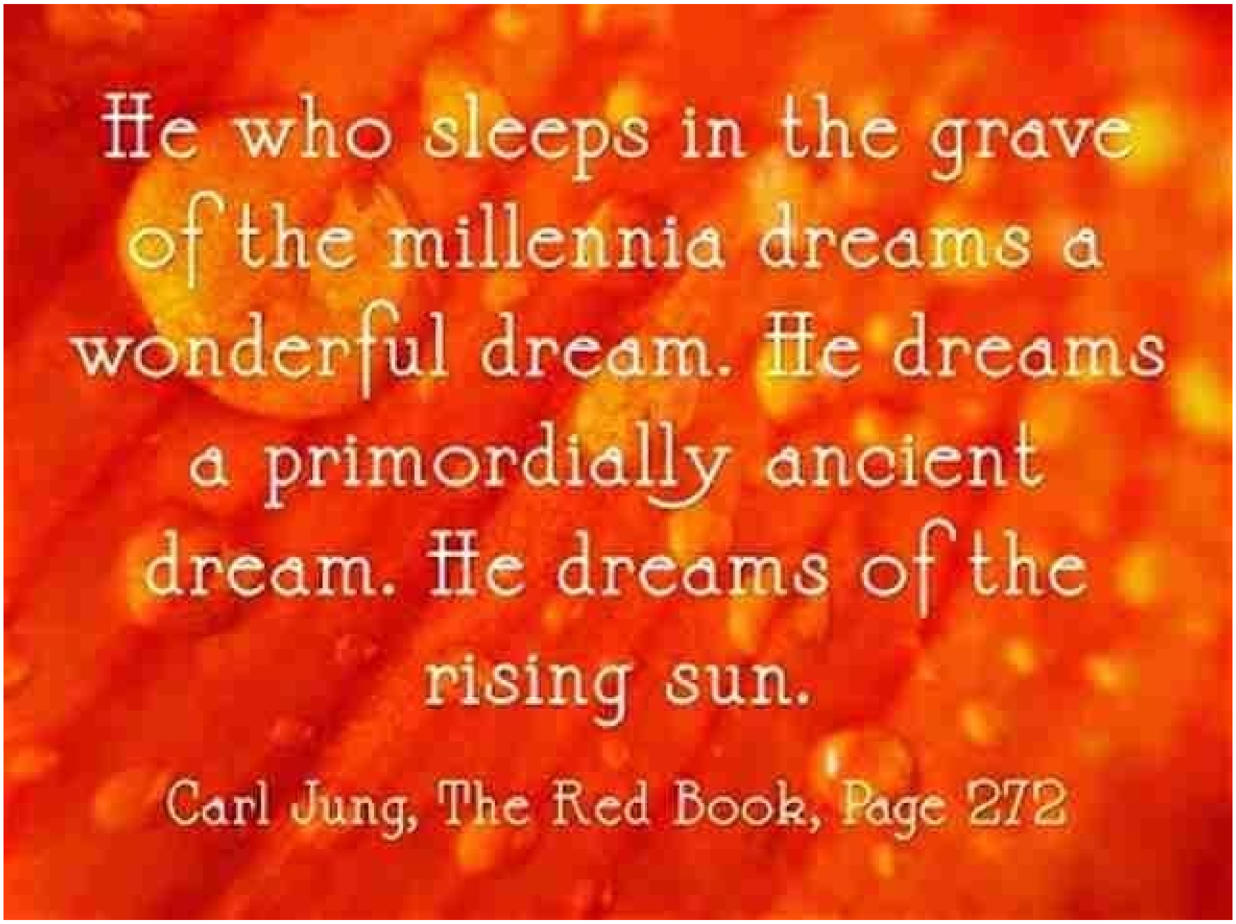
~Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; P. 22

Many people mistakenly overestimate the role of will power and think that nothing can happen to their minds that they do not decide and intend. Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; P. 22

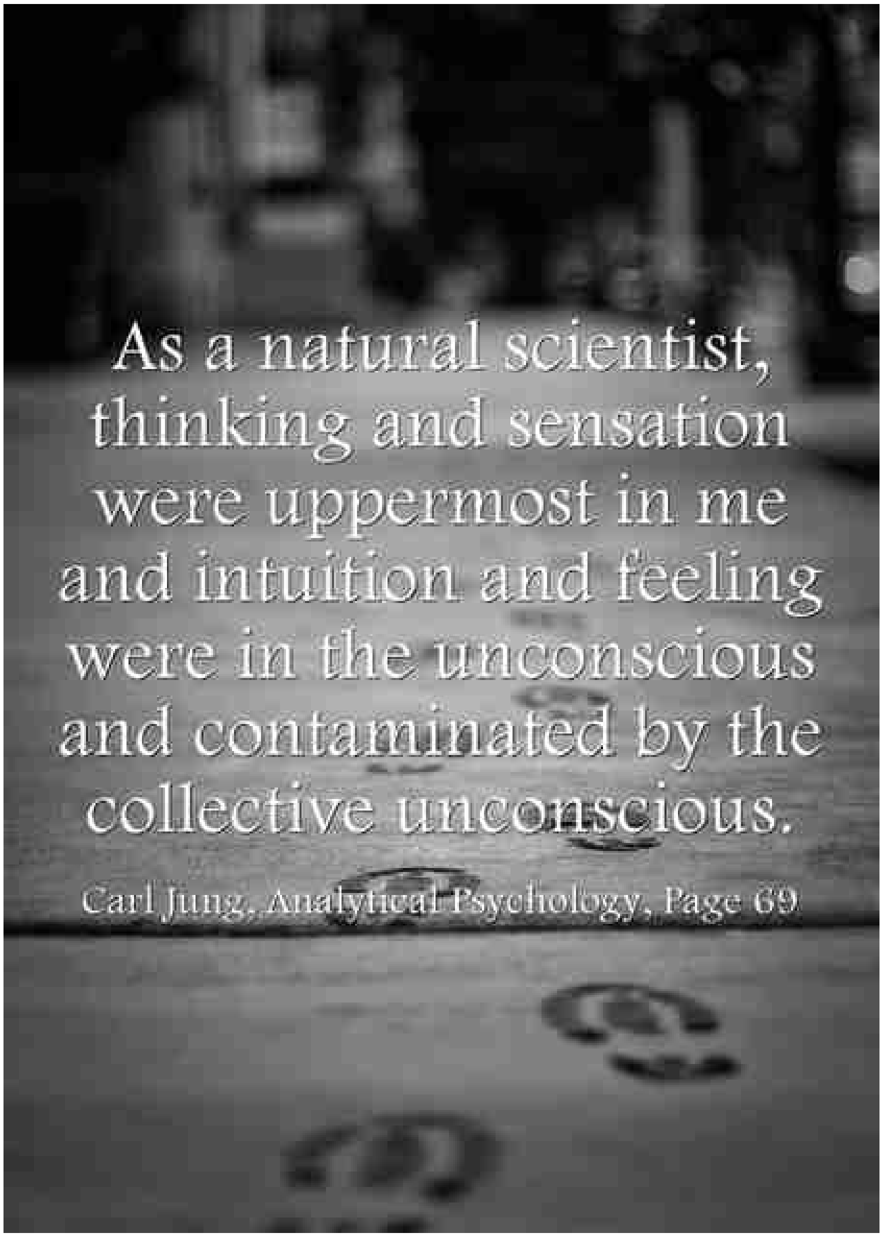
[13]



He who sleeps in the grave of the millennia dreams a wonderful dream. He dreams a primordially ancient dream. He dreams of the rising sun.

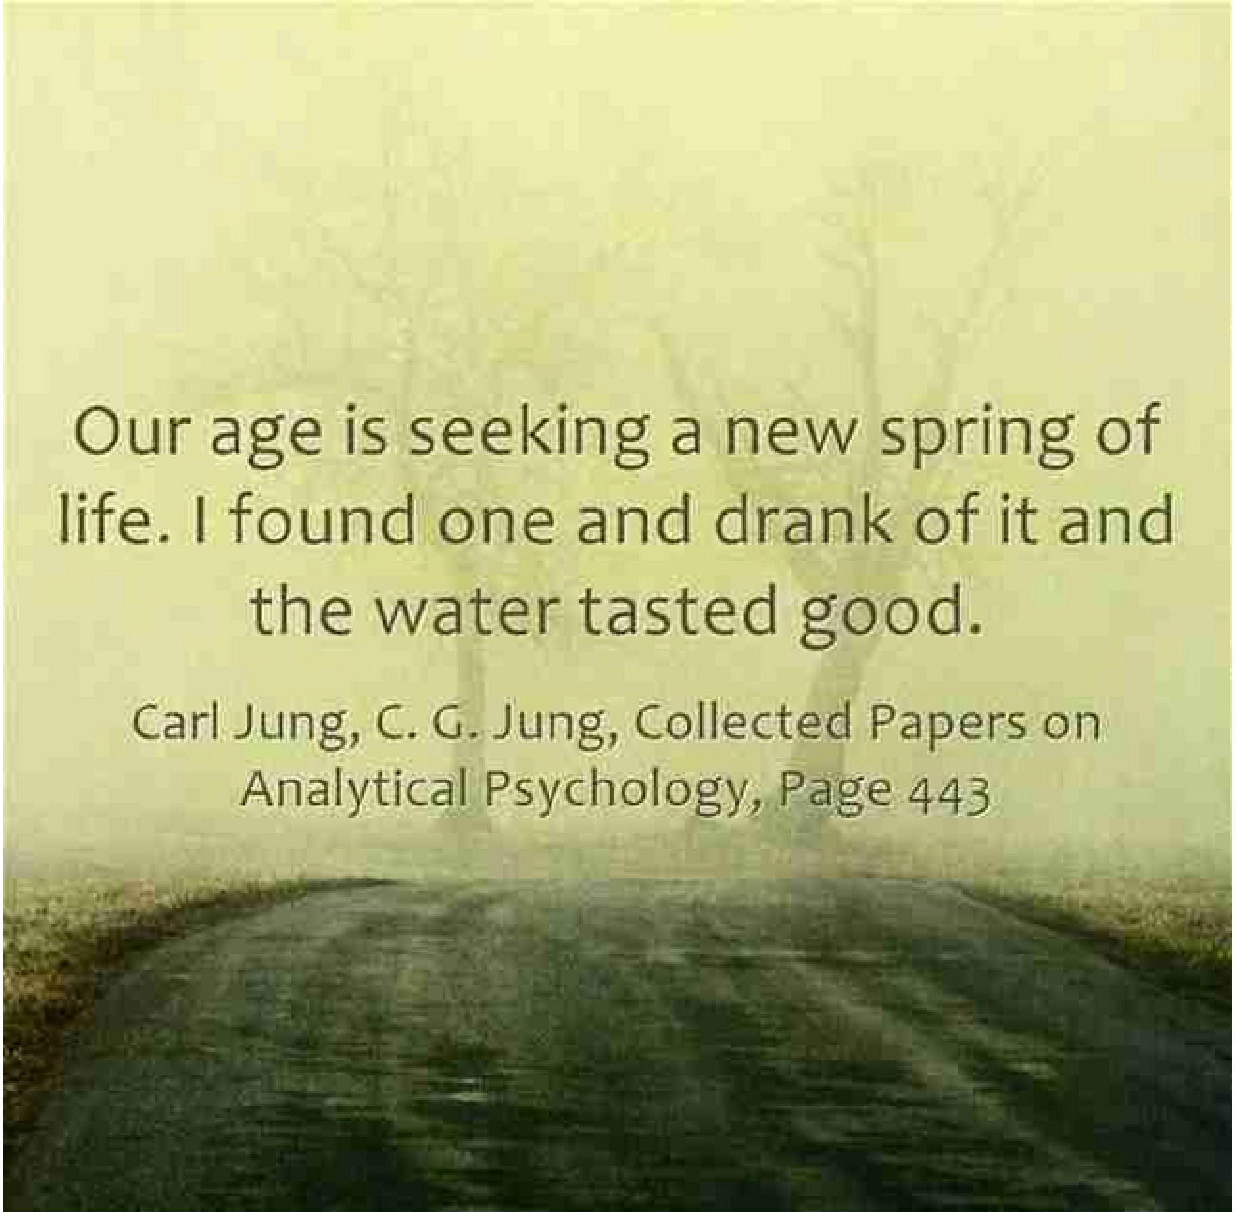
Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 272

He who sleeps in the grave of the millennia dreams a wonderful dream. He dreams a primordially ancient dream. He dreams of the rising sun. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 272



As a natural scientist, thinking and sensation were uppermost in me and intuition and feeling were in the unconscious and contaminated by the collective unconscious.
Carl Jung, Analytical Psychology, Page 69

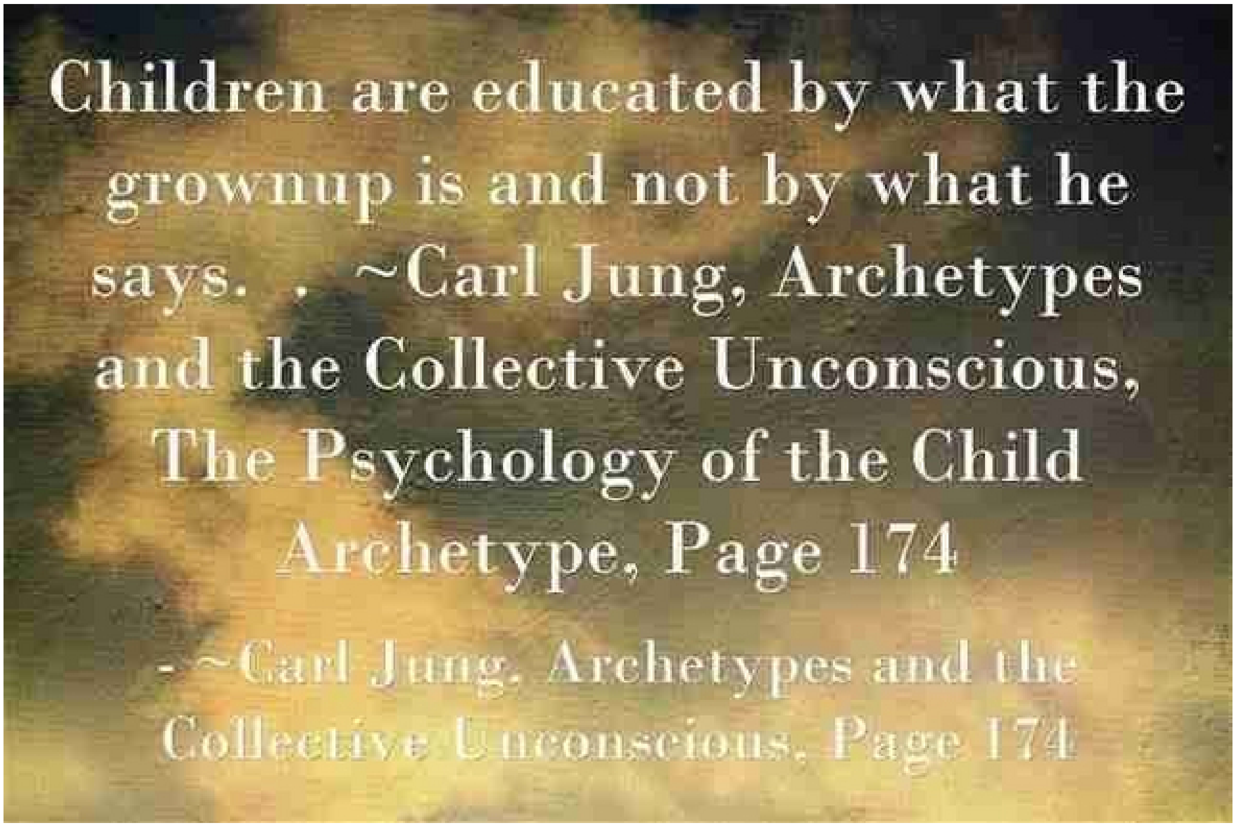
As a natural scientist, thinking and sensation were uppermost in me and intuition and feeling were in the unconscious and contaminated by the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75



Our age is seeking a new spring of life. I found one and drank of it and the water tasted good.

Carl Jung, C. G. Jung, Collected Papers on Analytical Psychology, Page 443

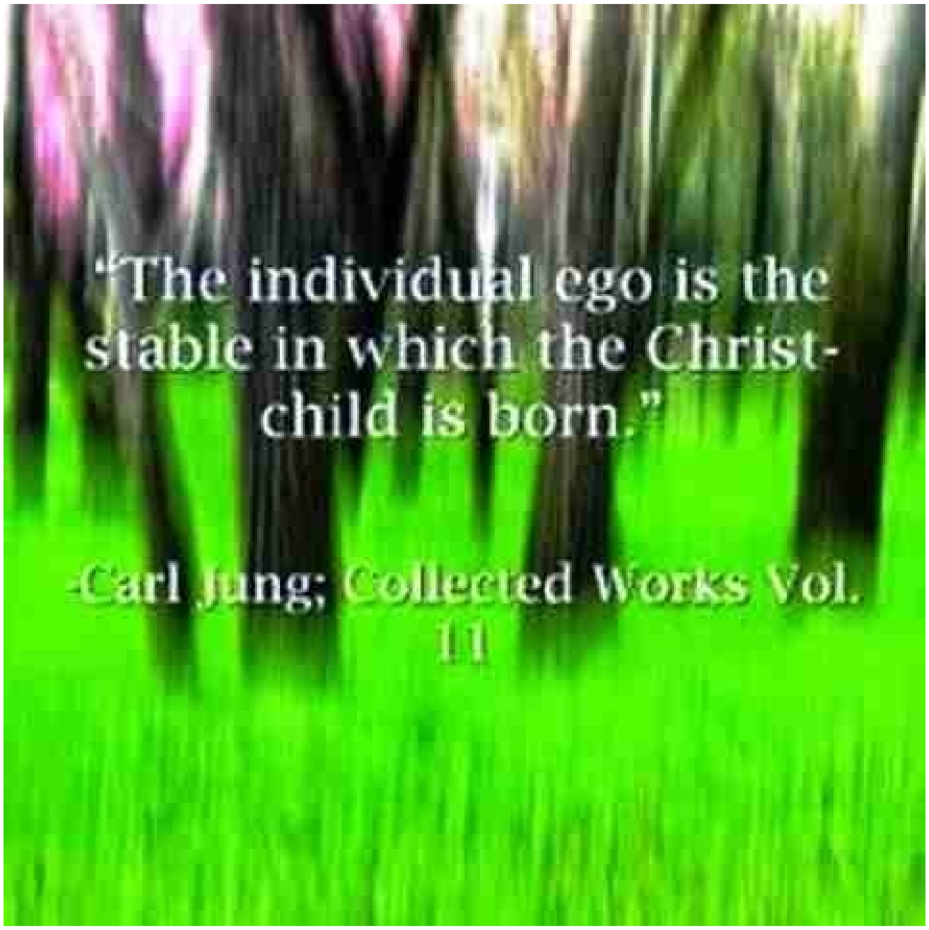
Our age is seeking a new spring of life. I found one and drank of it and the water tasted good. Carl Jung, C. G. Jung, Collected Papers on Analytical Psychology, Page 443.



Children are educated by what the grownup is and not by what he says. . ~Carl Jung, Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious, The Psychology of the Child Archetype, Page 174

- ~Carl Jung, Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious, Page 174

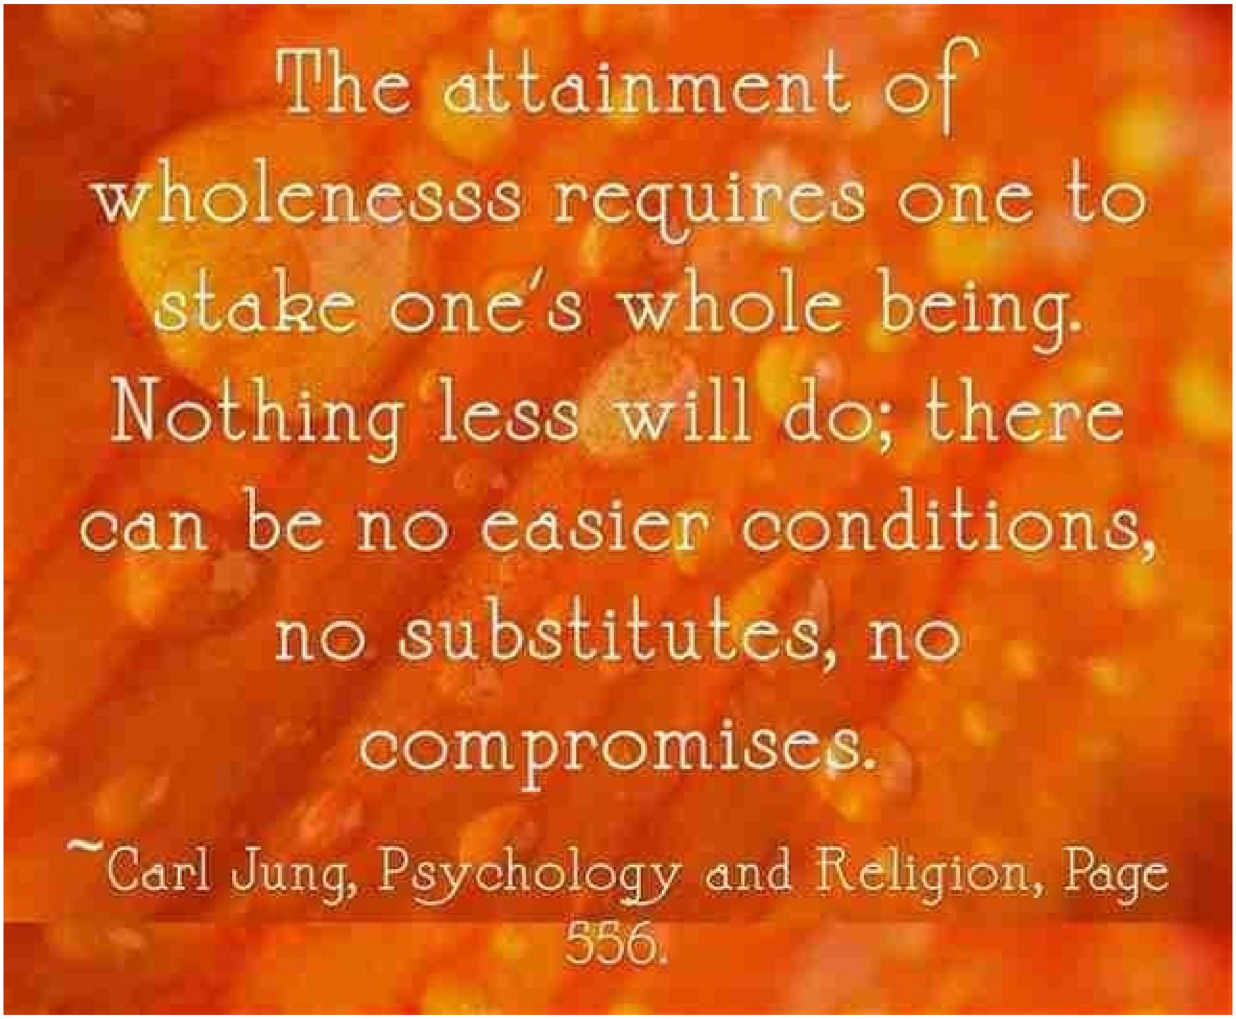
Children are educated by what the grownup is and not by what he says. Carl Jung, Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious, The Psychology of the Child Archetype, Page 174.



“The individual ego is the stable in which the Christ-child is born.”

-Carl Jung; Collected Works Vol. 11

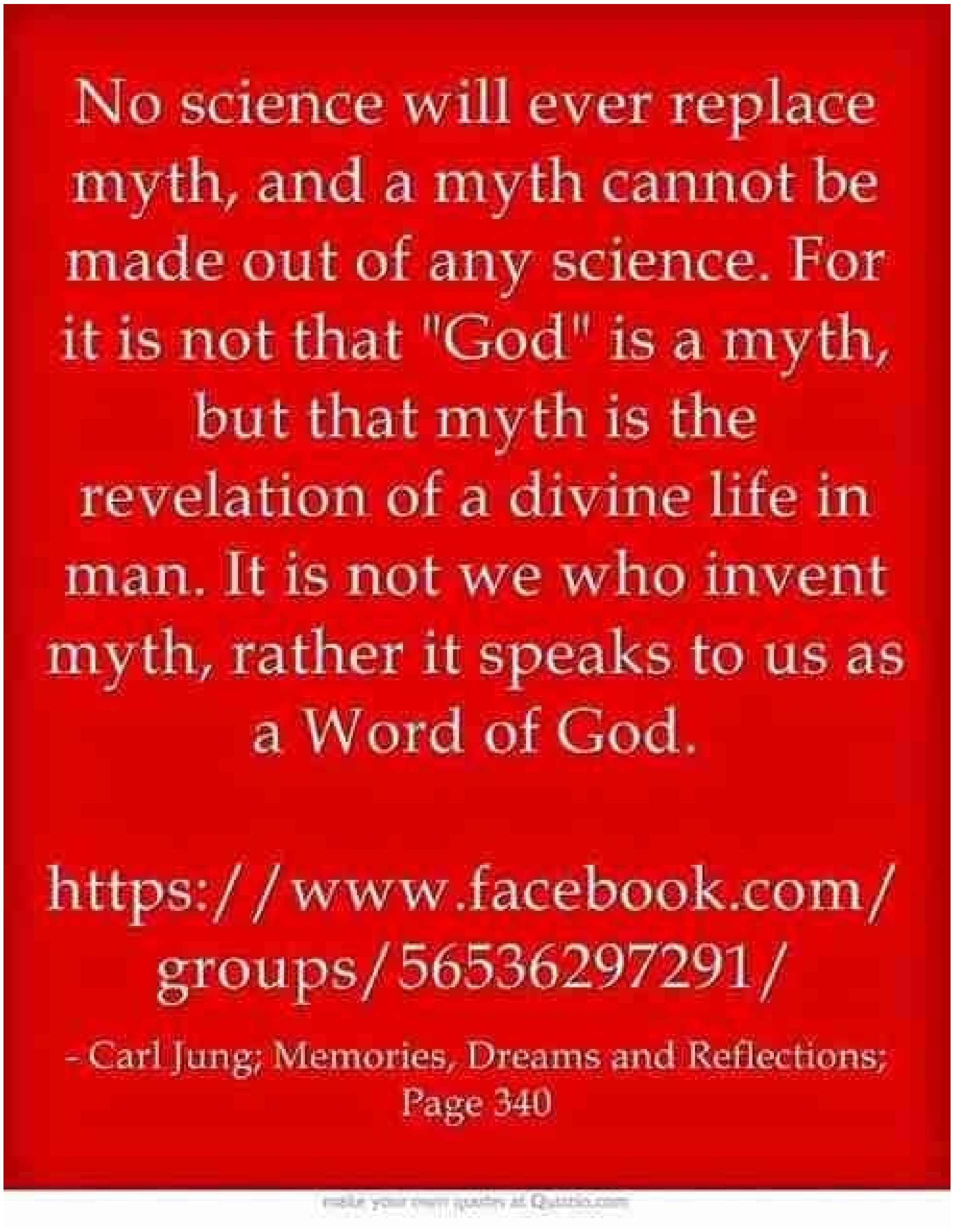
The individual ego is the stable in which the Christ-child is born. Carl Jung; CW 11, Para 207



The attainment of wholenesss requires one to stake one's whole being. Nothing less will do; there can be no easier conditions, no substitutes, no compromises.

~Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Page 556.

The attainment of wholenesss requires one to stake one's whole being. Nothing less will do; there can be no easier conditions, no substitutes, no compromises. Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Page 556.



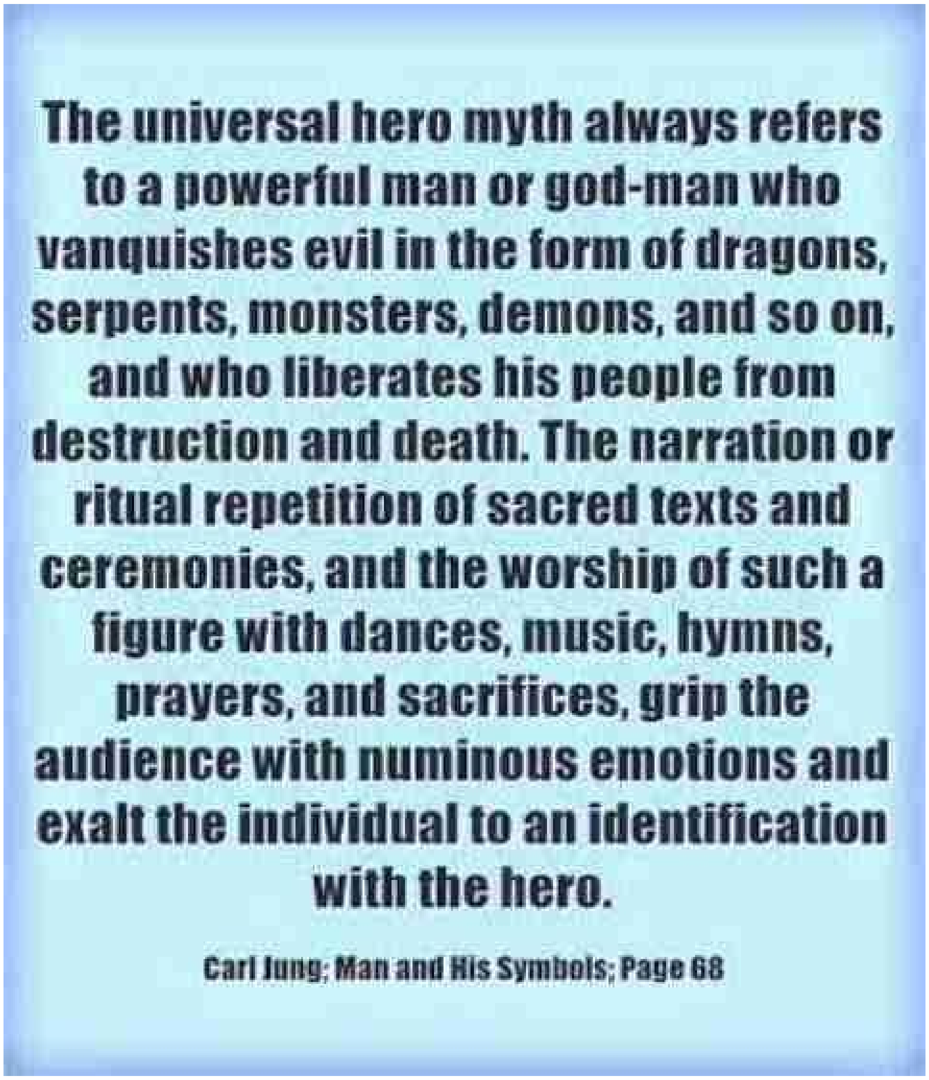
No science will ever replace myth, and a myth cannot be made out of any science. For it is not that "God" is a myth, but that myth is the revelation of a divine life in man. It is not we who invent myth, rather it speaks to us as a Word of God.

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

- Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 340

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

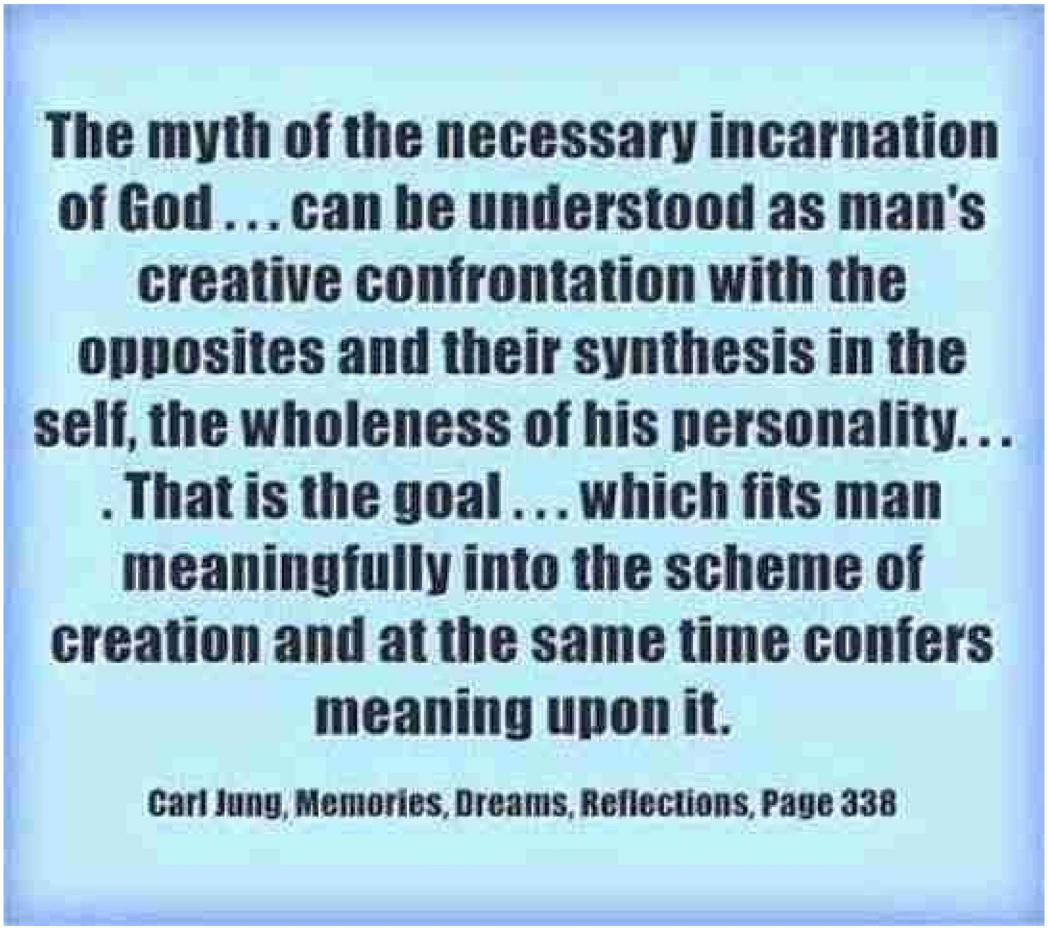
No science will ever replace myth, and a myth cannot be made out of any science. For it is not that "God" is a myth, but that myth is the revelation of a divine life in man. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 340.



The universal hero myth always refers to a powerful man or god-man who vanquishes evil in the form of dragons, serpents, monsters, demons, and so on, and who liberates his people from destruction and death. The narration or ritual repetition of sacred texts and ceremonies, and the worship of such a figure with dances, music, hymns, prayers, and sacrifices, grip the audience with numinous emotions and exalt the individual to an identification with the hero.

Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 68

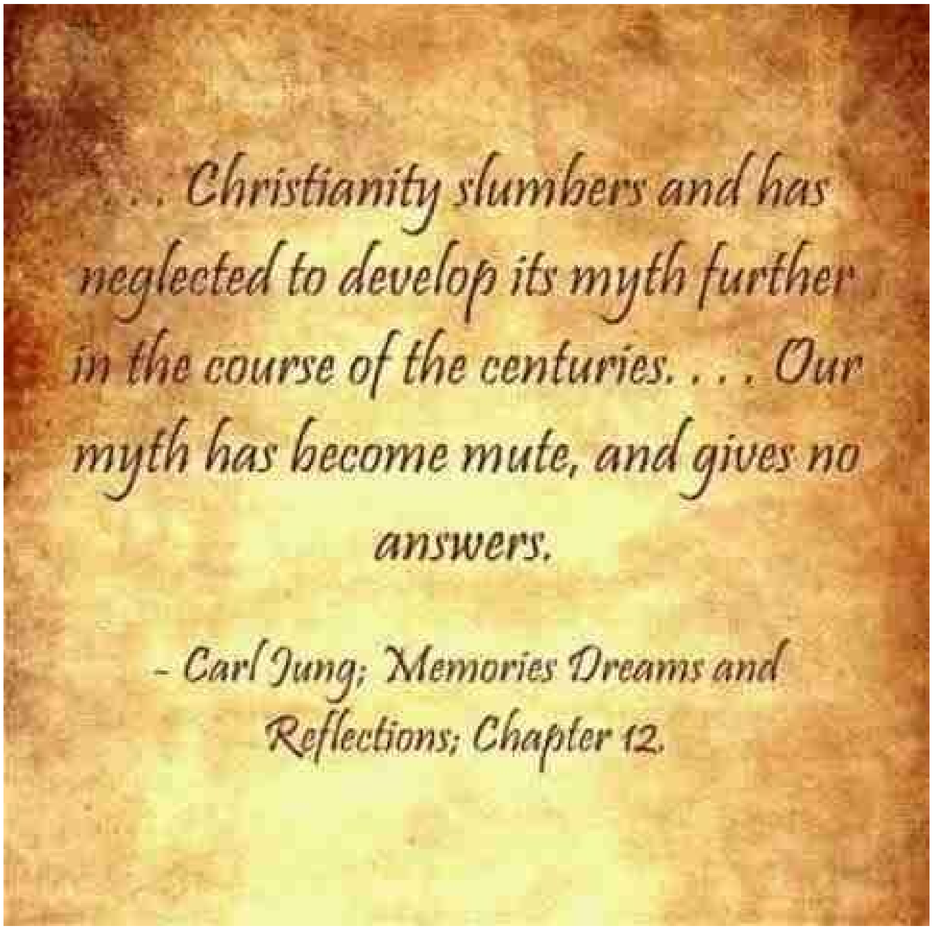
The universal hero myth always refers to a powerful man or god-man who vanquishes evil in the form of dragons, serpents, monsters, demons, and so on, and who liberates his people from destruction and death. The narration or ritual repetition of sacred texts and ceremonies, and the worship of such a figure with dances, music, hymns, prayers, and sacrifices, grip the audience with numinous emotions and exalt the individual to an identification with the hero. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; Page 68.



The myth of the necessary incarnation of God . . . can be understood as man's creative confrontation with the opposites and their synthesis in the self, the wholeness of his personality. . . . That is the goal . . . which fits man meaningfully into the scheme of creation and at the same time confers meaning upon it.

Carl Jung, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, Page 338

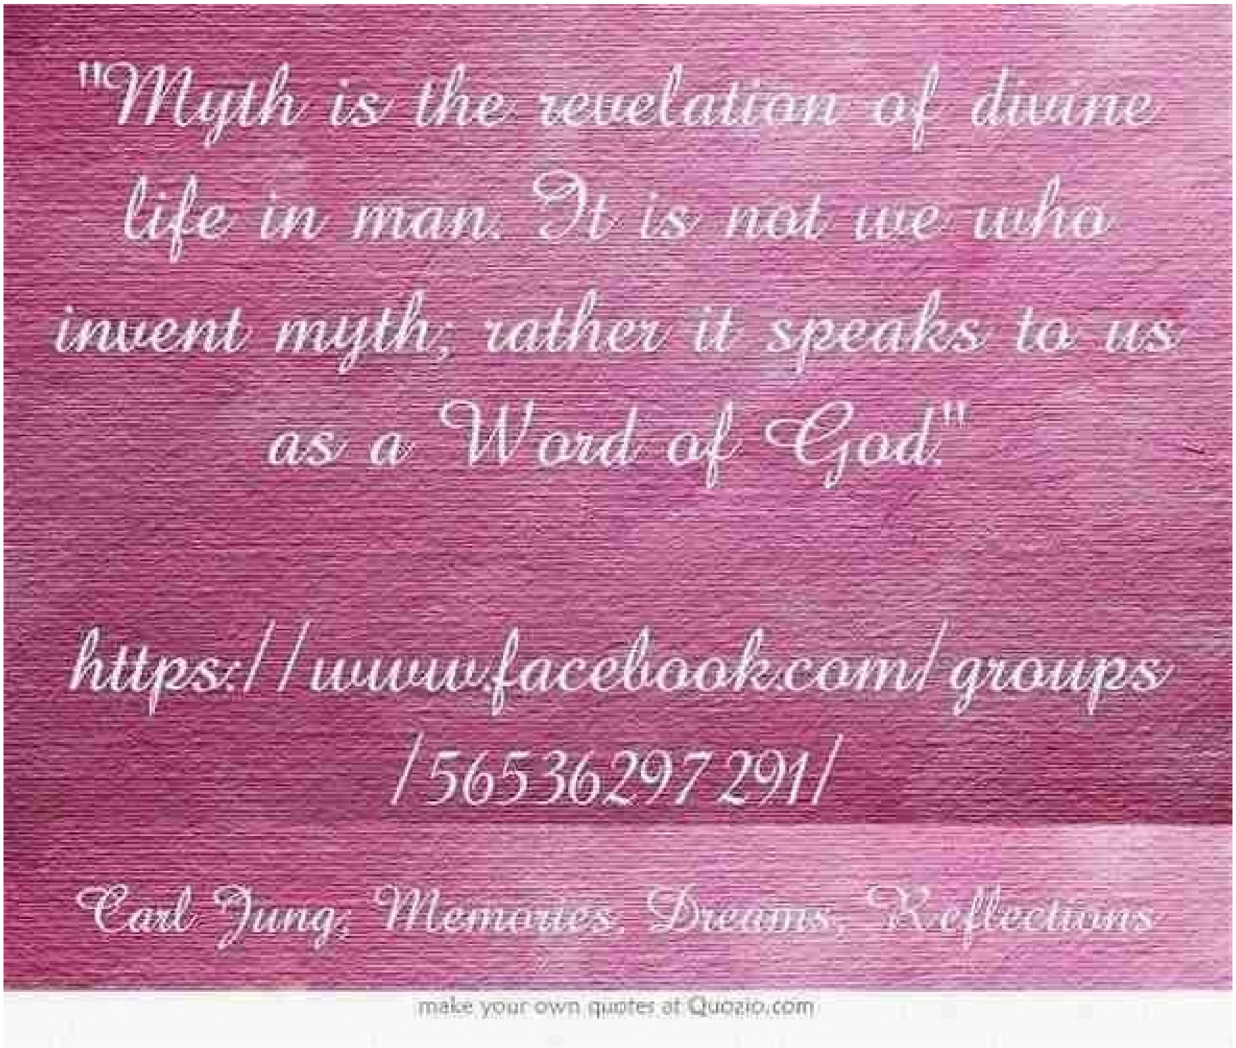
The myth of the necessary incarnation of God . . . can be understood as man's creative confrontation with the opposites and their synthesis in the self, the wholeness of his personality. . . . That is the goal . . . which fits man meaningfully into the scheme of creation and at the same time confers meaning upon it. –Carl Jung, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, Page 338.



. . . Christianity slumbers and has neglected to develop its myth further in the course of the centuries. . . . Our myth has become mute, and gives no answers.

- Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Chapter 12.

. . . Christianity slumbers and has neglected to develop its myth further in the course of the centuries. . . . Our myth has become mute, and gives no answers. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Chapter 12.



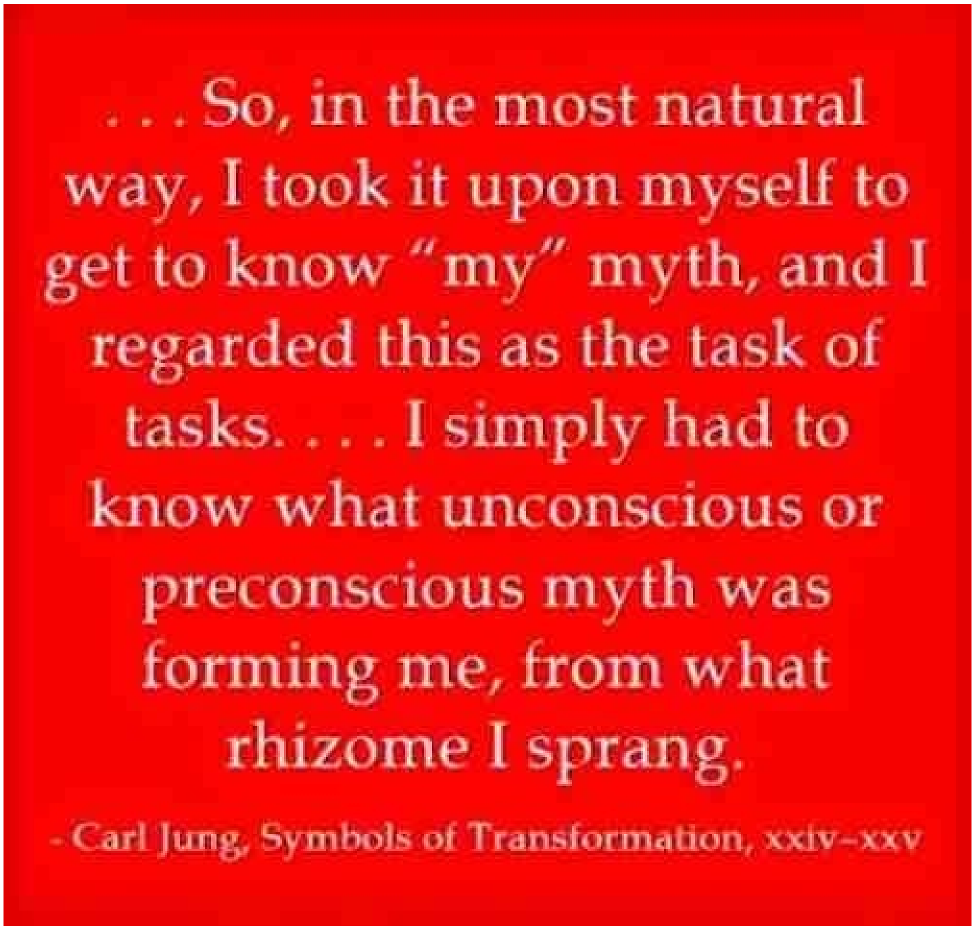
"Myth is the revelation of divine life in man. It is not we who invent myth; rather it speaks to us as a Word of God."

https://www.facebook.com/groups/565362972911/

Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams, Reflections

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

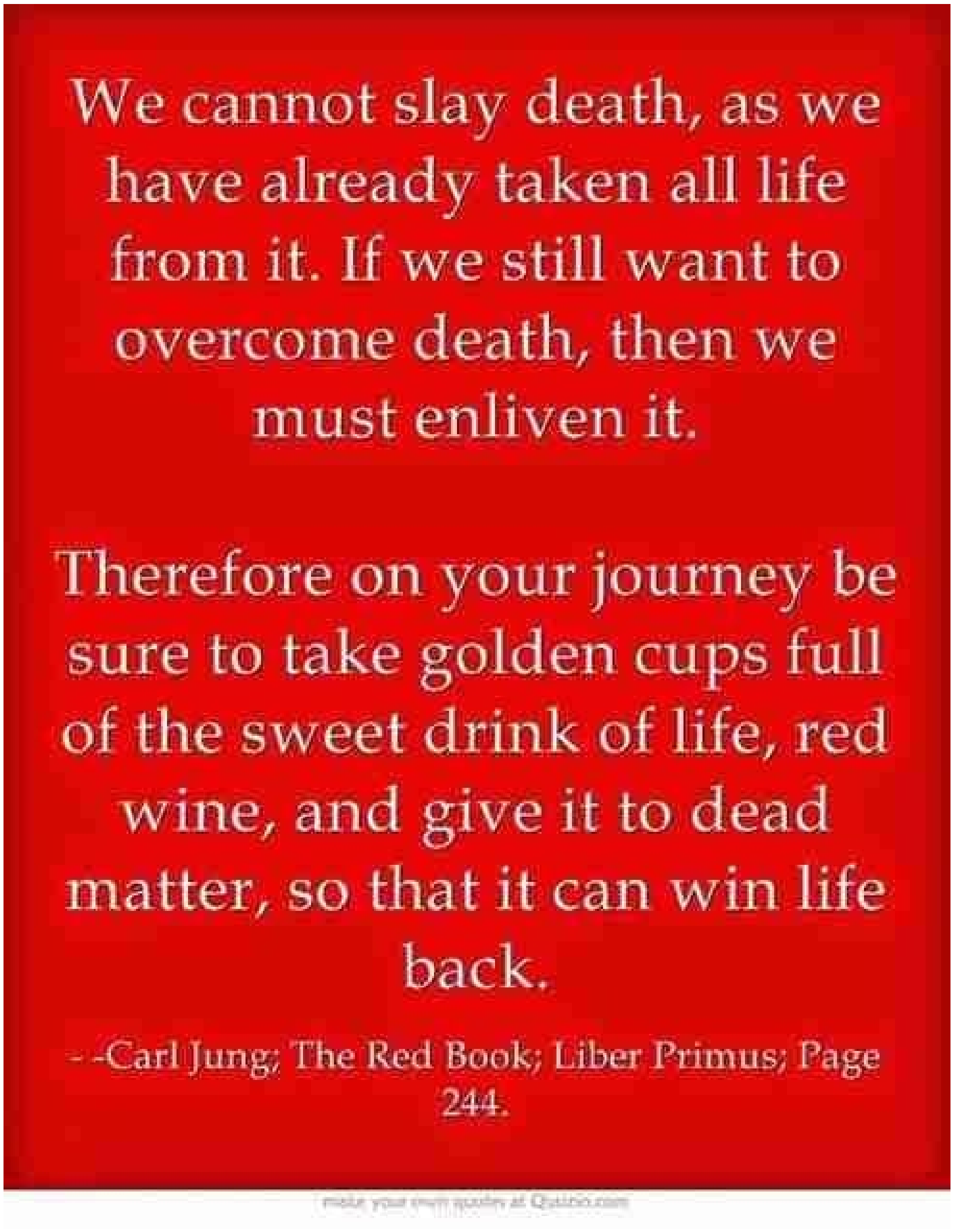
Myth is the revelation of divine life in man. It is not we who invent myth; rather it speaks to us as a Word of God. No science will ever replace myth, and a myth cannot be made out of any science. For it is not that "God" is a myth, but that myth is the revelation of a divine life in man. It is not we who invent myth; rather it speaks to us as a Word of God. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 340.



. . . So, in the most natural way, I took it upon myself to get to know “my” myth, and I regarded this as the task of tasks. . . . I simply had to know what unconscious or preconscious myth was forming me, from what rhizome I sprang.

- Carl Jung, Symbols of Transformation, xxiv–xxv

. . . So, in the most natural way, I took it upon myself to get to know “my” myth, and I regarded this as the task of tasks. . . . I simply had to know what unconscious or preconscious myth was forming me, from what rhizome I sprang. Carl Jung, Symbols of Transformation, xxiv–xxv.

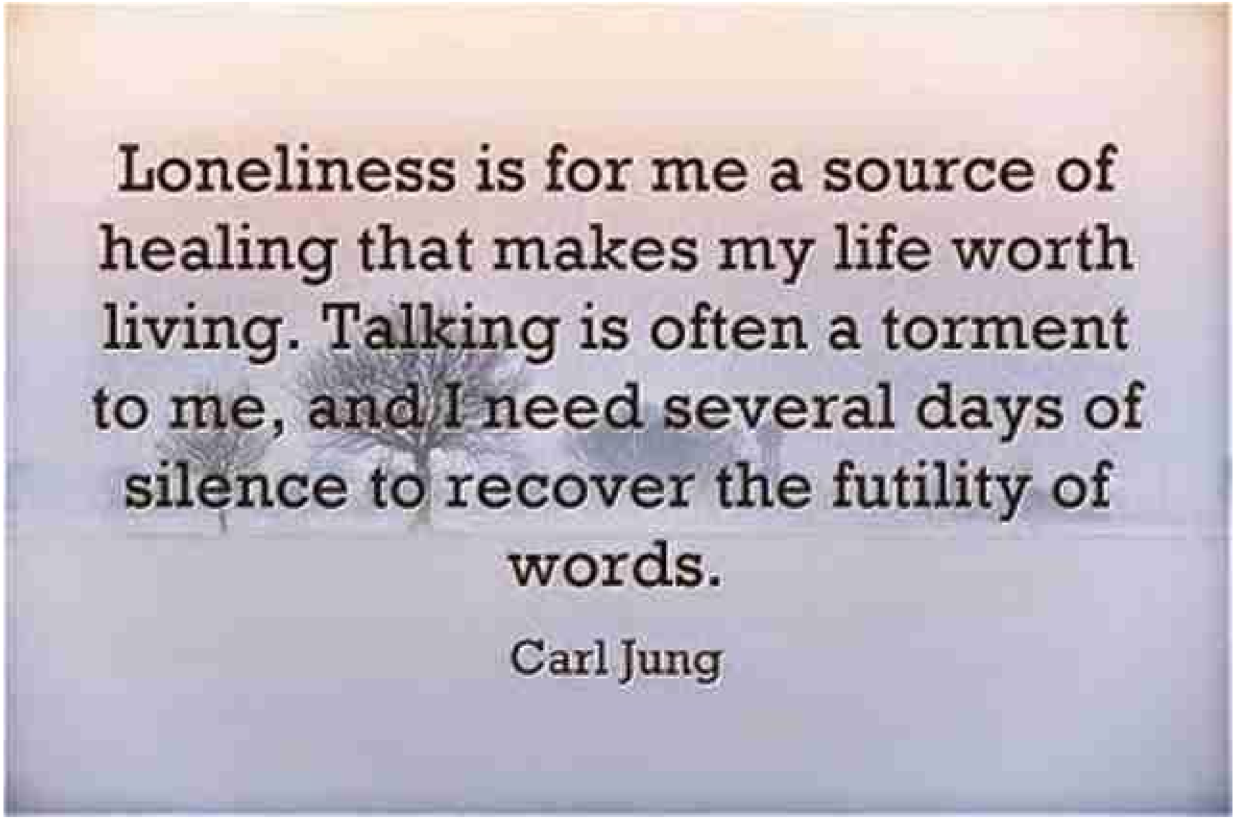


We cannot slay death, as we have already taken all life from it. If we still want to overcome death, then we must enliven it.

Therefore on your journey be sure to take golden cups full of the sweet drink of life, red wine, and give it to dead matter, so that it can win life back.

- -Carl Jung; The Red Book; Liber Primus; Page 244.

We cannot slay death, as we have already taken all life from it. If we still want to overcome death, then we must enliven it. Therefore on your journey be sure to take golden cups full of the sweet drink of life, red wine, and give it to dead matter, so that it can win life back. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 244.



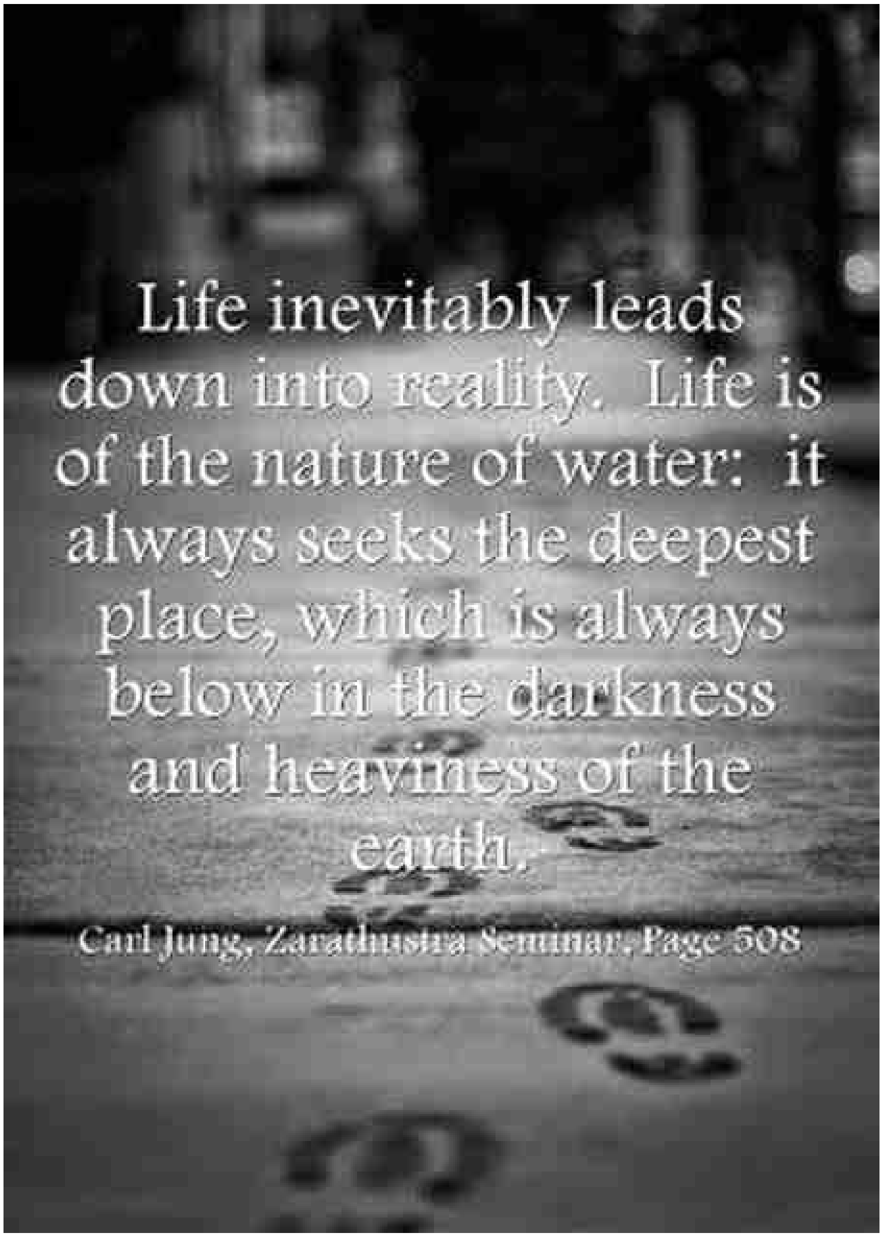
Loneliness is for me a source of healing that makes my life worth living. Talking is often a torment to me, and I need several days of silence to recover the futility of words.

Carl Jung

Loneliness is for me a source of healing that makes my life worth living. Talking is often a torment to me, and I need several days of silence to recover the futility of words. Carl Jung

Thank God I'm Jung and not a Jungian.
~Carl Jung, Jung: A Biography (Hannah), Page 78.

Thank God I'm Jung and not a Jungian. Carl Jung, Jung: A Biography (Hannah), Page 78.



Life inevitably leads down into reality. Life is of the nature of water: it always seeks the deepest place, which is always below in the darkness and heaviness of the earth. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 508.

Spirit cannot be learned, it is given to us by God's grace, which cannot be had by force or reason.
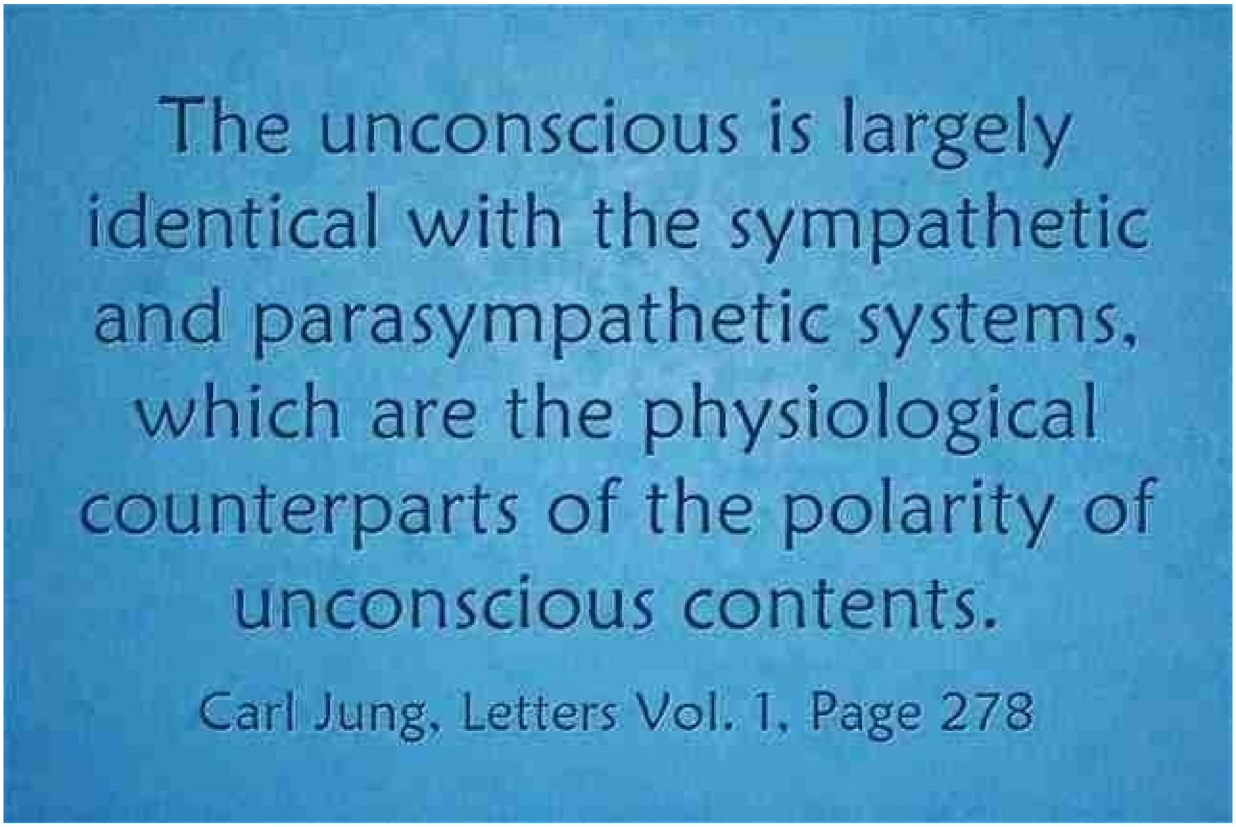
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 293.

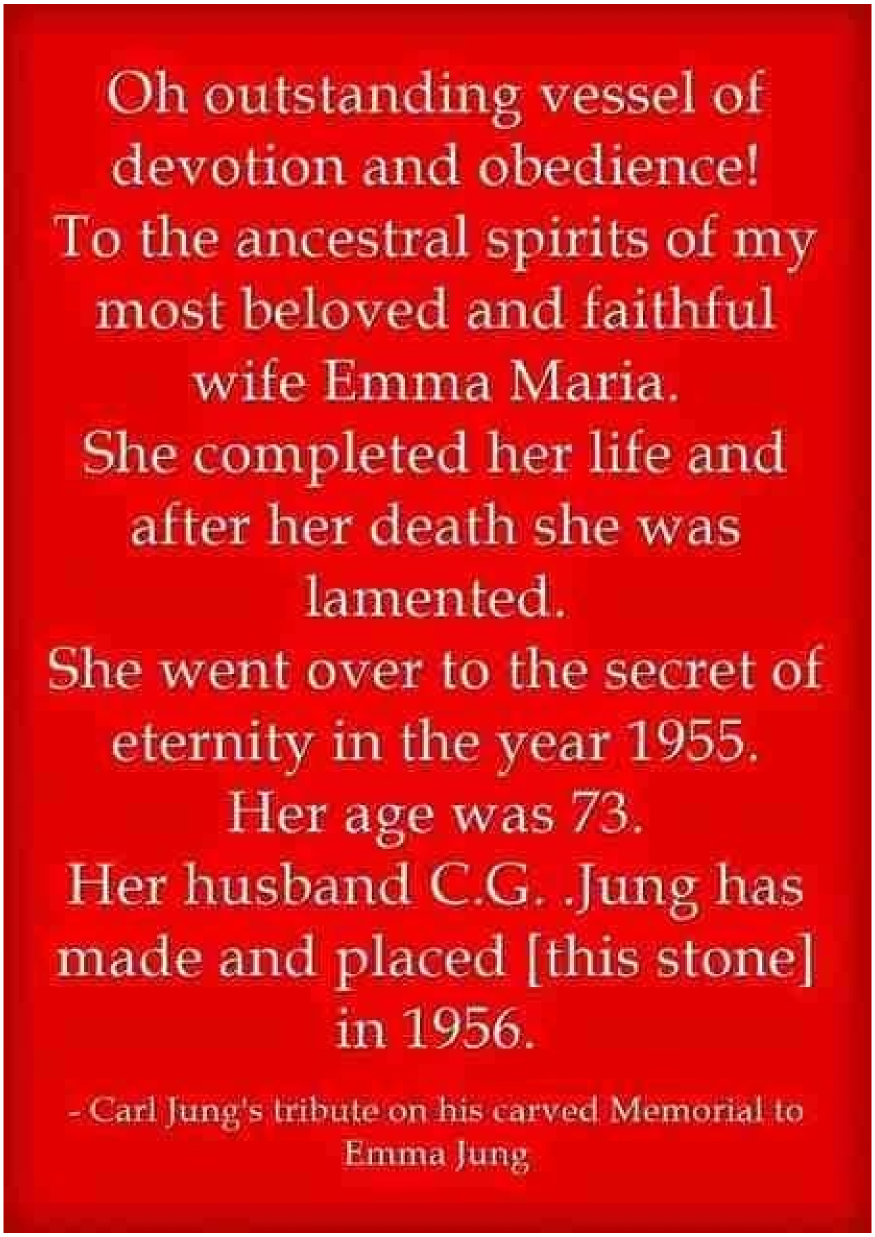
Spirit cannot be learned, it is given to us by God’s grace, which cannot be had by force or reason. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 293.



The unconscious is largely identical with the sympathetic and parasympathetic systems, which are the physiological counterparts of the polarity of unconscious contents.

Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 278

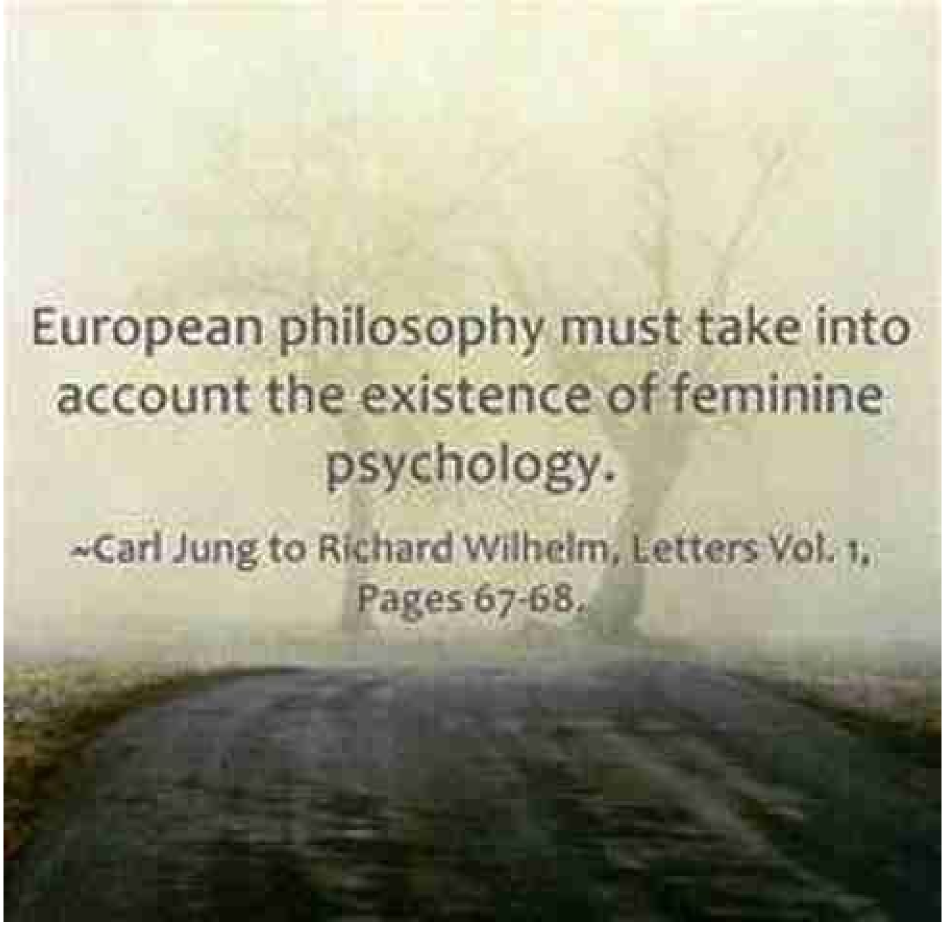
The unconscious is largely identical with the sympathetic and parasympathetic systems, which are the physiological counterparts of the polarity of unconscious contents. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 278.



Oh outstanding vessel of devotion and obedience!
To the ancestral spirits of my most beloved and faithful wife Emma Maria.
She completed her life and after her death she was lamented.
She went over to the secret of eternity in the year 1955.
Her age was 73.
Her husband C.G. .Jung has made and placed [this stone] in 1956.

- Carl Jung's tribute on his carved Memorial to Emma Jung

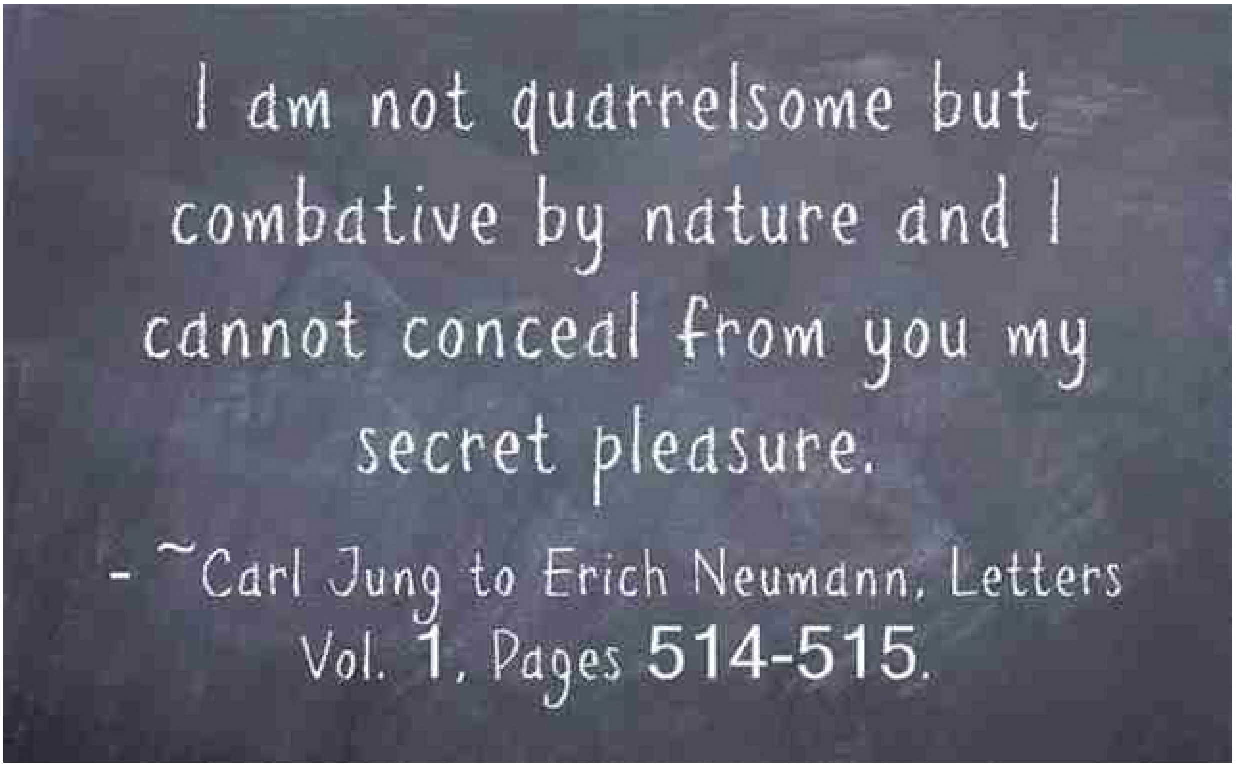
Oh outstanding vessel of devotion and obedience! To the ancestral spirits of my most beloved and faithful wife Emma Maria. She completed her life and after her death she was lamented. She went over to the secret of eternity in the year 1955. Her age was 73. Her husband C.G. .Jung has made and placed [this stone] in 1956.



European philosophy must take into account the existence of feminine psychology.
~Carl Jung to Richard Wilhelm, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 67-68.

European philosophy must take into account the existence of feminine psychology. Carl Jung to Richard Wilhelm, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 67-68.

[33]<img border="0" src="https://1.bp.blogspot.com/-2SIKn8nrnY0/WL_4nQlPbEI/AAAAAAAAjhw/NlaOsp8Vcn0Z78uX2Nst6SGHOXuripuKwC The individual is obliged by the collective demands to purchase his individuation at the cost of an equivalent work for the benefit of society. Carl Jung, The Symbolic Life, Page 452. [34]



I am not quarrelsome but combative by nature and I cannot conceal from you my secret pleasure.

- ~Carl Jung to Erich Neumann, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 514-515.

I am not quarrelsome but combative by nature and I cannot conceal from you my secret pleasure. Carl Jung to Erich Neumann, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 514-515.

… the experience of the self is always a defeat for the ego.
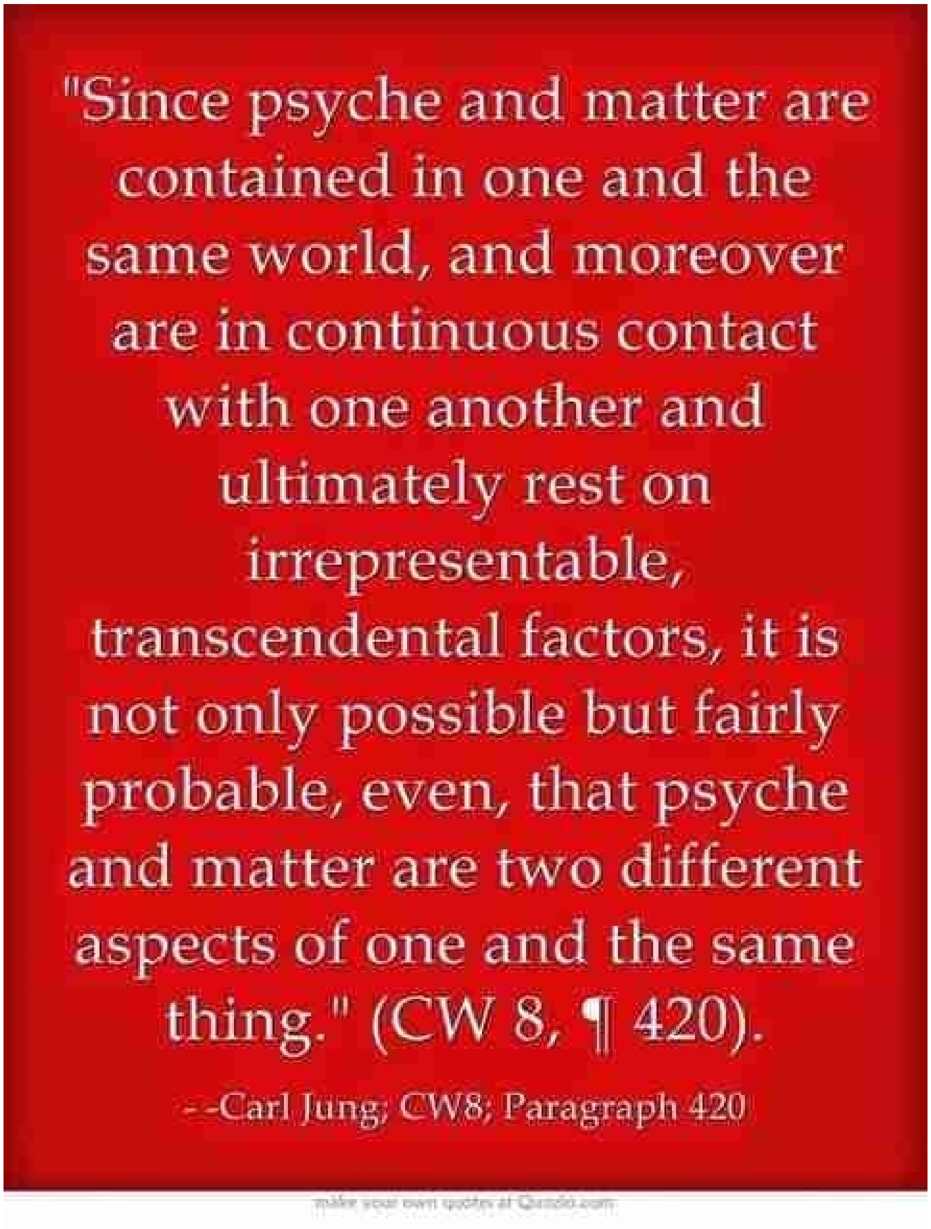
~Carl Jung, CW 14, Par. 778.

… the experience of the self is always a defeat for the ego." Carl Jung, CW 14, Par. 778.



"Since psyche and matter are contained in one and the same world, and moreover are in continuous contact with one another and ultimately rest on irrepresentable, transcendental factors, it is not only possible but fairly probable, even, that psyche and matter are two different aspects of one and the same thing." (CW 8, ¶ 420).

- -Carl Jung; CW8; Paragraph 420

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

Since psyche and matter are contained in one and the same world, and moreover are in continuous contact with one another and ultimately rest on irrepresentable, transcendental factors, it is not only possible but fairly probable, even, that psyche and matter are two different aspects of one and the same thing. Carl Jung; CW 8, ¶ 420.

Men who have understanding should not just believe, but should wrestle for knowledge to the best of their ability.

Belief is not everything, but neither is knowledge.

Belief does not give us the security and the wealth of knowing.

Desiring knowledge sometimes takes away too much belief
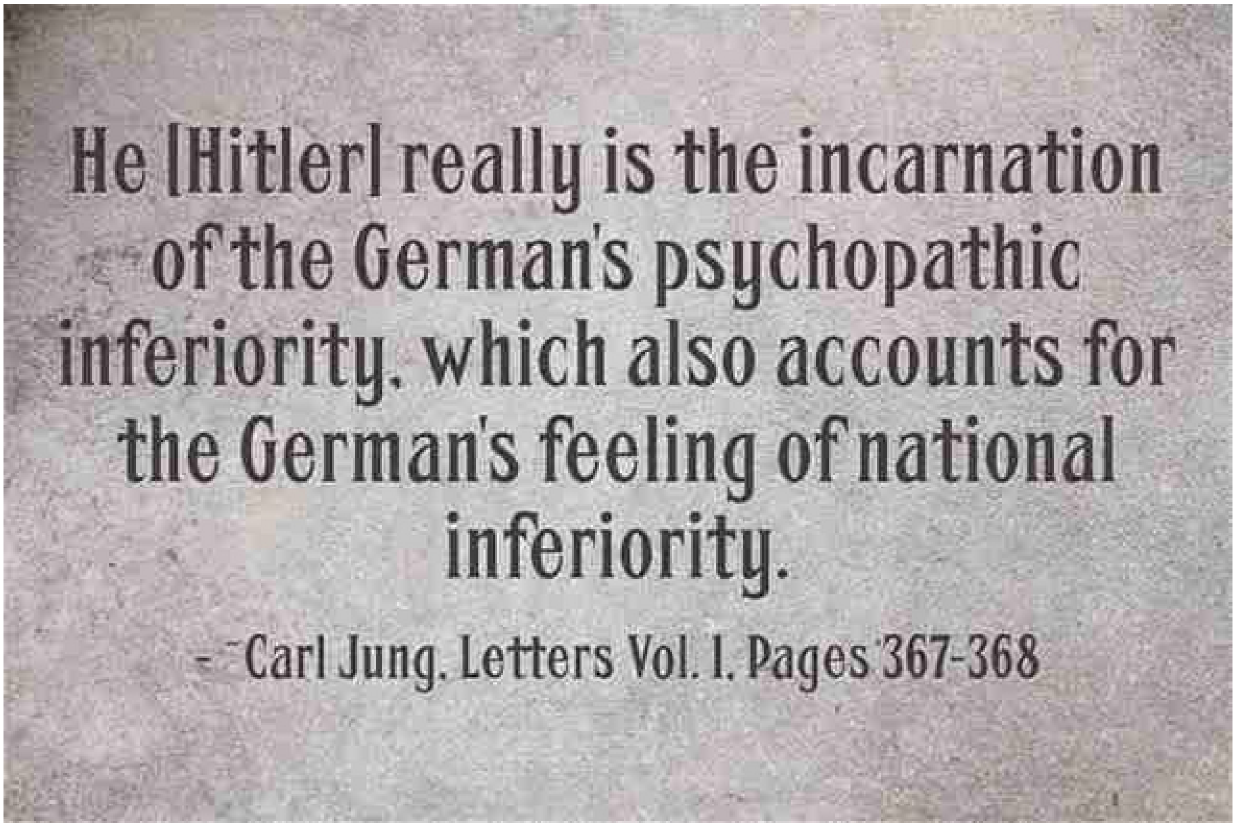
Both must strike a balance.

- ~Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 336.

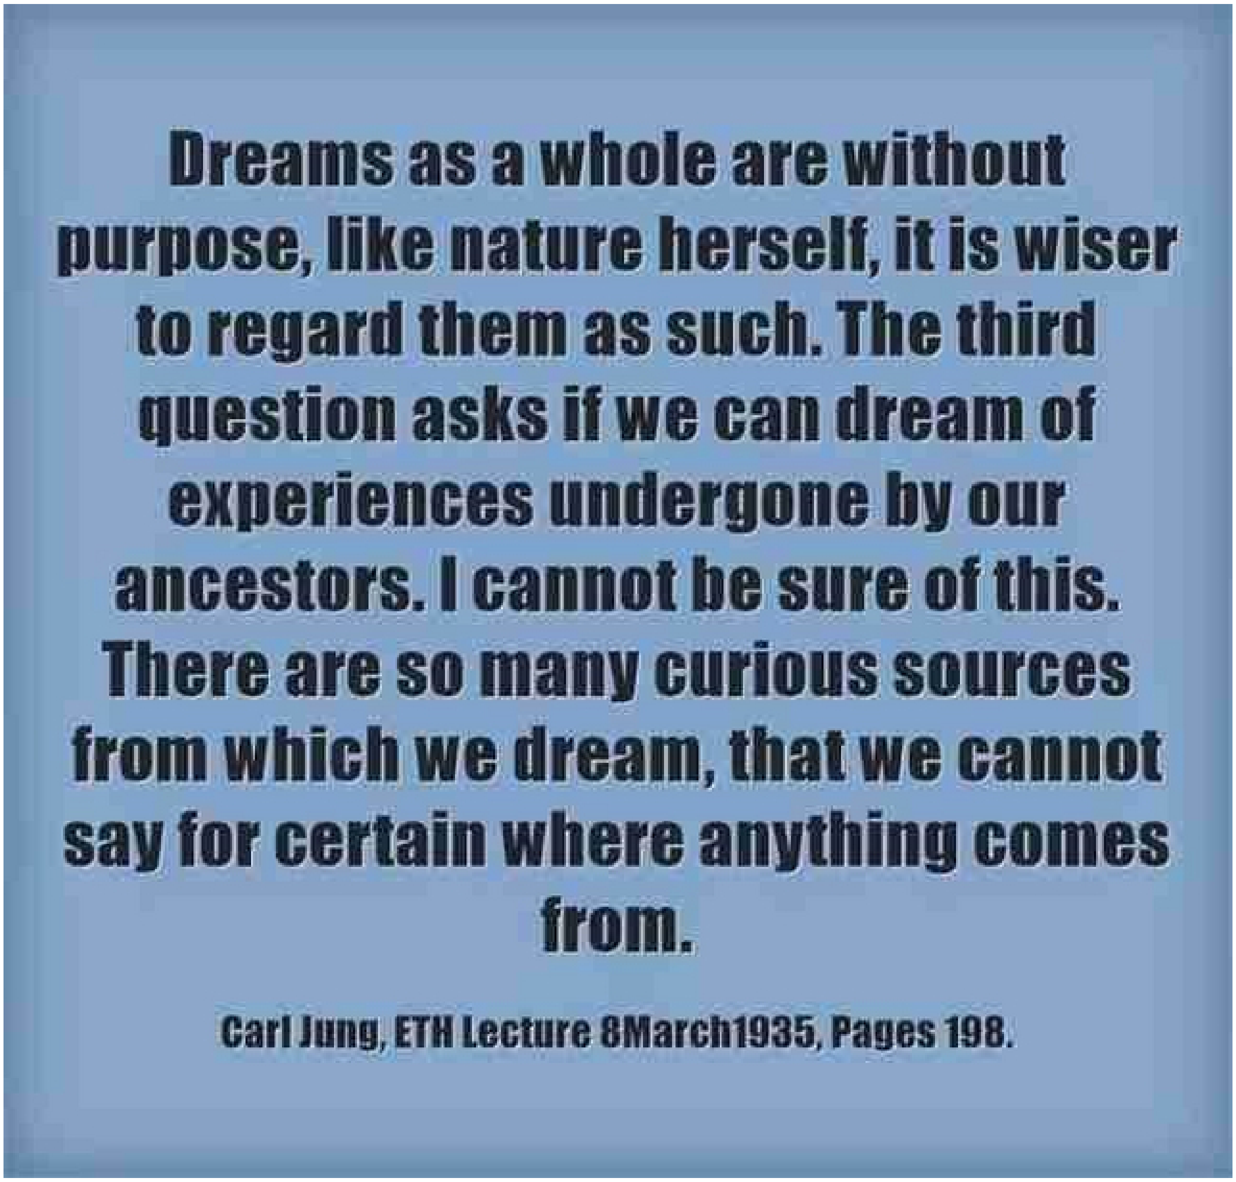
Men who have understanding should not just believe, but should wrestle for knowledge to the best of their ability. Belief is not everything, but neither is knowledge. Belief does not give us the security and the wealth of knowing. Desiring knowledge sometimes takes away too much belief. Both must strike a balance. Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 336.



He [Hitler] really is the incarnation of the German's psychopathic inferiority, which also accounts for the German's feeling of national inferiority.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 367-368

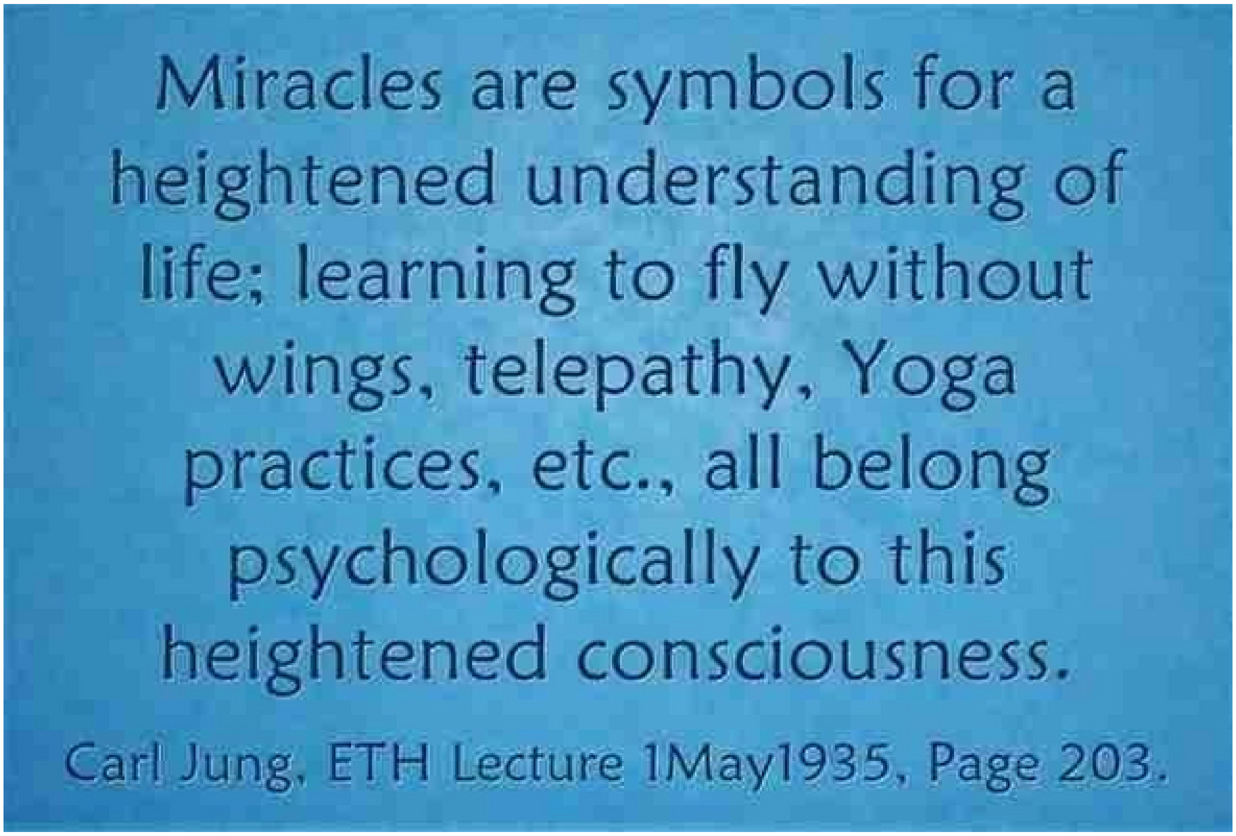
He [Hitler] really is the incarnation of the German’s psychopathic inferiority, which also accounts for the German’s feeling of national inferiority. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 367-368.



Dreams as a whole are without purpose, like nature herself, it is wiser to regard them as such. The third question asks if we can dream of experiences undergone by our ancestors. I cannot be sure of this. There are so many curious sources from which we dream, that we cannot say for certain where anything comes from.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 198.

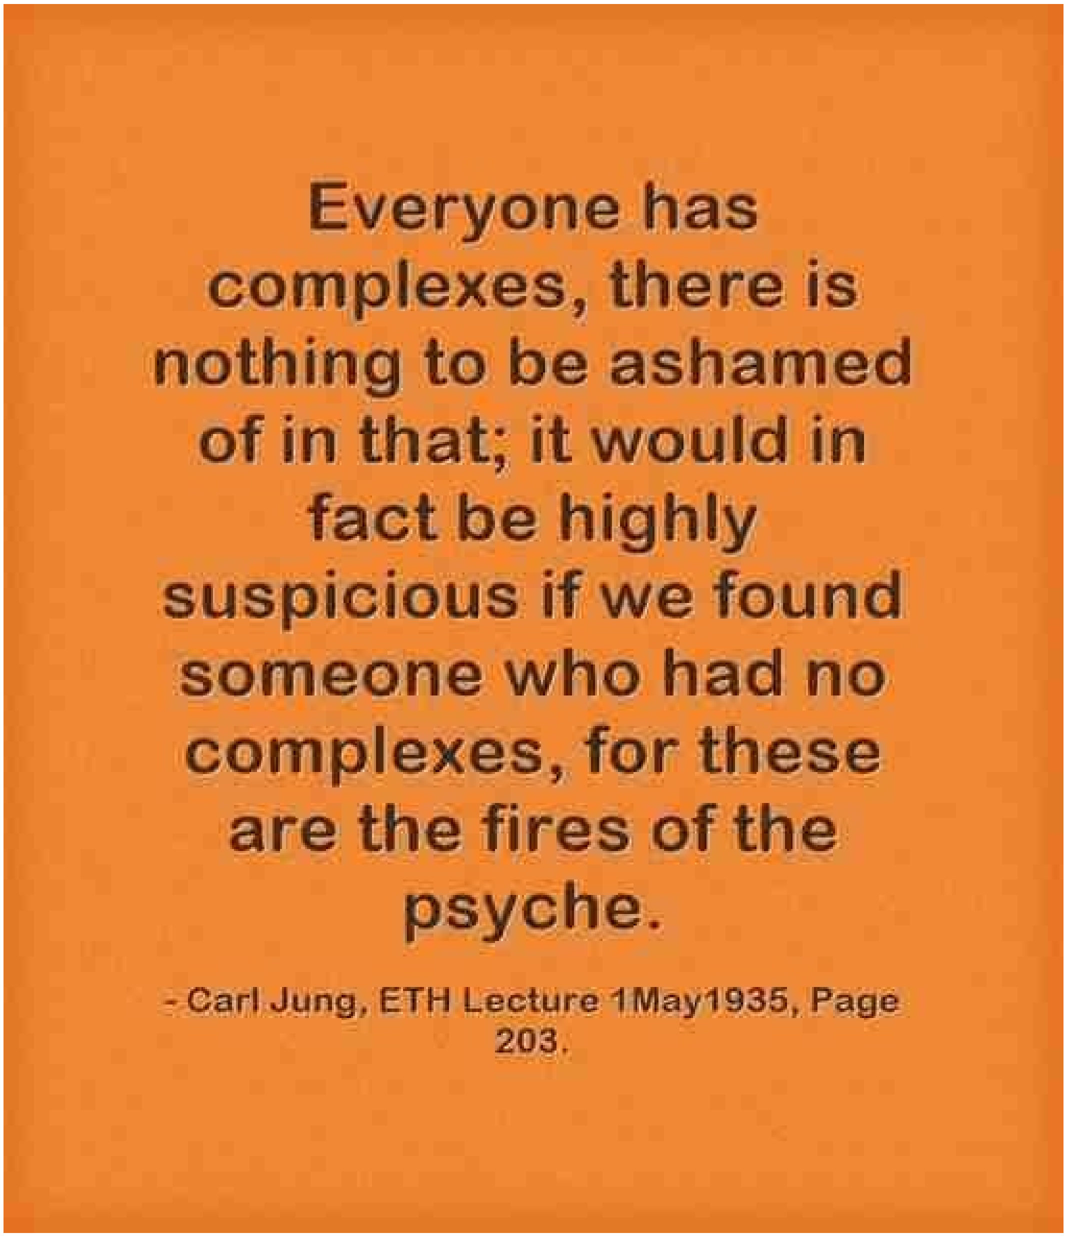
Dreams as a whole are without purpose, like nature herself, it is wiser to regard them as such. The third question asks if we can dream of experiences undergone by our ancestors. I cannot be sure of this. There are so many curious sources from which we dream, that we cannot say for certain where anything comes from. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 198.



Miracles are symbols for a heightened understanding of life; learning to fly without wings, telepathy, Yoga practices, etc., all belong psychologically to this heightened consciousness.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Page 203.

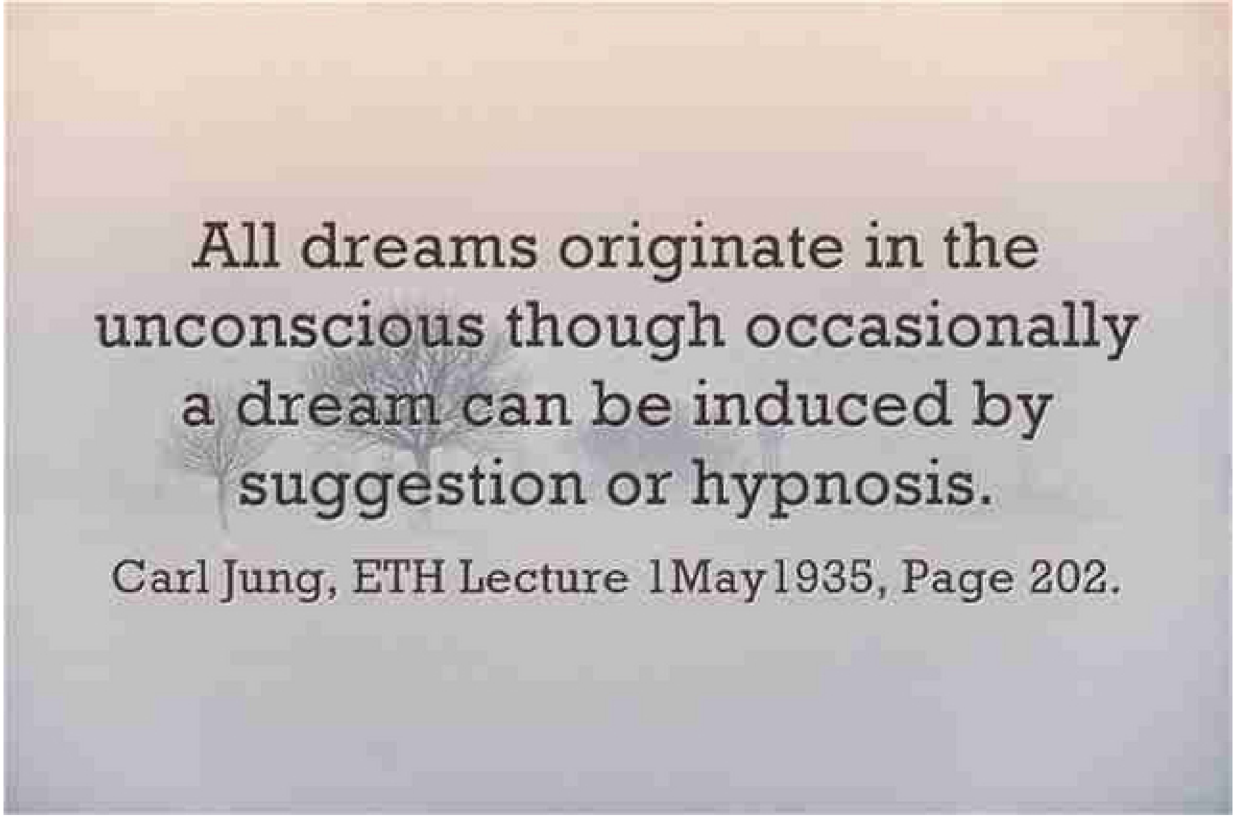
Miracles are symbols for a heightened understanding of life; learning to fly without wings, telepathy, Yoga practices, etc., all belong psychologically to this heightened consciousness. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Pages 203.



Everyone has complexes, there is nothing to be ashamed of in that; it would in fact be highly suspicious if we found someone who had no complexes, for these are the fires of the psyche.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Page 203.

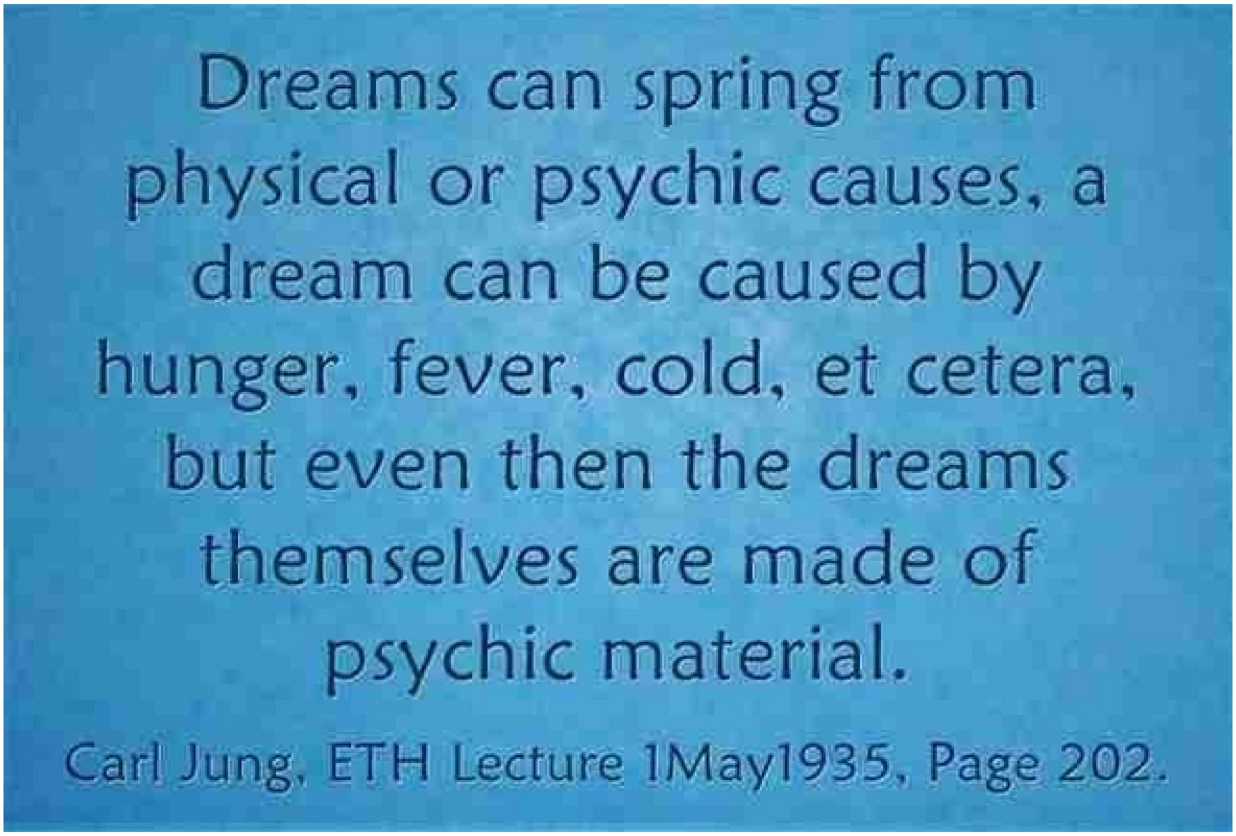
Everyone has complexes, there is nothing to be ashamed of in that; it would in fact be highly suspicious if we found someone who had no complexes, for these are the fires of the psyche. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Pages 203.



All dreams originate in the unconscious though occasionally a dream can be induced by suggestion or hypnosis.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Page 202.

All dreams originate in the unconscious though occasionally a dream can be induced by suggestion or hypnosis. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Pages 202.



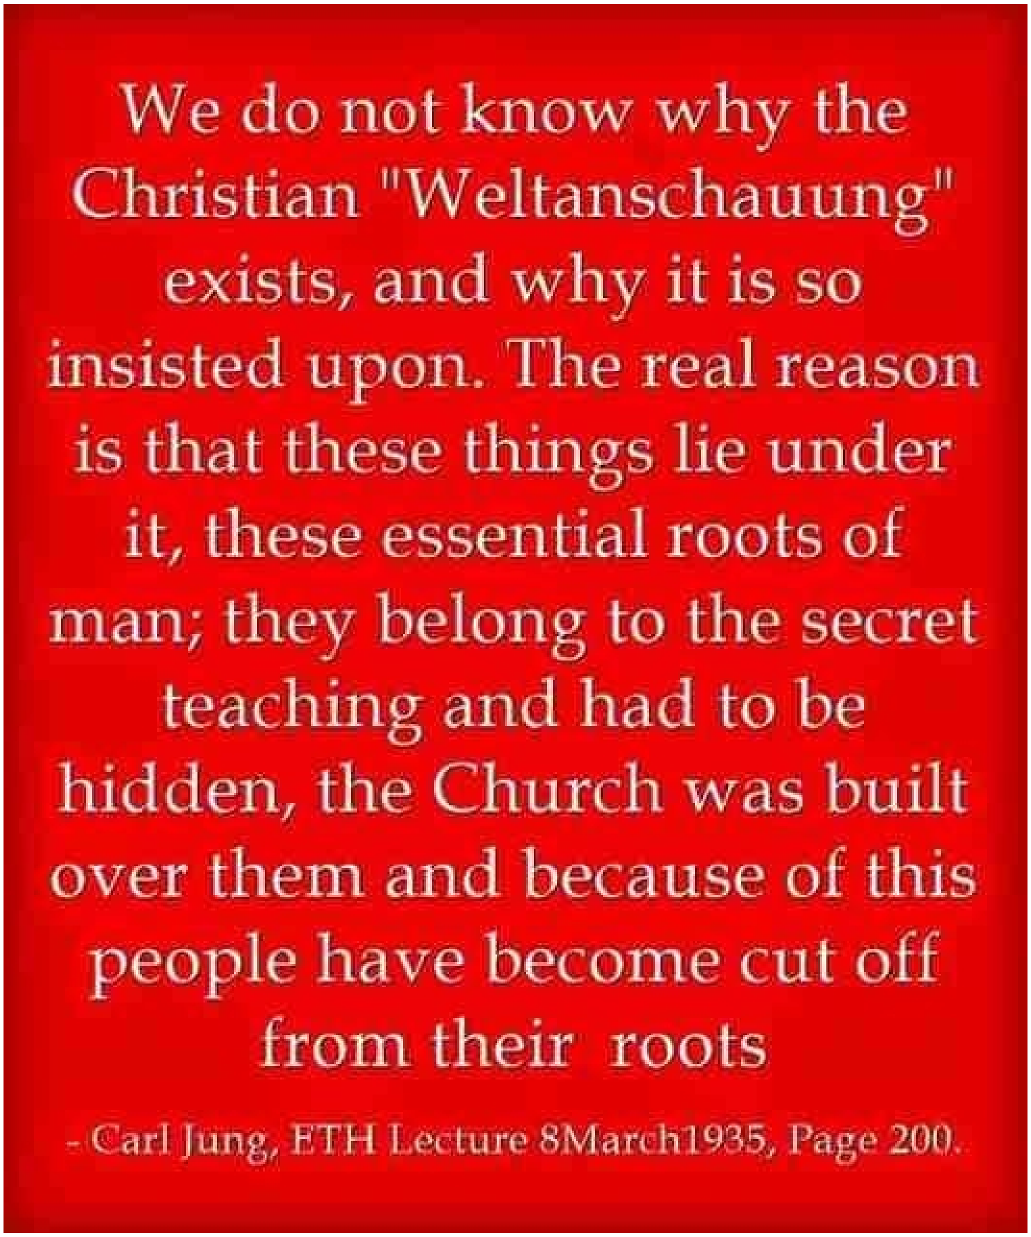
Dreams can spring from physical or psychic causes, a dream can be caused by hunger, fever, cold, et cetera, but even then the dreams themselves are made of psychic material.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Page 202.

Dreams can spring from physical or psychic causes, a dream can be caused by hunger, fever, cold, et cetera, but even then the dreams themselves are made of psychic material. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Pages 202.

Complexes can also be called fragmentary souls.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Page 201.

Complexes can also be called fragmentary souls. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 1May1935, Pages 201.



We do not know why the Christian "Weltanschauung" exists, and why it is so insisted upon. The real reason is that these things lie under it, these essential roots of man; they belong to the secret teaching and had to be hidden, the Church was built over them and because of this people have become cut off from their roots

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Page 200.

We do not know why the Christian "Weltanschauung" exists, and why it is so insisted upon. The real reason is that these things lie under it, these essential roots of man; they belong to the secret teaching and had to be hidden, the Church was built over them and because of this people have become cut off from their roots. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 200.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8d97e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2794.j`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/10775-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2795.j`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/de553-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2796.j`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a2522-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2797.j`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9d5c6-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung`

2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2798.j

6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2473e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2950.j
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/34a77-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2975.j
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/63919-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3011.j
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d3aad-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3020.j
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/88e1e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3036.j
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9b3e1-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3038.j
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/15d0f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3041.j
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/db866-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3042.j
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f67f5-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3294.j
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4d21b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3298.j
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5b8bf-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3299.j
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/50312-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3311.j
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2b9e6-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3314.j
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/de91a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3351.j
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/437b5-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3352.j
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c6071-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3353.j
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3457b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3354.j
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e8d47-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3355.j
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a8786-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3356.j
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3e1b0-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3407.j
26. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9fa34-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3741.j
27. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/285a2-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3759.j
28. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/664cb-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image3858.j
29. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/51175-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4031.j
30. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/00550-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bju

ng2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4042.j
31. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b5bad-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4113.j
32. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/508f4-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4147.j
33. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/458ee-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4172.j
34. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/12388-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4178.j
35. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/57447-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4185.j
36. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ab18c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4187.j
37. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7f647-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4191.j
38. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/28f0a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4213.j
39. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9611c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4247.j
40. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/33312-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4248.j
41. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e6a61-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4249.j
42. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/774d8-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4250.j
43. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e6a17-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4251.j
44. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b630d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4252.j
45. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7580d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4253.j

---

H.G. Baynes "Jung’s Apprentice" - Quotations (2019-03-08 10:26)

His [H.G. Baynes] interest in psychology leads him to study psychiatry at the Maudsley Hospital. While working there he meets the Swiss psychologist, C. G. Jung and this meeting is to change the course of his life. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 111

Godwin’s work with those. suffering from shell-shock led to his accepting a post at the Maudsley Hospital to study psychiatry. It was there that he first met C.G. Jung on one of Jung’s early visits to England. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 115

Godwin visits Dr Jung in Zurich, and the impact of this first visit decides the future course of his life. He leaves England and his studies at the Maudsley Hospital to work with Jung in the hope of becoming an analyst. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 119

Godwin's meeting with Jung, while he was working with patients suffering from shell-shock at the Maudsley, was one of those life-changing events which occurred at the very moment when he was in such great need of a new direction. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 120

Godwin described his first visit to Dr Jung at his home in Kusnacht. He travelled by train to Zurich Bahnhof, and from there he took the tram out to Kusnacht. It was a momentous meeting. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 120

He [Baynes] remembered how this first meeting had given him some inkling of that vision of the human soul which arrested me in my talk with Dr Jung on a summers evening by the lake of Zurich. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 121

It was a profound experience and this he maintains is the only way to know Jung; he rnust be not just known, but experienced. He writes: 'An academic curiosity alone will never give you the key to the understanding of Jung's ideas. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 121

The early weeks with Jung in Zurich led to some profound soul searching. Perhaps the discovery of his own inner world and the deeper truths that he discovered within himself, as a result of this totally new experience of introversion, was, for Godwin, like a religious experience. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 122

Jung's study is filled with beautiful things and one thing in particular is especially fine: a Roman vase with young rnen and women, painted in black, chasing each other round the outside. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 123

It was at this time, during his early days of analysis with Jung, that Godwin was particularly concerned about his father's health. It seems he was now attending to his father's illness instead of running in all directions at once to escape it. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 123

(It had been Godwin's fond hope that Rosalind could be influenced by Jung, just as he had been, and that this would save their marriage. However, this did not prove to be possible.) Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 123

After Godwin’s initial meeting with Jung, he wrote a letter to his parents saying that he had ’learned more in one hour with Jung than in all my life before.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 123-124

At Jung’s suggestion, Godwin became known to the world in Zurich as ’Peter’. The reason for this is one for conjecture. Some people have suggested that it was an allusion to Peter the Rock, and that Jung saw Peter as the one who would, as his assistant, help him to convey his ideas to a wider public and also, to deal with the more extraverted aspects of his work. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 124

In the summer of 1920, Jung held his first seminar in England. This took place at Sennen Cove in Cornwall and it had as its subject a book with the title Peter Blobb’s Dreams. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 124

It was during her second visit to Zurich in 1922, that Eleanor met Doctor Esther Harding. This was the English woman with whom she later founded the first Jungian group in New York, together with an old friend of Eleanor’s, Kristine Mann. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 126

No one can free himself from his childhood without first generously occupying himself with it. Carl Jung, Integration of the Personality, Page 111

With Jung’s encouragement, he [H.G. Baynes] began to keep a daily record of his dreams followed by long and detailed analyses. The dreams together with his own analyses, which were full of self-revelation and also self-castigation, he would show to Jung. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 128

It was during these early days of his analysis with Jung that Peter began to see both his father and his mother in a more compassionate light. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 128

Very early in their work together Jung appears in Peter’s dream and it is clear that a powerful transference has already begun. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 128

This must have been an important dream in the early part of Peter’s analysis, at a time when Jung had become for him like ’the eye of God’ and there is a sense also of his feeling of loss and abandonment while Jung was away for his three week holiday. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 130

The divorce proceedings were now at their height and Peter was still experiencing his loss and hurt in relation to Rosalind but was also full of self-recrimination and regrets. This is expressed in a dream he had on March 16th 1920. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 130

Maitland Radford. He writes: 'I was so immensely taken or drunk with this new and eager intellectual milieu that I actually refused to go to my brother's wife's funeral [this was the first wife of Peter's brother, Jack], because I wanted to stay.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 130

My sympathy with my father comes from the fact that we both suffer from the same curse. The dream tells me that the inner necessity of my dependence on Jung comes from the fact that I associate my powerful wealmess with my father and therefore I worship Jung's strength. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 135

He [Jung] is the father who can support the son and heal the father weakness with his strength. I can lose sight of the stigma of my own inheritance by identifying myself with Jung's strength. H.G. Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 135

Now I take him [Jung] on my knee and can realise the fight he put up from within. This is the real reconciliation. I have never understood him until now. H.G. Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 135

Jung's influence on Peter was all-embracing and as he came to understand more about his own psychology, and what had led to his tendency towards what he saw as 'erotic incontinence', so he also came to regard Jung as the guide, and the model for complete inner integrity that he wanted to emulate. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 141

In earlier times [George Bernard] Shaw would have been a crusader or an uncompromising Prince of the Church. Perhaps even an inquisitor. While Jung would have been a mystical recluse either canonized as a Saint or crucified as a martyr to truth. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 142

In this first period of analysis with Jung and also his [H.G. Baynes] own self-analysis, there was a sense of his profound regret at what had gone wrong in his life. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 142

He [H.G. Baynes] writes: 'Jung stands for the parting of the ways at this rebirth of my soul.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 142

As his analysis progresses with Jung, his sense of his own worthlessness becomes increasingly pronounced along with regret in relation to the situation his own impulsiveness has landed him in. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 144

Can I show Jung all the intimate, revealing and terrible contents of my soul? Must he read this very book that I am writing in now? Must the soul stand utterly naked, stripped off every vestige of honour and decency and fair-seeming? H.G. Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 144

Godwin's days were full. Seeing patients in the mornings and working on his translation of Jung's Psychological Types in the afternoons. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 145

It is a long time ago, but I think I remember Godwin telling me that Psychological Types was written in a difficult and learned German, and that Jung said it was necessary to use this language for a scientific book, in Germany anyhow. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 145

Some evenings we would go and swim in the lake from the Jung's boathouse. Godwin would make them nervous when he dived off the boathouse roof into rather shallow water, but he was an expert diver. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 145

It was at this period that Peter was to become Jung's chief assistant and by now a warm relationship had developed between them. It was as though Jung recognized in Peter a man of stature who was, in terms of his personality type, his exact opposite. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 146

As a complement to one another, they each had qualities that were needed and admired by the other. Jung in his extreme introversion needed Peter's extraversion to create a Jungian community. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 146

Jung's typology, as an introverted, intuitive, thinking type, was almost diametrically opposite to Peter's, which was an extravert, feeling, intuitive. Jung introduced Peter to the possibility of a rich inner life. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 146

Jung, with his profound introversion, relied on Peter to deal with the extraverted aspect of his work; that of bringing people together, of providing a base and a welcome for the English-speaking people who came to Zurich to study with Jung, and executing the practical arrangements for the Jungian congresses and seminars. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 147

One of the first English doctors to come to Jung in Zurich was Godwin Baynes (always called Peter), who soon realised the value of Jungian psychology and, in spite of a rather chequered career, devoted his whole life to it, until his death during World War 2. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 147

He [H.G. Baynes] came to Jung originally because his first marriage had run on the rocks while he was in service abroad. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 147

Emma Jung and Toni Wolff were particularly fond of him [H.G. Baynes], and before long he began his first term as Jung's assistant. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 147

In many ways he [H.G. Baynes] was the best assistant Jung ever had, for he was singularly free of a certain jealousy and a sense of inferiority that working with an outstanding man like Jung unfortunately seems to breed in other men, even those considerably younger. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 147

Peter Baynes once told me that beyond doubt his true vocation was to be Jung's assistant, but his extraverted, open nature constantly involved him in other plans. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 148

When I was eight years old I used to call him Papa Jung. He liked children and was always with his own 5 taldng part in family outings and presiding at mealtimes. Briget Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 148

Sometimes there would be a period when Papa Jung would retire into a still more solitary retreat among still thicker and taller reeds on an island in the upper stretches of the Zurichsee [Bollingen]. Briget Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page149

Mrs. Jung was the perfection of a motherly, loving, quiet, beautiful woman who was also the perfect Swiss housewife. I see also a round table of children, there was jolting in Swiss and some cream cheese which Papa Jung sprinkled generously with sugar and gave me a spoon to eat it with. Briget Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page149

He was a fatherly figure, powerfully built and very tall- as tall as my father who was 6ft 4ins and he carried me on his back to my bedroom high up in the tower, so I should know. Briget Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 149

She [H.G. Baynes daughter] felt at home in the Jung household, under the all-embracing motherly wing of Emma Jung, and they accepted her as an integral part of their large and lively family.   Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 149

She [H.G. Baynes daughter] remembers how, at breakfast time, all the children would recount their dreams to Jung and Emma and a general discussion of these dreams would ensue. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 149

It was in 1921, during Peter's early months of working with Jung as his assistant, that he met the girl who was to become his second wife; a young woman who had come from Edinburgh to see Jung because she was suffering from severe bouts of depression. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 149

When sorrows come, they come not single spies, But in battalions. Shakespeare, Hamlet, iv.. Jung's Apprentice, Page 150

Hilda Davidson came to Zurich to work with Jung in the summer of 1921. Ruth described her as 'a lovely woman with long golden hair, literally long enough to sit on. She was naturally a gay, happy person, even brilliant, but she was one of Jung's patients because she had bouts of deep depression which no one could account for.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 151

At that time patients, Jung' s students and the analysts working in Zurich met freely together, attended seminars and also dined and socialised together, so there was nothing unusual in a friendship between Peter, who was by now Jung' s assistant, and Hilda, who was there as one of Jung's patients' and was at the same time receiving help from Peter. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 151

It was not until much later, in the early 1930's, that Peter was able to discover his own true identity and the ability to value his own very different personality type and his own natural way of working which was, as a feeling extravert, so very different to that of Jung's. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 158

The consequence of his love for Jung is encapsulated in the opening statement to this book, that 'a man who has learnt to despise himself', can learn 'to love himself'. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 158

Christopher Carl Randall (he was christened Carl after Jung and Randall after his great uncle) was an outstandingly beautiful baby. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 160

Peter's relationship to woman was clearly a troubled one. Toni Wolff commented to him that he seemed more able, at this time, to trust himself in a relationship with a man than with a woman. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 164

In the l 920's, this tribe [Elgonyi] had had no contact at all with the outside world and Jung wanted to make a psychological study of the inhabitants before they became affected by Western influence. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 165

On 1st July he [H.G. Baynes] records: 'On this day I wrote my last despairing letter to C. G. about the terrible hardness of life with Hilda. There was a profound protest against my fate in this. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 166

There is no escape.' Jung's reply to Peter's cry for help was to admonish him and to say that on no account must he give in to her emotional blackmail (i.e., her threats of what she might do if he insisted on going to Africa with Jung). Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 166

In August of that year Peter was also involved in the preparations for the Swanage conference, which marked Jung' s second important teaching conference in England, in which he spoke of dream analysis and the great god Eros, god of relatedness and also of Logos, the god of form. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 166

'Godwin promised Dr Jung months ago to sail with him to E. Africa on the 15th, but of course he did not; and when Hilda died today we wondered what he would do. Hilda was a sweet girl, a true lady, admired by everybody. Ruth has known her well and loved her: she felt at home with us and we with her. Poor Godwin!' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 166-167

In her will Hilda left everything to Peter. He had no time to consider the practical implications nor to come to terms with her death. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 167

We carry within us the wonders we seek without us: There is all Africa and her prodigies in us. Sir Thomas

Browne, Religio Medici, pt. i, par. 3 Jung's Apprentice, Page 168

While Jung was in London in the summer of 1925 for the Swanage seminar, he had visited the Wembley Exhibition in London and wrote that he 'was deeply impressed by the excellent survey of the tribes under British rule and resolved to take a trip to tropical Africa in the near future.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 168

So we have a visual record of the party of four, Jung, Peter, a young American, George Beckwith, and a young English woman, Ruth Bailey, who joined them later. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 169

It was actually while he was packing to go that Hilda had taken her life. She had threatened to do this if he left her and now the threat had been carried out. Peter had decided that he could not let Jung down. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 169

'His wife's death made the African journey difficult for him, although it also meant a great deal to him, especially in retrospect. Peter once told me - with the endearing self-criticism of which he was capable - that he had been a terrible wet blanket on the trip.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 170

Dr X explained. 'Dr Jung', he said, 'is interested in dreams and their interpretation, and as a change from studying them among the highly civilized people of Europe, he wants to get further back and see if he can learn anything from a fairly primitive people. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 171

The DC welcomed them with a blazing fire and a glass of whisky in his impeccably English drawing-room. For a day after this, Jung was incapacitated with a fever and laryngitis. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 172

Jung describes an unpleasant encounter with a pack of hungry hyenas who were attracted by the savoury smells of their roasting lamb. One hyena had gone into the hut belonging to their cook and had nearly killed him. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 172

Here, each day, Jung and Peter would conduct their daily palavers with the Elgonyis in a combination of Swahili and sign language. It was now that the real business of this expedition began as Jung and Peter began to converse and interact and to join in the lives of these wonderfully natural, dignified and beautiful people. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 174

Jung goes on to comment that women in the West have lost this sense of their own natural wholeness and he wonders ’whether the growing masculinisation of the white woman is not connected with the loss of her natural wholeness (shamba, children, livestock, house of her own, hearth, fire) and whether the feminising of the white man is not a further consequence.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 175

’My companions and I had the good fortune to taste the world of Africa, with its incredible beauty and its equally incredible suffering, before the end came. Our camp life proved to be one of the loveliest interludes in my life. I enjoyed the "divine peace" of a still primaeval country. Carl Jung, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 175

During the palavers Jung, sitting on a small stool, would converse, with the help of a dictionary, in Swahili, and contrary to Hislop’s prediction, most of the natives spoke enough pidgin Swahili for simple conversations to take place. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 175

They were approaching Egypt from Africa, as Jung had always wished to do, coming from the darkness of the primaeval experience into the light of an ancient civilization, and flowing with the ancient life-force symbolized by the great River Nile. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 193

Jung made his notes and considered the powerful effect Africa had had on him; an adventure, epitomised by the wild African dancers, that had taken him completely by storm. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 193

The African adventure was a powerful experience for Peter, but he was like a man haunted by the ghostly presence of his dead wife. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 194

For the joy of love is too short, and the sorrow thereof, and what cometh thereof, dureth over long. Sir Thomas Malory, Le Marte D’Arthur, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 195

Jung’s two colleagues, Peter and Cary de Angulo, both involved in the translation of Jung’s books into English, and both left with the care of a young child, make a ’sensible’ marriage. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 195

Peter’s return from Africa brought him face to face with the terrible tragedy of his wife’s death. He speaks of being haunted by her spirit. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 195

She [Hilda] could not free her soul from the clutching fingers, which caught her out of the chaos of the past, by means of life. Therefore she was forced to free herself by death. Freedom she must have at all costs and I was merely part of the cost. Life had proved too much for her and she had to give it up. Her last word to me was her undying belief in Love ... Yesterday I stood beside her grave and wondered if her spirit was in the breeze that rustled the autumn leaves. Throughout the year her spirit had been with me. By negation of the body and its functions she went over almost completely to the life of the spirit so that the shedding of the body became an inevitable need for her cramped and tormented soul. Thus she became a spirit of great power and constantly she affects me. Whether this relation exists in the world or solely in my soul I cannot say, but for me her spirit lingers. She is my guide, because her main preoccupation was religion. Religion seized her and ·broke her . . . only from the angle of religion does her life appear meaningful and intelligible. Her religious instinct was her only paramount guide by which she held her precarious course. Therefore like Pallas Athena, Hilda often assumes the guise of Mentor and stands beside me holding me to that same quest and striving in that same warfare. But her spirit has gone through a transformation. She has relinquished her personal and limited notions of truth ... she has become an influence that is in a way personal in effect but celestial in intention. Very like the influence which Pallas Athena exercised upon Ulysses. H.G. Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 195-196

It was during the Jungian conference in Swanage in the fateful year of 1925, that Peter had first come into close contact with Cary de Angulo. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 196

Cary was American, a woman of Peter’s age and in a similar situation: her first marriage had come to an end in 1924, although she remained on friendly terms with her ex-husband Xaime De Angulo. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 196

He [Cary’s first husband] was an anthropologist and a Spanish aristocrat but he had become an American citizen by the time he married Cary. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 196

Cary had come to live in Zurich in 1921 with her sister Henri Zinno, and they had a house together on the far side of the lake from Kusnacht. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 196

During this time he renewed his friendship with Cary, finding in her a ready and empathic ear: although she was not herself an analyst, she was able to listen with understanding as he spoke to her of his anguish over Hilda’s death. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 196

It was this friendship with Cary that enabled Peter to recover from the trauma and guilt which he suffered Chapter Fourteen - A new Marriage: Cary de Angulo 197 in relation to Hilda’s death and soon the friendship blossomed into love. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 196-197

However, Jung did in reality have grave misgivings about this union. They were far out on the Zurich See, swimming together, when Peter proposed to Cary, and Jung saw this as an indication that they were too much in the unconscious with regard to their relationship. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 197

But his main concern was that Cary, although she was a fine looking woman, was essentially not Peter's anima-type. She was a big, strong-minded, independent woman of forty years old, and Peter was still dreaming of his inspiritrice, a young, slender girl of exquisite feminine beauty. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 197

There [Cary Baynes], standing up in her virgin dawn of bright beauty, was a maid slim in body, and her hair shone. She was looking down into the water. Then it seemed to me that she looked up and saw me with eager and innocent love. She flew to me and immediately embraced me with all her youthful heat and she had no shame and no shrinking and I wondered what fair being should be born of such a mating under the Sun. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 197

Finally, they came to a decision together and Cary and Peter were married on Saturday March 19th, 1927 at Marylebone Town Hall. The only witnesses to this marriage were his dear, loyal sister Ruth and her friend, Bertha. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 198

Therefore I must persistently bore through the conscious resistance and let myself go as Jung had to do. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 198

So, Marlowes House, complete with pony, became a child's paradise, but a Daddy [Peter Baynes] who was creating a niche for Jungian Psychology in the somewhat antagonistic professional world of London had no time to join in the celebrations of his daughter's thirteenth birthday. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 201

Both Cary and Peter were occupied with the translation of Jung's books and papers into English. Cary also undertook a translation of the I Ching (The Book of Changes), into English, from the German translation of Wilhelm, and this is still the standard English version of that great Chinese book of wisdom. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 202

It was at this time that Peter and Cary first met Joseph Henderson. Joe was working as a journalist and was in analysis with a student of Jung's called Elizabeth Whitney. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 204

I met Godwin (Peter) Baynes first when he and his third wife, Cary, were staying in her house in Carmel, a seaside resort on the Monterey Peninsular in California, in 1927-28. Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 204

I was in analysis with Dr. Elizabeth Whitney in San Francisco, a recent student of Jung. I had gone to her after my graduation from Princeton University and I was looking for my vocation. Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 204

Peter opened the way for me to continue my analysis with Jung two years later and after that he opened the way for me to go to medical school at his old hospital, St. Bartholomew, in London, where I spent the nineteen-thirties and my real life in the world began. Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 204

'You [Joseph Henderson] should be in Europe, studying with Jung, why are you out here on the West Coast? If you want to do it you will find a way.' Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 205

During one of their first meetings, Peter showed Joe one of Jung's paintings of a Gnostic mandala. Joe was fascinated by Gnostic philosophy, which held the belief that those who professed Gnosticism had a special lmowledge and understanding of the profound spiritual mysteries. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 205

When Elizabeth Whitney heard that Peter had introduced Joe to this book, she was shocked. She exclaimed: 'He gave you the Seven Sermons of the Dead? But you're only 25 ! This book belongs to the second half of life. The mandala is a visual impression of everything that is contained in the book. When Joe saw the mandala he said that he then knew that he had to work with Jung. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 205

Many years later, when his [Joseph Henderson] training as an analyst was complete, he was to become the pioneer for Jungian analysis on the American West Coast. At the age of 98, he is still in practice there. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 206

In Zurich Peter and Cary befriended me and I was frequently at their charming house and I saw them regularly at Jung's Wednesday morning English seminar during the academic year 1929-30. Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 207

In a recent interview, Joe [Henderson] has stated that there was no formal training at that time in Zurich and the Jung Institute was not founded until after the Second World War; so nothing was happening of a professional nature except the Wednesday morning seminars. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 207

Joe [Henderson] speaks of those who were worlding alongside Jung in Zurich at the time. They were; 'Toni [Wolff], Cary (who never worked as an analyst) Peter, Emma Jung and "C.G.".' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page

On being asked what these difficulties were, he replies: ’Ximena was impossible. Very pretty and intelligent, but spoilt. I remember Peter saying,

’she’s the best goat-catcher I know.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 207

’Jung told me he [Peter] was quite difficult in Africa - he didn’t seem to understand that Peter did need to mourn, and to take time to recover.’ Of Peter and Cary’s relationship, Joe says that it seemed fine on the surface, ’but not underneath. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 207

Jung said they felt they [Peter & Cary] should marry to please him, but that wasn’t true. This was the big mistake: although they outwardly played the happy family, inside there was no true love.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 207

“C.G.” was the nickname given to Jung by his Anglo Saxon friends; Barbara Hannah notes: ’I think the custom originated with Peter Baynes.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 207

Joe [Henderson] describes Jung’s approach as ’deeper’ and Peter’s as ’broader’, the two together, ’encompassing the whole dimension of the cross, with both the vertical and the horizontal characteristics.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 208

But he [Peter] was also in need of a woman who could inspire and delight him and who would to some extent reflect his anima, and with her sensible clothes, her fine intellect and her poor relationship to her womanly warmth and physical being, this was something Cary could never fulfil. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 210

Joe Henderson comments that Peter ’tended to think that the marriage was what Jung would want him and Cary to do and Jung said himself to me once that he had no such idea at all. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 210

Joe [Henderson] thought that Peter had treated Cary badly and he felt sorry for her. He remarks: ’I remember her saying, "I always said I would never be the rejected woman." Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 210

She [Cary Baynes] has the honesty and integrity of a man in not indulging this dark side of her. She consumes her own smoke as well as she can. But she is very hard to live with. But so am I . . . My life is complicated by the fruits of much desiring. She, if anything, has desired too little. She seems to have very few needs and wants, whereas I hang out of the window, always wanting something out of my grasp. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 211

He [Peter] experiences in the neediness of 'woman' a 'vampirizing' effect and at some level he feels that Hilda still holds his soul and that he is not yet free to truly love another woman. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 212

This was why Jung had insisted that Hilda's dependence should not prevent Peter from joining the African expedition. The 'vampirizing' could end by destroying them both. However, something of this 'possession' from which Hilda suffered continued to haunt Peter long after her death, so, as he confesses to himself, he was not at that time available to the love of a woman. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 213

It was soon after his marriage to Cary that Peter was already having fantasies about a beautiful young woman called Agnes Leay (who had some years previously been a patient of his). Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 213

Belief consists in accepting the affirmations of the soul; unbelief in denying them. Ralph Waldo Emerson: Representative Men; Jung's Apprentice, Page 219

'and finally I lit upon the girl Agnes and imbued her with beauty and desire ... For all these women called to you because of their distress. Their insanity, their loneliness, their fear of ghosts.' Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 214

In this fantasy Peter has had a direct encounter with his anima guide and also with the person who was to personify his anima and who later was to become his wife. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 215

Joe [Henderson] had become a confidante of both Peter and Cary and he was probably one of the first people to know that their marriage was on the rocks. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 215

Cary did not long suffer the pain of a rejected wife, but while she was still in it, I was temporarily disenchanted with Peter, not for divorcing Cary, but for not seeming to recognise her sense of loss. Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 216

Agnes Leay (she preferred to be called Anne), had been to see Peter for help when she was twenty-one. She was in love with a married American man who was already well established in life with four children. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 219

There had been problems in her [Agnes Leay] family that were affecting her: her sister had been diagnosed with schizophrenia and her father suffered from paranoia; she felt that psychic balance was a precarious thing but was also reluctant to admit that she might be suffering from any imbalance herself. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 219

Something of the vulnerability and sadness of this beautiful girl [Agnes Leay] had entered Peter's soul and it was soon after his marriage to Cary that he began to dream of her as his anima or soul guide. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 220

Anne [Leay] was the moon goddess who had, unbidden, entered the scene of Peter's unconscious world and she was there to stay, no matter how much he might make vows that he would 'sacrifice the desires engendered' by her. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 220

Yet something in Cary remained unfulfilled and desperately sad as a result of this betrayal of her own instinctual life. Peter comments on the 'terribly sad look on her face. Whenever I surprise that sad, forlorn woman looking out of her eyes I just want to go off and weep.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 221

She [Cary Baynes] is the most decent woman in every respect and I think the most devoted and conscientious and the cruel thing is that it is her very decency which has betrayed her. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 221-222

Anne was altogether different from the other women who had been important in Peter's life. Whereas Rosalind was an artist and feminist with very definite ideas of her own, Hilda a talented pianist and Cary a woman of very considerable intellectual gifts, Anne was just herself, and happy to give herself totally to the man she loved. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 221

Cary had a generous and noble spirit. She recognized that she was unable to give Peter what he needed and that he was profoundly unhappy. It was she who had originally suggested he should find himself a love partner.

Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 222

Jung had been hoping to hand over his practice to Peter during the following winter in order to concentrate on some writing. Peter’s threat to leave Cary and marry a much younger woman was a blow to him: he did not feel it would be possible for Peter to continue working in Zurich after his divorce. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 222

They started after the talk with Jung when Peter had ’with the help of C.G.’ in November 1929, decided ’that Anne is altogether too fragile to stand the squalls and whirlpools of my anima.’ As a result of this, he withdrew from her and for a time had a lightning romance with a patient of Jung’s whom he refers to as Maggie R. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 222- 223

He [Peter Baynes] told Maggie that he was in love with Anne and they had a brief affair with that understanding. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 223

He had [Peter Baynes] chosen two women for wives who had commanded his respect, love, admiration and even worship, but not his desire. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 223

But because his anima had up till now led him such a dance, he was unable to trust these feelings. It was the siren’s song leading him once again into deep water, leaving him without will or consciousness. He was dreading the necessity of confronting Jung with the question of his divorce from Cary. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 224

C.G. has been away in France with Emma ever since I got back. I had only a word with him over the telephone before he left so I have been wondering a lot what he will think about my divorce. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 224

It was as though Hilda had personified his spiritual nature: she appeared to him to be pure ’geistlich’ (spiritual) with no relationship to her physical self, whereas Cary was pure intellect and for Peter represented the logos aspect and was only able to relate to a man through her thinking. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 224-225

He (Jung) said: ’She [Agnes Leay] is the ideal anima-woman. It is her vocation.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 225

I have become accustomed to the idea that my own personal love life was my own affair, since Cary and I could not share it, and now I discover this is not so. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 226

Perhaps Cary and C.G. were right and it was a sort of infatuation which ought to be given up both for your sake and mine. I never believed that, but none the less such thoughts came like crows and settled in the branches and made their raucous clamour. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 227

Of course I knew only too well that the sexual tension was abnormal and was obscuring my mind so that I could not reason sensibly about you. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 227

Students and patients alike were all in Zurich to analyse with either Jung or with one of his assistants: Emma Jung, Toni Wolff and Peter were the three people who were working most closely with Jung.   Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 227

Jung felt that the contact with analysands outside the sessions, during conferences or at social gatherings, was often the most helpful of all. But with so many transferences floating around it created a somewhat incestuous situation, with everyone vying with one another for Jung's attention. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 229

Anne my darling, I am tired out and my heart feels like lead. I cannot tell you yet all the arguments which C.G. used which have caused this war within. He was so tremendously impressive because his humanity spoke to me.   Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 230

He [Jung] believes that I have allowed myself to be misled by my anima and have interpreted your feeling for me, and have even sought to awaken it, on a mistaken basis. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 230

He [Jung] did not say I made you [Agnes] love me on false pretences, but he said that to marry me as he knows me and as Cary knows me would not be a natural choice for a young and gentle woman.   Peteer Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 230

He [Jung] also said that I was mysticizing [sic] sexuality and that my attitude to sex was hysterical, because I had not sufficiently differentiated spiritual motives from sex motives. He said the mysticizing of sex had surely made a deep emotional appeal to you [Agnes]. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 230

He [Jung] was heavily involved, not only with the care of Margaret Radford (sister to his dear friend Maitland Radford), who had had a psychotic breakdown and had been admitted to the Burgholzli asylum, but more recently, with the breakdown of Cary's sister, Henri Zinno, who had turned up suddenly at the Burgholzli in a state of acute confusion; she was having hallucinations and was hearing voices. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 231

Anne had already had a warm friendship with Cary from the visits she had made, together with her friend Laura Wolsey, to Peter and Cary's home in Hemel Hempstead, before they went for their sabbatical in California. The two women were genuinely fond of one another. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 231-232

My dear Anne, Thanks very much for your letter. I never thought of you as wanting to take Peter away. The problems of his own nature do that. Cary Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 232

She [Anne] later described this momentous visit. Peter suggested straight away that they should go to Bollingen to talk with Jung. This was on a Sunday and Jung was staying there together with Toni Wolff. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 232

Toni was Jung's first assistant and was also a woman of unusual intuitive flare and rare intelligence. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 232

Emma is reputed to have said, later in life, that she was forever indebted to Toni for assisting Jung during his powerful and difficult experience of the unconscious, when he felt at times in danger of losing his way and his very identity. Emma felt she would have been unable to give him the support and understanding he needed. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 232

Her [Anne] mother suffered from depression and had committed suicide the previous year. Anne had arrived home on April 15th 1929, after staying in Malta, to find her mother had taken an overdose of sleeping tablets. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 236

Laura Leay had been separated from her husband, Fred, for seven years. His paranoia and his bizarre accusations against his wife, in relation to infidelity and the embezzlement of his money, had become intolerable and he had finally been committed to an asylum. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 236

It is because of the ghosts that we absolutely need to hold on to a warm human hand and replenish the larder of faith by human consideration and understanding. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 238

The ghost of your mother seduces you through your pity. You cannot harden your heart against her just as I could not against Hilda and for that reason, Jung says she nearly pulled me over into unconscious suicide when I was in Africa. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 238

Inevitably, Anne had been left with a sense of guilt as a result of her mother’s suicide. While she was enjoying herself as the guest of Admiralty House in Malta, being feted by the British Navy, her mother had reached the ultimate moment of despair. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 237

Let man renew his love in thy pure rays He shall fill the womb of his Beloved With the joyful seed of his loins in praise and wonder For his joy springeth from the foundation of thy power. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 238

Every time I hit this kind of place I have to lash out because to me it is a clear denial of beauty. And I hate every system that kills beauty and freedom. And yet it is a superb country and the fair curves of the highlands are as good and rich as honey is sweet. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 239

Anne, I cannot think how life was tolerable at all before I loved you. I think very few men are able to realise how deeply unhappy they have been until they know what it is to love …There is no drawing back before the doubts and difficulties, but a deep calm, like the smile of heaven. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 239

What he had regarded as his main problem in his analysis with Jung, his ’erotic complex’, was no longer driving him: his ’erotic charger’ was at last broken in and was under his command. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 241

Could Peter have known, when he wrote his views on Lawrence, that Rosalind had had an affair with him and was, perhaps, Lawrence’s model for Lady Chatterley? Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 242

It is not sexuality that is wrong but always it is a man's attitude to it which determines its character. My fight for the last two years [i.e. since falling in love with Anne] has been to build and shape an attitude which accords with love and agrees with Nature. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242

If one thinks always of one's own need one loses consideration and warm feeling for the loved woman. If you think of her too much you can lose touch with the necessities of your own nature and try and live through her as it were. It is a razor edge. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242

He [Peter] saw Anne as the one person who could effect this reconciliation between artist and priest: 'If they could agree together, life itself would be the moral art work fed by the passion of both.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242

At the beginning of his analysis with Jung, he had spoken of this conflict in him [Peter], between the doctor-scientist and the singer-artist. Jung's advice to him then was 'to sing his analytic work'. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242

Peter wrote, 'it is always the bravest of men against whom Fate sends her thunderbolts.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 243

Peter commented: 'I really feel Cary is the most devoted friend and I know if I were not married to her my friendship would never be shaken.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 243-244

C.G. is very distant and obviously with intention. He feels that I am going wrong and am cutting myself off. At least, that is what I have gathered from Cary and Maggie … But Cary has been unusually friendly and human to me, and Emma Jung has been very nice too. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 244

The pain is bad because I love C.G. and have given him all my loyalty, so that when he turns from me, as though all virtue had gone out of me, it is like an icy wind of December … I think the only way is for us to talk it out face to face. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 244

'I can see we ought to submit the question of our marriage to the elders of the tribe, as it were, because that is also a question of social ethic and in such things we have to submit to extra personal authority.' Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 246

’You [Anne] have a very distinctive mana or power which evokes the best character in my anima and through that intercourse she becomes pregnant and brings forth her value with the light. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 247

He [Peter] had worked for seven years in the shadow of Jung. He wrote of Jung’s ’contemptuous dismissal of my attempt at creation (which) made me lose all heart and courage.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice 248

’I shall not recover his [Jung] friendship, I think, because he could not agree with my ending my … marriage and my entrance into a new life with a new and young partner.’ Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 248

In a talk Peter had with Toni Wolff, she too had made it abundantly clear that she felt this marriage would end in disaster. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 248

’I wonder whether Anne’s woman’s biological instinct is really very good in choosing you as her mate, because of the fact that owing to the development of an inner life which comes to a man of your years, you would not have so much interest and libido for young children, or be so completely in that phase as a younger man would be.’ Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 248

Jung … has also compromised with his evil side. But he did it with his eyes open and knew what he did. But you [he is addressing himself] created a rainbow illusion of fantasy in order not to see what you were doing. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 248

Resolved-this 9th February 1931 never to hold Peter to account for the pain which I may suffer through him. To give him all the gentle love in my power - and to stand firm, and to bless him for his great gifts to me. To remember that deep and singular desire in Ruth’s words: ’to be a good wife to a good man!’

To follow the road leading to the star knowing the difficulties, yet with faith, courage and high heart. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 239-250

’You [Anne] have a very distinctive mana or power which evokes the best character in my anima and through that intercourse she becomes pregnant and brings forth her value with the light. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 247

He [Peter] had worked for seven years in the shadow of Jung. He wrote of Jung’s ’contemptuous dismissal of my attempt at creation (which) made me lose all heart and courage.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice 248

'I shall not recover his [Jung] friendship, I think, because he could not agree with my ending my … marriage and my entrance into a new life with a new and young partner.' Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248

In a talk Peter had with Toni Wolff, she too had made it abundantly clear that she felt this marriage would end in disaster. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248

'I wonder whether Anne's woman's biological instinct is really very good in choosing you as her mate, because of the fact that owing to the development of an inner life which comes to a man of your years, you would not have so much interest and libido for young children, or be so completely in that phase as a younger man would be.' Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248

Jung … has also compromised with his evil side. But he did it with his eyes open and knew what he did. But you [he is addressing himself] created a rainbow illusion of fantasy in order not to see what you were doing. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248

Also of course, Cary, and perhaps Ximena, who although she was only twelve, was a young girl who already possessed considerable charm and maturity, and she had become for Peter like a daughter. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248

'I hardly knew how broken and unhappy I had been until I crossed the threshold of your little temple. I was in the dark, excluded from the communion of love … and the warring parties within gave me no hope of peace or reconciliation. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 249

Life at bottom was just a torment and there was no purpose that had any relation with happiness. I could heal others but myself I could not heal.' Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 249

Yet, what he [Peter] had earlier told Barbara Hannah was also true, that 'beyond doubt his true vocation was to be Jung's assistant'. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 250-251

He [Peter] remembered the quote from. Katherine Mansfield's prayer which had been so important for Anne:

’Oh God, make me crystal clear that thy light may shine through’, and recognized this was his prayer also. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 251

It was Emma Jung in her own deeply personal and feminine way, who was ultimately able to release Peter from. this state of conflict and indecision. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 251

On Monday I spent the whole evening with Emma Jung alone at her house (C.G. was at Aarau lecturing to Christians). Emma was just lovely. We just seemed to get to a calm. leisurely mood like a broad river where we found the most human understanding. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 251

The divorce from Cary was finally settled and while this was in progress Peter shared a flat with Joe Henderson, close to Bart’s hospital where Joe was doing his medical training. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 252

Here, beside a swift flowing stream, lulled by the gentle murmur of the autumn breeze, with the sweet autumnal scents and with the great blue arc of the heavens above them, they [Peter & Anne] made love. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 252

Peter and Anne were married shortly before Christmas in 1931, at the Registry Office in South Kensington. The only other person present at their marriage was Joe Henderson. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 253

Peter was now well known in London and his unique experience was increasingly in demand: there were several Americans in England looking for a Jungian analyst and when Hitler began to gain power in the thirties, a number of Jewish people came over to London from Germany to train as ’lay’, in other words, as non-medical, analysts. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 253-254

’You ask to be free my brother. I ask you not what are you seeking freedom from, but what are you seeking it for. To what end shall your freedom fly. Peter Baynes (Quoting Nietzsche), Jung’s Apprentice, Page 254

[Excerpt Peter’s “Hymn to the Sun.”]

Let man renew his love in thy pure rays.

He shall fill the womb of his beloved,

With the joyful seed of his loins in praise and wonder.

For his joy springeth from the foundation of thy power. Peter Baynes to Anne, Jung's Apprentice, Page 256

Joe Wheelwright, who together with Joe Henderson, was to introduce Jungian psychology to the West of America, was also in London in the early 1930' s. He and his new wife Jane, who was expecting their first baby, had returned from their studies in China. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 258

In September of that year the Bayneses were delighted to have a visit from Emma Jung, who came to stay at Reed House together with two of her four children, Franz and Lille. She was to be the guest of honour at the Analytical Psychology Club and the whole evening was devoted to the discussion of her paper on the animus. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 258

This was the first time Anne had met Emma. They liked each other at once and a strong friendship developed between them. Emma became an important person in Anne's life and the following year, when her baby was just eighteen months old, she went to Zurich for a month to work with Emma. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 258

She [Anne] wrote that her time with Emma was making everything seem extraordinarily clear and that 'we seem to have a fine understanding together.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 258

Emma, with her woman's wisdom and warmth, could give Anne the affirmation she had never received from her own mother, and was also an important role model: 'I do love Emma', she wrote, 'She does symbolise for me the kind of woman I want to be.' Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 258

Best of all, she [Anne] had been invited to dine with Emma together with two of her daughters, Agi and Marianne and about this invitation Anne was 'tremendously excited'. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 259

He [Jung] spoke of never countering black magic with more magic or the laying of ghosts with incantations. He stressed the need to become conscious: not to combat a wrong situation with unconscious means, but 'to purify yourself and perhaps the situation may improve.' Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 259

The pursuit of black magic is about using the power of the unconscious for ego purposes, which leads finally to the disintegration of society. But when one unites the conscious with the unconscious then life becomes full of meaning, 'and one needs to hold the conscious condition against the tremendous weight and power of collectivity. Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 260

It is when one steps beyond the limitations of whatever one is identified with, that a person can achieve consciousness, 'and when consciousness is being extended, then one may expect visions or manifestations of the great, the powerful one, the old ape-man in us - who is best personified in Pan.' Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 260

Toni' s criticisms of Peter's book were not helpful. She felt that the drawings and paintings of the patient Peter was describing were too disturbed and that it was not possible to demonstrate the effectiveness of depth psychology with such disturbing material. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 260-261

Peter was now experiencing increasing discomfort and misery from his duodenal ulcer, which he had become aware of when he first began working with Jung. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 265

Particularly intuitive individuals are inclined to disregard the reality of their body, of themselves and of the surrounding conditions. Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 265

One of Peter's early patients, Mabel Weiss, remembers her sessions with 'Daddy Baynes' with astonishing vividness. She spoke of the warmth of his personality; his interest in her and of his sensitivity. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 266

He had the simplicity that must come from having lived a great deal. If you brushed against his life ever so lightly it was like tapping on a deep well. You felt all that you could not hear.' Mabel Weiss, Jung's Apprentice, Page 266

She [Anne] has the most gracious art of companionship. She is a loyal friend and eager lover. In her motherhood she is frugal and disciplined and wise. She has shown me the healing power of woman. Above all she is tender in her beauty and never arrogant. It is more than my heart dreamed of. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 267

My personal inner cup is full and I ask nothing more. But it could only grow at the expense of a certain detachment from Jung and his circle. My identification with him had to end. It was having a dreadful effect. Peter

Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 267

As long as Peter identified his spiritual being with Jung, as though he were God, his own creative energy was unable to flow. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 268

Moreover, the compulsive sexuality which had seemed to control him [Peter] was, perhaps, because in his identification with Jung, he had placed too great a value on the spiritual and intellectual values, so that his physical nature, which he neglected, simply ran amok. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 268

He [Peter] wrote that since his marriage to Anne, this compulsive character in relation to his sexual libido had entirely disappeared. In this new marriage a true home-coming had taken place in both his inner and his outer life. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 268

He [AshtonSwatldn] has recently been in Berlin negotiating with Hitler. Peter says he lent Ashton-Swatkin a copy of Jung’s paper on Wotan which he has translated into English and is now circulating round the foreign office. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 272

Peter was keen to make it known to Jung that his separation from him was not a split or a conflict in any way with what Jung stood for, but that it was a necessary and inevitable part of Peter’s own development. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 274

Baynes’ masterly demonstration of the emergence and development of a hero myth together with its therapeutic effect upon the patient as an inner personal experience of death and rebirth. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 274

The insect drawings you [Peter] mention don’t necessarily prove that there is a psychosis. They only show that there is a certain tendency towards a basic schizophrenic dissociation, the insects representing autonomous (Mendelian?) units that have a certain tendency to autonomy. Carl Jung, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 275

While he was in Berchtesgaden, in June 1938, Peter wrote to Jung about Freud’s arrival in London to escape the Nazi persecution in Austria: Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 281

In the end, it turned out that the Freudian Society declined to have anything to do with the Congress, which was a disappointment to Peter, 'although this merely means that [Ernest] Jones is a dictator and enjoys these tedious displays of power.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 282

This was a good time for them all [Baynes Family & Emma]. Jung was entirely at ease with small children and delighted in their company. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 284

As Ximena remembered, when she was so often at the Jung's house as a young child, 'Jung was a very friendly person of imposing stature. He inspired confidence and trust in me, as a child. Perhaps this was because he was very real, and in his own skin, not just giving off hot air.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 284

Christopher [Baynes] also remembered Jung as a warm, huge and friendly person who was entirely on the same wavelength as a child. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 284

This time with Emma and Jung was the first opportunity for Anne and Peter to meet with them as a foursome. It was especially important for Peter who was still unsure whether his marriage to Anne had created a barrier between himself and Jung. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 285

Although Emma had, ultimately, wholeheartedly supported their marriage, Jung still had reservations about it. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 285

It was during this two week holiday that Jung was to accept Anne unreservedly as Peter's wife. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 286

'There was … a little village square with a butcher, baker and a little shop with rather sophisticated hats in it with a name over the door, "Madame Soul". This appealed to C.G. very much- the idea that he should find the anima in such a place.' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 286

'since … the goal of science and the goal of individuation are not only different but incompatible, we do a kind of injustice to the introverting quest when we present our material as though it was mensurable by scientific criteria.' Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 306

The ’Eternal Art’ of individuation is, Peter maintains, ’intrinsically alien to the rationalistic attitude of science. That is the difficulty in a nutshell.’ Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 306

’so with the new ideas that were being launched two thousand years ago. If they were to bring life to mankind, someone had to give his spirit to those ideas in order to make men know that their ideas had tremendous life. Therefore Jesus Christ was ldlled as the foundation stone of the Christian Church.’ Carl Jung, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 307

’This truth is a cruel teaching. But it had to be so as long as man was so unconscious of the reality of the spirit that he could only see it under the aspect of human sacrifice. The Spirit is cruel to man just so long as he cannot know its power in his life.’ Carl Jung, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 307

Peter’s deep admiration for Jung was in part founded in Jung’s courage at having encountered the Spirit, of having met his God, as it were, face to face; the direct experience of the absolute power of God. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 307

’Finland’s resistance is a moral tonic for the whole decent part of the world. It has done a lot of good to the general mood of Switzerland

too. Switzerland is slowly transforming herself into a real fortress [During WWII]. We are grateful that nothing has happened yet. This has given us a precious time for thorough preparations.’ Carl Jung, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 310

He [Jung] ends the letter: ’Let us hope for the Fins and for everybody on the human side of the world and anathema(!) to the peoples of the Great Monster!’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 310

’We are following the exploits of the R.A.F. with the greatest admiration and we marvel at the way the British people is carrying on. It is at least a light in the darkness which we feel very much being so close to it.’ Carl Jung, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 313

Peter now perceived Christopher as his puer aeternus which he must take with him on his own creative path; it is he who can show Peter the right path to take and who can help in Peter’s writing. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 314

’So I am really at bottom hunting for my soul and the soul is also the right way that life needs to go.’ Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 314

On the wall just above his [Peter] desk hung a signed photograph of Jung. When asked who this distinguished looking man might be he would reply: ’That is a picture of my teacher.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 315

Peter adds a final paragraph to this letter asking Jung if he has another typed copy of the Red Book that he could spare him: ’The thing I miss the most from the burning of my house was the loss of the typed copy of the Red Book which you gave me.’ Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 318

I am glad you [Jung] were interested in my book. I must confess, I scarcely expected you would be, since you would have treated the stuff so differently. And yet a good deal of my life went into it and you must naturally feel a stir of spiritual paternity in your bones when you read it. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 305

I have been proposing to the Archbishops a kind of college or centre be established for the treatment and training of men in the analytical way. Archbishop Temple responded to the idea very warmly and he is corresponding with me about it now. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 317-318

The shrieking of the demons is the stillness of the spirit. It means a withdrawal unheard of, until one hears the great silence. Carl Jung, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 320

As early as 1941 Peter was having a premonition of his death. He continued to suffer debilitating pain from his duodenal ulcer. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 320

As the end of his life approached, Peter seemed to become more preoccupied with his relationship to God, but this was not the God of his father - it was a god who seemed to have little to do with church worship. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 321

We have lost the reality of God as He appeared to the Jews and to our forefathers as a Power over against us. He now seems to come quietly out of the Earth-darkness into the circle of the single human flame and He calls this man or that man to His service. Peter Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, Page 321

The man of the earth wants to extinguish the light of heaven because it binds the soul too closely to necessitous striving and cruel lust. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 321

Through serving the Mother we gain realism, strength and nourishment. Through serving God the father we gain the light which shows us the Way and the Task. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 321

I wonder if it is ever possible to realise the Star without first being broken by daemonic powers. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 323

In the spring of 1943 Anne became mortally ill with septicaemia. The surgeon who looked after her said he would need to amputate the offending leg, where the infection had entered Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 324

He continued to communicate with her with his eyes, or by clasping her hand, but he never lost awareness of himself. Anne said how valuable this final month had been for him. He no longer felt he had to struggle to do things and the month of immobilization was like a wonderful preparation for death. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 324

Anne said: 'I think that only in this way was he able to accept death, by having a month when he could slowly relinquish his hold on life.' 324

Peter died on September 6th 1943, with Anne by his side. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 325

Finances, without Peter's salary, were stretched to the limit and at that time there was no government support for widows. But in spite of difficult circumstances, Anne's spirit was indomitable. She let half of Reed House, and the family lived on the proceeds. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 325

However, perhaps as a result of having been used as a clinical case, Fordham's feelings about Peter were ambivalent. He had left Peter to analyse with Hilda Kirsch because of these ambivalent feelings. The ambivalence veered between feelings of idealisation and intense antagonism. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 328

As early as January 1939 it was necessary to be careful in relation to the situation in Germany. Jung wrote to Peter expressing his concerns:

I am glad you have cut out the allusions to Germany. We have to be careful, of course, when it comes to any observations as to the present German conditions. The general mood in Germany is not just brilliant. The great progrome [sic] has caused a terrific revulsion in all decent Germans. I have heard very interesting details concerning the attitude of the army during the Tcheque crisis. Below the surface there is a division in the German mind which goes very deep. I think we have to reckon with the possibility of internal trouble, particularly in case of war. Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, 287-288

Anne is my wife. This morning I felt the faint knock of the child against the wall of the womb. Our boat has a keel and there is a steady breeze. In two weeks time we shall be going into our new home, Reed House. The dream is being realised. And what of the book I am trying to bring forth? I have chosen the notion of attempting to describe the soul as a positive function of the autonomous psyche. Side by side with this conception there runs the reality of the anima as a negative destructive demon. To write a natural history of the soul must involve both aspects. The soul has a daemonic nature and every daemon is potential god and devil. In other words out of chaos life emerges. My own life nearly foundered in chaos and bitterness before I could trust myself to the slender promptings of the divine child. When I think, I lose my way, and the light goes out. But when I hear the voice of the child I believe again in simple truth and cleareyed beauty. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 255

Resolved-this 9th February 1931 never to hold Peter to account for the pain which I may suffer through him. To give him all the gentle love in my power - and to stand firm, and to bless him for his great gifts to me. To remember that deep and singular desire in Ruth's words: 'to be a good wife to a good man!' To follow the road leading to the star knowing the difficulties, yet with faith, courage and high heart. Anne Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 239-250

C.G. has the same problem. His libido is still strong and possessive. He is never content. He built his tower as a tribute to the dream of life he would have liked to realize and never could. [This was Bollingen]. He had to compromise because his nature is essentially complex. He wants simplicity because he is not simple. He has always tried to foist upon Emma the tangible burdens of his complex strivings. He accumulates and then cannot maintain. Thus he is also surrounded by the decaying heaps of things and people from which his libido has receded and which are left to Emma to deal with. She expresses this remorseless continuity, this Abraxoid character to his desiring vitality. Always she reminds him of the debt intuitiveness piles up in the world of real things. He hates sensation because it is unexpressive, inarticulate and quite remorseless and indifferent to the flutters and strivings of intuition which is forever trying to escape from the real and the actual. New desires that add more and more to the heap of tangible liabilities must be renounced if this essential simplification is to be attained. Things cannot create happiness. They only make Egypt more lascivious and terrible in its effect. They only make you forget, like alcohol and infatuation. This is terrible Abraxas which makes life and death with the same breath and in the same act. The right way for me is toward an increasing simplification of life in the midst of a world which goes ever towards an increasing specialization and complexity. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 211-212

She simply wants to separate … Beckwith [The third travelling companion in Africa] said she would not stand me six months. She says she brought me all the passion of her heart and I have never been more than lukewarm. All of this is from her angle perfectly true. I can see it too like that. The body is against it. All her adornment of her personality is in her intellectualism. There is no pride of the body in her. There she is abased and timorous. She is turned upside down. She tries to base herself on her distinctiveness or her differences from the common clay. But man's instinct goes to the deep general womanhood, not to the monument to the ideal of individuality. Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 212

Later on this image of the genial patriarch broke down when he divorced Cary, his life in Zurich ended, and he returned to England for good … Just as Peter returned to his roots in England, Cary ultimately returned to her country and settled in Connecticut where she became an important figure in the formation of the Bollingen Foundation which published Jung's Collected Works and other things of cultural importance for Analytical Psychology. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 215

On Monday I spent the whole evening with Emma Jung alone at her house (C.G. was at Aarau lecturing to Christians). Emma was just lovely. We just seemed to get to a calm. leisurely mood like a broad river where we found the most human understanding. She told me lots of things about herself and her deep feeling conclusions seem to me ever so true. So you see I was able to tell her about you and me … She said she would like awfully to know you. She got your spirit as a worn.an, I felt, and she said: 'You see Peter, I would never say that the way things are in our lives (meaning Toni and C.G.), is in any way a solution. She let me see how she had suffered and how she still suffers. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 251

As regards myself I felt for a week that you had completely taken the wind out of my sails, because I sensed that you had concluded from Toni's account that my whole work on those drawings was practically valueless. Then I said to myself, 'C.G has not read it and Toni is temperamentally averse from (sic) pathological material. I am a doctor, and it is precisely because the case was schizophrenic that I undertook the demonstration of the therapeutic evolution.

The case is valuable and I stand for the value I put into it.' Fromthat point I got right again and can appreciate the cogency and soundness of your criticism of the presentation. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 261 seen … similar ailments in psychological conditions where people were living beyond themselves, driven by certain unconscious contents. Particularly intuitive individuals are inclined to disregard the reality of their body, of themselves and of the surrounding conditions. An ulcer looks to me like the psychological blind spot that begins to ache in the body. For intuitive people it is hard to grip reality. They never can touch the thing in the right spot nor say what they really want to say, being intercepted on the way by all sorts of volatiles. An intestinal affection can be instead of a contemplation of inner life. We seem to be more apt to stand strain and hurry imposed upon us by external circumstances than when we apply that poisonous whip to ourselves. My very best wishes, Cordially yours, C.G. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Concerning the question of traumatic schizophrenia you are free to use this term in as much as you have sufficient evidence to substantiate such a term. It is quite possible and indeed even probable that a specific disposition consisting in a congenitally fragile tissue can be fatally upset by an emotion. It is even a wide spread experience that a psychosis can be acutely produced by overwhelming emotions. The insect drawings you mention don't necessarily prove that there is a psychosis. They only show that there is a certain tendency towards a basic schizophrenic dissociation, the insects representing autonomous (Mendelian?) units that have a certain tendency to autonomy. In the same way as the cave dweller has filled the remote corners of his caves with drawings of hunting animals, so your patient tries to catch his autonomous units by drawing them. He tries to keep them in association with his conscious mind, decreasing thus the danger that they all run away in different directions and disappear altogether. The fact that he can draw them shows that his conscious mind is synthetic enough to control these little beasts which, if the control should fail, would reappear as those well lmown schizophrenic personality-fragments or insulae. The insects that appear on the tree show that he succeeded in establishing the proper hierarchy in his unconscious. At least the picture points out that positive possibility. You lmow the schizophrenic disposition is rooted much deeper than the neurotic one. It really starts in the sympathetic system. I have seen the results of certain researches which are carried on by a chemist in the psychopathic hospital in Boston about schizophrenia. These results show that the physiological coordination of vegetative processes is just as much and in the same way disturbed as the mental coordination. The vegetative factors also go by themselves. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 275 in March, Jung wrote to Peter about the Jewish question: I'm glad you brought up the question of the German refugees. In the 'Statuten' of our International Society I took care to bring in the statement that German Jewish Doctors, whether living in Germany or abroad, could join our organization immediately without being members of the German "Landesgruppe". This paragraph naturally only refers to Germany, because in all the other countries (with the exception of Austria) Jewish members are admitted in the "Landesgruppe". It is therefore evident that any German refugee has a perfect right to attend our Congress and to read a paper, as any other member of the Congress. I should not advocate the exclusion of such names. If certain of the German delegates should feel uncomfortable, they have the individual right not to be present when the paper is read. It is of course understood that all political allusions should be avoided as it would be not only discourteous but also of exceedingly bad taste to make use of a scientific organization to fight over political follies. As Strauss himself is a Jew, I should like him to have a private chat with such refugees that want to read a paper. Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 280

'I expect you have heard that Freud is now living in London and the question occurred to me whether it would be a favourable opportunity to invite him to the International Congress [which was the following year being held in England]. He is of course very old and frail and almost certainly could not come, but I think it would be sound from every point of view to ask him to be a vice-president. I am sounding you about it unofficially, but I think it will quite likely be raised at the next Council Meeting.' Later in the letter he adds: 'My feeling is that, particularly in view of the special circumstances which account for his presence in England, we ought to offer Freud this honourable welcome and do it with generous warmth ... what do you think about it?' Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 281-282

I have no objection against inviting Freud. It will be a well meant gesture of which I'm sure he will not avail himself. If he did, he would deny his own principle on which he has always lived ... To the typed letter is added a p.s. in Jung's own handwriting: Concerning Freud's invitation I think it would be enough if the English Committee would send him a letter inviting him. You must realise that it was an awful trauma to him, to have lost my collaboration. If you call on him you confront him with this trauma. I should spare him. Peter thanks Jung for his letter. 'I shall certainly take your advice about that. I am told he [Freud] is going to practice in London and Anna Freud too and I believe there are six or seven Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, other analysts who have come with him from Vienna, so there is more or less a flood-tide in London. They have had a terrible time, I believe, in Vienna. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, 282 where Hitler is building a sort of guest house for visiting diplomats on the very summit of the Salzberg. It looks huge from below, and the people call it a tea house! But it looks to me like a cosmic fantasy. The light in it at night adds another star to the galaxies of heaven. He has 3000 workmen working up there on his mountain and a huge Kino and wooden barracks. Something terrific. The people are very nice about it. They laugh good naturedly at him, but he is undoubtedly secure in their loyalty. He must be a queer mixture. All the people here want to talk politics. It is like an obsession. However, you know all about that. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, 283

Forgive me that I did not react immediately. But what can you do when such an avalanche rolls over you unexpectedly? Your book is not only most unforeseen as regards volume but also as to contents. I already got drowned in it. Your foreword is almost overgenerous at least such a thing has never happened to me - most unexpected, most unforeseen! You will forgive me, if I say nothing about the contents yet. But I must give you my most hearty praise for the excellent way, in which your book is written. I wonder how your contemporaries will swallow this mighty pill. It may do something to them however. Well, the war will be a welcome excuse. I think the title of the book is aptly chosen, since the knowledge of the myth producing soul will be, or is already, a new and transfigured mythology. I beg you not to be impatient, as I have to read the book conscientiously. It will take a while until I can say more about it. I have been a bit ill lately, which is the reason why I am so slow. God, what a time! We all hope and pray for England’s victorySt George slaying once more the dragon. Many thanks! Yours cordially, C.G. Diana Baynes, Jung’s Apprentice, 304-305

My dear Peter This is the fateful year for which I have waited since more than 25 years. I did not lmow that it was a such a disaster. although since 1918 I knew that a terrible fire would spread over Europe, beginning in the North East. This year reminds me of the enormous earthquake in 26 B.C. that shook down the great Temple of Karnak. It was the prelude to the destruction of all temples, because a new time had begun. 1940 is the year where we approach the meridian of the first star in Aquarius. It is the premonitory earthquake of the New Age.

Up to the present moment, Bollingen has escaped, together with Switzerland - the general destruction, but we are in prison. You don’t see the walls, but you feel them. The newspapers are hushed and one hardly cares to read them, except for doubtful information about the war. For a while, just when I started your book, I went with all my grandchildren to the West of Switzerland, because we expected an attack. Afterwards I was very busy, because all doctors were with the army. It is awkward to write as the censor reads the stuff. But I must tell you how often I think of you and all my friends in England. I often complain that Mr. Chamberlain has not read my interview with Knickerbocker [an American reporter]. Your book is quite interesting and it seems as if your interpretations were hitting the nail on the head. Certain points would need some discussion. But one should talk, writing is too clumsy. It is difficult to be old in these days. One is helpless. On the other hand one feels happily estranged from this world. I like nature but not the world of man or the world to be. I hope this letter will reach you, and convey to you all the wishes the human heart can’t suppress, despite of censors. They are human too, after all. In autumn I resume my lectures at the E.T.H, about the individuation process in the Middle Ages! That's the only thing with me one could call up to date. I loathe the new style, the new Art, the new Music, literature, politics and above all, the new man. It's the old beast that has not changed since the troglodytes. My dear Peter, I am with you and with old England. 311-312

65

Godwin as a baby sitting on his mother's lap.
From left to right: Jack, Mary, Godwin, Milton,
Arnold and Muriel (1885)

Godwin, aged about two years

66

Godwin as a small boy

Baynes family. From left to right: Muriel, (unknown), Milton, (unknown), Godwin, Ruth,
Mary & Arnold. (Godwin, aged eight or nine)

67

Godwin's mother, Mary

68

Godwin's parents, Milton and Mary, reading in the garden with baby Ruth

69

Godwin as a young clerk in his father's timber firm (ca. 1905)

70

Family picnic near Mortimer Common
Left to right: Mary, Milton, Ruth, Muriel, Jack, Arnold, Godwin (with the mischievous grin!)
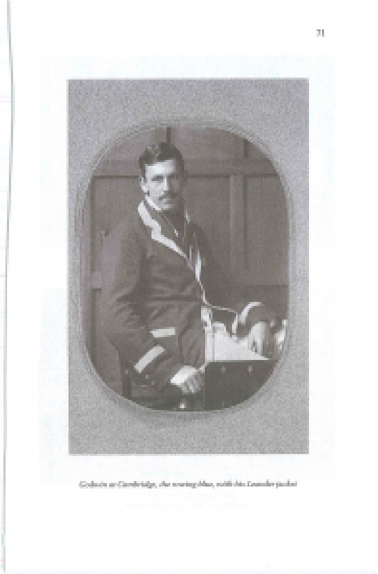
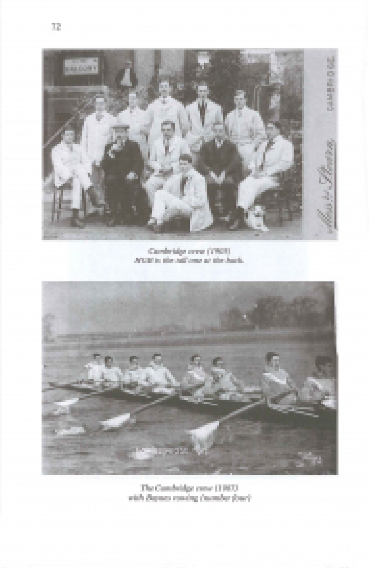
(Woman with hat in background, unknown)



Godwin at Cambridge, the rowing blue, with his Leander jacket



Cambridge crew (1905)
NGB is the tall one at the back.

The Cambridge crew (1903) with Baynes rowing (number four)

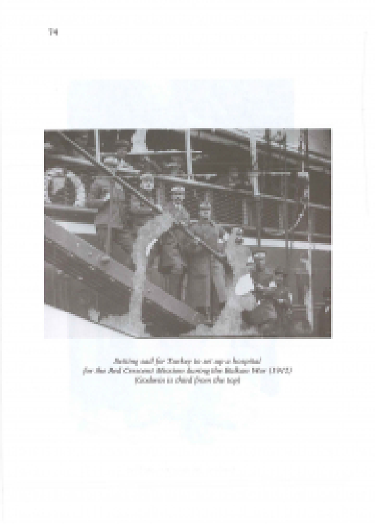
Godwin, the giant rowing blue



Setting sail for Turkey to set up a hospital for the Red Crescent Mission during the Balkan War (1912)
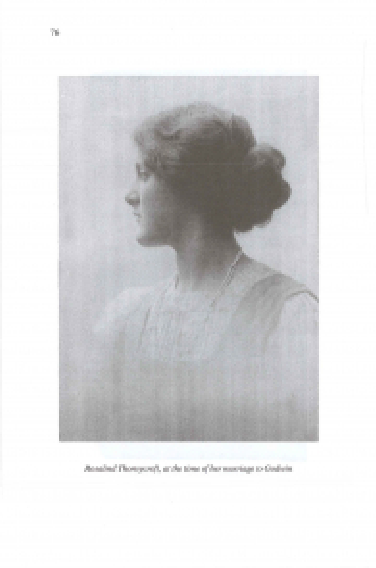
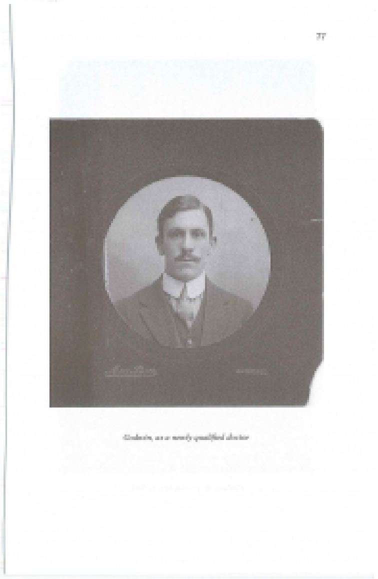
Godwin is third (from the top)

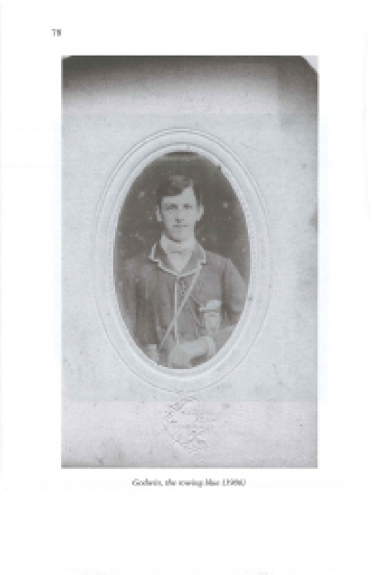
Captain Baynes, RAMC, First World War



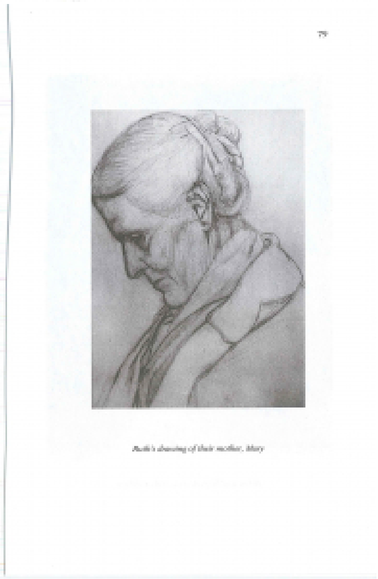
Rosalind Thornycroft, at the time of her marriage to Godwin



Godwin, as a newly qualified doctor

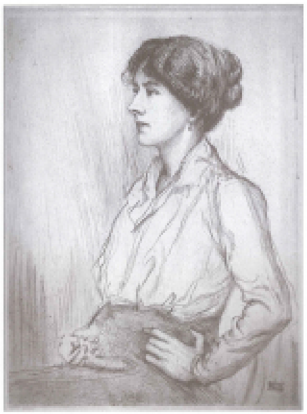


Godwin, the rowing blue (1906)



Ruth's drawing of their mother, Mary

Helton and Mary Baynes, in their old age

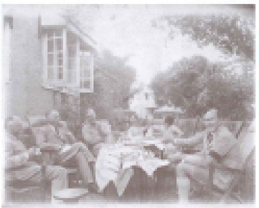


Hilda Davidson (ca. 1924)

Hilda's son, Christopher (1938)

Peter, Ruth Bailey and Jung, in Uganda (1925)

George Beckwith, Ruth Bailey and Jung, in native dress



Jung and Peter at the District Commissioner's house in Uganda (1925)
(Jung is second from the left, and Peter is third from the left.)

Jung, Ruth Bailey and Peter, at their camp on Mount Elgon, in Uganda (1925)

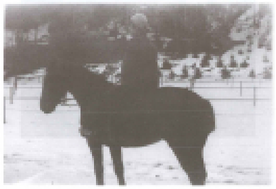
Skiing holiday in Gstaad (1929)
Peter and Cary sledging



Cary on horseback

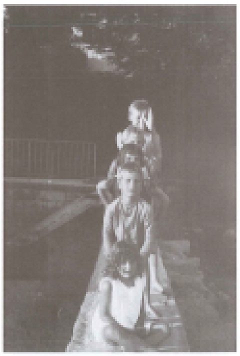
Peter in Africa (1925)

Peter
He was an expert with the boomerang.

185

Cary Baynes at Harkness House (ca. 1927)

186



From bottom upwards:
Bridget Baynes, unknown, Lilli Jung, unknown, Franz Jung on a wall near the Jung's home in Küsnacht (1921)

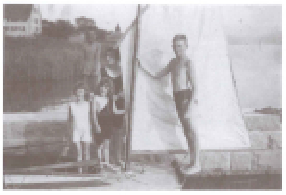
187

Bridget Baynes and Franz Jung
by the Jungs' home in Küsnacht

188



Lilli, Bridget, Marianne, Franz on the Jungs' sailing dinghy (1921)

189

Franz, Bridget, Lilli, Marianne

190

Henri Zinno (Cary's sister), Peter, Cary and Joseph Henderson in Gstaad (1929)

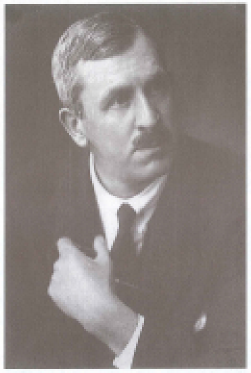
191



HGB in 1921, at the time of his analysis with Jung

192

HGB and Jung (man in the middle unknown) at an International Conference in Copenhagen

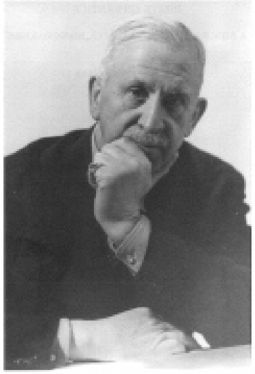
239

Agnes Sarah Leay (Anne) at the time of her marriage to Peter (ca. 1931)

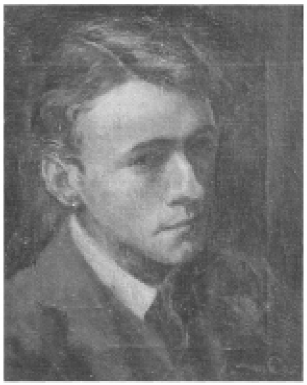
Anne with Michael (1932)

Reed House, newly built after the fire

Peter with Michael (1932)
In the meadow at Reed House



Helton Godwin ("Peter") Baynes, towards the end of his life (1943)
The ring on his left little finger was given to him by Jung.
It was made by the Pueblo Indians.



Portrait of Arnold Bax for his 21st birthday, painted by his tutor, F. Coleman, in 1905 (photograph by Mark Ronson)

Red Crescent Mission Hospital in San Stefano run by Godwin Baynes during the Balkan War (1912)

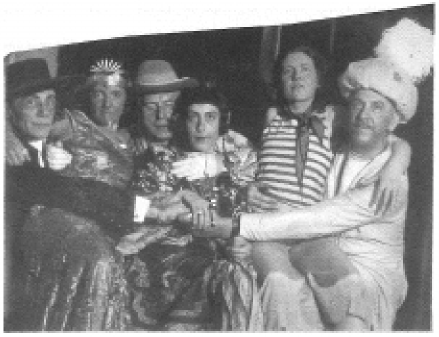
In his 'commonplace book' Helton Baynes made infrequent comments about his youngest son; often with incomprehension and with apprehension but also sometimes with admiration. He wrote with fatherly pride about Godwin's mission to Turkey.

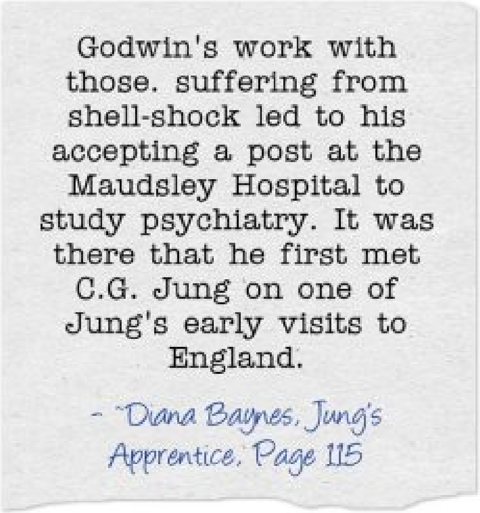
30 November 1912

Now I can record that Godwin left Victoria on the 13th with two other doctors, Barton and Miller, and after two hours in Paris they went on to Marseilles, taking the SS Niger there for Constantinople. It was a slow boat, calling at Naples, Athens and Scutari, but Godwin enjoyed that, and we have had cards ... Some 680 Greeks going to join their brethren, and seeing the doctors' Red Crescent emblems, tried first to throw them overboard and then to knife them, and had to be pacified; and now Godwin writes that he has bathed in the Aegean Sea! Wednesday's 'Standard' told us of the doctors' arrival, presumably on the 26th and on Thursday the 'Daily News' said they had volunteered for 'dangerous cholera service', and had gone to the San Stefano camp. Godwin is doing Christian work and God will take care of him! I trust it may help him to find his way back to a simple and strong Christian faith, such as he had when I (as we had then no pastor at Trinity) had the joy of receiving him as a church member. He has noble ideals, but religiously I don't know where he stands, and I doubt if he knows himself. Like Goethe, he probably longs for 'more light'.



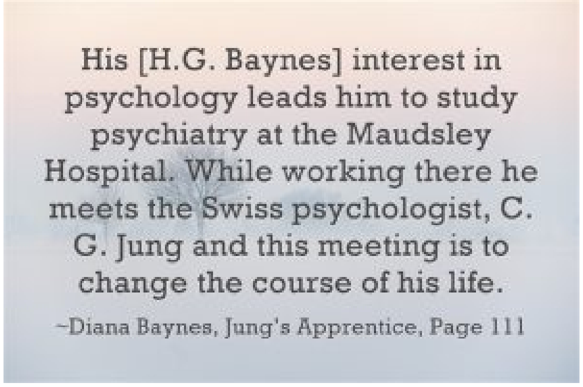
Zurich Fastnacht
(from left to right:) unknown, Mary Bancroft,
Jung, Toni Wolff, Eleanor Bertine, Peter

Peter and Cary's home, Marlowes House, in Hemel Hempstead



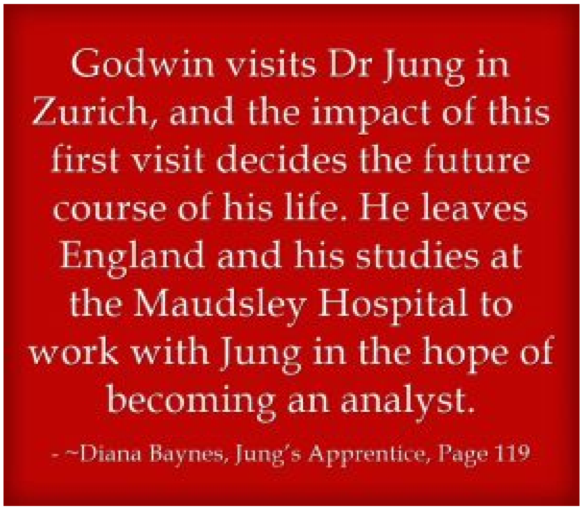
Godwin's work with those. suffering from shell-shock led to his accepting a post at the Maudsley Hospital to study psychiatry. It was there that he first met C.G. Jung on one of Jung's early visits to England.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 115



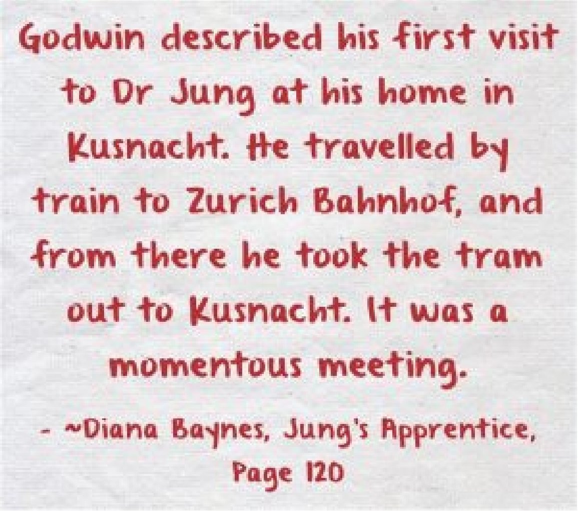
His [H.G. Baynes] interest in psychology leads him to study psychiatry at the Maudsley Hospital. While working there he meets the Swiss psychologist, C. G. Jung and this meeting is to change the course of his life.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 111



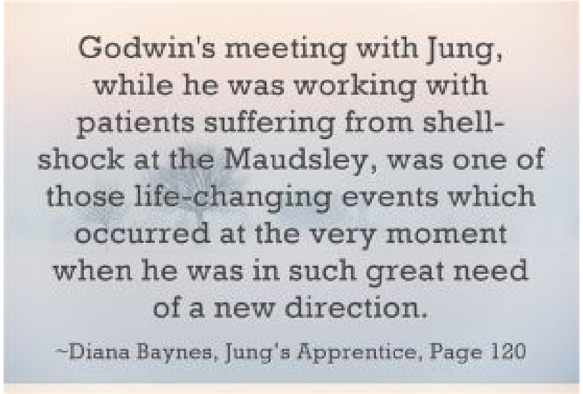
Godwin visits Dr Jung in Zurich, and the impact of this first visit decides the future course of his life. He leaves England and his studies at the Maudsley Hospital to work with Jung in the hope of becoming an analyst.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 119



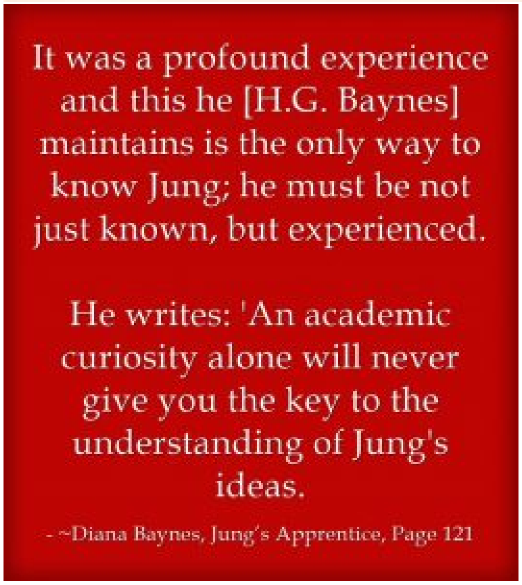
Godwin described his first visit to Dr Jung at his home in Kusnacht. He travelled by train to Zurich Bahnhof, and from there he took the tram out to Kusnacht. It was a momentous meeting.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 120



Godwin's meeting with Jung, while he was working with patients suffering from shell-shock at the Maudsley, was one of those life-changing events which occurred at the very moment when he was in such great need of a new direction.

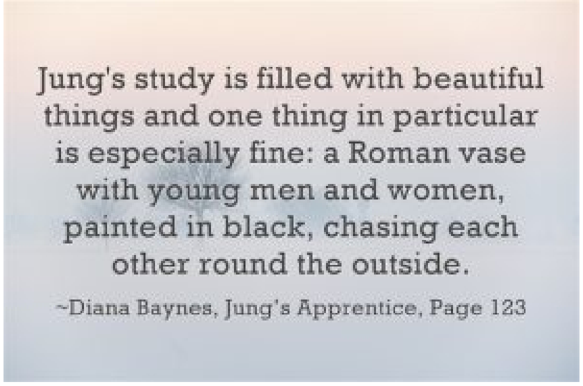
~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 120



It was a profound experience and this he [H.G. Baynes] maintains is the only way to know Jung; he must be not just known, but experienced.

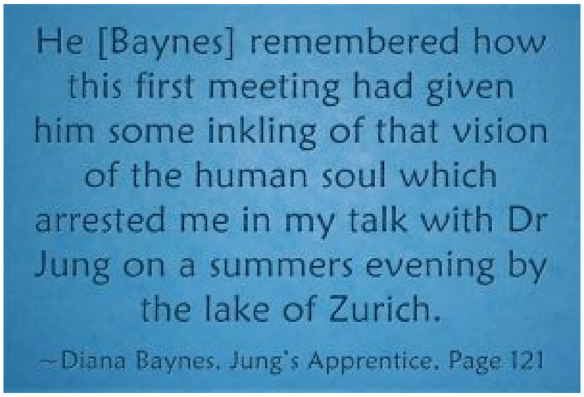
He writes: 'An academic curiosity alone will never give you the key to the understanding of Jung's ideas.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 121



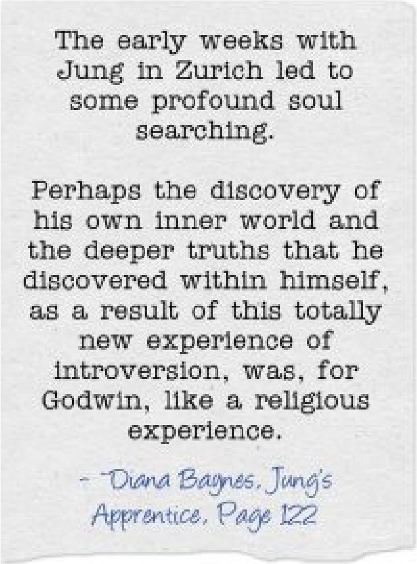
Jung's study is filled with beautiful things and one thing in particular is especially fine: a Roman vase with young men and women, painted in black, chasing each other round the outside.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 123



He [Baynes] remembered how this first meeting had given him some inkling of that vision of the human soul which arrested me in my talk with Dr Jung on a summers evening by the lake of Zurich.

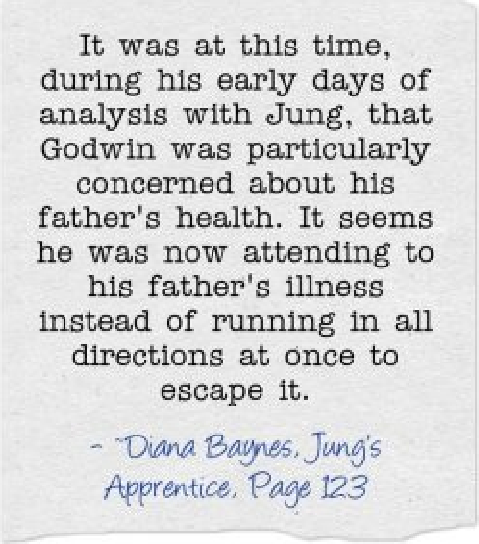
~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 121



The early weeks with Jung in Zurich led to some profound soul searching.

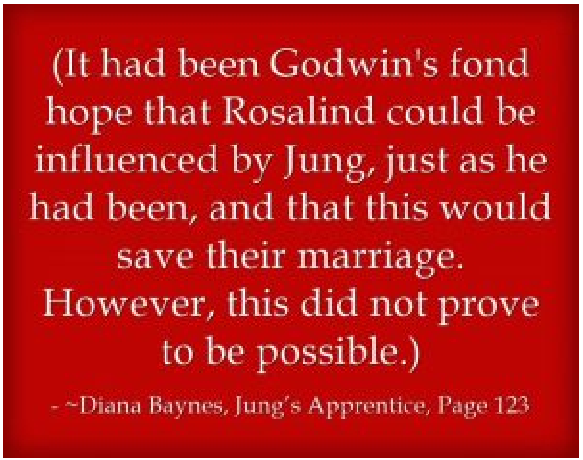
Perhaps the discovery of his own inner world and the deeper truths that he discovered within himself, as a result of this totally new experience of introversion, was, for Godwin, like a religious experience.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 122



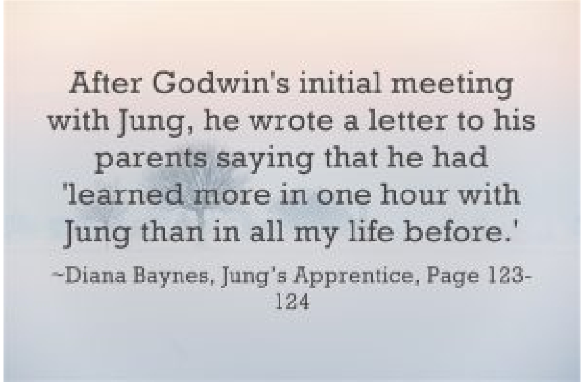
It was at this time, during his early days of analysis with Jung, that Godwin was particularly concerned about his father's health. It seems he was now attending to his father's illness instead of running in all directions at once to escape it.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 123



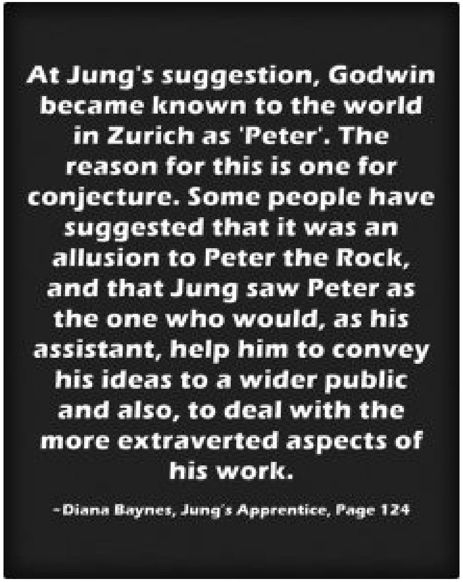
(It had been Godwin's fond hope that Rosalind could be influenced by Jung, just as he had been, and that this would save their marriage. However, this did not prove to be possible.)

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 123



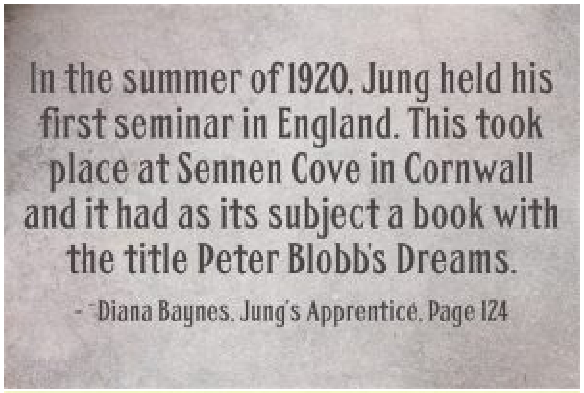
After Godwin's initial meeting with Jung, he wrote a letter to his parents saying that he had 'learned more in one hour with Jung than in all my life before.'

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 123-124



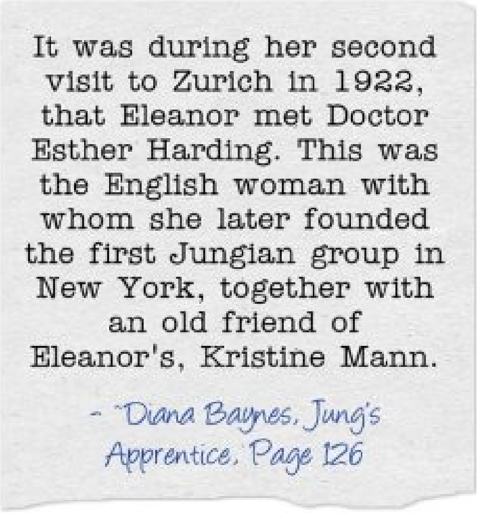
At Jung's suggestion, Godwin became known to the world in Zurich as 'Peter'. The reason for this is one for conjecture. Some people have suggested that it was an allusion to Peter the Rock, and that Jung saw Peter as the one who would, as his assistant, help him to convey his ideas to a wider public and also, to deal with the more extraverted aspects of his work.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 124



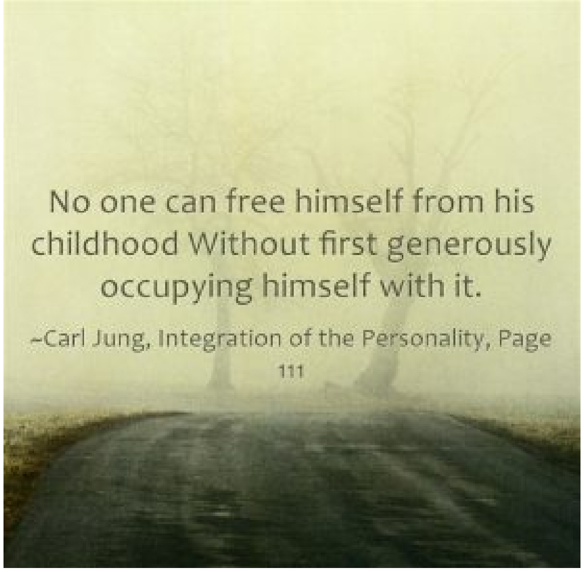
In the summer of 1920, Jung held his first seminar in England. This took place at Sennen Cove in Cornwall and it had as its subject a book with the title Peter Blobb's Dreams.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 124



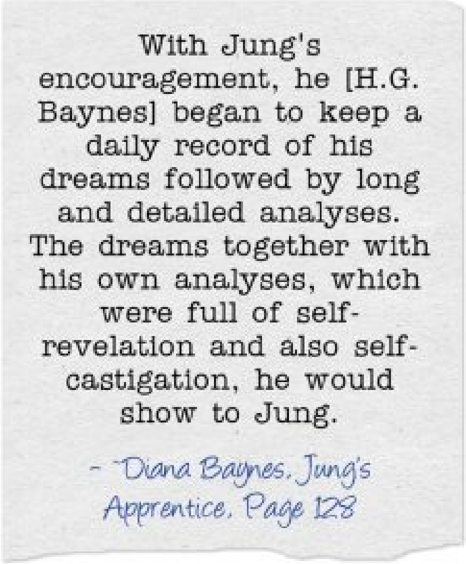
It was during her second visit to Zurich in 1922, that Eleanor met Doctor Esther Harding. This was the English woman with whom she later founded the first Jungian group in New York, together with an old friend of Eleanor's, Kristine Mann.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 126



No one can free himself from his childhood Without first generously occupying himself with it.

~Carl Jung, Integration of the Personality, Page 111

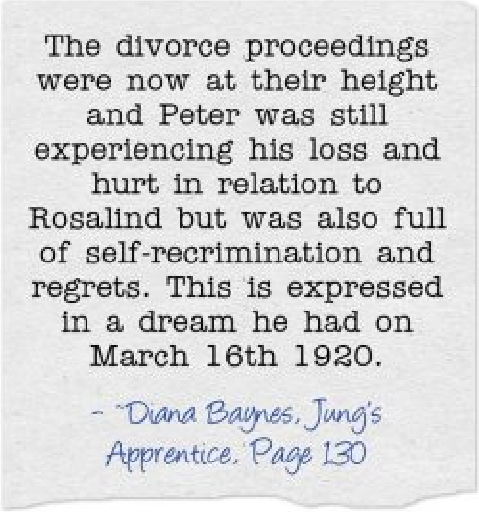


With Jung's encouragement, he [H.G. Baynes] began to keep a daily record of his dreams followed by long and detailed analyses. The dreams together with his own analyses, which were full of self-revelation and also self-castigation, he would show to Jung.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 128

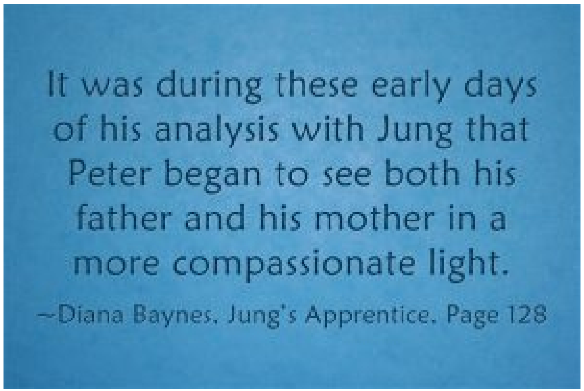
Very early in their work together Jung appears in Peter's dream and it is clear that a powerful transference has already begun.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 128



The divorce proceedings were now at their height and Peter was still experiencing his loss and hurt in relation to Rosalind but was also full of self-recrimination and regrets. This is expressed in a dream he had on March 16th 1920.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 130

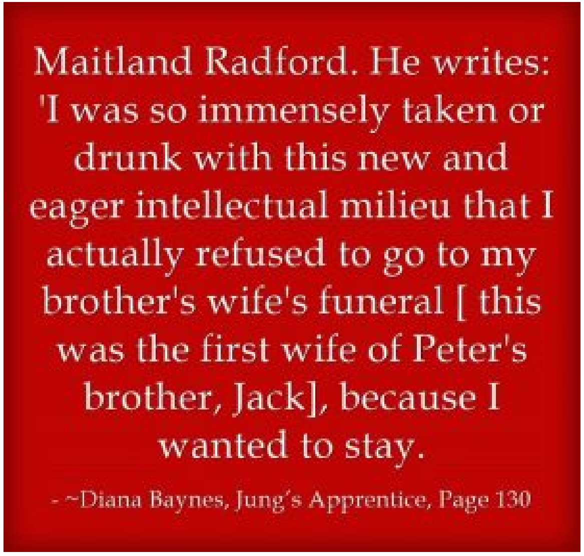


It was during these early days of his analysis with Jung that Peter began to see both his father and his mother in a more compassionate light.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 128

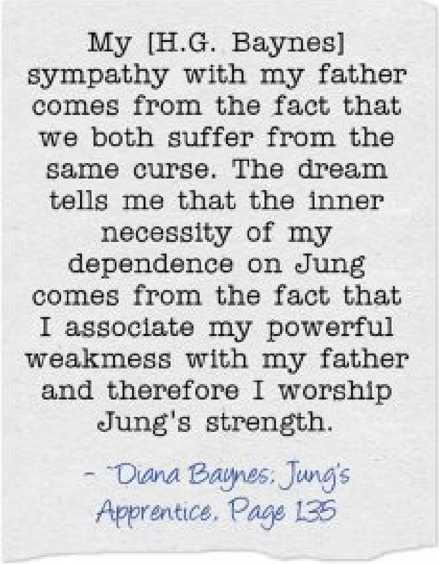
This must have been an important dream in the early part of Peter's analysis, at a time when Jung had become for him like 'the eye of God' and there is a sense also of his feeling of loss and abandonment while Jung was away for his three week holiday.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 130



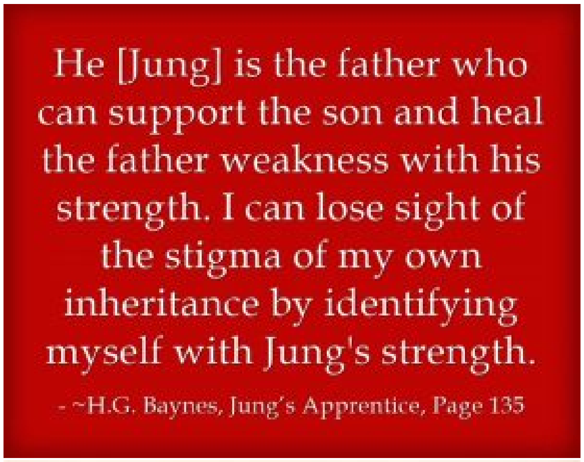
Maitland Radford. He writes: 'I was so immensely taken or drunk with this new and eager intellectual milieu that I actually refused to go to my brother's wife's funeral [this was the first wife of Peter's brother, Jack], because I wanted to stay.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 130



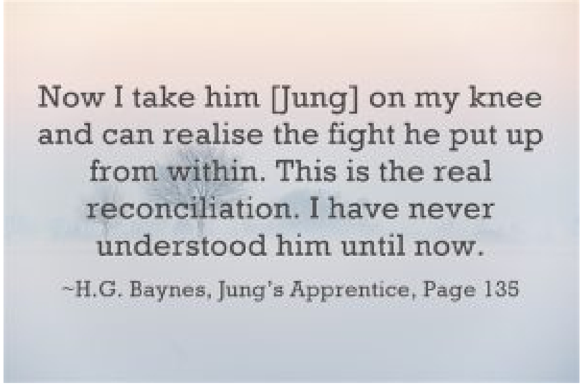
My [H.G. Baynes] sympathy with my father comes from the fact that we both suffer from the same curse. The dream tells me that the inner necessity of my dependence on Jung comes from the fact that I associate my powerful weakmess with my father and therefore I worship Jung's strength.

- ~Diana Baynes; Jung's Apprentice, Page 135



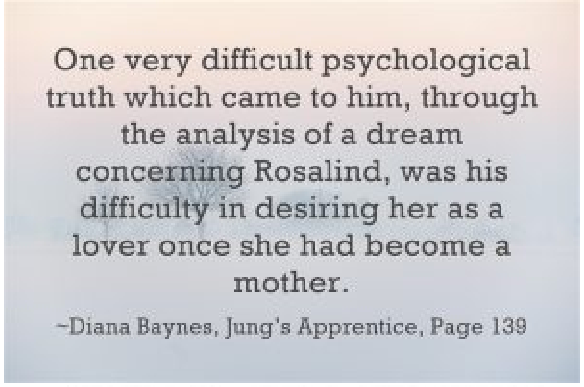
He [Jung] is the father who can support the son and heal the father weakness with his strength. I can lose sight of the stigma of my own inheritance by identifying myself with Jung's strength.

- ~H.G. Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 135



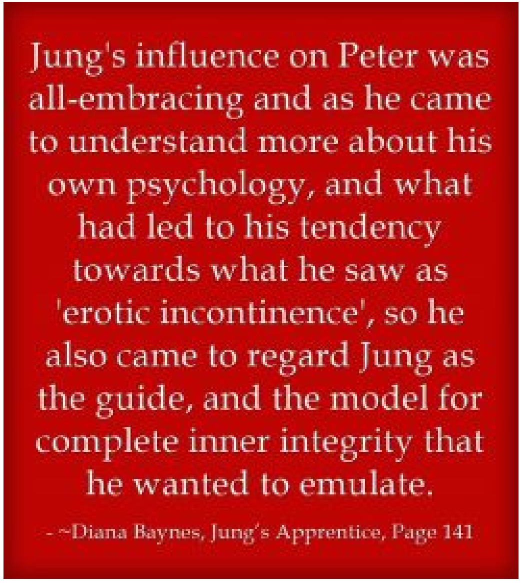
Now I take him [Jung] on my knee and can realise the fight he put up from within. This is the real reconciliation. I have never understood him until now.

~H.G. Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 135



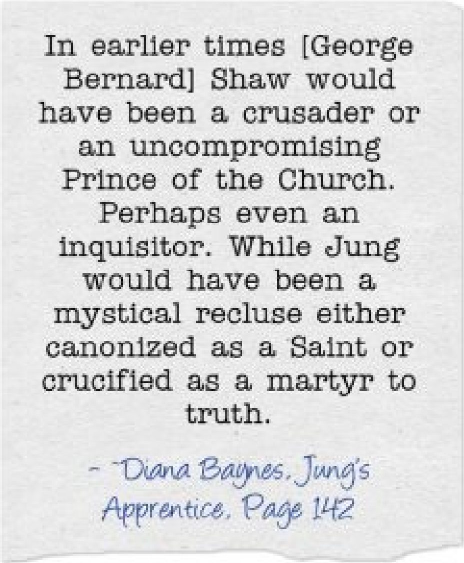
One very difficult psychological truth which came to him, through the analysis of a dream concerning Rosalind, was his difficulty in desiring her as a lover once she had become a mother.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 139



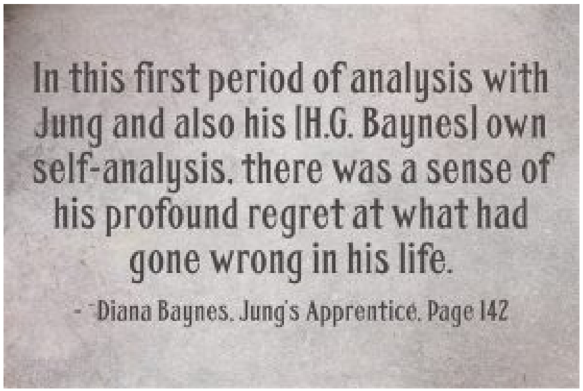
Jung's influence on Peter was all-embracing and as he came to understand more about his own psychology, and what had led to his tendency towards what he saw as 'erotic incontinence', so he also came to regard Jung as the guide, and the model for complete inner integrity that he wanted to emulate.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 141



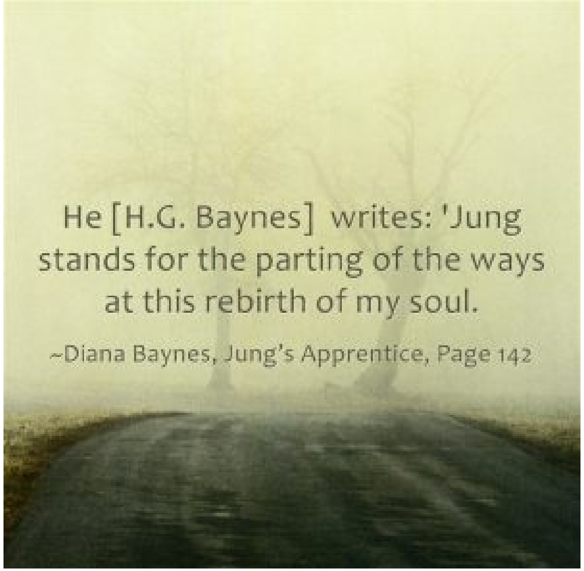
In earlier times [George Bernard] Shaw would have been a crusader or an uncompromising Prince of the Church. Perhaps even an inquisitor. While Jung would have been a mystical recluse either canonized as a Saint or crucified as a martyr to truth.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 142



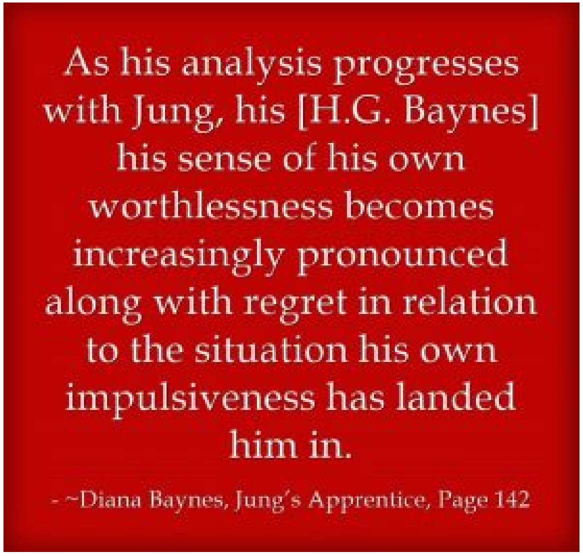
In this first period of analysis with Jung and also his [H.G. Baynes] own self-analysis, there was a sense of his profound regret at what had gone wrong in his life.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 142



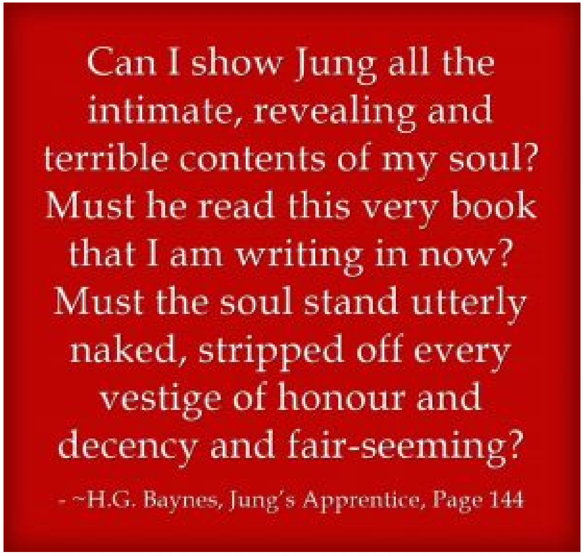
He [H.G. Baynes] writes: 'Jung stands for the parting of the ways at this rebirth of my soul.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 142



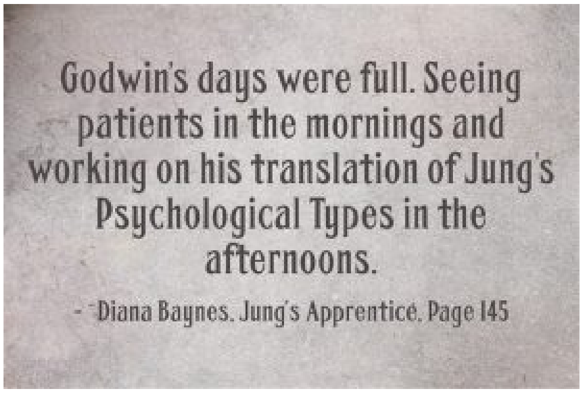
As his analysis progresses with Jung, his [H.G. Baynes] his sense of his own worthlessness becomes increasingly pronounced along with regret in relation to the situation his own impulsiveness has landed him in.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 142



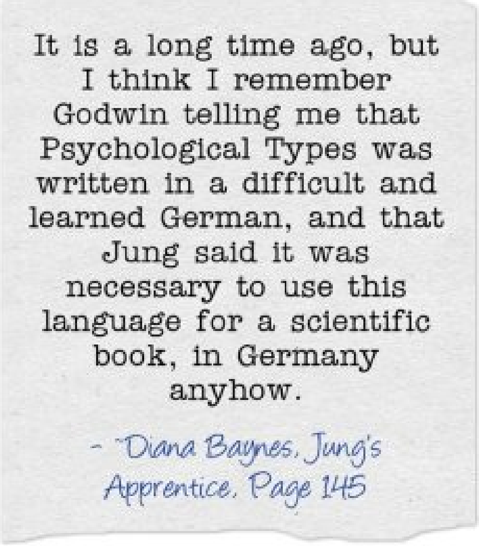
Can I show Jung all the intimate, revealing and terrible contents of my soul? Must he read this very book that I am writing in now? Must the soul stand utterly naked, stripped off every vestige of honour and decency and fair-seeming?

- ~H.G. Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 144



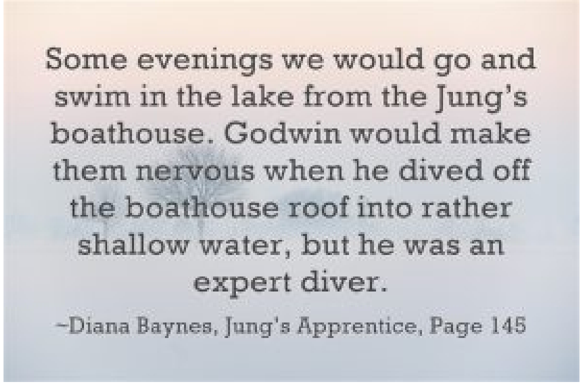
Godwin's days were full. Seeing patients in the mornings and working on his translation of Jung's Psychological Types in the afternoons.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 145



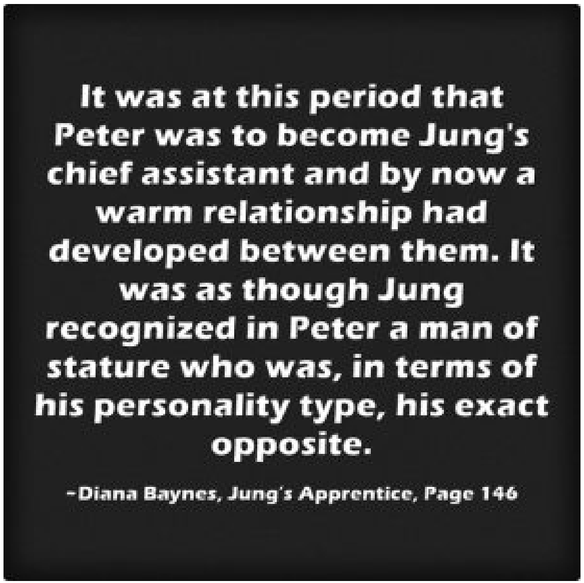
It is a long time ago, but I think I remember Godwin telling me that Psychological Types was written in a difficult and learned German, and that Jung said it was necessary to use this language for a scientific book, in Germany anyhow.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 145



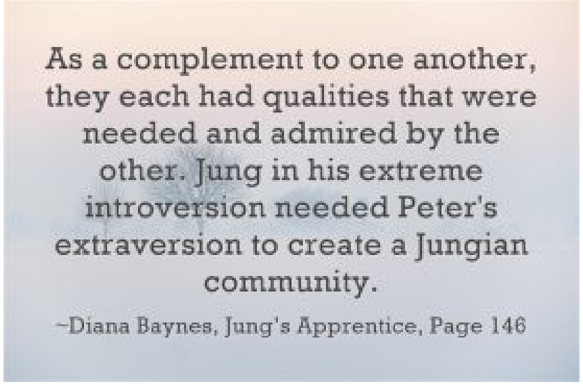
Some evenings we would go and swim in the lake from the Jung's boathouse. Godwin would make them nervous when he dived off the boathouse roof into rather shallow water, but he was an expert diver.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 145



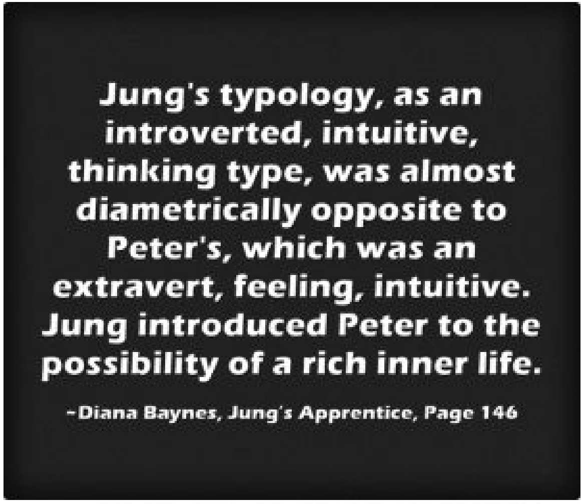
It was at this period that Peter was to become Jung's chief assistant and by now a warm relationship had developed between them. It was as though Jung recognized in Peter a man of stature who was, in terms of his personality type, his exact opposite.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 146



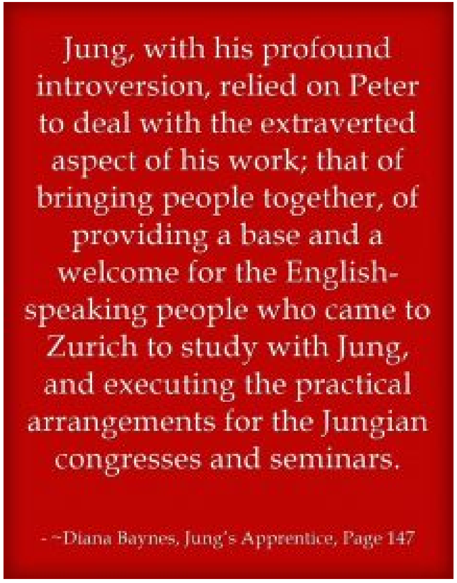
As a complement to one another, they each had qualities that were needed and admired by the other. Jung in his extreme introversion needed Peter's extraversion to create a Jungian community.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 146



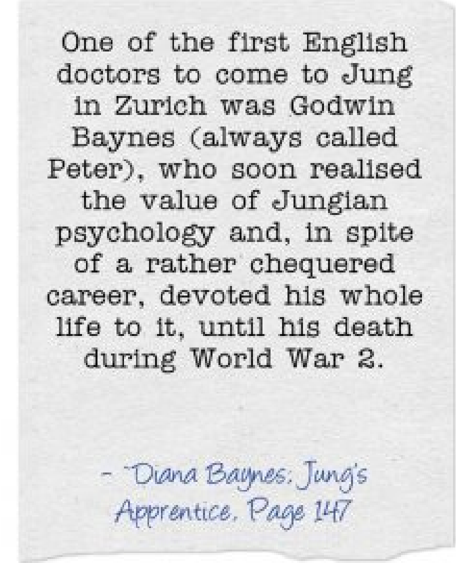
Jung's typology, as an introverted, intuitive, thinking type, was almost diametrically opposite to Peter's, which was an extravert, feeling, intuitive. Jung introduced Peter to the possibility of a rich inner life.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 146



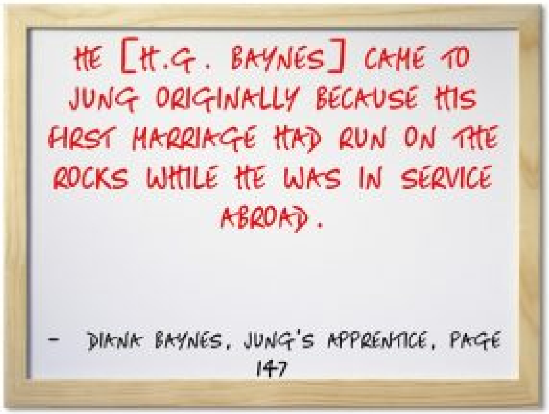
Jung, with his profound introversion, relied on Peter to deal with the extraverted aspect of his work; that of bringing people together, of providing a base and a welcome for the English-speaking people who came to Zurich to study with Jung, and executing the practical arrangements for the Jungian congresses and seminars.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 147



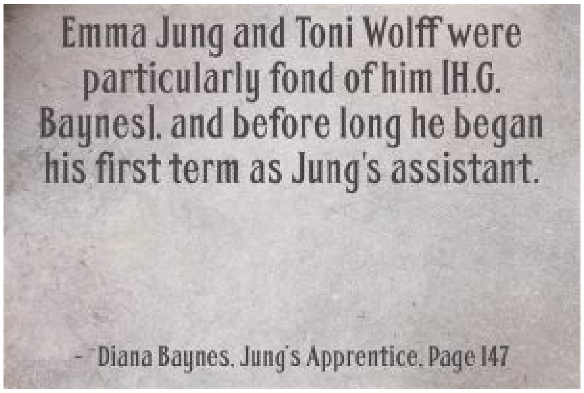
One of the first English doctors to come to Jung in Zurich was Godwin Baynes (always called Peter), who soon realised the value of Jungian psychology and, in spite of a rather chequered career, devoted his whole life to it, until his death during World War 2.

- Diana Baynes: Jung's Apprentice, Page 147



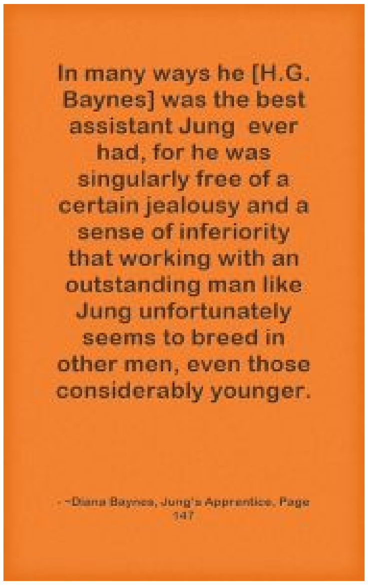
HE [H.G. BAYNES] CAME TO JUNG ORIGINALLY BECAUSE HIS FIRST MARRIAGE HAD RUN ON THE ROCKS WHILE HE WAS IN SERVICE ABROAD.

- DIANA BAYNES, JUNG'S APPRENTICE, PAGE 147



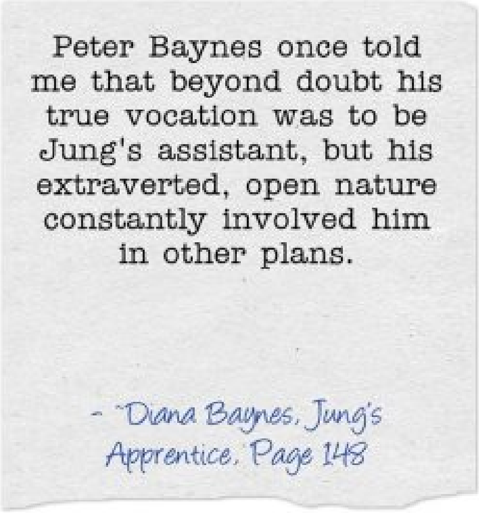
Emma Jung and Toni Wolff were particularly fond of him [H.G. Baynes], and before long he began his first term as Jung's assistant.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 147



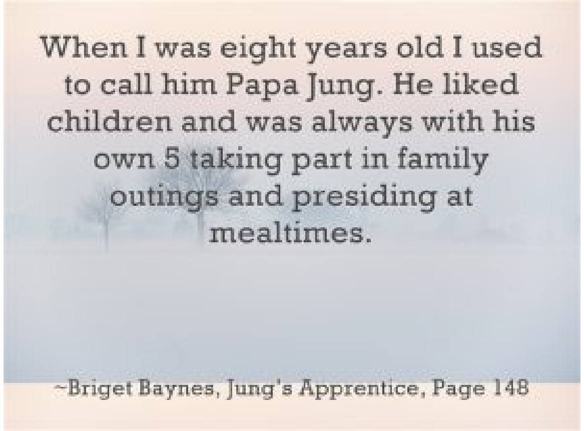
In many ways he [H.G. Baynes] was the best assistant Jung ever had, for he was singularly free of a certain jealousy and a sense of inferiority that working with an outstanding man like Jung unfortunately seems to breed in other men, even those considerably younger.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 147



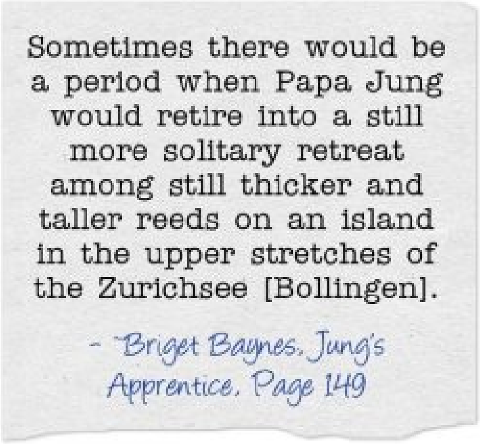
Peter Baynes once told me that beyond doubt his true vocation was to be Jung's assistant, but his extraverted, open nature constantly involved him in other plans.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 148



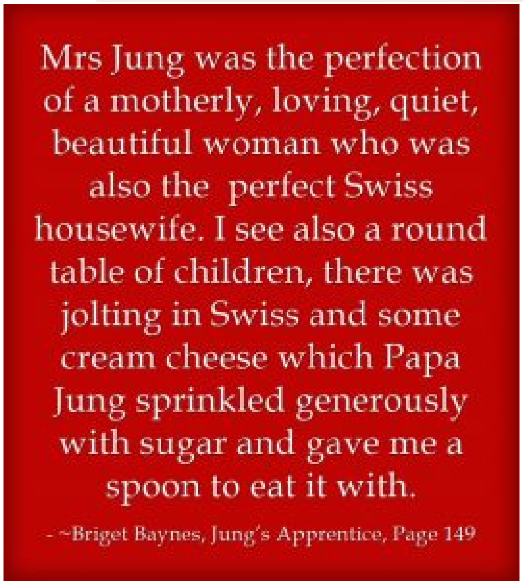
When I was eight years old I used to call him Papa Jung. He liked children and was always with his own 5 taking part in family outings and presiding at mealtimes.

~Briget Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 148



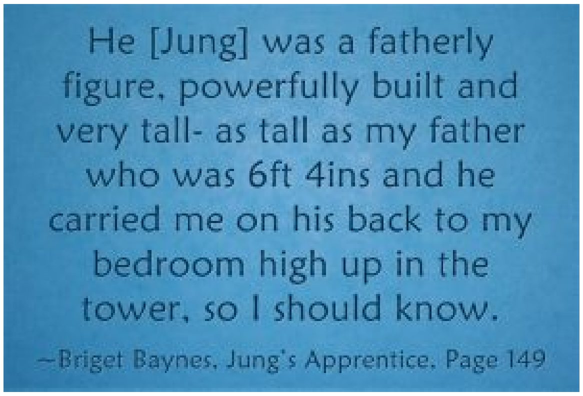
Sometimes there would be a period when Papa Jung would retire into a still more solitary retreat among still thicker and taller reeds on an island in the upper stretches of the Zurichsee [Bollingen].

- ~Briget Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 149



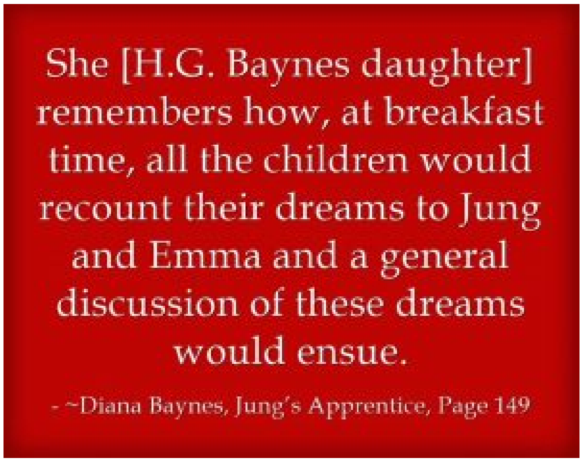
Mrs Jung was the perfection of a motherly, loving, quiet, beautiful woman who was also the perfect Swiss housewife. I see also a round table of children, there was jolting in Swiss and some cream cheese which Papa Jung sprinkled generously with sugar and gave me a spoon to eat it with.

- ~Briget Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 149



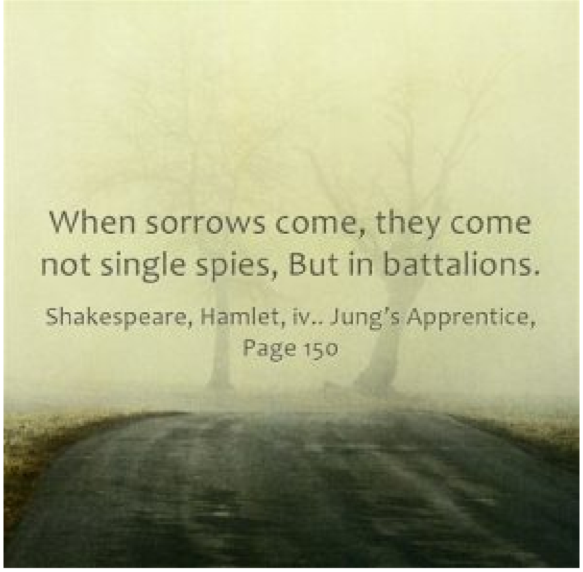
He [Jung] was a fatherly figure, powerfully built and very tall- as tall as my father who was 6ft 4ins and he carried me on his back to my bedroom high up in the tower, so I should know.

~Briget Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 149



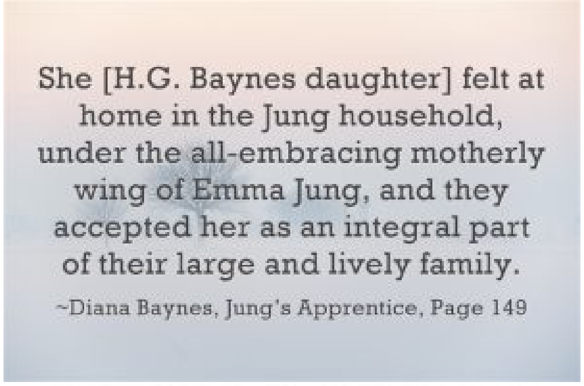
She [H.G. Baynes daughter] remembers how, at breakfast time, all the children would recount their dreams to Jung and Emma and a general discussion of these dreams would ensue.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 149



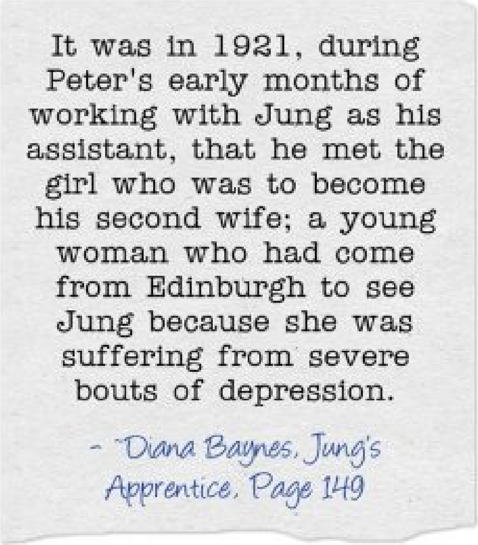
When sorrows come, they come not single spies, But in battalions.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, iv.. Jung's Apprentice, Page 150



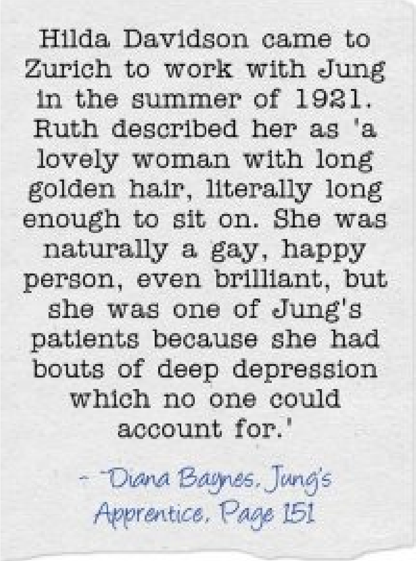
She [H.G. Baynes daughter] felt at home in the Jung household, under the all-embracing motherly wing of Emma Jung, and they accepted her as an integral part of their large and lively family.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 149



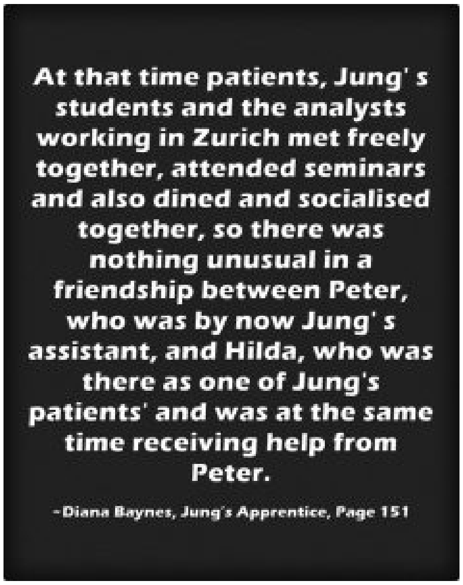
It was in 1921, during Peter's early months of working with Jung as his assistant, that he met the girl who was to become his second wife; a young woman who had come from Edinburgh to see Jung because she was suffering from severe bouts of depression.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 149



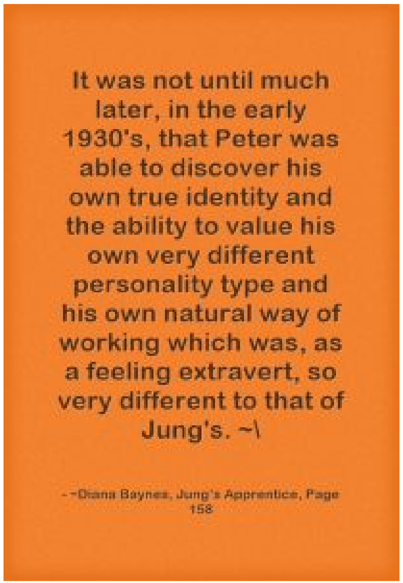
Hilda Davidson came to Zurich to work with Jung in the summer of 1921. Ruth described her as 'a lovely woman with long golden hair, literally long enough to sit on. She was naturally a gay, happy person, even brilliant, but she was one of Jung's patients because she had bouts of deep depression which no one could account for.'

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 151



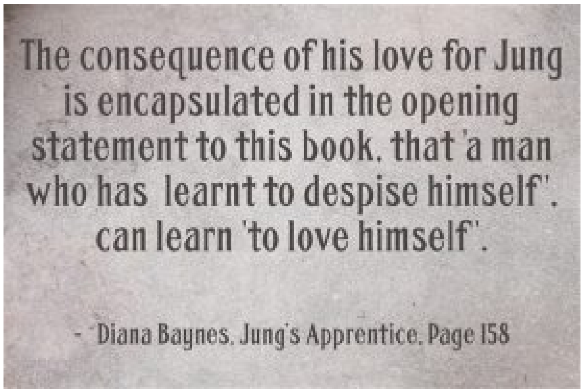
At that time patients, Jung' s students and the analysts working in Zurich met freely together, attended seminars and also dined and socialised together, so there was nothing unusual in a friendship between Peter, who was by now Jung' s assistant, and Hilda, who was there as one of Jung's patients' and was at the same time receiving help from Peter.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 151



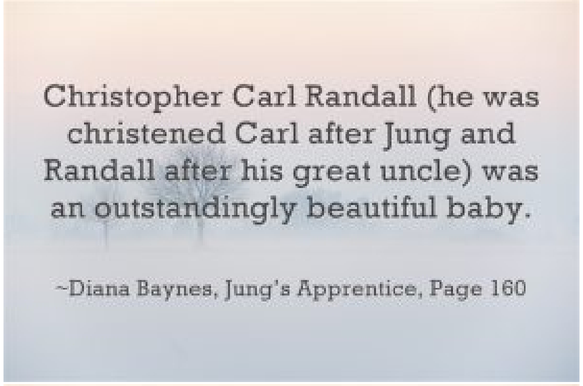
It was not until much later, in the early 1930's, that Peter was able to discover his own true identity and the ability to value his own very different personality type and his own natural way of working which was, as a feeling extravert, so very different to that of Jung's. ~\

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 158



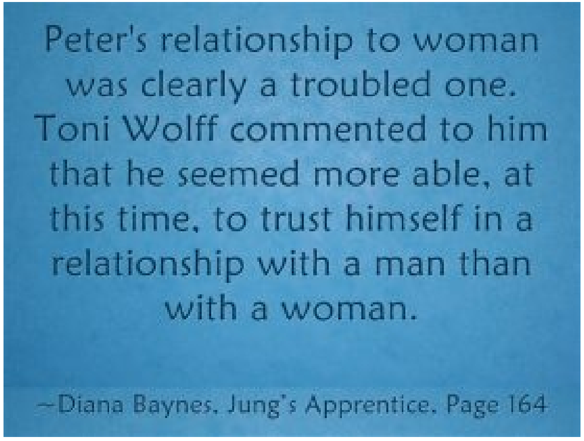
The consequence of his love for Jung is encapsulated in the opening statement to this book, that 'a man who has learnt to despise himself', can learn 'to love himself'.

- Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 158



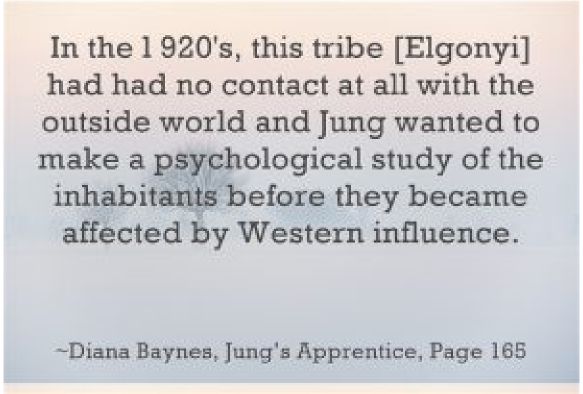
Christopher Carl Randall (he was christened Carl after Jung and Randall after his great uncle) was an outstandingly beautiful baby.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 160



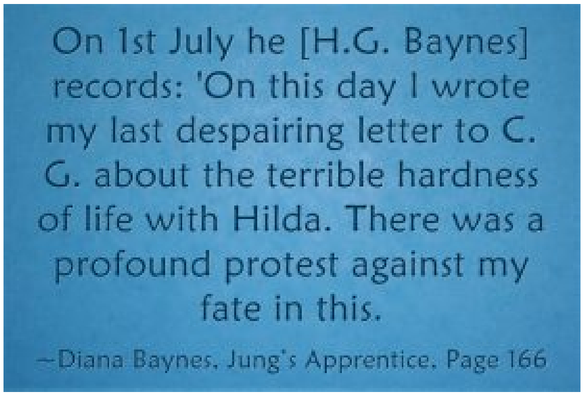
Peter's relationship to woman was clearly a troubled one. Toni Wolff commented to him that he seemed more able, at this time, to trust himself in a relationship with a man than with a woman.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 164



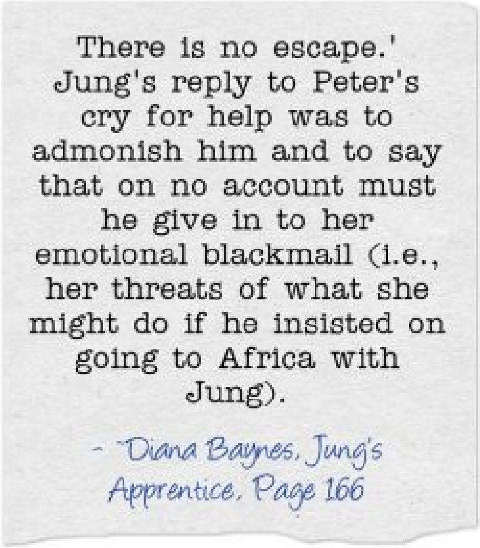
In the 1 920's, this tribe [Elgonyi] had had no contact at all with the outside world and Jung wanted to make a psychological study of the inhabitants before they became affected by Western influence.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 165



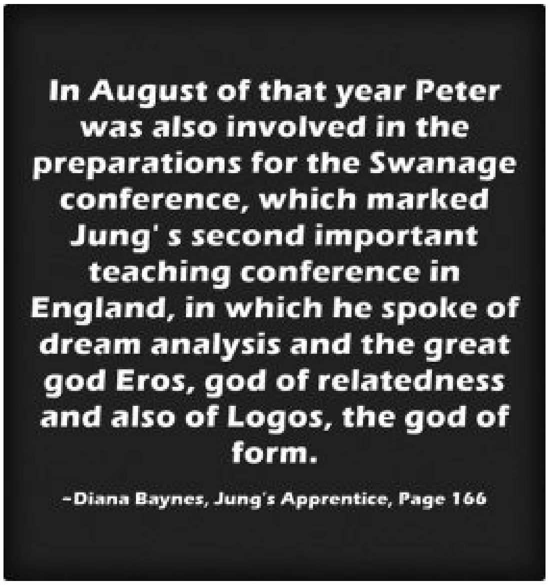
On 1st July he [H.G. Baynes] records: 'On this day I wrote my last despairing letter to C. G. about the terrible hardness of life with Hilda. There was a profound protest against my fate in this.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 166



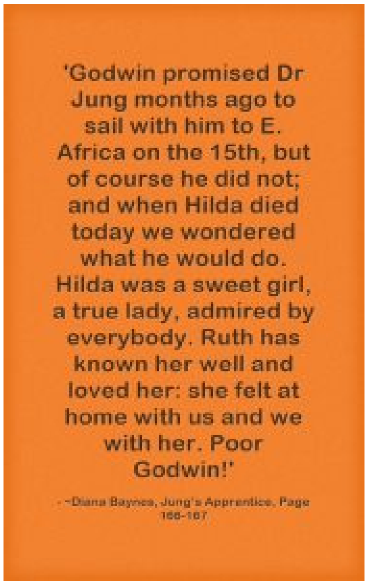
There is no escape.' Jung's reply to Peter's cry for help was to admonish him and to say that on no account must he give in to her emotional blackmail (i.e., her threats of what she might do if he insisted on going to Africa with Jung).

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 166



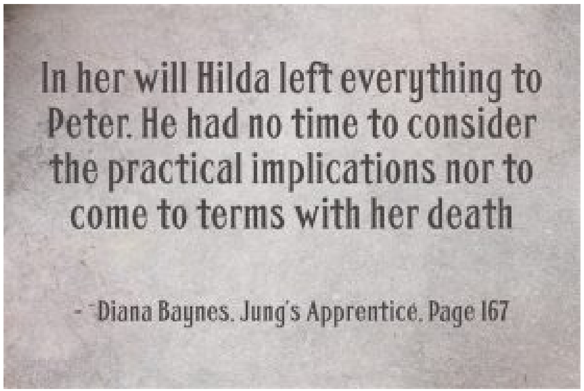
In August of that year Peter was also involved in the preparations for the Swanage conference, which marked Jung' s second important teaching conference in England, in which he spoke of dream analysis and the great god Eros, god of relatedness and also of Logos, the god of form.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 166



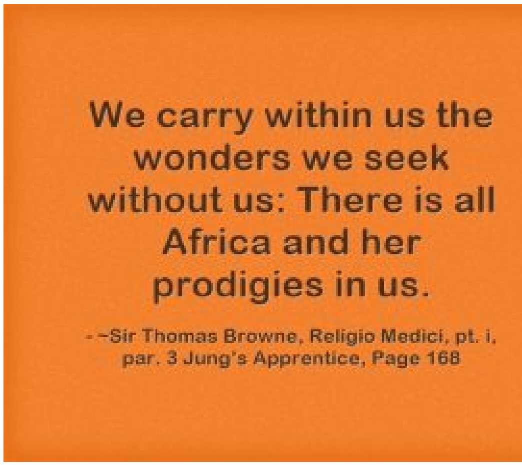
'Godwin promised Dr Jung months ago to sail with him to E. Africa on the 15th, but of course he did not; and when Hilda died today we wondered what he would do. Hilda was a sweet girl, a true lady, admired by everybody. Ruth has known her well and loved her: she felt at home with us and we with her. Poor Godwin!'

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 166-167



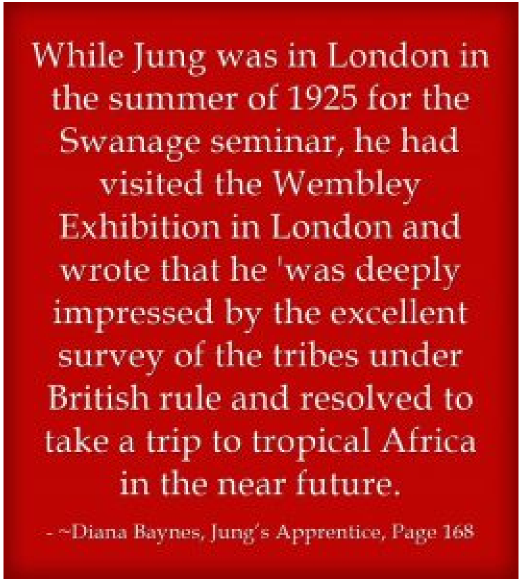
In her will Hilda left everything to Peter. He had no time to consider the practical implications nor to come to terms with her death

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 167



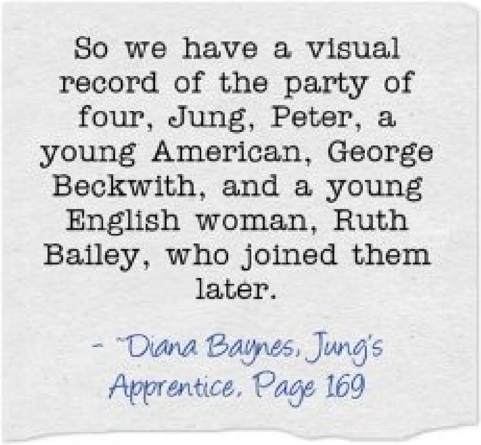
We carry within us the wonders we seek without us: There is all Africa and her prodigies in us.

- ~Sir Thomas Browne, Religio Medici, pt. i, par. 3 Jung's Apprentice, Page 168



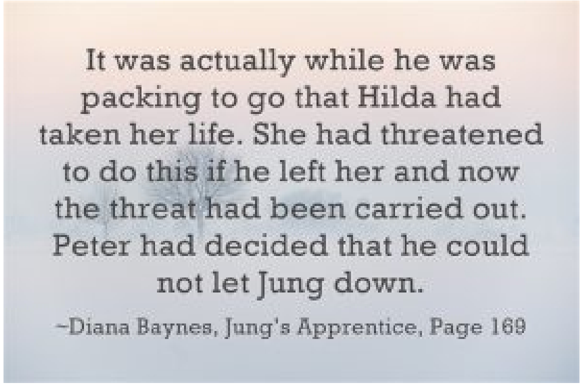
While Jung was in London in the summer of 1925 for the Swanage seminar, he had visited the Wembley Exhibition in London and wrote that he 'was deeply impressed by the excellent survey of the tribes under British rule and resolved to take a trip to tropical Africa in the near future.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 168



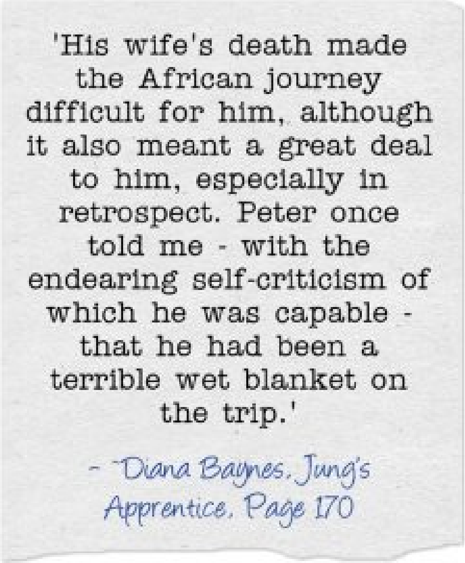
So we have a visual record of the party of four, Jung, Peter, a young American, George Beckwith, and a young English woman, Ruth Bailey, who joined them later.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 169



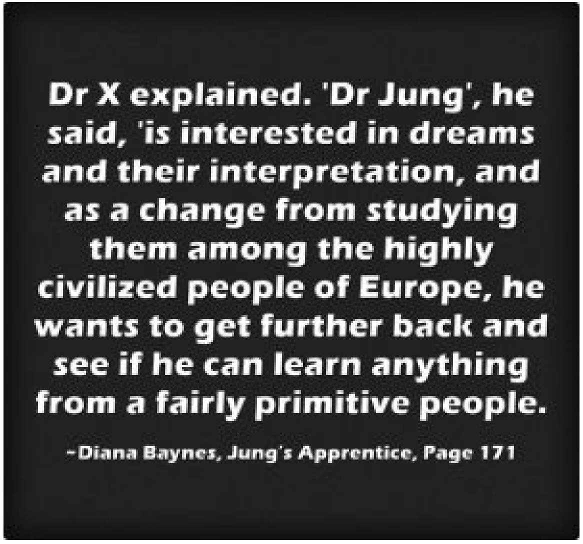
It was actually while he was packing to go that Hilda had taken her life. She had threatened to do this if he left her and now the threat had been carried out. Peter had decided that he could not let Jung down.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 169



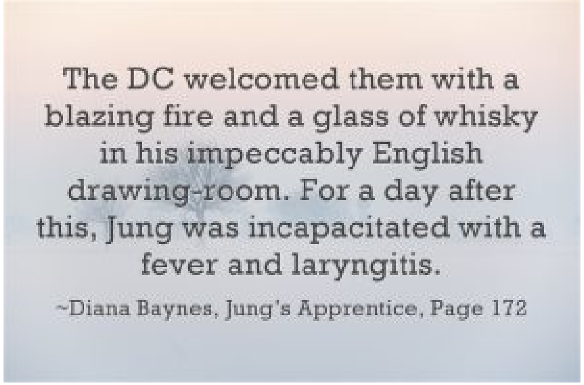
'His wife's death made the African journey difficult for him, although it also meant a great deal to him, especially in retrospect. Peter once told me - with the endearing self-criticism of which he was capable - that he had been a terrible wet blanket on the trip.'

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 170



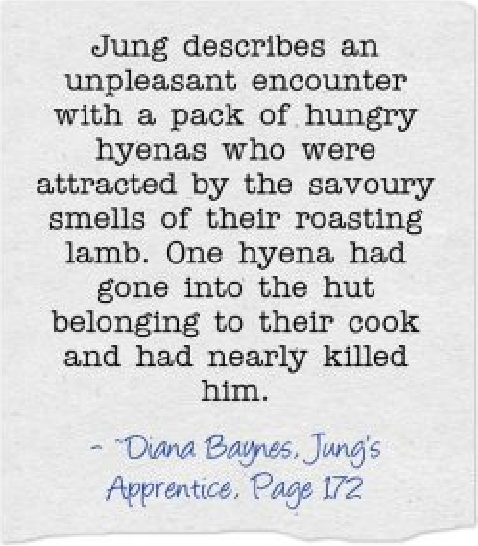
Dr X explained. 'Dr Jung', he said, 'is interested in dreams and their interpretation, and as a change from studying them among the highly civilized people of Europe, he wants to get further back and see if he can learn anything from a fairly primitive people.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 171



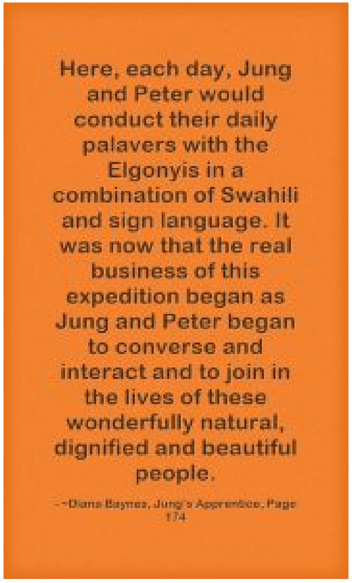
The DC welcomed them with a blazing fire and a glass of whisky in his impeccably English drawing-room. For a day after this, Jung was incapacitated with a fever and laryngitis.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 172



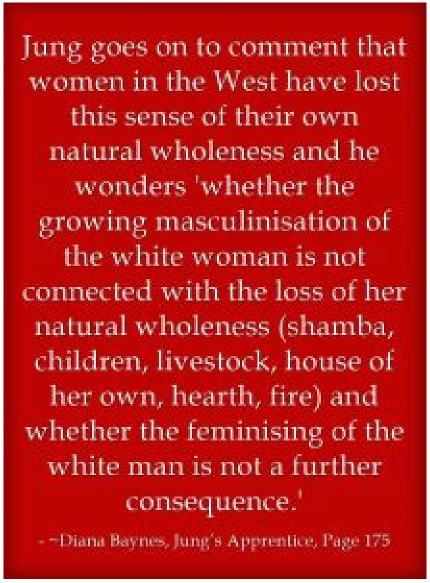
Jung describes an unpleasant encounter with a pack of hungry hyenas who were attracted by the savoury smells of their roasting lamb. One hyena had gone into the hut belonging to their cook and had nearly killed him.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 172



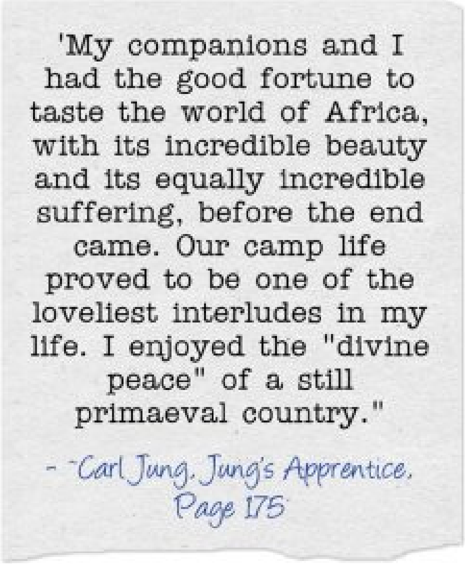
Here, each day, Jung and Peter would conduct their daily palavers with the Elgonyis in a combination of Swahili and sign language. It was now that the real business of this expedition began as Jung and Peter began to converse and interact and to join in the lives of these wonderfully natural, dignified and beautiful people.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 174



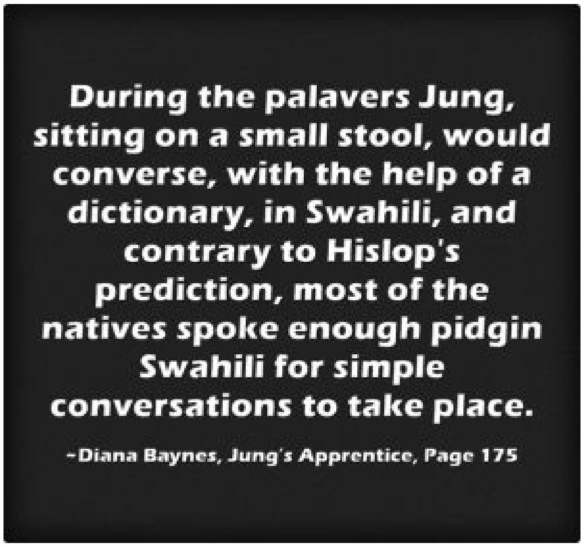
Jung goes on to comment that women in the West have lost this sense of their own natural wholeness and he wonders 'whether the growing masculinisation of the white woman is not connected with the loss of her natural wholeness (shamba, children, livestock, house of her own, hearth, fire) and whether the feminising of the white man is not a further consequence.'

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 175



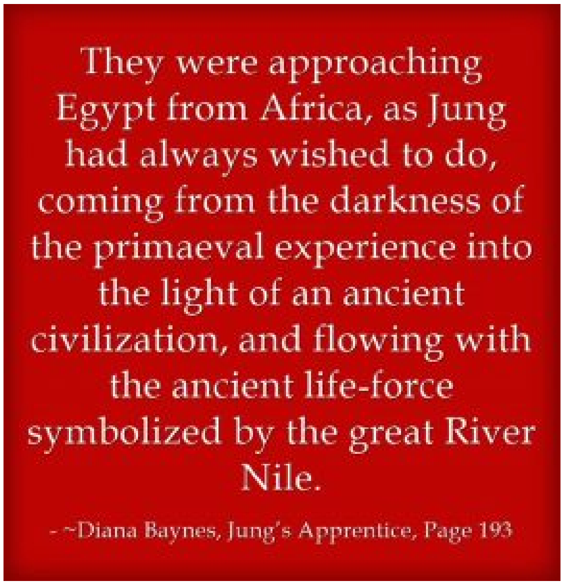
'My companions and I had the good fortune to taste the world of Africa, with its incredible beauty and its equally incredible suffering, before the end came. Our camp life proved to be one of the loveliest interludes in my life. I enjoyed the "divine peace" of a still primaeval country."

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 175



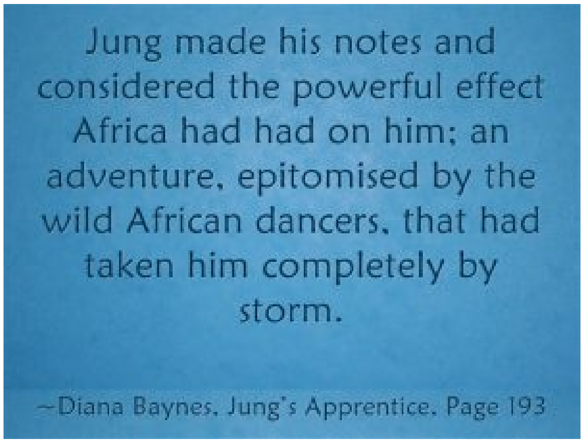
During the palavers Jung, sitting on a small stool, would converse, with the help of a dictionary, in Swahili, and contrary to Hislop's prediction, most of the natives spoke enough pidgin Swahili for simple conversations to take place.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 175



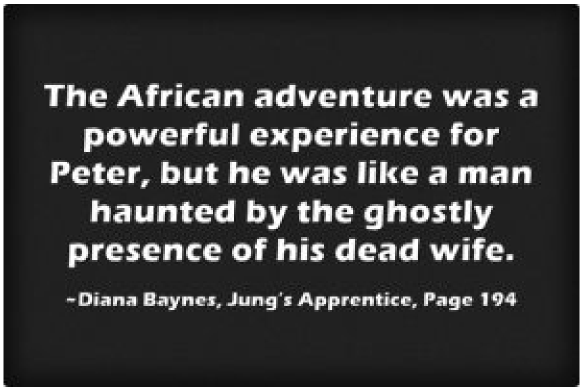
They were approaching Egypt from Africa, as Jung had always wished to do, coming from the darkness of the primaeval experience into the light of an ancient civilization, and flowing with the ancient life-force symbolized by the great River Nile.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 193



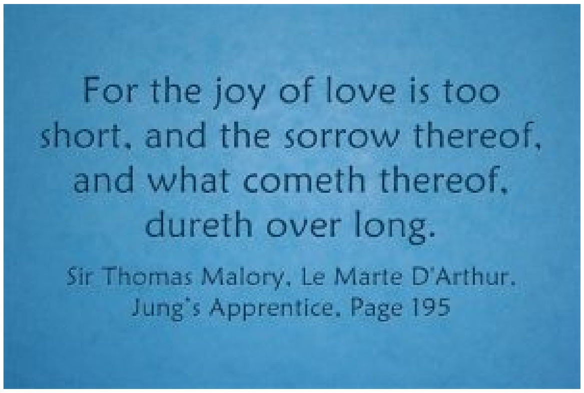
Jung made his notes and considered the powerful effect Africa had had on him; an adventure, epitomised by the wild African dancers, that had taken him completely by storm.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 193



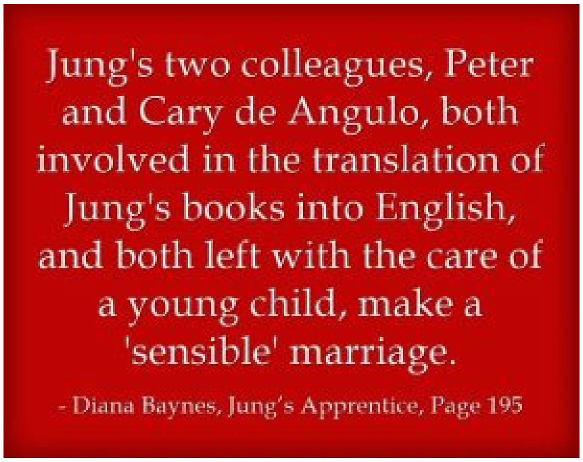
The African adventure was a powerful experience for Peter, but he was like a man haunted by the ghostly presence of his dead wife.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 194



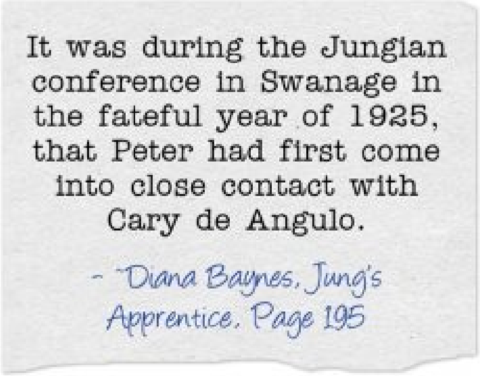
For the joy of love is too short, and the sorrow thereof, and what cometh thereof, dureth over long.

Sir Thomas Malory, Le Marte D'Arthur, Jung's Apprentice, Page 195



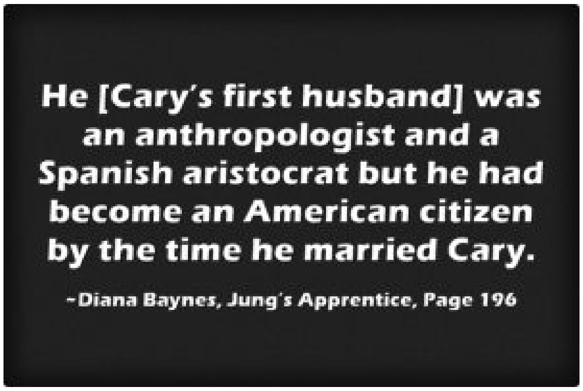
Jung's two colleagues, Peter and Cary de Angulo, both involved in the translation of Jung's books into English, and both left with the care of a young child, make a 'sensible' marriage.

- Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 195



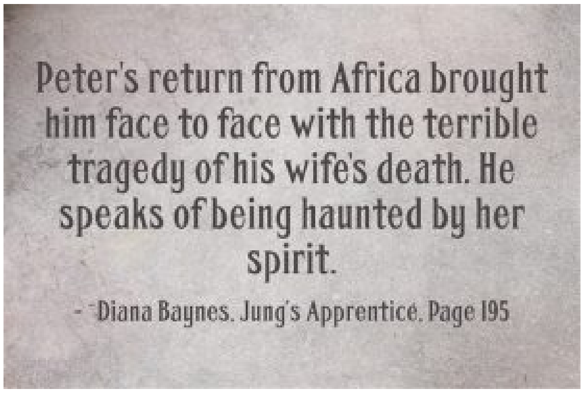
It was during the Jungian conference in Swanage in the fateful year of 1925, that Peter had first come into close contact with Cary de Angulo.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 195



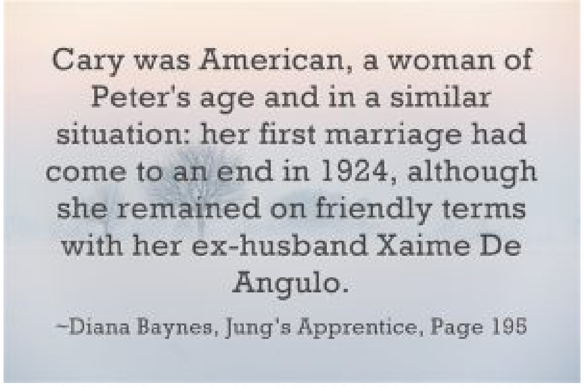
He [Cary's first husband] was an anthropologist and a Spanish aristocrat but he had become an American citizen by the time he married Cary.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 196



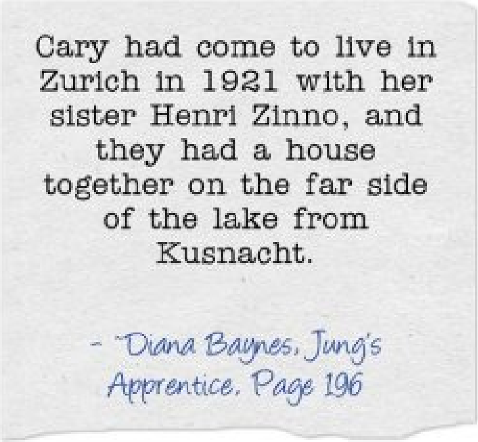
Peter's return from Africa brought him face to face with the terrible tragedy of his wife's death. He speaks of being haunted by her spirit.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 195



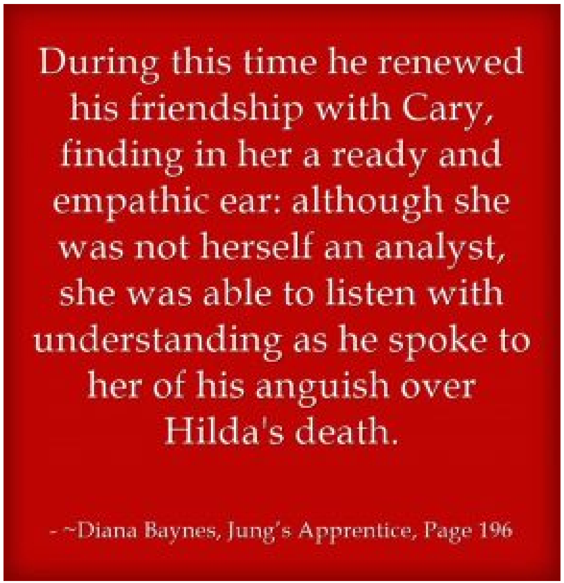
Cary was American, a woman of Peter's age and in a similar situation: her first marriage had come to an end in 1924, although she remained on friendly terms with her ex-husband Xaime De Angulo.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 195



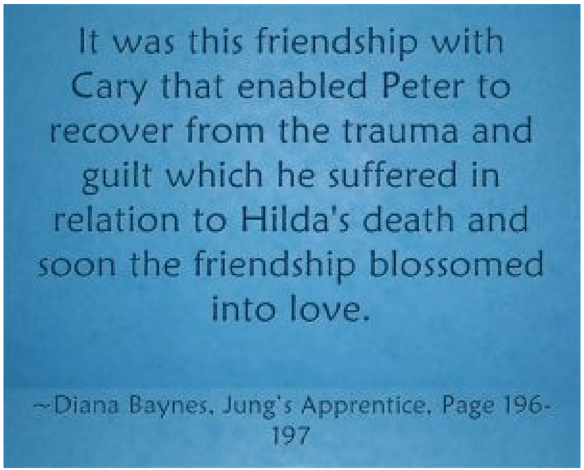
Cary had come to live in Zurich in 1921 with her sister Henri Zinno, and they had a house together on the far side of the lake from Kusnacht.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 196



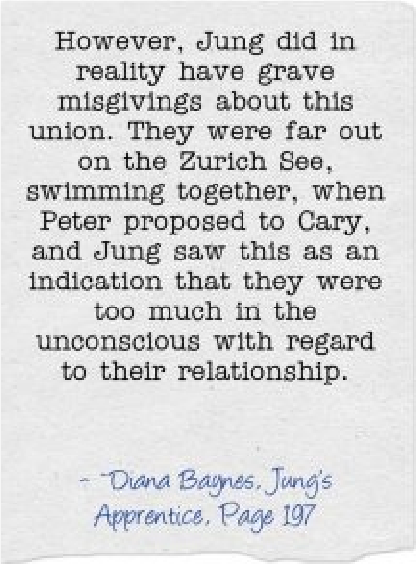
During this time he renewed his friendship with Cary, finding in her a ready and empathic ear: although she was not herself an analyst, she was able to listen with understanding as he spoke to her of his anguish over Hilda's death.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 196



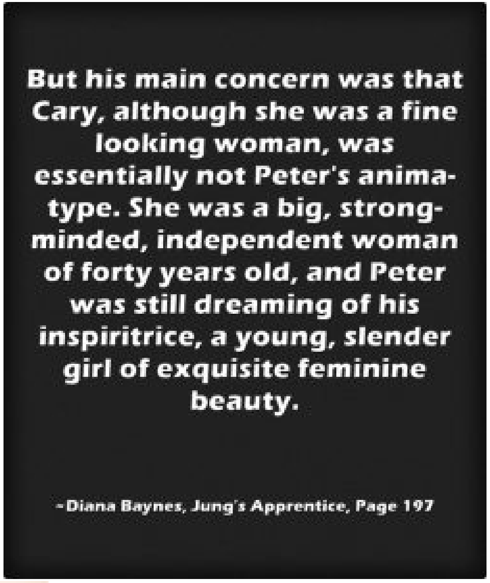
It was this friendship with Cary that enabled Peter to recover from the trauma and guilt which he suffered in relation to Hilda's death and soon the friendship blossomed into love.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 196-197



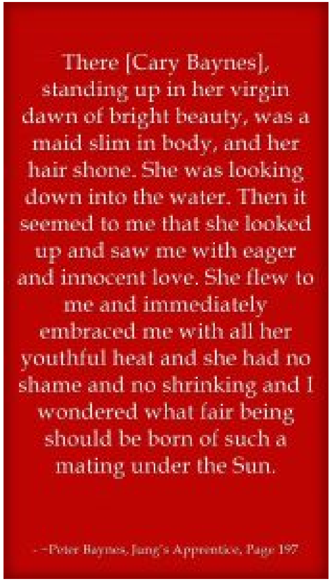
However, Jung did in reality have grave misgivings about this union. They were far out on the Zurich See, swimming together, when Peter proposed to Cary, and Jung saw this as an indication that they were too much in the unconscious with regard to their relationship.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 197



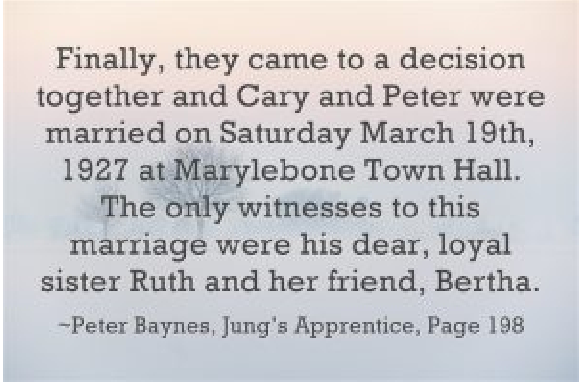
But his main concern was that Cary, although she was a fine looking woman, was essentially not Peter's anima-type. She was a big, strong-minded, independent woman of forty years old, and Peter was still dreaming of his inspiritrice, a young, slender girl of exquisite feminine beauty.

-Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 197



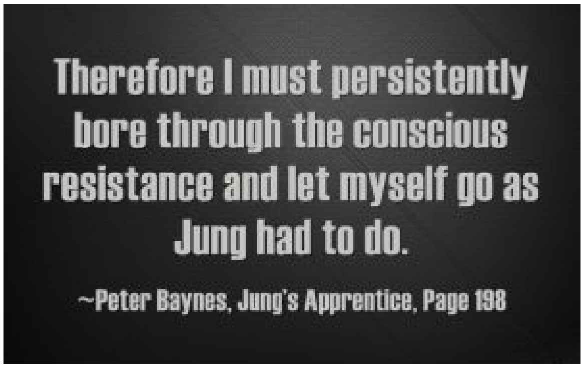
There [Cary Baynes], standing up in her virgin dawn of bright beauty, was a maid slim in body, and her hair shone. She was looking down into the water. Then it seemed to me that she looked up and saw me with eager and innocent love. She flew to me and immediately embraced me with all her youthful heat and she had no shame and no shrinking and I wondered what fair being should be born of such a mating under the Sun.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 197



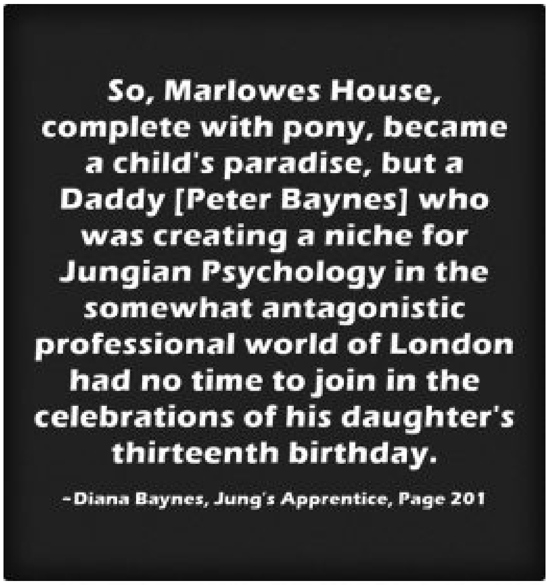
Finally, they came to a decision together and Cary and Peter were married on Saturday March 19th, 1927 at Marylebone Town Hall. The only witnesses to this marriage were his dear, loyal sister Ruth and her friend, Bertha.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 198



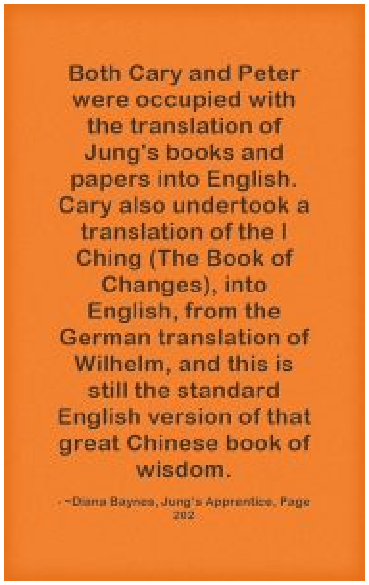
Therefore I must persistently bore through the conscious resistance and let myself go as Jung had to do.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 198



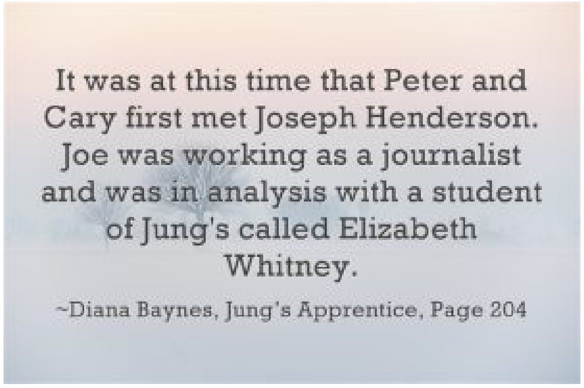
So, Marlowes House, complete with pony, became a child's paradise, but a Daddy [Peter Baynes] who was creating a niche for Jungian Psychology in the somewhat antagonistic professional world of London had no time to join in the celebrations of his daughter's thirteenth birthday.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 201



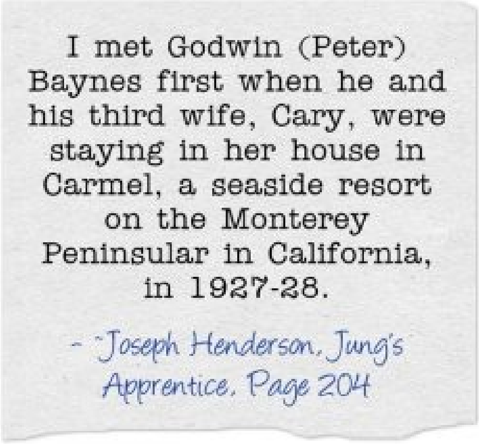
Both Cary and Peter were occupied with the translation of Jung's books and papers into English. Cary also undertook a translation of the I Ching (The Book of Changes), into English, from the German translation of Wilhelm, and this is still the standard English version of that great Chinese book of wisdom.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 202



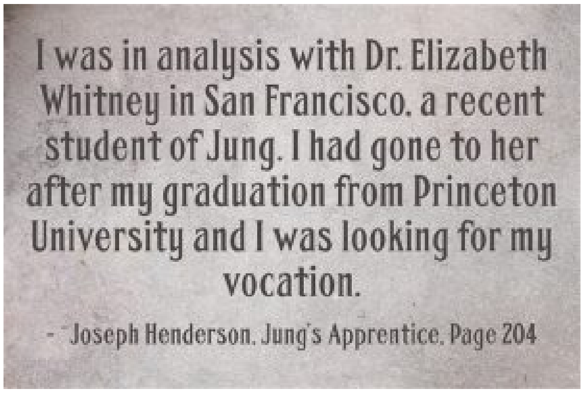
It was at this time that Peter and Cary first met Joseph Henderson. Joe was working as a journalist and was in analysis with a student of Jung's called Elizabeth Whitney.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 204



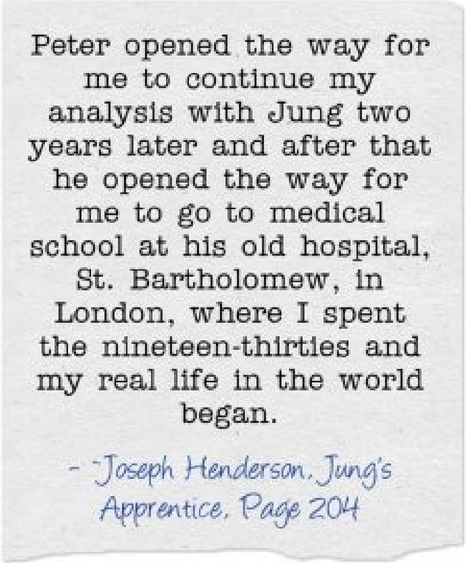
I met Godwin (Peter) Baynes first when he and his third wife, Cary, were staying in her house in Carmel, a seaside resort on the Monterey Peninsular in California, in 1927-28.

- ~Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 204



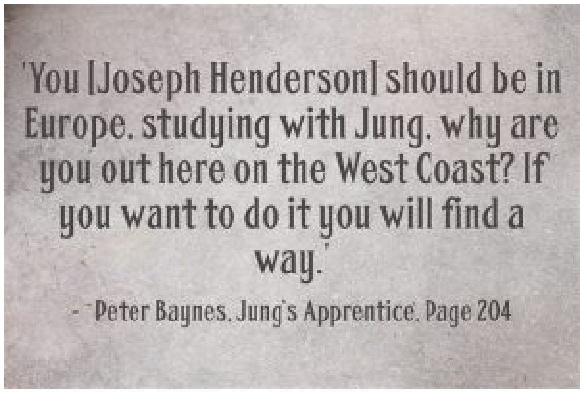
I was in analysis with Dr. Elizabeth Whitney in San Francisco, a recent student of Jung. I had gone to her after my graduation from Princeton University and I was looking for my vocation.

- ~Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 204



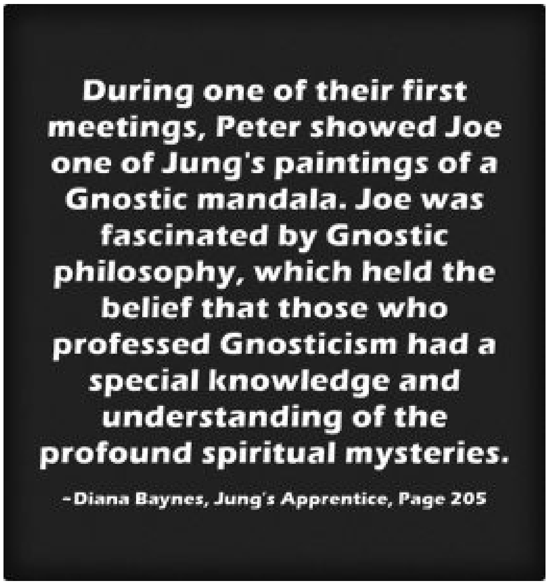
Peter opened the way for me to continue my analysis with Jung two years later and after that he opened the way for me to go to medical school at his old hospital, St. Bartholomew, in London, where I spent the nineteen-thirties and my real life in the world began.

- ~Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 204



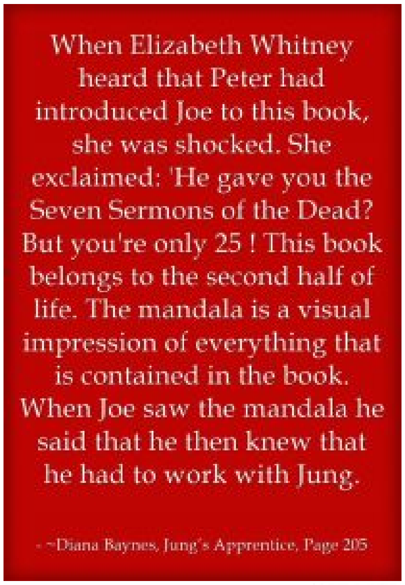
'You [Joseph Henderson] should be in Europe, studying with Jung, why are you out here on the West Coast? If you want to do it you will find a way.'

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 204



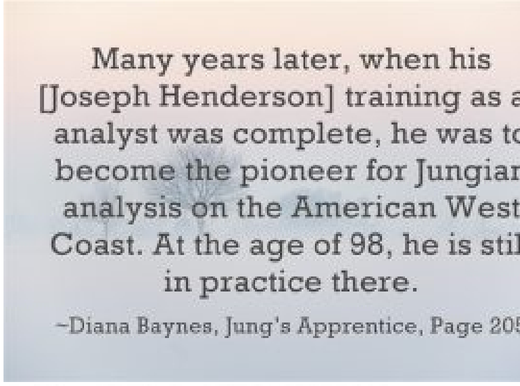
During one of their first meetings, Peter showed Joe one of Jung's paintings of a Gnostic mandala. Joe was fascinated by Gnostic philosophy, which held the belief that those who professed Gnosticism had a special knowledge and understanding of the profound spiritual mysteries.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 205



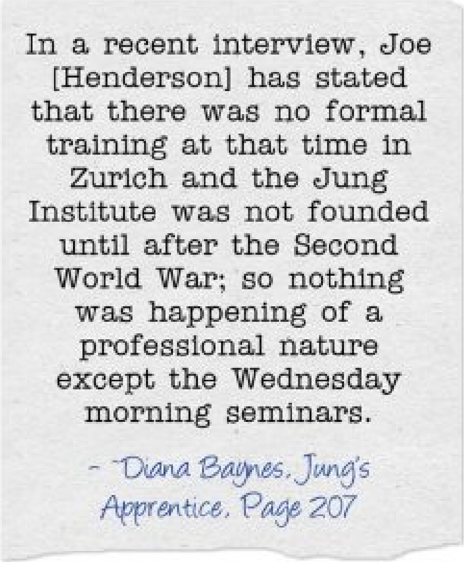
When Elizabeth Whitney heard that Peter had introduced Joe to this book, she was shocked. She exclaimed: 'He gave you the Seven Sermons of the Dead? But you're only 25 ! This book belongs to the second half of life. The mandala is a visual impression of everything that is contained in the book. When Joe saw the mandala he said that he then knew that he had to work with Jung.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 205



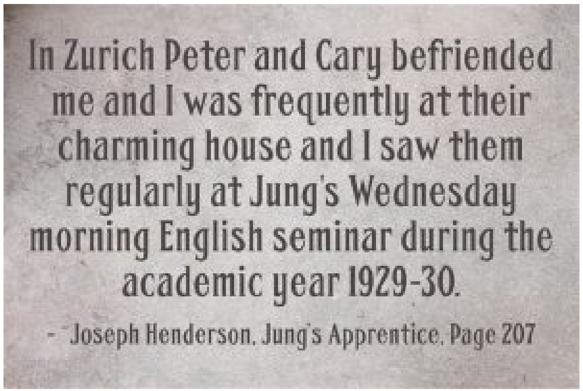
Many years later, when his [Joseph Henderson] training as a analyst was complete, he was t become the pioneer for Jungia analysis on the American West Coast. At the age of 98, he is stil in practice there.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 20



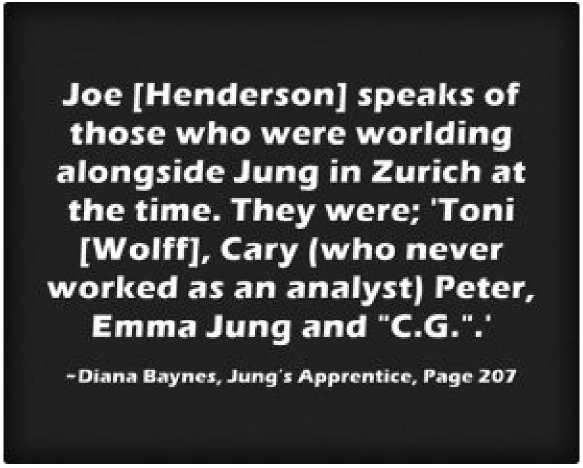
In a recent interview, Joe [Henderson] has stated that there was no formal training at that time in Zurich and the Jung Institute was not founded until after the Second World War; so nothing was happening of a professional nature except the Wednesday morning seminars.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 207



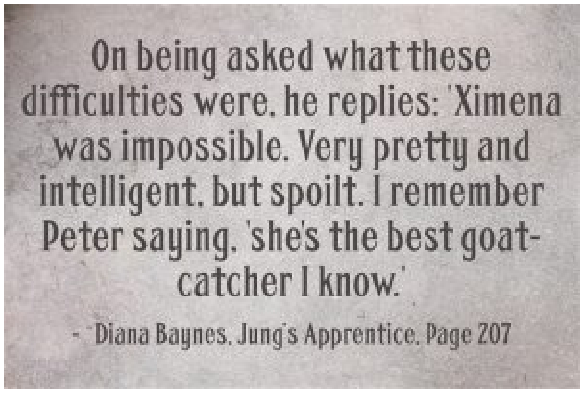
In Zurich Peter and Cary befriended me and I was frequently at their charming house and I saw them regularly at Jung's Wednesday morning English seminar during the academic year 1929-30.

- ~Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 207



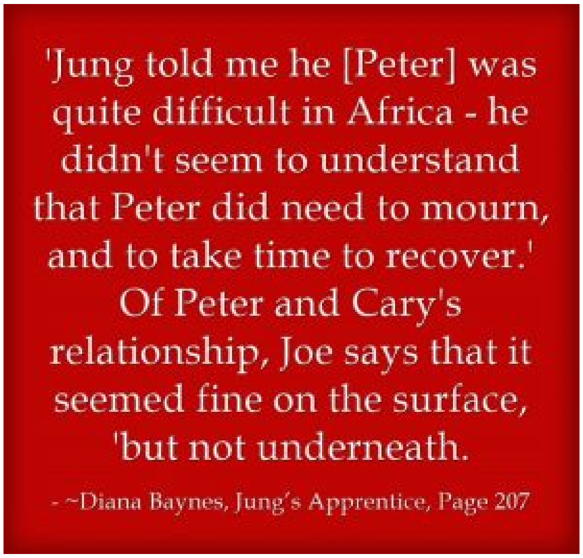
Joe [Henderson] speaks of those who were worlding alongside Jung in Zurich at the time. They were; 'Toni [Wolff], Cary (who never worked as an analyst) Peter, Emma Jung and "C.G.".'

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 207



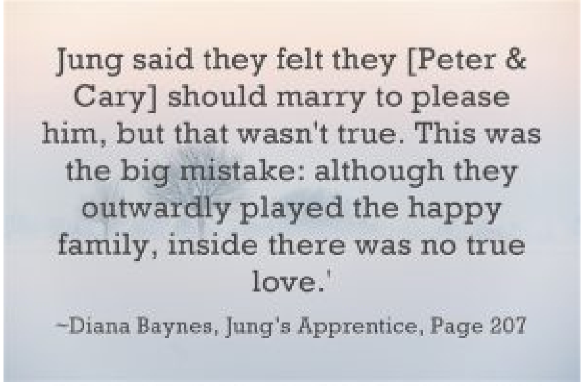
On being asked what these difficulties were, he replies: 'Ximena was impossible. Very pretty and intelligent, but spoilt. I remember Peter saying, 'she's the best goat-catcher I know.'

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 207



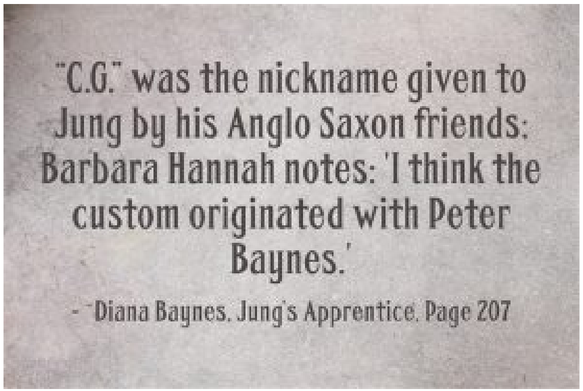
'Jung told me he [Peter] was quite difficult in Africa - he didn't seem to understand that Peter did need to mourn, and to take time to recover.' Of Peter and Cary's relationship, Joe says that it seemed fine on the surface, 'but not underneath.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 207



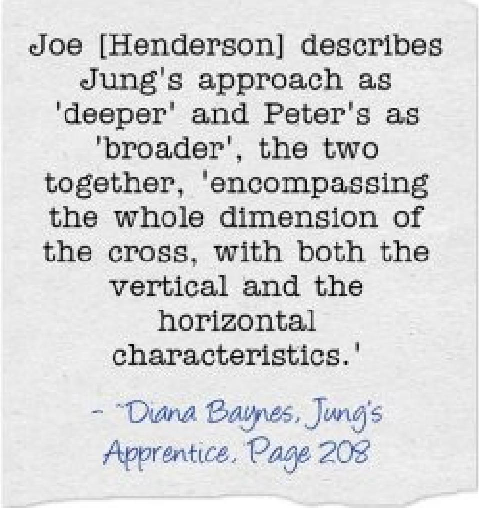
Jung said they felt they [Peter & Cary] should marry to please him, but that wasn't true. This was the big mistake: although they outwardly played the happy family, inside there was no true love.'

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 207



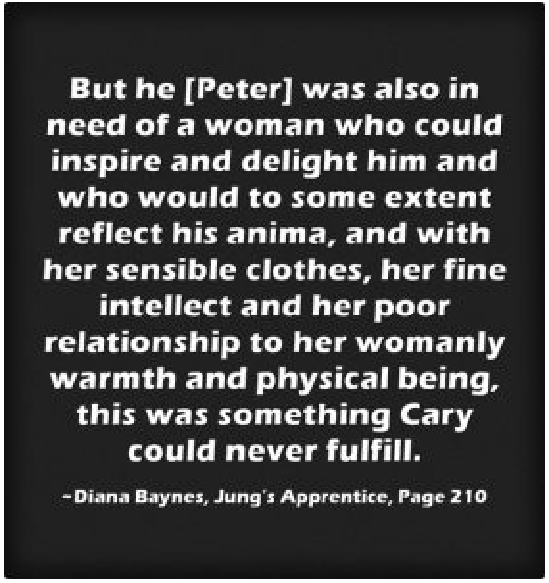
"C.G." was the nickname given to Jung by his Anglo Saxon friends: Barbara Hannah notes: 'I think the custom originated with Peter Baynes.'

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 207



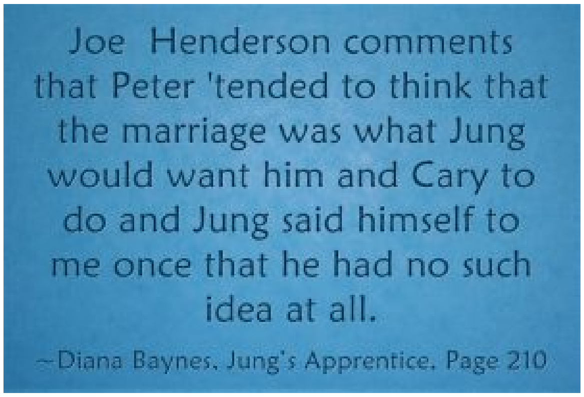
Joe [Henderson] describes Jung's approach as 'deeper' and Peter's as 'broader', the two together, 'encompassing the whole dimension of the cross, with both the vertical and the horizontal characteristics.'

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 208



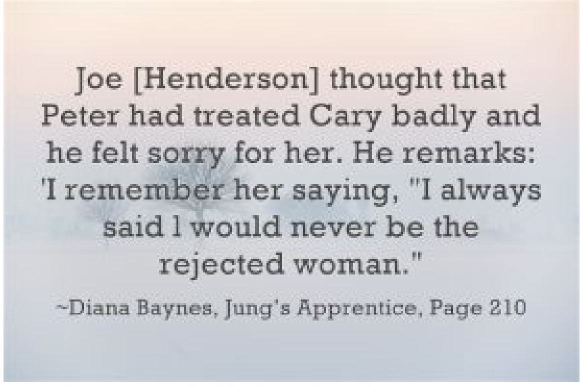
But he [Peter] was also in need of a woman who could inspire and delight him and who would to some extent reflect his anima, and with her sensible clothes, her fine intellect and her poor relationship to her womanly warmth and physical being, this was something Cary could never fulfill.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 210



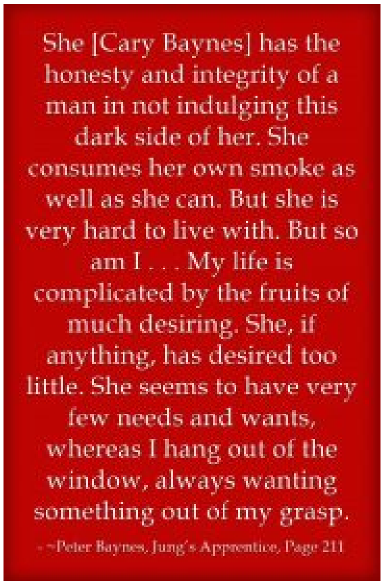
Joe Henderson comments that Peter 'tended to think that the marriage was what Jung would want him and Cary to do and Jung said himself to me once that he had no such idea at all.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 210



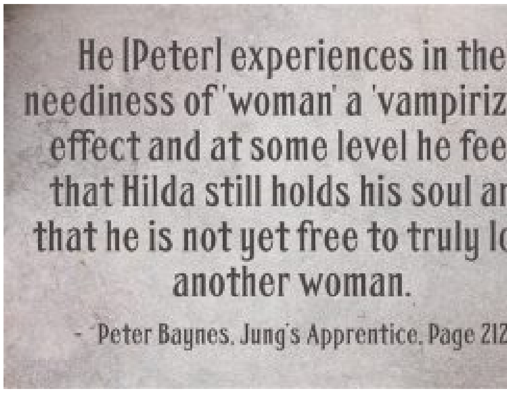
Joe [Henderson] thought that Peter had treated Cary badly and he felt sorry for her. He remarks: 'I remember her saying, "I always said I would never be the rejected woman."

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 210



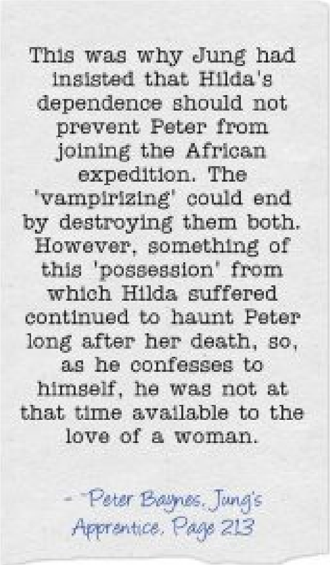
She [Cary Baynes] has the honesty and integrity of a man in not indulging this dark side of her. She consumes her own smoke as well as she can. But she is very hard to live with. But so am I . . . My life is complicated by the fruits of much desiring. She, if anything, has desired too little. She seems to have very few needs and wants, whereas I hang out of the window, always wanting something out of my grasp.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 211



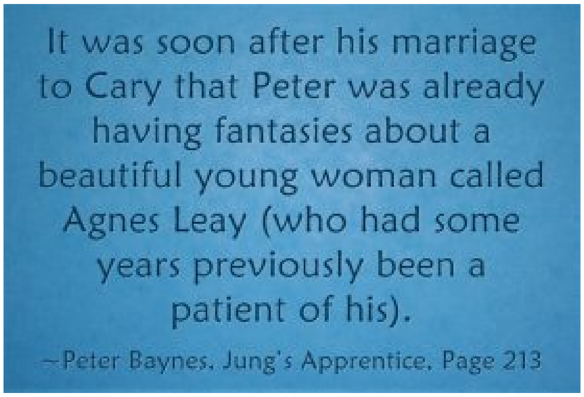
He [Peter] experiences in the neediness of 'woman' a 'vampiriz effect and at some level he fee that Hilda still holds his soul ar that he is not yet free to truly lo another woman.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 21



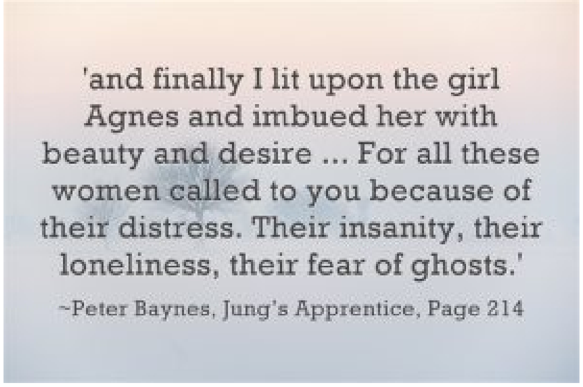
This was why Jung had insisted that Hilda's dependence should not prevent Peter from joining the African expedition. The 'vampirizing' could end by destroying them both. However, something of this 'possession' from which Hilda suffered continued to haunt Peter long after her death, so, as he confesses to himself, he was not at that time available to the love of a woman.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 213



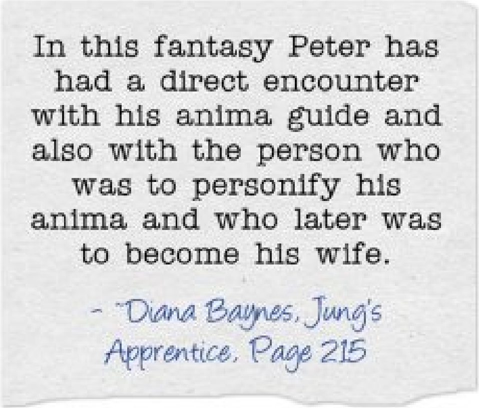
It was soon after his marriage to Cary that Peter was already having fantasies about a beautiful young woman called Agnes Leay (who had some years previously been a patient of his).

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 213



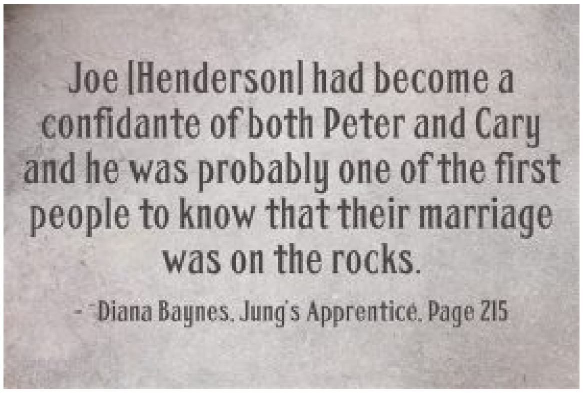
'and finally I lit upon the girl Agnes and imbued her with beauty and desire ... For all these women called to you because of their distress. Their insanity, their loneliness, their fear of ghosts.'

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 214



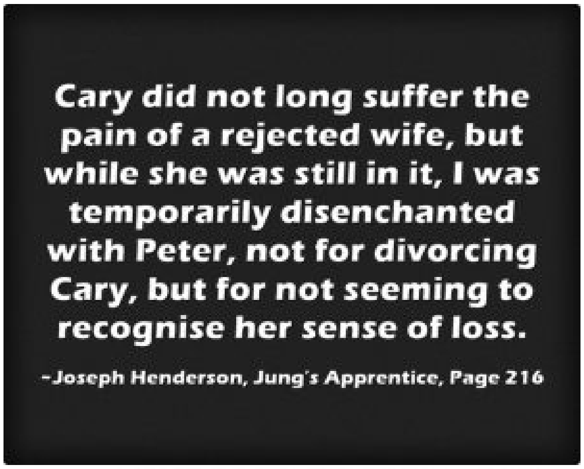
In this fantasy Peter has had a direct encounter with his anima guide and also with the person who was to personify his anima and who later was to become his wife.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 215



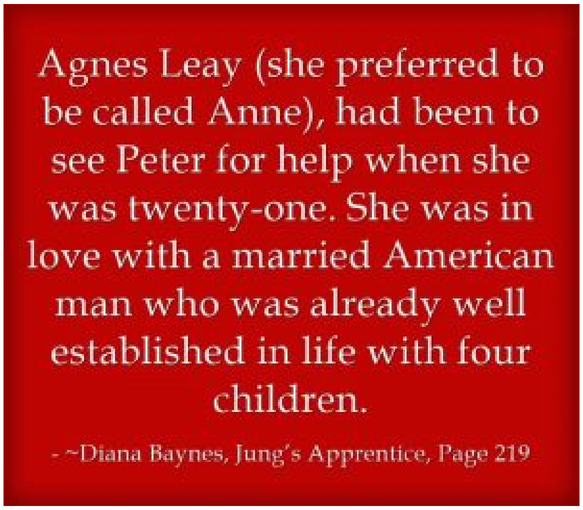
Joe [Henderson] had become a confidante of both Peter and Cary and he was probably one of the first people to know that their marriage was on the rocks.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 215



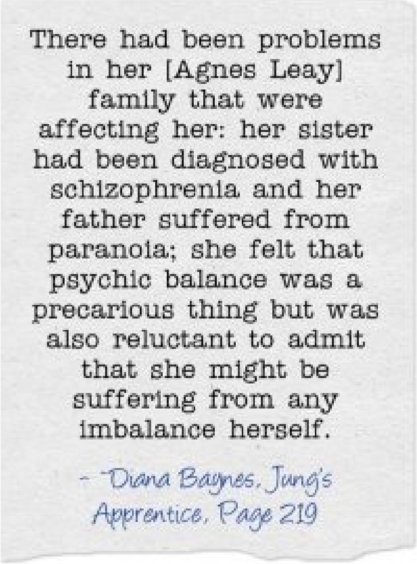
Cary did not long suffer the pain of a rejected wife, but while she was still in it, I was temporarily disenchanted with Peter, not for divorcing Cary, but for not seeming to recognise her sense of loss.

~Joseph Henderson, Jung's Apprentice, Page 216



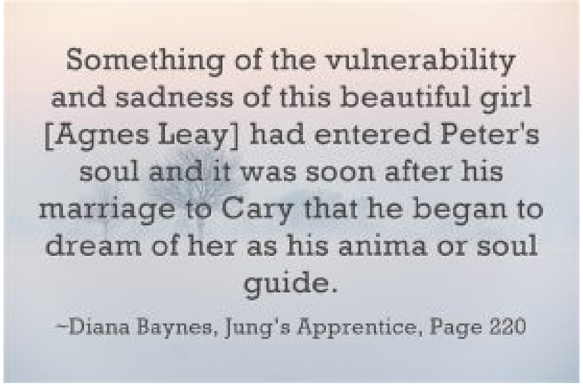
Agnes Leay (she preferred to be called Anne), had been to see Peter for help when she was twenty-one. She was in love with a married American man who was already well established in life with four children.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 219



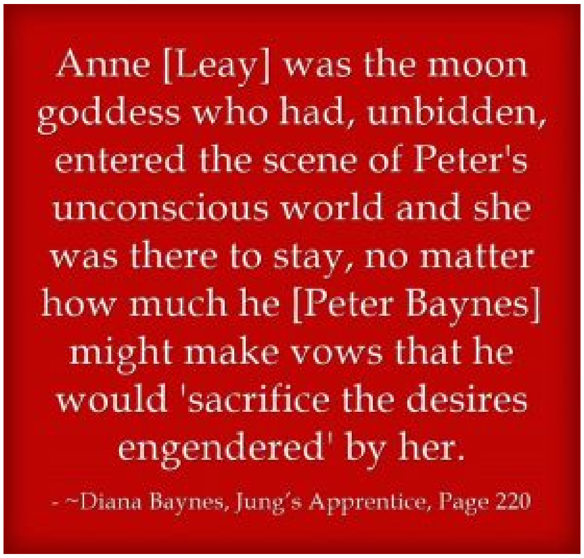
There had been problems in her [Agnes Leay] family that were affecting her: her sister had been diagnosed with schizophrenia and her father suffered from paranoia; she felt that psychic balance was a precarious thing but was also reluctant to admit that she might be suffering from any imbalance herself.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 219



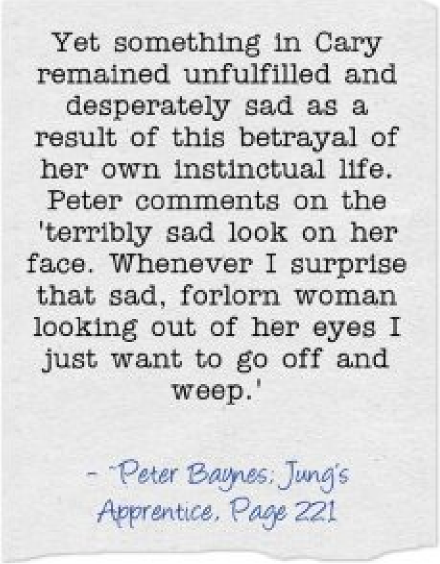
Something of the vulnerability and sadness of this beautiful girl [Agnes Leay] had entered Peter's soul and it was soon after his marriage to Cary that he began to dream of her as his anima or soul guide.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 220



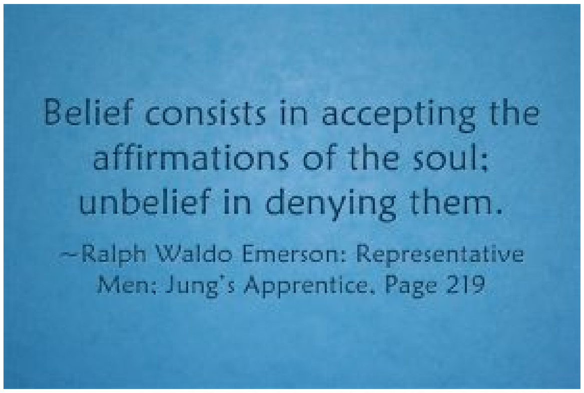
Anne [Leay] was the moon goddess who had, unbidden, entered the scene of Peter's unconscious world and she was there to stay, no matter how much he [Peter Baynes] might make vows that he would 'sacrifice the desires engendered' by her.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 220



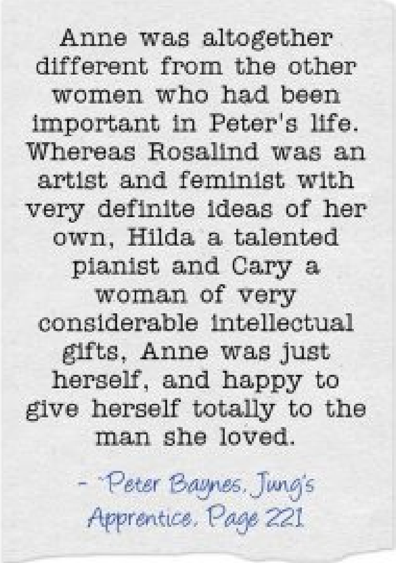
Yet something in Cary remained unfulfilled and desperately sad as a result of this betrayal of her own instinctual life. Peter comments on the 'terribly sad look on her face. Whenever I surprise that sad, forlorn woman looking out of her eyes I just want to go off and weep.'

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 221



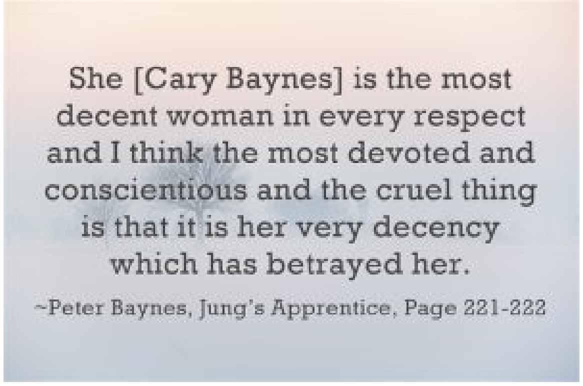
Belief consists in accepting the affirmations of the soul; unbelief in denying them.

~Ralph Waldo Emerson: Representative Men; Jung's Apprentice, Page 219



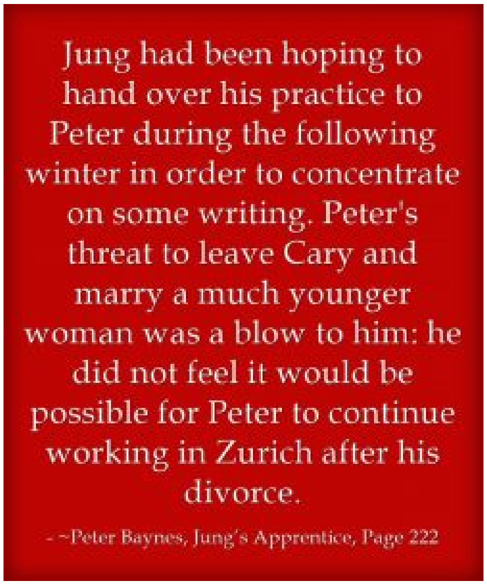
Anne was altogether different from the other women who had been important in Peter's life. Whereas Rosalind was an artist and feminist with very definite ideas of her own, Hilda a talented pianist and Cary a woman of very considerable intellectual gifts, Anne was just herself, and happy to give herself totally to the man she loved.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 221



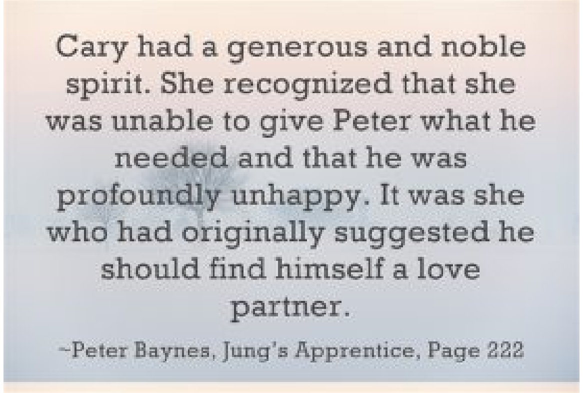
She [Cary Baynes] is the most decent woman in every respect and I think the most devoted and conscientious and the cruel thing is that it is her very decency which has betrayed her.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 221-222



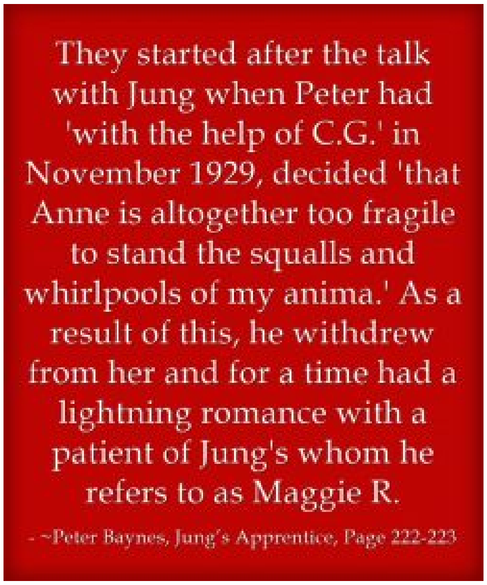
Jung had been hoping to hand over his practice to Peter during the following winter in order to concentrate on some writing. Peter's threat to leave Cary and marry a much younger woman was a blow to him: he did not feel it would be possible for Peter to continue working in Zurich after his divorce.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 222



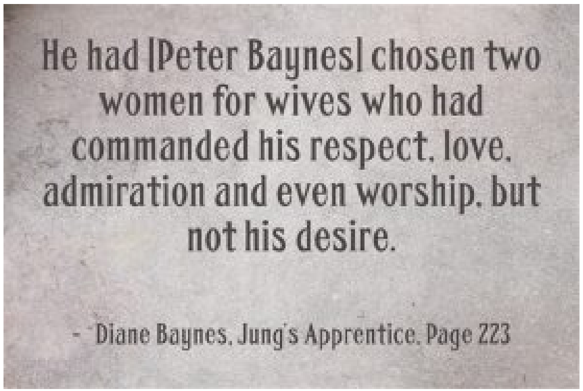
Cary had a generous and noble spirit. She recognized that she was unable to give Peter what he needed and that he was profoundly unhappy. It was she who had originally suggested he should find himself a love partner.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 222



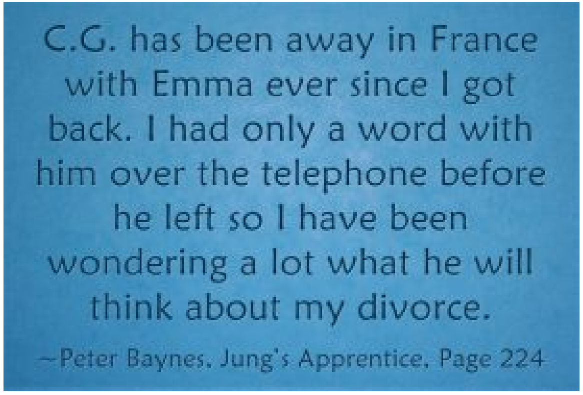
They started after the talk with Jung when Peter had 'with the help of C.G.' in November 1929, decided 'that Anne is altogether too fragile to stand the squalls and whirlpools of my anima.' As a result of this, he withdrew from her and for a time had a lightning romance with a patient of Jung's whom he refers to as Maggie R.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 222-223



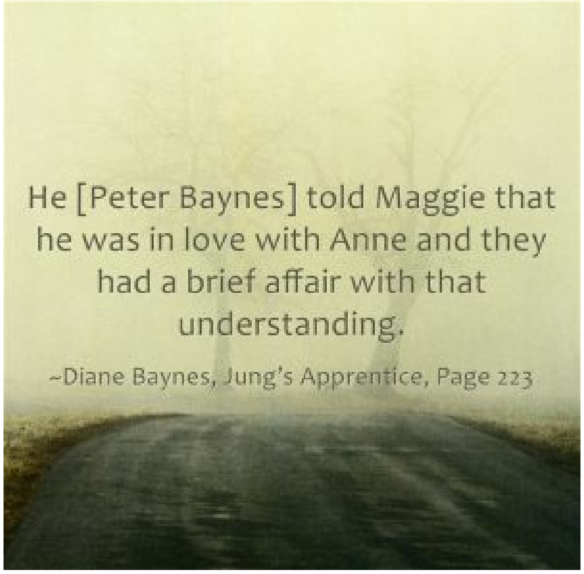
He had [Peter Baynes] chosen two women for wives who had commanded his respect, love, admiration and even worship, but not his desire.

- Diane Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 223



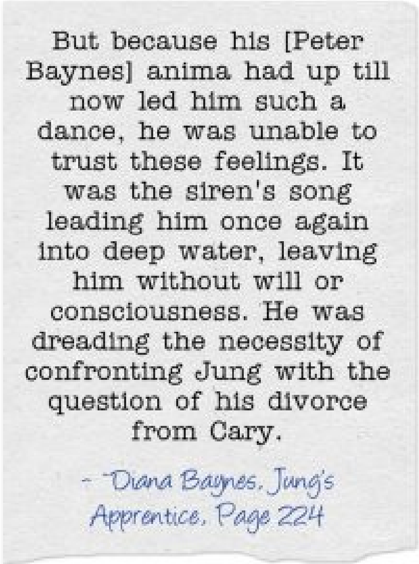
C.G. has been away in France with Emma ever since I got back. I had only a word with him over the telephone before he left so I have been wondering a lot what he will think about my divorce.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 224



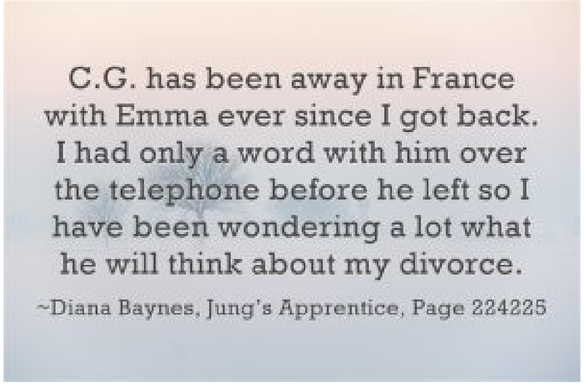
He [Peter Baynes] told Maggie that he was in love with Anne and they had a brief affair with that understanding.

~Diane Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 223



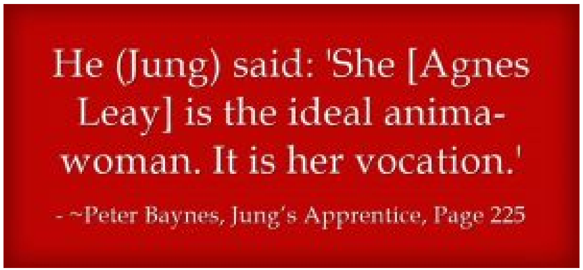
But because his [Peter Baynes] anima had up till now led him such a dance, he was unable to trust these feelings. It was the siren's song leading him once again into deep water, leaving him without will or consciousness. He was dreading the necessity of confronting Jung with the question of his divorce from Cary.

- Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 224



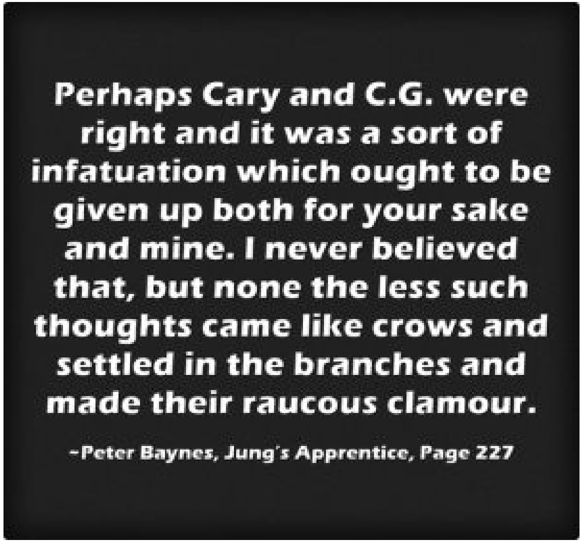
C.G. has been away in France with Emma ever since I got back. I had only a word with him over the telephone before he left so I have been wondering a lot what he will think about my divorce.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 224225



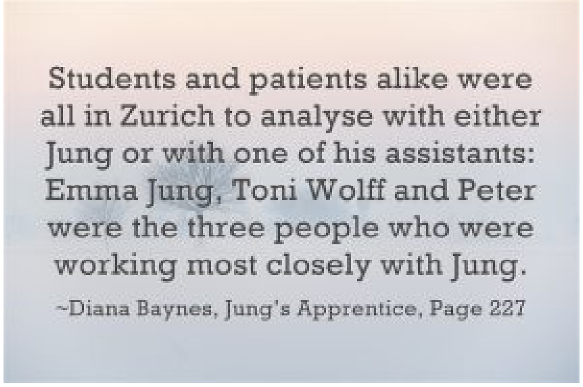
He (Jung) said: 'She [Agnes Leay] is the ideal anima-woman. It is her vocation.'

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 225



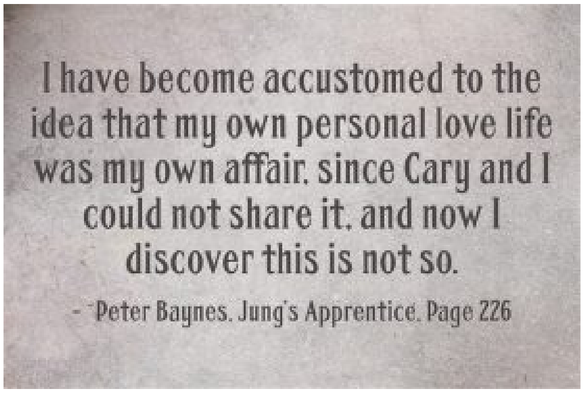
Perhaps Cary and C.G. were right and it was a sort of infatuation which ought to be given up both for your sake and mine. I never believed that, but none the less such thoughts came like crows and settled in the branches and made their raucous clamour.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 227



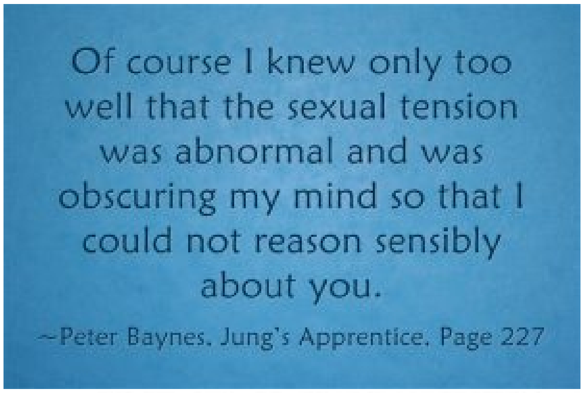
Students and patients alike were all in Zurich to analyse with either Jung or with one of his assistants: Emma Jung, Toni Wolff and Peter were the three people who were working most closely with Jung.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 227



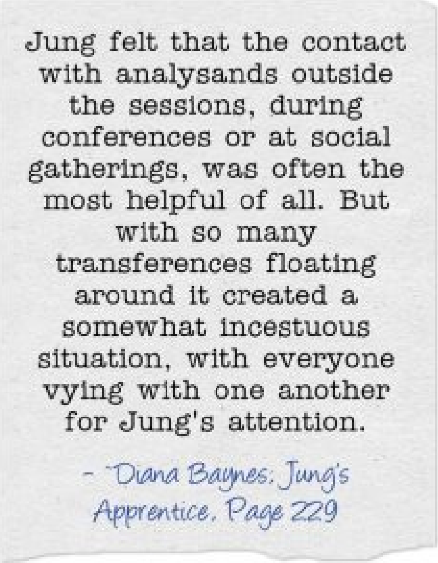
I have become accustomed to the idea that my own personal love life was my own affair, since Cary and I could not share it, and now I discover this is not so.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 226



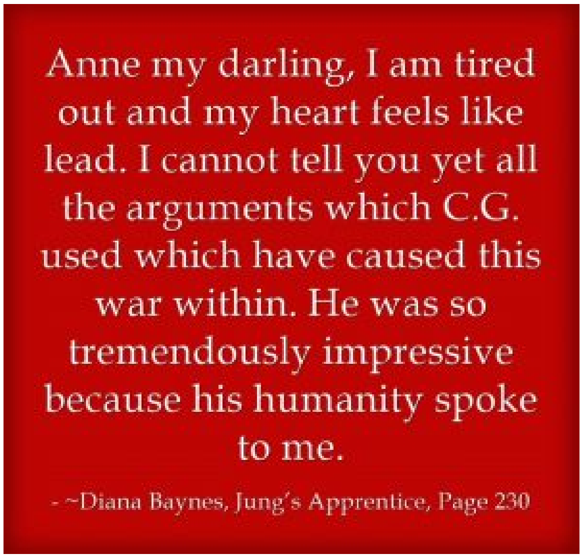
Of course I knew only too well that the sexual tension was abnormal and was obscuring my mind so that I could not reason sensibly about you.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 227



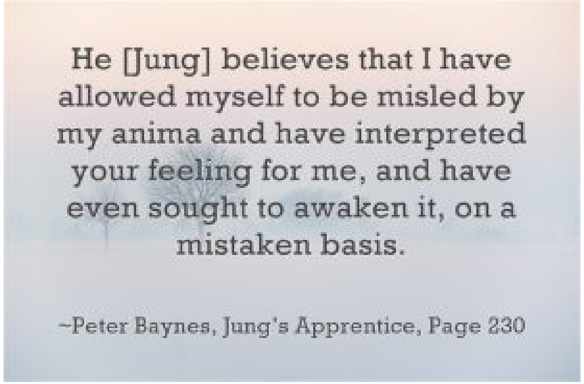
Jung felt that the contact with analysands outside the sessions, during conferences or at social gatherings, was often the most helpful of all. But with so many transferences floating around it created a somewhat incestuous situation, with everyone vying with one another for Jung's attention.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 229



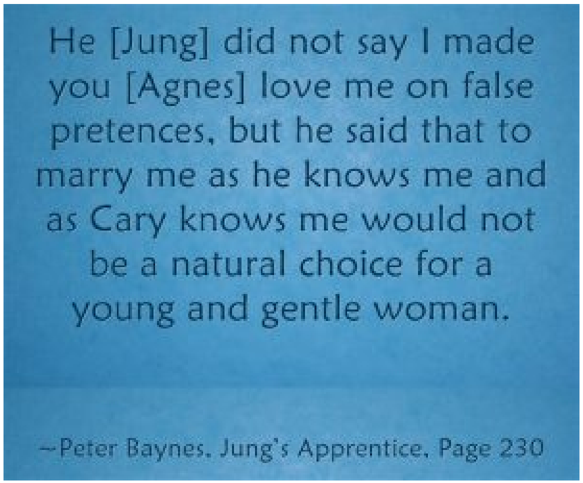
Anne my darling, I am tired out and my heart feels like lead. I cannot tell you yet all the arguments which C.G. used which have caused this war within. He was so tremendously impressive because his humanity spoke to me.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 230



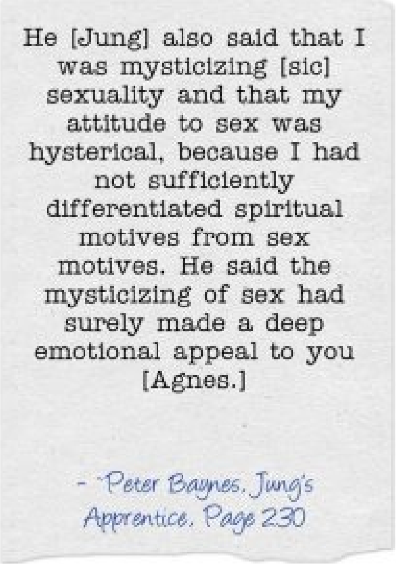
He [Jung] believes that I have allowed myself to be misled by my anima and have interpreted your feeling for me, and have even sought to awaken it, on a mistaken basis.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 230



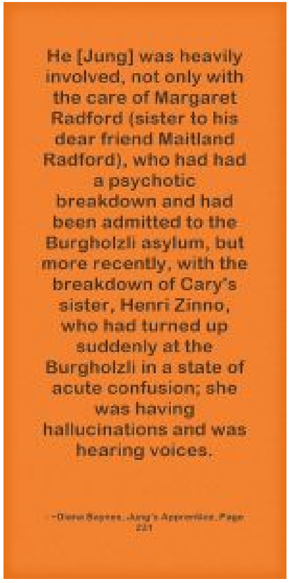
He [Jung] did not say I made you [Agnes] love me on false pretences, but he said that to marry me as he knows me and as Cary knows me would not be a natural choice for a young and gentle woman.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 230

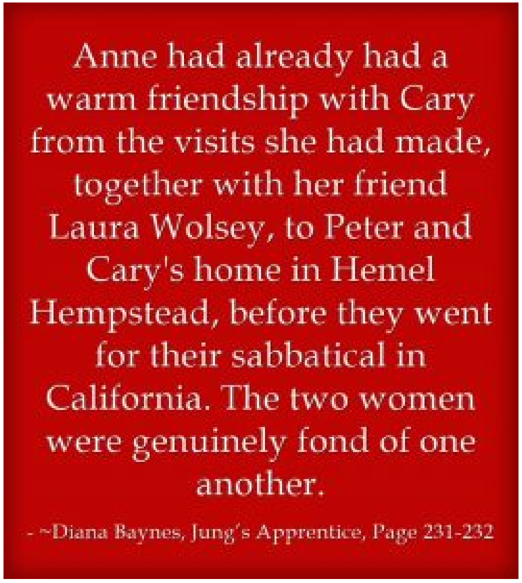


He [Jung] also said that I was mysticizing [sic] sexuality and that my attitude to sex was hysterical, because I had not sufficiently differentiated spiritual motives from sex motives. He said the mysticizing of sex had surely made a deep emotional appeal to you [Agnes.]

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 230

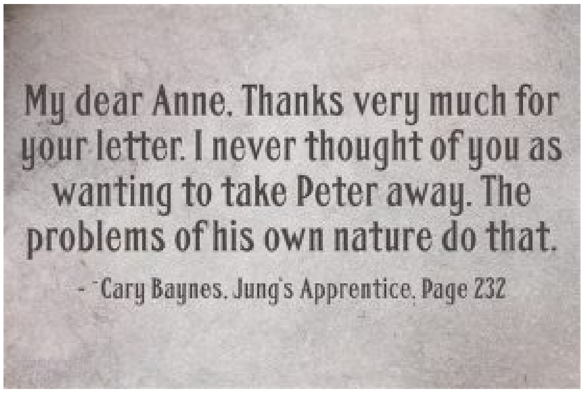


He [Jung] was heavily involved, not only with the care of Margaret Radford (sister to his dear friend Maitland Radford), who had had a psychotic breakdown and had been admitted to the Burgholzli asylum, but more recently, with the breakdown of Cary's sister, Henri Zinno, who had turned up suddenly at the Burgholzli in a state of acute confusion; she was having hallucinations and was hearing voices.



Anne had already had a warm friendship with Cary from the visits she had made, together with her friend Laura Wolsey, to Peter and Cary's home in Hemel Hempstead, before they went for their sabbatical in California. The two women were genuinely fond of one another.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 231-232

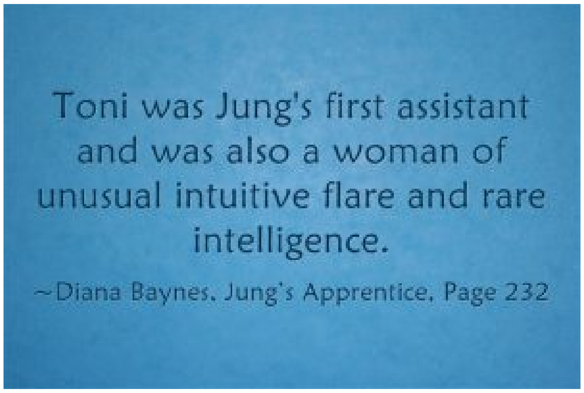


My dear Anne. Thanks very much for your letter. I never thought of you as wanting to take Peter away. The problems of his own nature do that.

- ~Cary Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 232

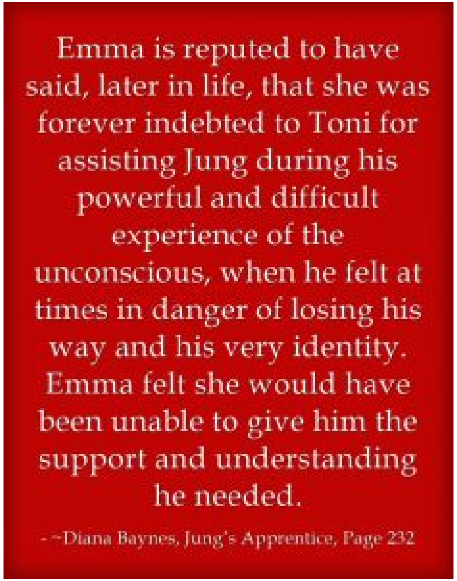
She [Anne] later described this momentous visit. Peter suggested straight away that they should go to Bollingen to talk with Jung. This was on a Sunday and Jung was staying there together with Toni Wolff.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 232



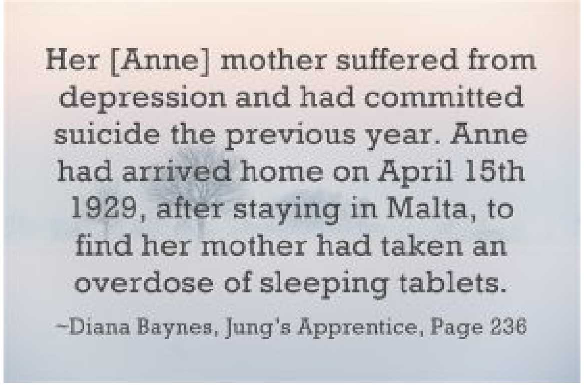
Toni was Jung's first assistant and was also a woman of unusual intuitive flare and rare intelligence.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 232



Emma is reputed to have said, later in life, that she was forever indebted to Toni for assisting Jung during his powerful and difficult experience of the unconscious, when he felt at times in danger of losing his way and his very identity. Emma felt she would have been unable to give him the support and understanding he needed.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 232

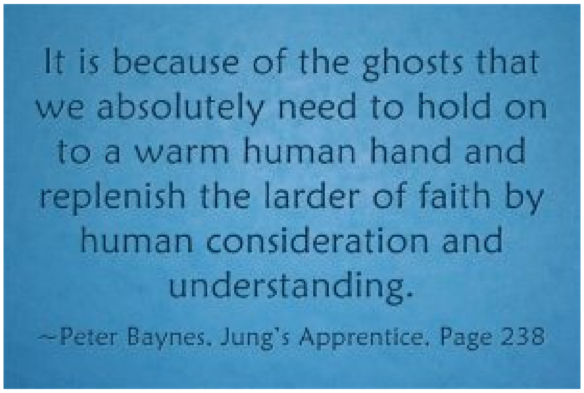


Her [Anne] mother suffered from depression and had committed suicide the previous year. Anne had arrived home on April 15th 1929, after staying in Malta, to find her mother had taken an overdose of sleeping tablets.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 236

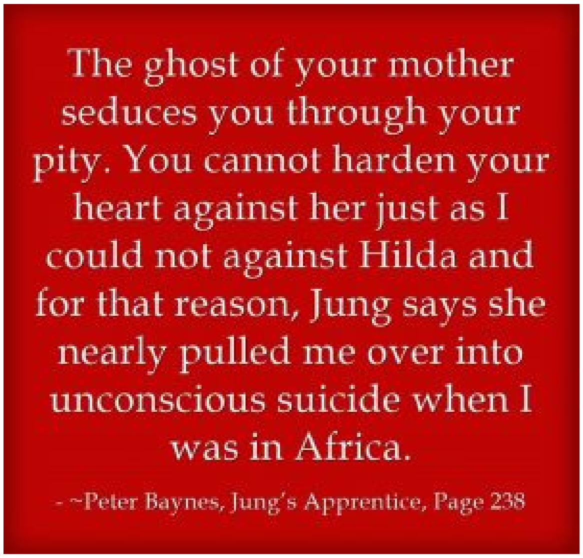
Laura Leay had been separated from her husband, Fred, for seven years. His paranoia and his bizarre accusations against his wife, in relation to infidelity and the embezzlement of his money, had become intolerable and he had finally been committed to an asylum.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 236



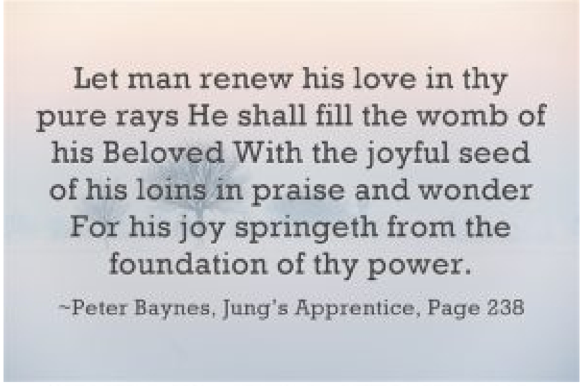
It is because of the ghosts that we absolutely need to hold on to a warm human hand and replenish the larder of faith by human consideration and understanding.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 238



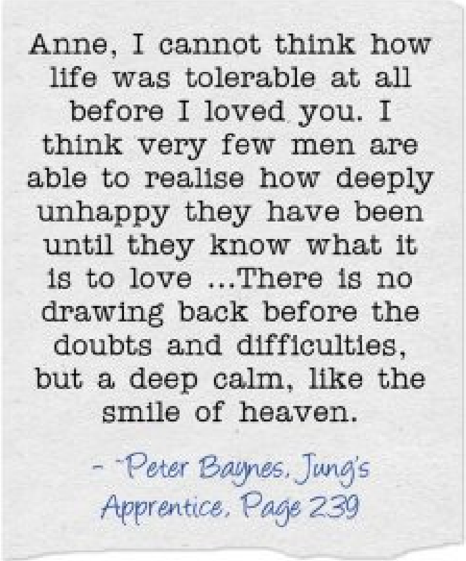
The ghost of your mother seduces you through your pity. You cannot harden your heart against her just as I could not against Hilda and for that reason, Jung says she nearly pulled me over into unconscious suicide when I was in Africa.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 238



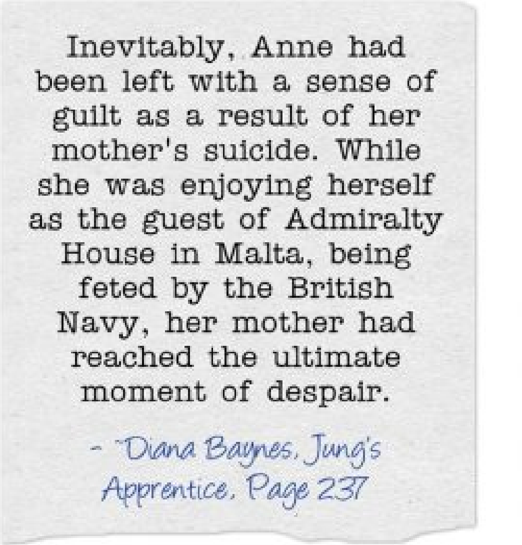
Let man renew his love in thy pure rays He shall fill the womb of his Beloved With the joyful seed of his loins in praise and wonder For his joy springeth from the foundation of thy power.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 238



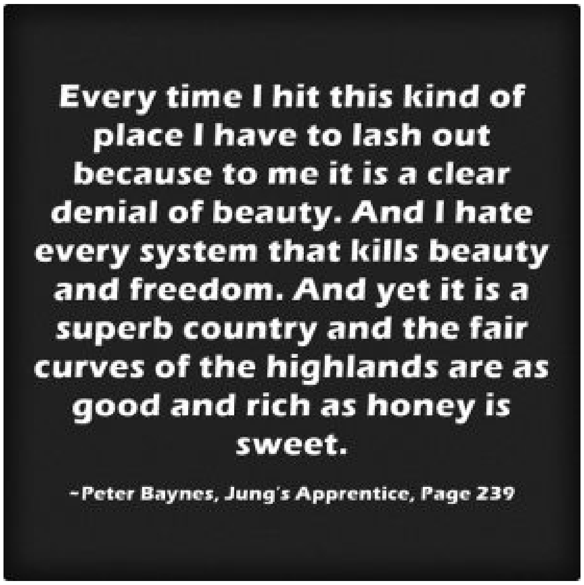
Anne, I cannot think how life was tolerable at all before I loved you. I think very few men are able to realise how deeply unhappy they have been until they know what it is to love ...There is no drawing back before the doubts and difficulties, but a deep calm, like the smile of heaven.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 239



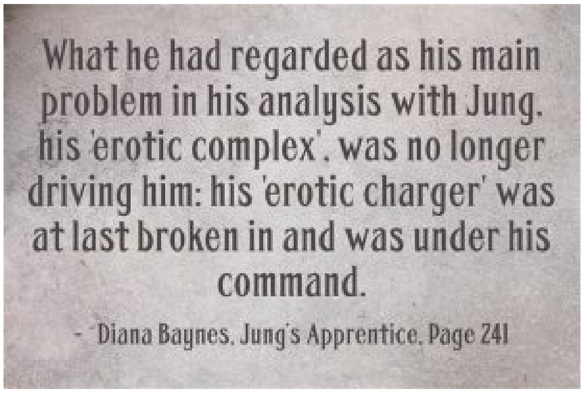
Inevitably, Anne had been left with a sense of guilt as a result of her mother's suicide. While she was enjoying herself as the guest of Admiralty House in Malta, being feted by the British Navy, her mother had reached the ultimate moment of despair.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 237



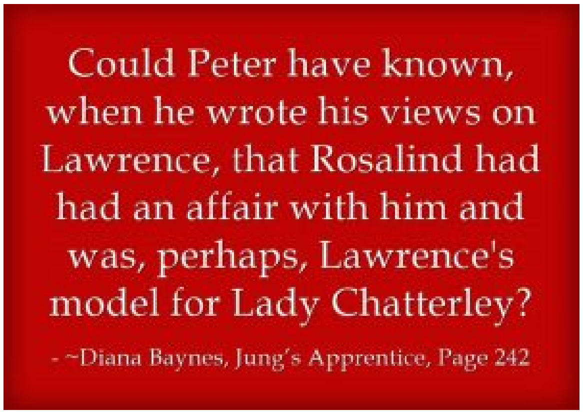
Every time I hit this kind of place I have to lash out because to me it is a clear denial of beauty. And I hate every system that kills beauty and freedom. And yet it is a superb country and the fair curves of the highlands are as good and rich as honey is sweet.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 239



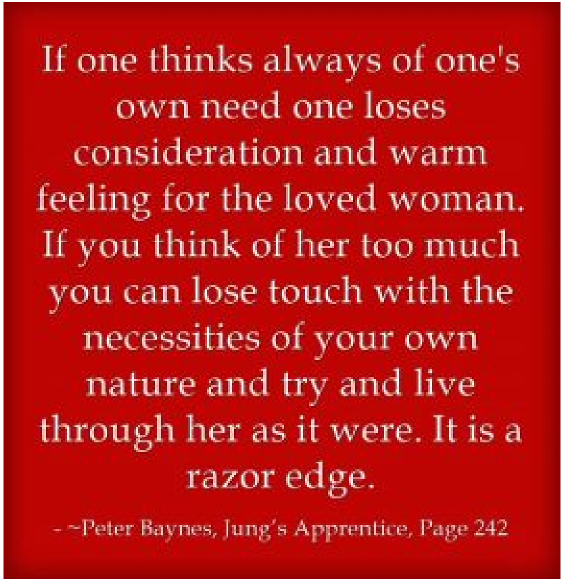
What he had regarded as his main problem in his analysis with Jung, his 'erotic complex', was no longer driving him: his 'erotic charger' was at last broken in and was under his command.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 241



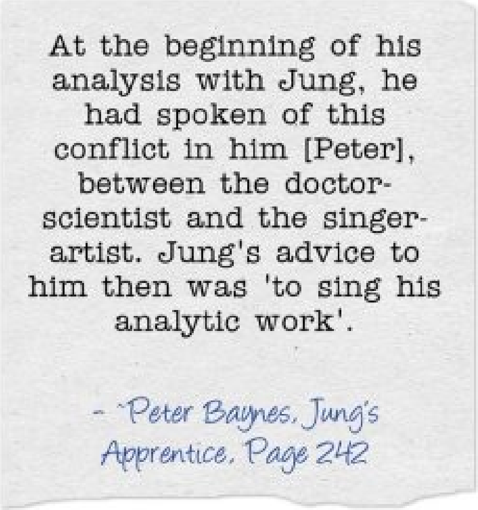
Could Peter have known, when he wrote his views on Lawrence, that Rosalind had had an affair with him and was, perhaps, Lawrence's model for Lady Chatterley?

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242



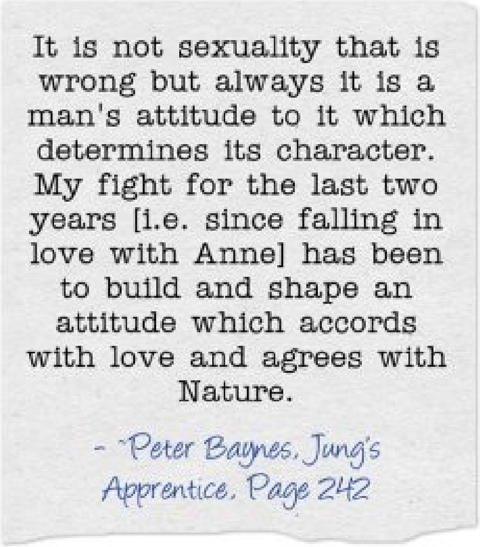
If one thinks always of one's own need one loses consideration and warm feeling for the loved woman. If you think of her too much you can lose touch with the necessities of your own nature and try and live through her as it were. It is a razor edge.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242



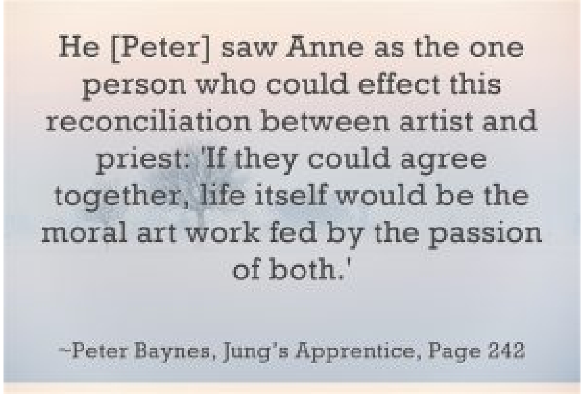
At the beginning of his analysis with Jung, he had spoken of this conflict in him [Peter], between the doctor-scientist and the singer-artist. Jung's advice to him then was 'to sing his analytic work'.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242



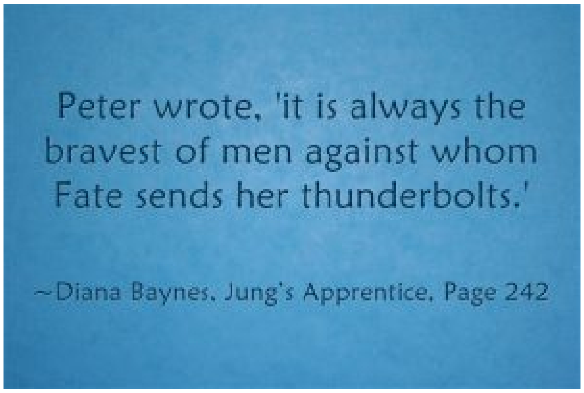
It is not sexuality that is wrong but always it is a man's attitude to it which determines its character. My fight for the last two years [i.e. since falling in love with Anne] has been to build and shape an attitude which accords with love and agrees with Nature.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242



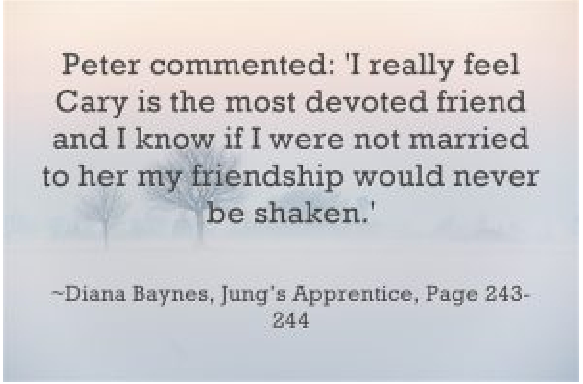
He [Peter] saw Anne as the one person who could effect this reconciliation between artist and priest: 'If they could agree together, life itself would be the moral art work fed by the passion of both.'

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242



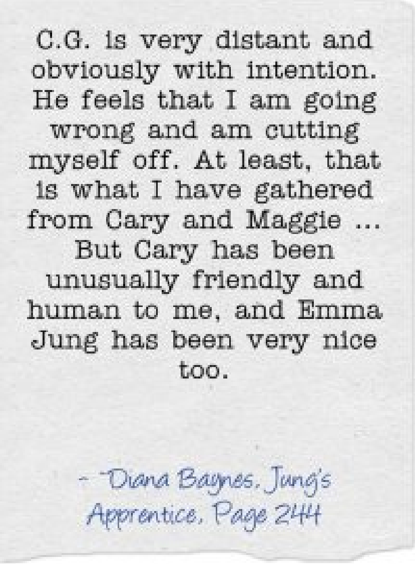
Peter wrote, 'it is always the bravest of men against whom Fate sends her thunderbolts.'

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 242



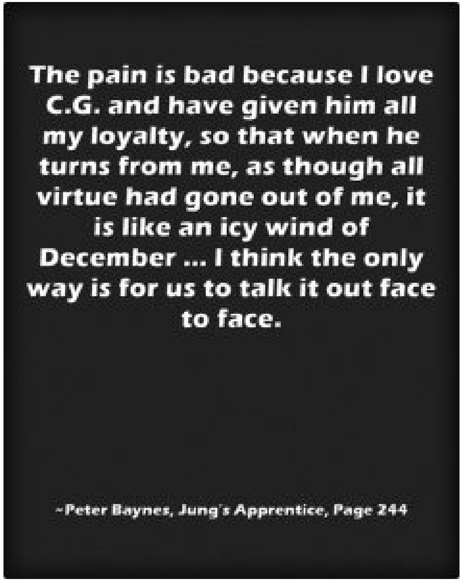
Peter commented: 'I really feel Cary is the most devoted friend and I know if I were not married to her my friendship would never be shaken.'

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 243-244



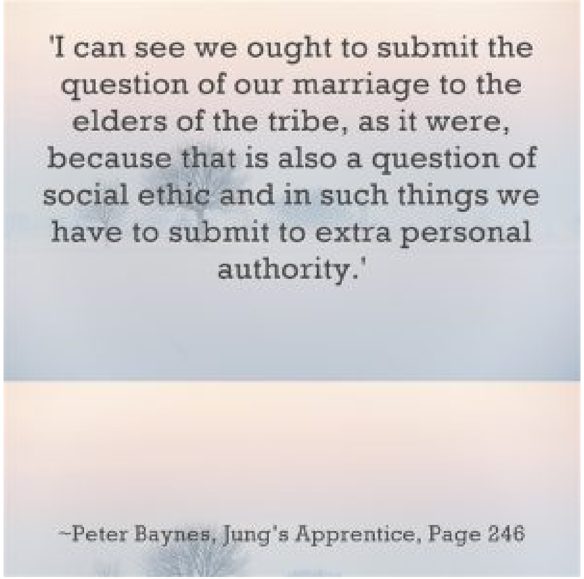
C.G. is very distant and obviously with intention. He feels that I am going wrong and am cutting myself off. At least, that is what I have gathered from Cary and Maggie ... But Cary has been unusually friendly and human to me, and Emma Jung has been very nice too.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 244



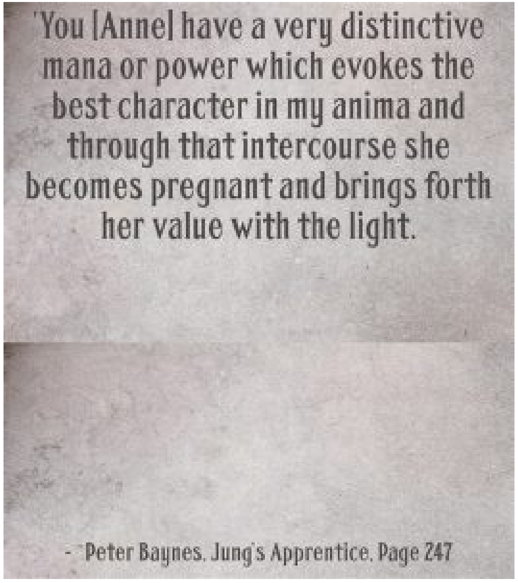
The pain is bad because I love C.G. and have given him all my loyalty, so that when he turns from me, as though all virtue had gone out of me, it is like an icy wind of December ... I think the only way is for us to talk it out face to face.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 244



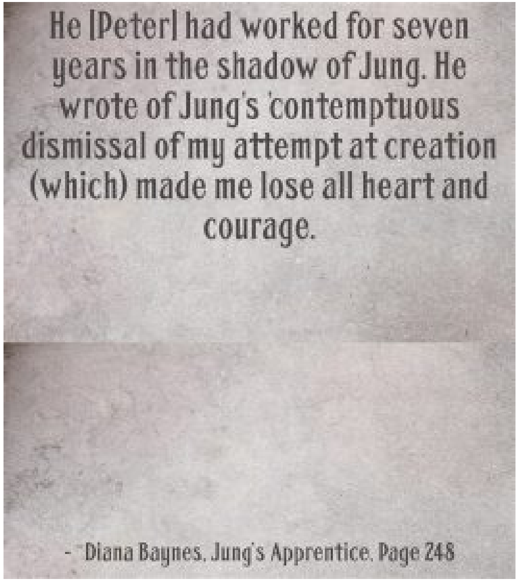
'I can see we ought to submit the question of our marriage to the elders of the tribe, as it were, because that is also a question of social ethic and in such things we have to submit to extra personal authority.'

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 246



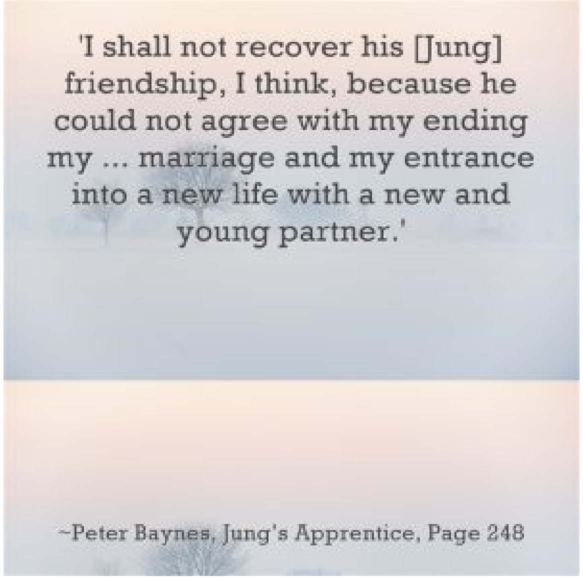
'You [Anne] have a very distinctive mana or power which evokes the best character in my anima and through that intercourse she becomes pregnant and brings forth her value with the light.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 247



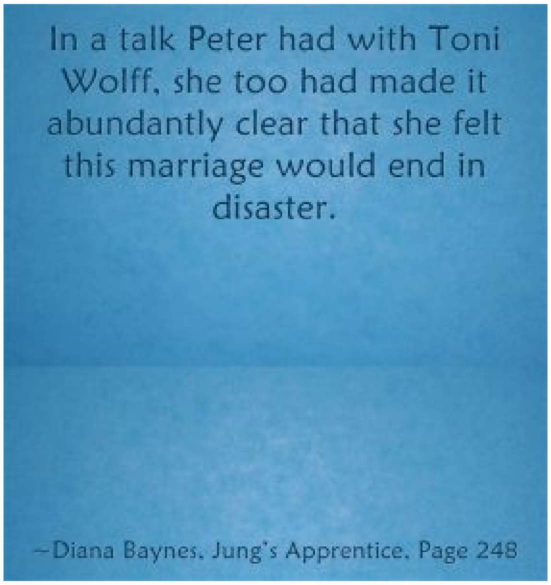
He [Peter] had worked for seven years in the shadow of Jung. He wrote of Jung's 'contemptuous dismissal of my attempt at creation (which) made me lose all heart and courage.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248



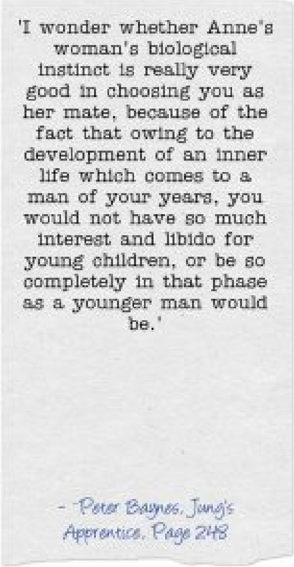
'I shall not recover his [Jung] friendship, I think, because he could not agree with my ending my ... marriage and my entrance into a new life with a new and young partner.'

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248



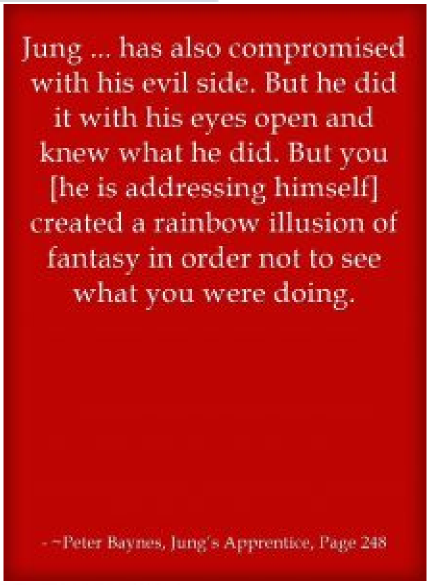
In a talk Peter had with Toni Wolff, she too had made it abundantly clear that she felt this marriage would end in disaster.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248



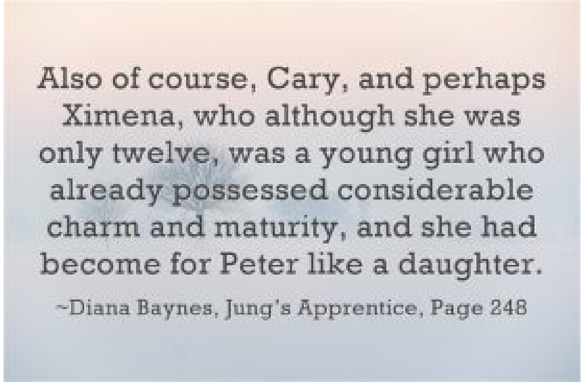
'I wonder whether Anne's woman's biological instinct is really very good in choosing you as her mate, because of the fact that owing to the development of an inner life which comes to a man of your years, you would not have so much interest and libido for young children, or be so completely in that phase as a younger man would be.'

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248



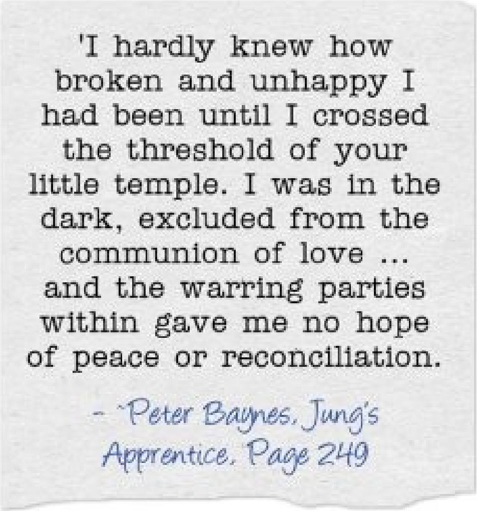
Jung ... has also compromised with his evil side. But he did it with his eyes open and knew what he did. But you [he is addressing himself] created a rainbow illusion of fantasy in order not to see what you were doing.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248



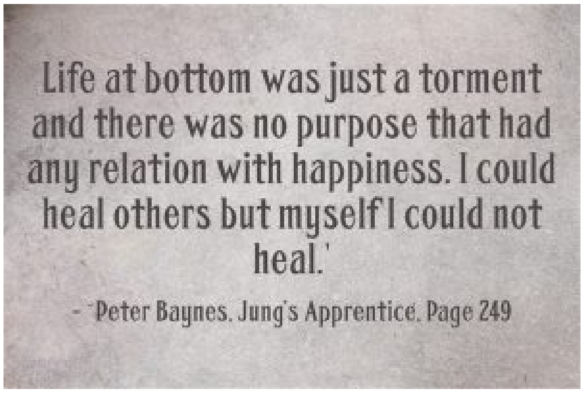
Also of course, Cary, and perhaps Ximena, who although she was only twelve, was a young girl who already possessed considerable charm and maturity, and she had become for Peter like a daughter.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 248



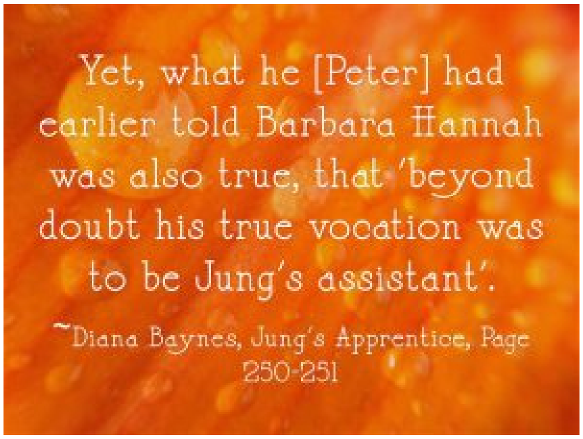
'I hardly knew how broken and unhappy I had been until I crossed the threshold of your little temple. I was in the dark, excluded from the communion of love ... and the warring parties within gave me no hope of peace or reconciliation.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 249



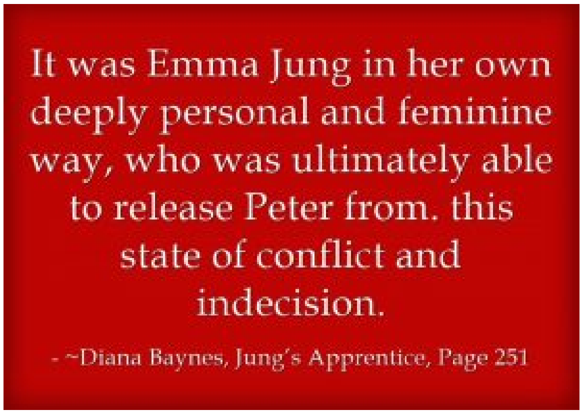
Life at bottom was just a torment and there was no purpose that had any relation with happiness. I could heal others but myself I could not heal.'

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 249



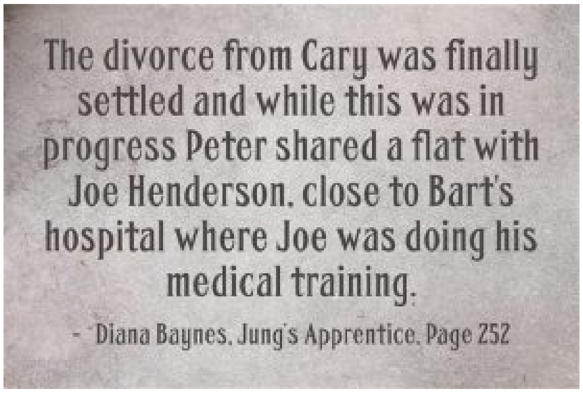
Yet, what he [Peter] had earlier told Barbara Hannah was also true, that 'beyond doubt his true vocation was to be Jung's assistant'.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 250-251



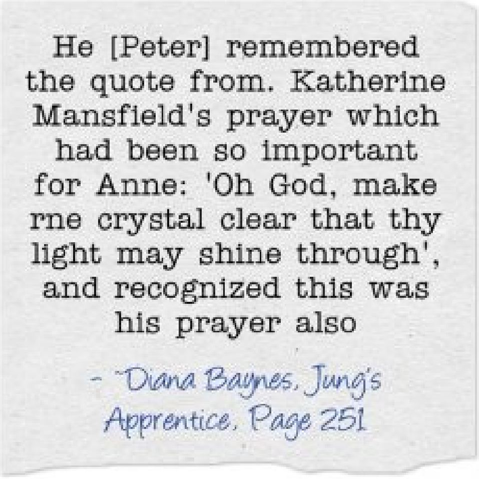
It was Emma Jung in her own deeply personal and feminine way, who was ultimately able to release Peter from. this state of conflict and indecision.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 251



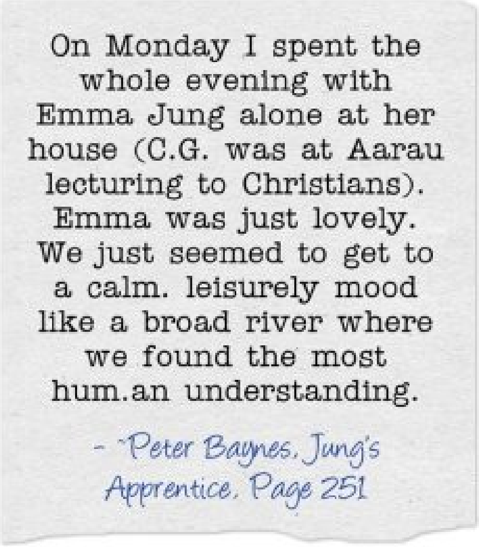
The divorce from Cary was finally settled and while this was in progress Peter shared a flat with Joe Henderson. close to Bart's hospital where Joe was doing his medical training.

- Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 252



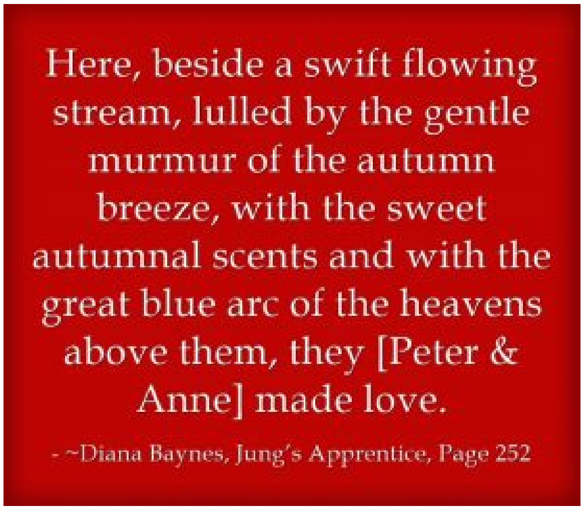
He [Peter] remembered the quote from. Katherine Mansfield's prayer which had been so important for Anne: 'Oh God, make me crystal clear that thy light may shine through', and recognized this was his prayer also

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 251



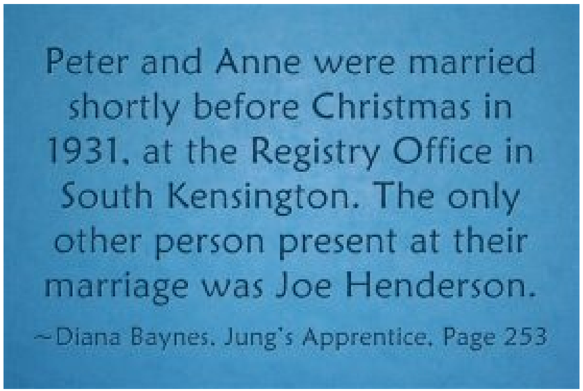
On Monday I spent the whole evening with Emma Jung alone at her house (C.G. was at Aarau lecturing to Christians). Emma was just lovely. We just seemed to get to a calm. leisurely mood like a broad river where we found the most human understanding.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 251



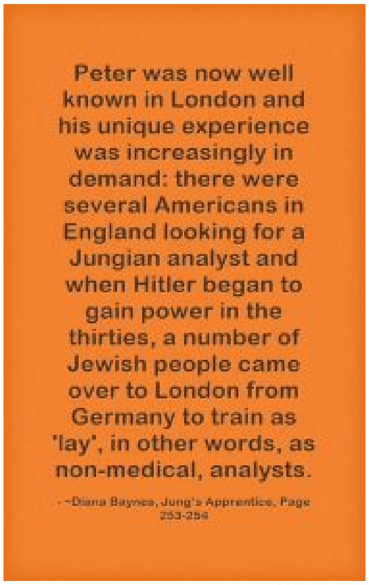
Here, beside a swift flowing stream, lulled by the gentle murmur of the autumn breeze, with the sweet autumnal scents and with the great blue arc of the heavens above them, they [Peter & Anne] made love.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 252



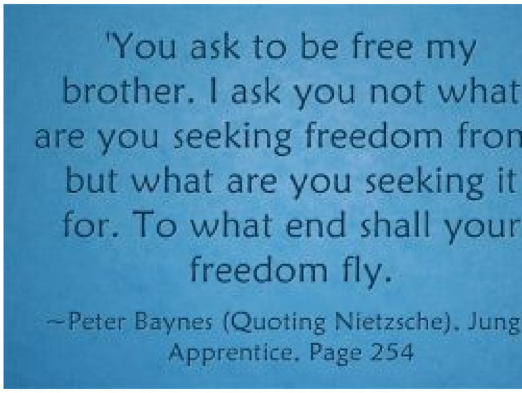
Peter and Anne were married shortly before Christmas in 1931, at the Registry Office in South Kensington. The only other person present at their marriage was Joe Henderson.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 253



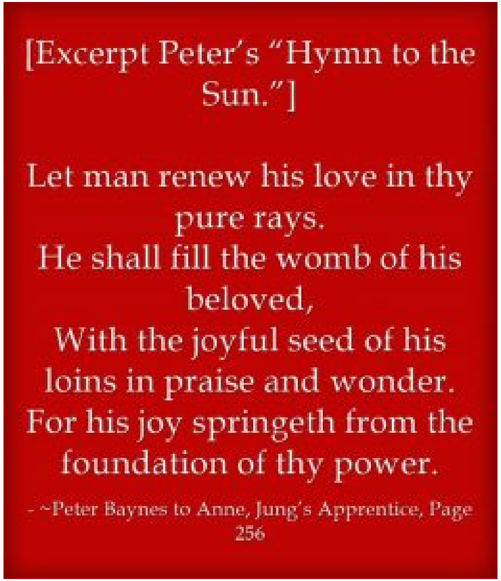
Peter was now well known in London and his unique experience was increasingly in demand: there were several Americans in England looking for a Jungian analyst and when Hitler began to gain power in the thirties, a number of Jewish people came over to London from Germany to train as 'lay', in other words, as non-medical, analysts.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 253-254



'You ask to be free my brother. I ask you not what are you seeking freedom fron but what are you seeking it for. To what end shall your freedom fly.

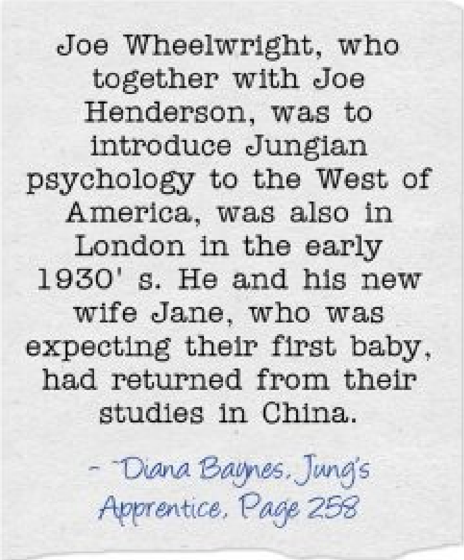
~Peter Baynes (Quoting Nietzsche), Jung Apprentice, Page 254



[Excerpt Peter's "Hymn to the Sun."]

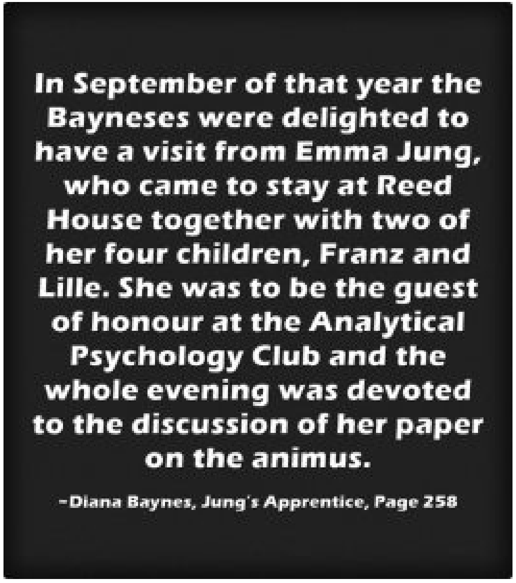
Let man renew his love in thy pure rays.
He shall fill the womb of his beloved,
With the joyful seed of his loins in praise and wonder.
For his joy springeth from the foundation of thy power.

- ~Peter Baynes to Anne, Jung's Apprentice, Page 256



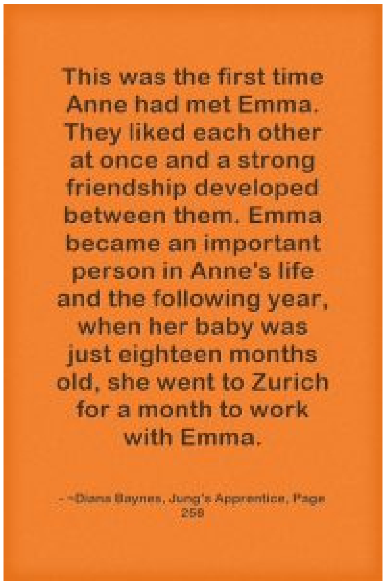
Joe Wheelwright, who together with Joe Henderson, was to introduce Jungian psychology to the West of America, was also in London in the early 1930's. He and his new wife Jane, who was expecting their first baby, had returned from their studies in China.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 258



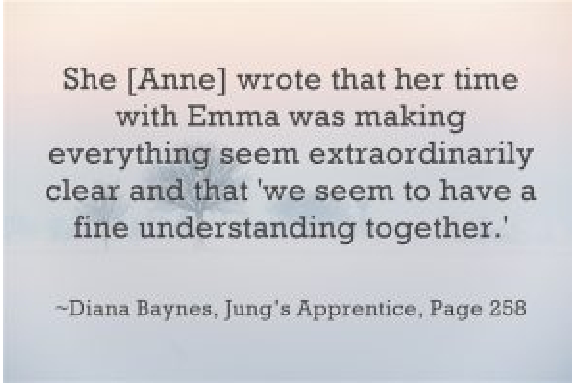
In September of that year the Bayneses were delighted to have a visit from Emma Jung, who came to stay at Reed House together with two of her four children, Franz and Lille. She was to be the guest of honour at the Analytical Psychology Club and the whole evening was devoted to the discussion of her paper on the animus.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 258



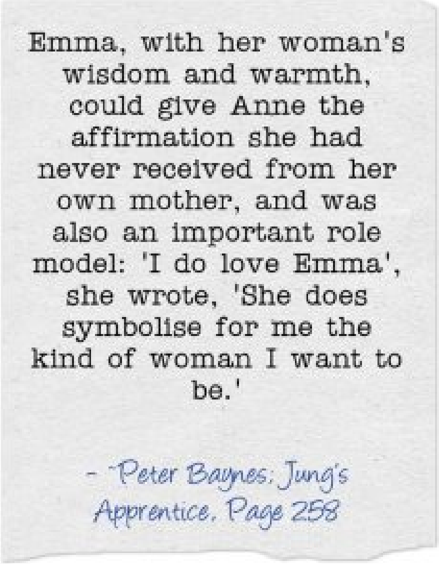
This was the first time Anne had met Emma. They liked each other at once and a strong friendship developed between them. Emma became an important person in Anne's life and the following year, when her baby was just eighteen months old, she went to Zurich for a month to work with Emma.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 258



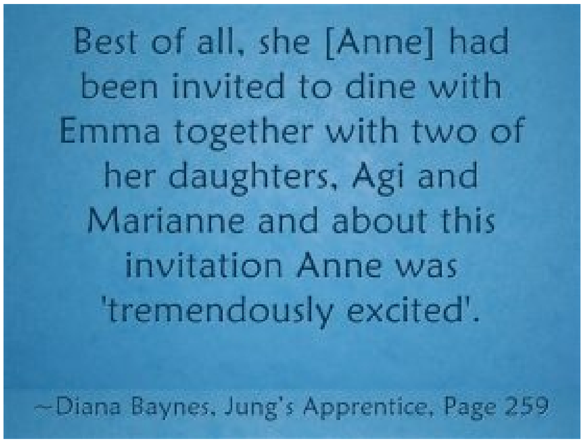
She [Anne] wrote that her time with Emma was making everything seem extraordinarily clear and that 'we seem to have a fine understanding together.'

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 258



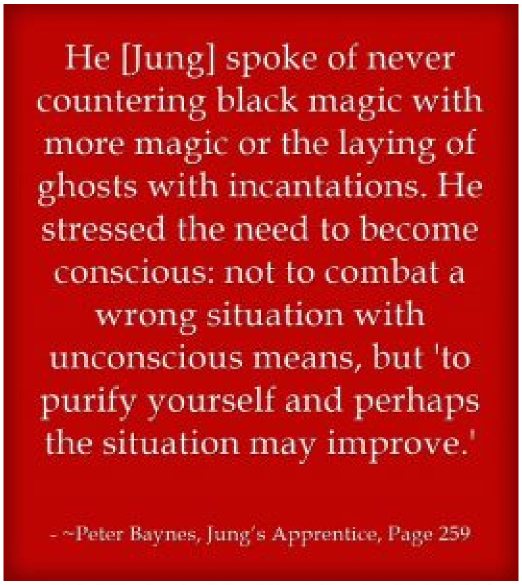
Emma, with her woman's wisdom and warmth, could give Anne the affirmation she had never received from her own mother, and was also an important role model: 'I do love Emma', she wrote, 'She does symbolise for me the kind of woman I want to be.'

- ~Peter Baynes; Jung's Apprentice, Page 258



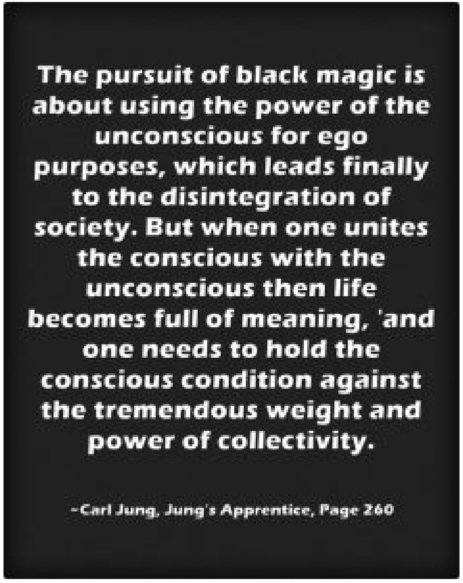
Best of all, she [Anne] had been invited to dine with Emma together with two of her daughters, Agi and Marianne and about this invitation Anne was 'tremendously excited'.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 259



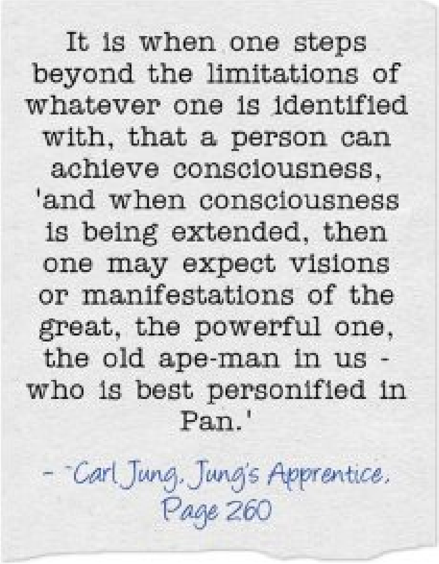
He [Jung] spoke of never countering black magic with more magic or the laying of ghosts with incantations. He stressed the need to become conscious: not to combat a wrong situation with unconscious means, but 'to purify yourself and perhaps the situation may improve.'

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 259



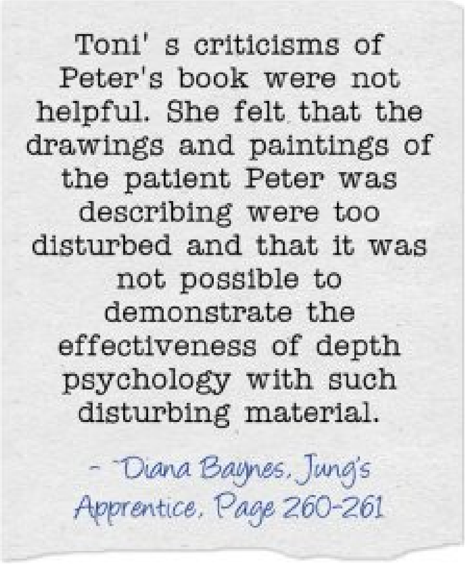
The pursuit of black magic is about using the power of the unconscious for ego purposes, which leads finally to the disintegration of society. But when one unites the conscious with the unconscious then life becomes full of meaning, 'and one needs to hold the conscious condition against the tremendous weight and power of collectivity.

~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 260



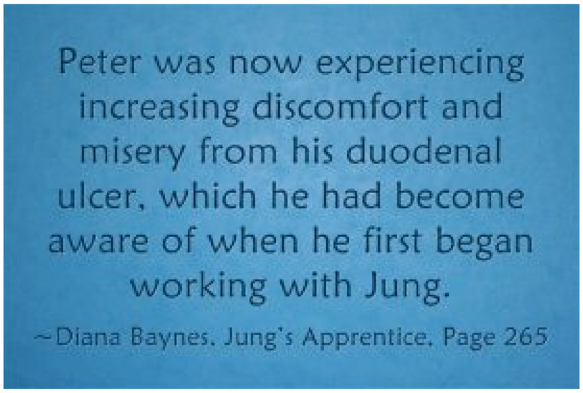
It is when one steps beyond the limitations of whatever one is identified with, that a person can achieve consciousness, 'and when consciousness is being extended, then one may expect visions or manifestations of the great, the powerful one, the old ape-man in us - who is best personified in Pan.'

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 260



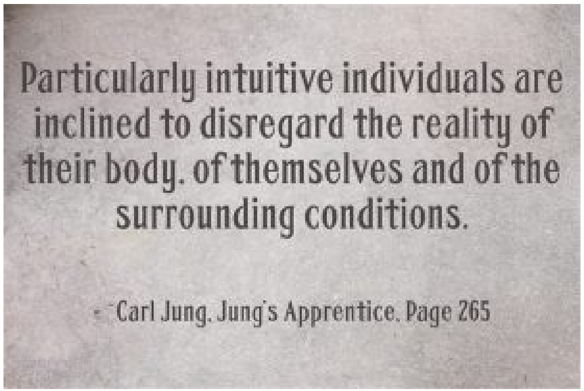
Toni' s criticisms of Peter's book were not helpful. She felt that the drawings and paintings of the patient Peter was describing were too disturbed and that it was not possible to demonstrate the effectiveness of depth psychology with such disturbing material.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 260-261



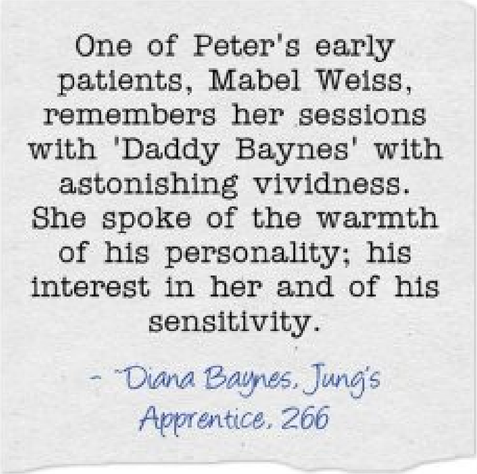
Peter was now experiencing increasing discomfort and misery from his duodenal ulcer, which he had become aware of when he first began working with Jung.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 265



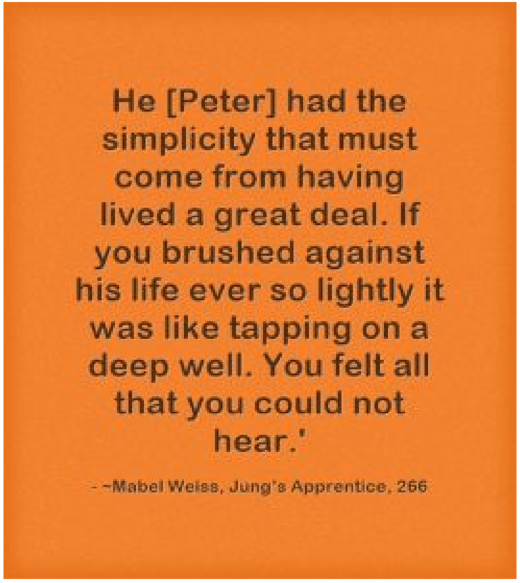
Particularly intuitive individuals are inclined to disregard the reality of their body, of themselves and of the surrounding conditions.

- Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 265



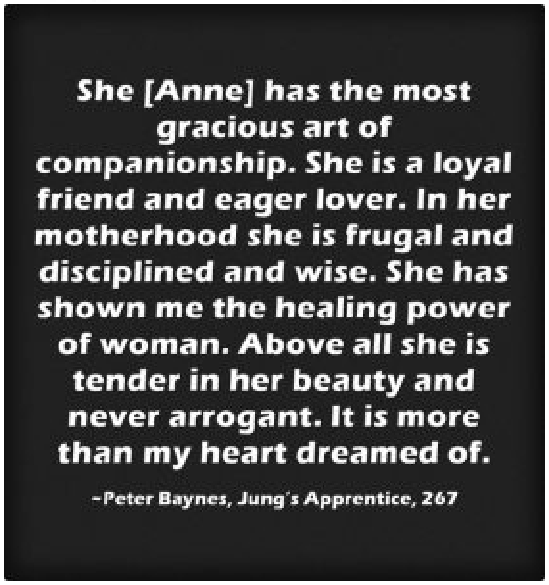
One of Peter's early patients, Mabel Weiss, remembers her sessions with 'Daddy Baynes' with astonishing vividness. She spoke of the warmth of his personality; his interest in her and of his sensitivity.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 266



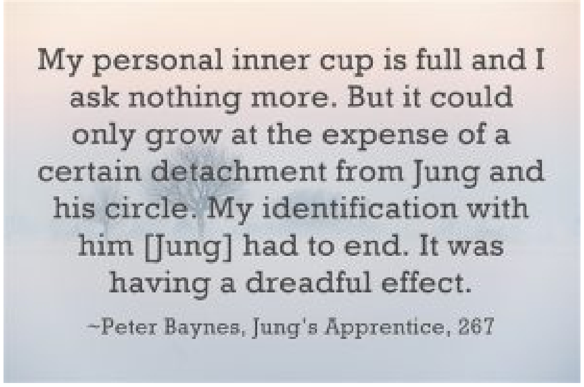
He [Peter] had the simplicity that must come from having lived a great deal. If you brushed against his life ever so lightly it was like tapping on a deep well. You felt all that you could not hear.'

- ~Mabel Weiss, Jung's Apprentice, 266



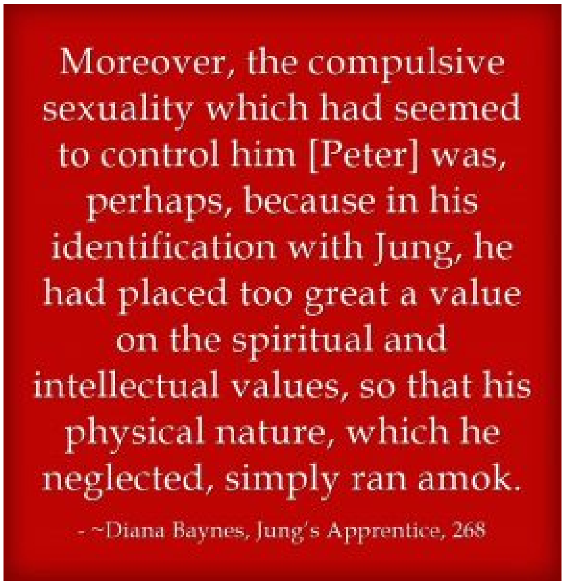
She [Anne] has the most gracious art of companionship. She is a loyal friend and eager lover. In her motherhood she is frugal and disciplined and wise. She has shown me the healing power of woman. Above all she is tender in her beauty and never arrogant. It is more than my heart dreamed of.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 267



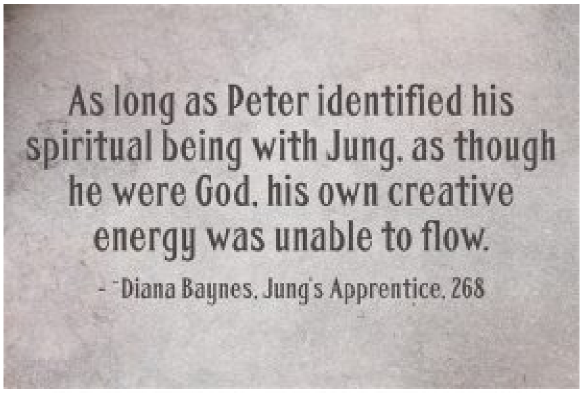
My personal inner cup is full and I ask nothing more. But it could only grow at the expense of a certain detachment from Jung and his circle. My identification with him [Jung] had to end. It was having a dreadful effect.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 267



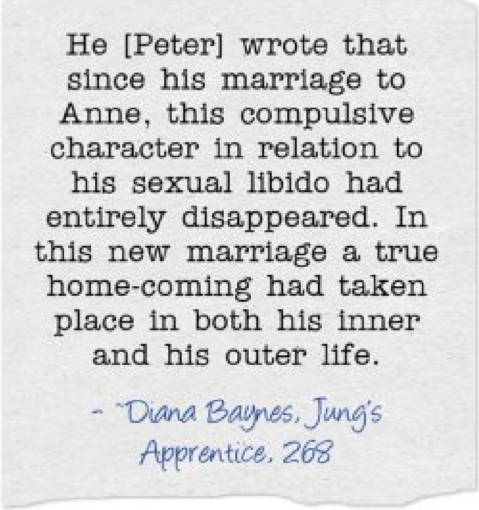
Moreover, the compulsive sexuality which had seemed to control him [Peter] was, perhaps, because in his identification with Jung, he had placed too great a value on the spiritual and intellectual values, so that his physical nature, which he neglected, simply ran amok.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 268



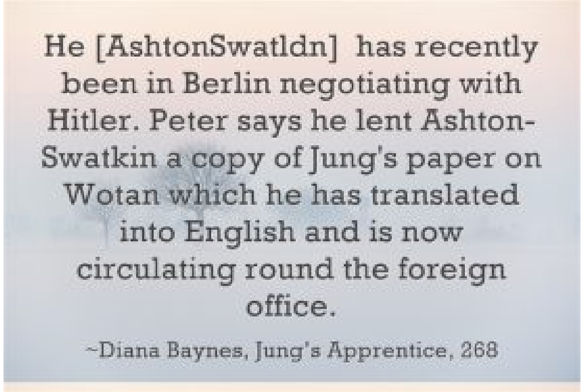
As long as Peter identified his spiritual being with Jung, as though he were God, his own creative energy was unable to flow.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 268



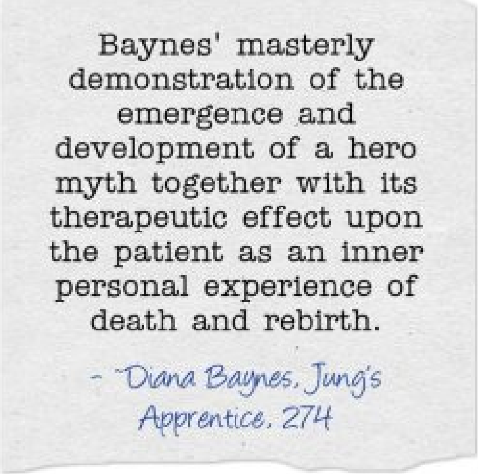
He [Peter] wrote that since his marriage to Anne, this compulsive character in relation to his sexual libido had entirely disappeared. In this new marriage a true home-coming had taken place in both his inner and his outer life.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 268



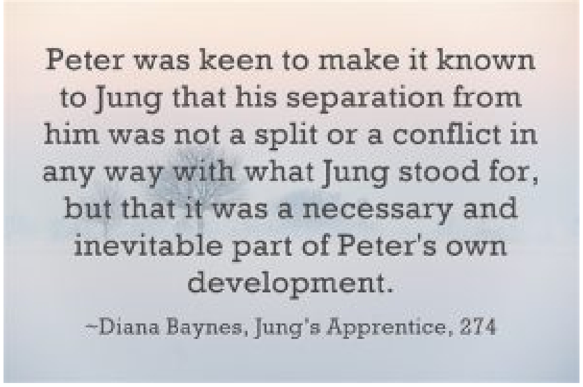
He [AshtonSwatldn] has recently been in Berlin negotiating with Hitler. Peter says he lent Ashton-Swatkin a copy of Jung's paper on Wotan which he has translated into English and is now circulating round the foreign office.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 268



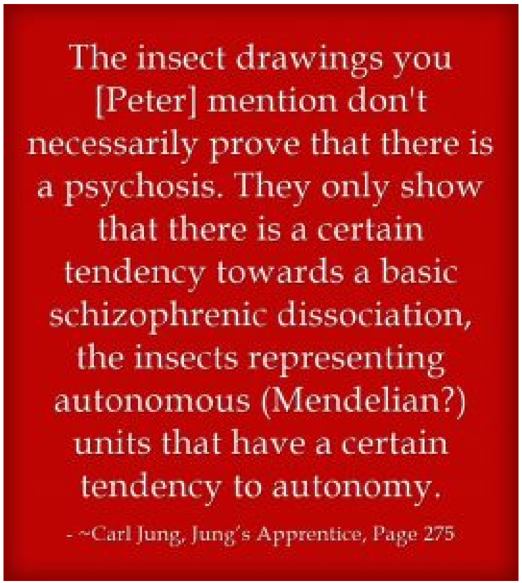
Baynes' masterly demonstration of the emergence and development of a hero myth together with its therapeutic effect upon the patient as an inner personal experience of death and rebirth.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 274



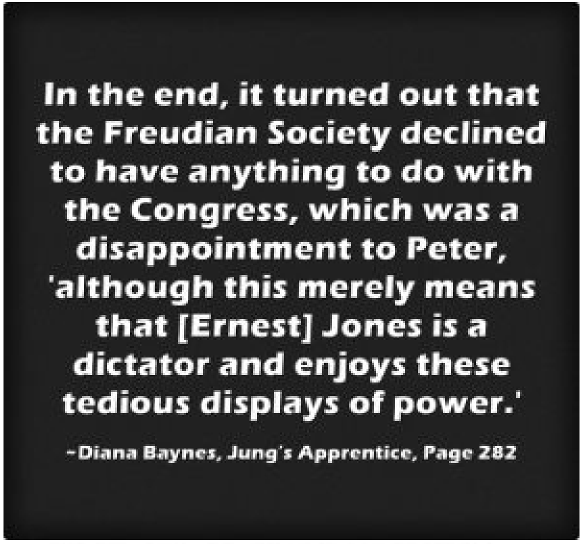
Peter was keen to make it known to Jung that his separation from him was not a split or a conflict in any way with what Jung stood for, but that it was a necessary and inevitable part of Peter's own development.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 274



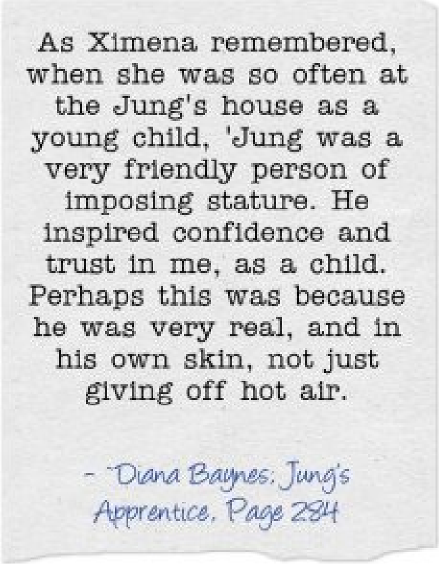
The insect drawings you [Peter] mention don't necessarily prove that there is a psychosis. They only show that there is a certain tendency towards a basic schizophrenic dissociation, the insects representing autonomous (Mendelian?) units that have a certain tendency to autonomy.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 275



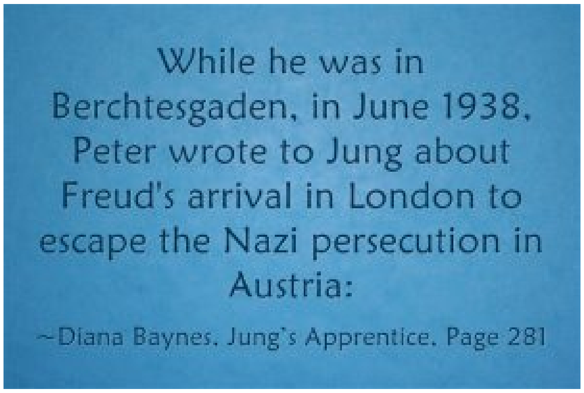
In the end, it turned out that the Freudian Society declined to have anything to do with the Congress, which was a disappointment to Peter, 'although this merely means that [Ernest] Jones is a dictator and enjoys these tedious displays of power.'

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 282



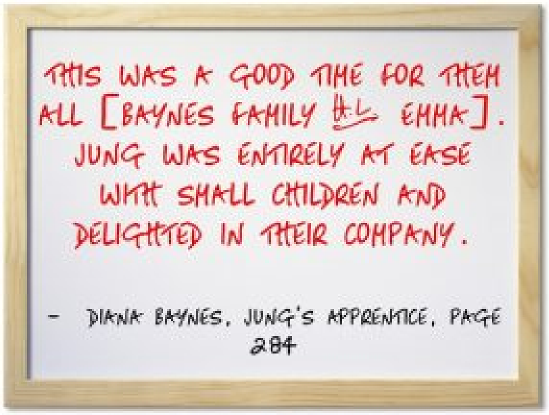
As Ximena remembered, when she was so often at the Jung's house as a young child, 'Jung was a very friendly person of imposing stature. He inspired confidence and trust in me, as a child. Perhaps this was because he was very real, and in his own skin, not just giving off hot air.

- Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 284



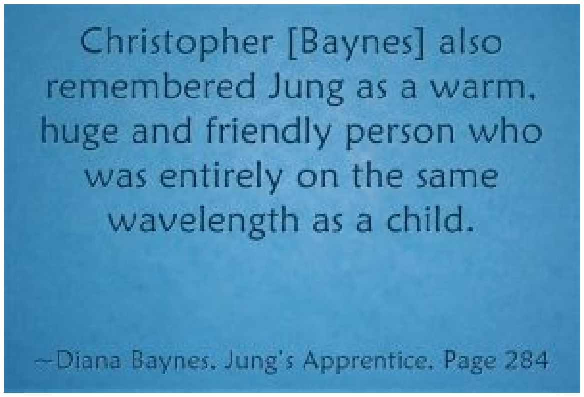
While he was in Berchtesgaden, in June 1938, Peter wrote to Jung about Freud's arrival in London to escape the Nazi persecution in Austria:

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 281



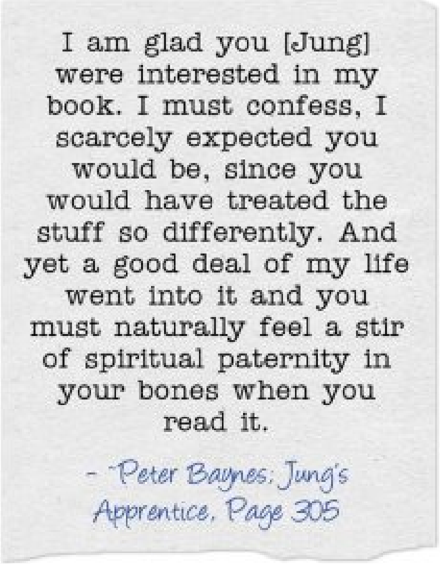
THIS WAS A GOOD TIME FOR THEM ALL [BAYNES FAMILY & EMMA]. JUNG WAS ENTIRELY AT EASE WITH SMALL CHILDREN AND DELIGHTED IN THEIR COMPANY.

- DIANA BAYNES, JUNG'S APPRENTICE, PAGE 284



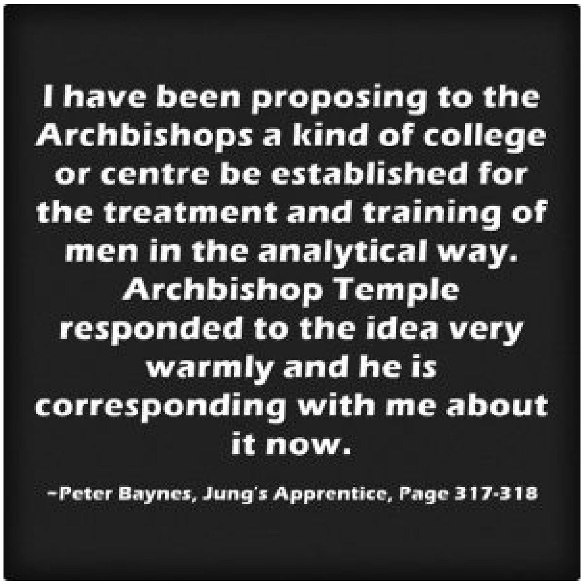
Christopher [Baynes] also remembered Jung as a warm, huge and friendly person who was entirely on the same wavelength as a child.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 284



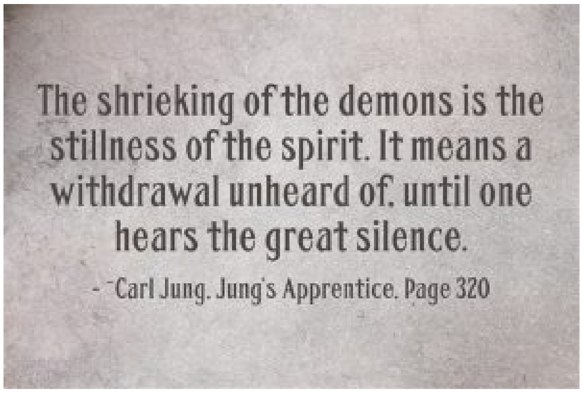
I am glad you [Jung] were interested in my book. I must confess, I scarcely expected you would be, since you would have treated the stuff so differently. And yet a good deal of my life went into it and you must naturally feel a stir of spiritual paternity in your bones when you read it.

- ~Peter Baynes; Jung's Apprentice, Page 305



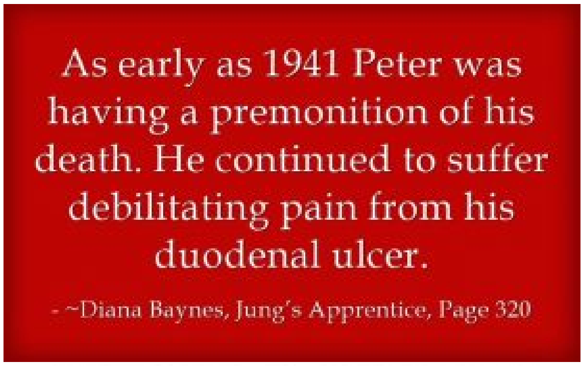
I have been proposing to the Archbishops a kind of college or centre be established for the treatment and training of men in the analytical way. Archbishop Temple responded to the idea very warmly and he is corresponding with me about it now.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 317-318



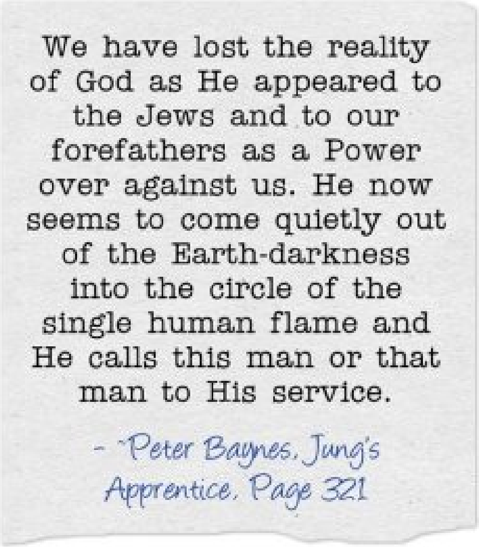
The shrieking of the demons is the stillness of the spirit. It means a withdrawal unheard of, until one hears the great silence.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 320



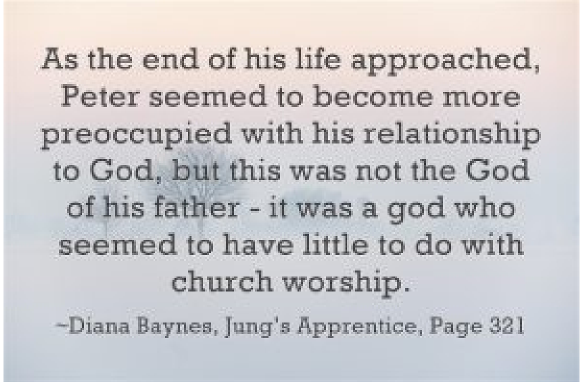
As early as 1941 Peter was having a premonition of his death. He continued to suffer debilitating pain from his duodenal ulcer.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 320



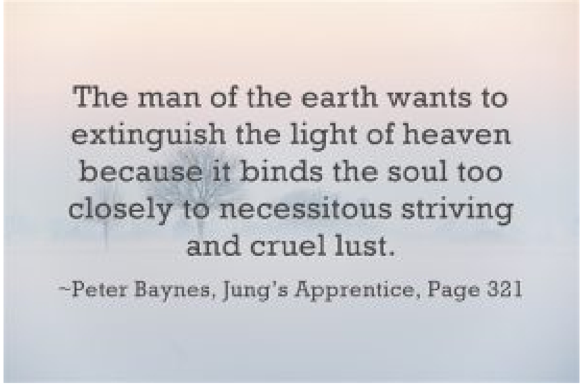
We have lost the reality of God as He appeared to the Jews and to our forefathers as a Power over against us. He now seems to come quietly out of the Earth-darkness into the circle of the single human flame and He calls this man or that man to His service.

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 321



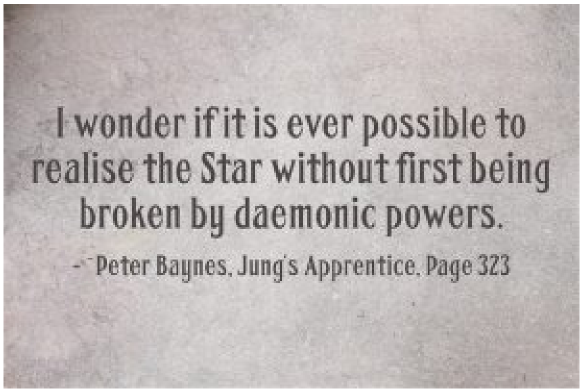
As the end of his life approached, Peter seemed to become more preoccupied with his relationship to God, but this was not the God of his father - it was a god who seemed to have little to do with church worship.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 321



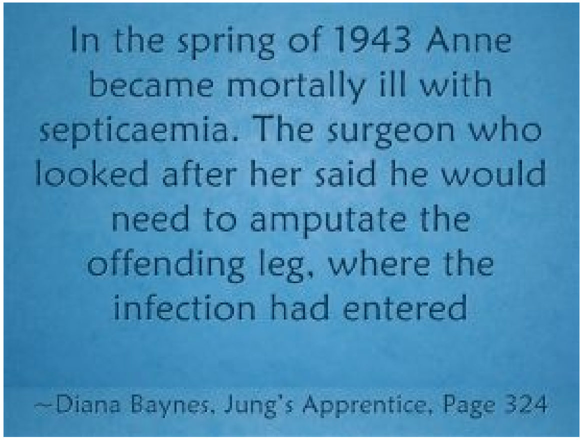
The man of the earth wants to extinguish the light of heaven because it binds the soul too closely to necessitous striving and cruel lust.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 321



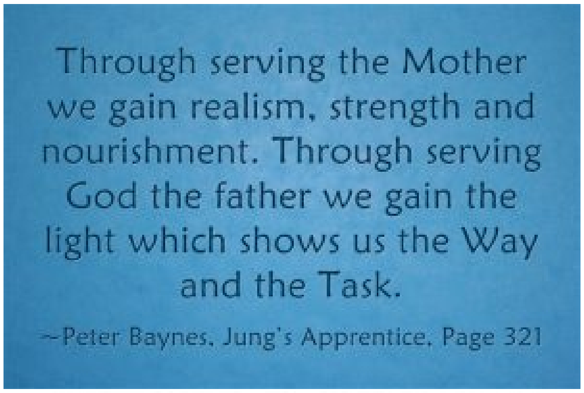
I wonder if it is ever possible to realise the Star without first being broken by daemonic powers.

~ Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 323



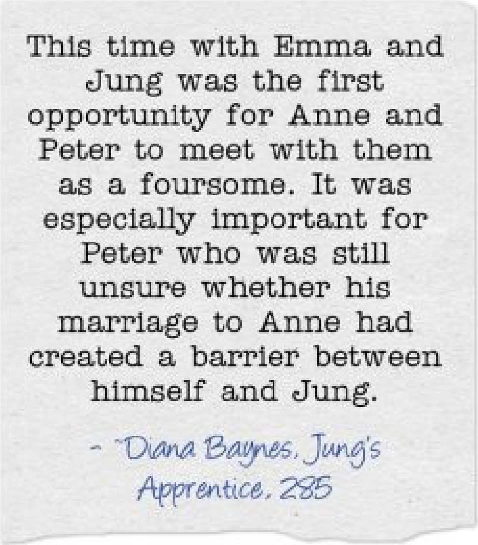
In the spring of 1943 Anne became mortally ill with septicaemia. The surgeon who looked after her said he would need to amputate the offending leg, where the infection had entered

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 324



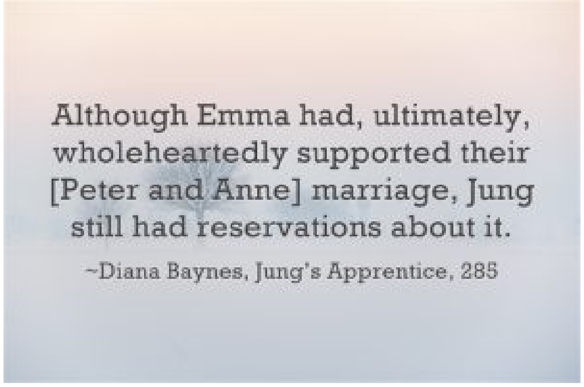
Through serving the Mother we gain realism, strength and nourishment. Through serving God the father we gain the light which shows us the Way and the Task.

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 321



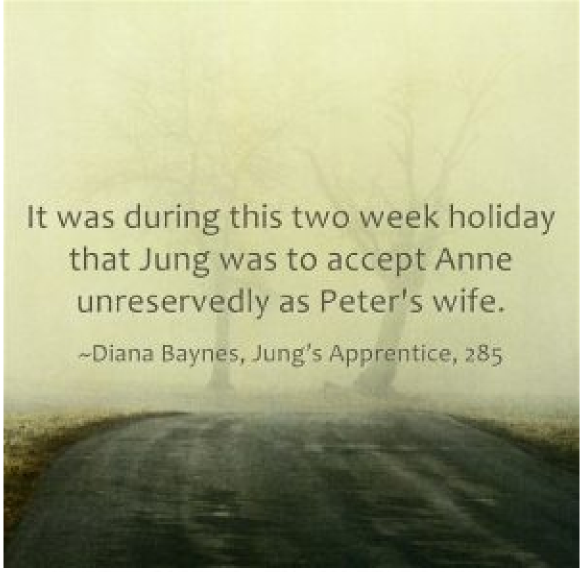
This time with Emma and Jung was the first opportunity for Anne and Peter to meet with them as a foursome. It was especially important for Peter who was still unsure whether his marriage to Anne had created a barrier between himself and Jung.

~ Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 285



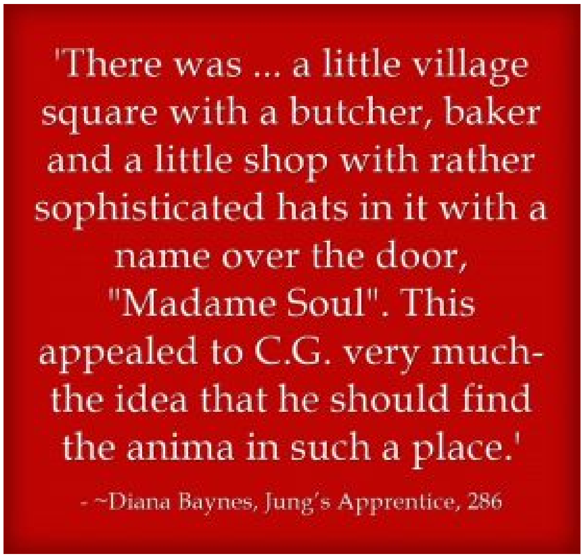
Although Emma had, ultimately, wholeheartedly supported their [Peter and Anne] marriage, Jung still had reservations about it.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 285



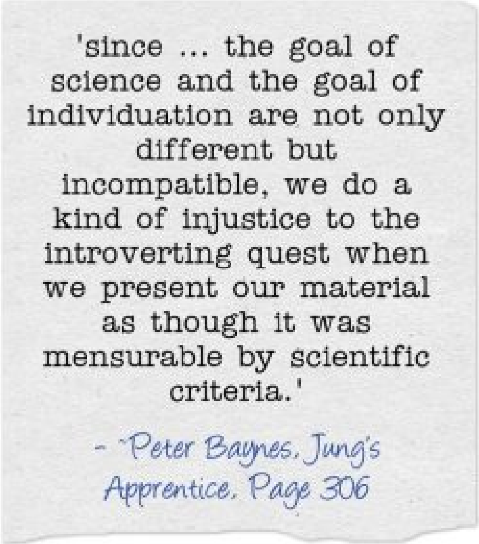
It was during this two week holiday that Jung was to accept Anne unreservedly as Peter's wife.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 285



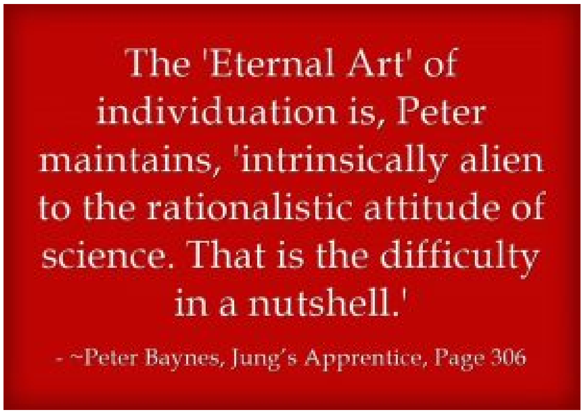
'There was ... a little village square with a butcher, baker and a little shop with rather sophisticated hats in it with a name over the door, "Madame Soul". This appealed to C.G. very much- the idea that he should find the anima in such a place.'

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, 286



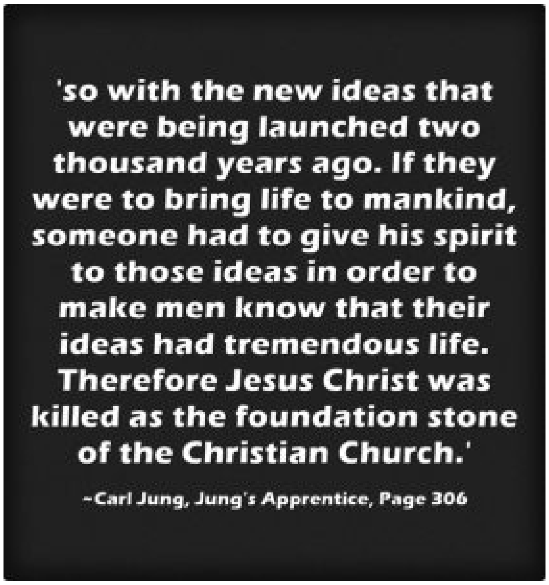
'since ... the goal of science and the goal of individuation are not only different but incompatible, we do a kind of injustice to the introverting quest when we present our material as though it was mensurable by scientific criteria.'

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 306



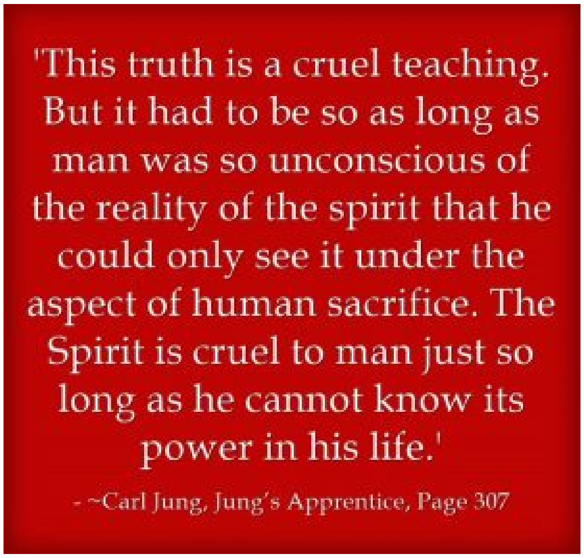
The 'Eternal Art' of individuation is, Peter maintains, 'intrinsically alien to the rationalistic attitude of science. That is the difficulty in a nutshell.'

- ~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 306



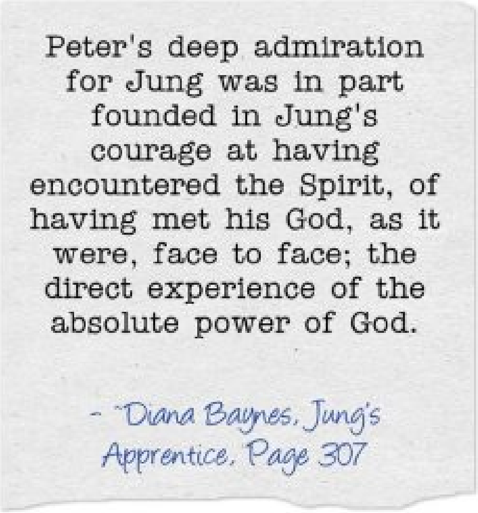
'so with the new ideas that were being launched two thousand years ago. If they were to bring life to mankind, someone had to give his spirit to those ideas in order to make men know that their ideas had tremendous life. Therefore Jesus Christ was killed as the foundation stone of the Christian Church.'

~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 306



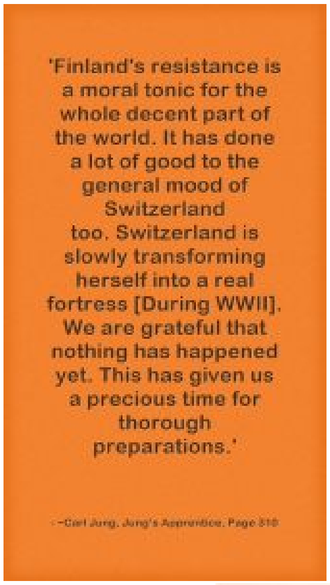
'This truth is a cruel teaching. But it had to be so as long as man was so unconscious of the reality of the spirit that he could only see it under the aspect of human sacrifice. The Spirit is cruel to man just so long as he cannot know its power in his life.'

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 307



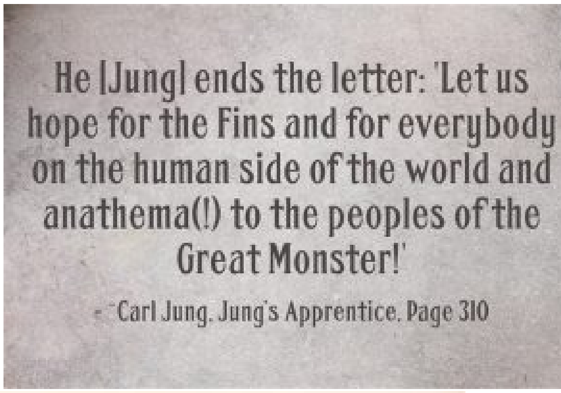
Peter's deep admiration for Jung was in part founded in Jung's courage at having encountered the Spirit, of having met his God, as it were, face to face; the direct experience of the absolute power of God.

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 307



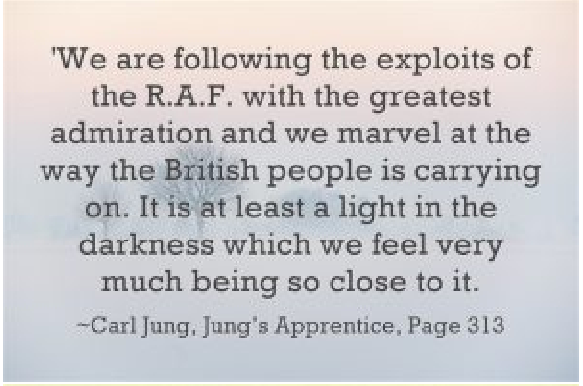
'Finland's resistance is a moral tonic for the whole decent part of the world. It has done a lot of good to the general mood of Switzerland too. Switzerland is slowly transforming herself into a real fortress [During WWII]. We are grateful that nothing has happened yet. This has given us a precious time for thorough preparations.'

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 310



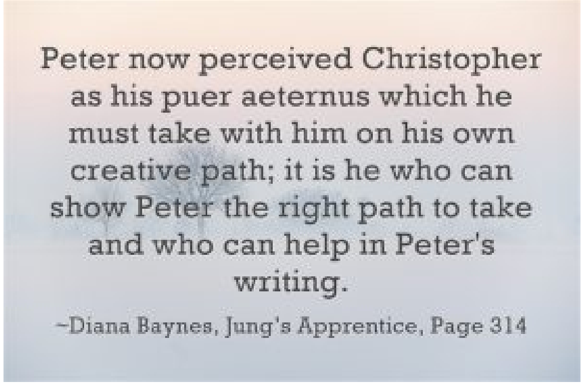
He [Jung] ends the letter: 'Let us hope for the Fins and for everybody on the human side of the world and anathema(!) to the peoples of the Great Monster!'

- ~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 310



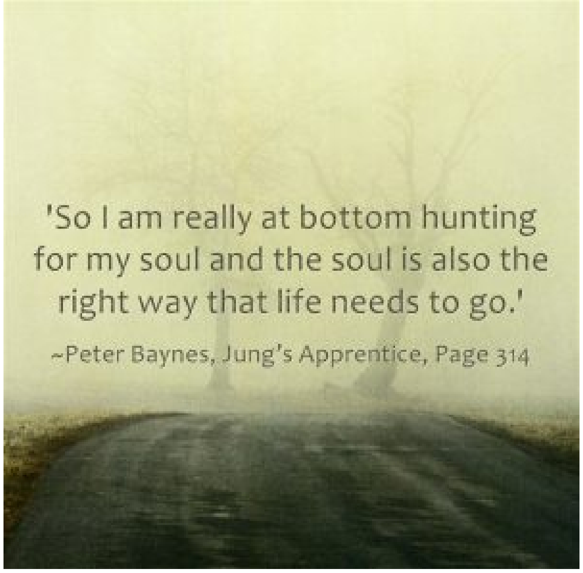
'We are following the exploits of the R.A.F. with the greatest admiration and we marvel at the way the British people is carrying on. It is at least a light in the darkness which we feel very much being so close to it.

~Carl Jung, Jung's Apprentice, Page 313



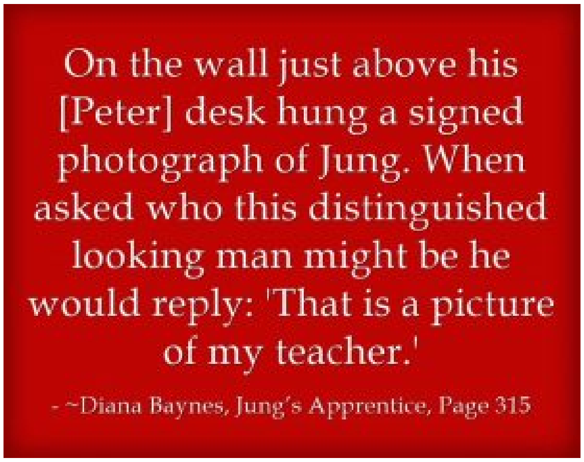
Peter now perceived Christopher as his puer aeternus which he must take with him on his own creative path; it is he who can show Peter the right path to take and who can help in Peter's writing.

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 314



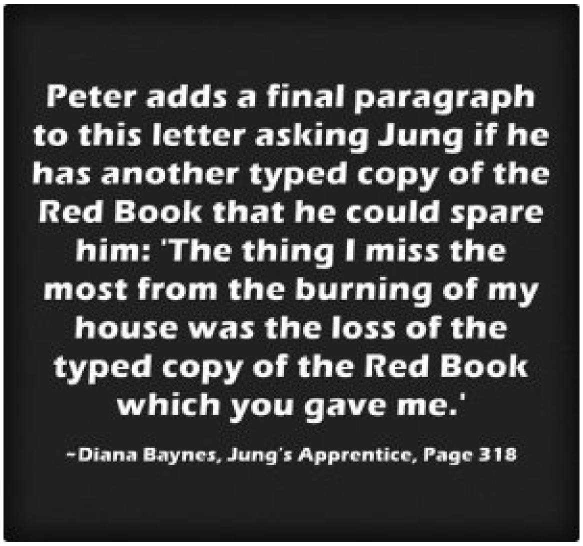
'So I am really at bottom hunting for my soul and the soul is also the right way that life needs to go.'

~Peter Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 314



On the wall just above his [Peter] desk hung a signed photograph of Jung. When asked who this distinguished looking man might be he would reply: 'That is a picture of my teacher.'

- ~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 315



Peter adds a final paragraph to this letter asking Jung if he has another typed copy of the Red Book that he could spare him: 'The thing I miss the most from the burning of my house was the loss of the typed copy of the Red Book which you gave me.'

~Diana Baynes, Jung's Apprentice, Page 318

Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-03-08 12:16)

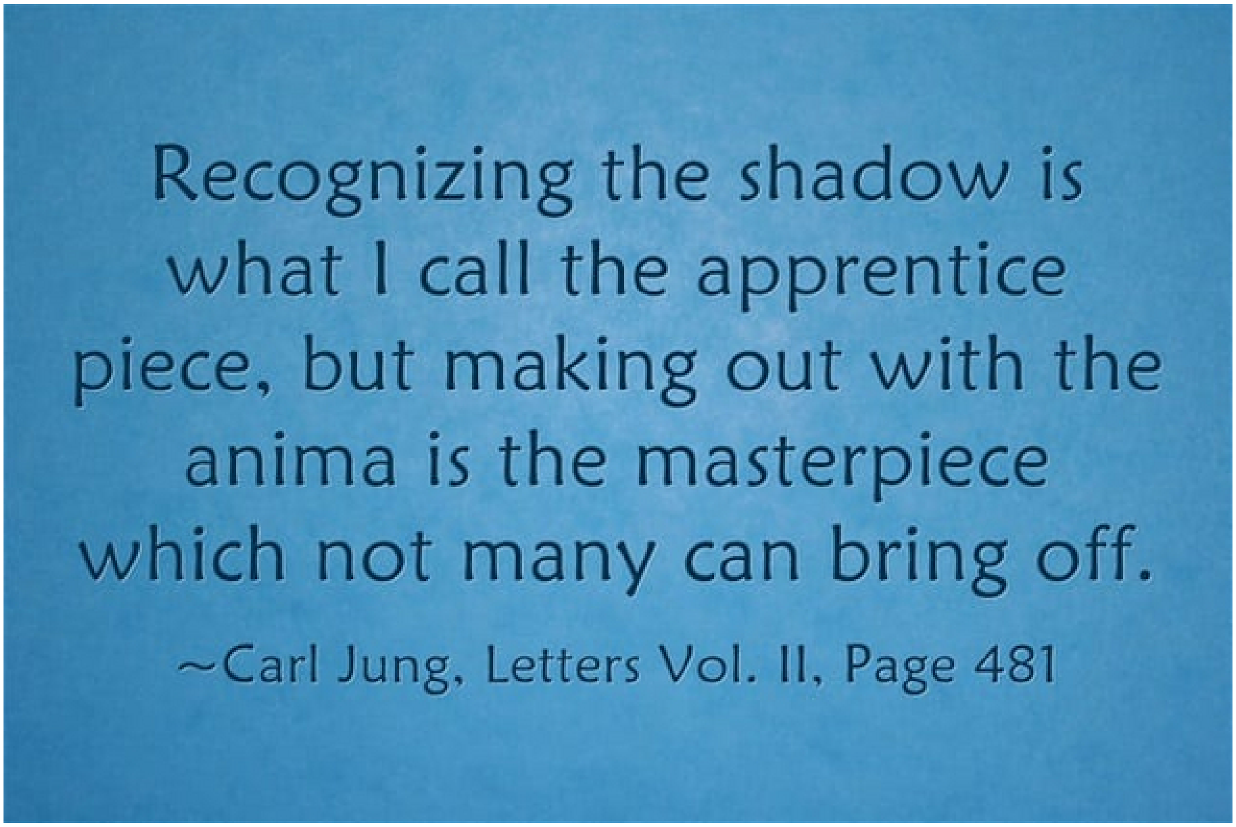
[1]

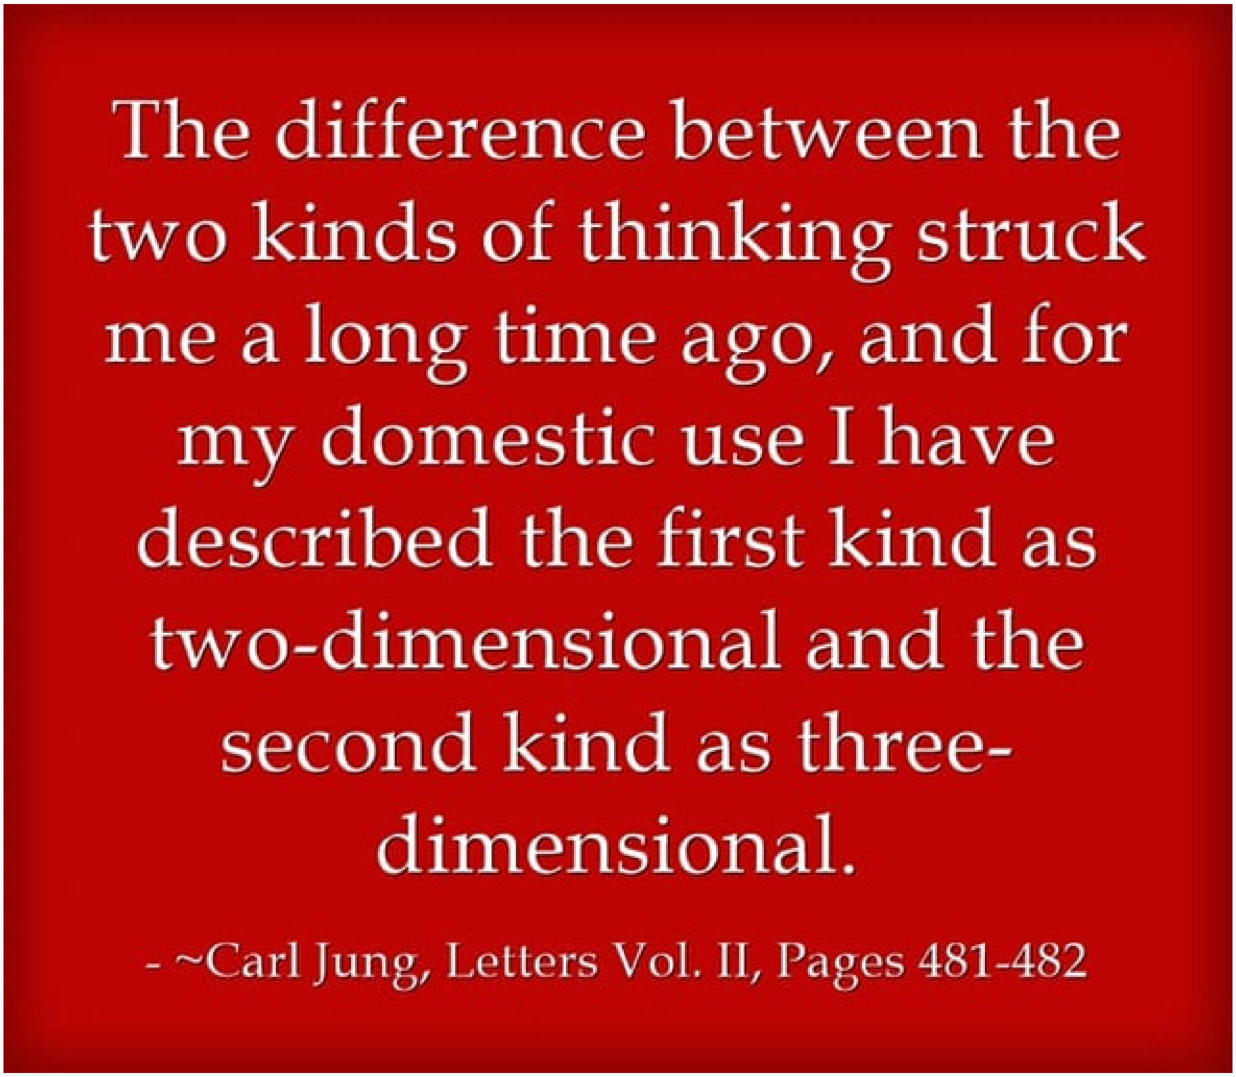


Recognizing the shadow is what I call the apprentice piece, but making out with the anima is the masterpiece which not many can bring off.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 481

Recognizing the shadow is what I call the apprentice piece, but making out with the anima is the masterpiece which not many can bring off. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 481

[2]

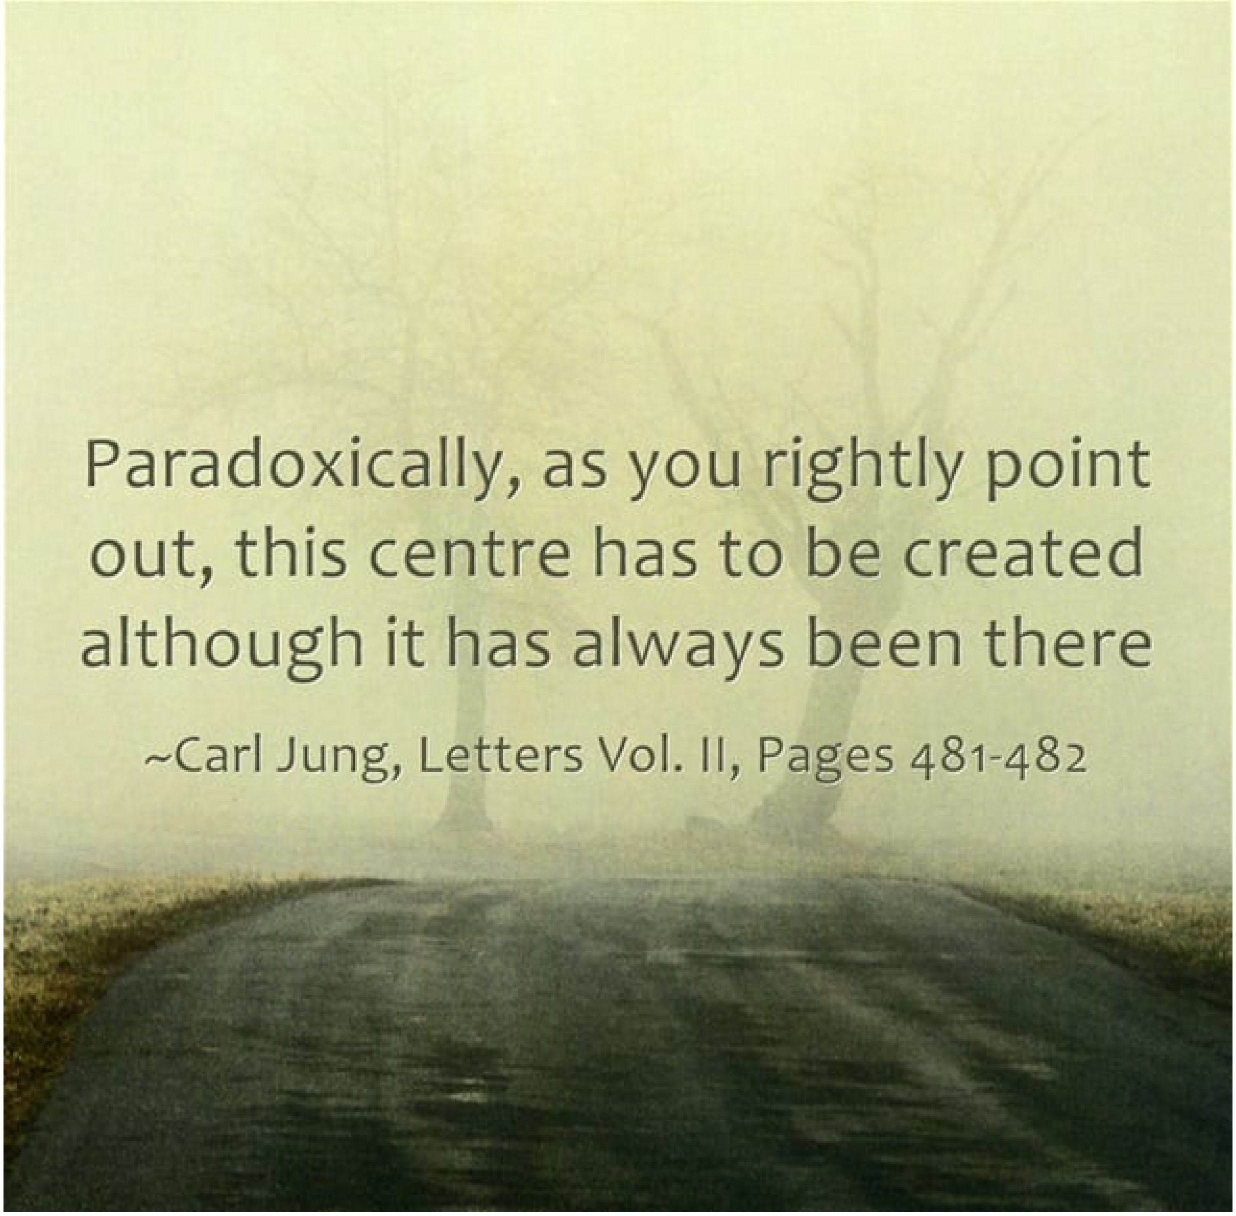


The difference between the two kinds of thinking struck me a long time ago, and for my domestic use I have described the first kind as two-dimensional and the second kind as three-dimensional.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 481-482

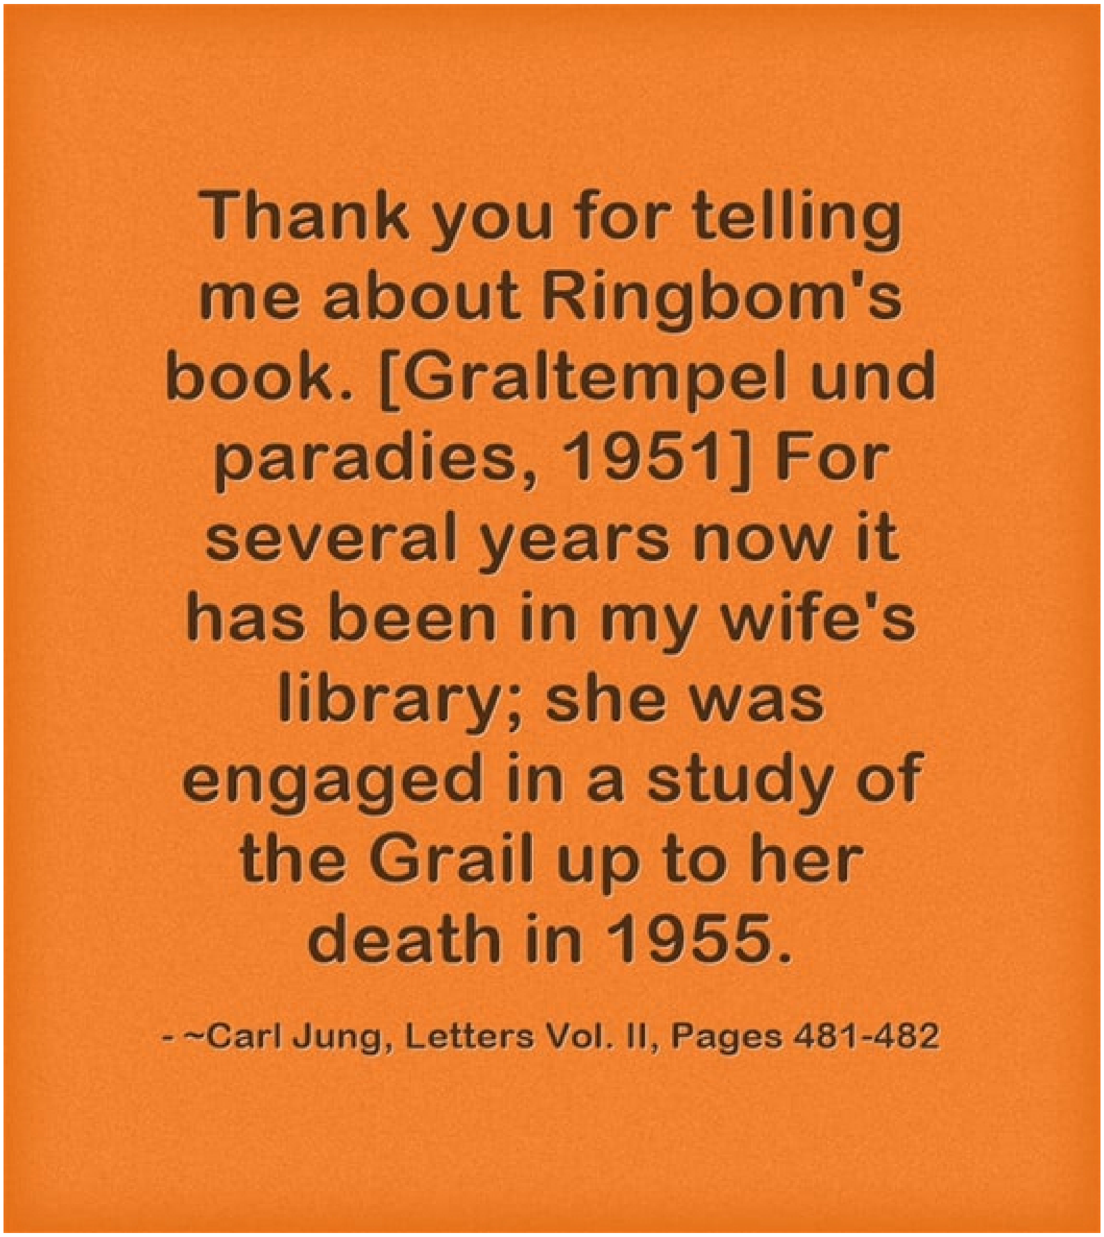
The difference between the two kinds of thinking struck me a long time ago, and for my domestic use I have described the first kind as two-dimensional and the second kind as three-dimensional. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 481-482

[3]



Paradoxically, as you rightly point out, this centre has to be created although it has always been there
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 481-482

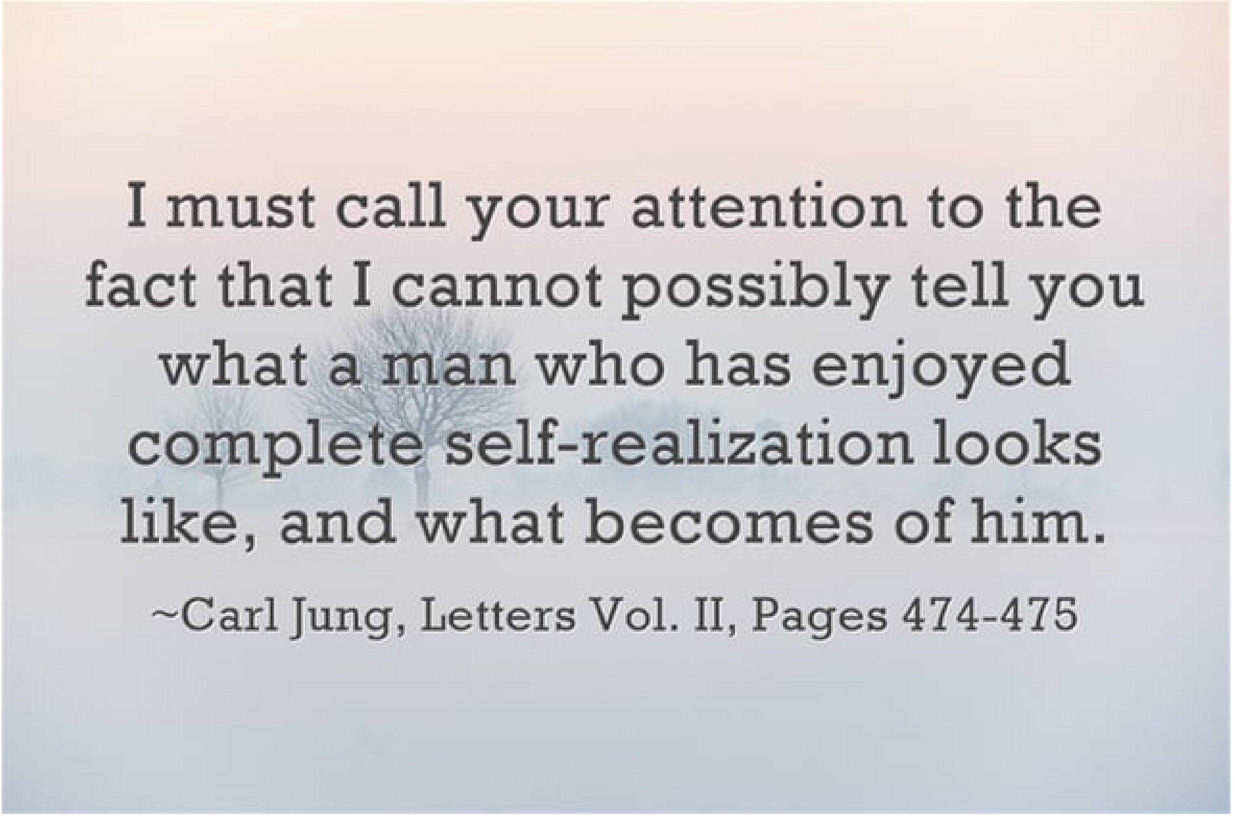
Paradoxically, as you rightly point out, this centre has to be created although it has always been there. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 481-482



Thank you for telling me about Ringbom's book. [Graltempel und paradies, 1951] For several years now it has been in my wife's library; she was engaged in a study of the Grail up to her death in 1955.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 481-482

Thank you for telling me about Ringbom’s book. [Graltempel und paradies, 1951] For several years now it has been in my wife’s library; she was engaged in a study of the Grail up to her death in 1955. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 481-482



I must call your attention to the fact that I cannot possibly tell you what a man who has enjoyed complete self-realization looks like, and what becomes of him.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 474-475

I must call your attention to the fact that I cannot possibly tell you what a man who has enjoyed complete self-realization looks like, and what becomes of him. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 474-475

Before we strive after perfection, we ought to be able to live the ordinary man without self-mutilation.
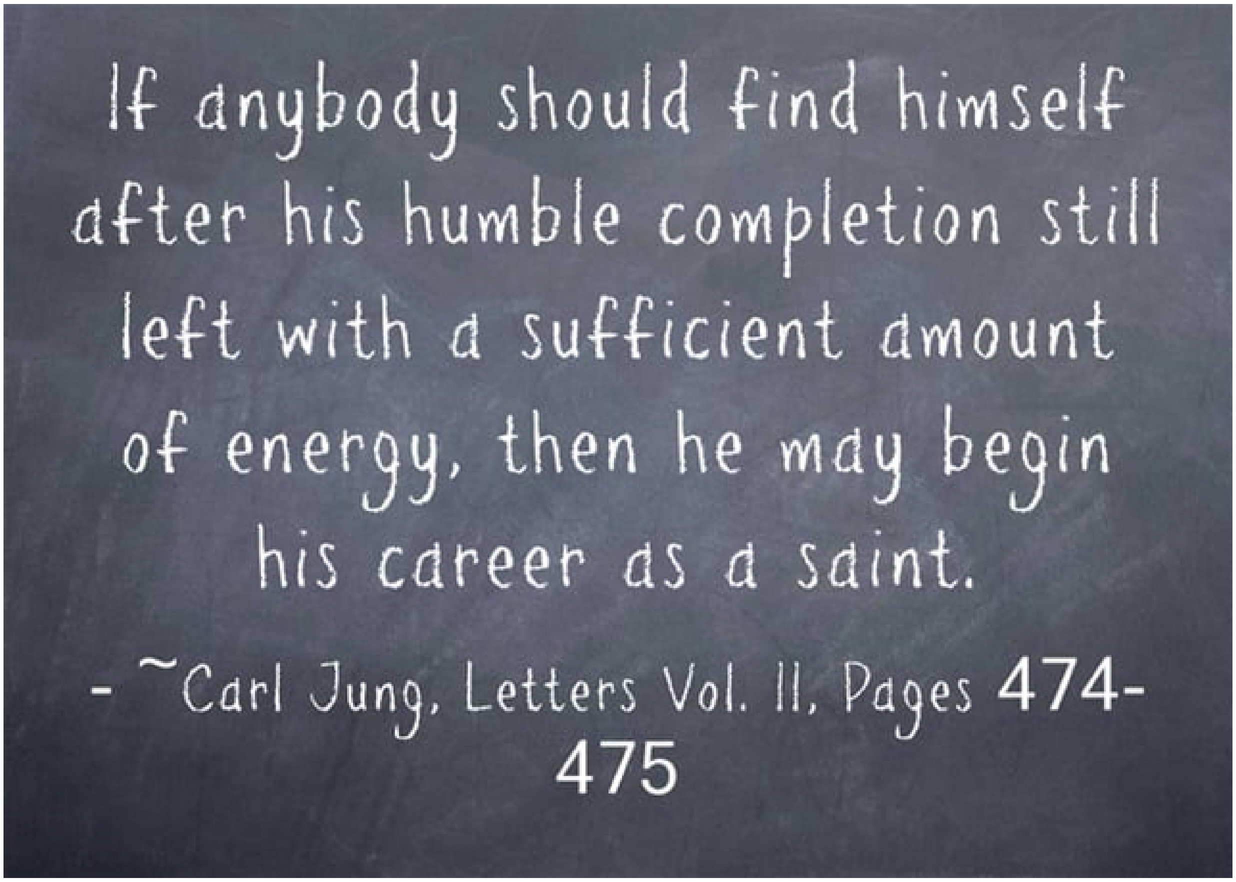
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 474-475

Before we strive after perfection, we ought to be able to live the ordinary man without self-mutilation. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 474-475

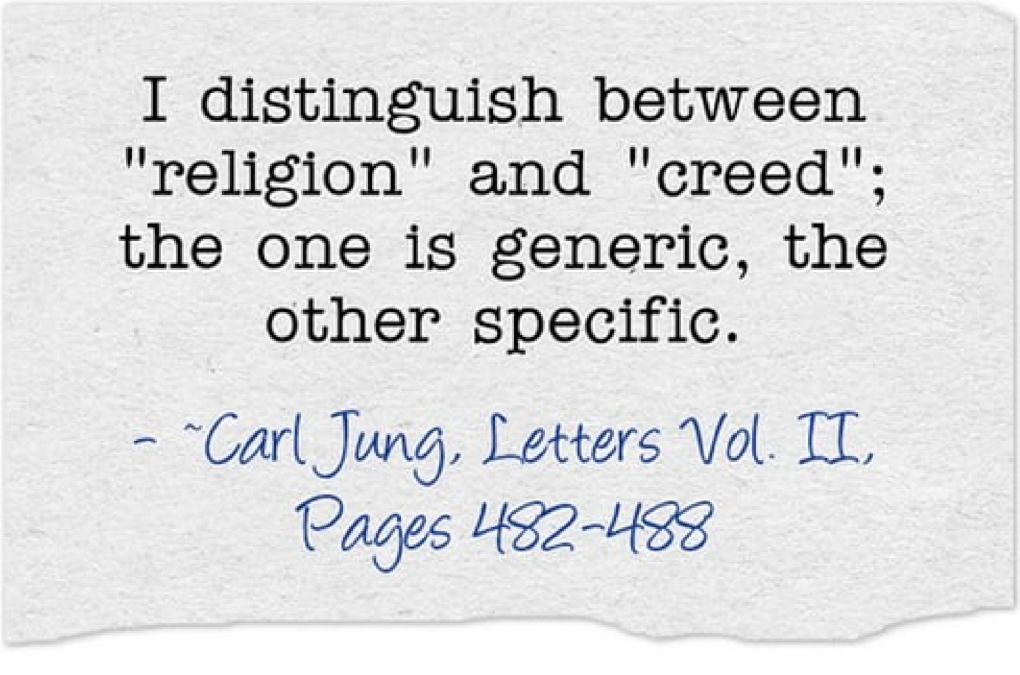


If anybody should find himself after his humble completion still left with a sufficient amount of energy, then he may begin his career as a saint.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 474-475

If anybody should find himself after his humble completion still left with a sufficient amount of energy, then he may begin his career as a saint. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 474-475

[8]

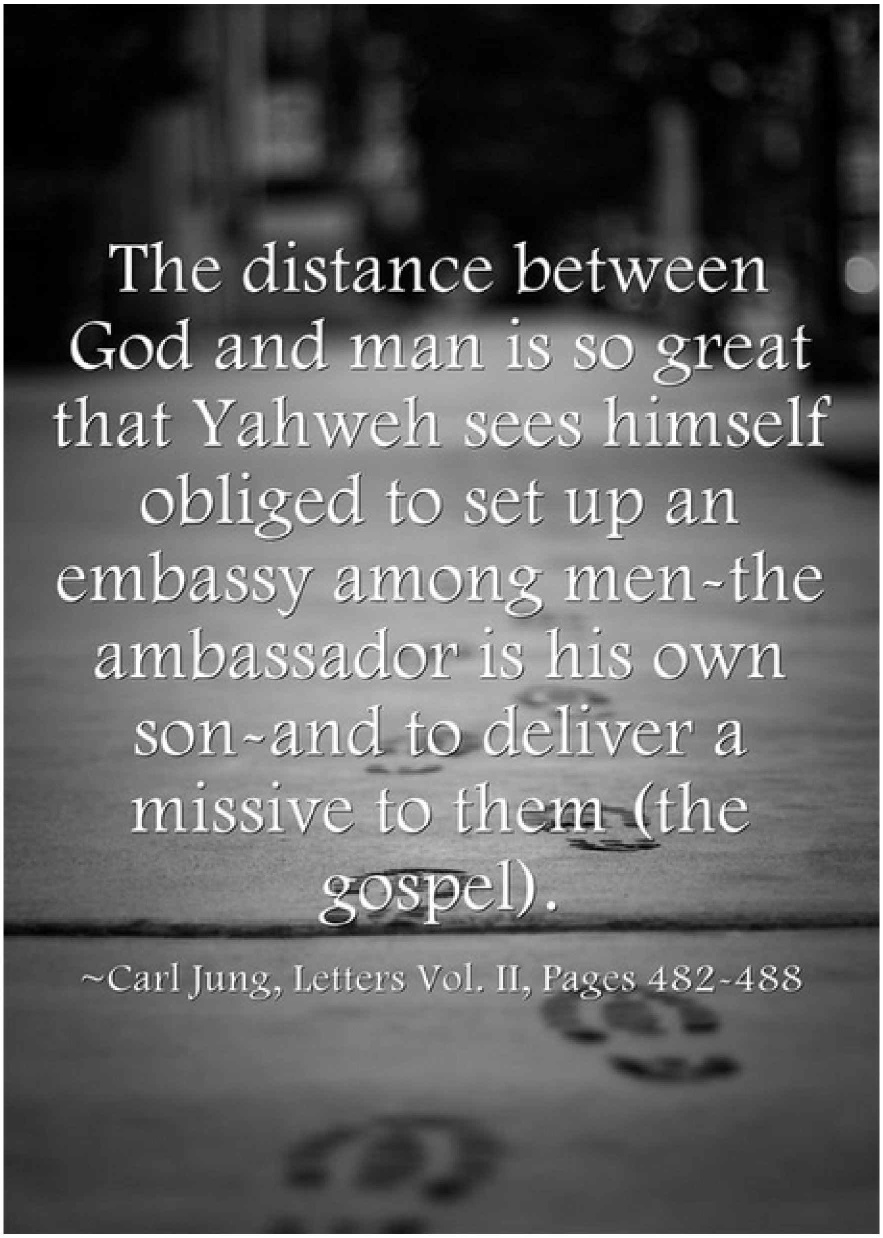


I distinguish between "religion" and "creed"; the one is generic, the other specific.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488

I distinguish between "religion" and "creed"; the one is generic, the other specific. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488

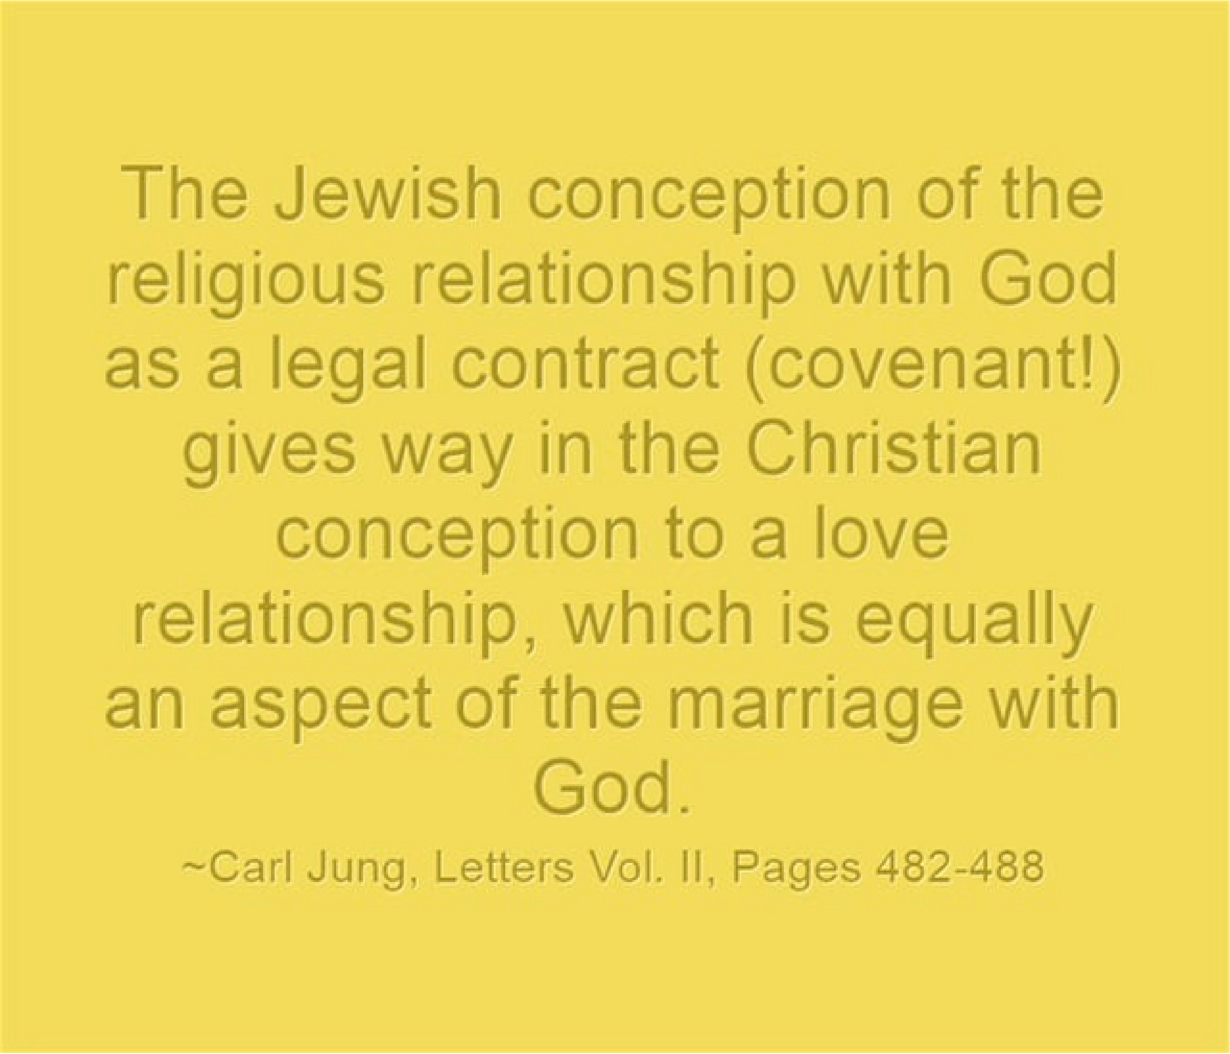
[9]



The distance between God and man is so great that Yahweh sees himself obliged to set up an embassy among men~the ambassador is his own son~and to deliver a missive to them (the gospel).
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488

The distance between God and man is so great that Yahweh sees himself obliged to set up an embassy among men-the ambassador is his own son-and to deliver a missive to them (the gospel). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488

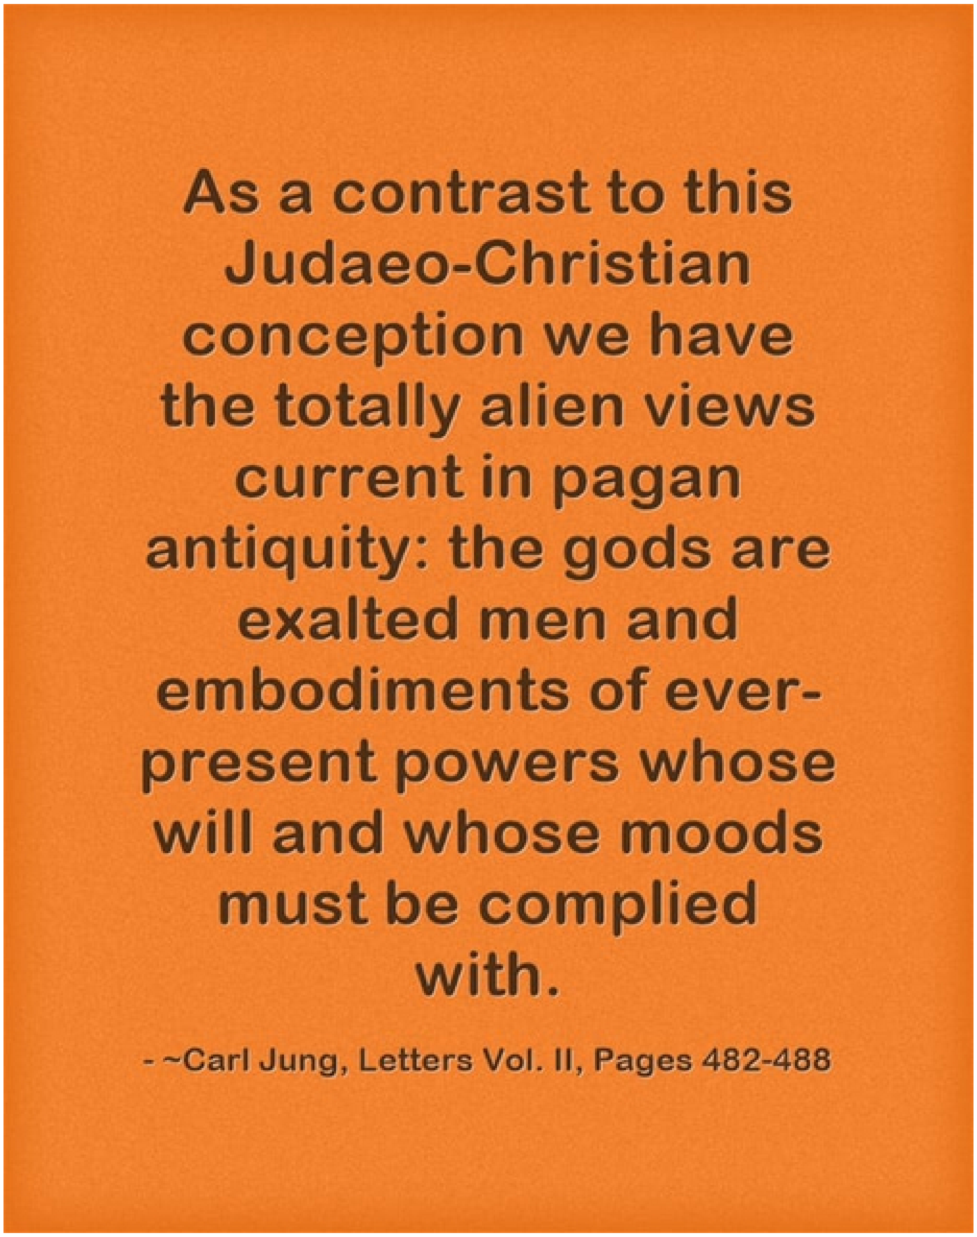
[10]



The Jewish conception of the religious relationship with God as a legal contract (covenant!) gives way in the Christian conception to a love relationship, which is equally an aspect of the marriage with God.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488

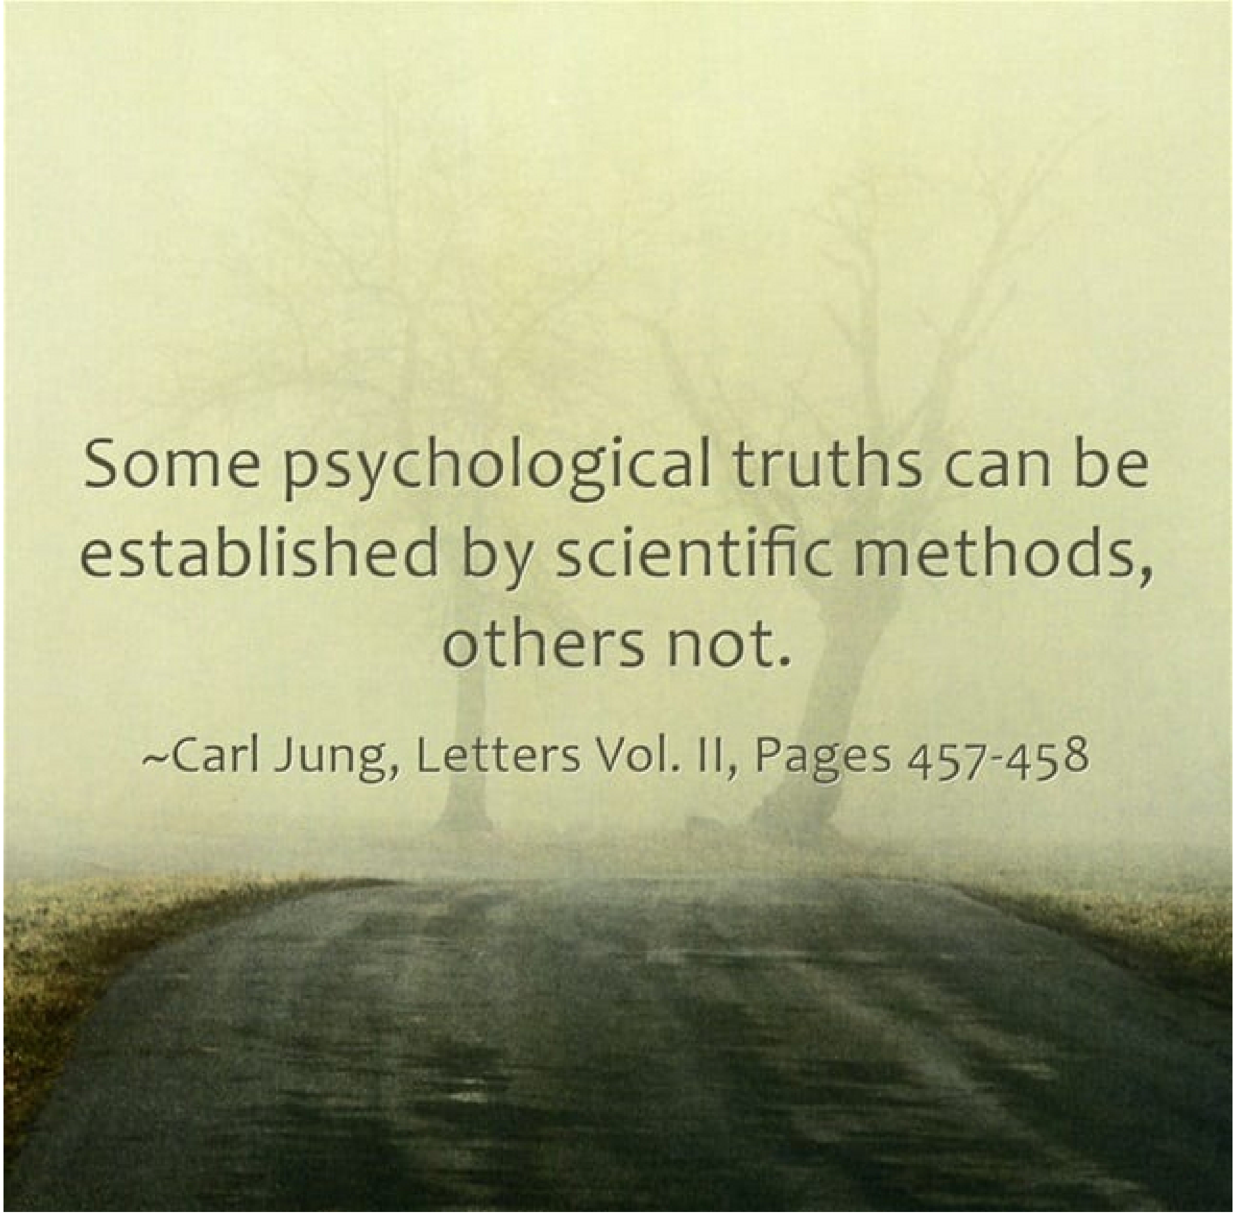
The Jewish conception of the religious relationship with God as a legal contract (covenant!) gives way in the Christian conception to a love relationship, which is equally an aspect of the marriage with God. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488



As a contrast to this Judaeo-Christian conception we have the totally alien views current in pagan antiquity: the gods are exalted men and embodiments of ever-present powers whose will and whose moods must be complied with.

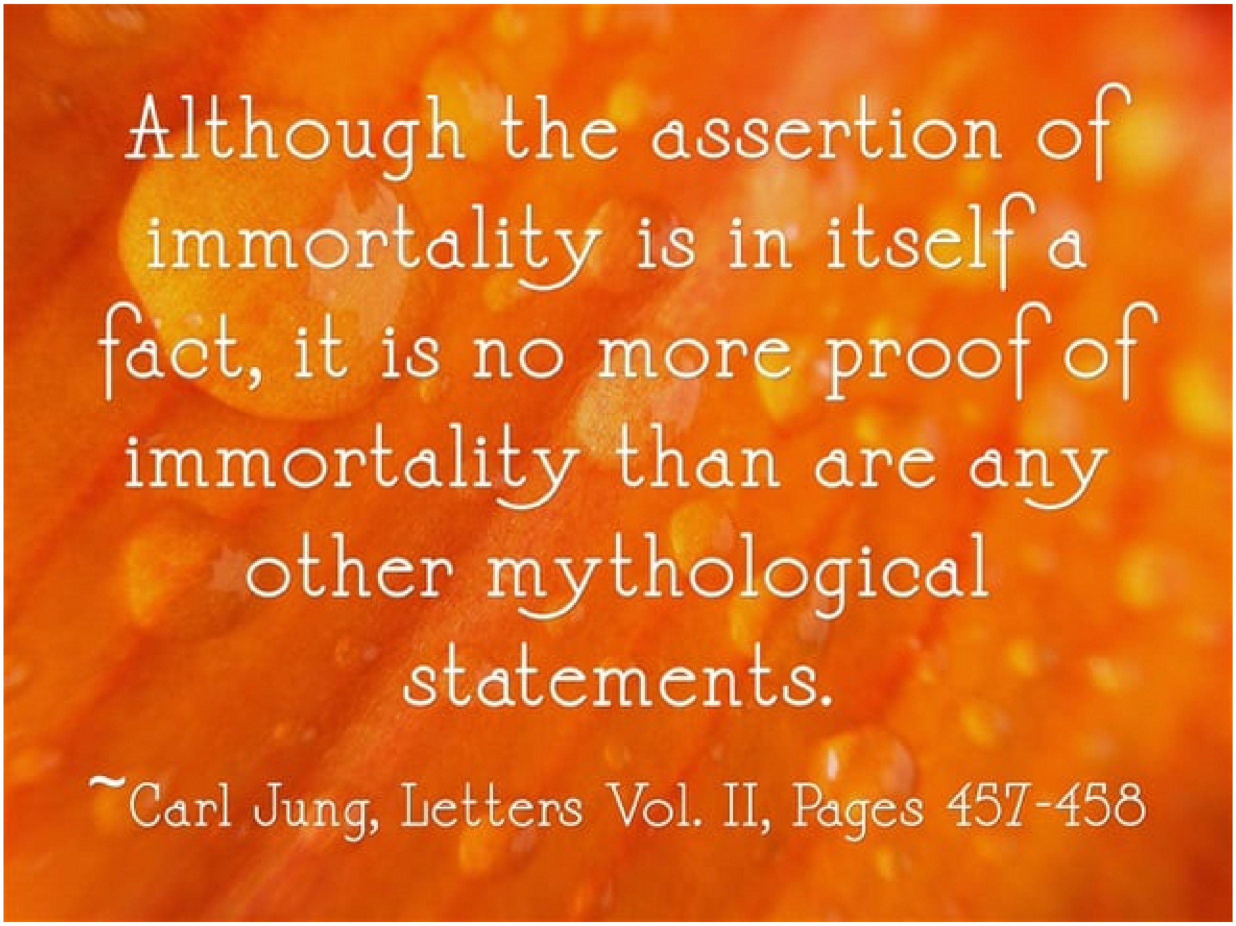
- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488

As a contrast to this Judaeo-Christian conception we have the totally alien views current in pagan antiquity: the gods are exalted men and embodiments of ever-present powers whose will and whose moods must be complied with. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488



Some psychological truths can be established by scientific methods, others not.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 457-458

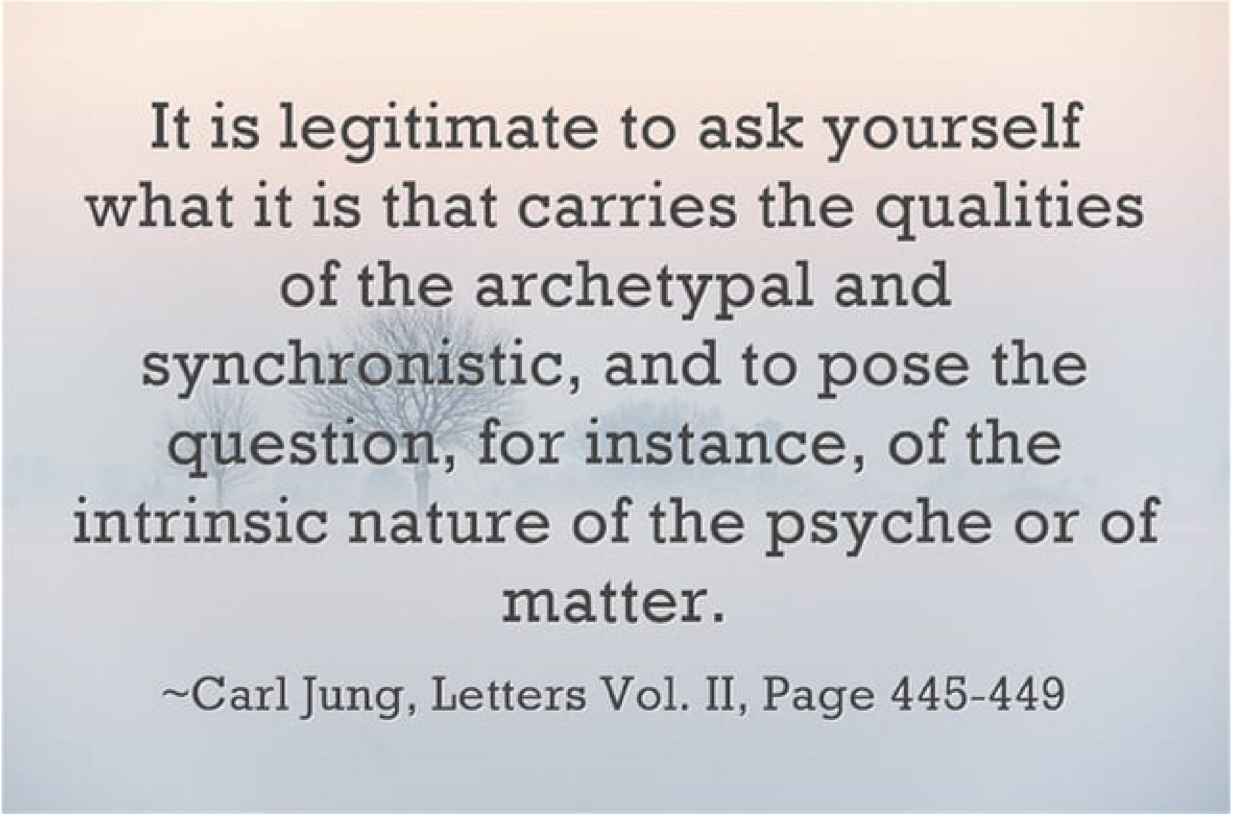
Some psychological truths can be established by scientific methods, others not. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 457-458



Although the assertion of immortality is in itself a fact, it is no more proof of immortality than are any other mythological statements.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 457-458

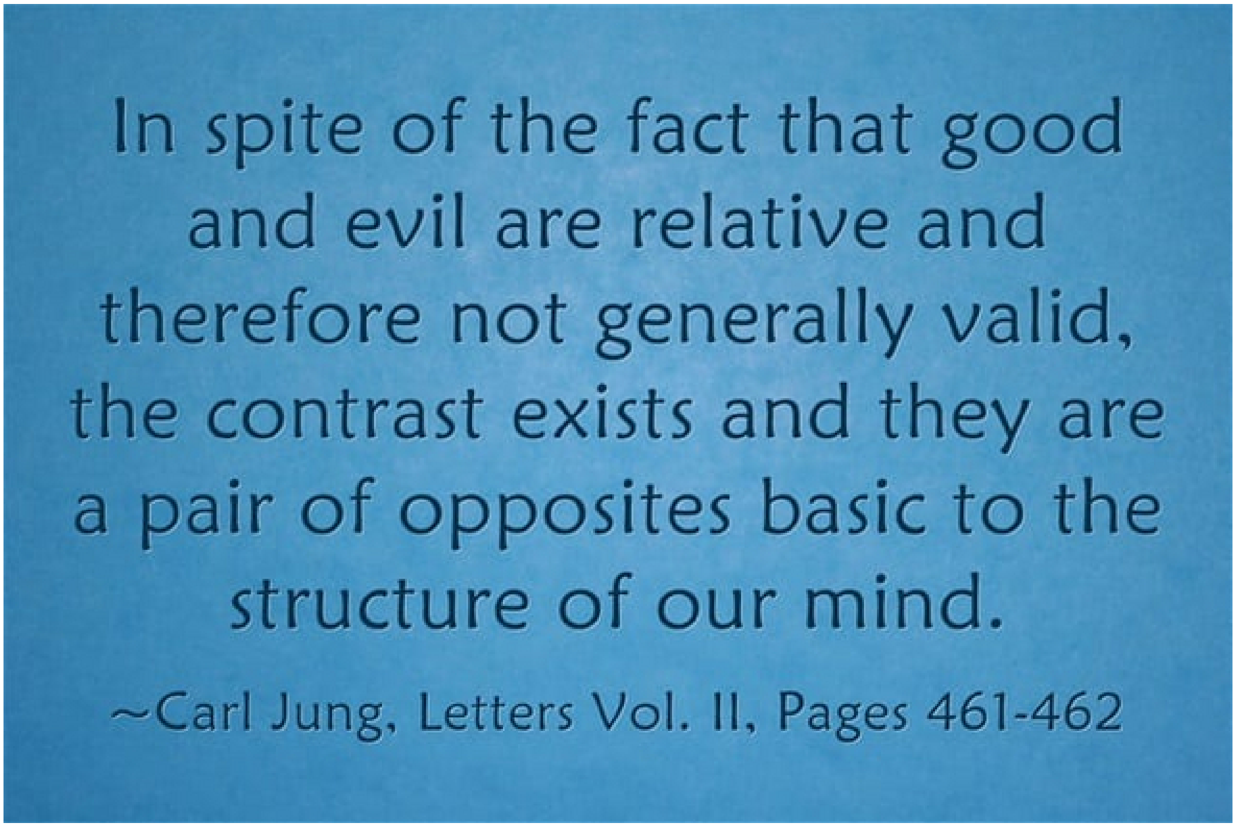
Although the assertion of immortality is in itself a fact, it is no more proof of immortality than are any other mythological statements. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 457-458



It is legitimate to ask yourself what it is that carries the qualities of the archetypal and synchronistic, and to pose the question, for instance, of the intrinsic nature of the psyche or of matter.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

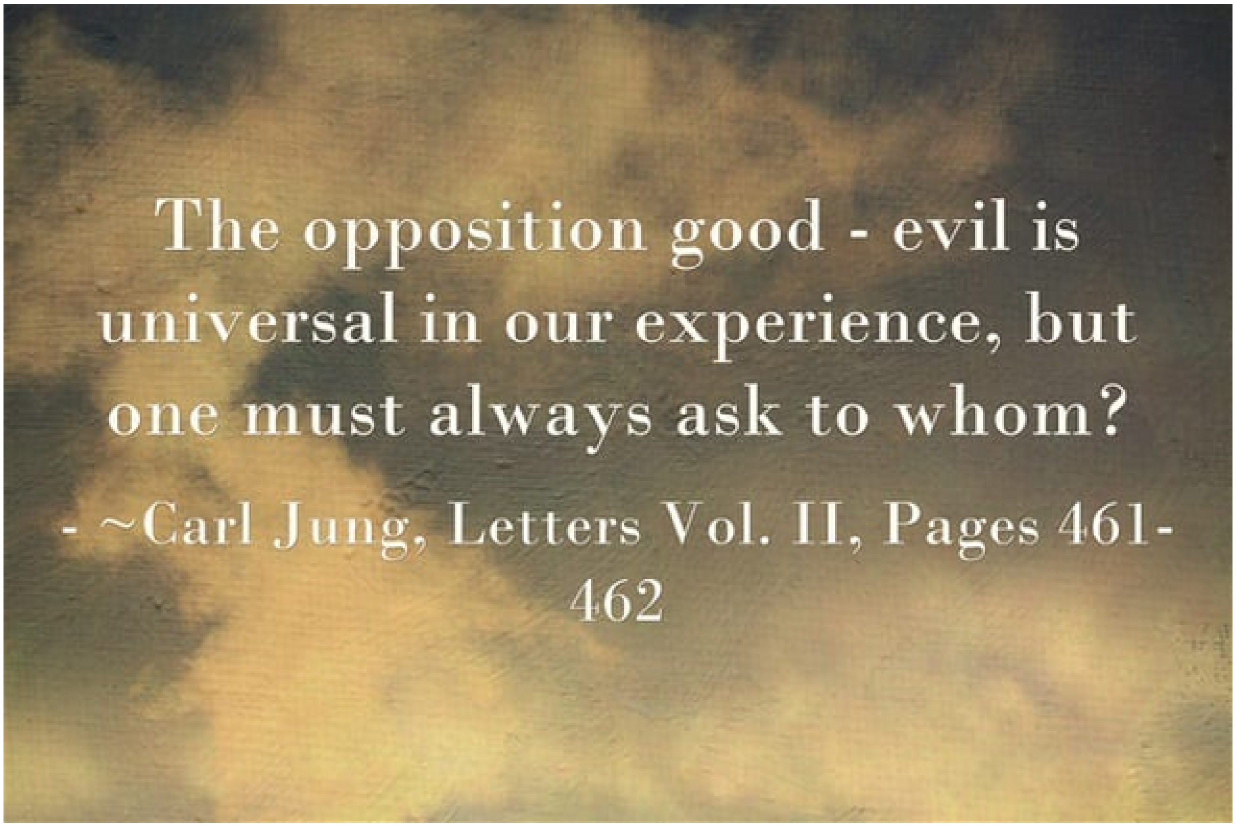
It is legitimate to ask yourself what it is that carries the qualities of the archetypal and synchronistic, and to pose the question, for instance, of the intrinsic nature of the psyche or of matter. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449



In spite of the fact that good and evil are relative and therefore not generally valid, the contrast exists and they are a pair of opposites basic to the structure of our mind.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 461-462

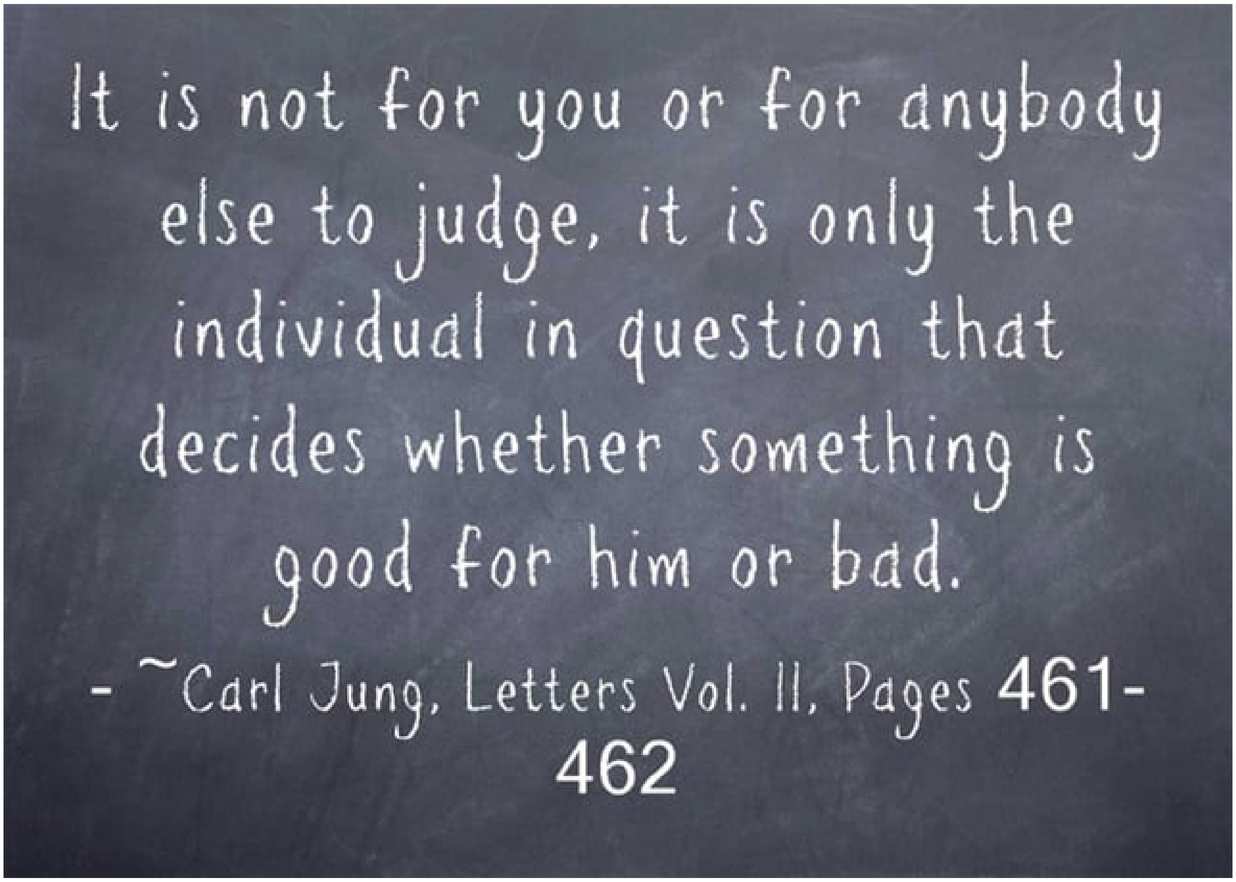
In spite of the fact that good and evil are relative and therefore not generally valid, the contrast exists and they are a pair of opposites basic to the structure of our mind. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 461-462



The opposition good - evil is universal in our experience, but one must always ask to whom?

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 461-462

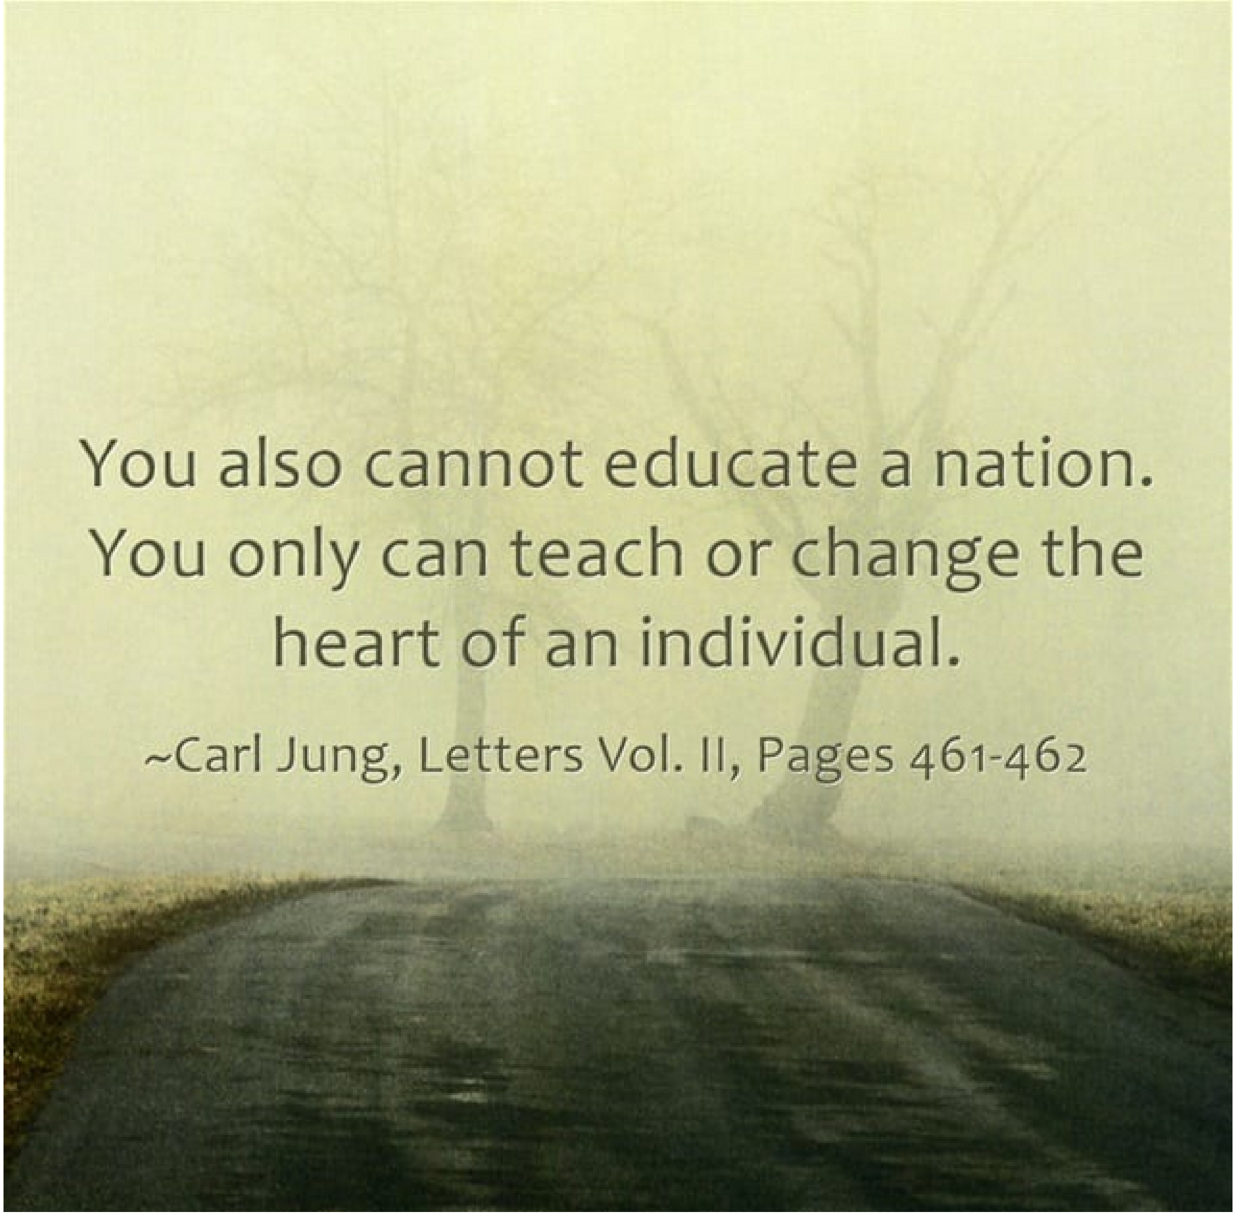
The opposition good - evil is universal in our experience, but one must always ask to whom?   Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 461-462



It is not for you or for anybody else to judge, it is only the individual in question that decides whether something is good for him or bad.

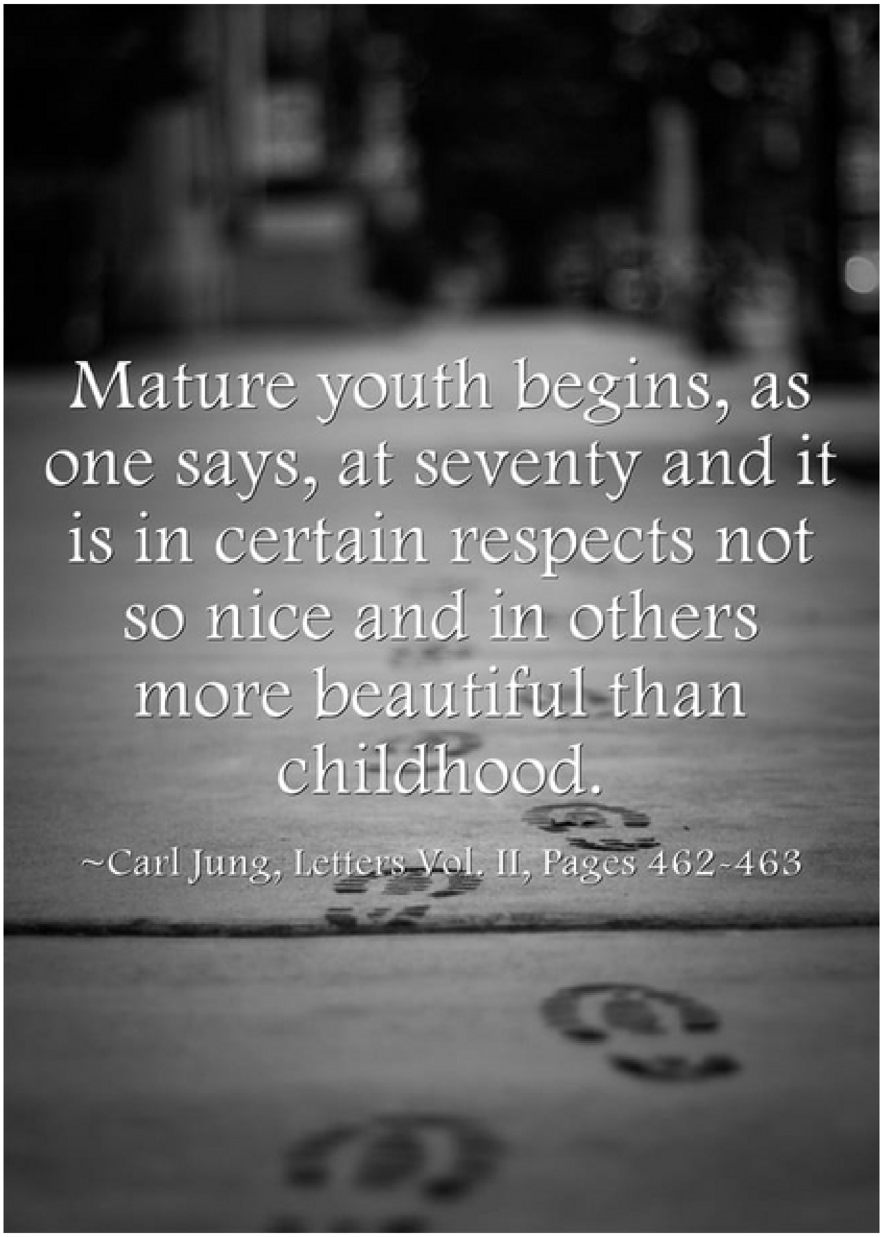
- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 461-462

It is not for you or for anybody else to judge, it is only the individual in question that decides whether something is good for him or bad. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 461-462



You also cannot educate a nation. You only can teach or change the heart of an individual.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 461-462

You also cannot educate a nation. You only can teach or change the heart of an individual. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 461-462



Mature youth begins, as one says, at seventy and it is in certain respects not so nice and in others more beautiful than childhood.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 462-463

Mature youth begins, as one says, at seventy and it is in certain respects not so nice and in others more beautiful than childhood. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 462-463

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/1565d-bbb.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/62adc-ccc.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/5e5ff-ddd.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/a9c66-eee.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/e7281-fff.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/a345e-ggg.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/8fe5a-hhh.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/8a3ee-iii.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/14f84-jjj.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/badcc-kkk.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/7a9a7-lll.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/d7456-aaa.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/b9483-bbb.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/0a917-ccc.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/98e3b-ddd.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/59642-fff.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/9f5f7-ggg.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/4b83c-hhh.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/10950-iii.jpg`

Carl Jung and the swaying of Chaos (2019-03-08 12:20)

[1]

But for him who has seen the chaos, there.is no more hiding, because he knows that the bottom sways and knows what this swaying means.

He has seen the order and the disorder of the endless, he knows the unlawful laws.

He knows the sea and can never forget it.

The chaos is terrible: days full of lead, nights full of horror. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 299.

The spirit of this time sways between yes and no like a drunkard ["since he is the uncertainty of the present general consciousness"].

¥on ["One," throughout] can only overcome the old God through becoming him yourself and experiencing his suffering and dying yourself You overcome him and become yourself as one who seeks himself and no longer imitates heroes. You free yoursel£ when you free yourself from the old God and his model.

When you have become the model, then you no longer need his.

Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Footnote 238, Pages 254-255.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/045ab-72bchaos.jpg`

Some Carl Jung Quotations XXIV (2019-03-08 12:43)

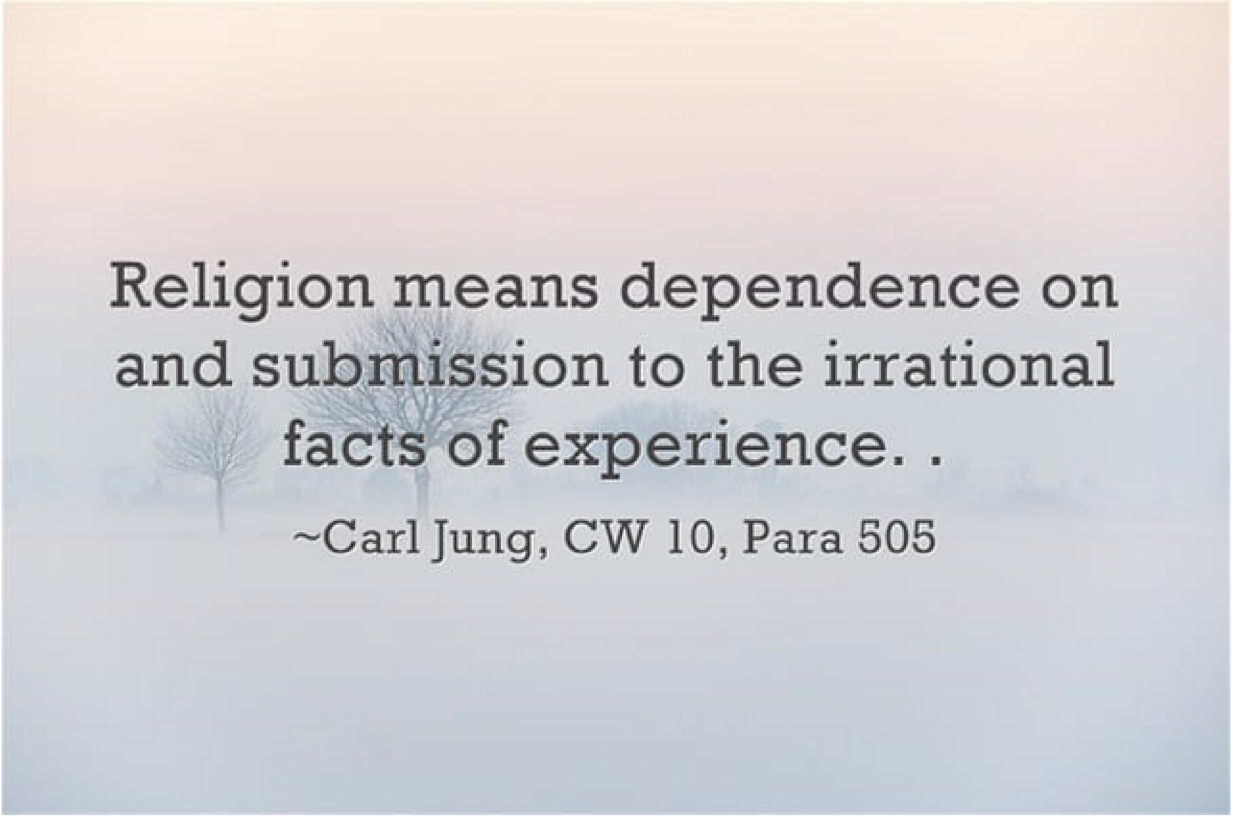
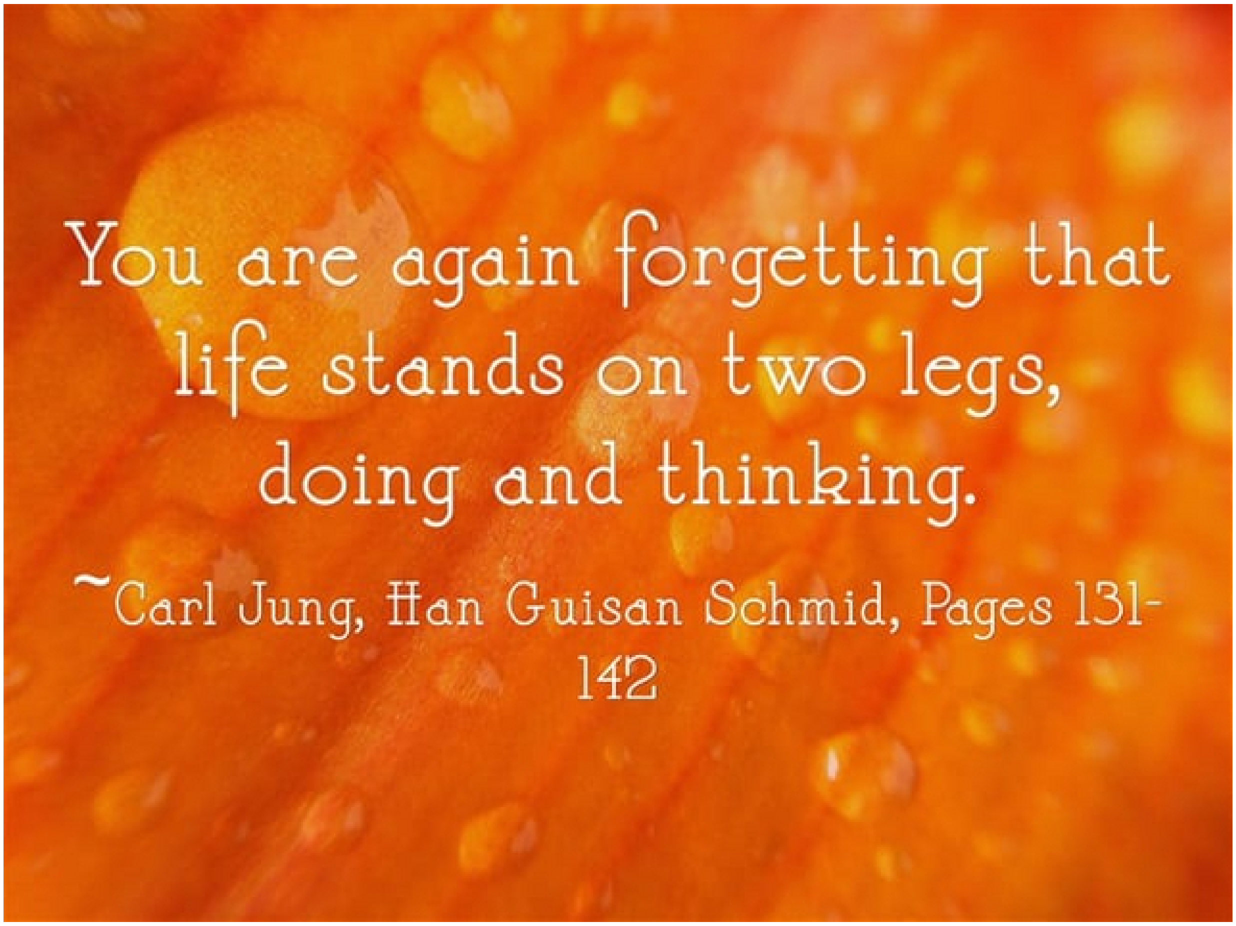
[1]



Religion means dependence on and submission to the irrational facts of experience. .
~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 505

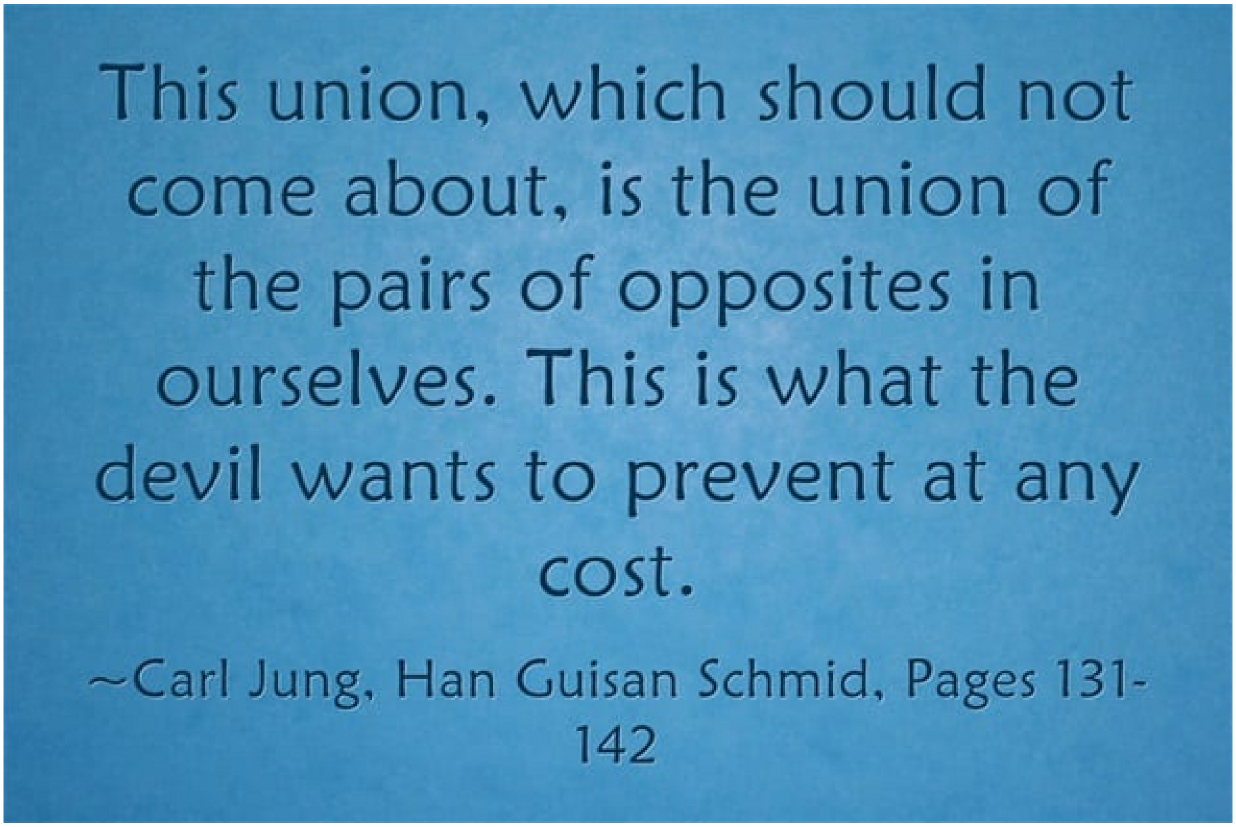
Religion means dependence on and submission to the irrational facts of experience. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 505.

[2]



You are again forgetting that life stands on two legs, doing and thinking.
~Carl Jung, Han Guisan Schmid, Pages 131-142

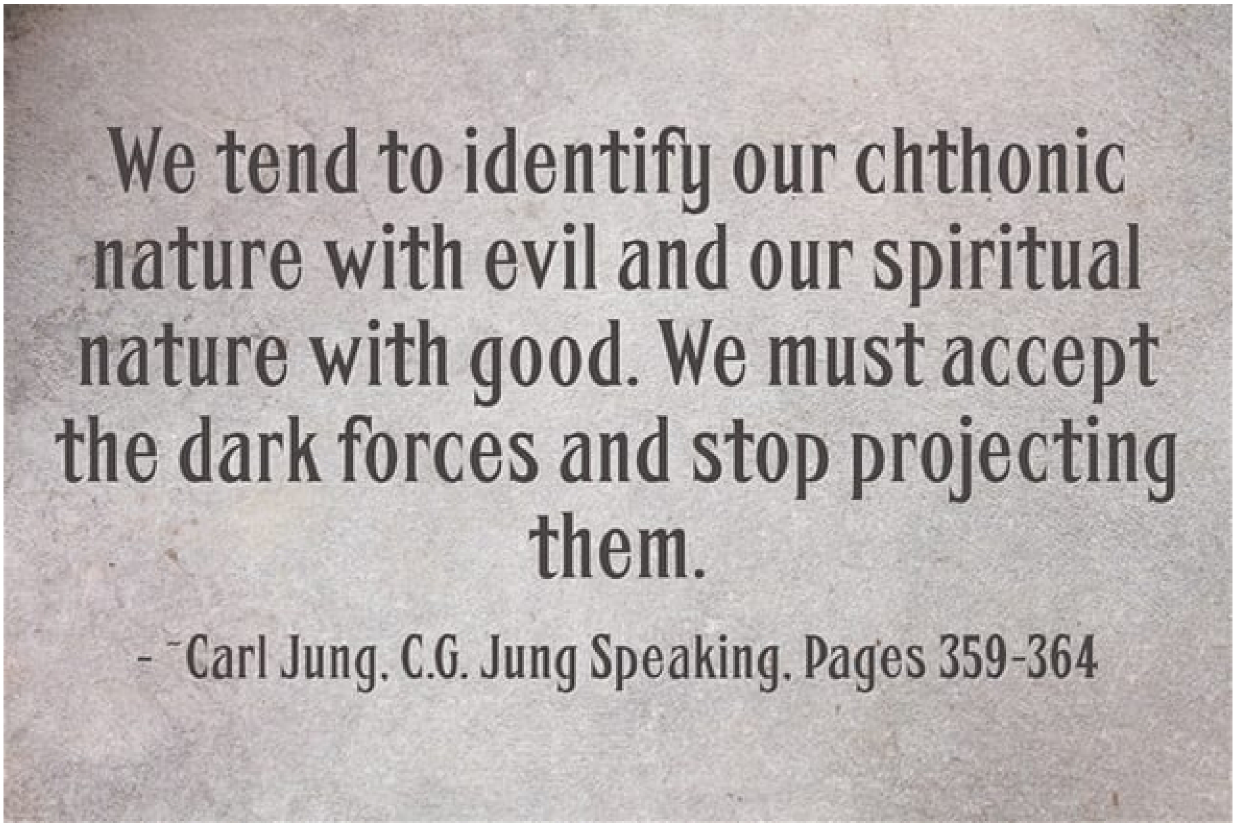
You are again forgetting that life stands on two legs, doing and thinking. Carl Jung, Han Guisan Schmid, Pages 131-142



This union, which should not come about, is the union of the pairs of opposites in ourselves. This is what the devil wants to prevent at any cost.

~Carl Jung, Han Guisan Schmid, Pages 131-142

This union, which should not come about, is the union of the pairs of opposites in ourselves. This is what the devil wants to prevent at any cost. Carl Jung, Han Guisan Schmid, Pages 131-142



We tend to identify our chthonic nature with evil and our spiritual nature with good. We must accept the dark forces and stop projecting them.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

We tend to identify our chthonic nature with evil and our spiritual nature with good. We must accept the dark forces and stop projecting them. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

Go to bed. Think of your problem. See what you dream.
Perhaps the Great Man, the 2,000,000-year-old man, will speak. In a cul-de-sac, then only do you hear his voice.

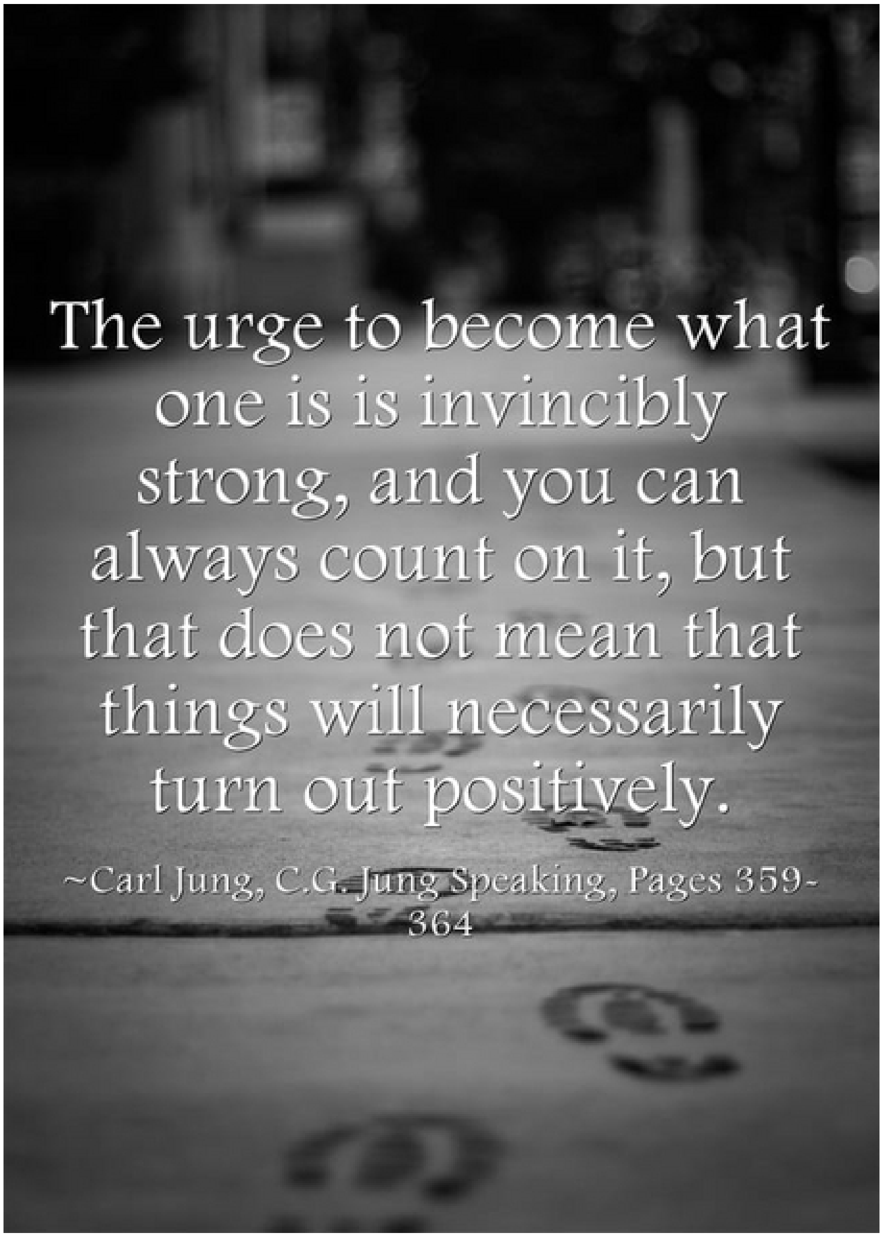
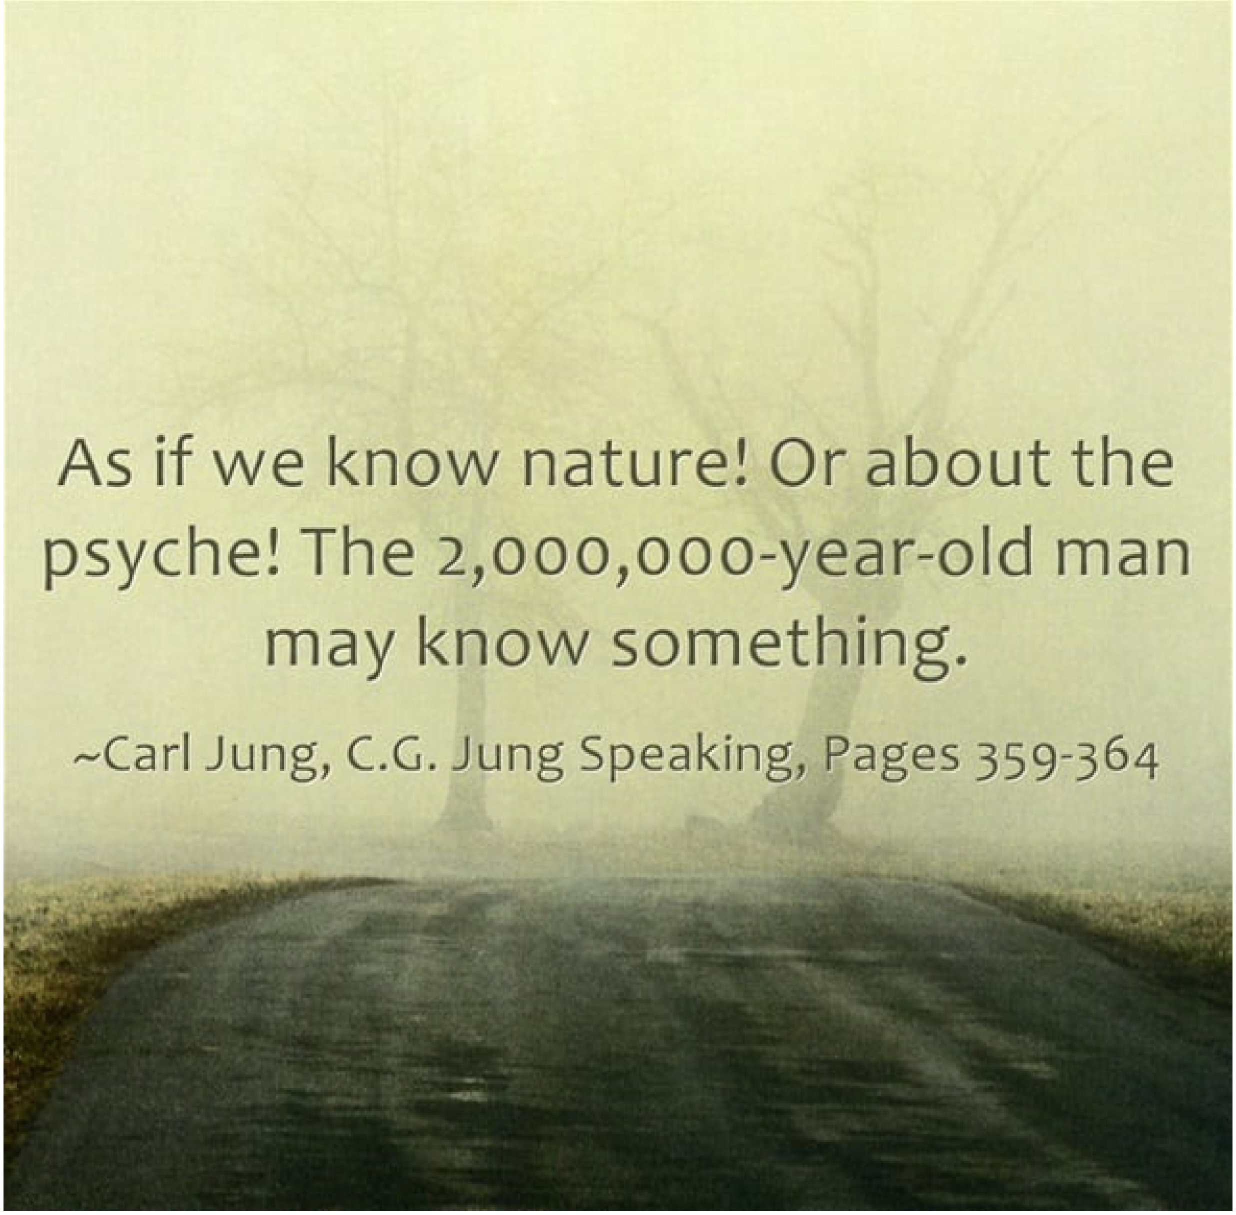
~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

Go to bed. Think of your problem. See what you dream. Perhaps the Great Man, the 2,000,000-year-old man, will speak. In a cul-de-sac, then only do you hear his voice. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



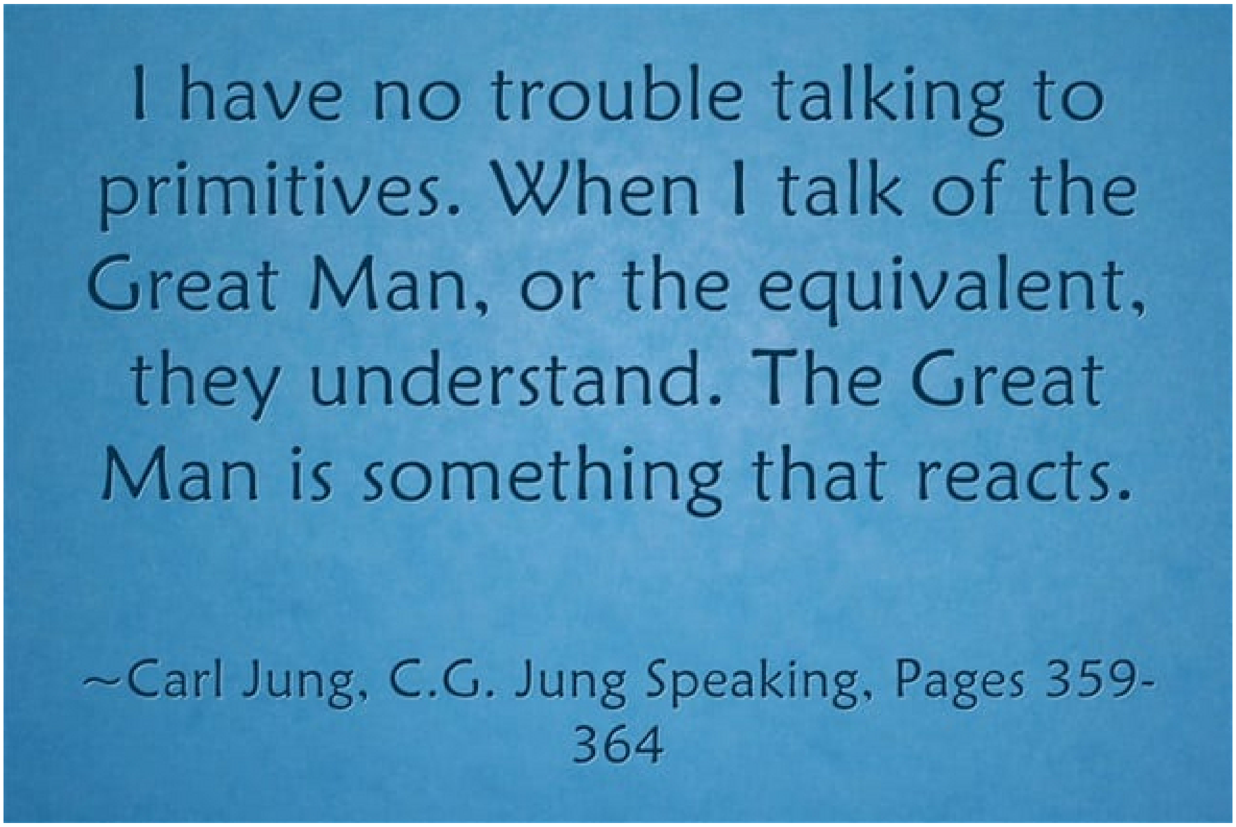
The urge to become what one is is invincibly strong, and you can always count on it, but that does not mean that things will necessarily turn out positively.
~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

The urge to become what one is is invincibly strong, and you can always count on it, but that does not mean that things will necessarily turn out positively. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



As if we know nature! Or about the psyche! The 2,000,000-year-old man may know something.
~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

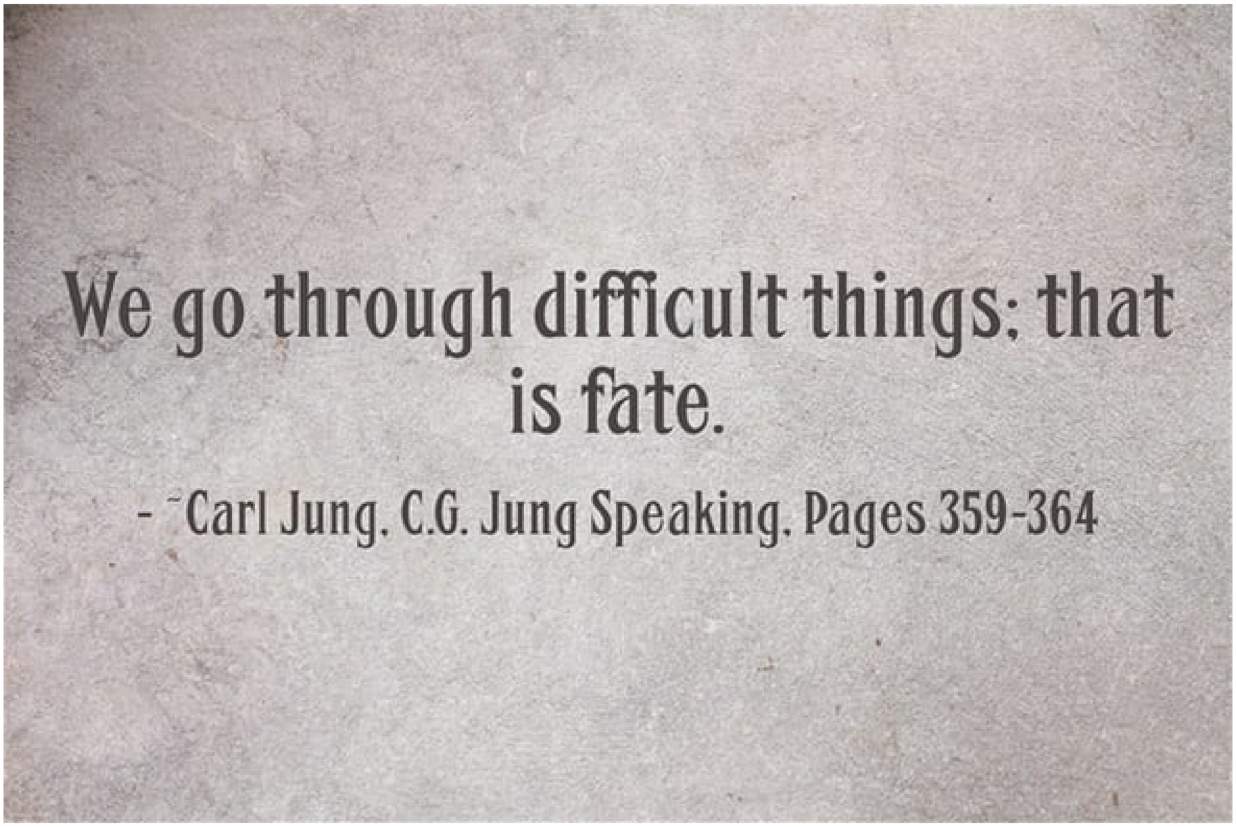
As if we know nature! Or about the psyche! The 2,000,000-year-old man may know something. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



I have no trouble talking to primitives. When I talk of the Great Man, or the equivalent, they understand. The Great Man is something that reacts.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

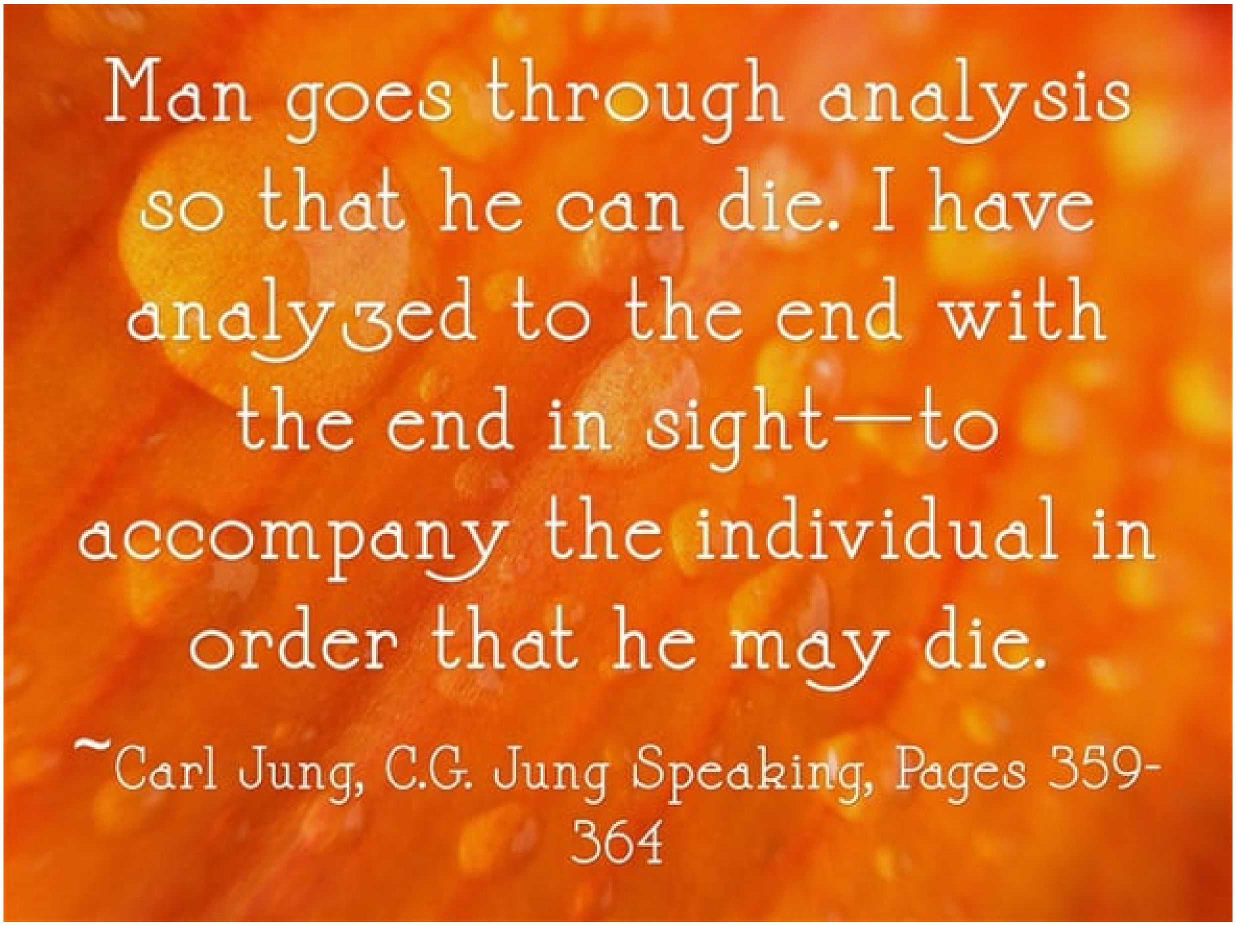
I have no trouble talking to primitives. When I talk of the Great Man, or the equivalent, they understand. The Great Man is something that reacts. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



We go through difficult things; that is fate.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

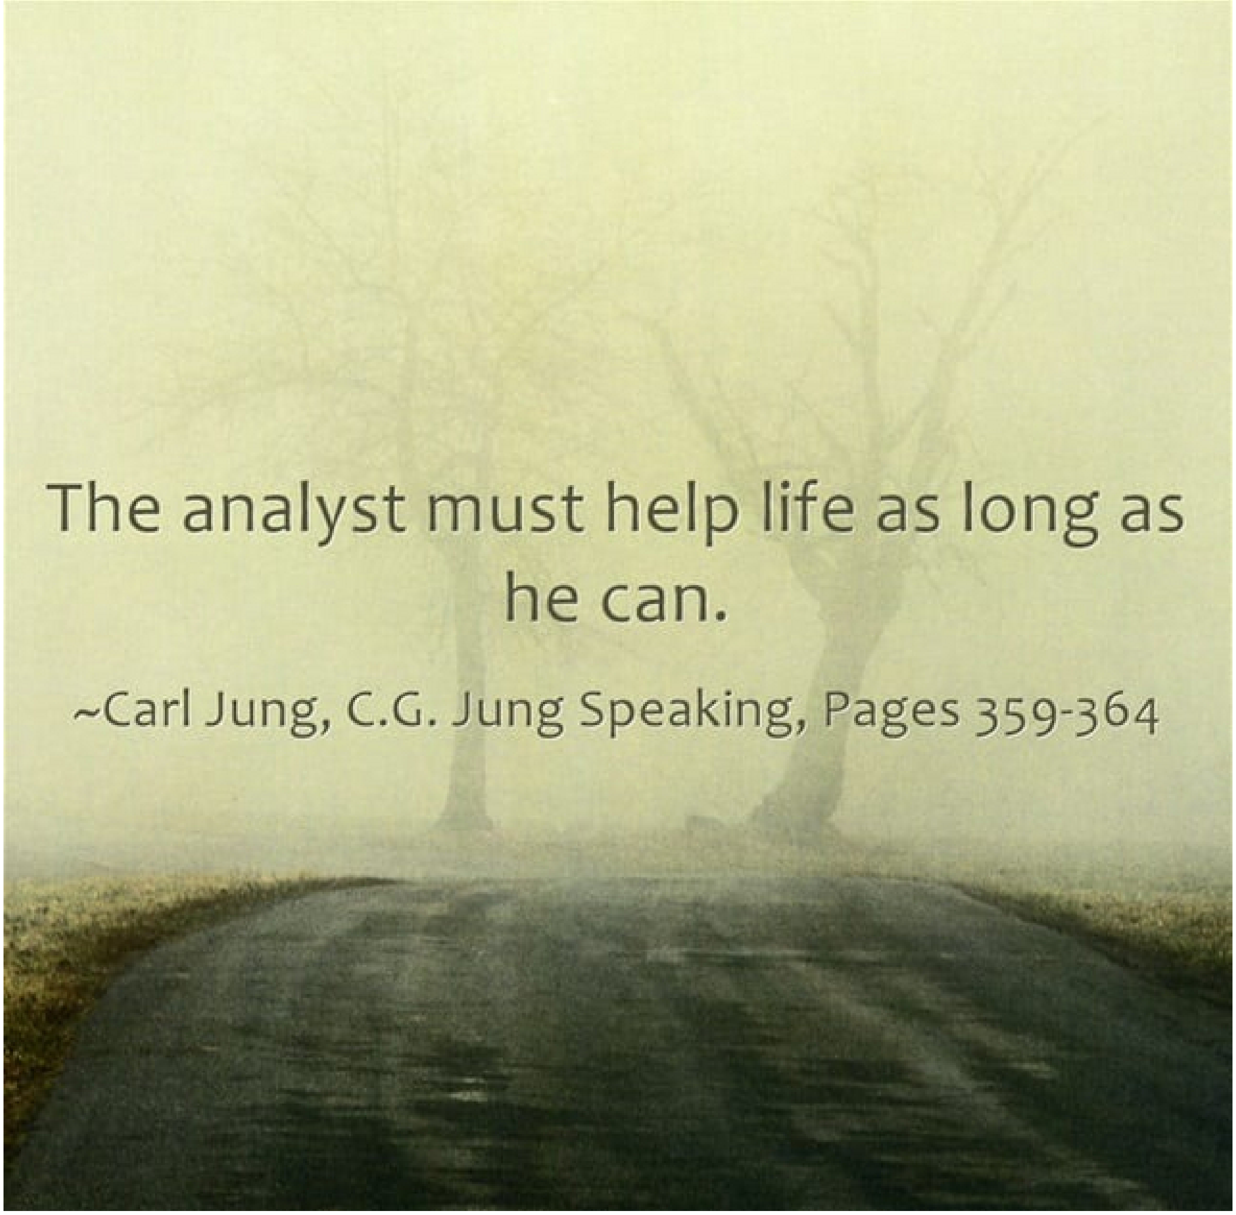
We go through difficult things; that is fate. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



Man goes through analysis so that he can die. I have analyzed to the end with the end in sight—to accompany the individual in order that he may die.

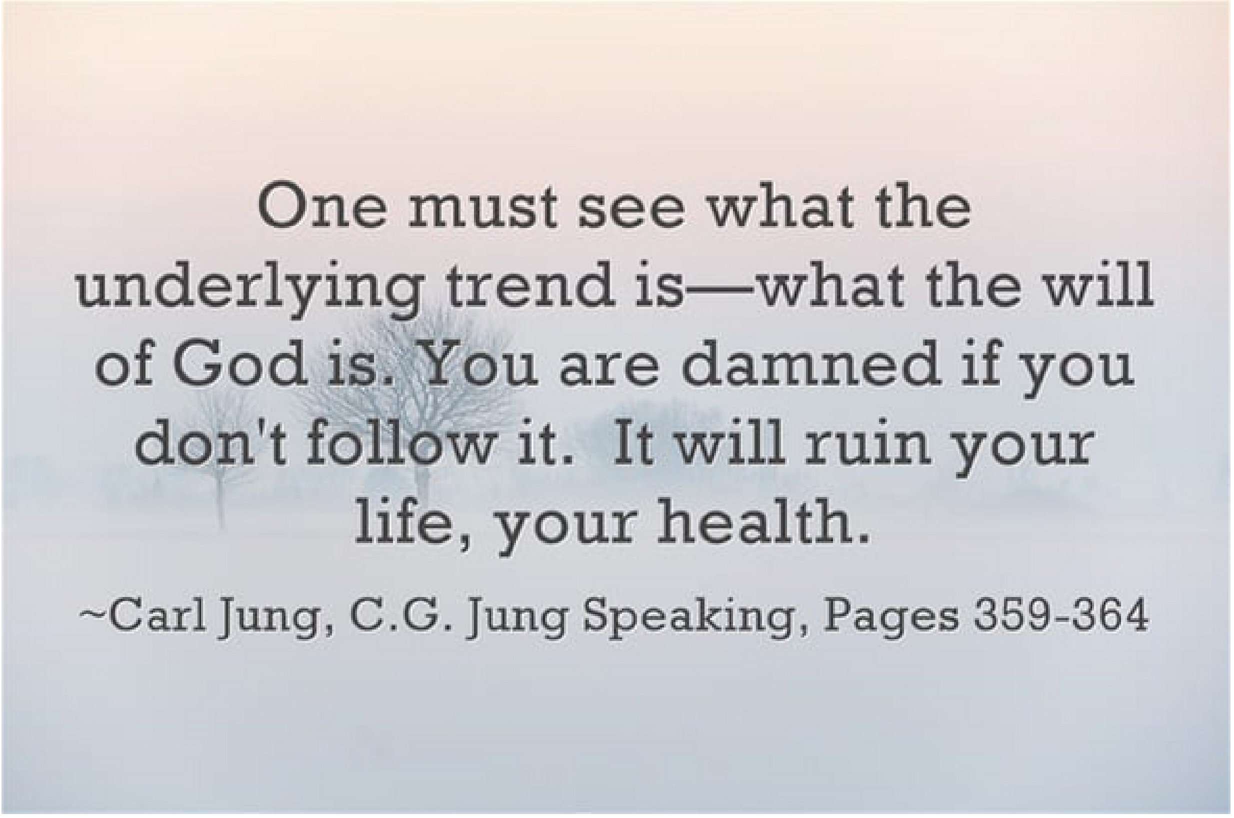
~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

Man goes through analysis so that he can die. I have analyzed to the end with the end in sight—to accompany the individual in order that he may die. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



The analyst must help life as long as he can.
~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

The analyst must help life as long as he can. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

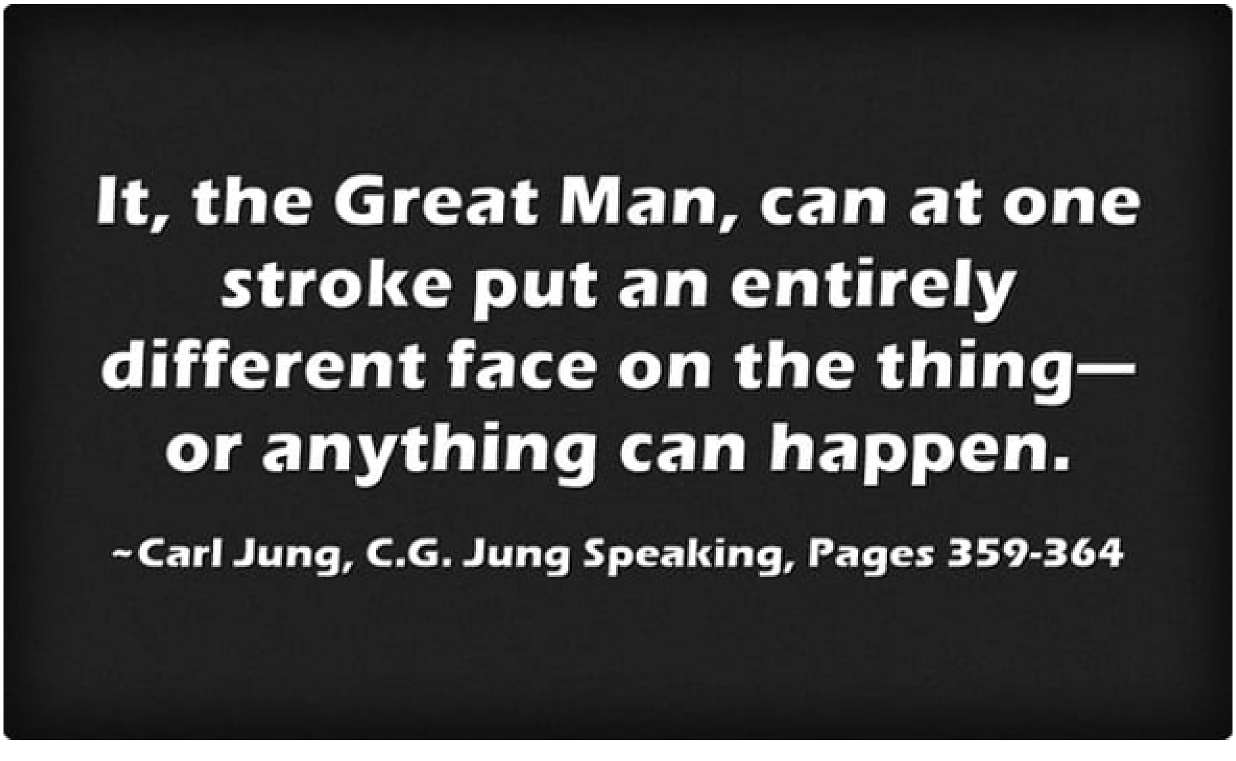


One must see what the underlying trend is—what the will of God is. You are damned if you don't follow it. It will ruin your life, your health.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

One must see what the underlying trend is—what the will of God is. You are damned if you don't follow it. It will ruin your life, your health. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

[13]

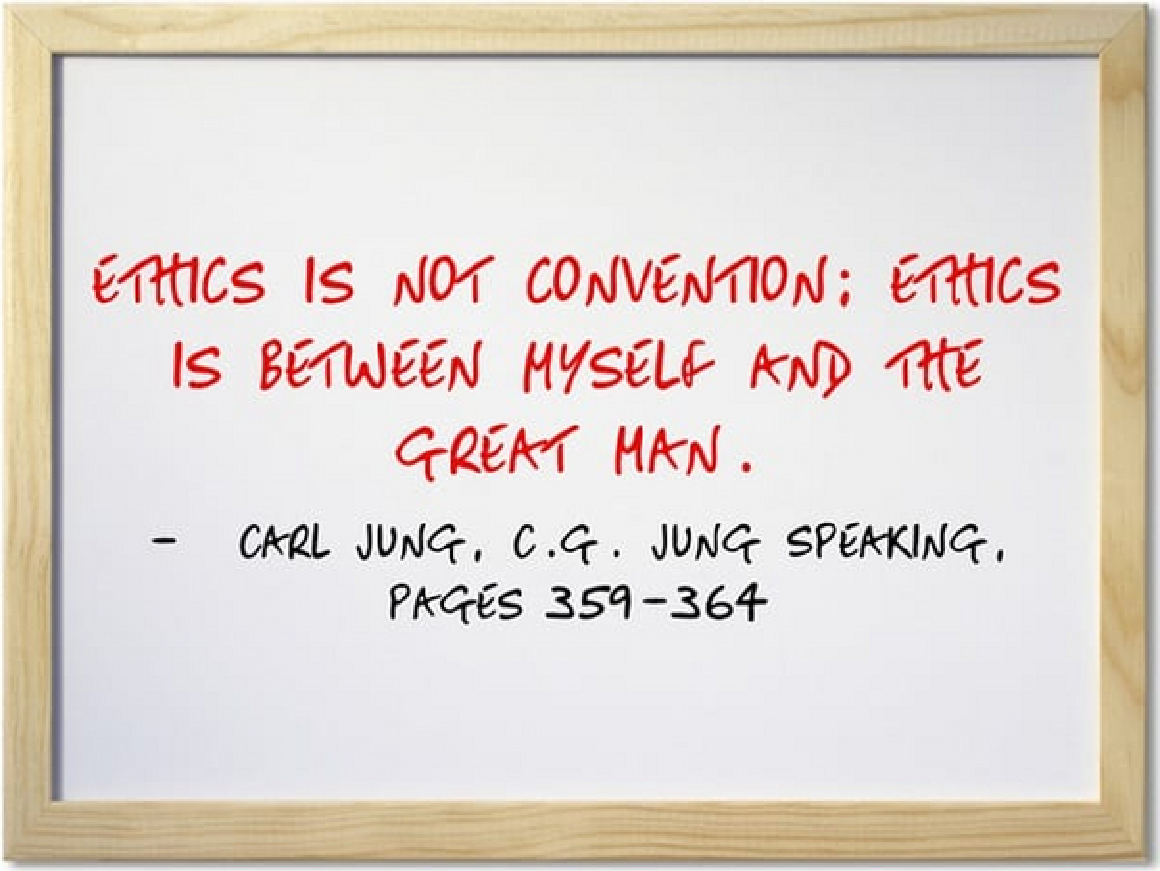


It, the Great Man, can at one stroke put an entirely different face on the thing—or anything can happen.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

It, the Great Man, can at one stroke put an entirely different face on the thing—or anything can happen. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

[14]

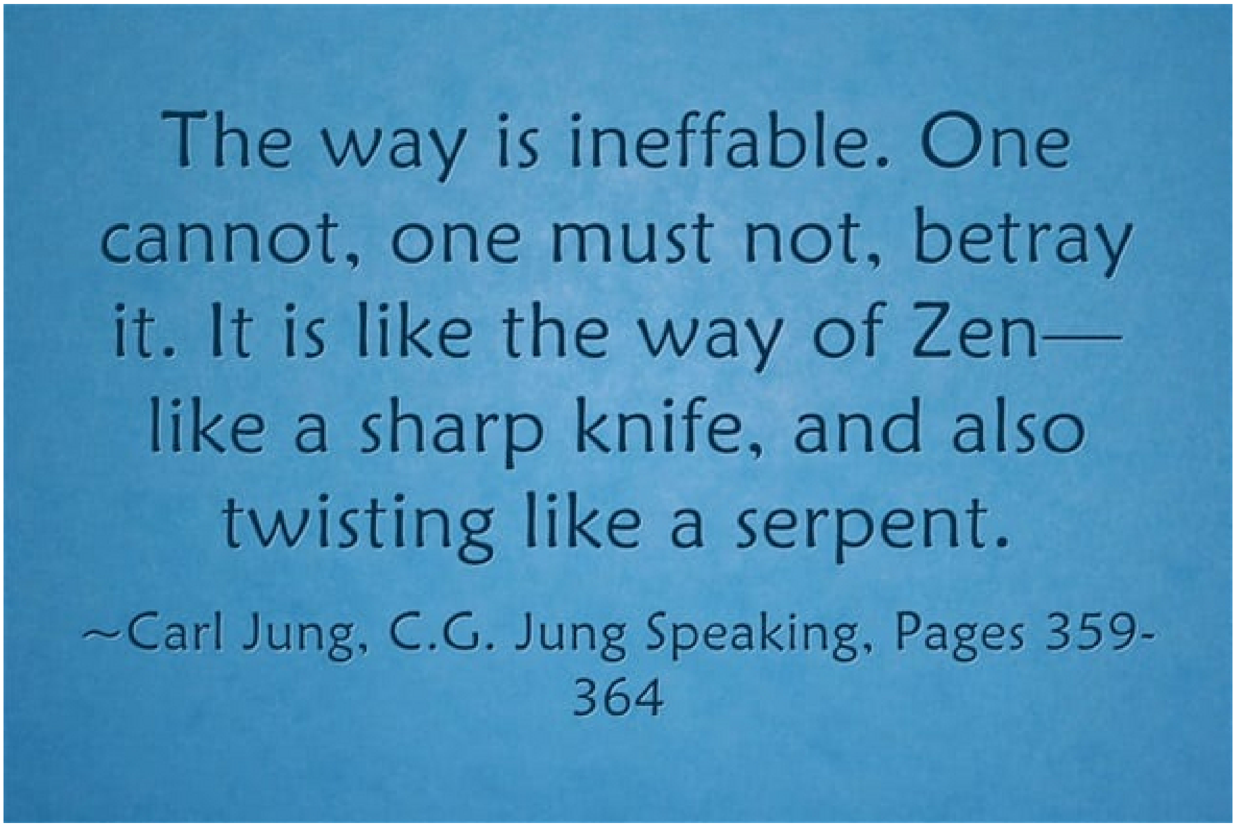


ETHICS IS NOT CONVENTION; ETHICS IS BETWEEN MYSELF AND THE GREAT MAN.

- CARL JUNG, C.G. JUNG SPEAKING, PAGES 359-364

Ethics is not convention; ethics is between myself and the Great Man. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

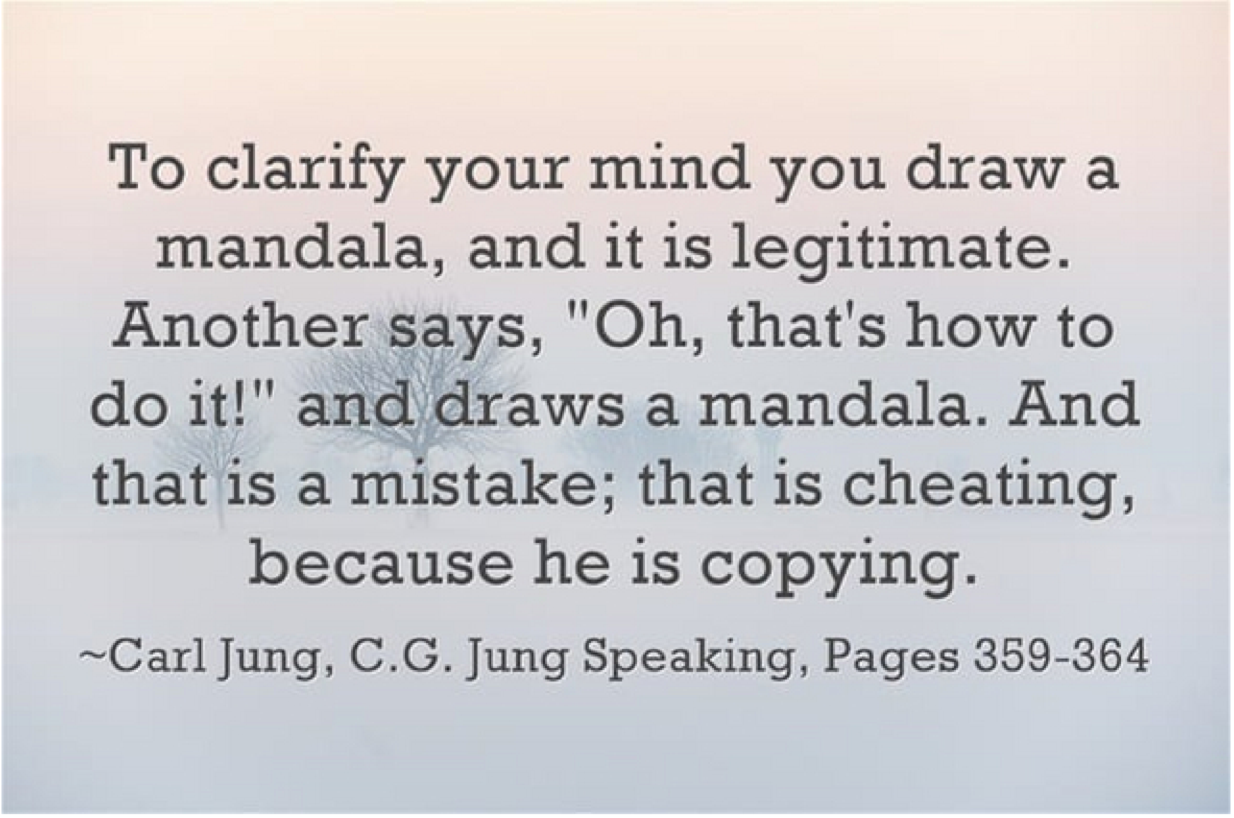
[15]



The way is ineffable. One cannot, one must not, betray it. It is like the way of Zen—like a sharp knife, and also twisting like a serpent.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

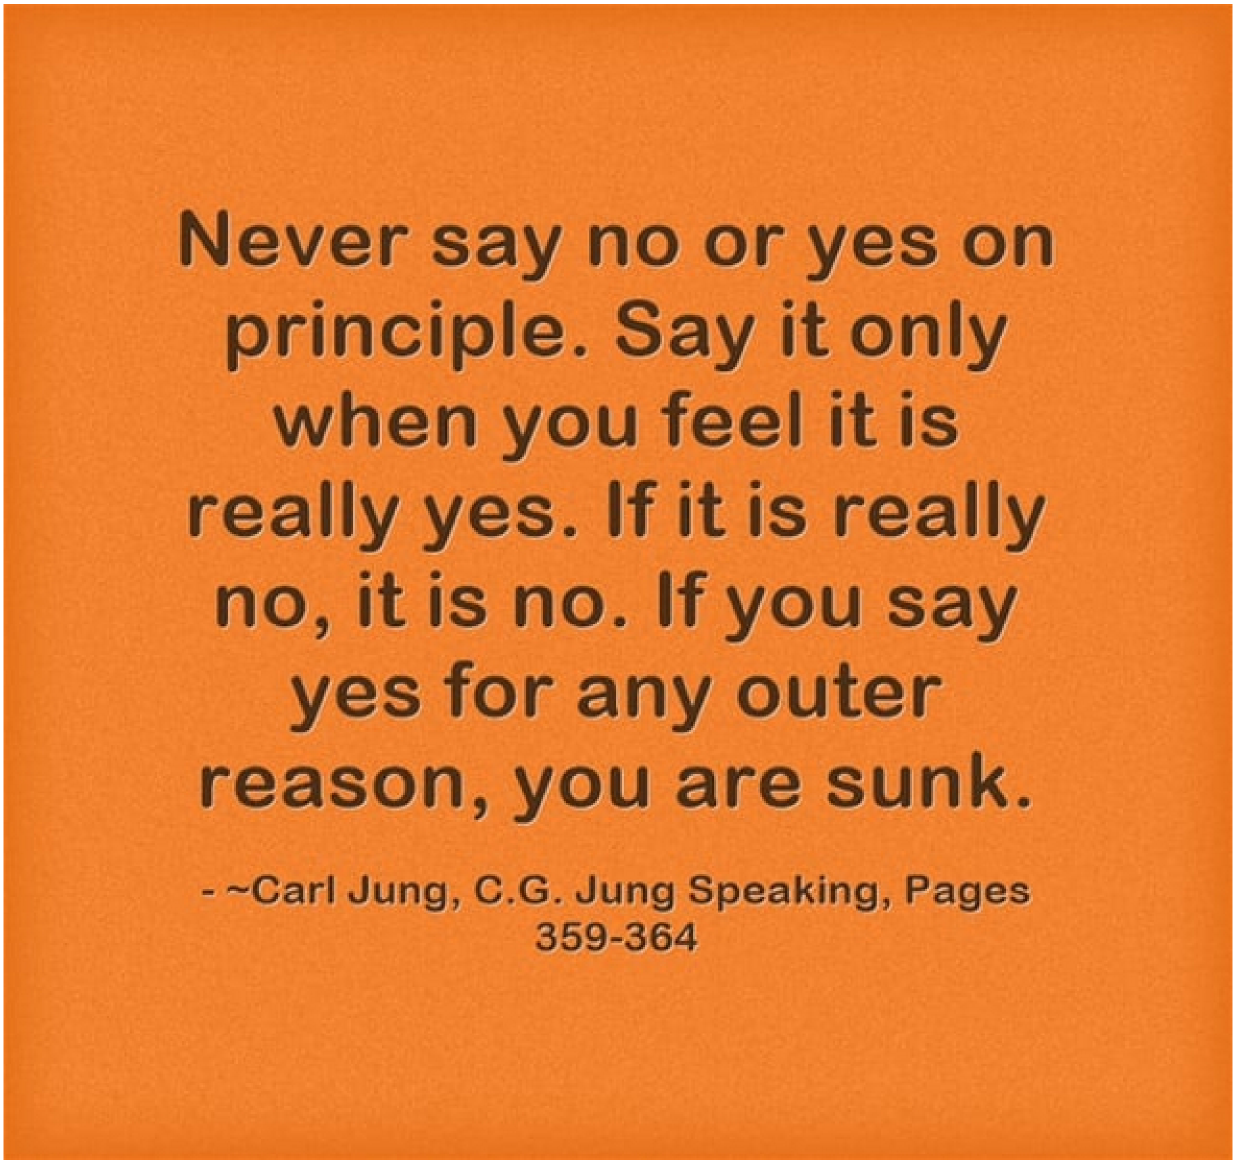
The way is ineffable. One cannot, one must not, betray it. It is like the way of Zen—like a sharp knife, and also twisting like a serpent. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



To clarify your mind you draw a mandala, and it is legitimate. Another says, "Oh, that's how to do it!" and draws a mandala. And that is a mistake; that is cheating, because he is copying.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

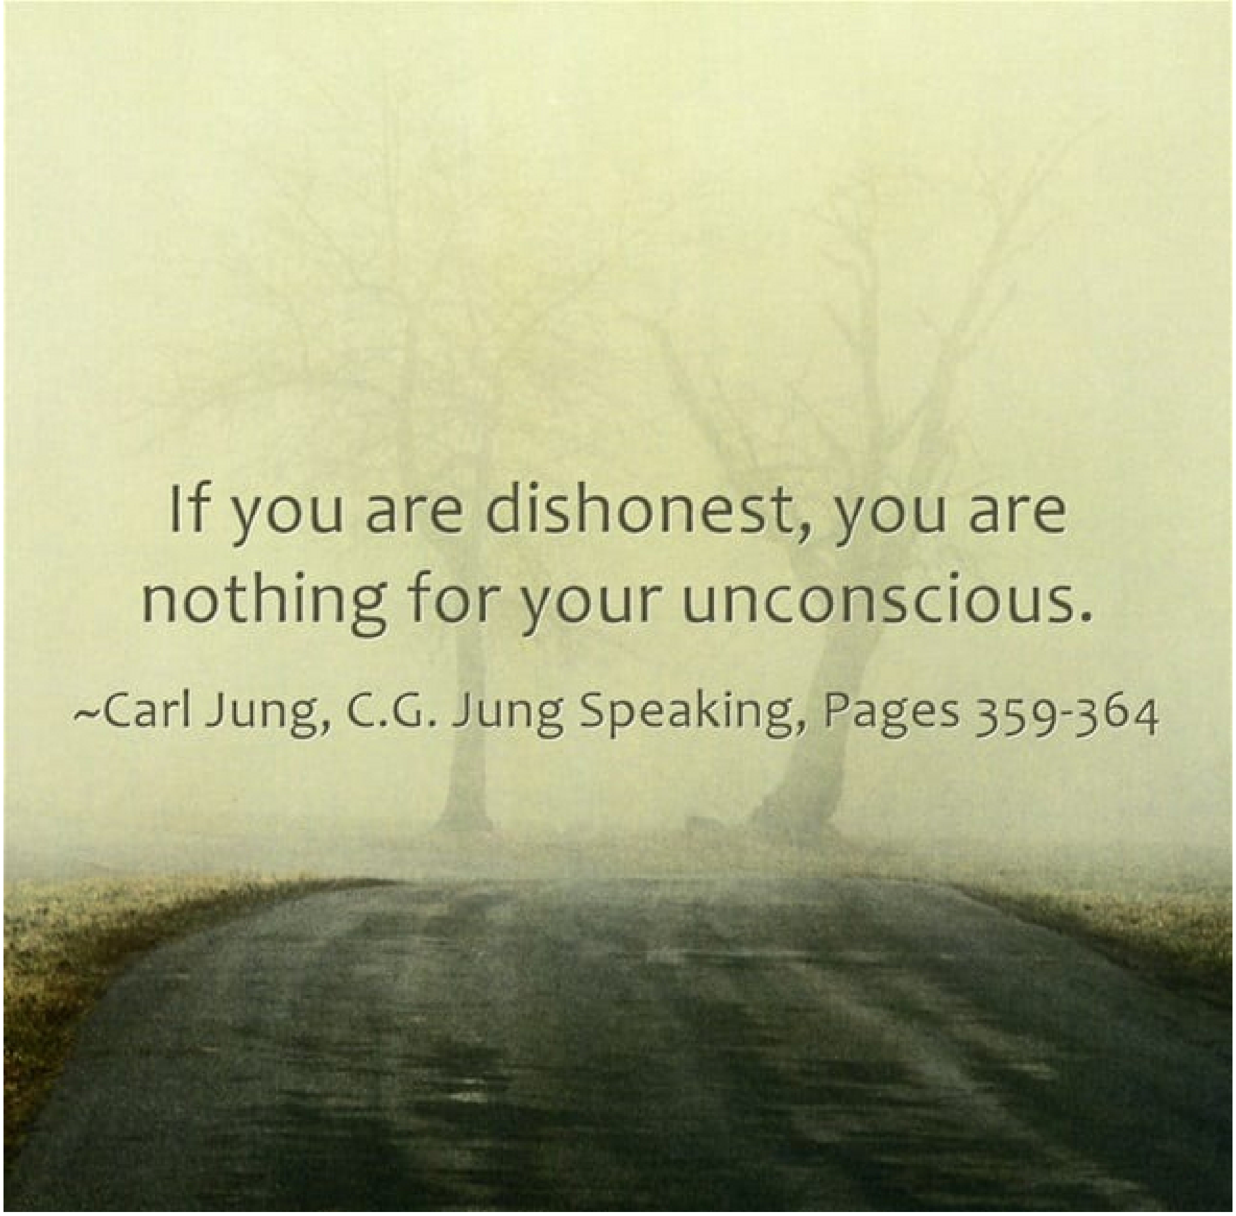
To clarify your mind you draw a mandala, and it is legitimate. Another says, "Oh, that’s how to do it!" and draws a mandala. And that is a mistake; that is cheating, because he is copying. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



Never say no or yes on principle. Say it only when you feel it is really yes. If it is really no, it is no. If you say yes for any outer reason, you are sunk.

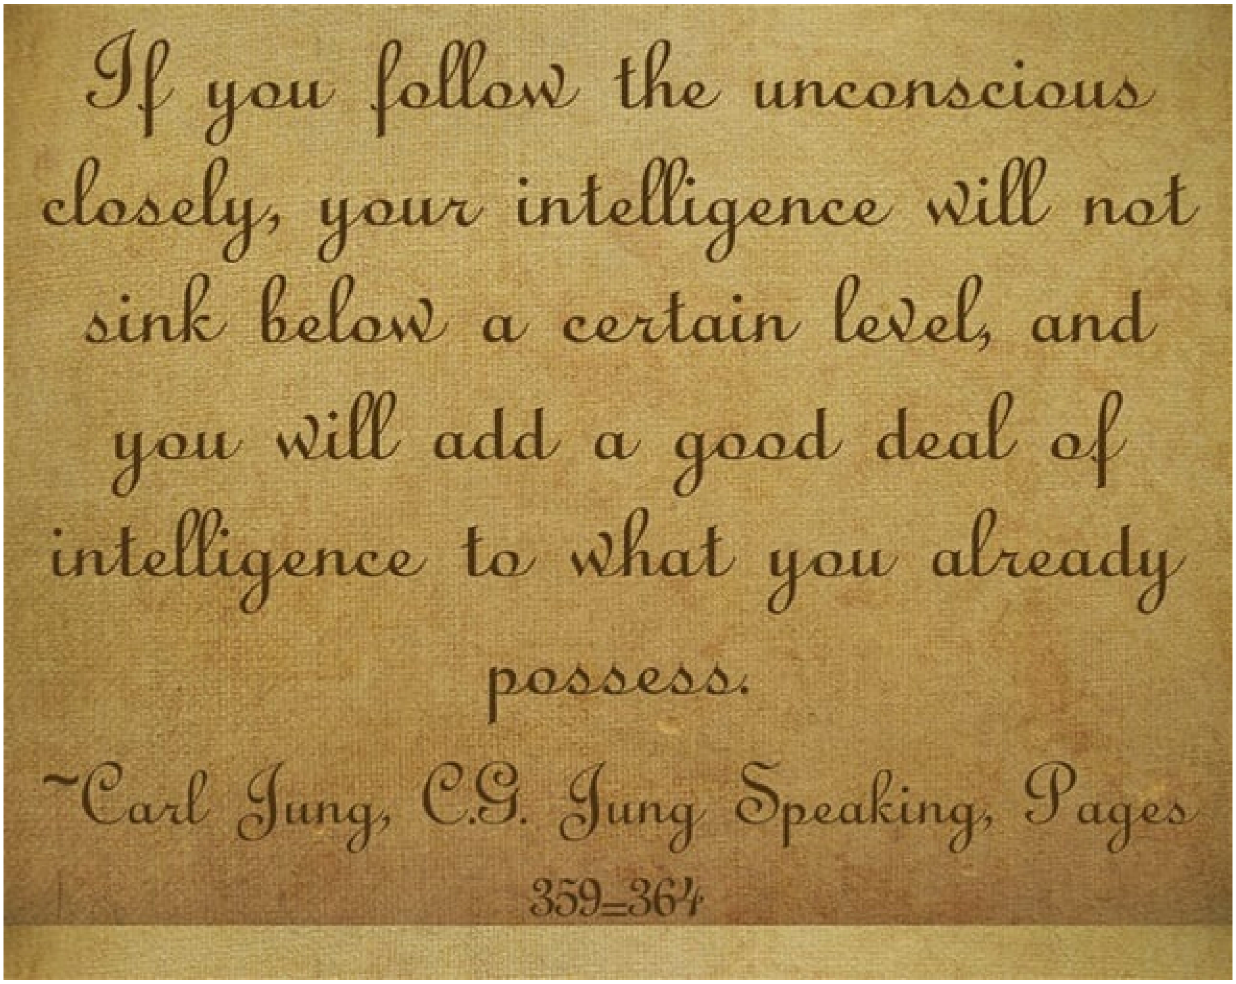
- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

Never say no or yes on principle. Say it only when you feel it is really yes. If it is really no, it is no. If you say yes for any outer reason, you are sunk. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



If you are dishonest, you are nothing for your unconscious.
~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

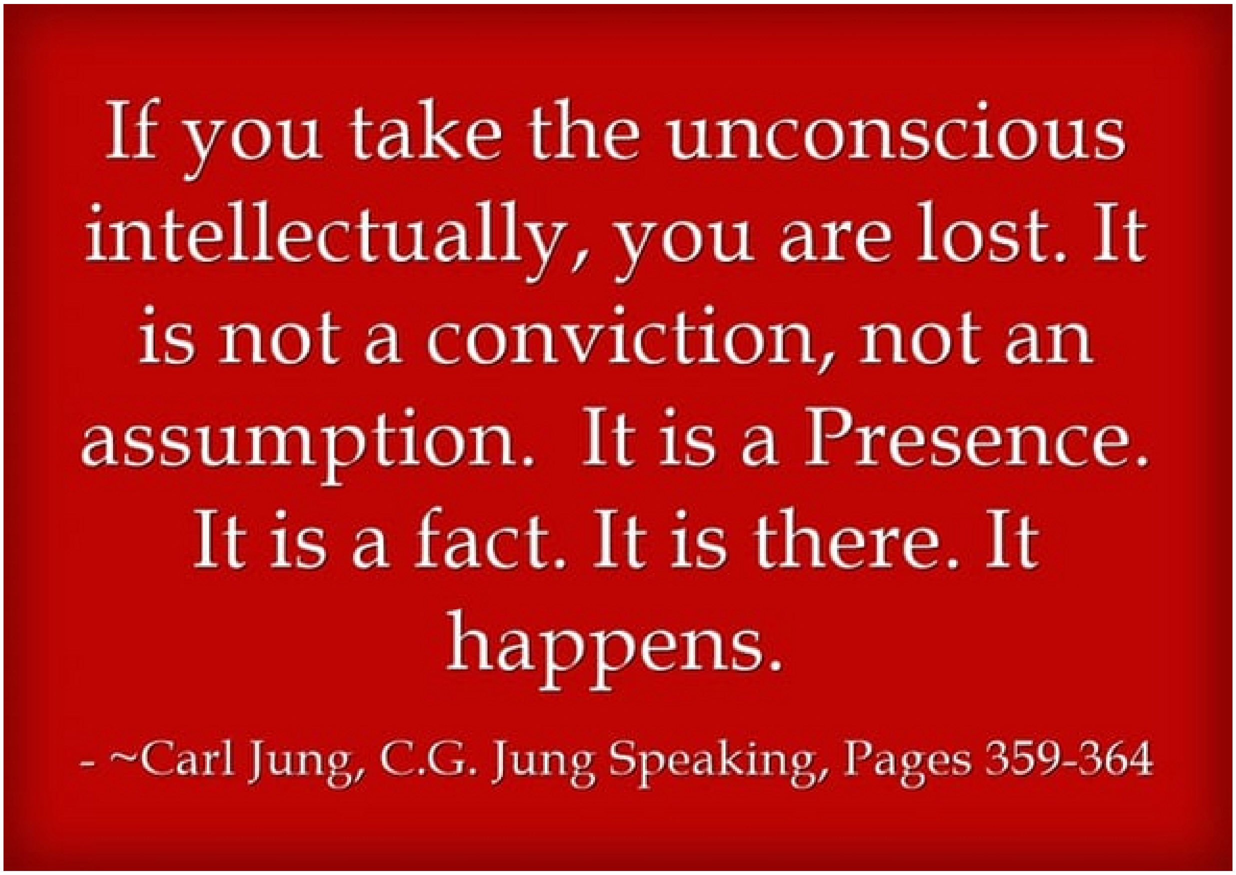
If you are dishonest, you are nothing for your unconscious. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



If you follow the unconscious closely, your intelligence will not sink below a certain level, and you will add a good deal of intelligence to what you already possess.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359=364

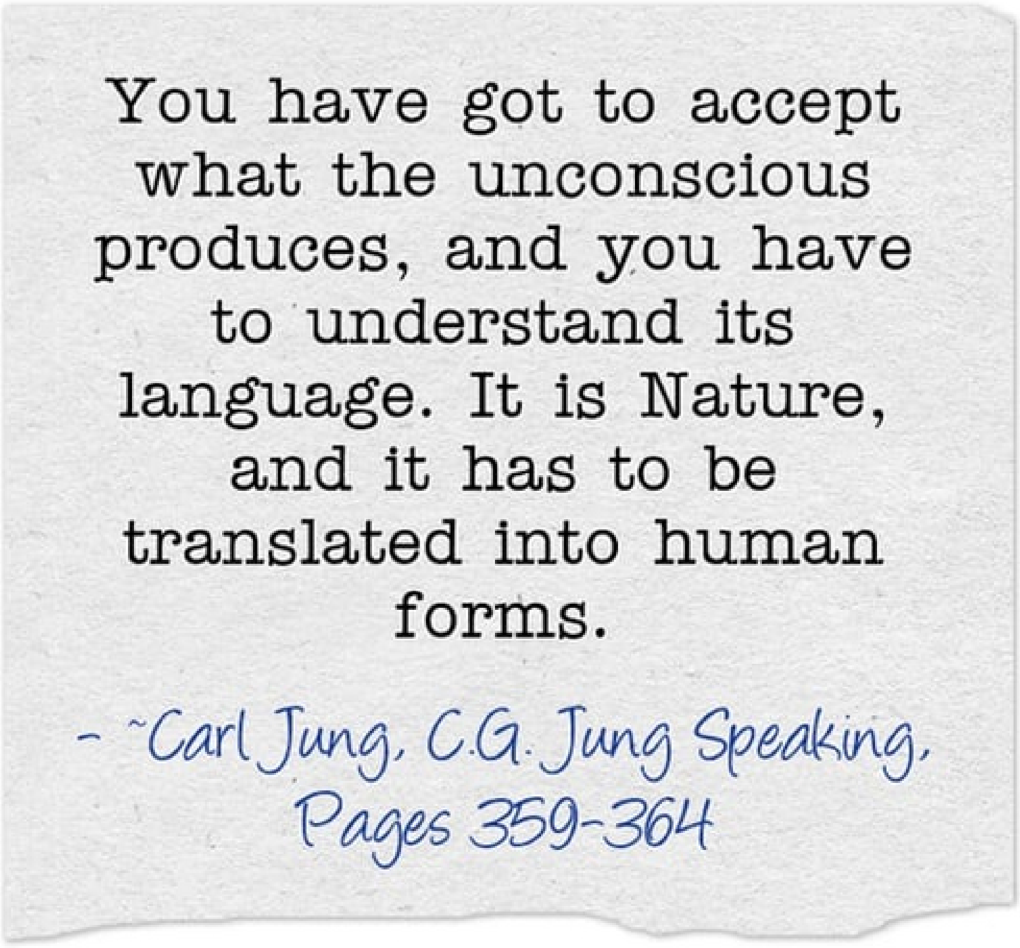
If you follow the unconscious closely, your intelligence will not sink below a certain level, and you will add a good deal of intelligence to what you already possess. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



If you take the unconscious intellectually, you are lost. It is not a conviction, not an assumption. It is a Presence. It is a fact. It is there. It happens.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

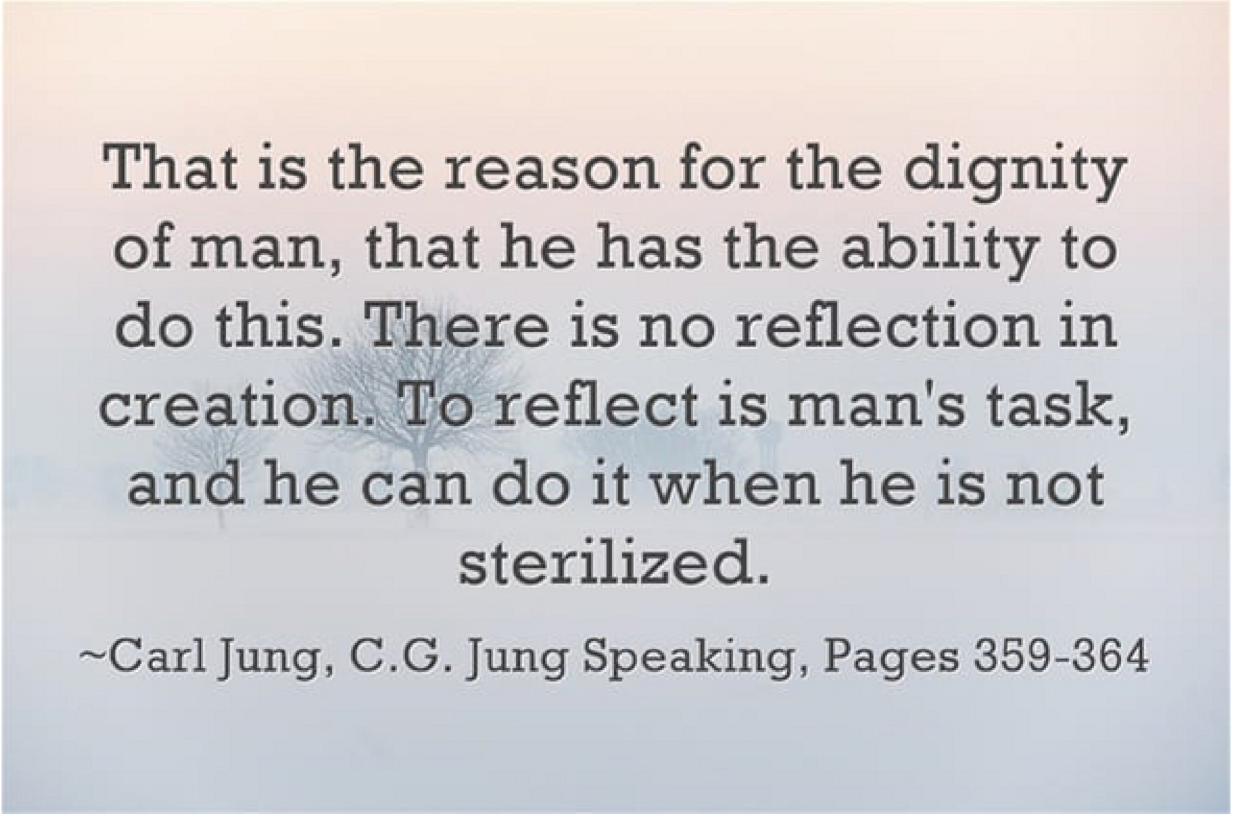
If you take the unconscious intellectually, you are lost. It is not a conviction, not an assumption. It is a Presence. It is a fact. It is there. It happens. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



You have got to accept what the unconscious produces, and you have to understand its language. It is Nature, and it has to be translated into human forms.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

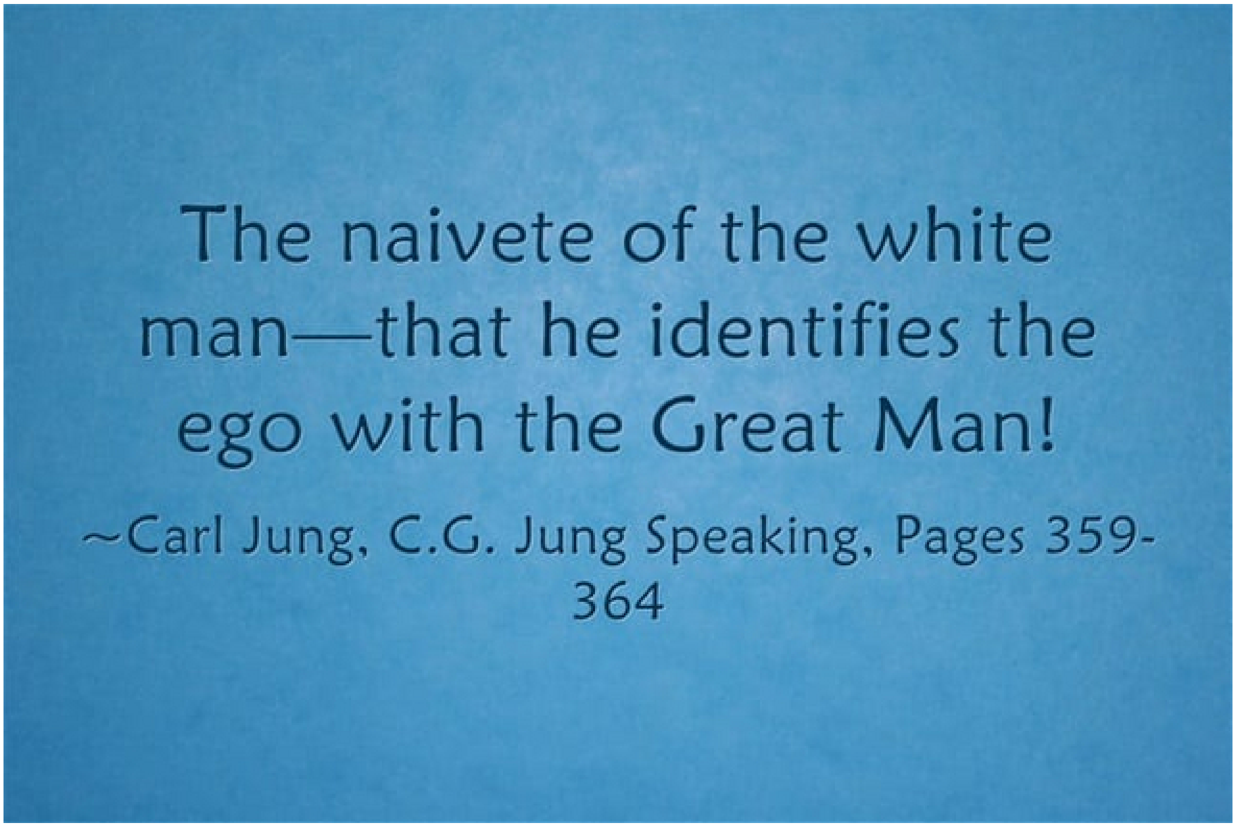
You have got to accept what the unconscious produces, and you have to understand its language. It is Nature, and it has to be translated into human forms. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



That is the reason for the dignity of man, that he has the ability to do this. There is no reflection in creation. To reflect is man's task, and he can do it when he is not sterilized.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

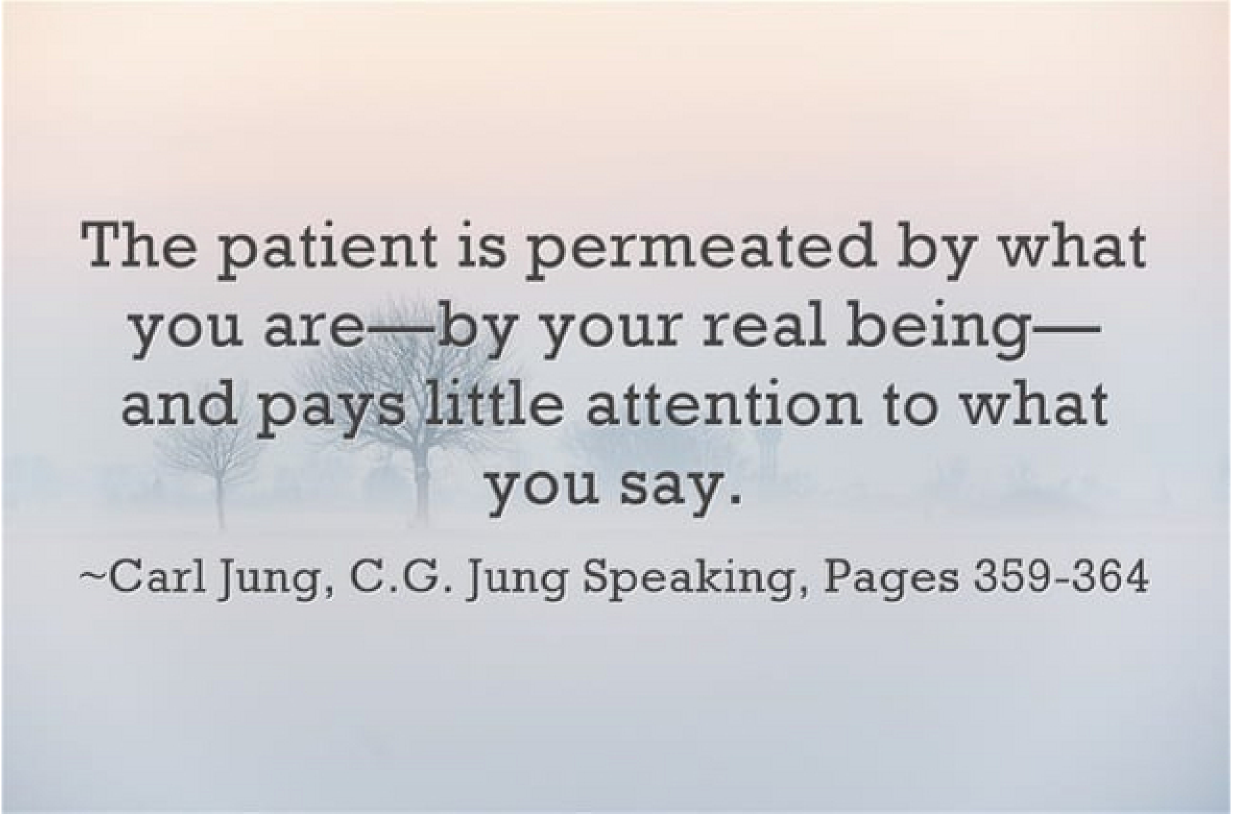
That is the reason for the dignity of man, that he has the ability to do this. There is no reflection in creation. To reflect is man’s task, and he can do it when he is not sterilized. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364



The naivete of the white man—that he identifies the ego with the Great Man!

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

The naivete of the white man—that he identifies the ego with the Great Man! Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

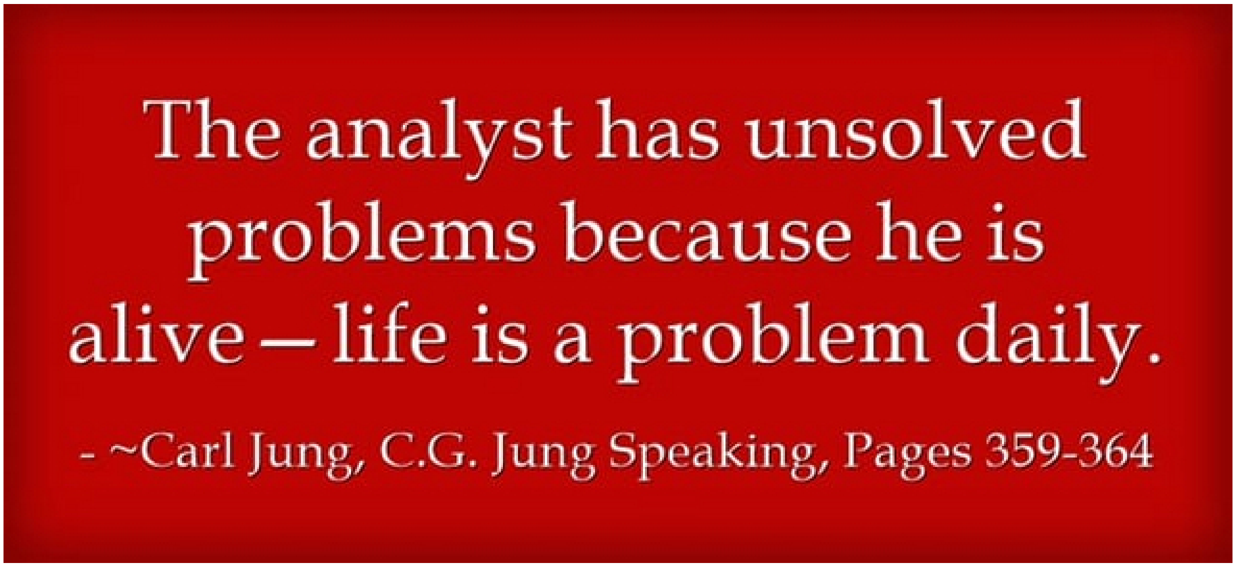


The patient is permeated by what you are—by your real being—and pays little attention to what you say.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

The patient is permeated by what you are—by your real being—and pays little attention to what you say. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

[25]

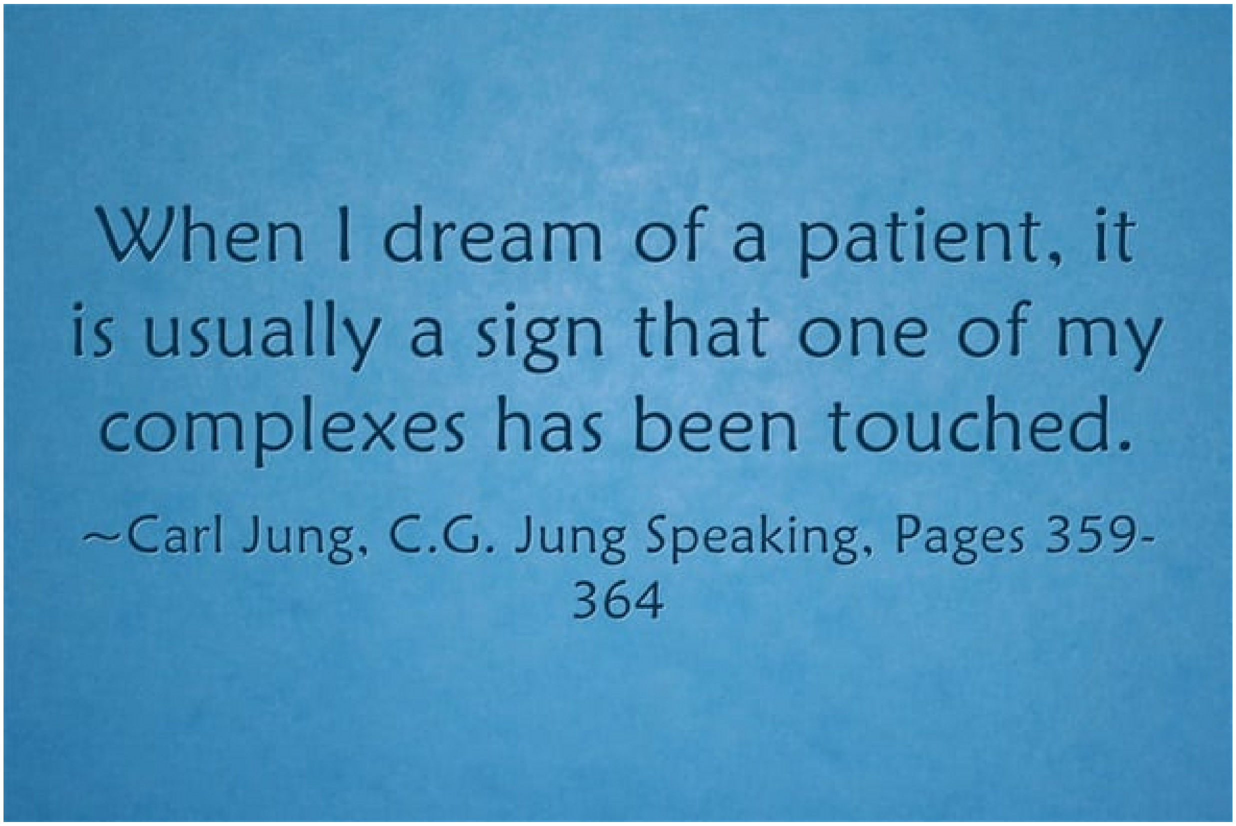


The analyst has unsolved problems because he is alive—life is a problem daily.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

The analyst has unsolved problems because he is alive—life is a problem daily. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

[26]



When I dream of a patient, it is usually a sign that one of my complexes has been touched.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 359-364

When I dream of a patient, it is usually a sign that one of my complexes has been touched. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 359-364

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/74a90-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/38e9b-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/c01e7-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/499c8-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/93d61-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/4e585-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/244e4-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/1f9e5-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/f2192-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/0b846-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/f252a-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/bd31d-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/e565e-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/e9945-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/03f1a-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/88c96-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/1fb57-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/5596e-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/422ee-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/8ea9e-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/6c197-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/58d7f-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/db8b7-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/42d5c-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/499d9-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/4cf81-zzz.jpg`

Emma Jung and “I don’t really know how I am summoning the courage…” (2019-03-08 13:31)

[1]

Dear Professor Freud, Kusnacht, 30 October [1911]

I don't really know how I am summoning the courage to write you this letter, but am certain it is not from presumption; rather I am following the voice of my unconscious, which I have so often found was right and which I hope will not lead me astray this time.

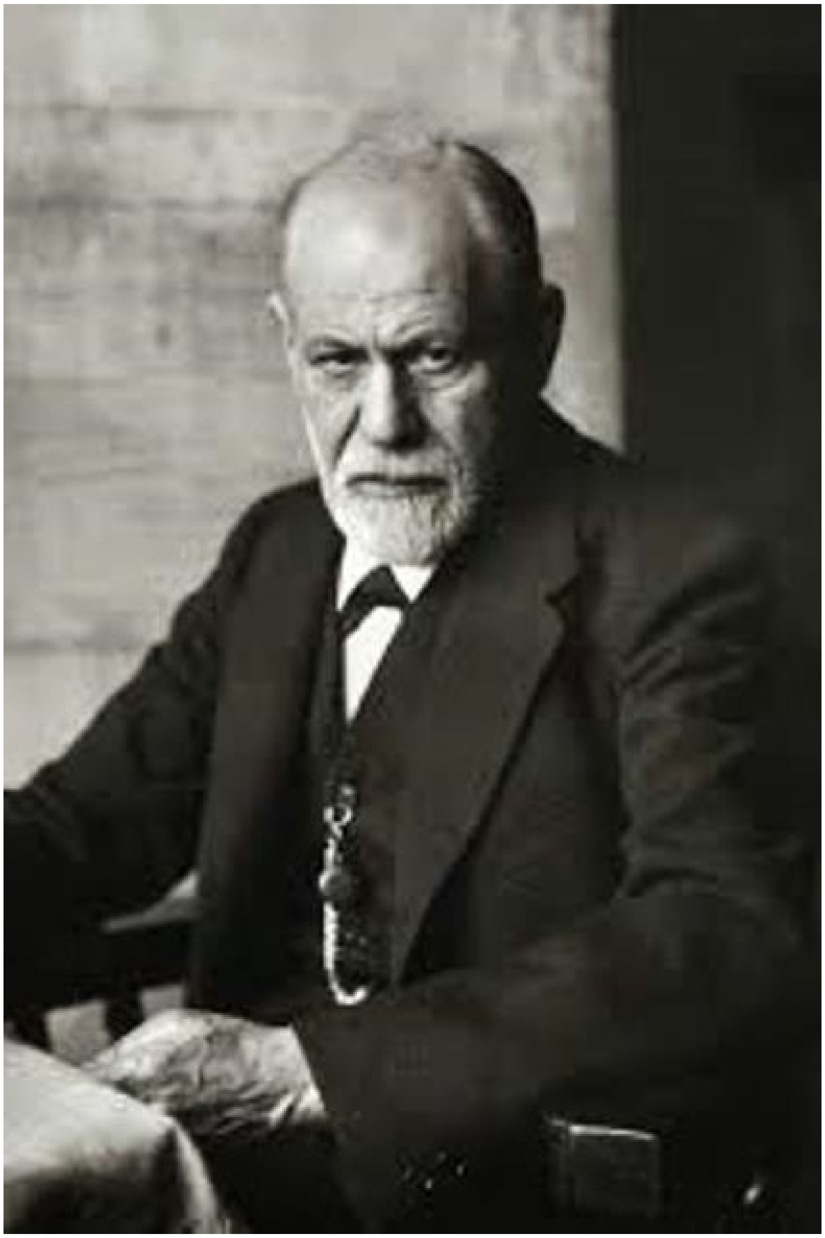
Since your visit I have been tormented by the idea that your relation with my husband is not altogether as it should be, and since it definitely ought not to be like this I want to try to do whatever is in my power.

I do not know whether I am deceiving myself when I think you are somehow not quite in agreement with "Transformations of Libido."

You didn't speak of it at all and yet I think it would do you both so much good if you got down to a thorough discussion of it. Or is it something else?

If so, please tell me what, dear Herr Professor; for I cannot bear to see you so resigned and I even believe that your resignation relates not only to your real children (it made a quite special impression on me when you spoke of it) but also to your spiritual sons; otherwise you would have so little need to be resigned.

[2]



Please do not take my action as officiousness and do not count me among the women who, you once told me, always spoil your friendships.

My husband naturally knows nothing of this letter and I beg you not to hold him responsible for it or to let any kind of unpleasant effects it may have on you glance off on him.

I hope nevertheless that you will not be angry with your very admiring

Emma Jung Freud/Jung Letters, Pages 452.453

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/0fa0f-2.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/295c7-1.jpg`

Emma Jung: "You were really annoyed by my letter, weren't you?" (2019-03-08 13:45)

From Emma Jung

Dear Professor Freud, Kiisnacht, 14 November [1911]

You were really annoyed by my letter, weren't you? I was too, and now I am cured of my megalomania and am wondering why the devil the unconscious had to make you, of all people, the victim of this madness.

And here I must confess, very reluctantly, that you are right: my last letter, specially the tone of it, was really directed to the father-imago, which should of course be faced without fear.

This thought never entered my head; I thought that, knowing the transference side of my father-attitude towards you, it would all be quite clear and do me no harm.

After I had thought so long before writing to you and had, so I believed, fully understood my own motives, the unconscious has now played another trick on me, with particular finesse: for you can imagine how delighted I am to have made a fool of myself in front of you.

I can only pray and hope that your judgment will not prove too severe.

There is one thing, however, I must vigorously defend myself against, and that is the way you take my "amiable carpings," as you call them.

Firstly I do not mean at all that Carl should set no store by your opinion; it goes without saying that one recognizes an authority, and if one cannot it is only a sign of over-compensated insecurity.

So that is not what I mean, it was only the rest of it that made him anxious and uncertain which seemed superfluous to Inc.

Truth to tell, I must confess that I have missed" the mark here too, without suspecting it.

Lately Carl has been analysing his attitude to his work and has discovered some resistances to it.

I had connected these misgivings about Part II with his constant worry over what you would say about it, etc.

It seemed out of the question that he could have resistances to his own work; but now it appears that this fear of your opinion was only a pretext for not going on with the self-analysis which this work in fact means, I realize that I have thus projected something from my immediate neighbourhood into distant Vienna and am vexed that it is always the nearest thing that one sees worst.

You have also completely misunderstood my admittedly uncalled-for meddling in your family affairs.

Truthfully I didn’t mean to cast a shadow on your children.

I know they have turned out well and have never doubted it in the least.

I hope you don’t seriously believe that I wanted to say they were "doomed to be degenerate."

I have written nothing that could even remotely mean anything of the sort.

I know that with your children it is a matter of physical illnesses, but just wanted to raise the question whether these physical symptoms might not be somehow psychically conditioned, so that there might for instance be a reduced power of resistance.

Since I have made some very astonishing discoveries in myself in this respect and do not consider myself excessively degenerate or markedly hysterical, I thought similar phenomena possible with other people too.

I shall be grateful for enlightenment.

That you should think it worthwhile to discuss your most personal affairs with me is something for which I thank you with all my heart.

What you tell me sounds so convincing that I simply have to believe it, although much in me struggles against it.

But I must admit that you have the experience and I do not, consequently I am unable to make any convincing rejoinders.

You are quite right about one thing, though: despite everything and everybody, the whole affair is only a blessing in clumsy disguise which I beg you to forgive.

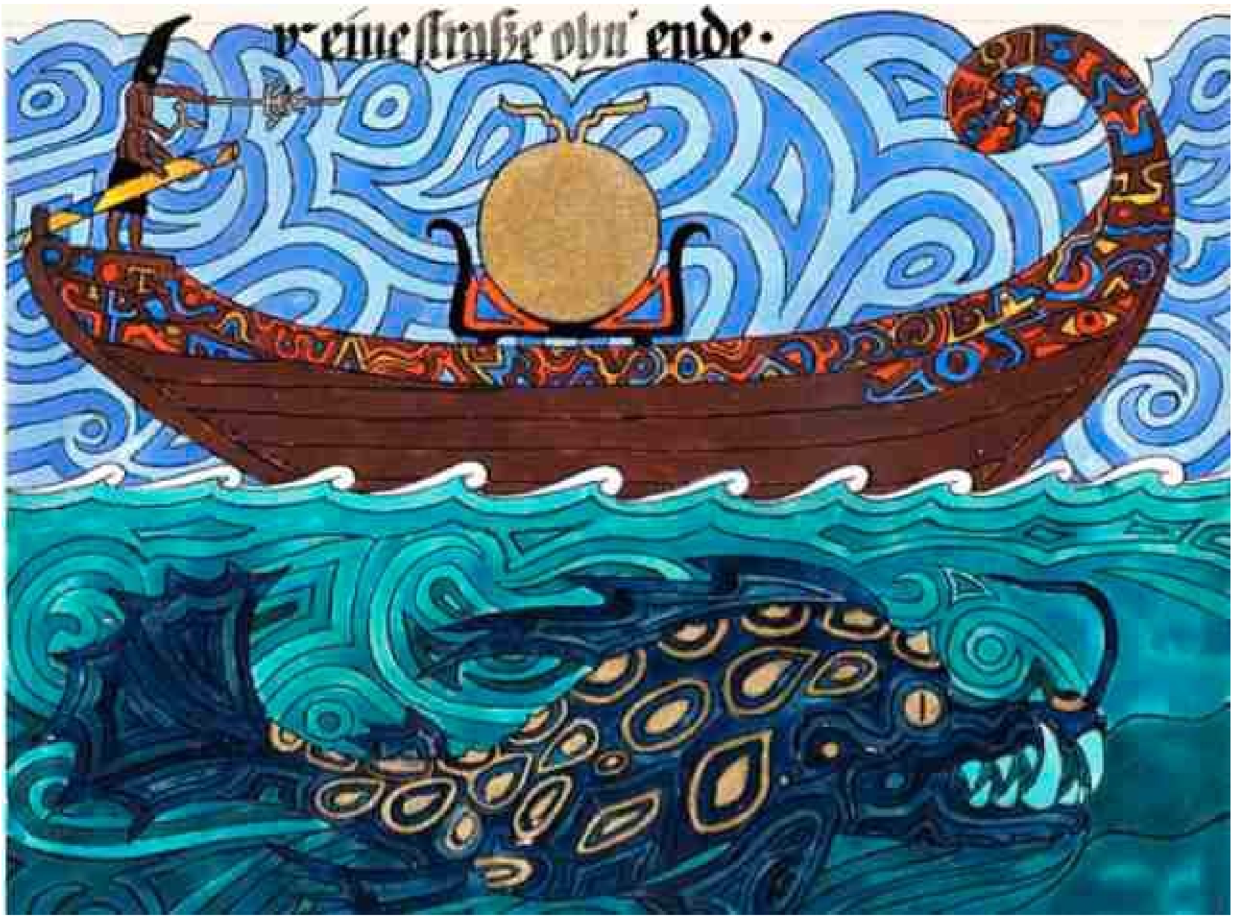
Please write nothing of this to Carl; things are going badly enough with him as it is.

Emma Jung

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/8d675-2.jpg`

Carl Jung: A man’s lifework is like a ship he has built and equipped himself (2019-03-08 14:48)

[1]



v: eine ſtraße ohn' ende·

To B. von Fischer 11 July 160

Please accept my most cordial thanks for your kind birthday letter, which it was both an honour and a pleasure to receive.

I am particularly sensible of the appreciative words you have written on my life's work, for they are a melody which one does not often hear in our dear Fatherland.

A man's lifework is like a ship he has built and equipped himself, launched down the ramp and entrusted to the sea, steered towards a distant goal and then left like a passenger, in order to sit on the shore and gaze after it till it is out of sight.

Like all three-dimensional things it gradually sinks below the horizon. What remains is what has been.
I am, Sir,

respectfully and gratefully yours,

C.G. Jung Letters Vol. II, Page 577

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5b37b-12bship.jpg`

Carl Jung: "...thanks for the wonderful, spirit-infused gift..." (2019-03-08 14:51)

Happy Birthday
Carl Jung!
JULY 26

To Cornelia Brunner

Dear Frau Prasidentin, 2 August 1960

I still owe you my express thanks for the wonderful, spirit-infused gift that flew into the house on my birthday.

You have endowed this birthday of mine with incredible generosity, so that I stand there quite ashamed beside all the magnificence, with the painful feeling that I can no longer give the Club what would otherwise be given so willingly.

I have to adapt myself with considerable effort to the role of recipient in which I have been living for nearly fifteen years.

In this respect the wine is a great tonic, and I am very grateful for the bountiful selection. Please give my best thanks to the Club members as well!
Very sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 577-578

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f12fc-12bbirthday.jpg`

Carl Jung: Consider please that in the year 1960 we are still far from being out of the primitive woods.

(2019-03-08 14:57)

[1]

© Fiona Watson/Survival

To E . L. Grant Watson

Dear Watson, 8 August 1960

Thank you very much for the amazing flood of material you have inundated me with. You know, an 85-year-old ruin of a formerly capable man cannot live up to it any more. Have mercy on us!

The interesting pictures of labyrinths are known to me.

They have presumably the fundamental significance of mandalas, i.e., places of refuge, sanctuary, rebirth, renewal, initiation, etc. like the Neolithic stone-circles.

You find very good comparative material in the book by John Layard: Stone Men of Malekula (London, 1942).

It is clear that such formations, particularly under primitive circumstances, are more of anatomical than geometrical nature, i.e., organic cavities like uterus or brain or cranium, very much later also heart.

Please don’t mix me up with your unconscious, which projects itself into everything obscure and unreasonable.

It is exceedingly difficult to find out how that unconscious looks which is really in the object. First of all one has to consider every kind of impression as of subjective origin.

Only then can one hope to be able to discover what belongs to oneself and what is objectively universal .

If you don’t discriminate enough I am on the best way to becoming a real Museum of Metaphysical Monsters. Consider please that in the year 1960 we are still far from being out of the primitive woods.

There are very few beings yet capable of making a difference between mental image and the thing itself.

This primitivity is poisoning our human world and is so dense a mist that very few people have discovered its existence yet.

My richly celebrated 85th birthday has left me a wreck, and this miserable summer we enjoy does not exactly support one’s optimism, not to speak of the political situation of the world which reminds me of the tower of Babel and its fate.

I think of the German poet Holderlin, one of Goethe’s contemporaries:

"But we are fated
To find no foothold, no rest, And suffering mortals Dwindle and fall Headlong from one Hour to the next, Hurled like water From ledge to ledge Downward for years to the vague abyss."

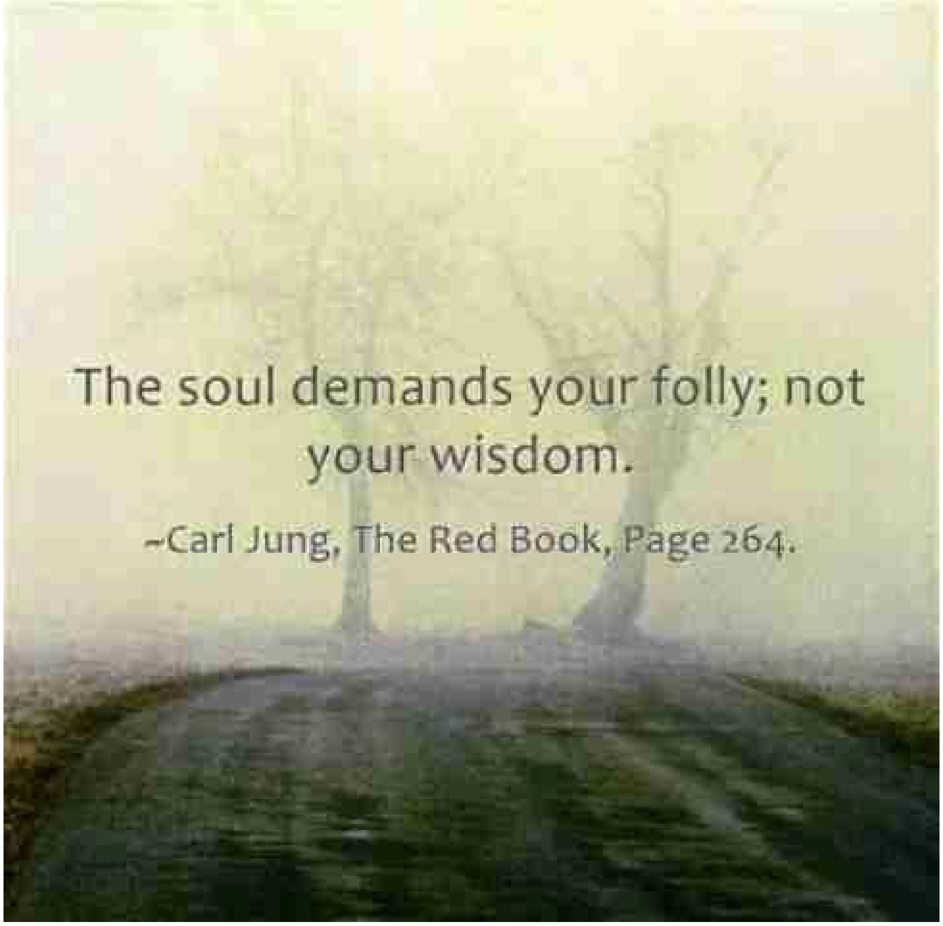
Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 578-579

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/880a3-12barrows.jpg`

Carl Jung: I had to follow the ineradicable foolishness which furnishes the steps to true wisdom. (2019-03-08 15:12)

[1]



The soul demands your folly; not your wisdom.
~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 264.

To the Earl of Sandwich

Dear Lord Sandwich, 10 August 1960

It was a great pleasure to receive your kind letter and congratulations on my 85th birthday.

It is indeed quite a number of years since our interview in 1938, when I received an Honorary Degree at Oxford, while lecturing there at a Congress of Psychotherapists.

It was on the eve of war and I remember the air filled with forebodings and anxious anticipations.

I remember vividly looking at the delightful buildings and lawns · of the Universitas Oxonensis as if seeing them for the first and last time.

Although Oxford has been spared barbarous destruction I had seen it for the first and last time.

I have not been there again although I always dreamt and hoped to delve more deeply into the treasures of alchemistic manuscripts at the Bodleian.

Fate has decreed otherwise.

I had to follow the ineradicable foolishness which furnishes the steps to true wisdom.

Since man's nature is temperamentally set against wisdom, it is incumbent upon us to pay its price by what seems foolish to us.

Old age is only half as funny as one is inclined to think.

It is at all events the gradual breaking down of the bodily machine, with which foolishness identifies ourselves.

It is indeed a major effort-the magnum opus in fact-to escape in time from the narrowness of its embrace and to liberate our mind to the vision of the immensity of the world, of which we form an infinitesimal part.

In spite of the enormity of our scientific cognition we are yet hardly at the bottom of the ladder, but we are at least so far that we are able to recognize the smallness of our knowledge.

The older I grow the more impressed I am by the frailty and uncertainty of our understanding, and all the more I take recourse to the simplicity of immediate experience so as not to lose contact with the essentials, namely the dominants which rule human existence throughout the millenniums.

There are two sciences in our days which are at immediate grips with the basic problems: nuclear physics and the psychology of the unconscious.

There things begin to look really tough, as those who have an inkling of understanding of the one thing are singularly incapable of grasping the other thing; and here, so it looks, the great confusion of languages begins, which once already has destroyed a tower of Babel.

I am trying to hold those two worlds together as long as my machinery allows the effort, but it seems to be a condition which is desperately similar to that of the political world, the solution of which nobody yet can foresee.

It is quite possible that we look at the world from the wrong side and that we might find the right answer by changing our point of view and looking at it from the other side, i.e., not from outside, but from inside.

Thanking you once more for your kind letter,

I remain, dear Lord Sandwich,

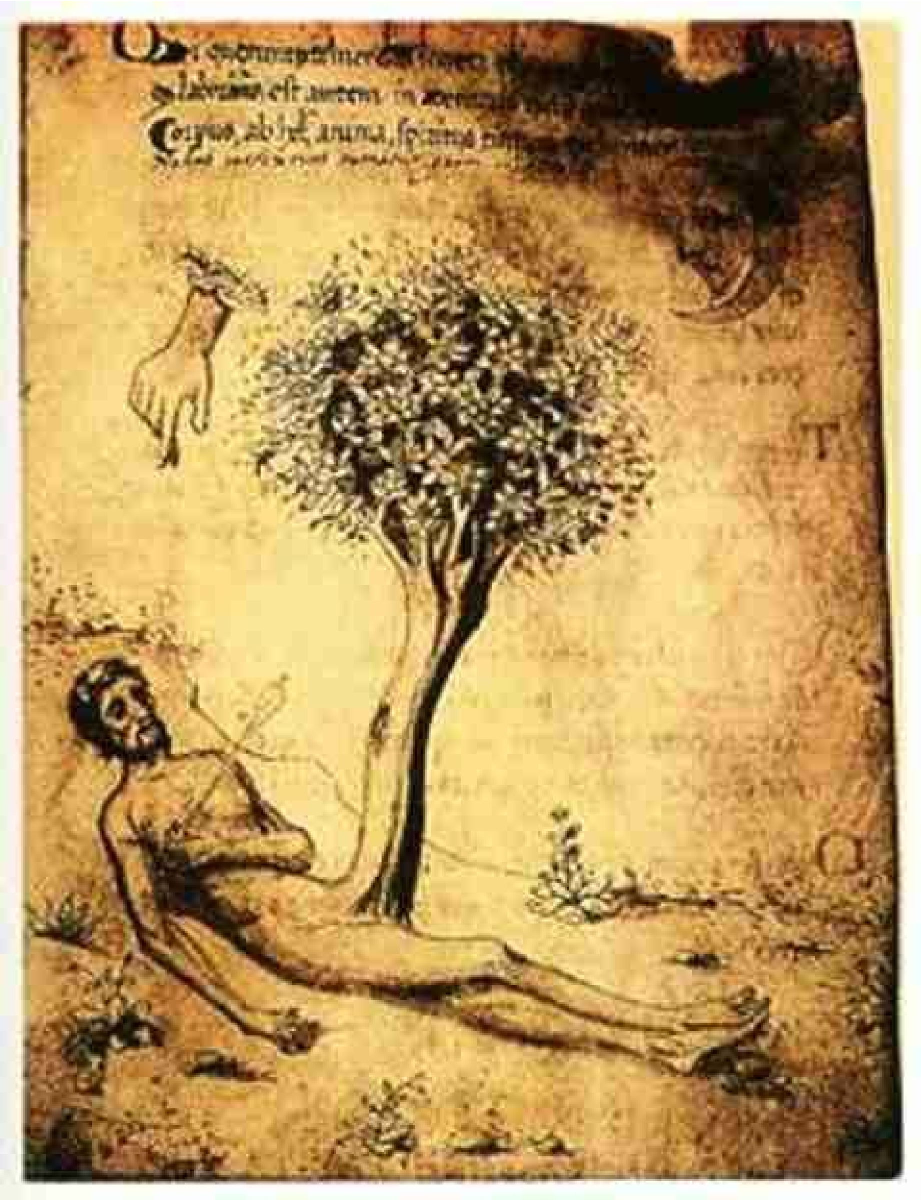
Yours very sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 579-580

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8262f-12bfollow.jpg`

Carl Jung on the “Living Mystery of Life.” (2019-03-08 15:18)

[1]



To the Mother Prioress of a Contemplative Order Dear Mother Prioress, 12 August 1960

Thank you ever so much for your letter with all its information about Fr. Victor’s end.

I am most grateful to you for sending me the picture you mention.

The living mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words and depleted by arguments.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 581

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/53e0b-12blife.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 16 (2019-03-08 17:00)

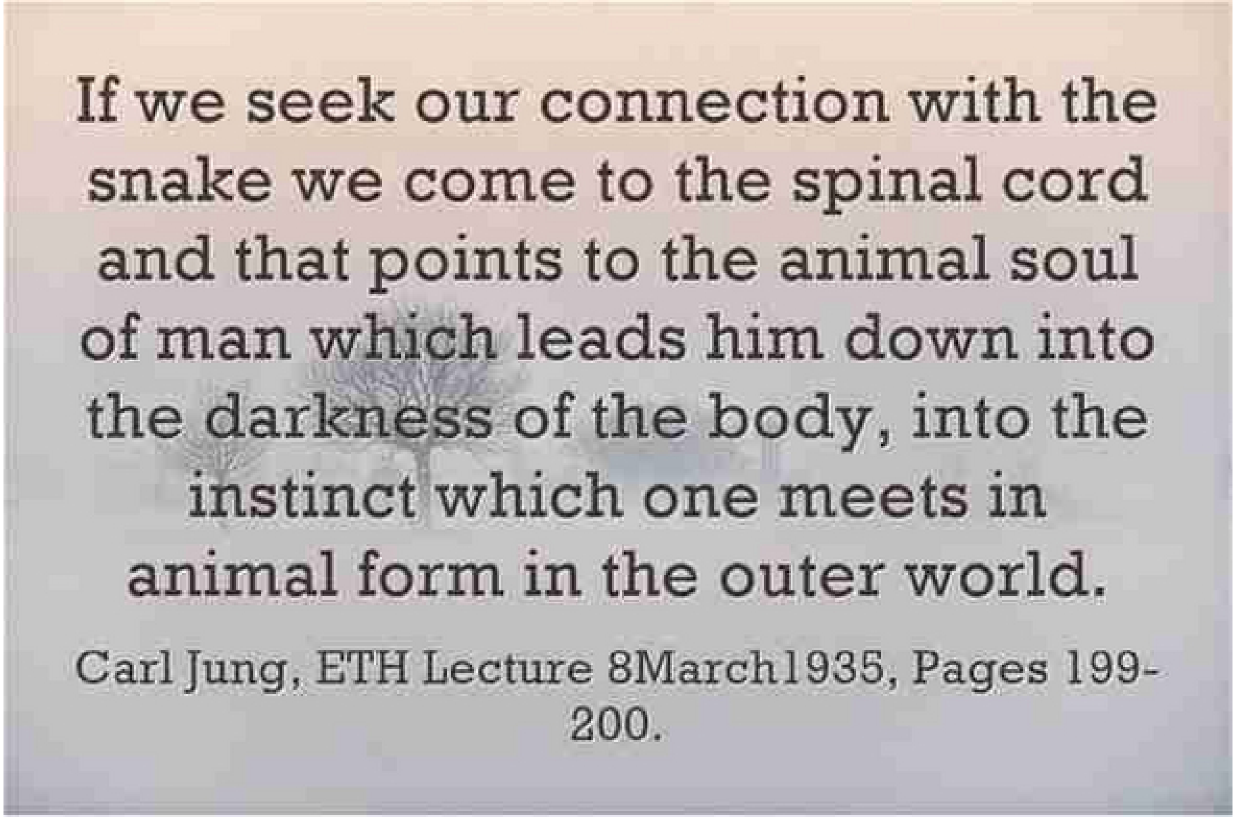
[1]

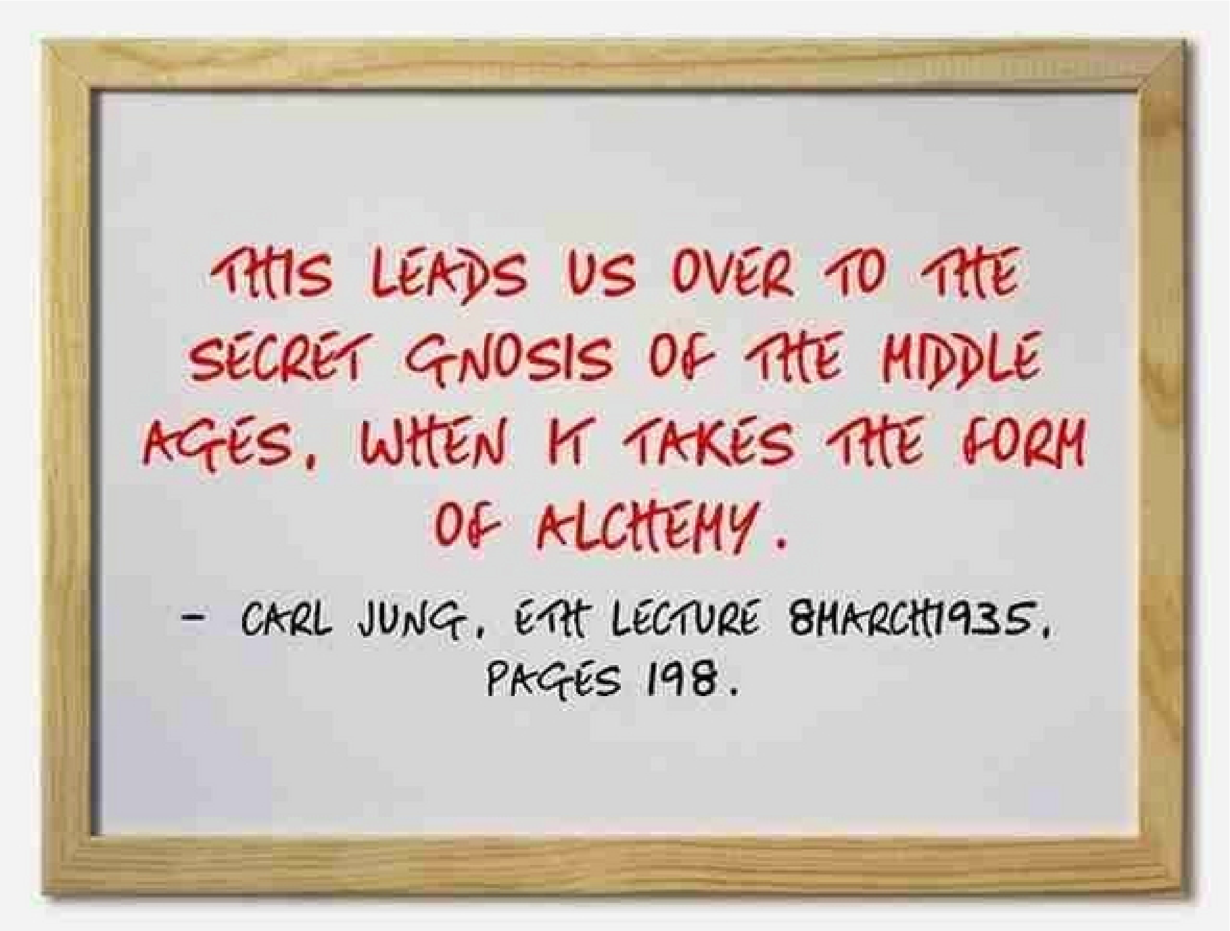


If we seek our connection with the snake we come to the spinal cord and that points to the animal soul of man which leads him down into the darkness of the body, into the instinct which one meets in animal form in the outer world.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199-200.

If we seek our connection with the snake we come to the spinal cord and that points to the animal soul of man which leads him down into the darkness of the body, into the instinct which one meets in animal form in the outer world.

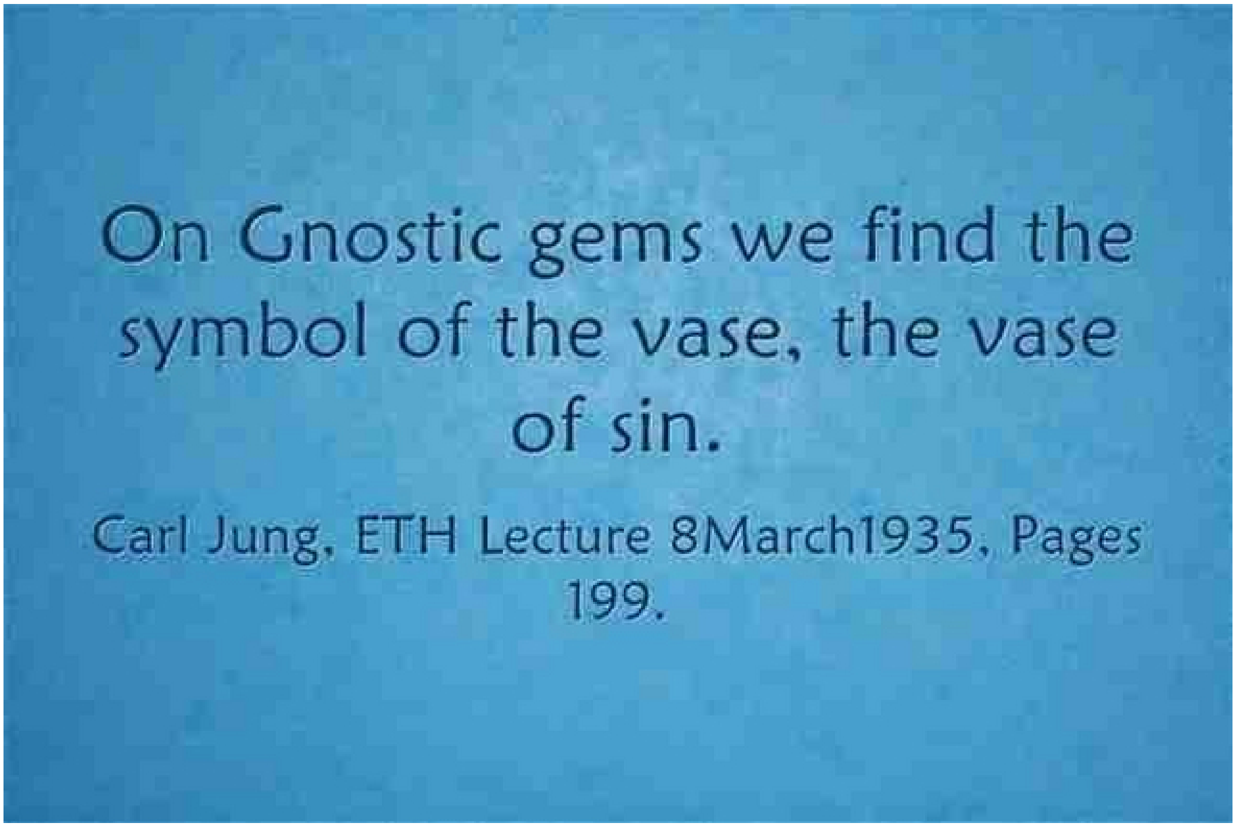
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199-200.



THIS LEADS US OVER TO THE SECRET GNOSIS OF THE MIDDLE AGES, WHEN IT TAKES THE FORM OF ALCHEMY.

- CARL JUNG, ETH LECTURE 8MARCH1935, PAGES 198.

This leads us over to the secret gnosis of the Middle Ages, when it takes the form of alchemy. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 198

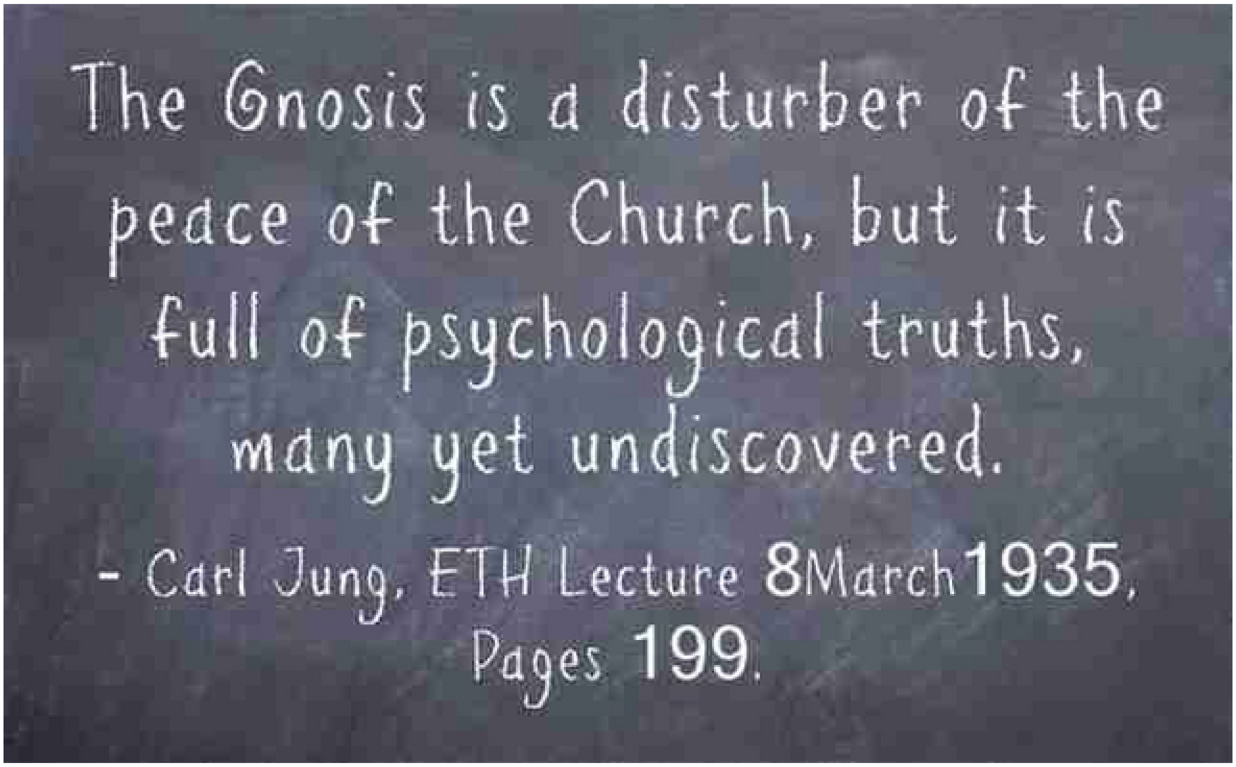


On Gnostic gems we find the symbol of the vase, the vase of sin.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199.

On Gnostic gems we find the symbol of the vase, the vase of sin. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199.

[4]

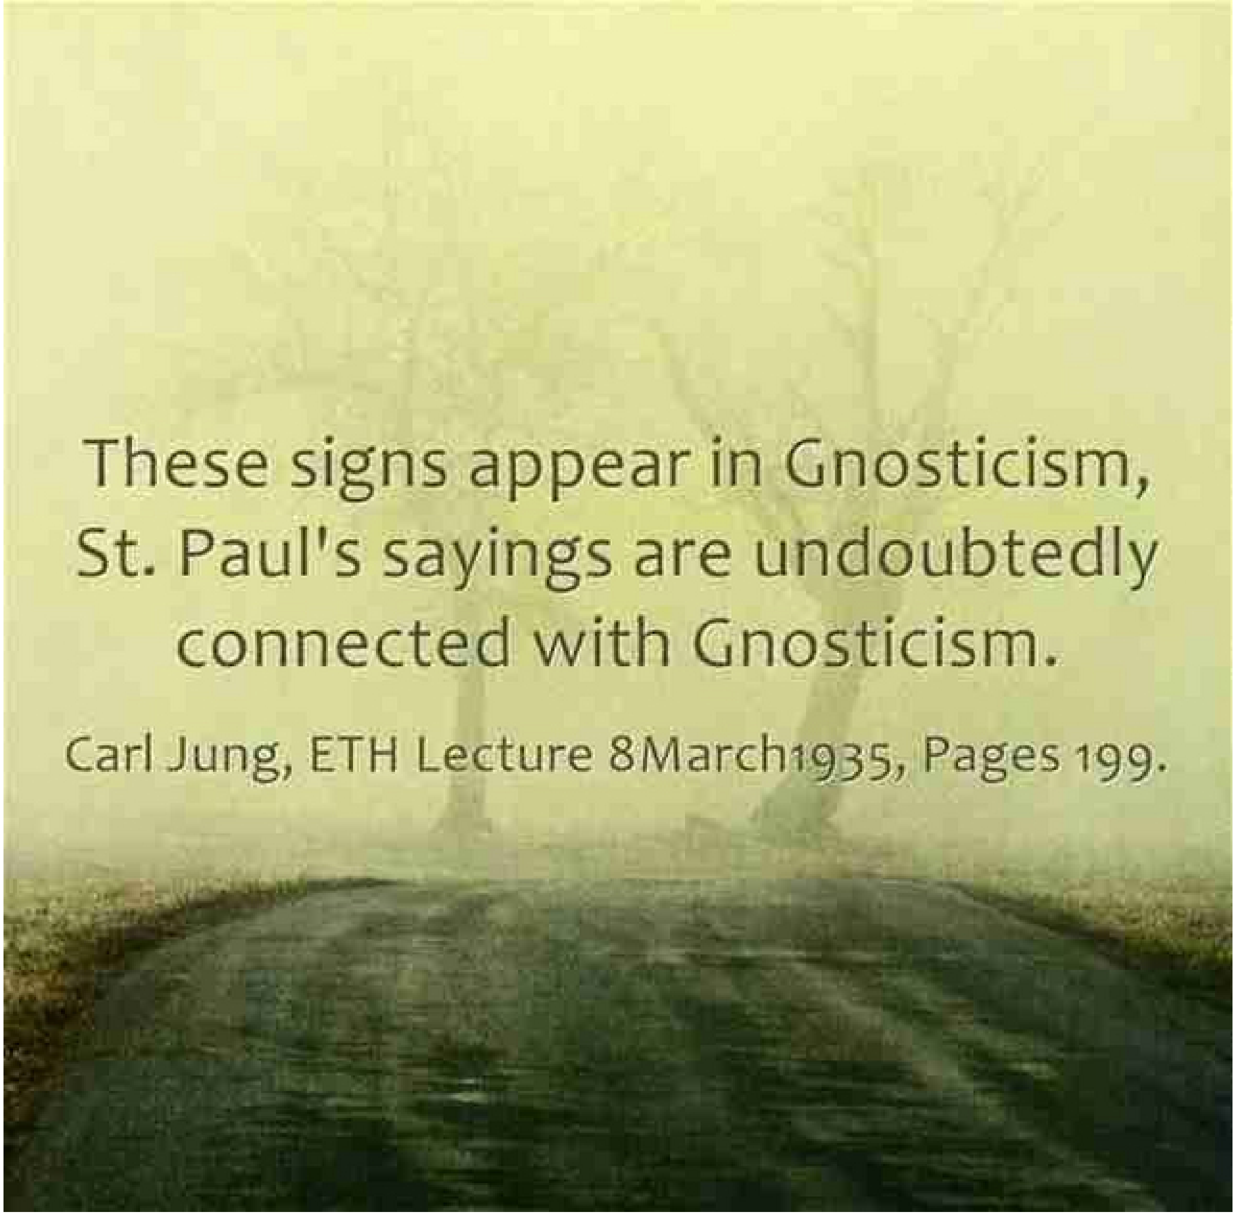


The Gnosis is a disturber of the peace of the Church, but it is full of psychological truths, many yet undiscovered.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199.

The Gnosis is a disturber of the peace of the Church, but it is full of psychological truths, many yet undiscovered. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199

[5]

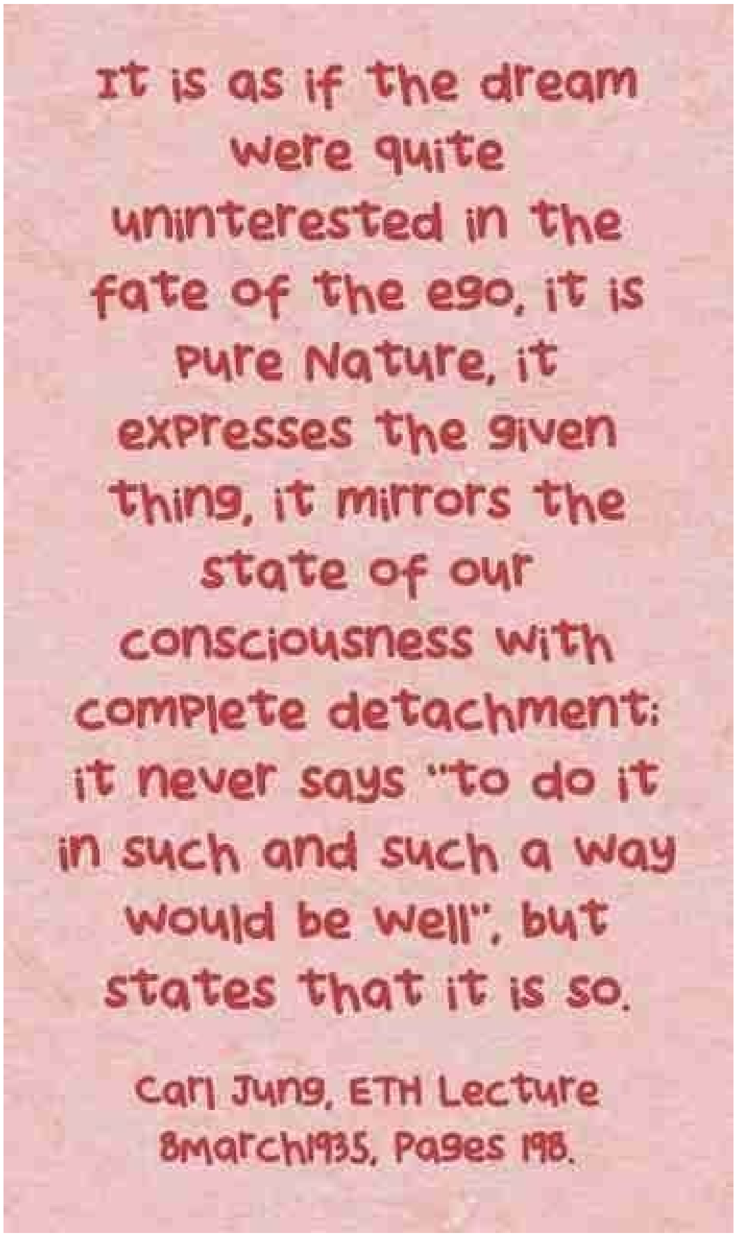


These signs appear in Gnosticism, St. Paul's sayings are undoubtedly connected with Gnosticism.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199.

These signs appear in Gnosticism, St. Paul’s sayings are undoubtedly connected with Gnosticism.   Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199.

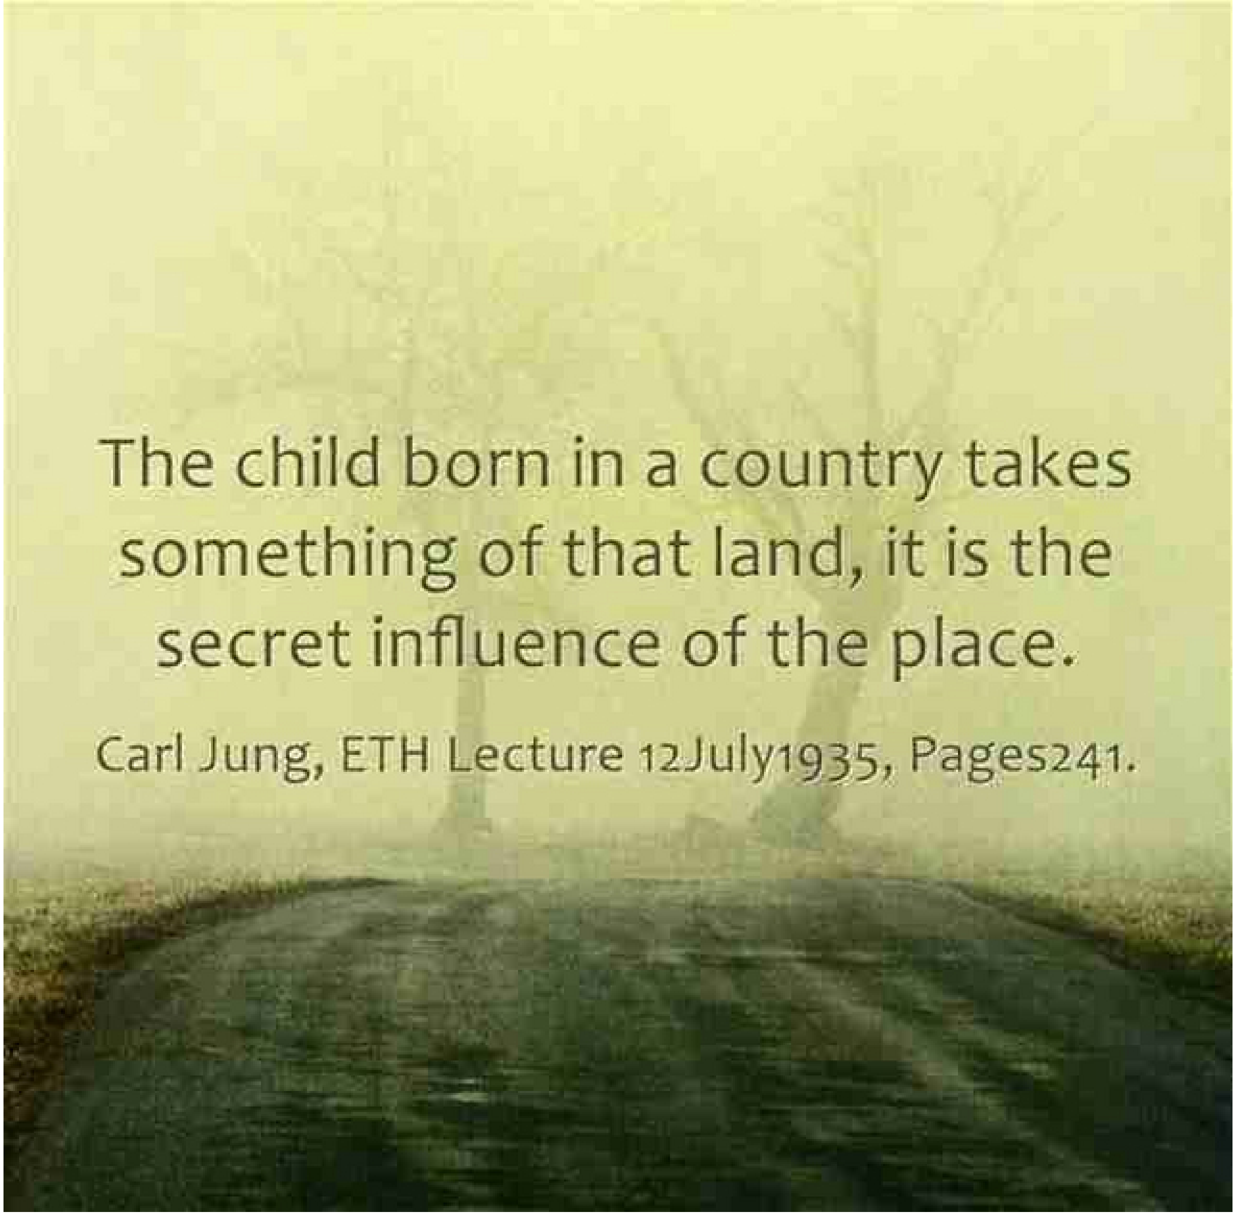
[6]



It is as if the dream were quite uninterested in the fate of the ego, it is pure Nature, it expresses the given thing, it mirrors the state of our consciousness with complete detachment: it never says "to do it in such and such a way would be well", but states that it is so.

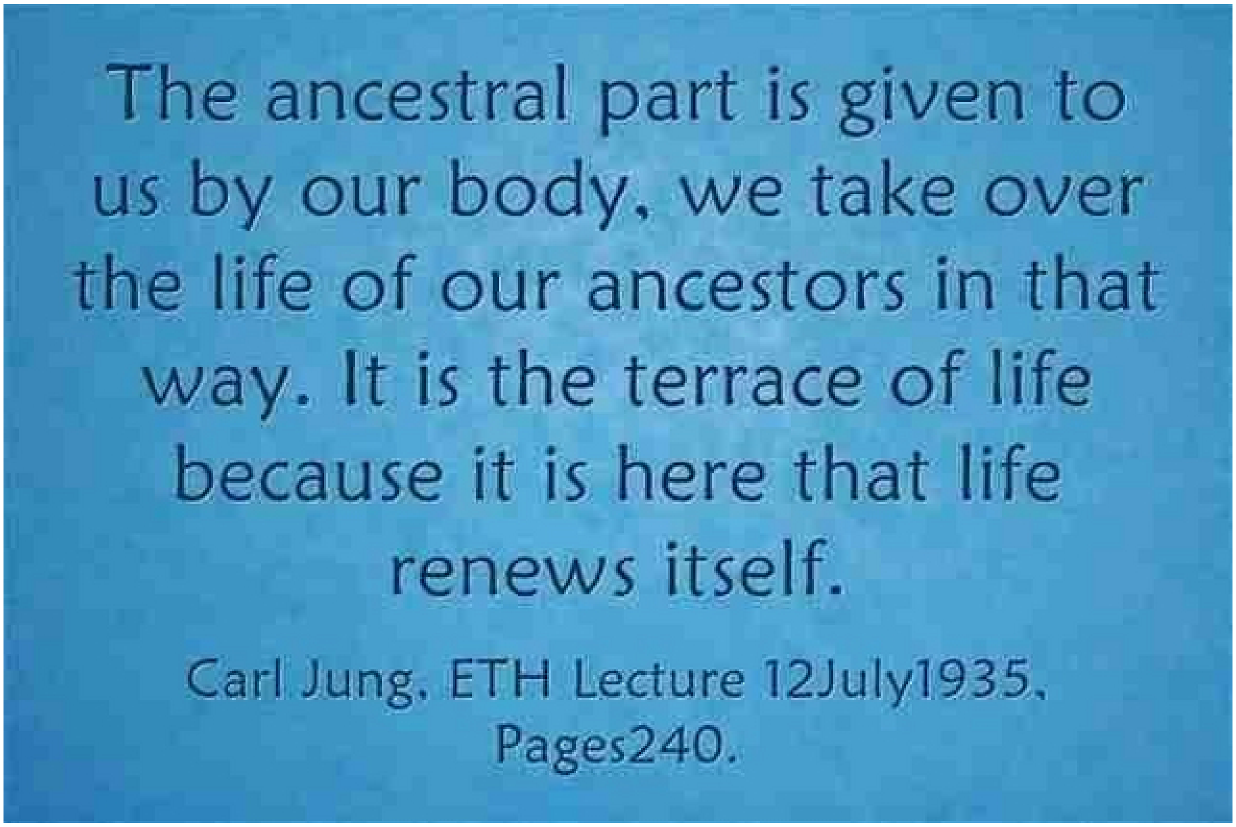
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 198.

It is as if the dream were quite uninterested in the fate of the ego, it is pure Nature, it expresses the given thing, it mirrors the state of our consciousness with complete detachment; it never says "to do it in such and such a way would be well", but states that it is so. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 198.



The child born in a country takes something of that land, it is the secret influence of the place.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12July1935, Pages241.

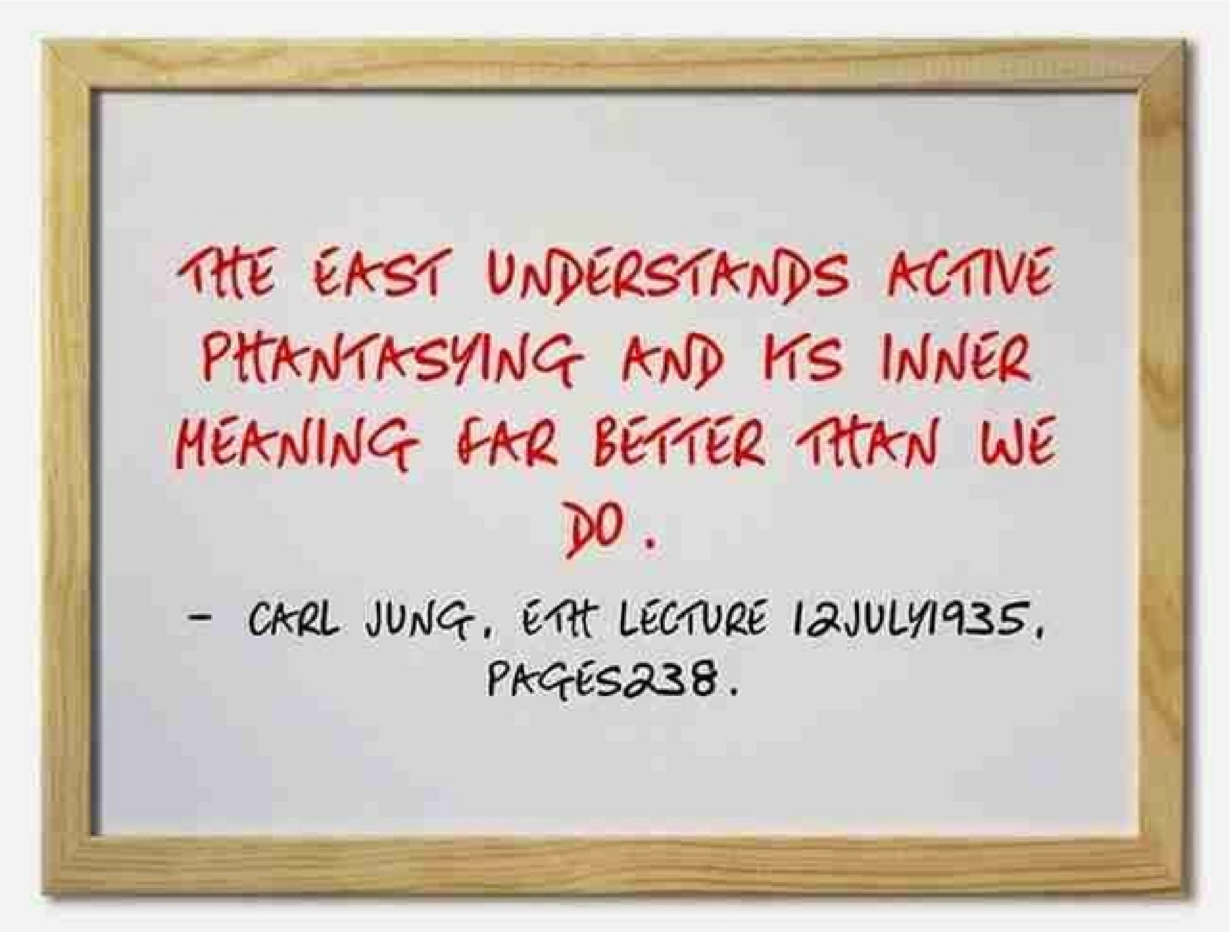
The child born in a country takes something of that land, it is the secret influence of the place. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12July1935, Pages 241.



The ancestral part is given to us by our body, we take over the life of our ancestors in that way. It is the terrace of life because it is here that life renews itself.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12July1935, Pages240.

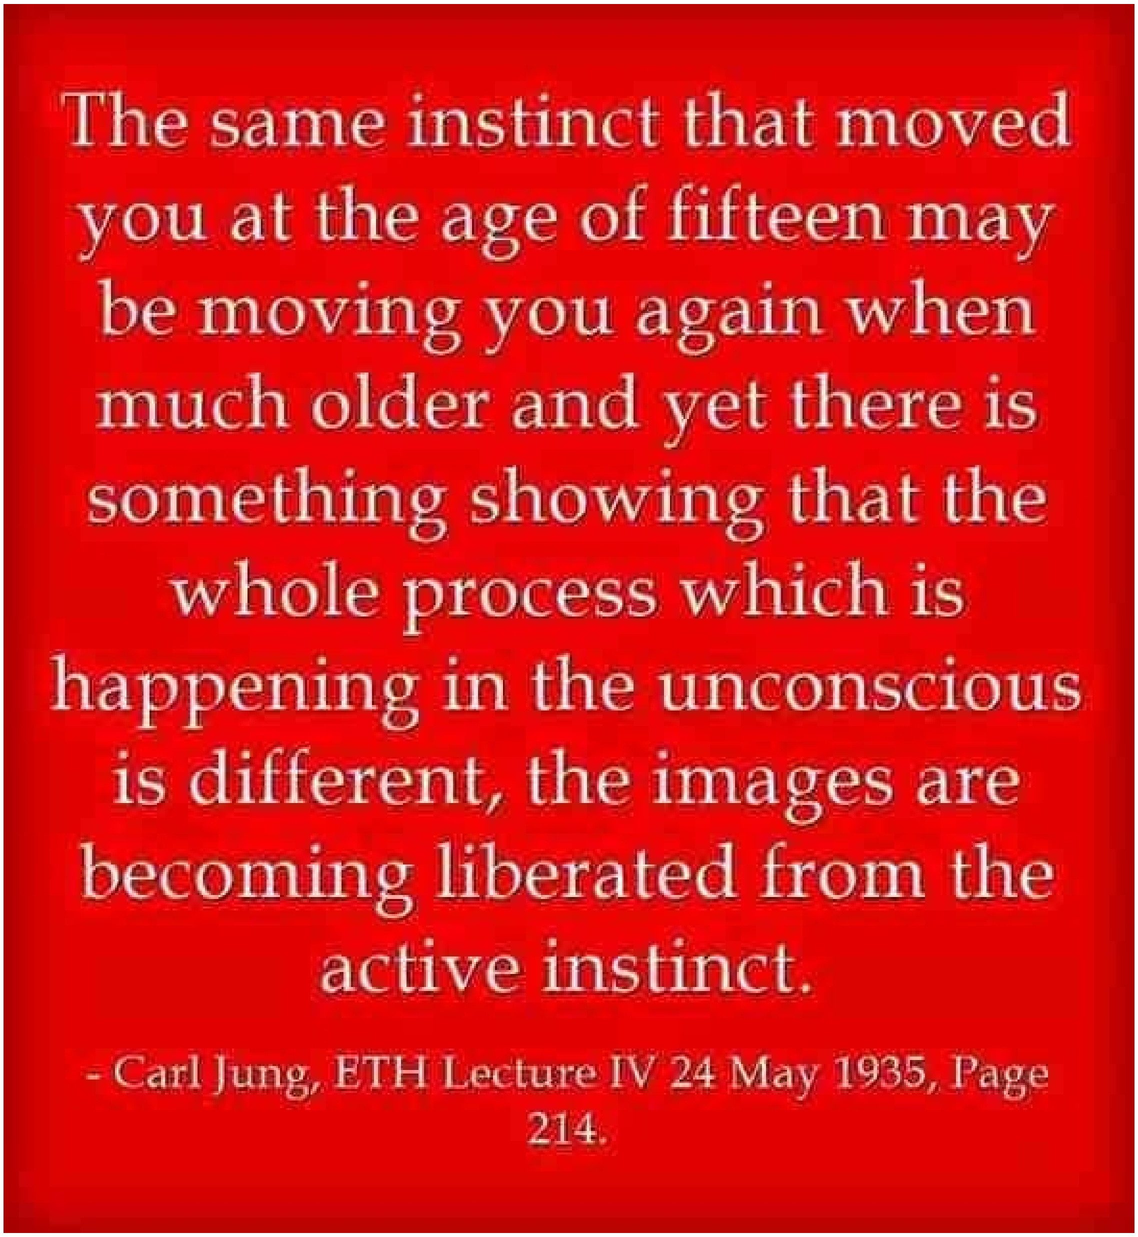
The ancestral part is given to us by our body, we take over the life of our ancestors in that way. It is the terrace of life because it is here that life renews itself. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12July1935, Pages 240.



THE EAST UNDERSTANDS ACTIVE PHANTASYING AND ITS INNER MEANING FAR BETTER THAN WE DO.

- CARL JUNG, ETH LECTURE 12JULY1935, PAGES238.

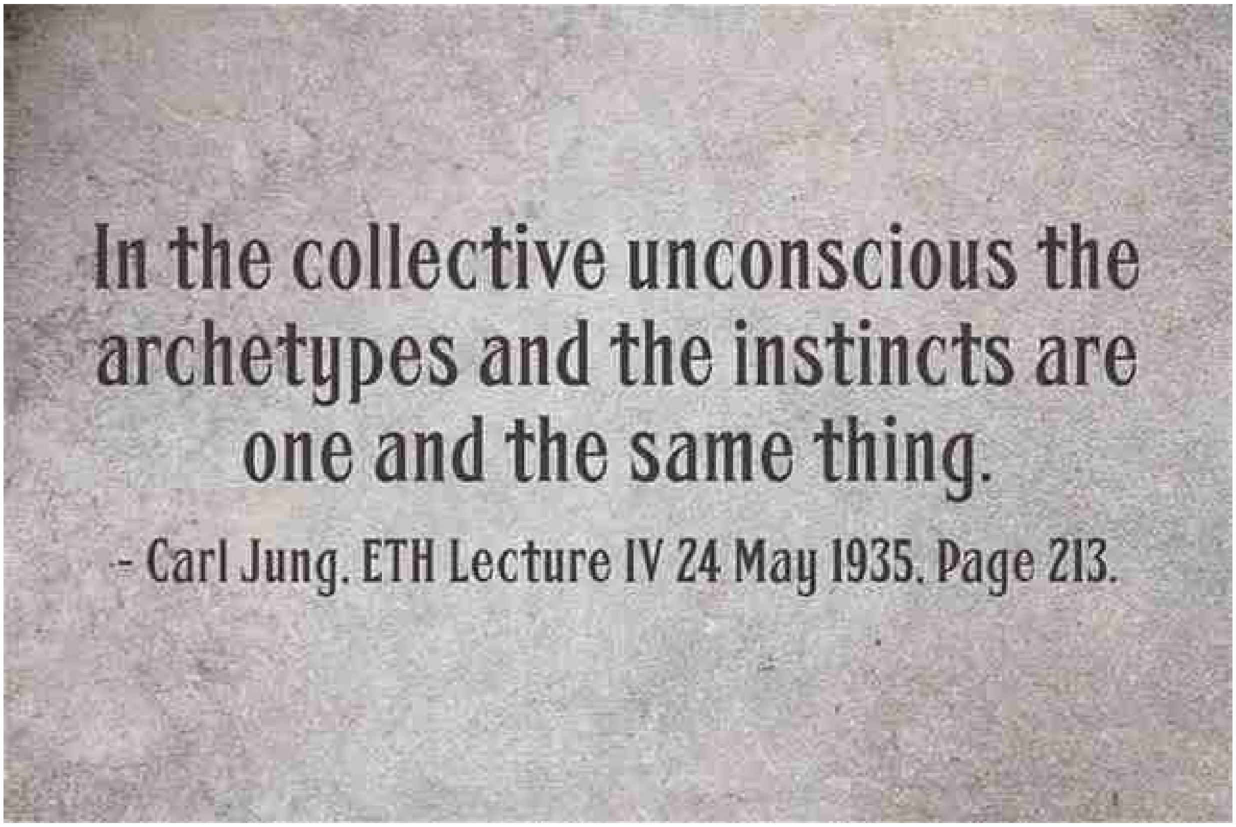
The East understands active phantasying and its inner meaning far better than we do. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12July1935, Pages238.



The same instinct that moved you at the age of fifteen may be moving you again when much older and yet there is something showing that the whole process which is happening in the unconscious is different, the images are becoming liberated from the active instinct.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Page 214.

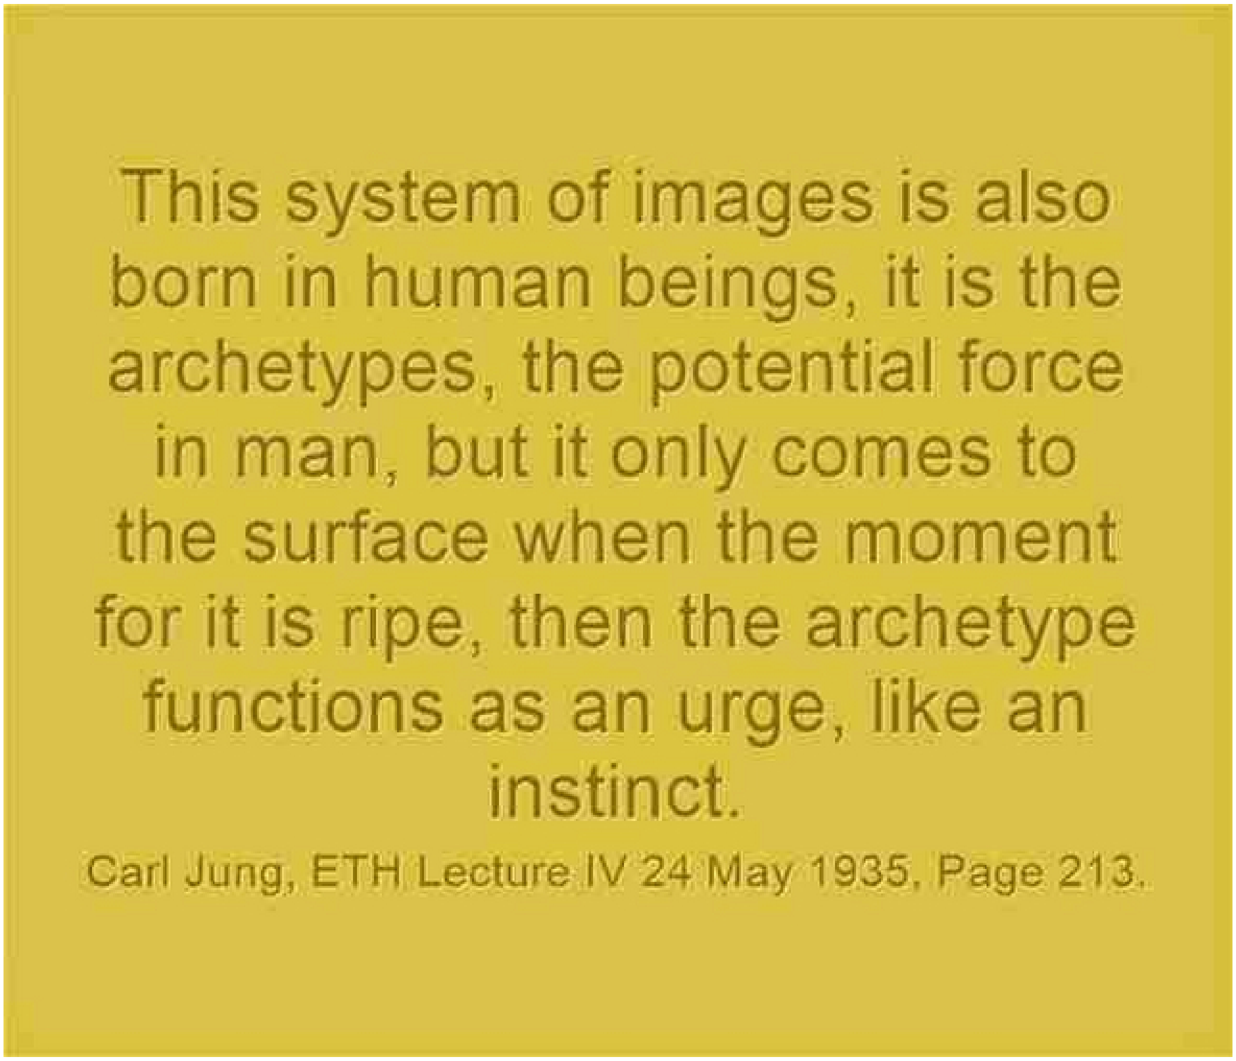
The same instinct that moved you at the age of fifteen may be moving you again when much older and yet there is something showing that the whole process which is happening in the unconscious is different, the images are becoming liberated from the active instinct. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Pages 214.



In the collective unconscious the archetypes and the instincts are one and the same thing.

- Carl Jung. ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935. Page 213.

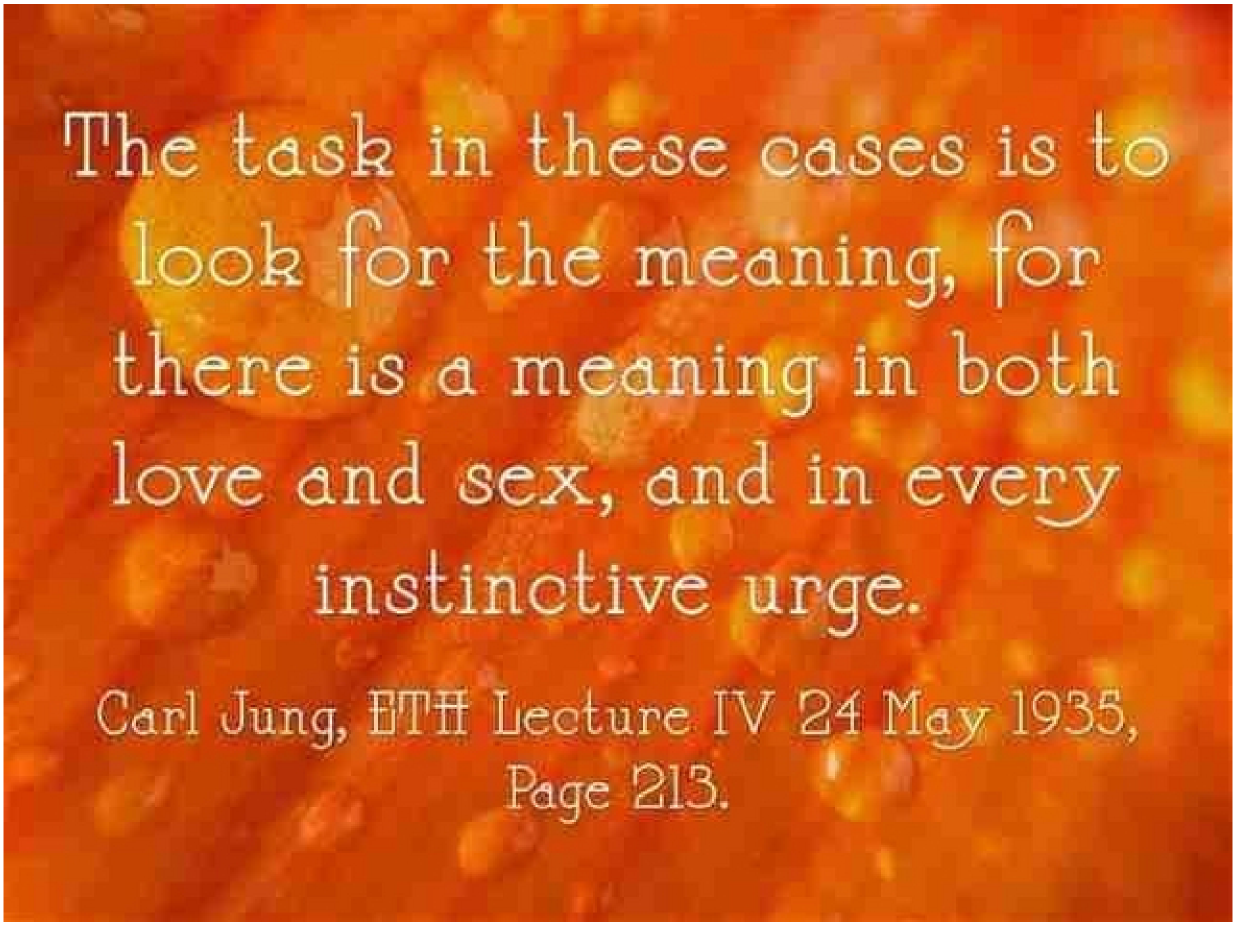
In the collective unconscious the archetypes and the instincts are one and the same thing. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Pages 213.



This system of images is also born in human beings, it is the archetypes, the potential force in man, but it only comes to the surface when the moment for it is ripe, then the archetype functions as an urge, like an instinct.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Page 213.

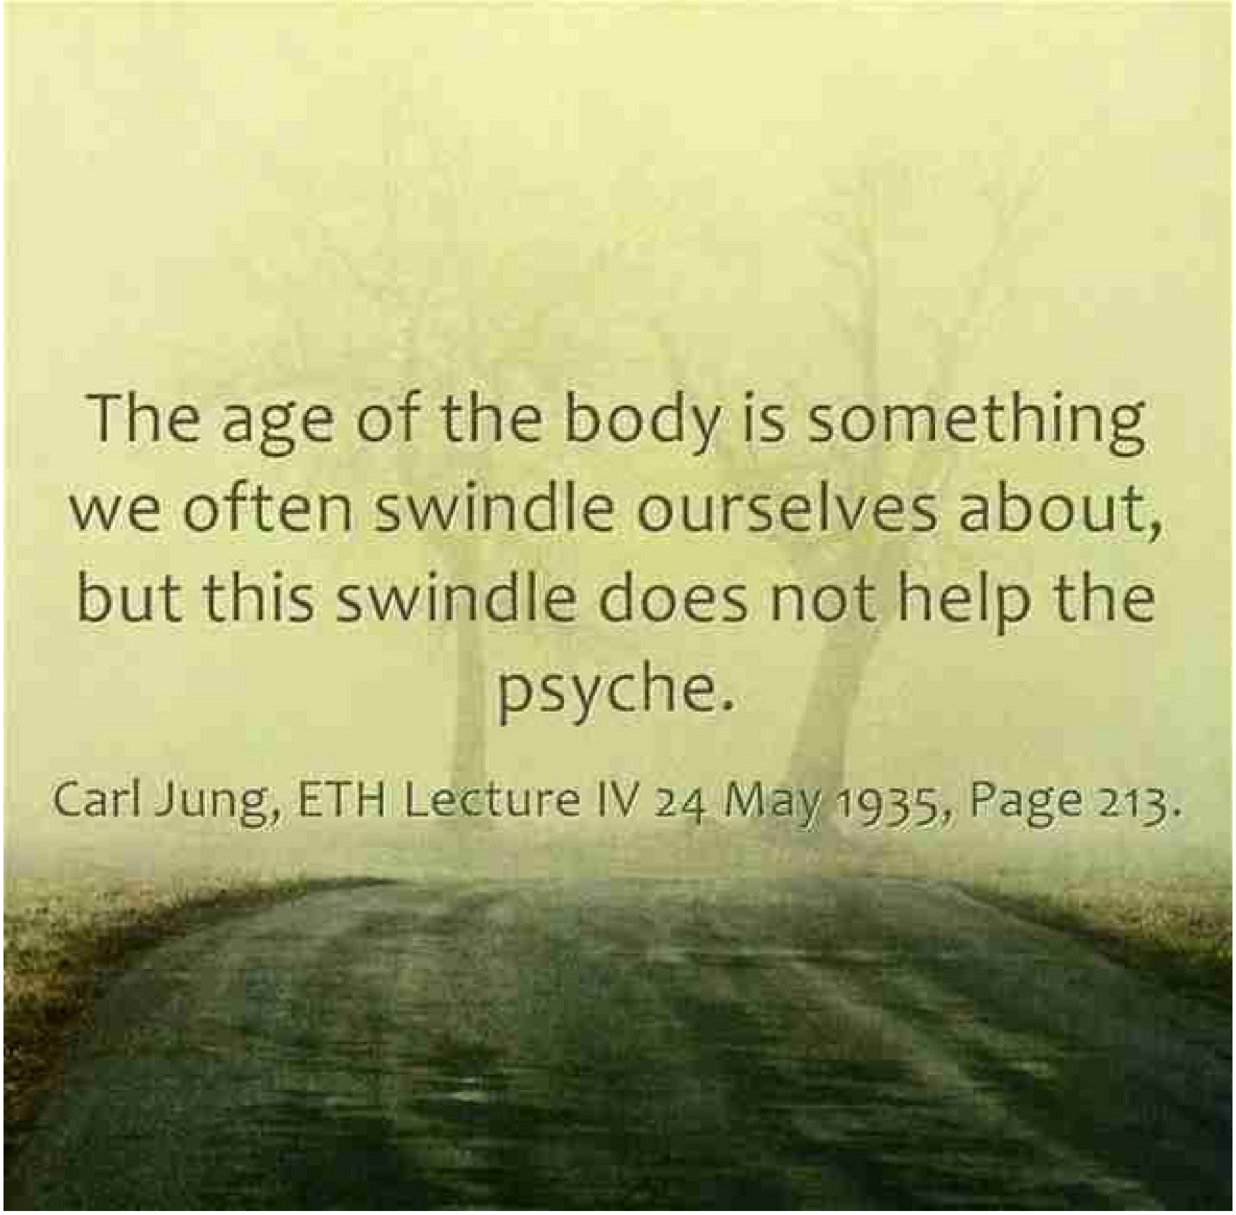
This system of images is also born in human beings, it is the archetypes, the potential force in man, but it only comes to the surface when the moment for it is ripe, then the archetype functions as an urge, like an instinct. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Pages 213.



The task in these cases is to look for the meaning, for there is a meaning in both love and sex, and in every instinctive urge.

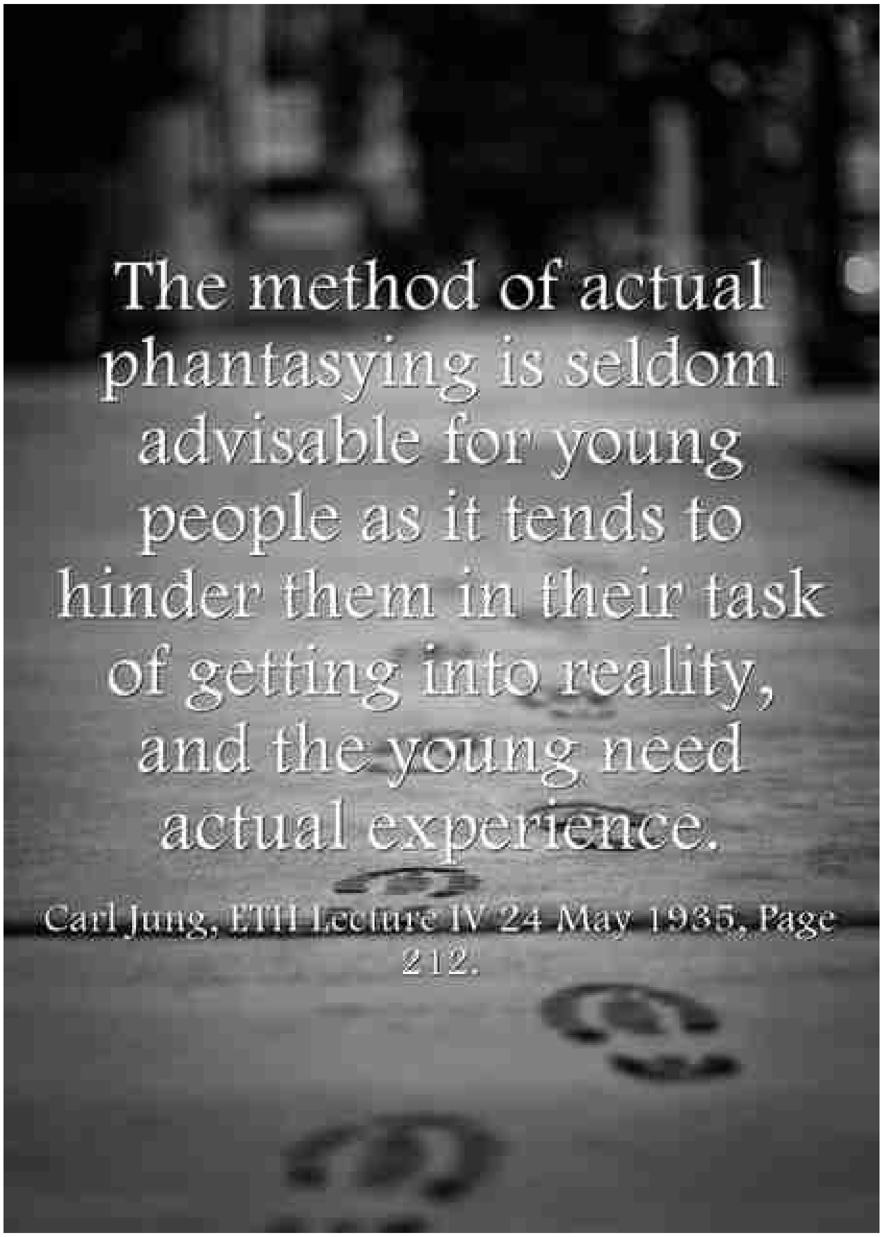
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Page 213.

The task in these cases is to look for the meaning, for there is a meaning in both love and sex, and in every instinctive urge. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Pages 213.

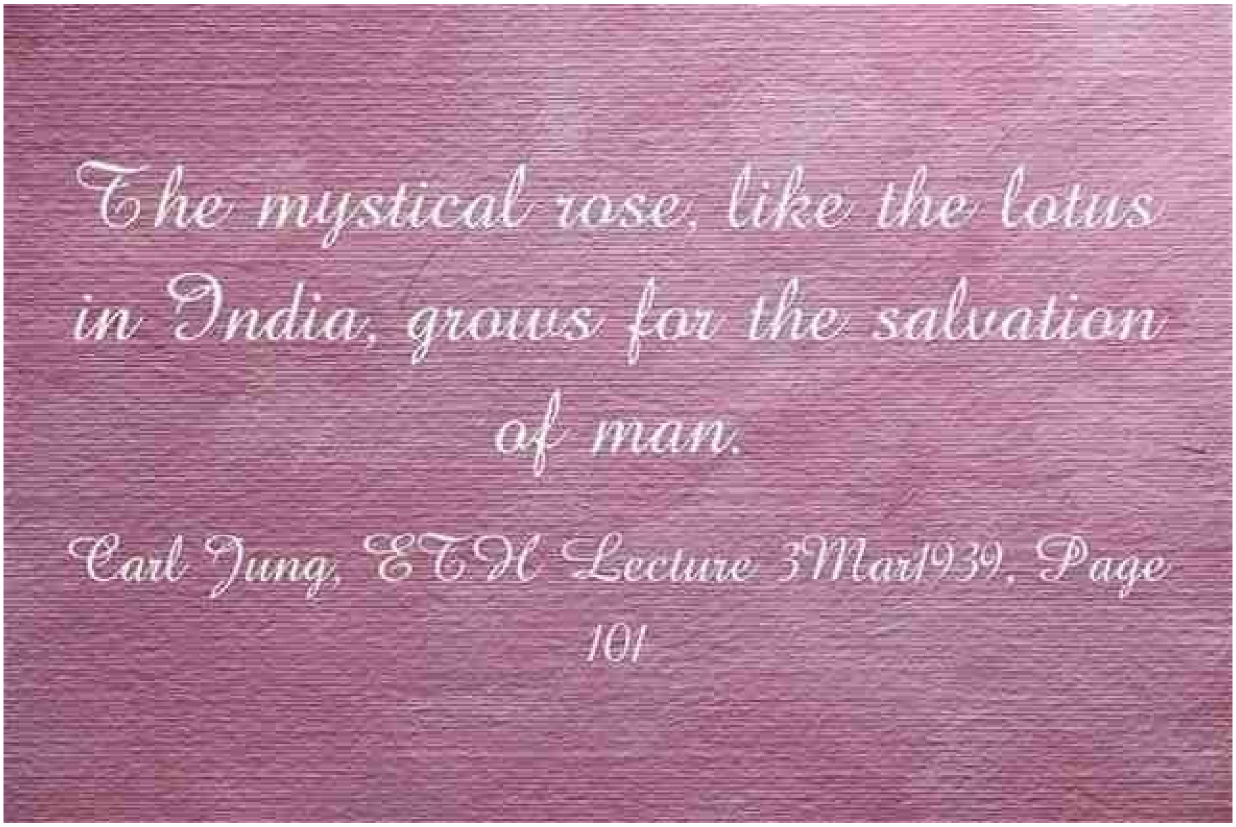


The age of the body is something we often swindle ourselves about, but this swindle does not help the psyche.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Page 213.

The age of the body is something we often swindle ourselves about, but this swindle does not help the psyche. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Pages 213.



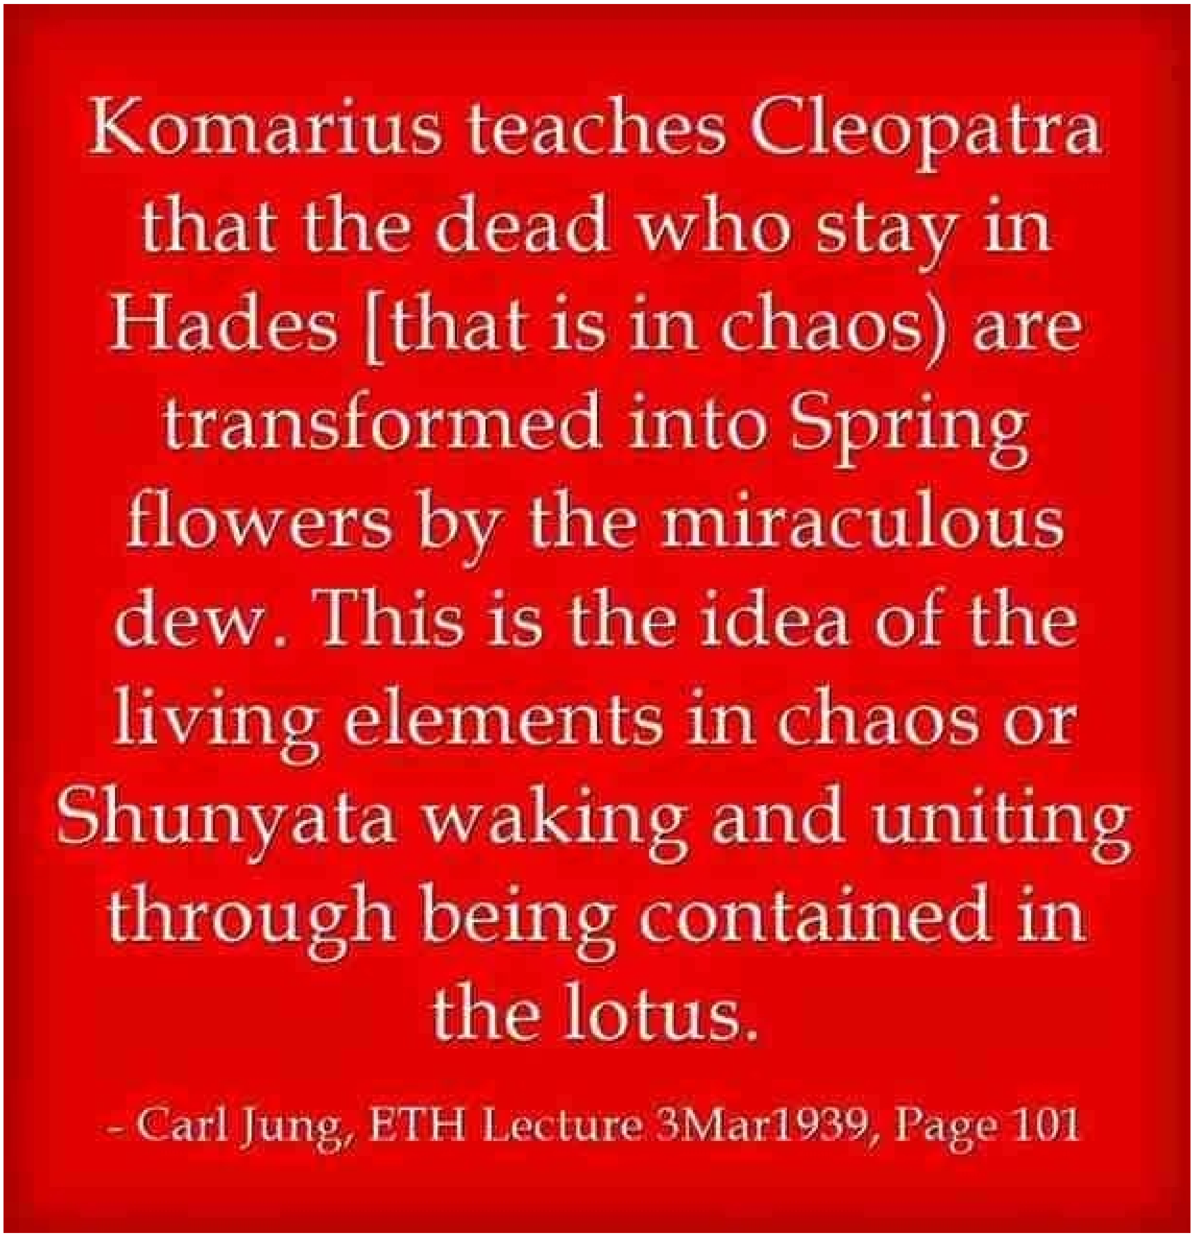
The method of actual phantasying is seldom advisable for young people as it tends to hinder them in their task of getting into reality, and the young need actual experience. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Page 212.



The mystical rose, like the lotus in India, grows for the salvation of man.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 101

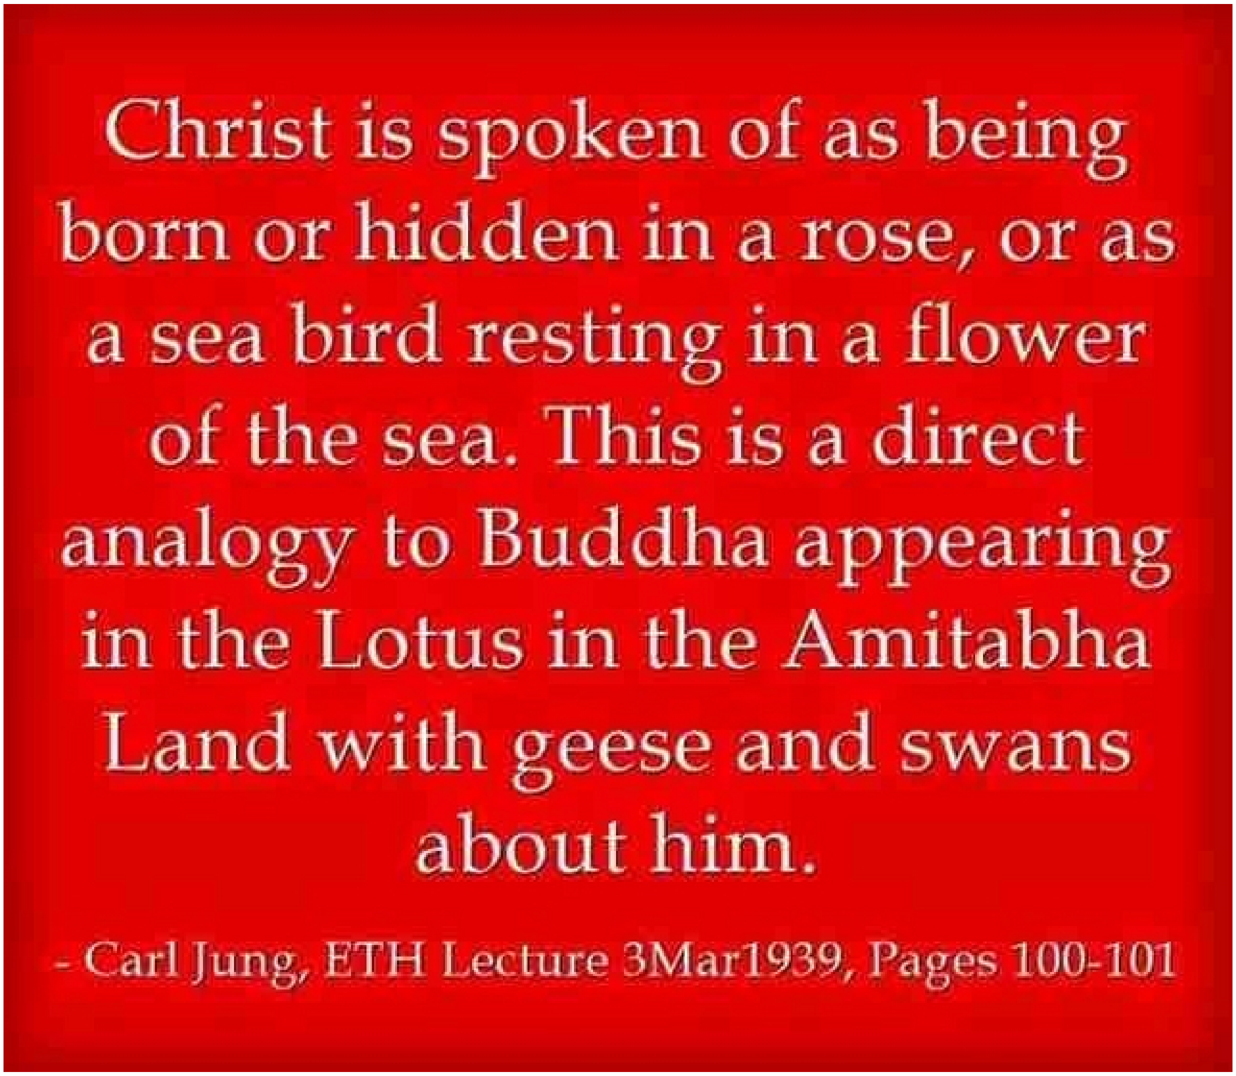
The mystical rose, like the lotus in India, grows for the salvation of man. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939



Komarius teaches Cleopatra that the dead who stay in Hades [that is in chaos) are transformed into Spring flowers by the miraculous dew. This is the idea of the living elements in chaos or Shunyata waking and uniting through being contained in the lotus.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 101

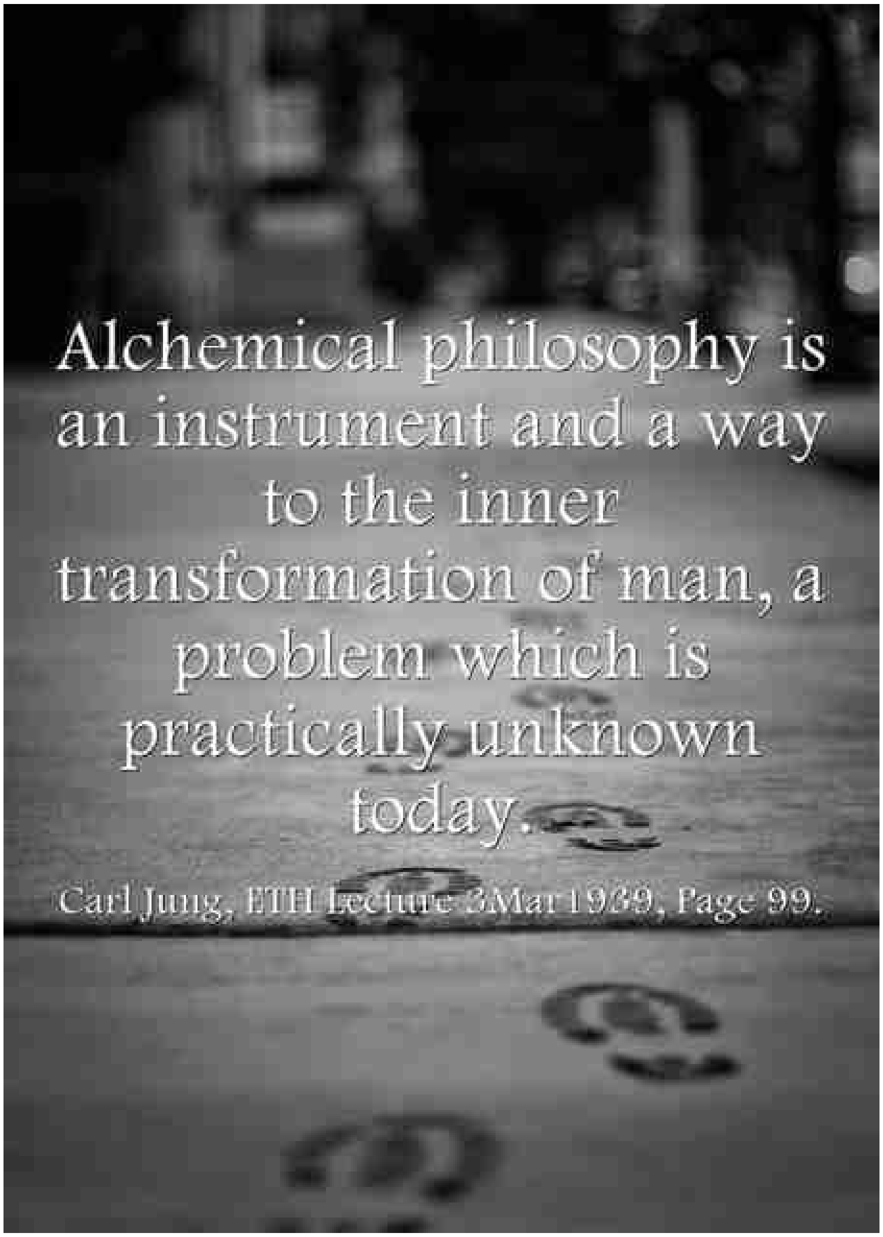
Komarius teaches Cleopatra that the dead who stay in Hades [that is in chaos) are transformed into Spring flowers by the miraculous dew. This is the idea of the living elements in chaos or Shunyata waking and uniting through being contained in the lotus. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 101.



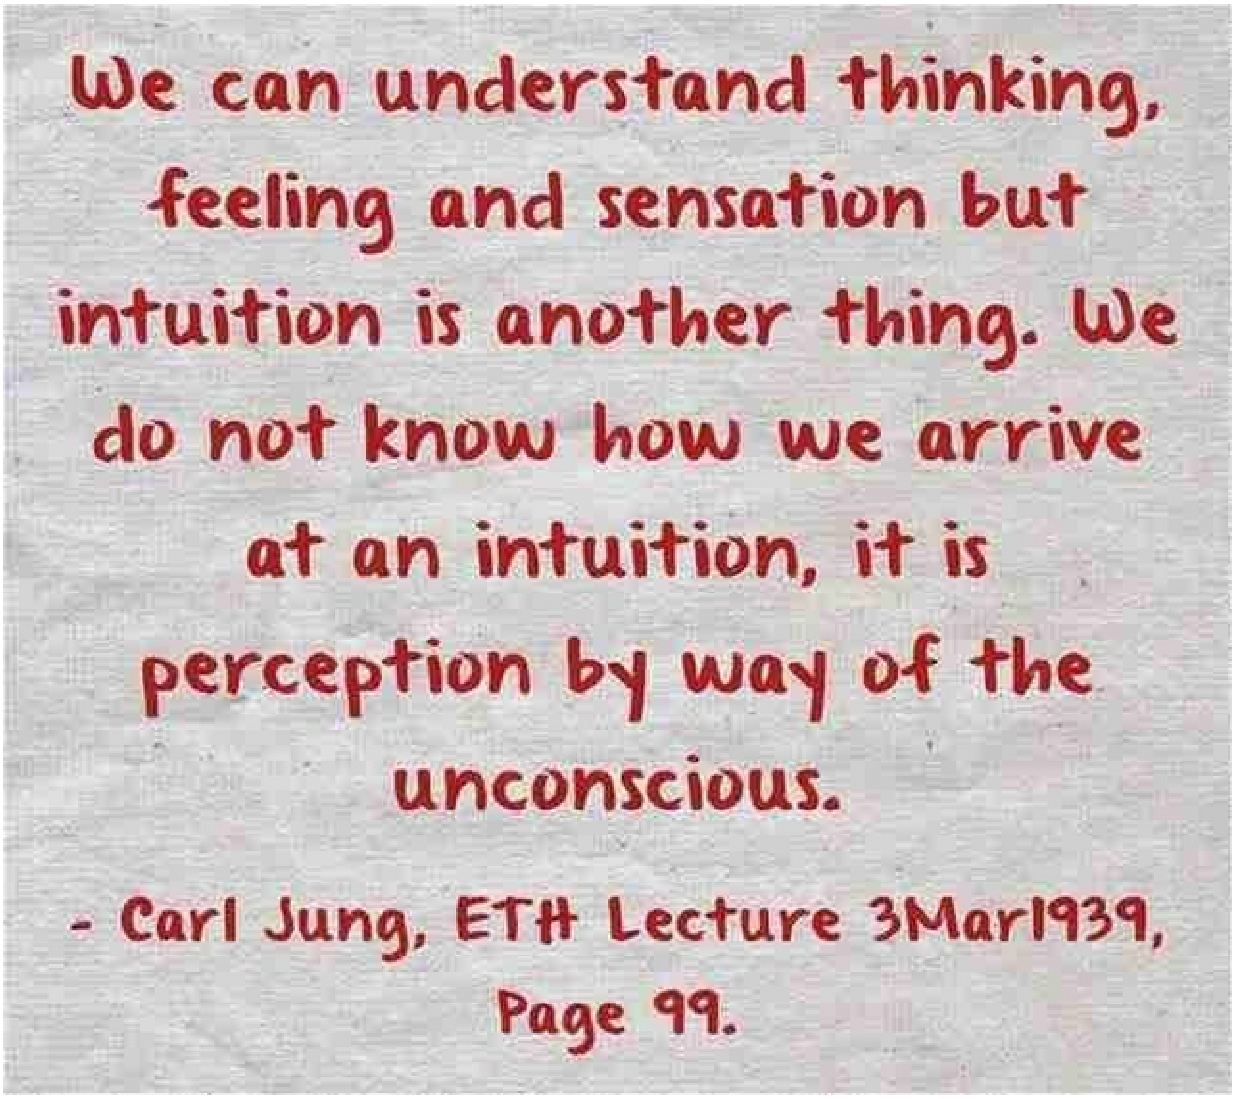
Christ is spoken of as being born or hidden in a rose, or as a sea bird resting in a flower of the sea. This is a direct analogy to Buddha appearing in the Lotus in the Amitabha Land with geese and swans about him.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Pages 100-101

Christ is spoken of as being born or hidden in a rose, or as a sea bird resting in a flower of the sea. This is a direct analogy to Buddha appearing in the Lotus in the Amitabha Land with geese and swans about him. Pages 100-101.



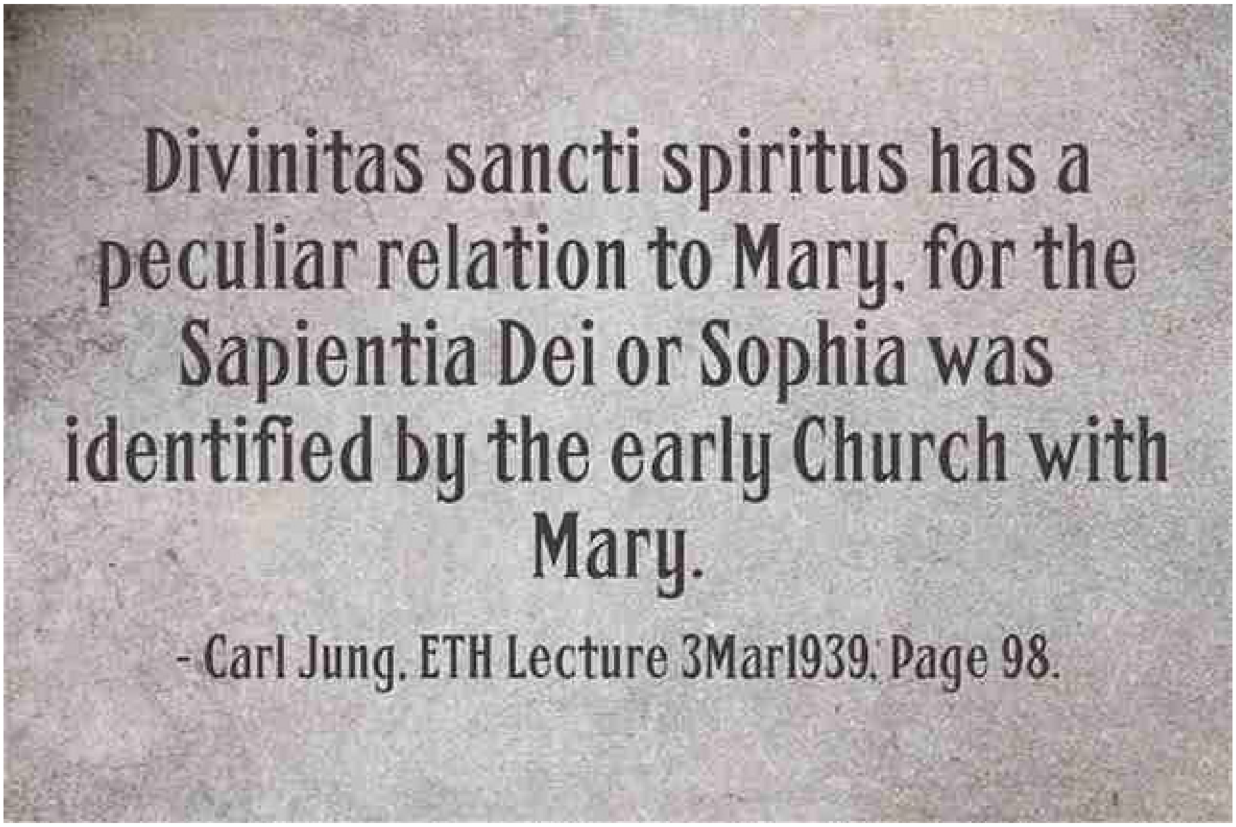
Alchemical philosophy is an instrument and a way to the inner transformation of man, a problem which is practically unknown today. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 99.



We can understand thinking, feeling and sensation but intuition is another thing. We do not know how we arrive at an intuition, it is perception by way of the unconscious.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 99.

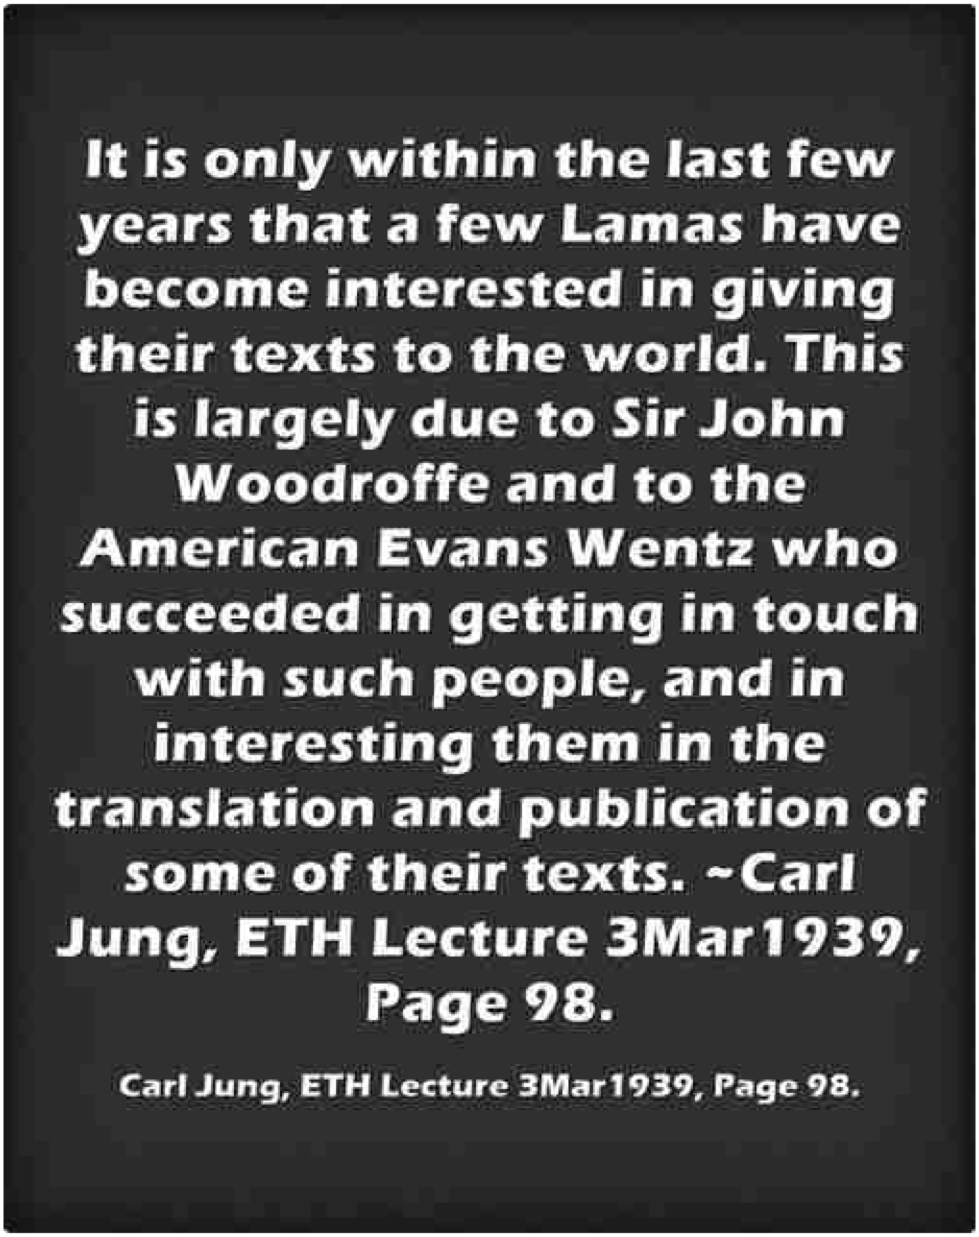
We can understand thinking, feeling and sensation but intuition is another thing. We do not know how we arrive at an intuition, it is perception by way of the unconscious. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 99.



Divinitas sancti spiritus has a peculiar relation to Mary, for the Sapientia Dei or Sophia was identified by the early Church with Mary.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.

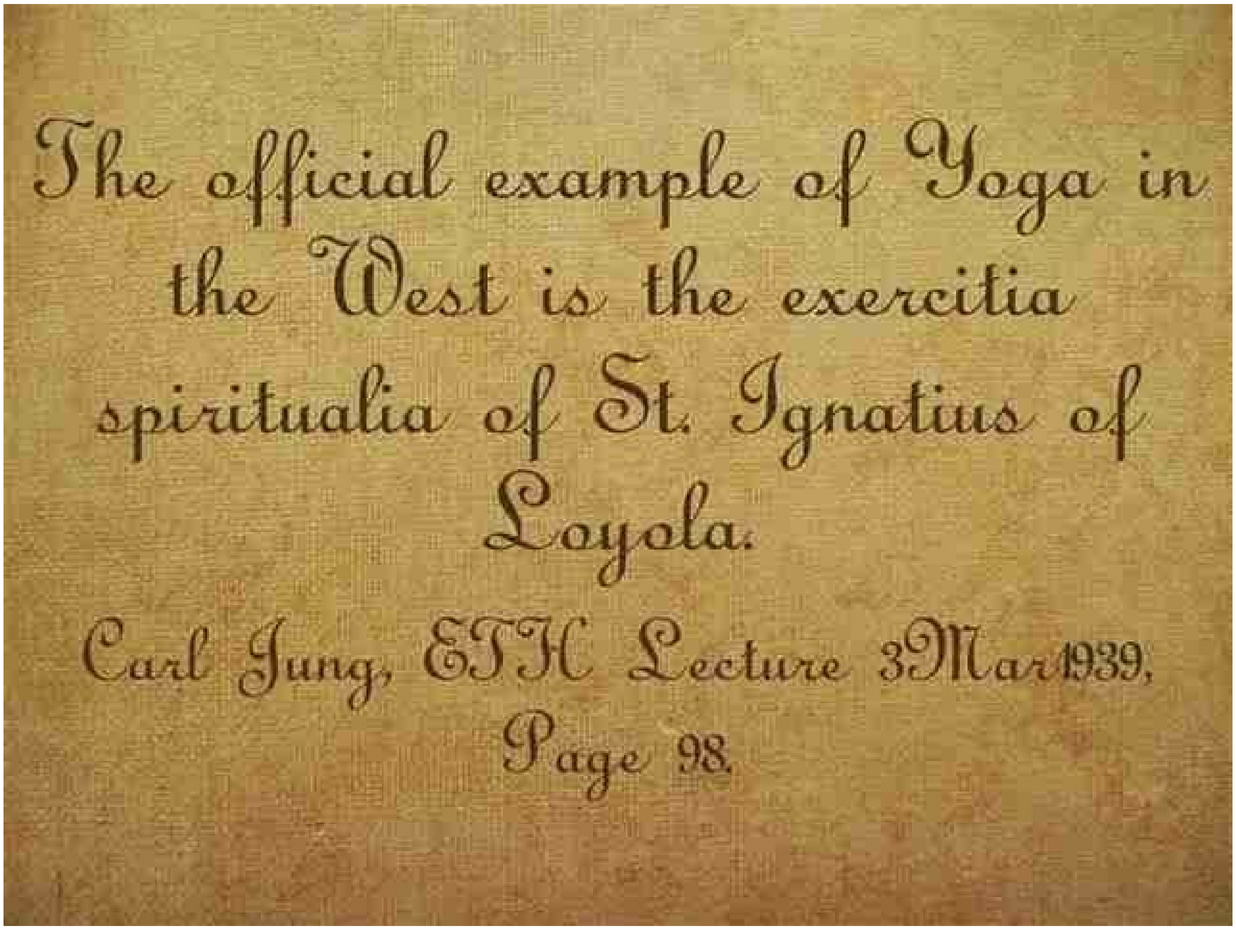
Divinitas sancti spiritus has a peculiar relation to Mary, for the Sapientia Dei or Sophia was identified by the early Church with Mary. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.



It is only within the last few years that a few Lamas have become interested in giving their texts to the world. This is largely due to Sir John Woodroffe and to the American Evans Wentz who succeeded in getting in touch with such people, and in interesting them in the translation and publication of some of their texts. ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.

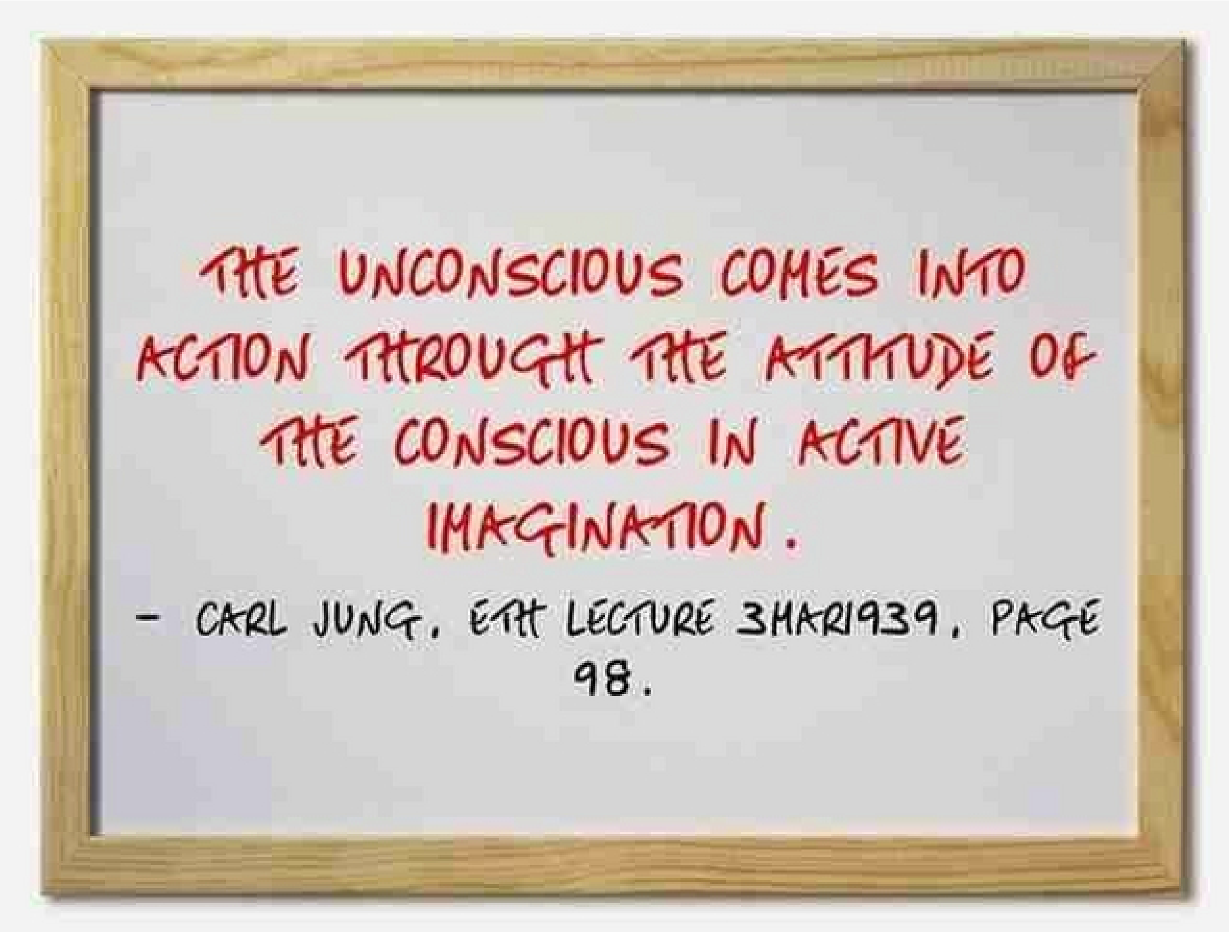
It is only within the last few years that a few Lamas have become interested in giving their texts to the world. This is largely due to Sir John Woodroffe and to the American Evans Wentz who succeeded in getting in touch with such people, and in interesting them in the translation and publication of some of their texts. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.



The official example of Yoga in the West is the exercitia spiritualia of St. Ignatius of Loyola.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.

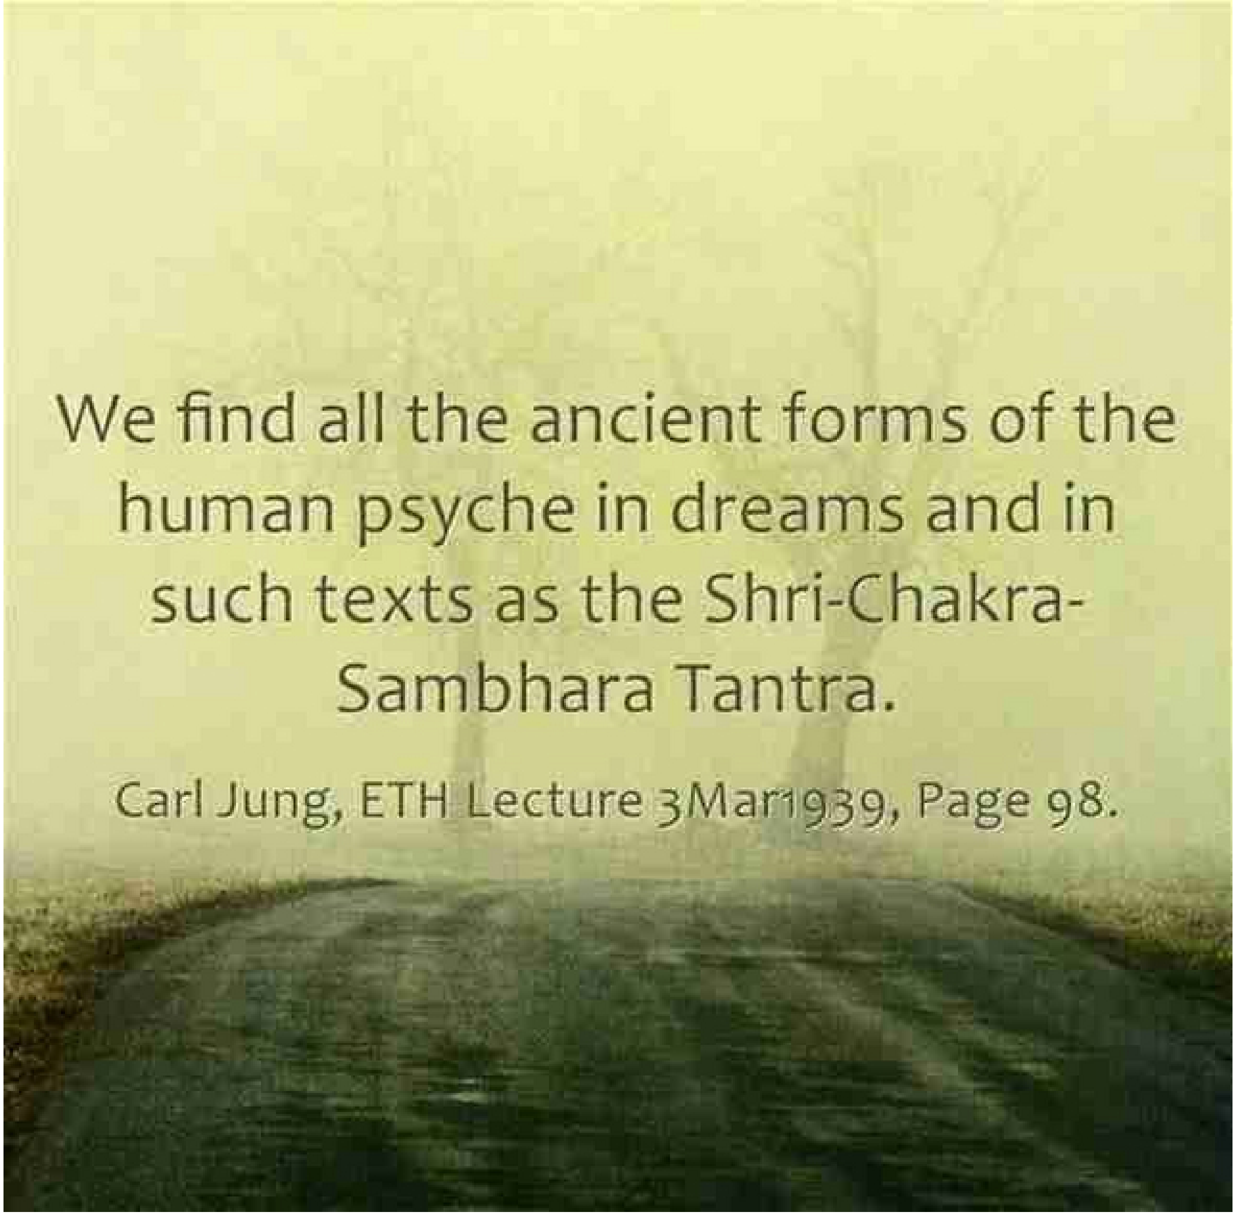
The official example of Yoga in the West is the exercitia spiritualia of St. Ignatius of Loyola.   Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.



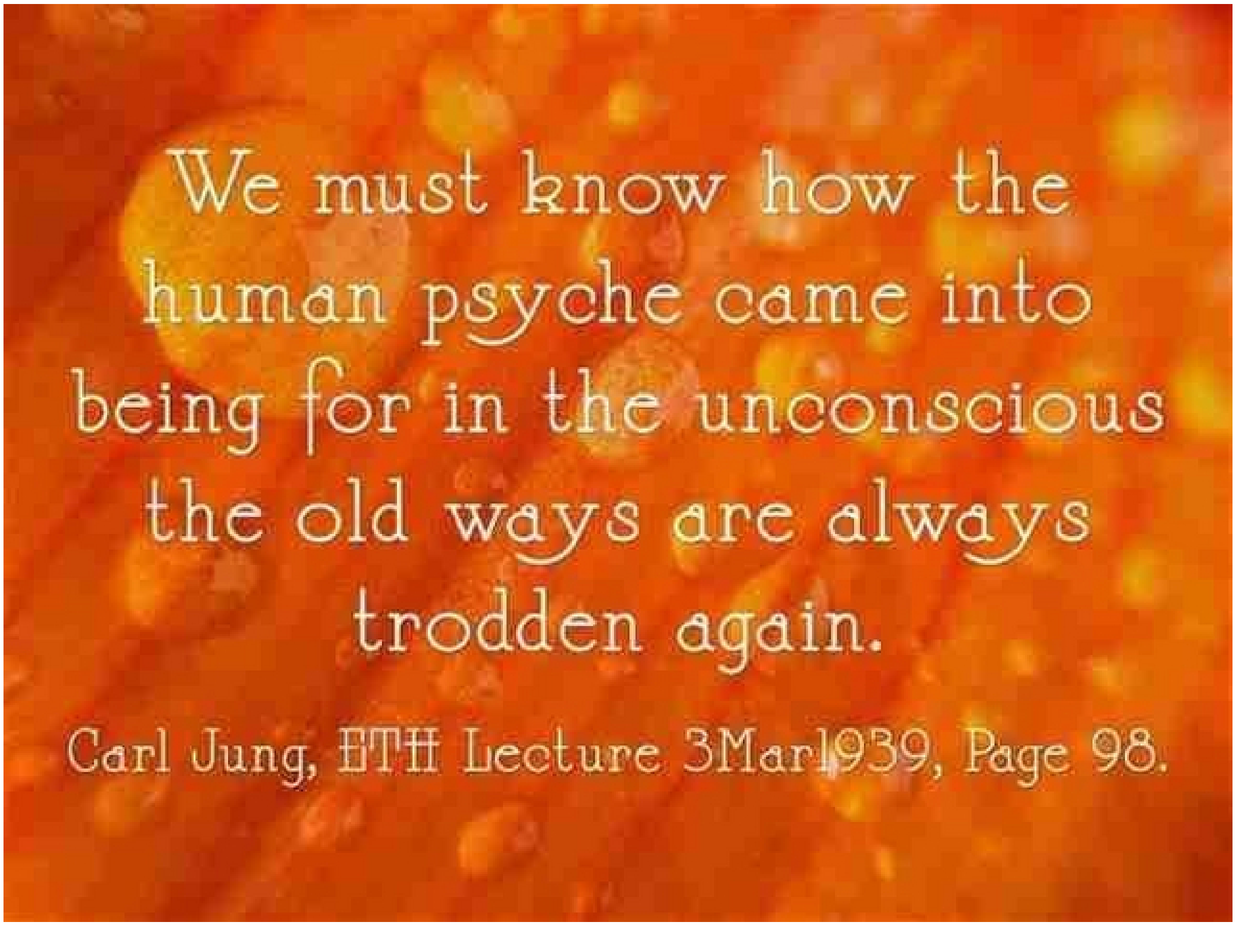
THE UNCONSCIOUS COMES INTO ACTION THROUGH THE ATTITUDE OF THE CONSCIOUS IN ACTIVE IMAGINATION.

– CARL JUNG, ETH LECTURE 3MAR1939, PAGE 98.

The unconscious comes into action through the attitude of the conscious in active imagination. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.



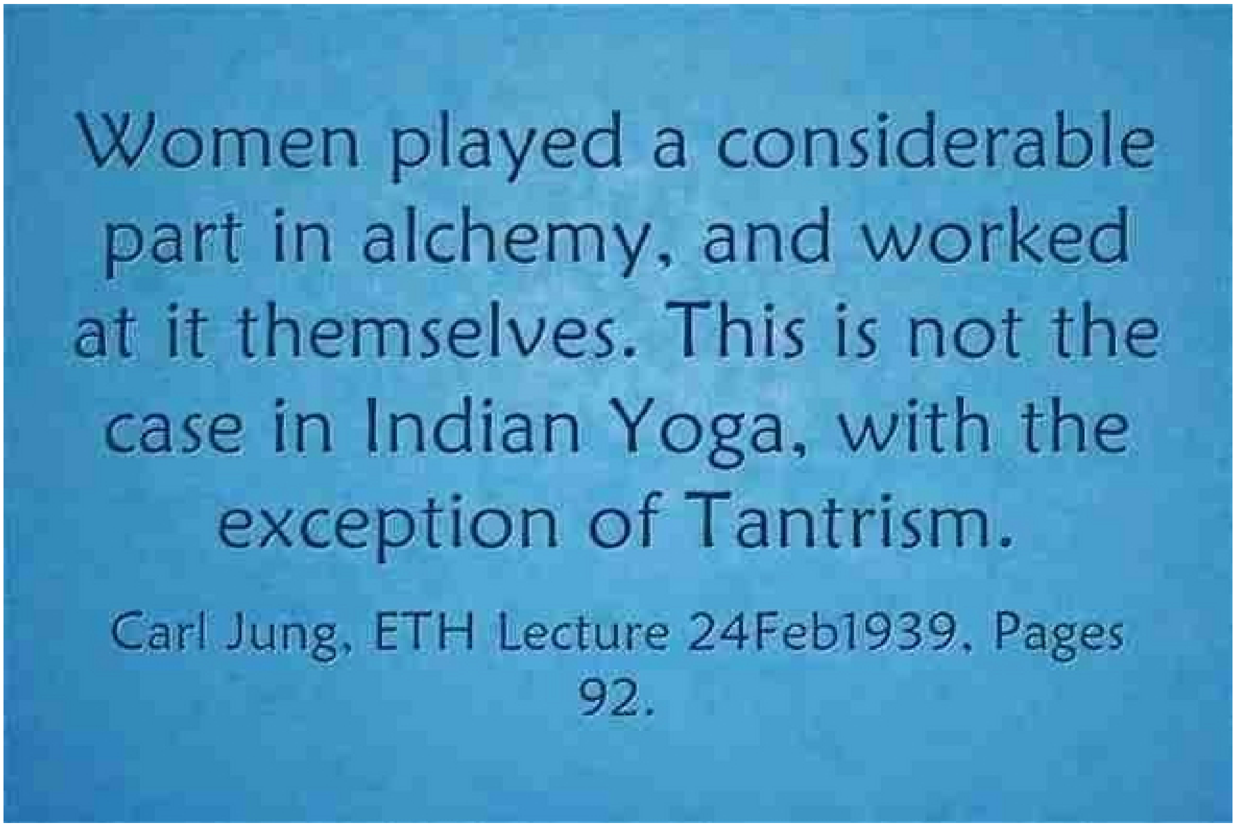
We find all the ancient forms of the human psyche in dreams and in such texts as the Shri-Chakra-Sambhara Tantra.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.



We must know how the human psyche came into being for in the unconscious the old ways are always trodden again.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.

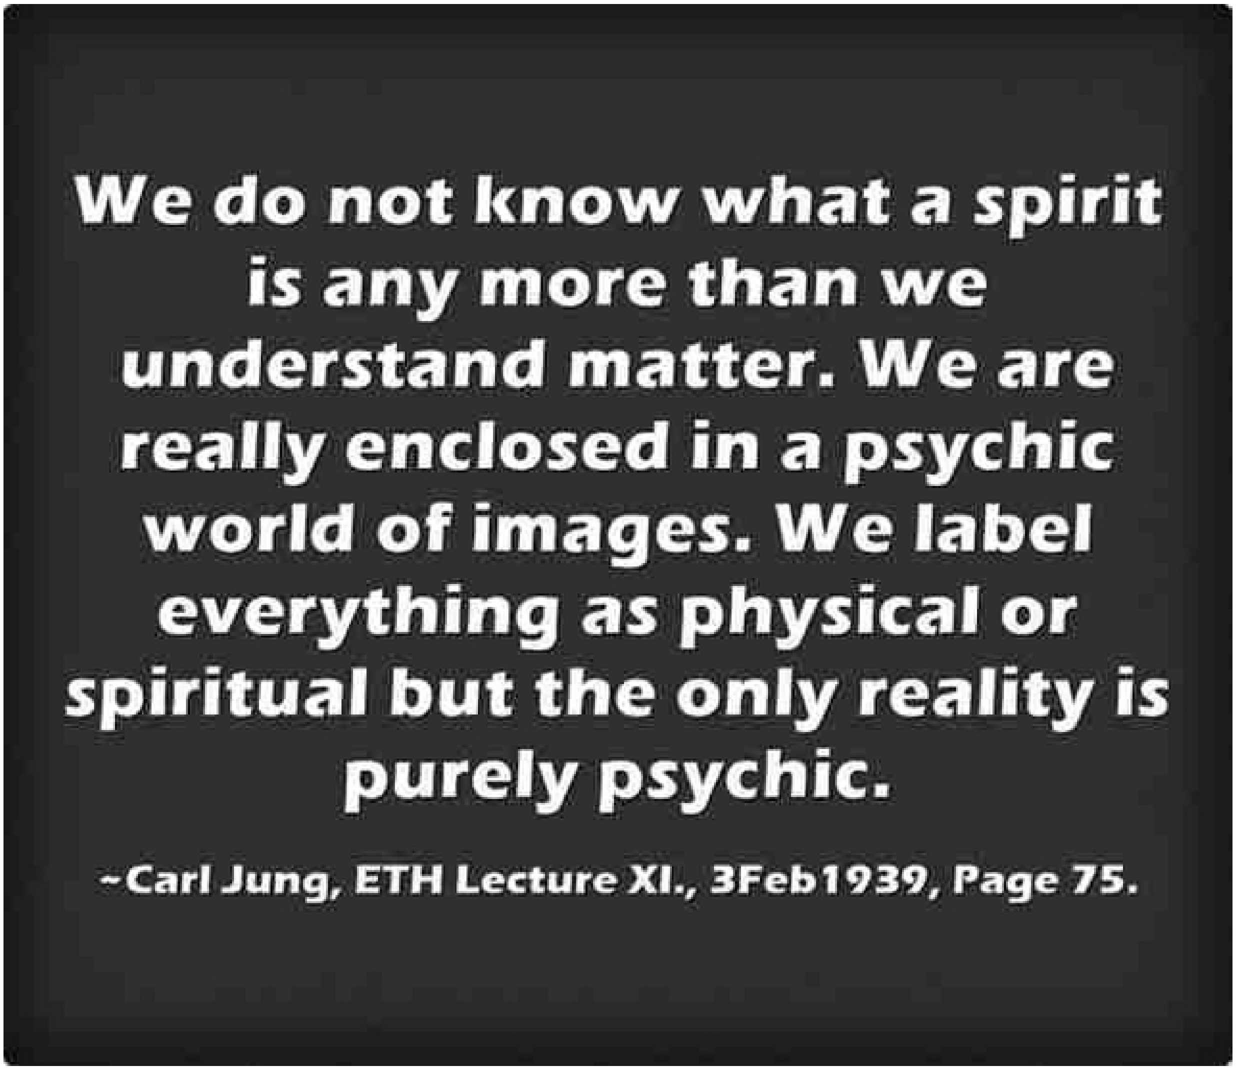
We must know how the human psyche came into being for in the unconscious the old ways are always trodden again.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 98.



Women played a considerable part in alchemy, and worked at it themselves. This is not the case in Indian Yoga, with the exception of Tantrism.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 24Feb1939, Pages 92.

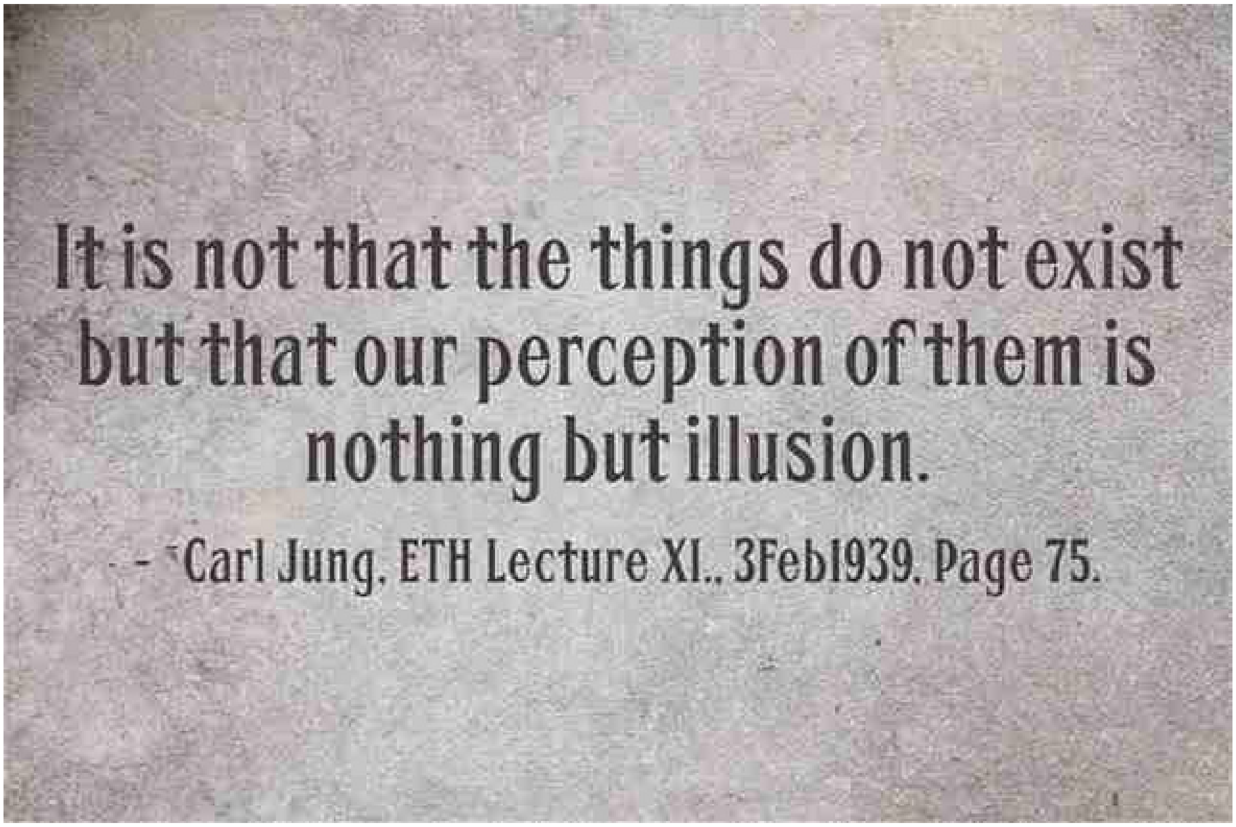
Women played a considerable part in alchemy, and worked at it themselves. This is not the case in Indian Yoga, with the exception of Tantrism. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 24Feb1939, Pages 92.



We do not know what a spirit is any more than we understand matter. We are really enclosed in a psychic world of images. We label everything as physical or spiritual but the only reality is purely psychic.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 75.

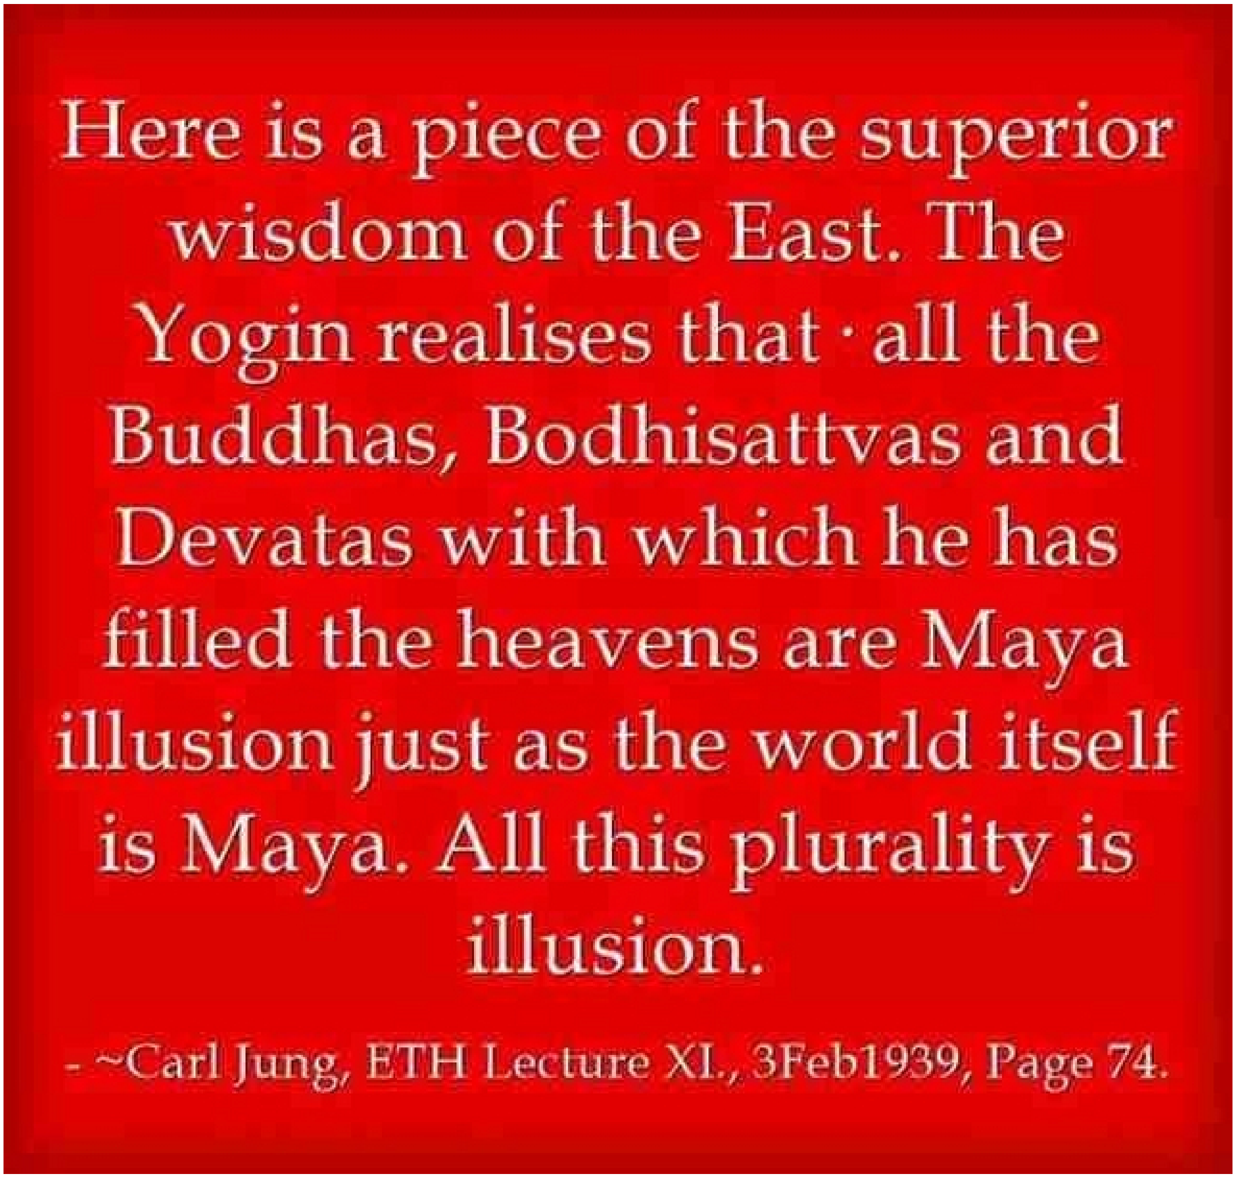
We do not know what a spirit is any more than we understand matter. We are really enclosed in a psychic world of images. We label everything as physical or spiritual but the only reality is purely psychic. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 75.



It is not that the things do not exist but that our perception of them is nothing but illusion.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 75.

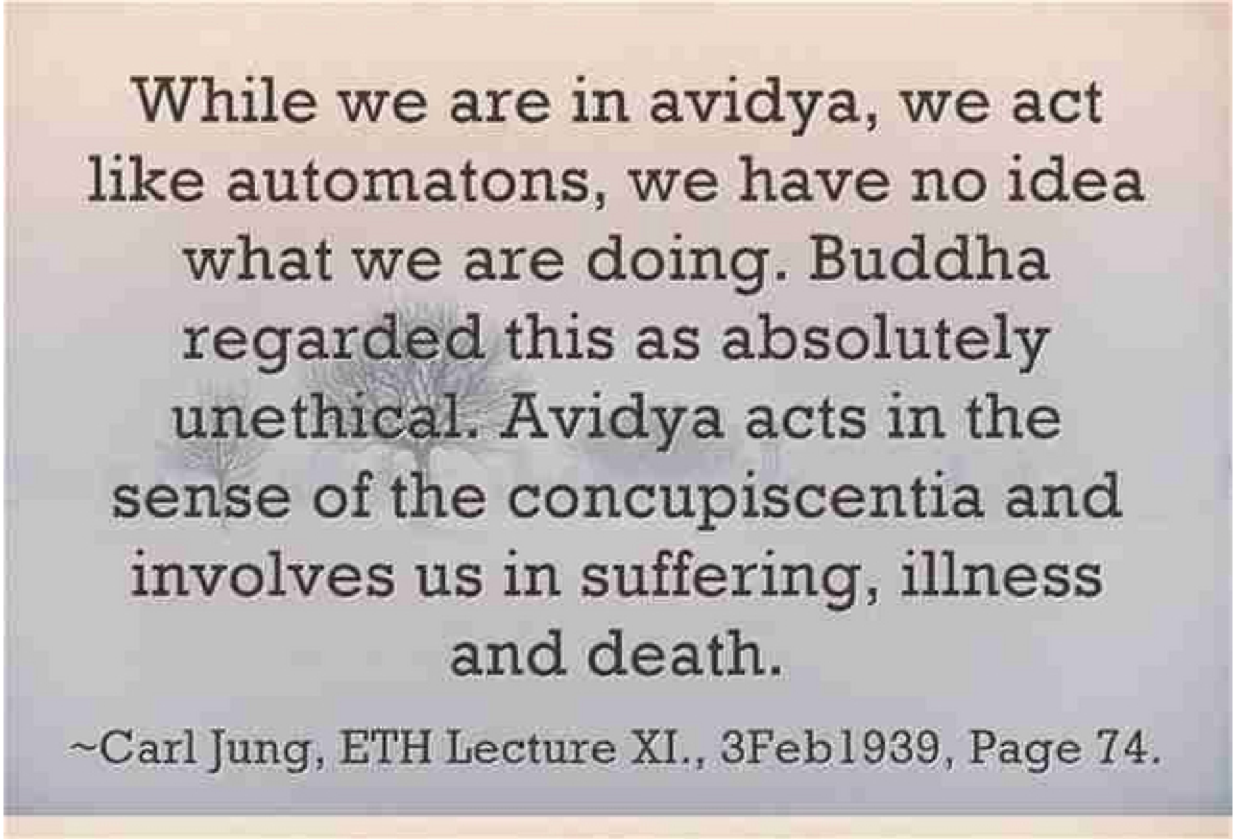
It is not that the things do not exist but that our perception of them is nothing but illusion. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 75.



Here is a piece of the superior wisdom of the East. The Yogin realises that · all the Buddhas, Bodhisattvas and Devatas with which he has filled the heavens are Maya illusion just as the world itself is Maya. All this plurality is illusion.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 74.

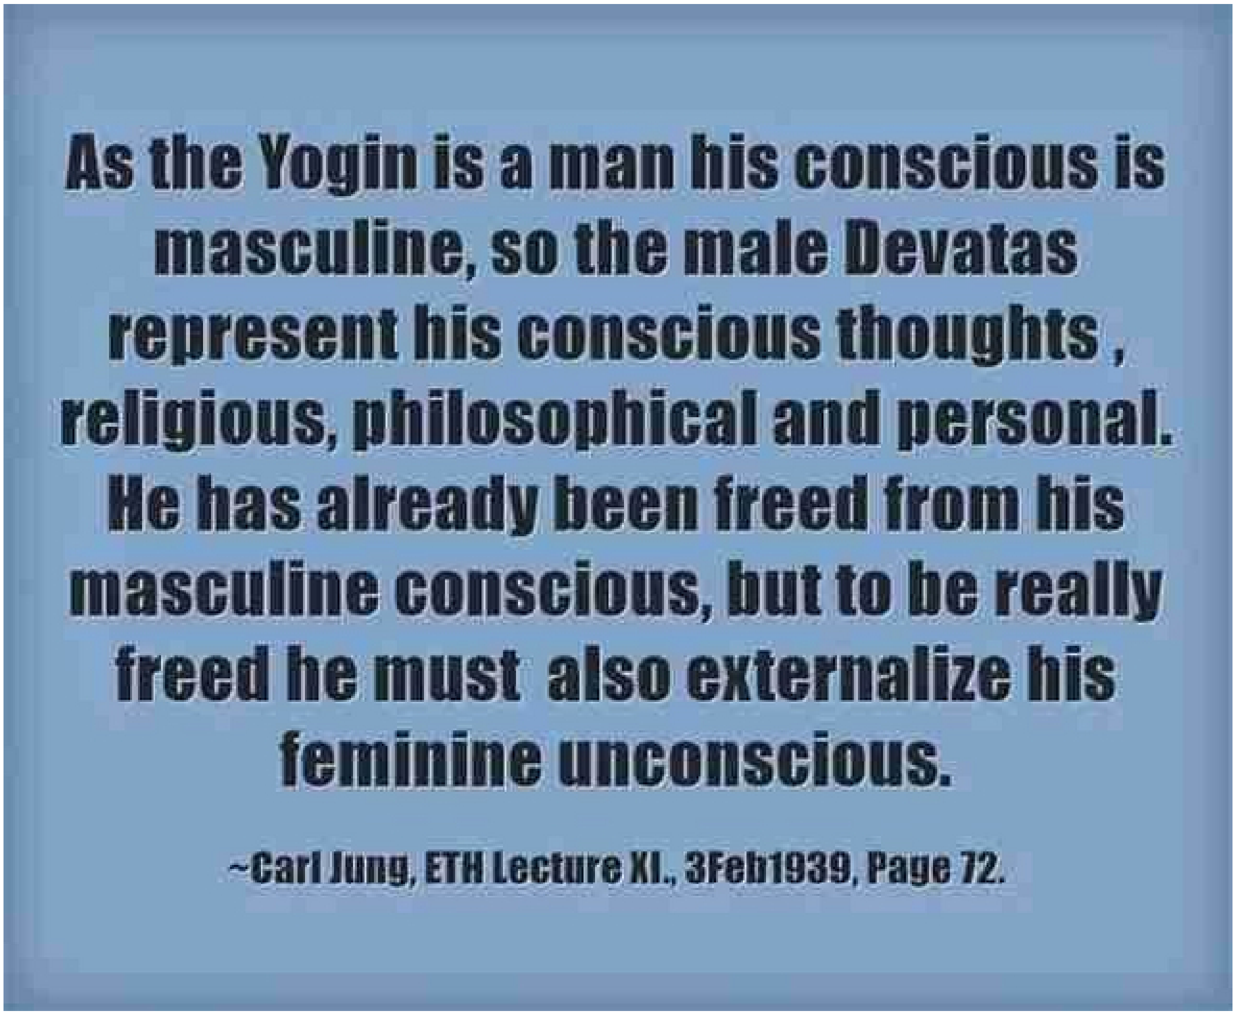
ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 74.
Here is a piece of the superior wisdom of the East. The Yogin realizes that all the Buddhas, Bodhisattvas and Devatas with which he has filled the heavens are Maya illusion just as the world itself is Maya. All this plurality is illusion. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 74.



While we are in avidya, we act like automatons, we have no idea what we are doing. Buddha regarded this as absolutely unethical. Avidya acts in the sense of the concupiscentia and involves us in suffering, illness and death.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 74.

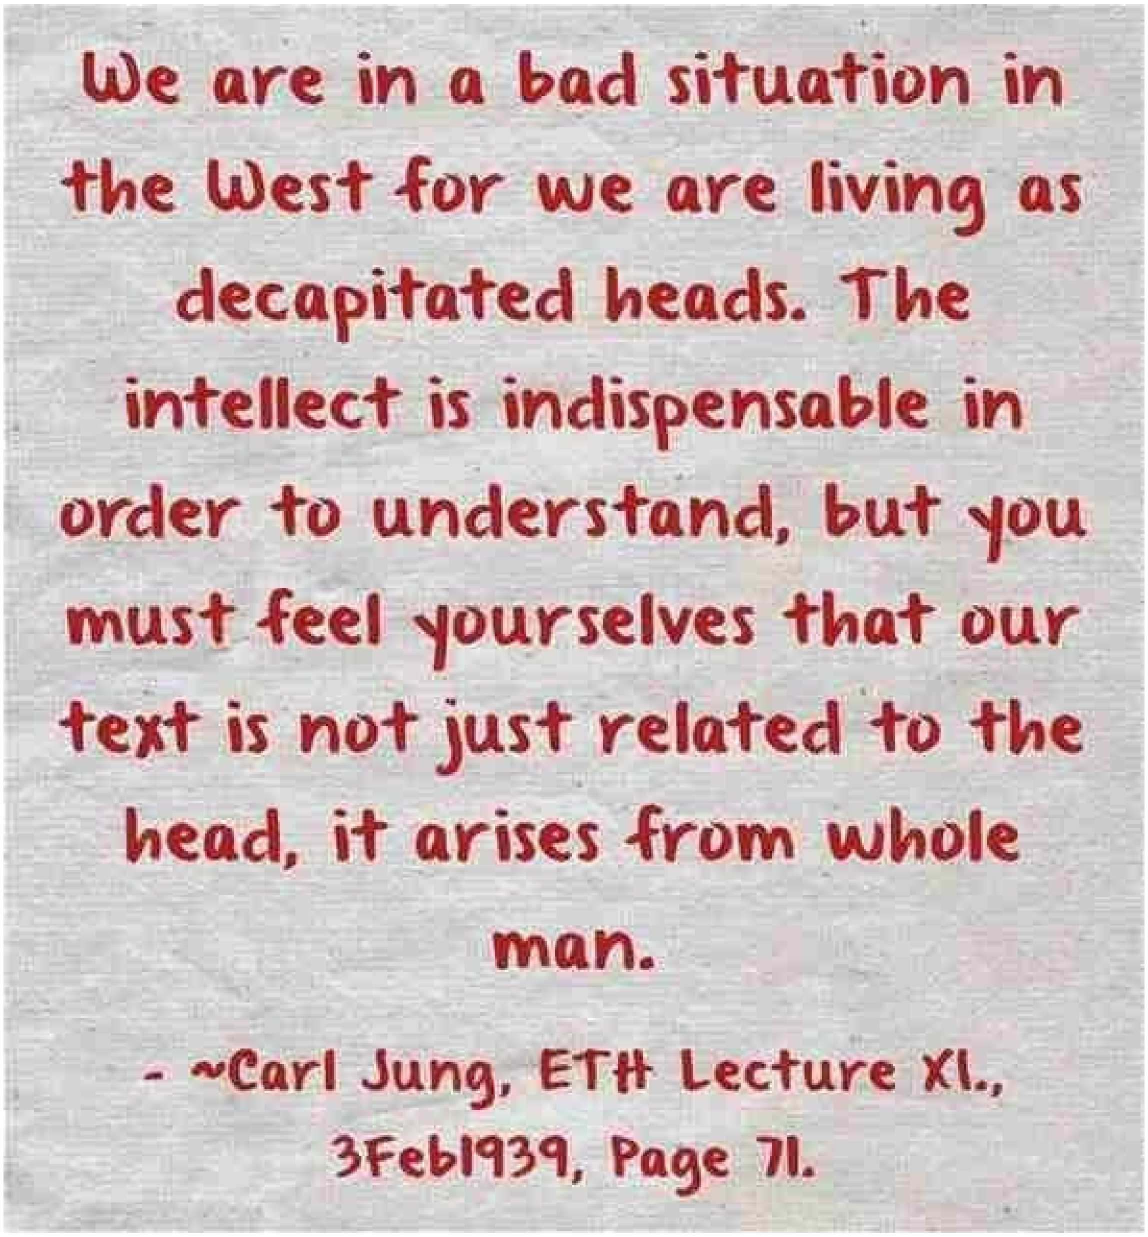
While we are in avidya, we act like automatons, we have no idea what we are doing. Buddha regarded this as absolutely unethical. Avidya acts in the sense of the concupiscentia and involves us in suffering, illness and death.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 74.



As the Yogin is a man his conscious is masculine, so the male Devatas represent his conscious thoughts , religious, philosophical and personal. He has already been freed from his masculine conscious, but to be really freed he must also externalize his feminine unconscious.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 72.

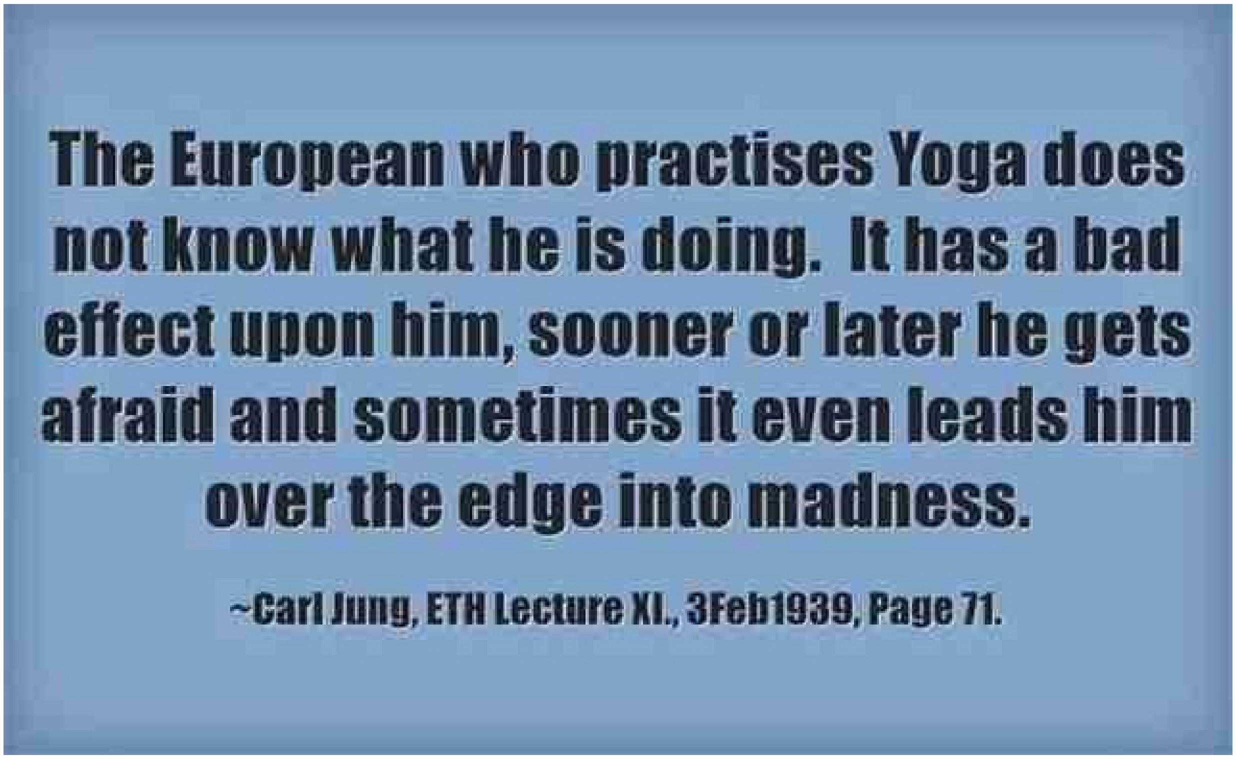
As the Yogin is a man his conscious is masculine, so the male Devatas represent his conscious thoughts , religious, philosophical and personal. He has already been freed from his masculine conscious, but to be really freed he must also externalize his feminine unconscious. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 72.



We are in a bad situation in the West for we are living as decapitated heads. The intellect is indispensable in order to understand, but you must feel yourselves that our text is not just related to the head, it arises from whole man.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 71.

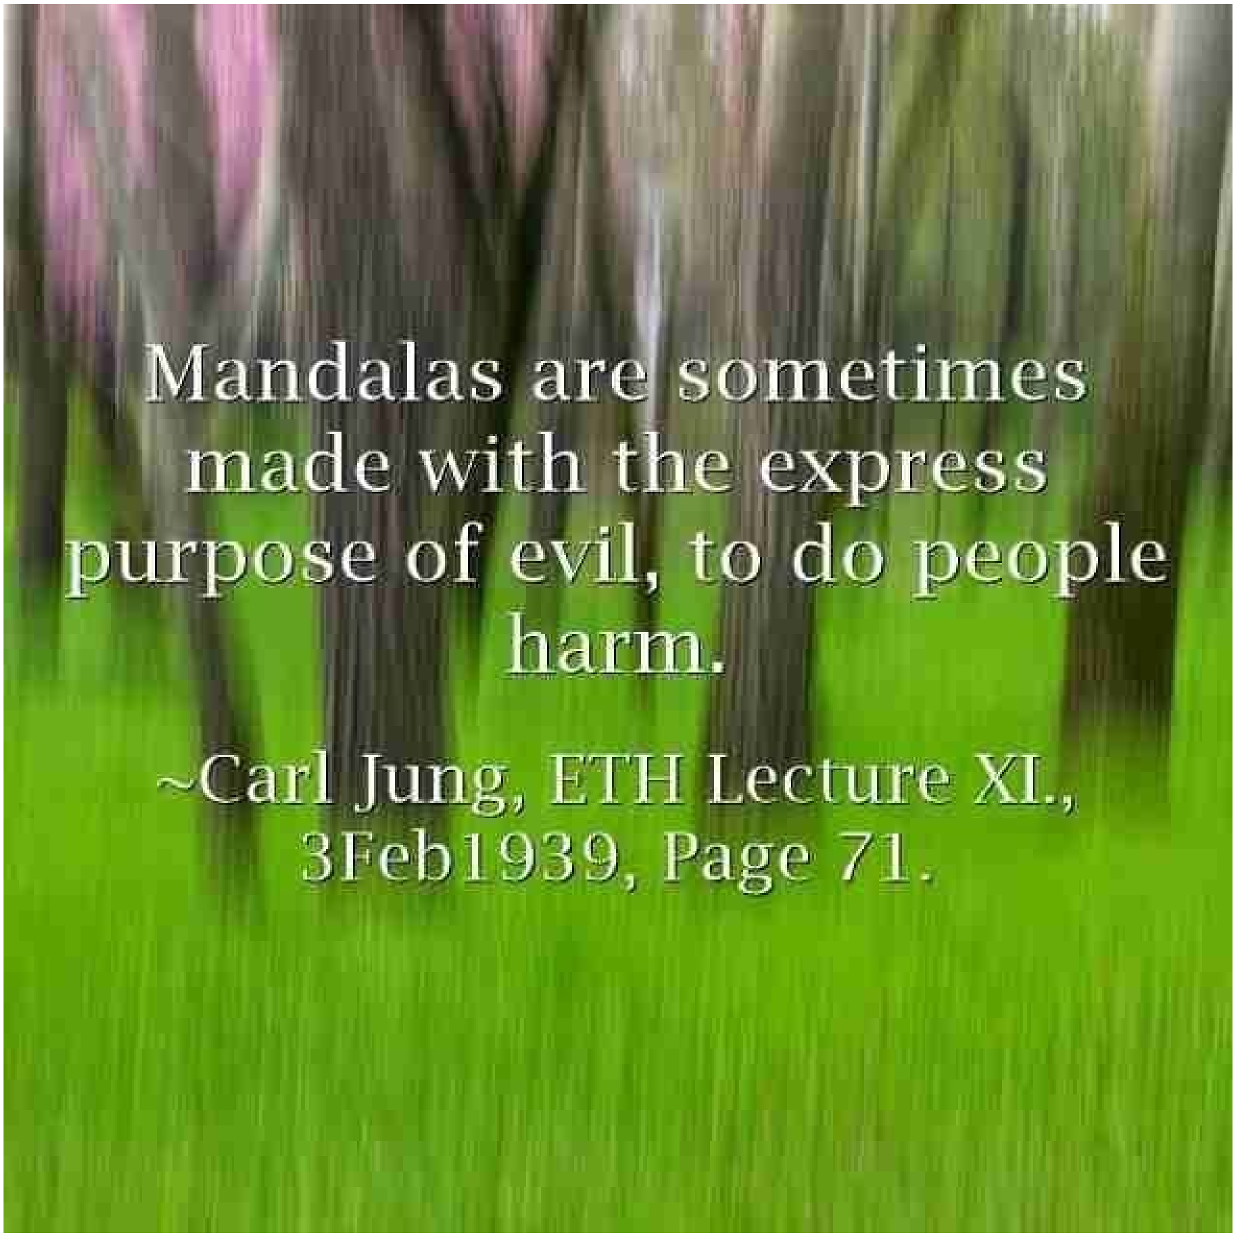
We are in a bad situation in the West for we are living as decapitated heads. The intellect is indispensable in order to understand, but you must feel yourselves that our text is not just related to the head, it arises from whole man. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 71.



The European who practises Yoga does not know what he is doing. It has a bad effect upon him, sooner or later he gets afraid and sometimes it even leads him over the edge into madness.

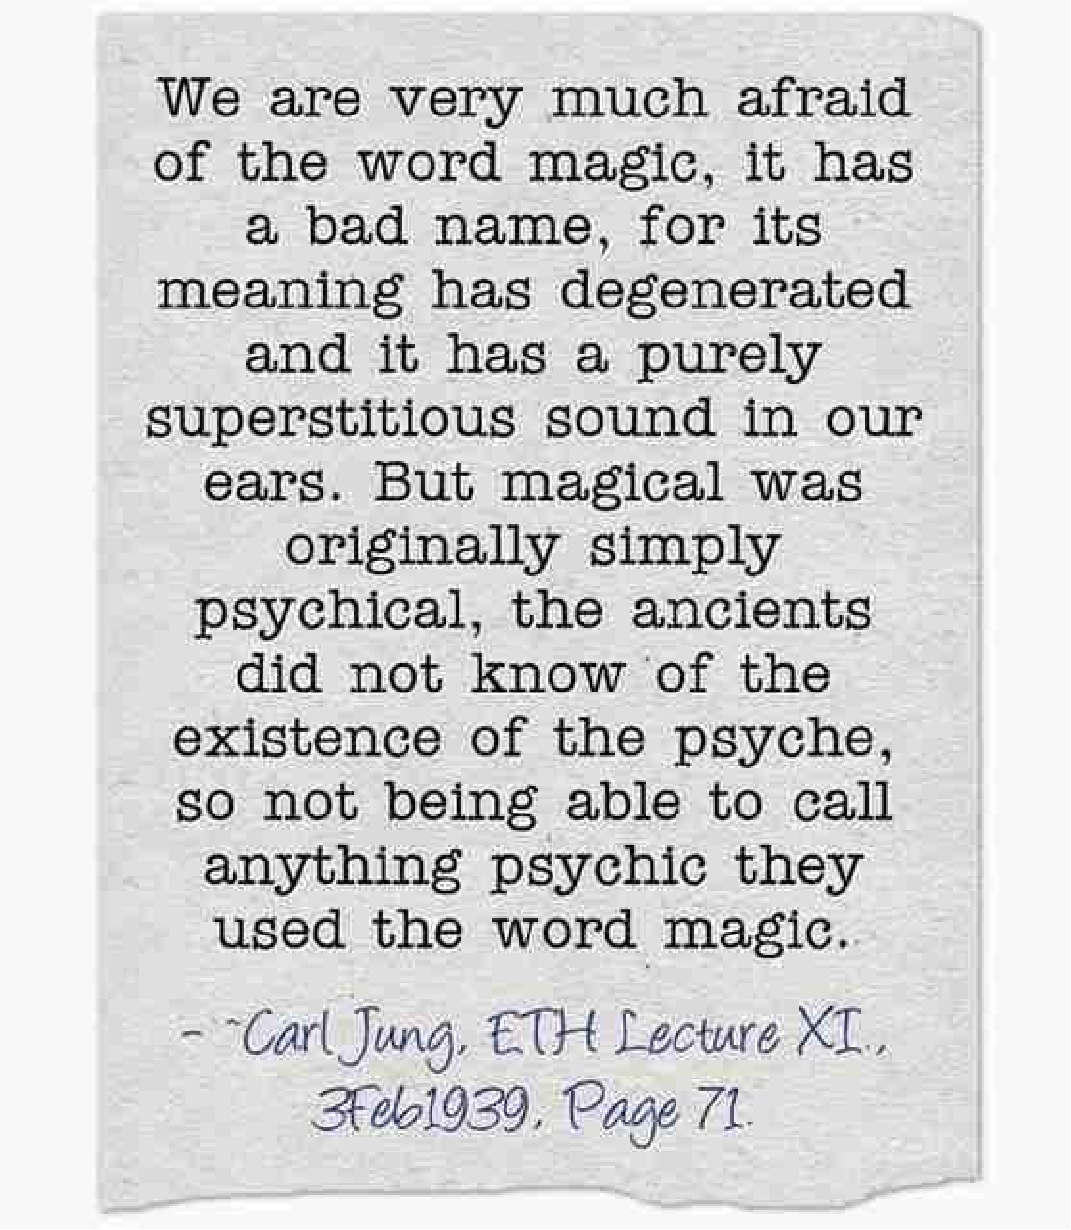
~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 71.

The European who practises Yoga does not know what he is doing. It has a bad effect upon him, sooner or later he gets afraid and sometimes it even leads him over the edge into madness. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 71.



Mandalas are sometimes made with the express purpose of evil, to do people harm.
~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 71.

Mandalas are sometimes made with the express purpose of evil, to do people harm. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 71.



We are very much afraid of the word magic, it has a bad name, for its meaning has degenerated and it has a purely superstitious sound in our ears. But magical was originally simply psychical, the ancients did not know of the existence of the psyche, so not being able to call anything psychic they used the word magic.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 71.

We are very much afraid of the word magic, it has a bad name, for its meaning has degenerated and it has a purely superstitious sound in our ears. But magical was originally simply psychical, the ancients did not know of the existence of the psyche, so not being able to call anything psychic they used the word magic. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 71.

Modern philosophers philosophise with the head alone about man, but the old philosophy came from the whole man.

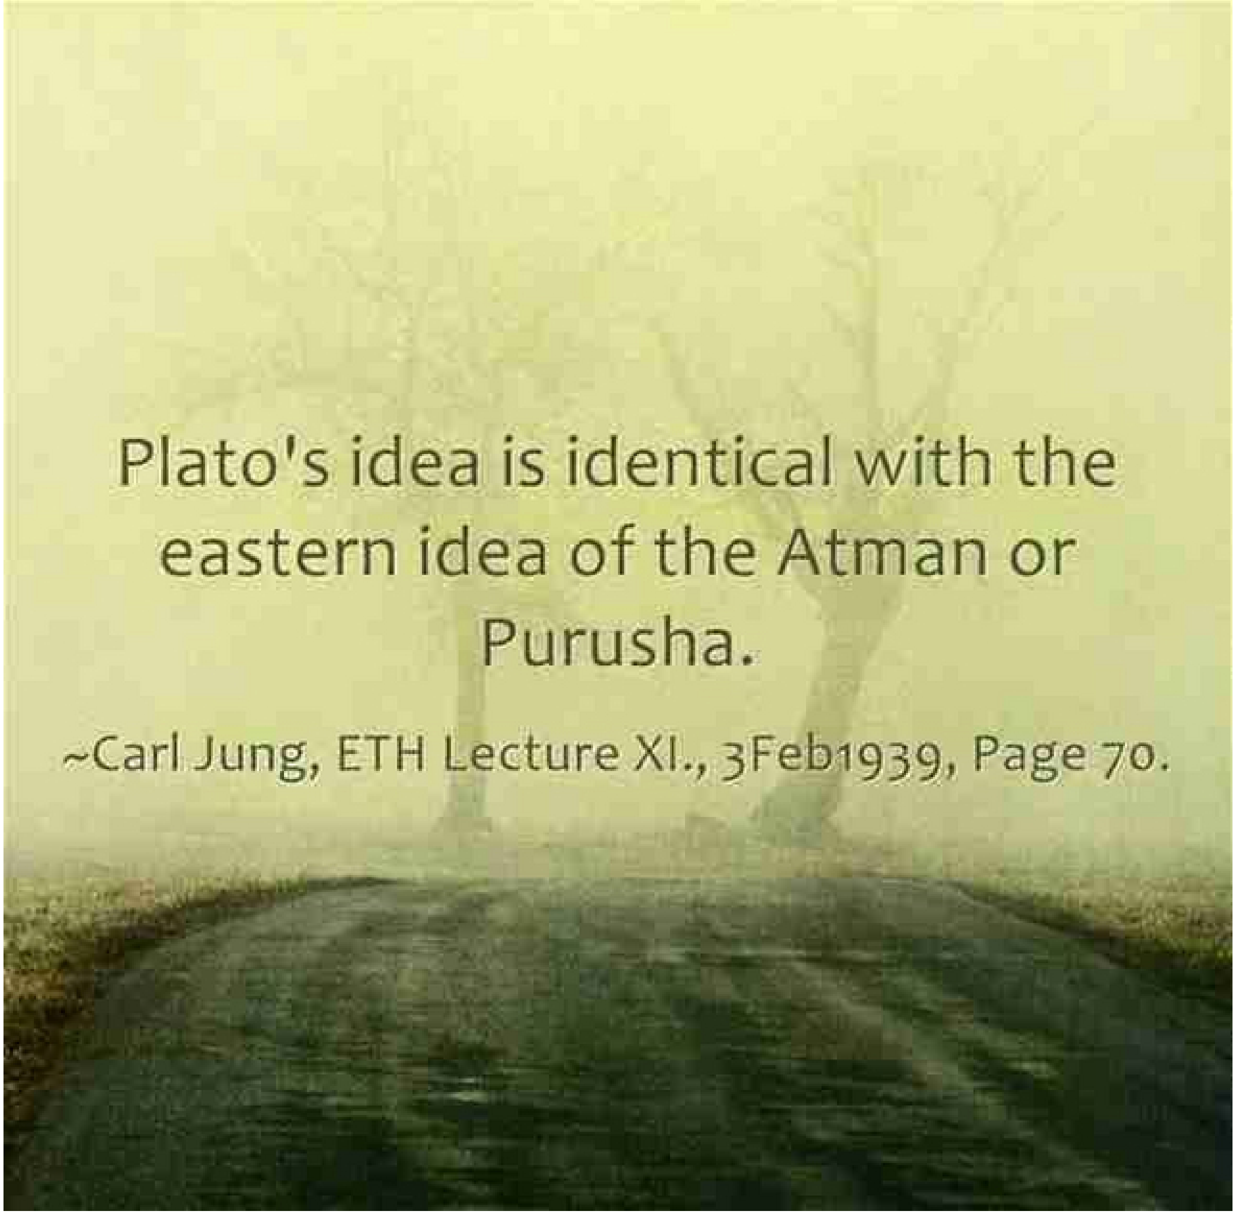
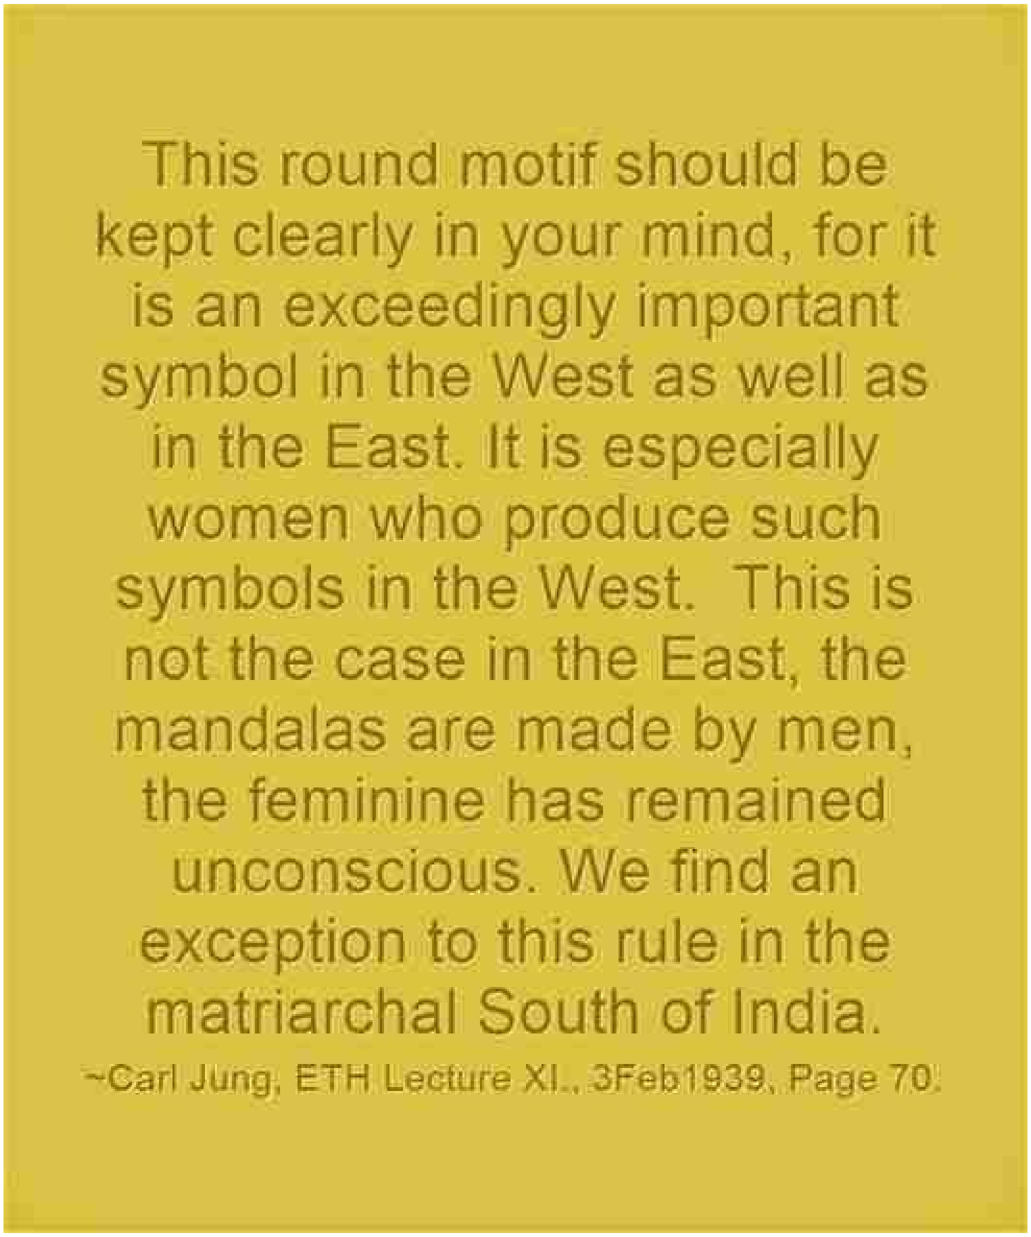
~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939,
Page 71.

Modern philosophers philosophise with the head alone about man, but the old philosophy came from the whole man. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 71.



Plato's idea is identical with the eastern idea of the Atman or Purusha.
~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 70.

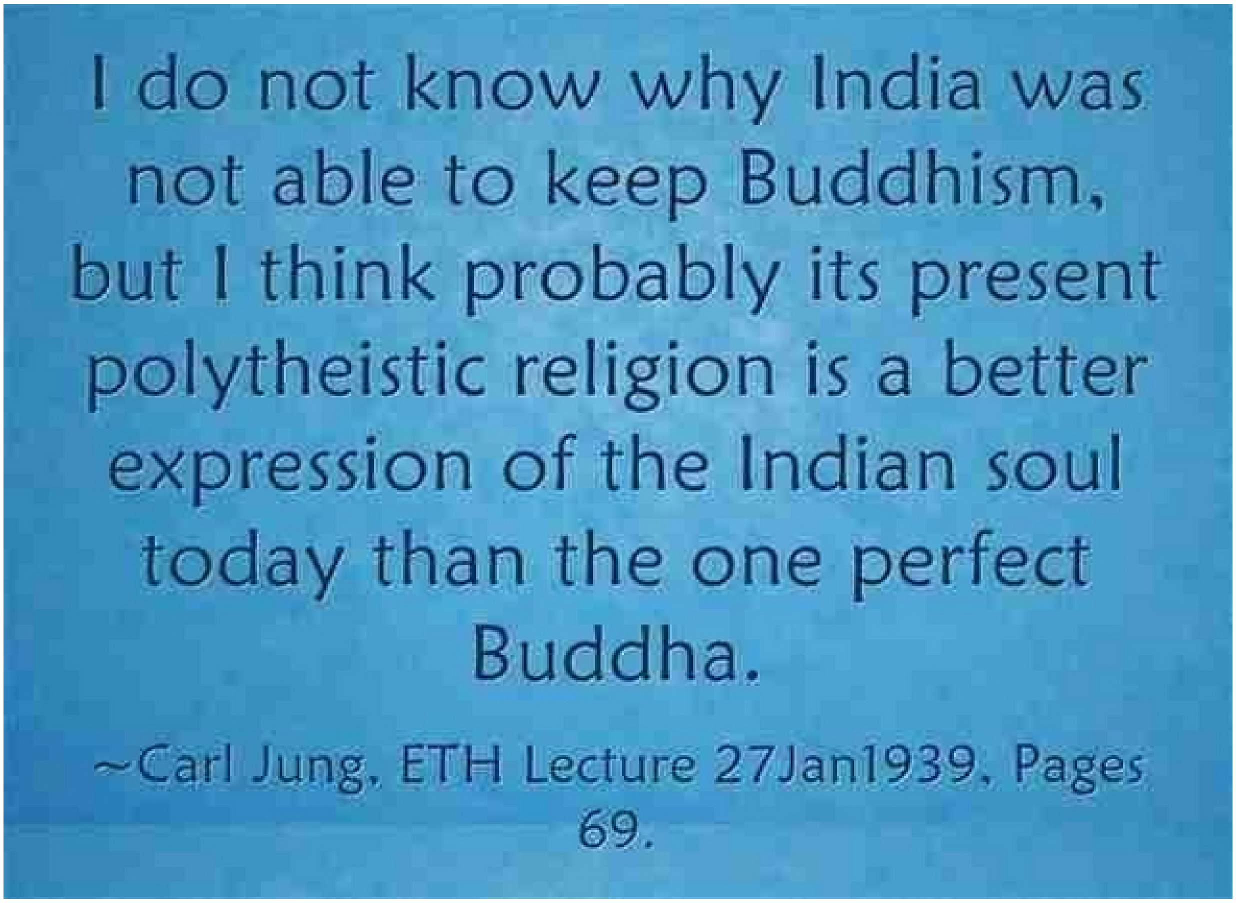
Plato’s idea is identical with the eastern idea of the Atman or Purusha. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 3Feb1939, Page 70.



This round motif should be kept clearly in your mind, for it is an exceedingly important symbol in the West as well as in the East. It is especially women who produce such symbols in the West. This is not the case in the East, the mandalas are made by men, the feminine has remained unconscious. We find an exception to this rule in the matriarchal South of India.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 70.

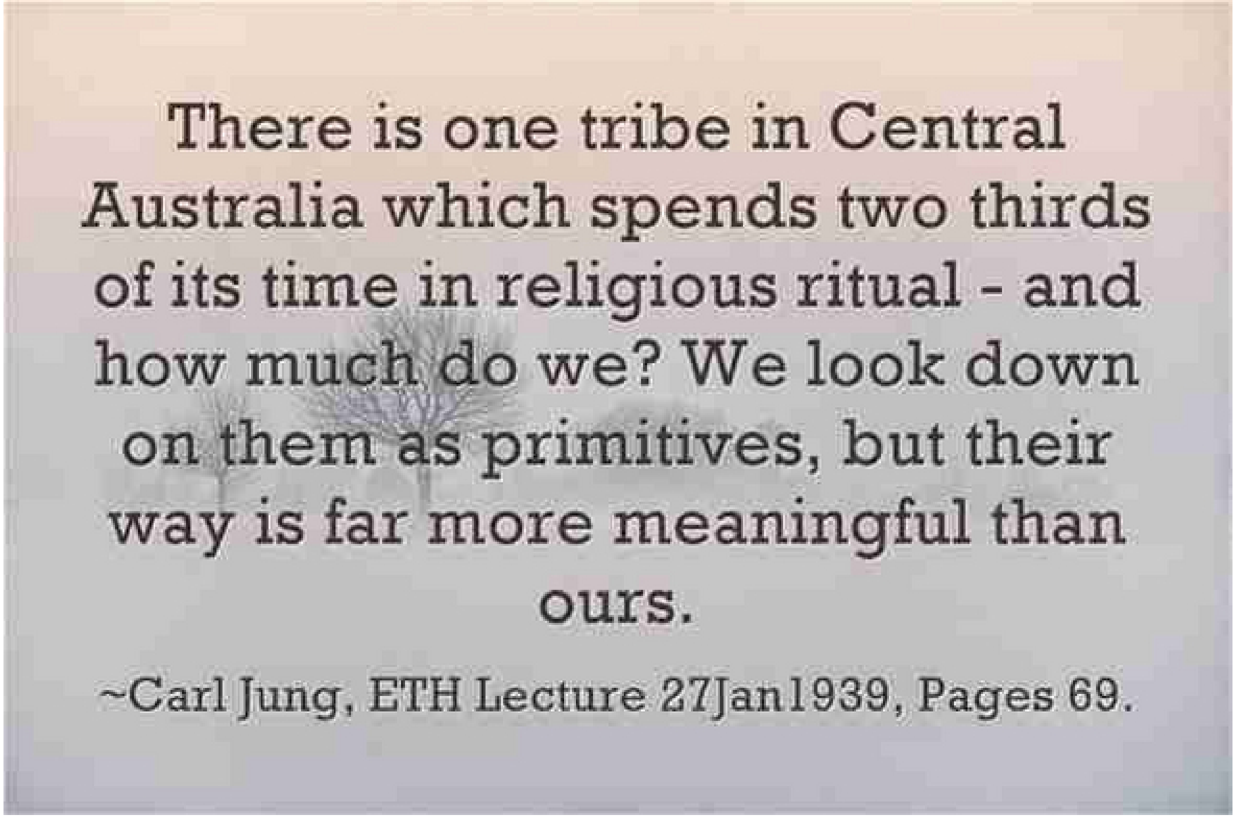
This round motif should be kept clearly in your mind, for it is an exceedingly important symbol in the West as well as in the East. It is especially women who produce such symbols in the West. This is not the case in the East, the mandalas are made by men, the feminine has remained unconscious. We find an exception to this rule in the matriarchal South of India. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI., 3Feb1939, Page 70.



I do not know why India was not able to keep Buddhism, but I think probably its present polytheistic religion is a better expression of the Indian soul today than the one perfect Buddha.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 69.

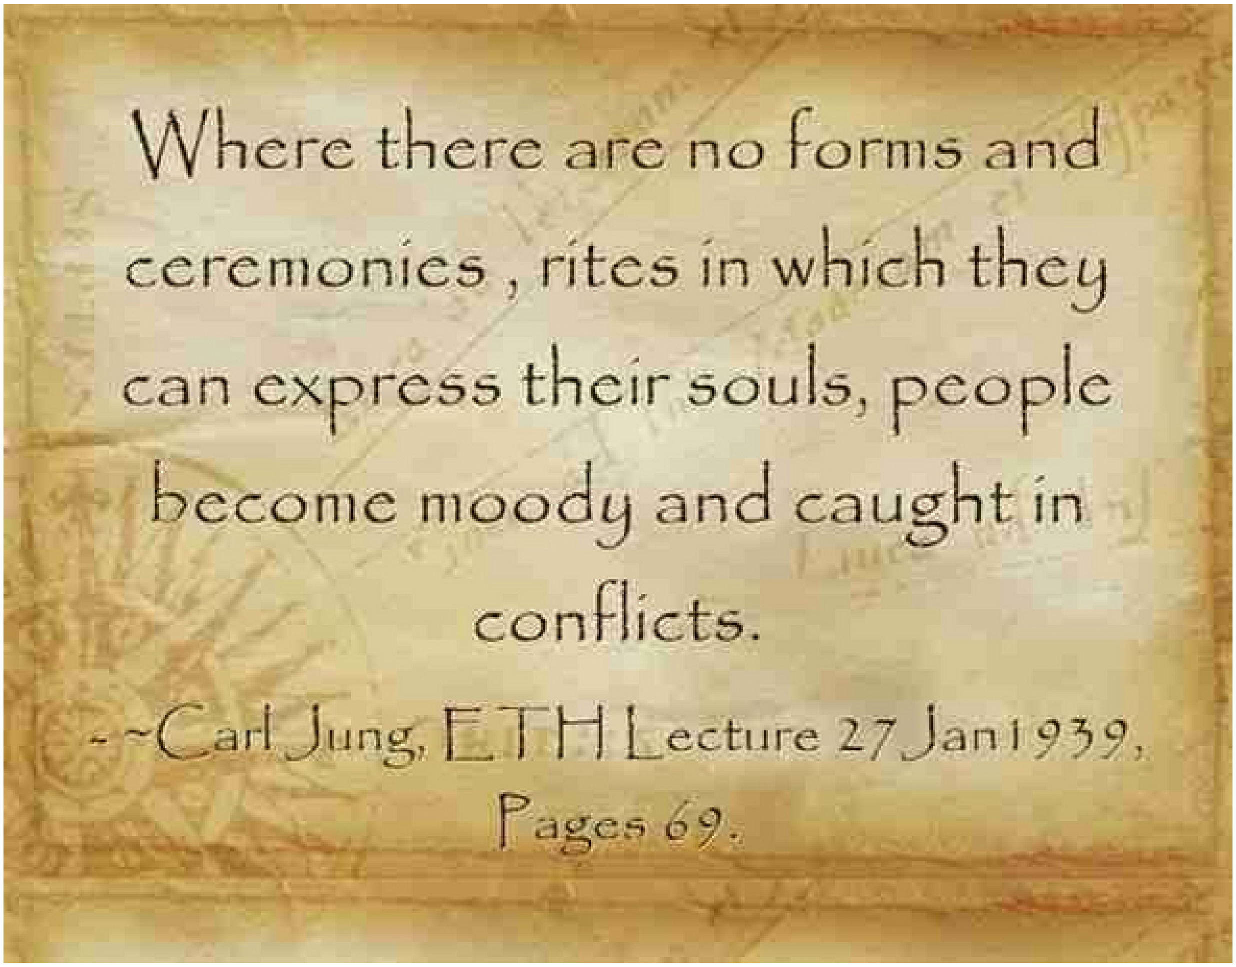
I do not know why India was not able to keep Buddhism, but I think probably its present polytheistic religion is a better expression of the Indian soul today than the one perfect Buddha. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 69.



There is one tribe in Central Australia which spends two thirds of its time in religious ritual - and how much do we? We look down on them as primitives, but their way is far more meaningful than ours.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 69.

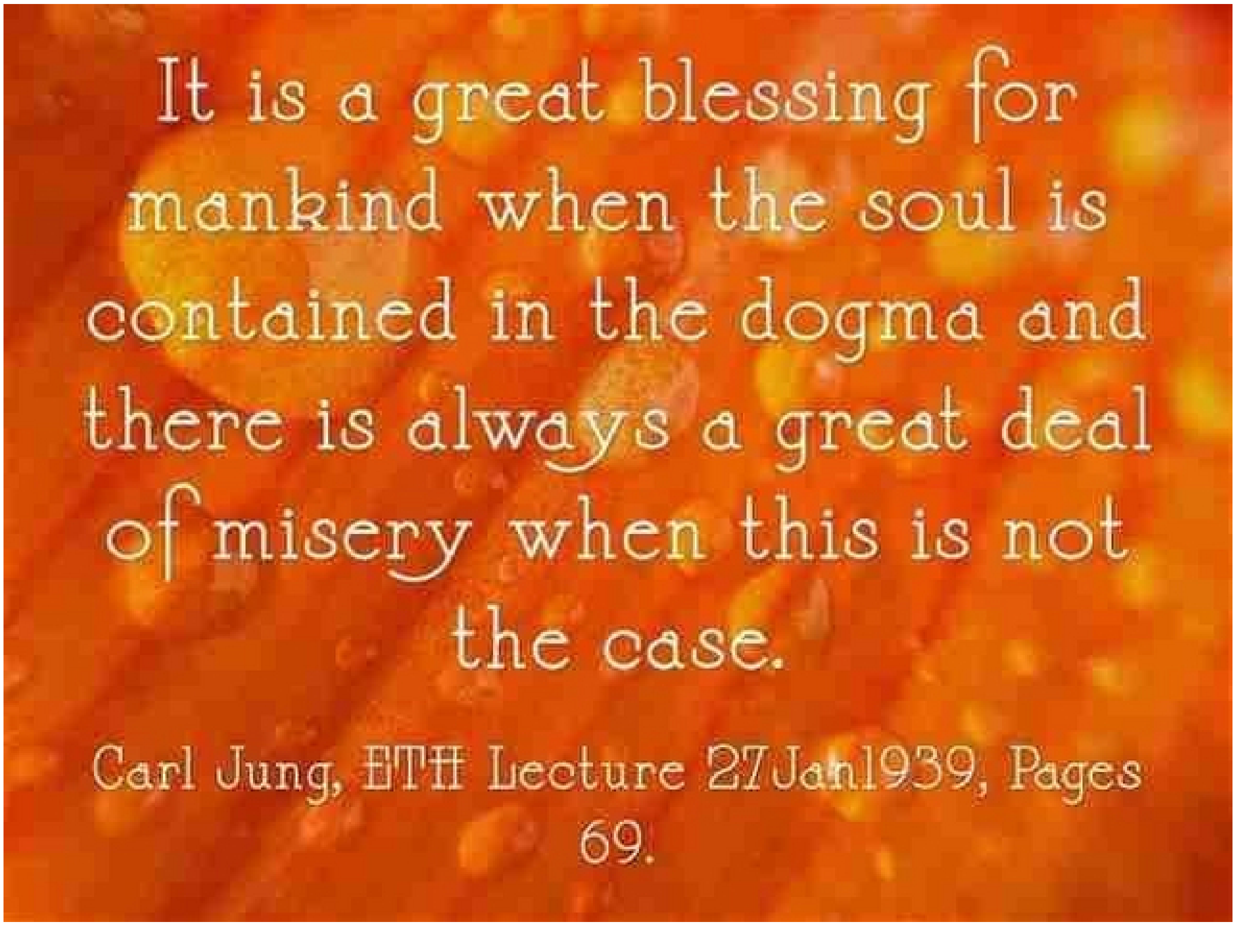
There is one tribe in Central Australia which spends two thirds of its time in religious ritual - and how much do we? We look down on them as primitives, but their way is far more meaningful than ours. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 69.



Where there are no forms and ceremonies , rites in which they can express their souls, people become moody and caught in conflicts.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan1939, Pages 69.

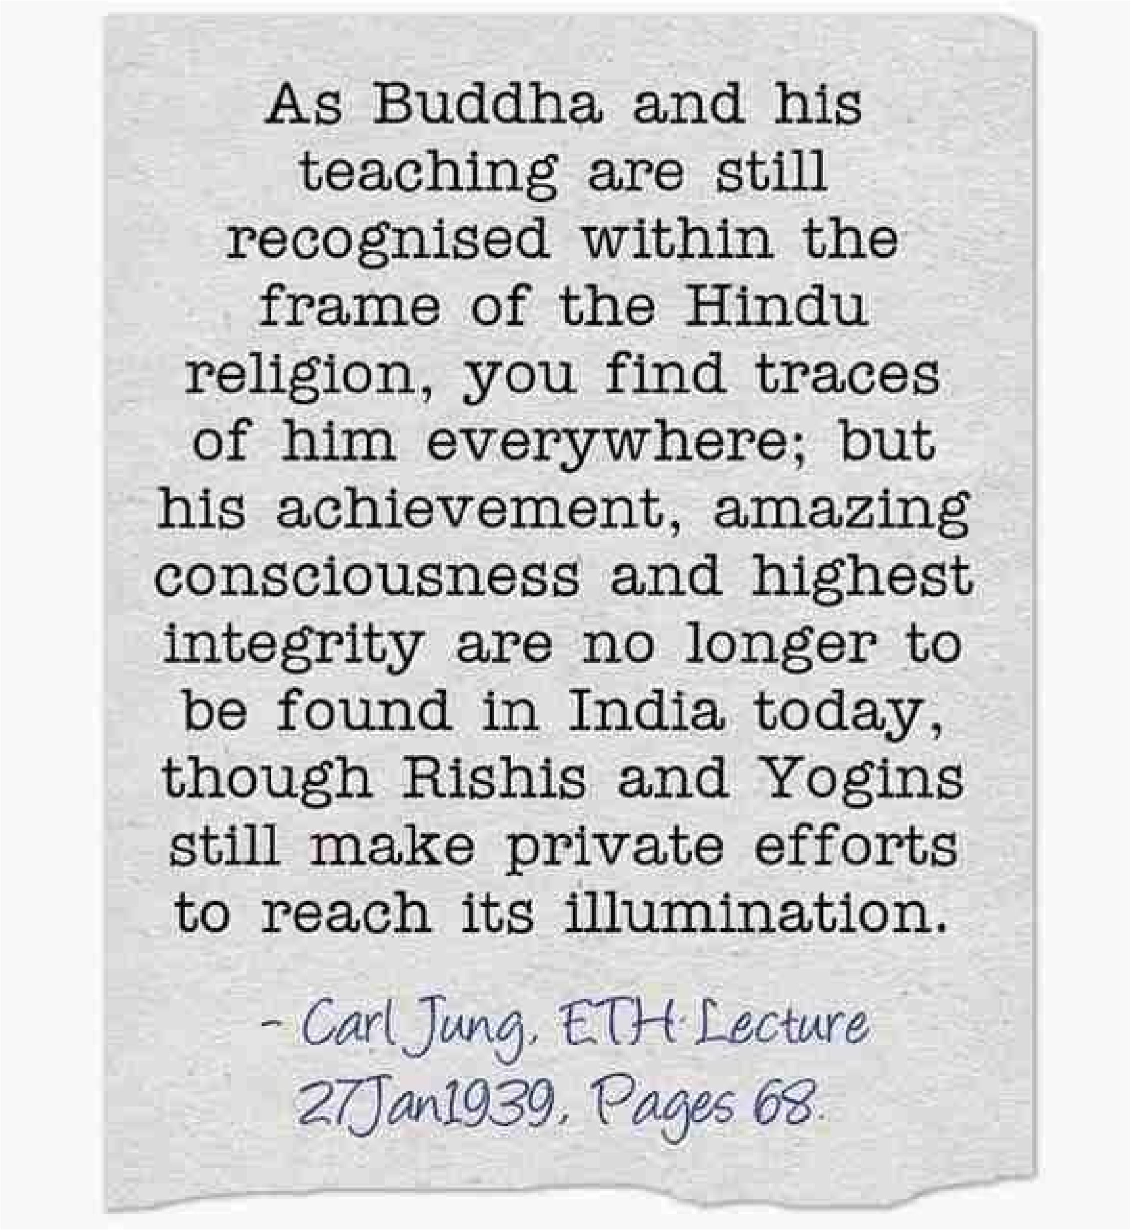
Where there are no forms and ceremonies , rites in which they can express their souls, people become moody and caught in conflicts. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 69.



It is a great blessing for mankind when the soul is contained in the dogma and there is always a great deal of misery when this is not the case.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 69.

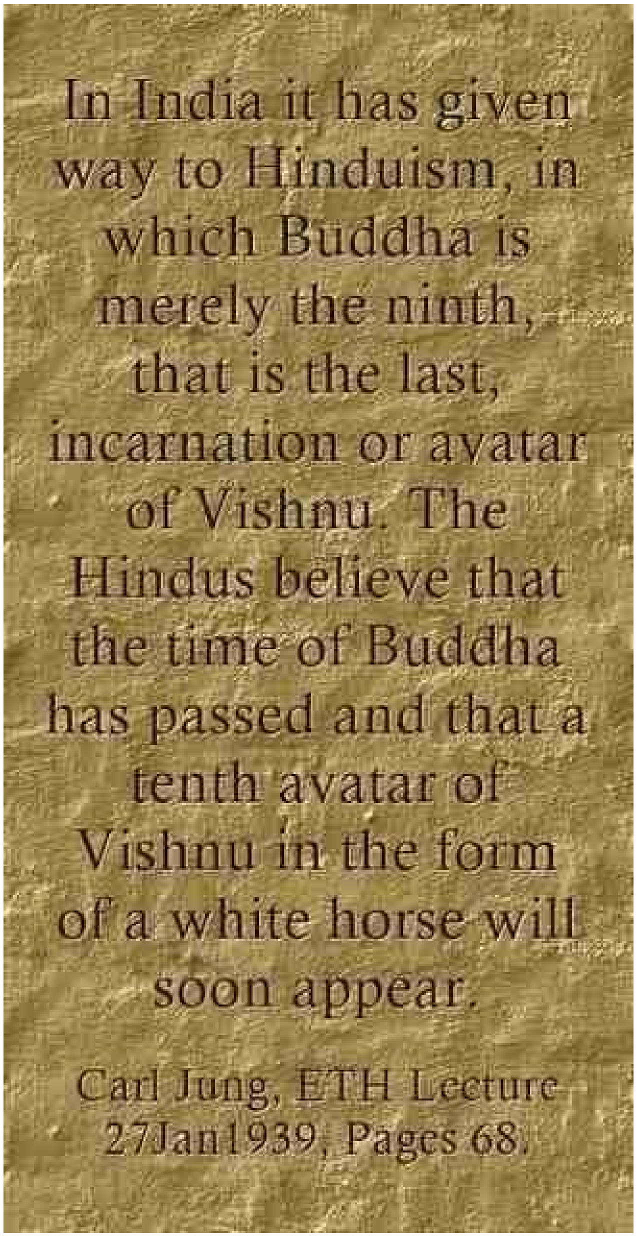
It is a great blessing for mankind when the soul is contained in the dogma and there is always a great deal of misery when this is not the case. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 69.



As Buddha and his teaching are still recognised within the frame of the Hindu religion, you find traces of him everywhere; but his achievement, amazing consciousness and highest integrity are no longer to be found in India today, though Rishis and Yogins still make private efforts to reach its illumination.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 68.

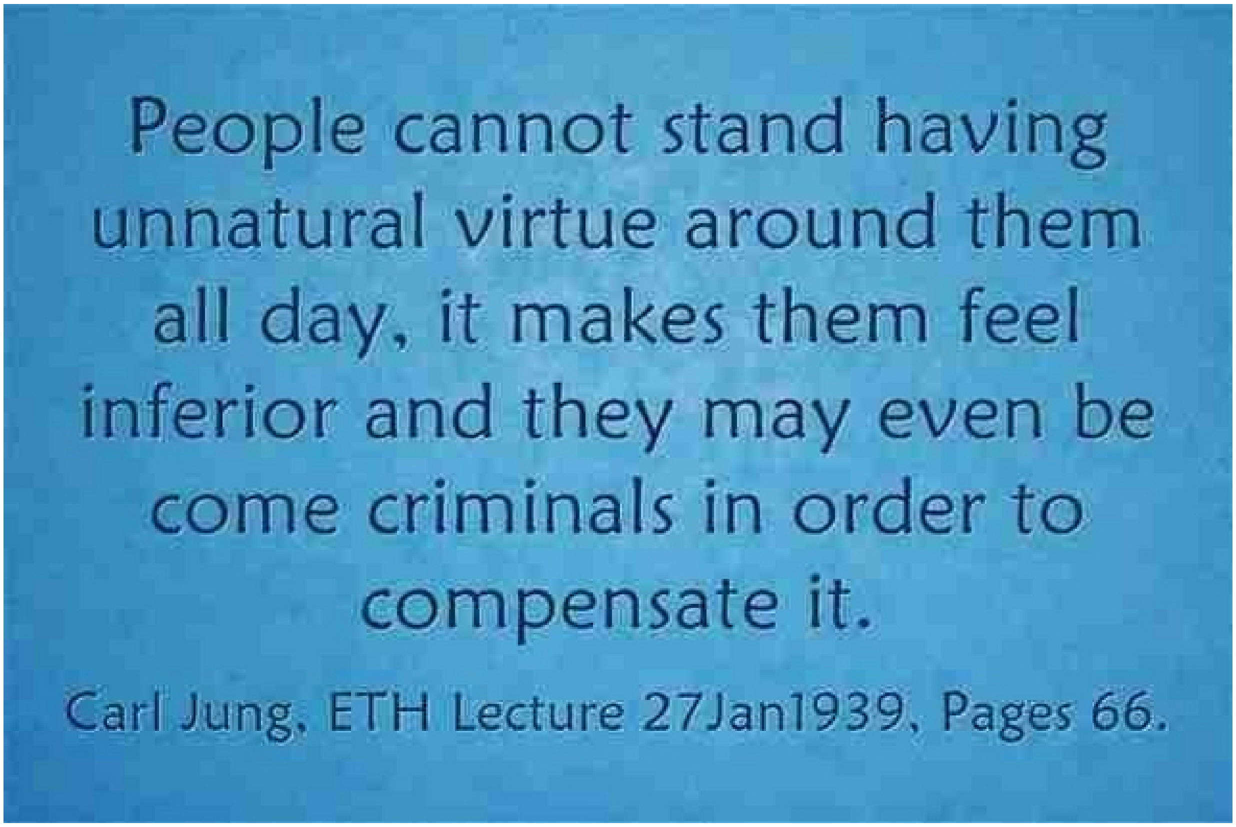
As Buddha and his teaching are still recognized within the frame of the Hindu religion, you find traces of him everywhere; but his achievement, amazing consciousness and highest integrity are no longer to be found in India today, though Rishis and Yogins still make private efforts to reach its illumination. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 68.



In India it has given way to Hinduism, in which Buddha is merely the ninth, that is the last, incarnation or avatar of Vishnu. The Hindus believe that the time of Buddha has passed and that a tenth avatar of Vishnu in the form of a white horse will soon appear.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 68.

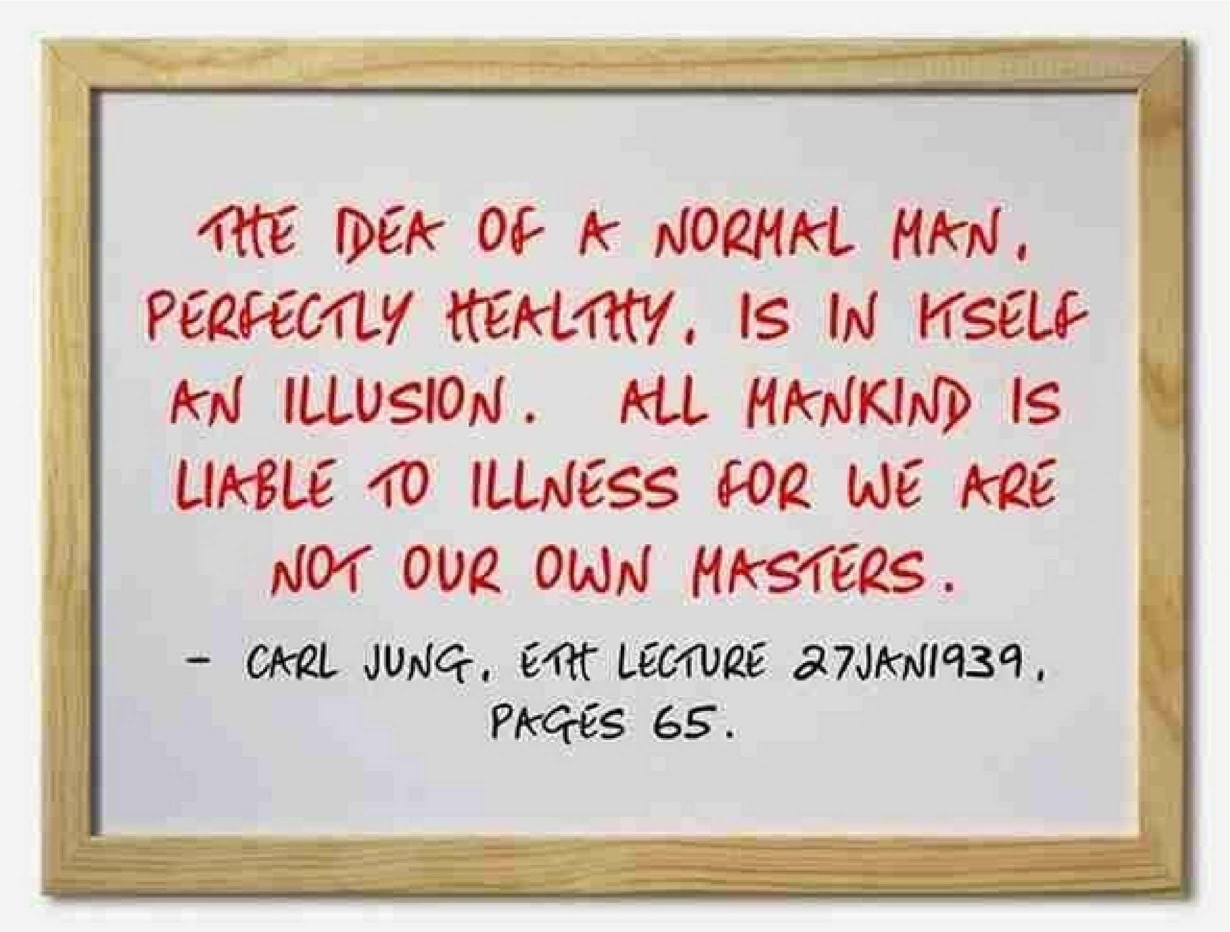
In India it has given way to Hinduism, in which Buddha is merely the ninth, that is the last, incarnation or avatar of Vishnu. The Hindus believe that the time of Buddha has passed and that a tenth avatar of Vishnu in the form of a white horse will soon appear. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 68.



People cannot stand having unnatural virtue around them all day, it makes them feel inferior and they may even be come criminals in order to compensate it.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 66.

People cannot stand having unnatural virtue around them all day, it makes them feel inferior and they may even be come criminals in order to compensate it. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 66.



THE IDEA OF A NORMAL MAN,
PERFECTLY HEALTHY, IS IN ITSELF
AN ILLUSION. ALL MANKIND IS LIABLE TO ILLNESS FOR WE ARE NOT OUR OWN MASTERS.

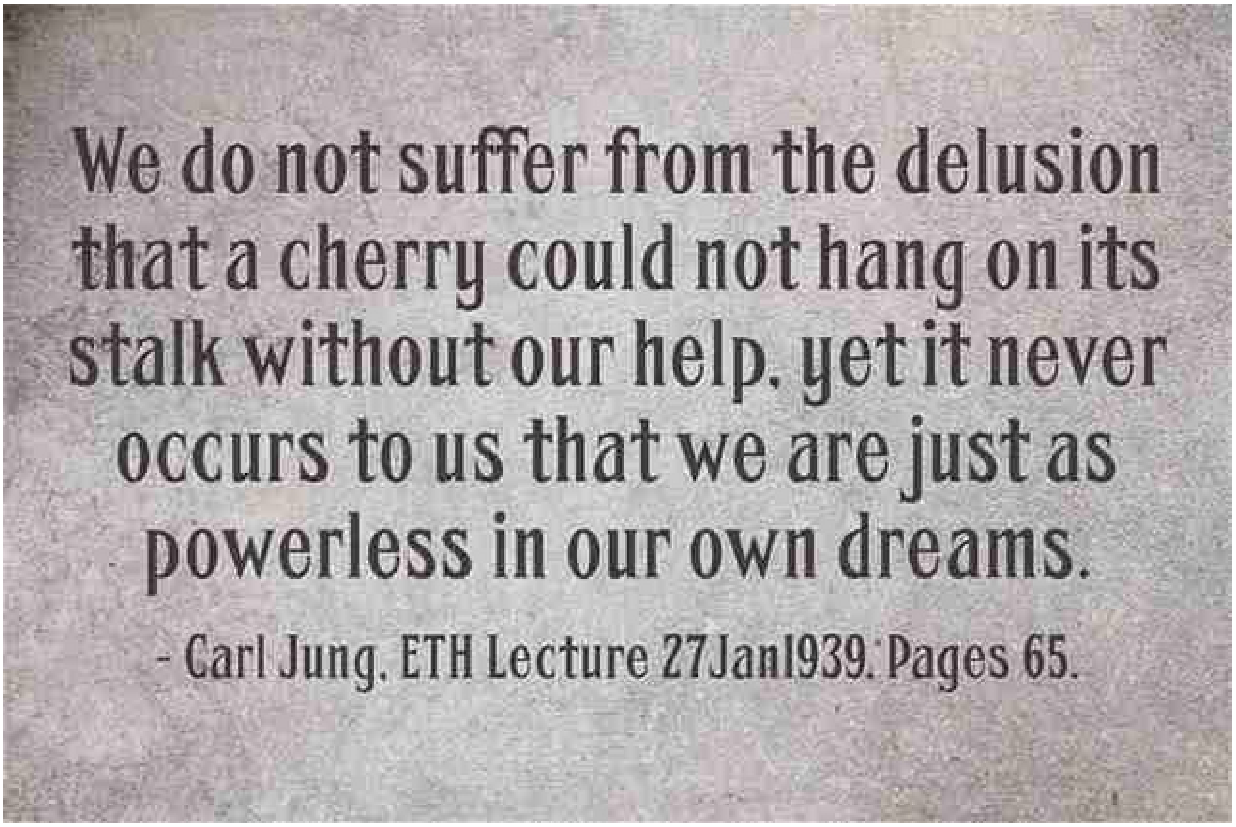
– CARL JUNG, ETH LECTURE 27JAN1939,
PAGES 65.

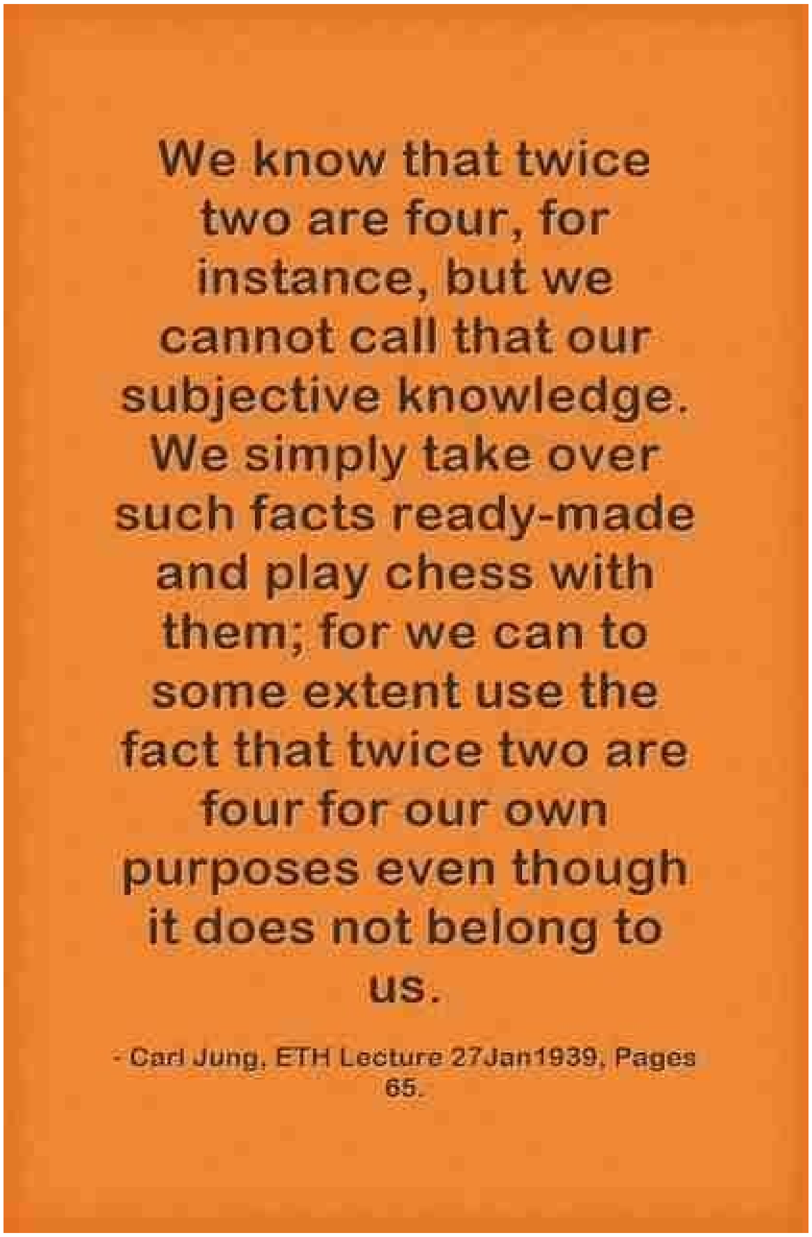
The idea of a normal man, perfectly healthy, is in itself an illusion. All mankind is liable to illness for we are not our own masters. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 65.



We do not suffer from the delusion that a cherry could not hang on its stalk without our help, yet it never occurs to us that we are just as powerless in our own dreams.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 65.

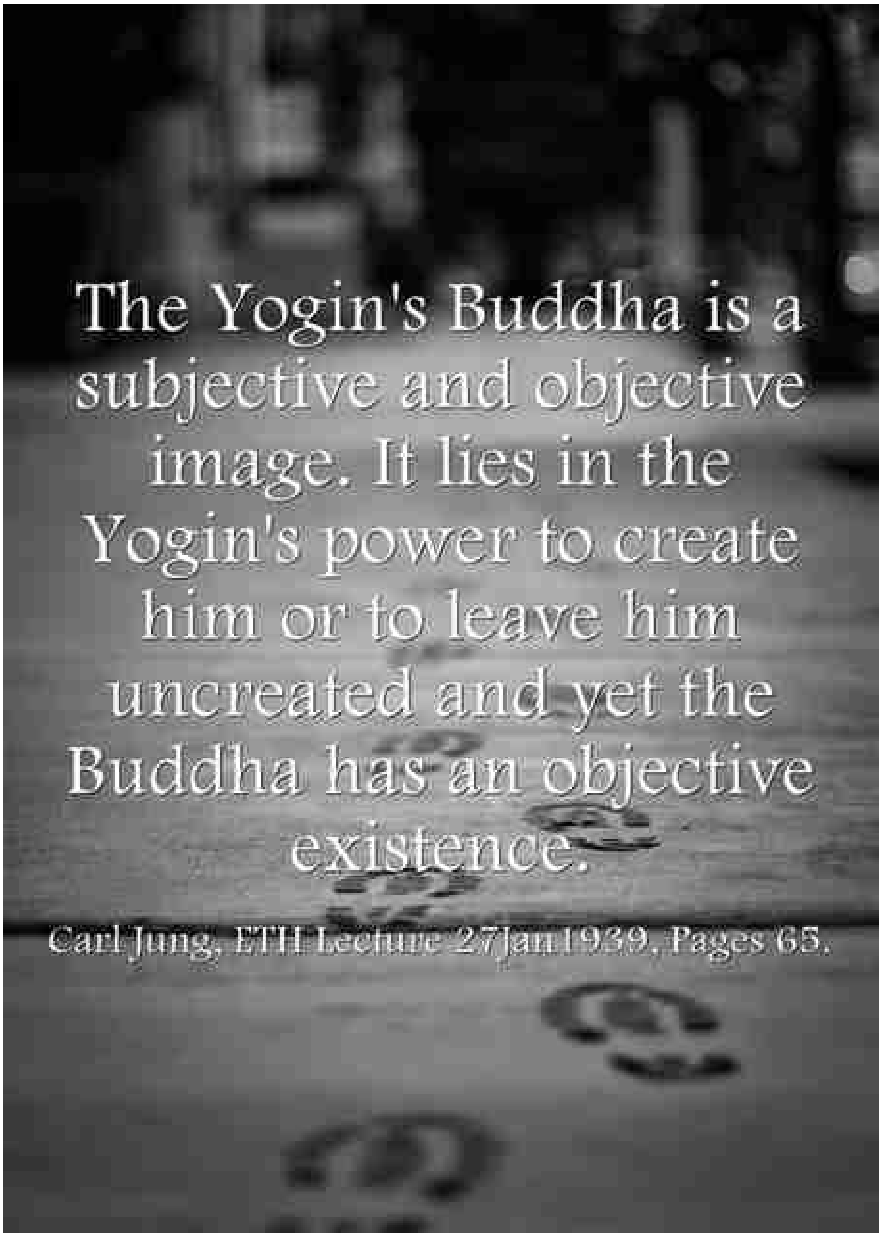
We do not suffer from the delusion that a cherry could not hang on its stalk without our help, yet it never occurs to us that we are just as powerless in our own dreams. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 65.



We know that twice two are four, for instance, but we cannot call that our subjective knowledge. We simply take over such facts ready-made and play chess with them; for we can to some extent use the fact that twice two are four for our own purposes even though it does not belong to us.

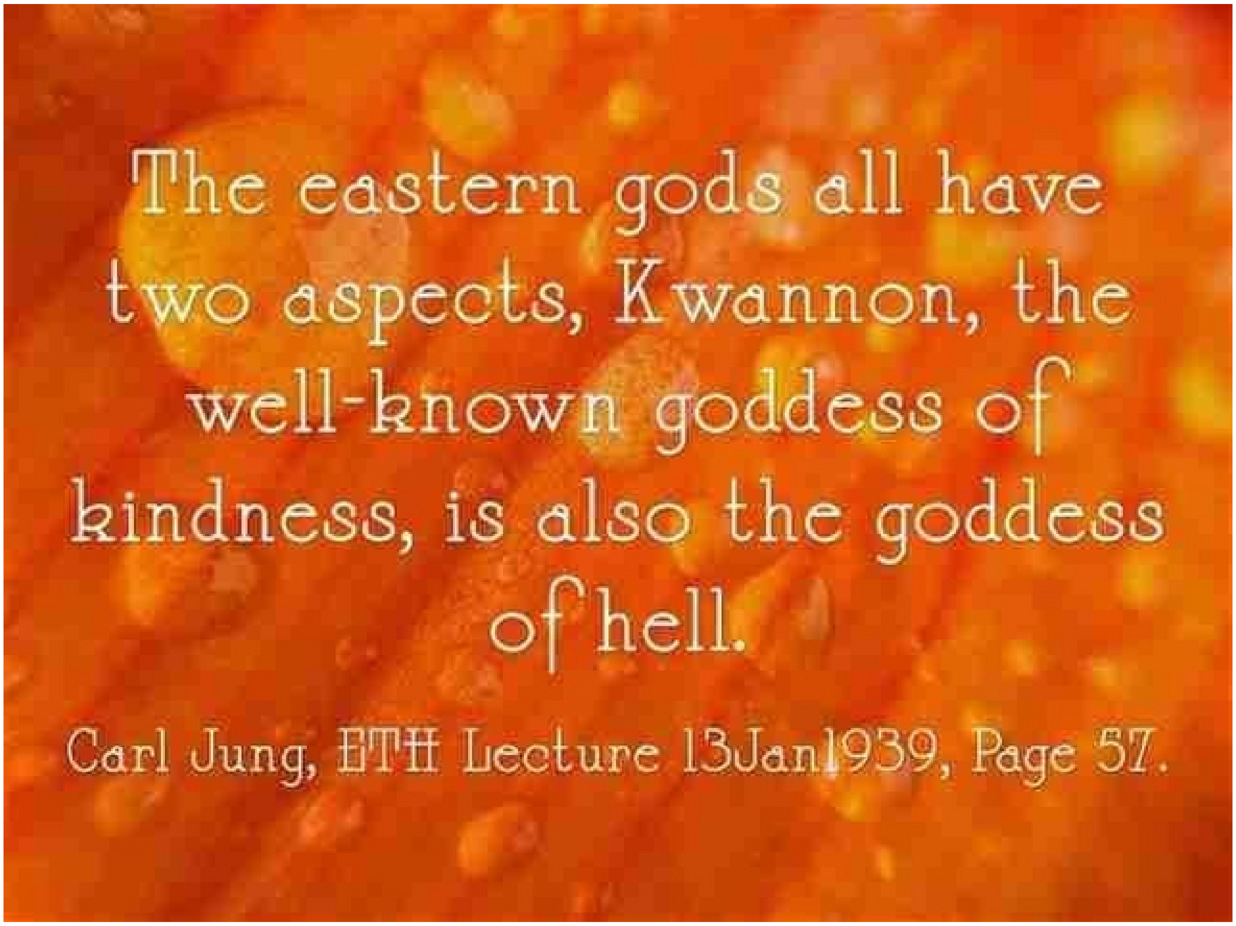
- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 65.

We know that twice two are four, for instance, but we cannot call that our subjective knowledge. We simply take over such facts ready-made and play chess with them; for we can to some extent use the fact that twice two are four for our own purposes even though it does not belong to us. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 65.



The Yogin's Buddha is a subjective and objective image. It lies in the Yogin's power to create him or to leave him uncreated and yet the Buddha has an objective existence.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 65.

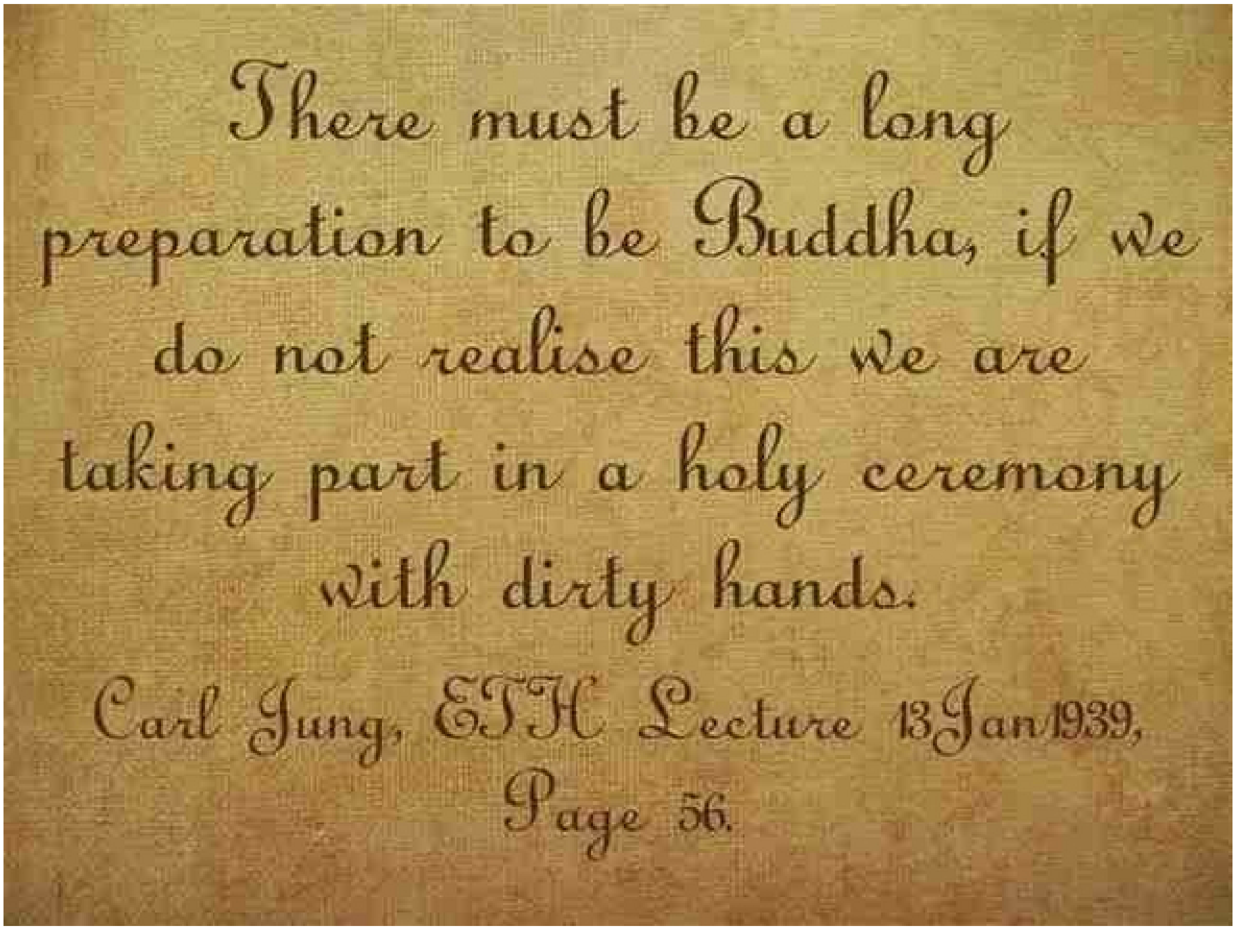
The Yogin’s Buddha is a subjective and objective image. It lies in the Yogin’s power to create him or to leave him uncreated and yet the Buddha has an objective existence. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27Jan1939, Pages 65.



The eastern gods all have two aspects, Kwannon, the well-known goddess of kindness, is also the goddess of hell.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 57.

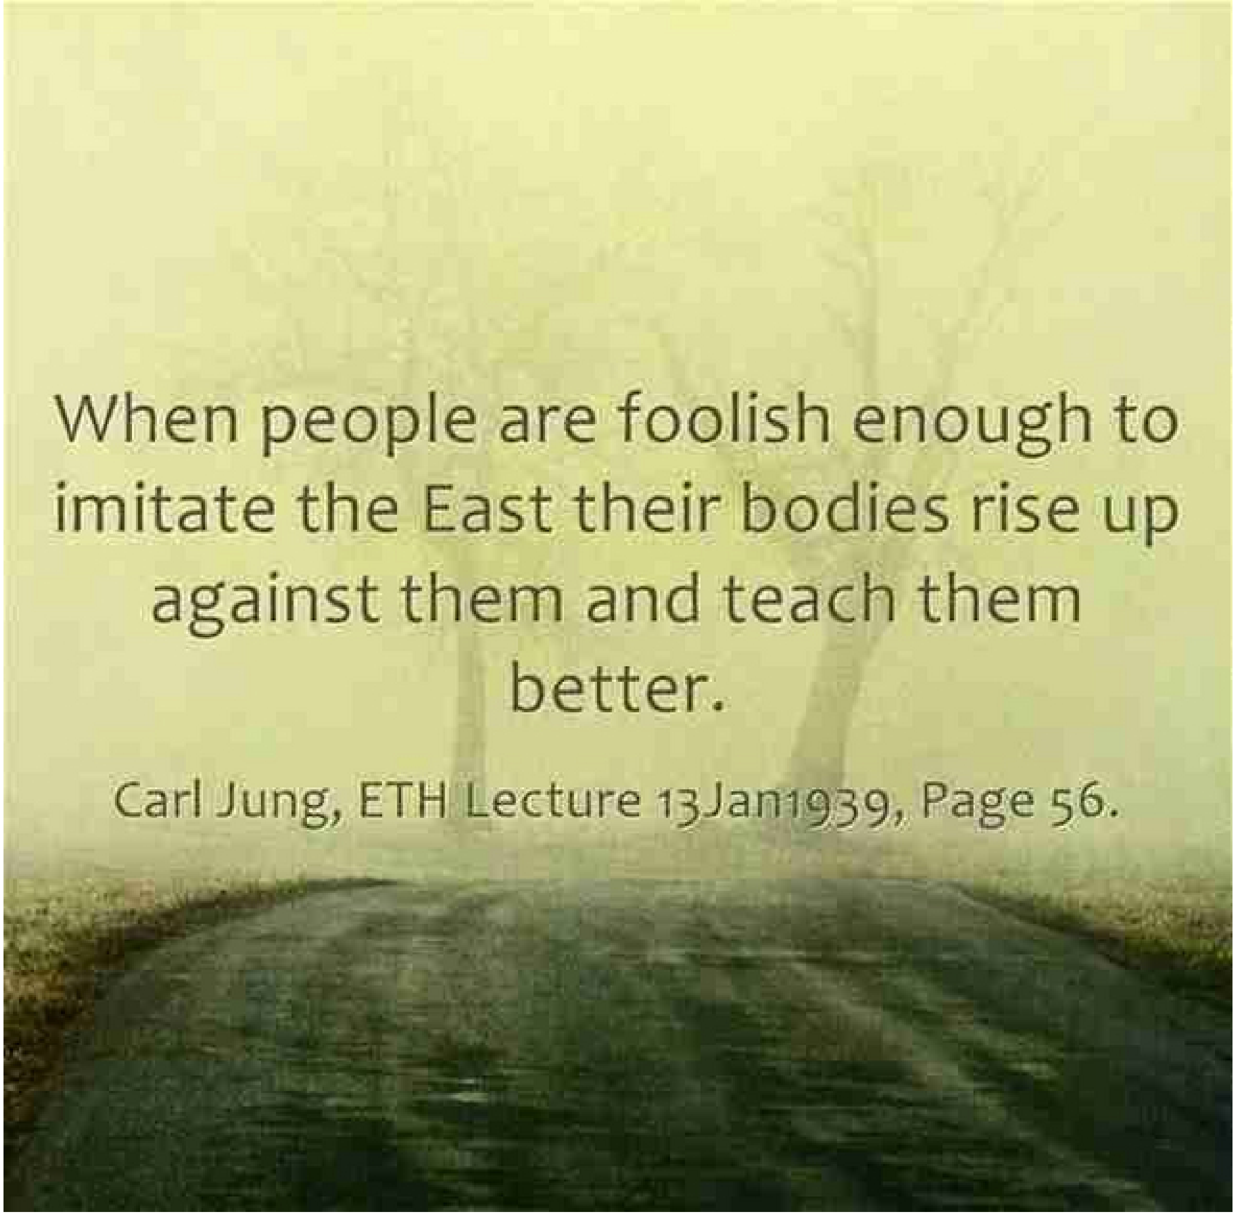
The eastern gods all have two aspects, Kwannon, the well-known goddess of kindness, is also the goddess of hell.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 57



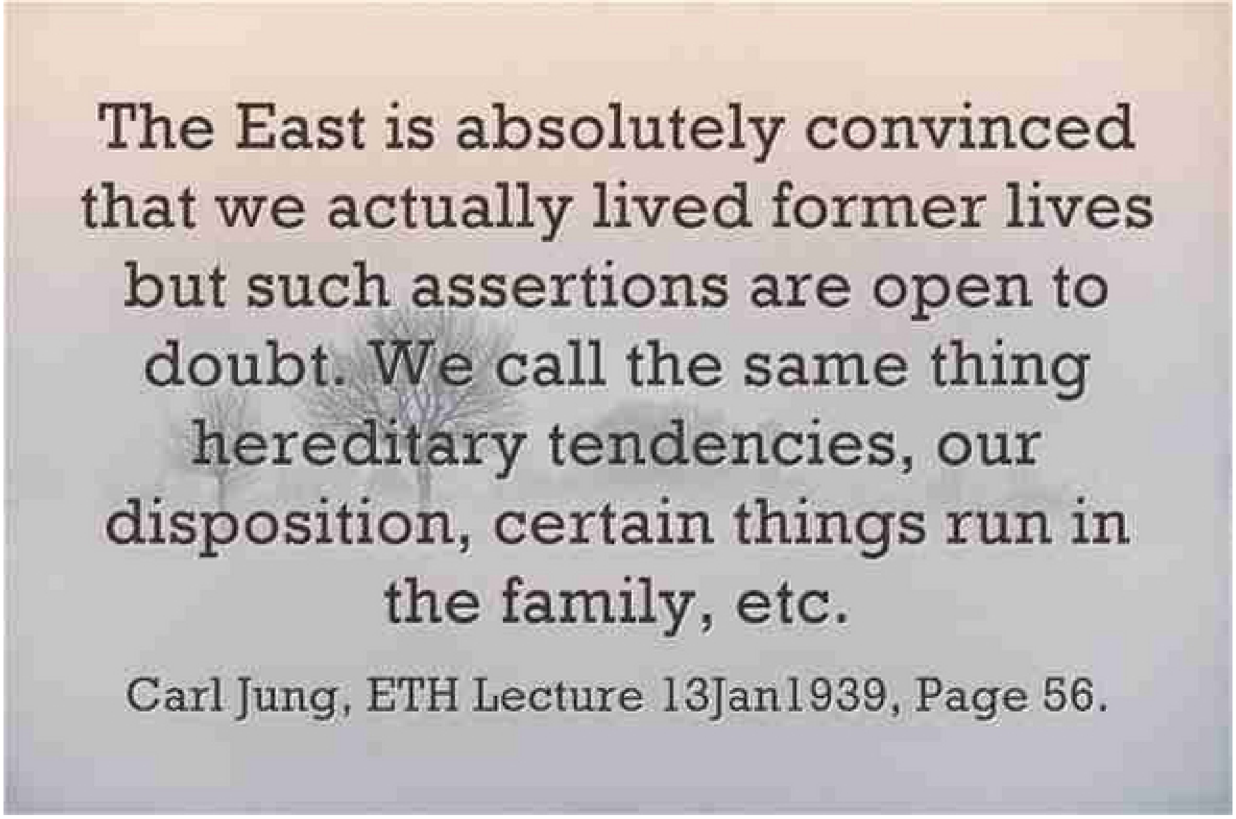
There must be a long preparation to be Buddha, if we do not realise this we are taking part in a holy ceremony with dirty hands.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 56.

.There must be a long preparation to be Buddha, if we do not realise this we are taking part in a holy ceremony with dirty hands. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 56.



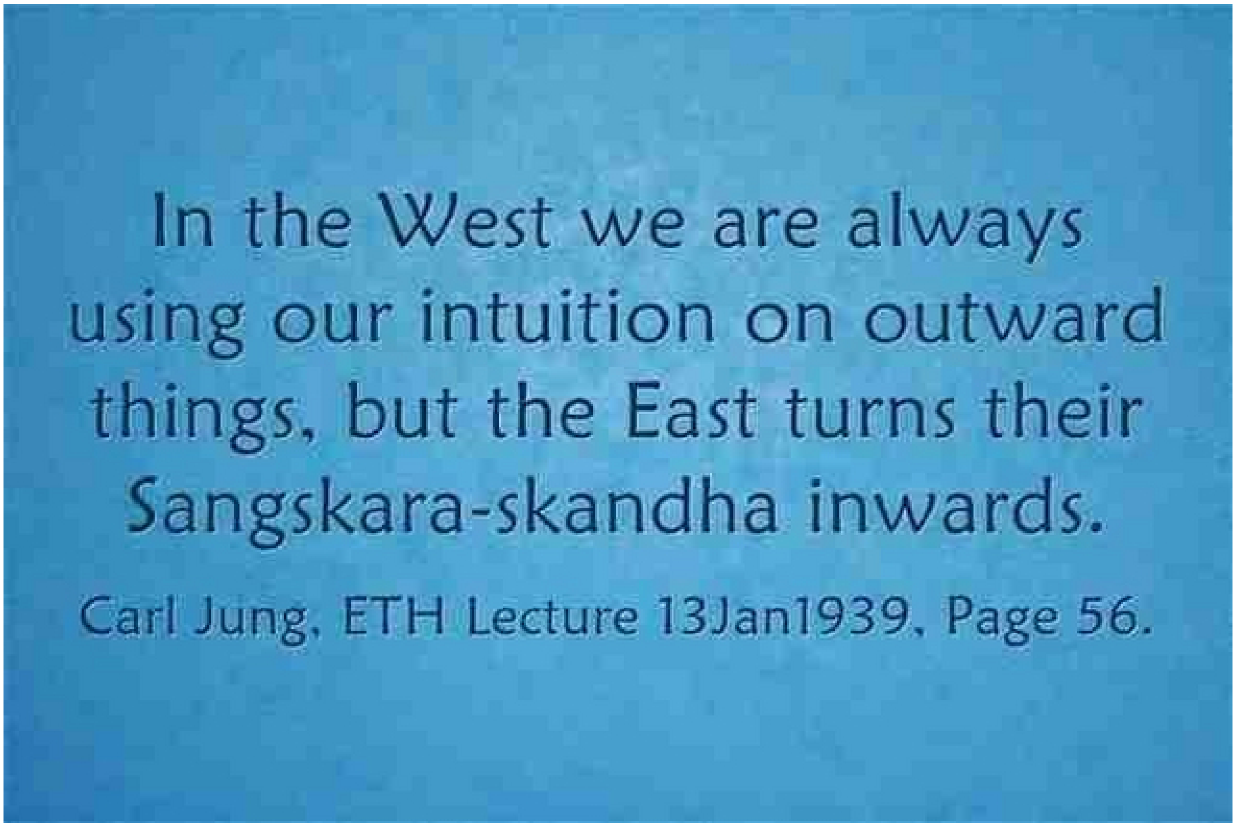
When people are foolish enough to imitate the East their bodies rise up against them and teach them better. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 56.



The East is absolutely convinced that we actually lived former lives but such assertions are open to doubt. We call the same thing hereditary tendencies, our disposition, certain things run in the family, etc.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 56.

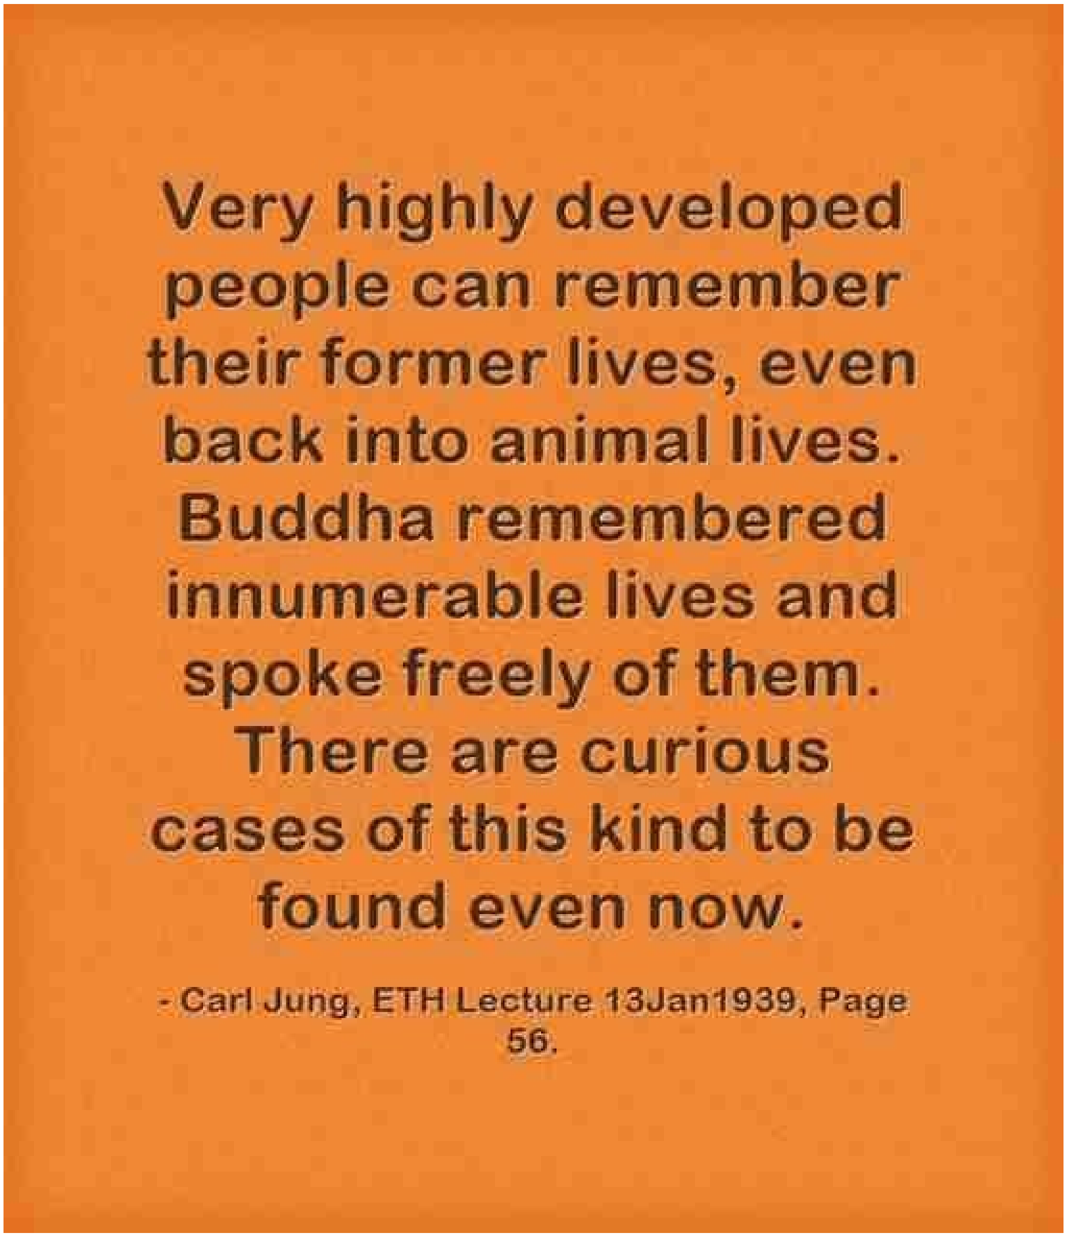
The East is absolutely convinced that we actually lived former lives but such assertions are open to doubt. We call the same thing hereditary tendencies, our disposition, certain things run in the family, etc. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 56.



In the West we are always using our intuition on outward things, but the East turns their Sangskara-skandha inwards.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 56.

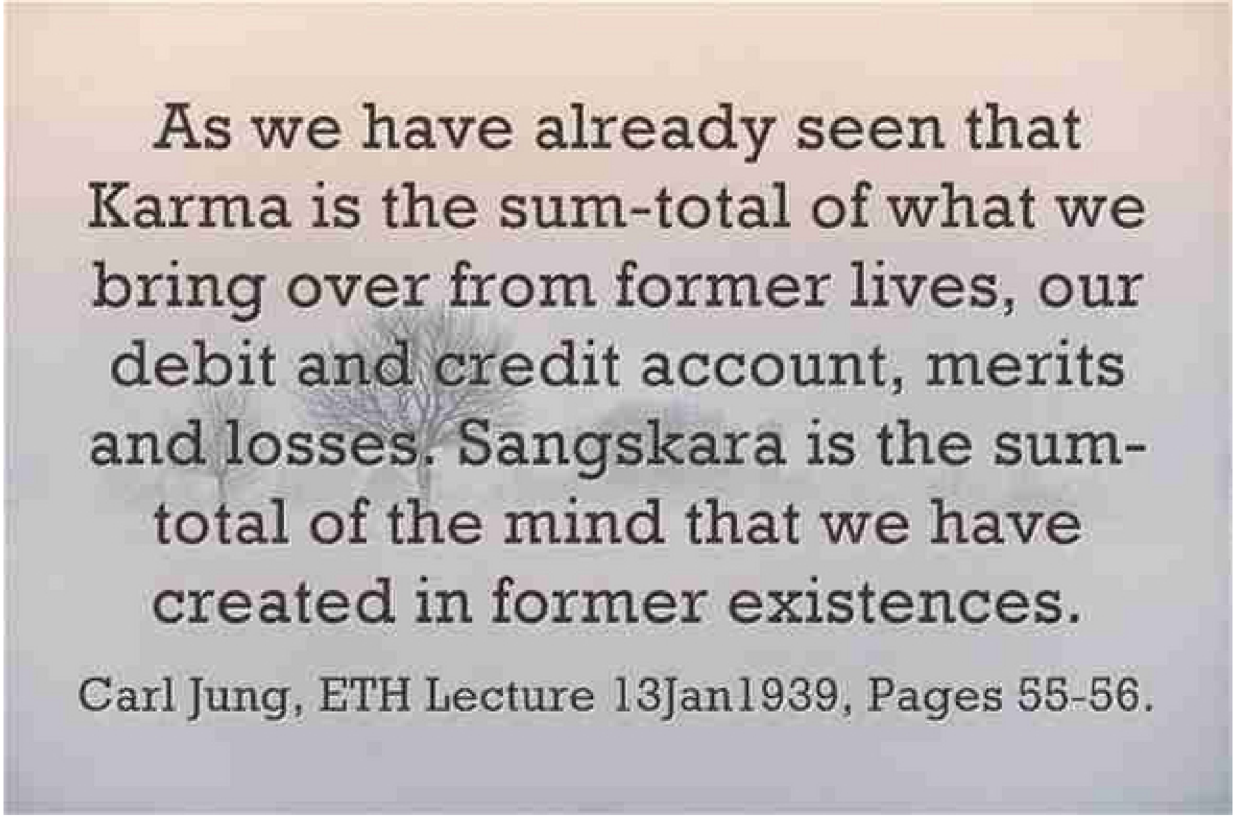
In the West we are always using our intuition on outward things, but the East turns their Sangskara-skandha inwards.
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 56.



Very highly developed people can remember their former lives, even back into animal lives. Buddha remembered innumerable lives and spoke freely of them. There are curious cases of this kind to be found even now.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 56.

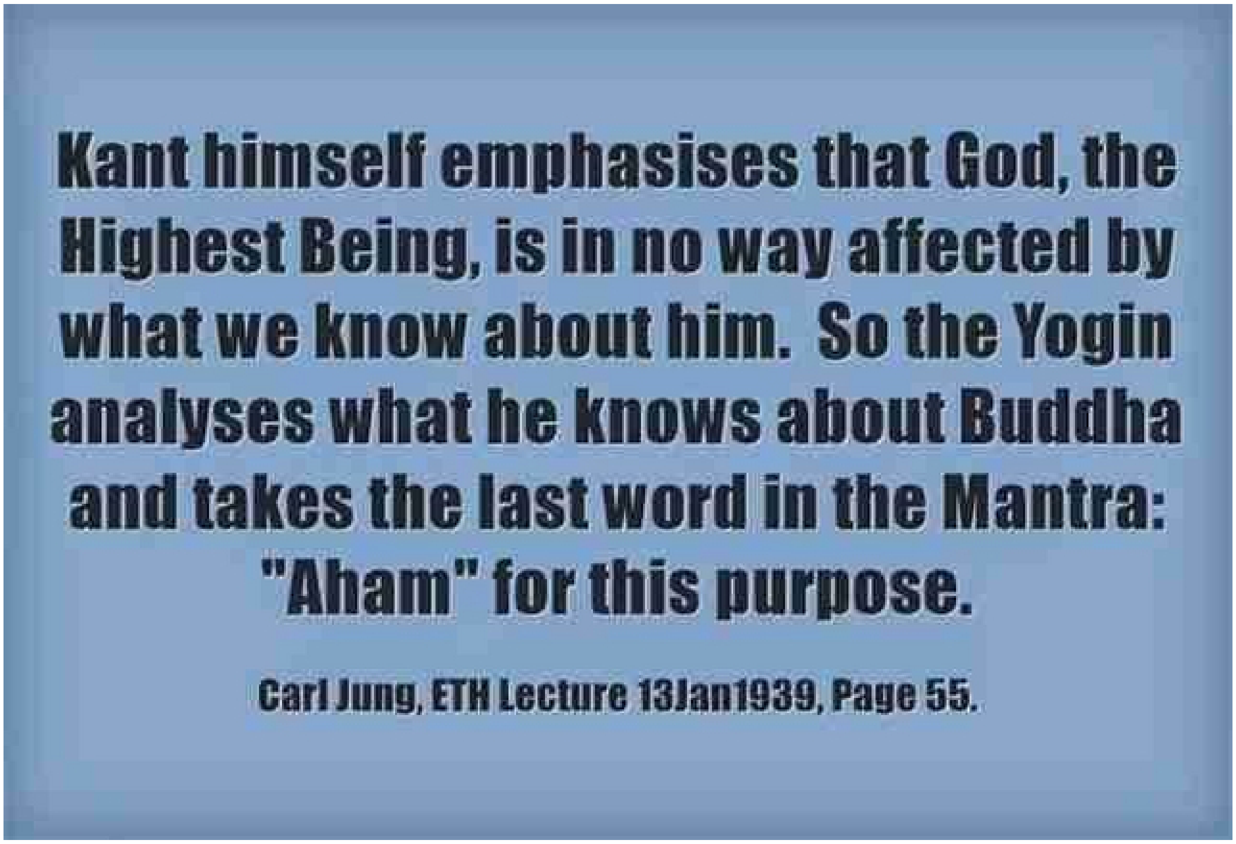
Very highly developed people can remember their former lives, even back into animal lives. Buddha remembered innumerable lives and spoke freely of them. There are curious cases of this kind to be found even now. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 56.



As we have already seen that Karma is the sum-total of what we bring over from former lives, our debit and credit account, merits and losses. Sangskara is the sum-total of the mind that we have created in former existences.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Pages 55-56.

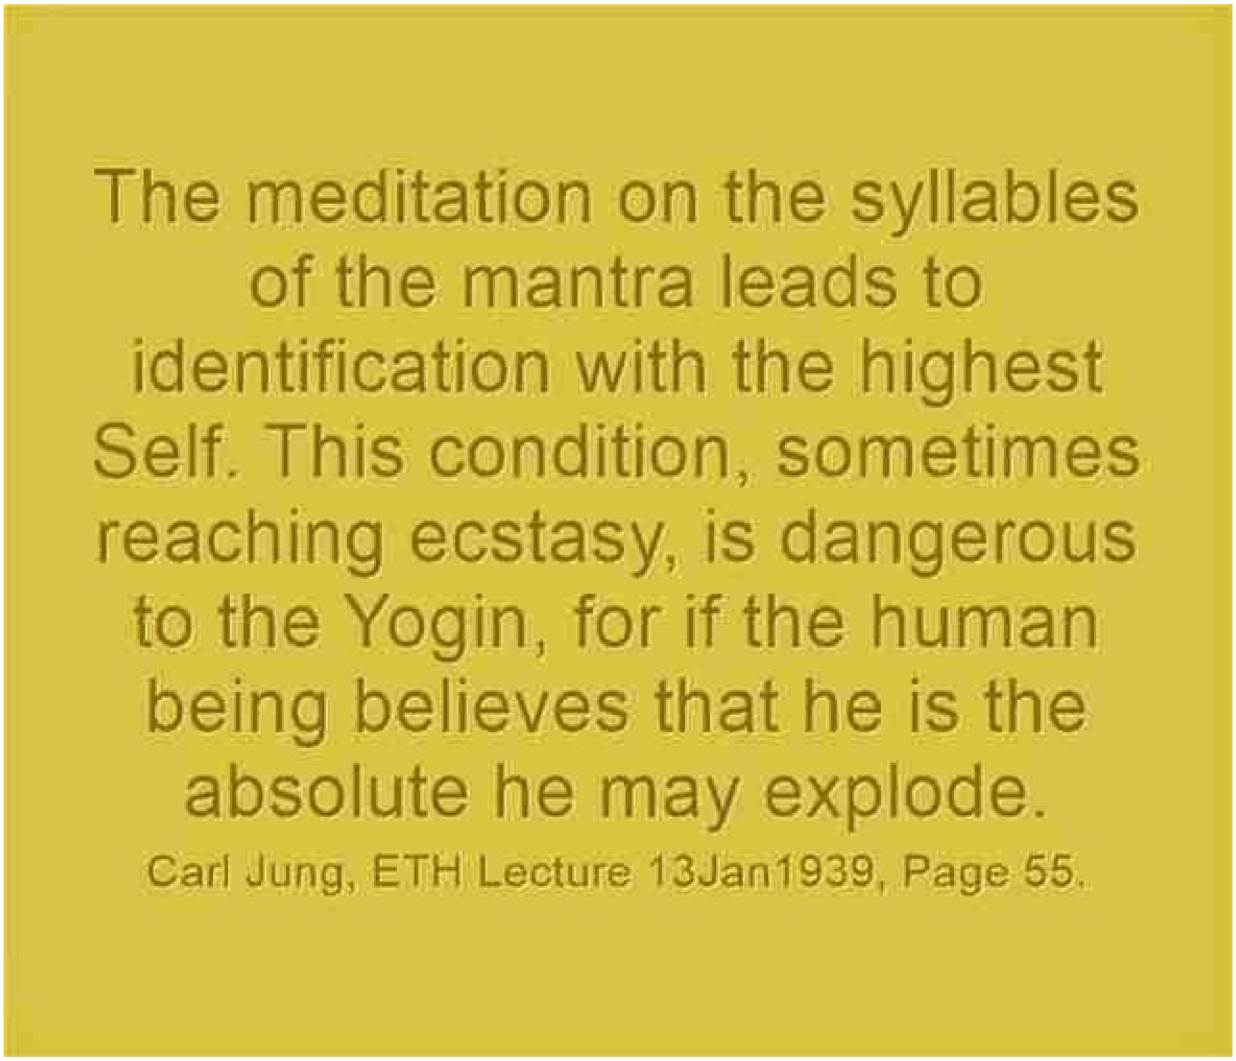
As we have already seen that Karma is the sum-total of what we bring over from former lives, our debit and credit account, merits and losses. Sangskara is the sum-total of the mind that we have created in former existences. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Pages 55-56.



Kant himself emphasises that God, the Highest Being, is in no way affected by what we know about him. So the Yogin analyses what he knows about Buddha and takes the last word in the Mantra: "Aham" for this purpose.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 55.

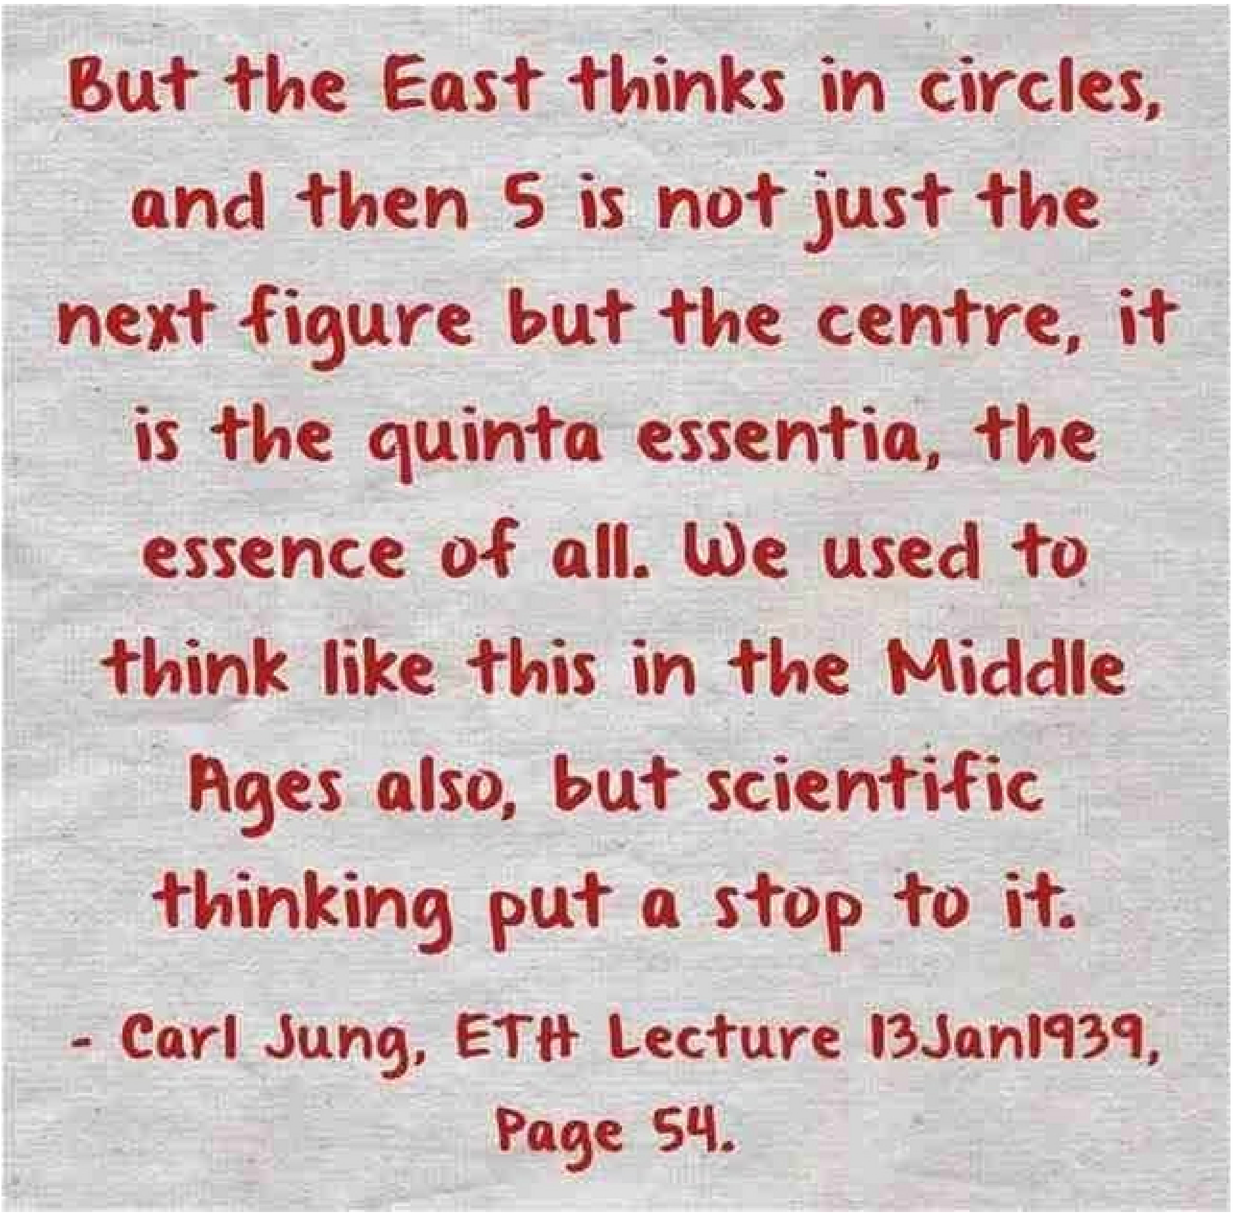
Kant himself emphasises that God, the Highest Being, is in no way affected by what we know about him. So the Yogin analyses what he knows about Buddha and takes the last word in the Mantra: "Aham" for this purpose. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 55.



The meditation on the syllables of the mantra leads to identification with the highest Self. This condition, sometimes reaching ecstasy, is dangerous to the Yogin, for if the human being believes that he is the absolute he may explode.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 55.

The meditation on the syllables of the mantra leads to identification with the highest Self. This condition, sometimes reaching ecstasy, is dangerous to the Yogin, for if the human being believes that he is the absolute he may explode. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 55.



But the East thinks in circles, and then 5 is not just the next figure but the centre, it is the quinta essentia, the essence of all. We used to think like this in the Middle Ages also, but scientific thinking put a stop to it.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 54.

The meditation on the syllables of the mantra leads to identification with the highest Self. This condition, sometimes reaching ecstasy, is dangerous to the Yogin, for if the human being believes that he is the absolute he may explode. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13Jan1939, Page 55.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/40f41-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4254.j`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f1609-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4255.j`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dd87f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4256.j`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e7b9f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4257.j`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3e2a3-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4258.j`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bcf4e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung`

2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4259.j

7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8edce-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4260.j
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/04a1e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4261.j
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3824a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4262.j
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/73c8b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4263.j
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/db133-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4264.j
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aee4f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4265.j
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/120d1-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4266.j
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bd10f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4267.j
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7e27e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4268.j
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/599d3-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4269.j
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c70c9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4270.j
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f3381-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4271.j
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/529a8-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4272.j
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/53b0e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4273.j
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/767f9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4274.j
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7a128-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4275.j
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4e153-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4276.j
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d464b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4277.j
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d7f2e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4278.j
26. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/683e2-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4279.j
27. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/006e3-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4280.j
28. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6f50a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4281.j
29. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a79cb-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4282.j
30. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b8c7d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4283.j
31. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a3c3c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bju

ng2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4284.j

32. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/13dea-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4285.j
33. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/39b21-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4286.j
34. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7604c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4287.j
35. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d895e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4288.j
36. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/74a82-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4289.j
37. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e4741-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4290.j
38. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/137d0-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4291.j
39. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7f5d0-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4292.j
40. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f7d4b-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4293.j
41. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bb82a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4294.j
42. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9af47-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4295.j
43. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fc5f4-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4296.j
44. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c27f5-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4297.j
45. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3262f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4298.j
46. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f2505-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4299.j
47. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f1674-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4300.j
48. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/422ad-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4301.j
49. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/528be-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4302.j
50. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b6823-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4303.j
51. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/15a35-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4304.j
52. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2c627-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4305.j
53. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/693ee-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4306.j
54. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c1a7f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4307.j
55. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cfde0-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4308.j
56. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/753d8-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bju

ng2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4309.j

57. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/206b5-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4310.j

58. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/78c4d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4311.j

59. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/67fbf-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4312.j

60. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/07813-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4313.j

---

Carl Jung and Archetypes (2019-03-08 17:47)

“The 'squaring of the circle' is one of the many archetypal motifs which form the basic patterns of our dreams and fantasies.

But it is distinguished by the fact that it is one of the most important of them from the functional point of view. Indeed, it could even be called the archetype of wholeness.”

C. G.Jung

Carl Jung and Archetypes

Myth is the natural and indispensable intermediate stage between unconscious and conscious cognition. True, the unconscious knows more than the consciousness does; but it is a knowledge of a special sort, knowledge in eternity, usually without reference to the here and now, not couched in language of the intellect. Only when we let its statements amplify themselves . . . does it come within the range of the understanding; only then does a new aspect become perceptible to us. The process is convincingly repeated in every successful dream analysis. That is why it is so important not to have any preconceived, doctrinaire opinions about the statements made by dreams. As soon as a certain “monotony of interpretation” strikes us, we know that our approach has become doctrinaire and hence sterile.

Jung Memories, Dreams, Reflections

Many contemporary theorists and literary critics believe that the significance of a work of art may well lie in its universality—its appeal to all peoples regardless of time or culture. Certain images or situations, these critics assert, create similar emotional responses in nearly everybody. Consequently, both visual artists and writers may evoke those experiences that create the most striking responses. The identification of such archetypal elements can lead to a much deeper understanding of a work’s value. Archetypal analysis, sometimes referred to as myth criticism, is a method of analysis that enhances our critical imagery, and situations that suggest recurrent human circumstances. In his book Contributions to Analytical Psychology, Jung writes that there are three basic qualities that characterize archetypes: primordial, universal, and recurrent.

Primordial Characteristics

The most fundamental quality that characterizes archetypes is that they are primordial: they are located within the human preconscious, that area of the mind from which information can be recalled (re-membered), though it is not present in the conscious mind. In humans, the experiences of the past that are so important for the species'survival, such as the fear of falling, are the result of countless numbers of experiences of the same kind, experiences that literally began before the development of consciousness. They are innate images of experiences which have been repeated so often that they have formed deep, lasting impressions upon the human psyche. These experiences have a cumulative effect much like what happens to unprocessed photographic film passed through airport x-ray machines. One trip through an x-ray machine is probably not noticeable on the photographs, but when the film passes through the machines several times, as it does on a trip that requires several flights, a haze begins to appear. The more trips through the machine, the deeper the haze becomes. The film "remembers" each x-ray and is cumulatively affected by it until it becomes codified into an archetype, buried deeply within the collective unconscious and passed on by the species generation after generation. While this process has never been satisfactorily explained, (Is it genetic? Is it cultural? Is it mystical?) these experiences represent those formed earliest in the development of the human species. Primordial experiences, therefore, are fundamental, original occurrences, repeated so many millions of times that they are mentally imprinted. Consequently, since Jung viewed them as models or prototypes of universal behavior, he named them archetypes.

Universal Characteristics

The second fundamental quality of archetypes is that they are universal; they are unaffected by time or situation, community or culture. They are now as they were in the past; they are as significant to tribal people, so isolated in dense jungles or on remote islands that they think their few members are the only human beings in existence, as they are to engineers striving to solve the complex problems of space travel. The ancient Greeks battling over Helen at the walls of Troy were as affected by archetypes as politicians today who are trying to calculate the interests and moods of the people so that successful election campaigns may be waged. From this perspective, humans have changed little in the past 4,000 years of recorded history, a period which is itself only an instant when compared with the backdrop of evolutionary time. The psycho-neurological functions of the modern mind remain essentially unchanged from the minds of Neolithic peoples. As a result, we all share similar experiences, emotions drives, needs, and archetypes with each other and with our ancient ancestors. Archetypes are, therefore, truly part of the human universal experience.

Recurrent Characteristics

The third fundamental quality of archetypes is that they are recurrent. Those who have conducted research in the fields of anthropology, comparative religion, and mythology have tended to confirm the similarities among peoples, while demonstrating that what differences do exist are attributable mostly to local adaptations. It makes little difference, for example, where people are on the earth or when they exist; all people have been concerned with their creation and the meaning of their existence. These concerns are universal, therefore, archetypal. The most fascinating aspects of any comparison, however, comes with the realization that the explanations of human origin and worldly creation are strikingly similar.

Images or Symbols

Archetypes are universal in their symbolism; certain images seem to have universal appeal. These images call from within us certain responses and associations that appeal to us in emotional ways quite apart from our intellect. For example, a ship: the Pequod The ship from Moby Dick symbolizes the conflict between humans and nature.

the Bounty The ship from the famous mutiny symbolizes the connective link between the rigid Victorian culture of England and the permissive Polynesian culture of Tahiti.

the Discovery The spaceship from 2001: A Space Oddyssey symbolizes the inexorable human quest for knowledge, even into the depths of the unknown.

Characters

A number of recurrent, archetypal characters make up the cast in many works of literature, as well as in the mythology and in religion. These characters possess such remarkably similar experiences and behave in such a predetermined manner that their lives appear almost ritualistic in their predictability.
Probably the most common of these characters is the hero; the hero myth is universally a powerful shaper of beliefs, rituals, and arts. The hero story, according to many scholars, is the central motif of all mythology, and that story is known by many names:

- the hero’s journey or quest
- the adventure tale
- the epic
- the search
- the exploration
- the escape
- the wandering
- the love story

Other archetypal characters, like the hero, can be identified by what happens to them. Their experiences too are varied and are important for their representation in literature and mythology.

1. The outcast is a character who is condemned to wander after committing some crime against society (e.g. Cain; The Ancient Mariner; Clare Walker in “The Loving Shepherds”; Moses and the tribes of Israel).
2. The devil character is the personification of evil. He often offers fortune, fame, or power in return for a soul (e.g. Lucifer; Mephistopheles; Sauron the Great, the Dark Lord; the Emperor in Star Wars, Darth Vader’s master).
3. The scapegoat is a person whose death in a public ritual expiates the community’s sins (e.g. Mrs. Hutchinson in “The Lottery” by Shirley Jackson; Jesus).
4. The star-crossed lovers’ relationship ends with the tragic death of one or both of them (e.g. Romeo and Juliet; Antigone; Psyche and Eros).
5. The intellectual (mathematician, astronomer, scientist, computer programmer)

a. Anti-social—wicked or mad scientist, e.g. Victor Frankenstein
b. Neutral—provides reasoning or explanation, e.g. Dr. Strangelove
c. Pro-social—often the power behind the hero, e.g. Mr. Spock of Star Trek; Merlin to King Arthur

1. The medicine woman is the possessor of the knowledge of the healing powers of nature (e.g. Ayla and Iza in Clan of the Cave Bear; Morgan la Fay in the legends of King Arthur; witches)
2. The shaman / holyman is the possessor of the knowledge of the healing powers of the spirit world, guardian of the traditions and rituals of the people (e.g. Mogar in Clan of the Cave Bear; don Juan in the books of Carlos Castaneda; the witch doctor)

Still other archetypal characters you may wish to investigate:

- artist
- sage or seer
- trickster
- fool
- warrior
- giant
- king
- child or innocent
- guru or disciple
- the double
- the father
- the mother

Situation

Several recurrent archetypal situations have been identified in the world's literature through the use of Jung's analytical techniques. These situations are what the images suggest and what the characters pursue. In one sense, the situation forms the basis for plot in the literature of the mythic story. Some of the most common situations are: the initiation, the task, the quest, the fall, death and rebirth, the wasteland.

Shadow, Anima, and Persona

On a much deeper plane than images, characters or situations, archetypal analysis is also concerned with the individual human psyche. Unlike Freud, however, Jung's approach is to probe the characters' psyches in literature in order to understand better the characters themselves, not to probe the psychological problems that may have confronted the author. As a result, you may find this approach somewhat more useful than Freud's therapeutic psychological analysis.

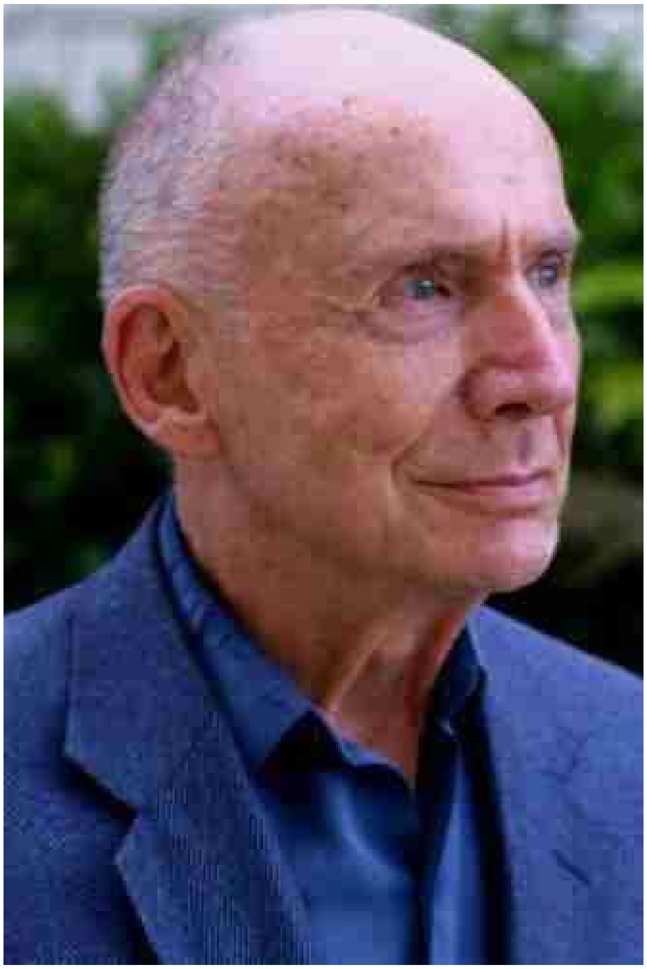
Shadow—Jung believed that, in addition to the collective unconscious, the mind has a personal subconscious. The darker part of this region he referred to as the shadow, where the less pleasant aspects of the personality reside. This dark part of the personality, often dangerous, belongs to the primitive, uncivilized, pre-evolutionary past of the species. The shadow holds emotions such as jealousy and repressed desires such as avarice, which most people would prefer not apart from other animals. The anima is the life force, the vital energy within everyone; it is the part of people that is living and causes life. The Anima is the female soul image of a man, the Animus the male soul image of a woman. That is the most simple definition, and one with which many struggle since Jung defines a person's soul image as gender opposite. Jung asserts that without the anima people would deteriorate into pathological idleness. The anima / animus is the life force, the center of ambition and creativity. If one is on good terms with one's anima / animus he / she can prove a valuable messenger between the unconscious and the conscious, a connecting link—a veritable Hermes.

The heroine is an anima character.

Persona—The persona is a concept that is perhaps more often familiar. Simply put, the persona is the social personality or actor's mask that everyone puts on to face the world. Often, the persona is perceived as quite different from one's true self. The chief function of the persona is to mediate between the ego and the world outside. A personality that is psychologically healthy and mature must possess a persona that is flexible. The hero is a persona character.to recognize as part of their being. The villain is a shadow character. Memories Dreams and Reflections.

Robert Johnson: Dr. Jung advised me to spend most of my time alone...... (2019-03-09 01:50)

[1]



Robert Johnson: Memory of C.G. Jung

My contact with Dr. Jung?-certainly one of the most important events of my life!

When I enrolled in the C. G. Jung Institute in Zurich at its first term in 1948 there were some thirty students, diverse in nature, I the youngest at age twenty-seven.

I began analysis with Dr. Jolande Jacobi, who probably was the worst possible choice for this shy, inexperienced, highly introverted feeling type.

At my first hour Dr. Jacobi explained that she conducted her hours pacing the floor.

She justified this by saying she was an extraverted Hungarian and that this was her manner.

Her neighbor one floor below had taken her to court for pacing and the judge had ruled that since it was her nature to pace this was her born right but that she must not pace before eight in the morning or after ten at night.

I was impressed with Swiss justice, but should have known that there was no hope for my analysis in her hands.

One day soon after beginning with Dr.Jacobi I brought one of the great pivotal archetypal dreams which has periodically punctuated my life.

Dr. Jacobi paced at accentuated speed and announced that I should not dream dreams like that!

I was a young man and the dream I had brought was an old man's dream.

I should not dream dreams like that!

Even in my naivete I knew that this was an inadequate interpretation of the dream and I had to have more guidance than Dr. Jacobi was capable of giving.

So I left the analysis, clumsily, without tact.

I asked for an hour with Mrs. Jung, who was lecturing at the Institute and who appealed to me as a gentle, introverted, dignified person.

She agreed to see me next day and I went to Kusnacht to tell her my great dream which was hanging so heavily over me.

I sensed that it was a very good dream but difficult by virtue of the transpersonal scope and its very great weight.

Mrs. Jung listened to my dream, said very little but in quite a different way from Dr. Jacobi's dismissal of the dream.

It seems that Mrs. Jung discussed my dream with Dr. Jung that evening for Dr. Jung called the school next day and told me, "Please come out here, I want to talk at you."

Two days later I was again at Kusnacht to be met at the door by the famous two dogs at the entrance to Dr. Jung's house.

I had heard that he arranged to have his two dogs meet a new patient, the dogs being more sensitive to a Potential psychotic than any human observation.

I felt as if I had passed Cerberus on my journey to the Inner World, and by the time Dr.Jung came the dogs were on their backs enjoying my petting.

Dr. Jung took me into the garden and proceeded to give me a very long lecture on the meaning of my dream, what it meant to me to have contact in this manner with the deep parts of the collective unconscious, how I should live, what I might expect of my life, what I should not attempt, what I could trust, what did not belong to me in life.

The meeting took nearly three hours and it was clear that I was to listen and not interrupt. Non-directive counselling, indeed!

Dr. Jung advised me to spend most of my time alone, have a separate room in the house to be used for nothing but inner work, never to join any organization or collectivity.

He indicated that though it was true that I was a young man, my dream was of the second half of life and was to be lived no matter what age I was.

When such a dream comes it is to be honored whether the time or circumstances are convenient or not.

Dr. Jung told me that the unconscious would protect me, give me everything that I needed for my life and that my one duty was to do my inner work.

All else would follow from this.

He said that it was not the least important whether I accomplished anything outwardly in this life since my one task was to contribute to the evolution of the collective unconscious.

The dream was of the general form of three elements being differentiated and a fourth less well developed; he elaborated at great length the problem of adding the fourth element to the existing trinity of faculties and the implications of this development.

He was jubilant at that time over the forthcoming proclamation from Rome of the bodily Assumption of the Virgin Mary into Heaven and talked of that as an example of the addition of the fourth element to the already established three.

My observations of Dr. Jung were several; his frequent laughter, his kindness in taking an unknown youth through his great dream, and most of all, his gift of walking by my side in the matter of typology.

It was my observation that here was a man just like me!

His thought movement, timing, humor were almost exactly parallel to my own.

How fine to find someone so much like myself who can stand two generations ahead of me and speak my own language.

Not only did Dr. Jung speak English with me but he spoke my introverted feeling type as well.

Only later when I was with him in groups of people did I learn that he was quite different from me in type and that his gift to me was in leaving his own natural typology and engaging me in my own.

I was so deeply impressed with this that I determined to learn the same art with others as I was capable.

I continued work with both Dr. Jung (brief meetings at his invitation) and Mrs. Jung. Mrs. Jung was a highly introverted, sensitive person who I learned only much later was an introverted sensation type.

I fear I put her through a difficult time with my feeling intuitive extravagances but she also gave me the gift of following my typology rather than her own. Carl Jung, J.E.T., Pages 36-39

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ecf21-12bjohnson.jpg`

Jung got very angry and denounced those Europeans who went down to save perfectly happy and contented Africans... (2019-03-09 03:30)

[1]

J. Marvin Spiegelman: Memory of C.G. Jung

My memories of Jung come from the period March, 1956, to March, 1959, during which I was a student at the Institute in Zurich.

He was to be seen at least once or twice a year then, at a public or Institute lecture or at a seminar for the advanced students.

At these events, times of great anticipation and excitement for us, Jung was much as he appears in the filmed interviews: alive, vital, intense, serious and attentive to all issues which were raised, yet full of good humor and laughter.

There were two moments during which he departed from those warming and awe-inspiring presentations, at one of which I was an unfortunate participator.

The first moment was during a seminar for advanced students.

One of our group had given Jung a number of paintings done by a patient in analysis and Jung was commenting on them.

At one point, he came upon a painting of a missionary clergyman helping some African blacks.

Jung got very angry and denounced those Europeans who went down to save perfectly happy and contented Africans who didn’t need them.

"We need these saints in Europe," said Jung, "to help us save ourselves!"

The thinly veiled reference was probably to Schweitzer, but Jung's anger went way beyond some personal or individual criticism and was enormously heartfelt.

The second moment was at a lecture at the Institute.

Jung opened up to questions of a general sort after his talk and I foolishly raised a question about the nature of the symbol.

I had been having many conversations over the past months with a fellow-student who had very strong Freudian leanings and was trying to reconcile these with his Jungian views and interests.

In those conversations, he often quarreled with Jung's view of the symbol.

I told him to ask Jung himself, but when the time came at the public lecture, my friend wisely kept his mouth shut.

So I asked the question.

Jung got just furious.

He said, "You can find the answer to that in any book!" and went on to excoriate me for raising the question at all.

Well, I was naturally mortified.

I reddened deeply and sank into my chair as much as I could, which was not nearly enough.

But I weathered the storm, inside and out, and took my bruised ego home to reflect.

It turned out to be a good lesson for me.

Since then, I have appreciated the importance of speaking for myself and not being a mouthpiece for views or reflections that were not my own.

But my more personal encounter with Jung came at the end of my stay, in March, 1959, when I went to him as part of my ritual of completing my work at the Institute.

In my heart, I wanted to receive his blessing, just as I had received the blessing of my grandfather (who, in his middle nineties, was like an Old Testament prophet to me) when I went off to sea as a sailor in World War II.

I was a bit gun-shy from my previous encounter with Jung and couldn't bring myself to ask for the blessing directly.

I approached the interview, there at his home in Kusnacht, as a most special event indeed and my heart was thumping as I was ushered into the waiting room by the housekeeper.

I was soon calmed, however, by seeing the bookcase filled with paperback American detective stories (my wife would like that, I thought) and a painting of a silly-looking grand potentate surrounded by foolishly adoring people.

Jung was clearly trying to de-inflate people’s images of him and I smiled and relaxed.

He came in shortly and brought me into his famous office, motioning me to sit down in a straw chair just inches from his own.

He lit his pipe and looked at me expectantly.

He seemed totally present.

I was overwhelmed with this closeness, this total availability both physically and psychologically, and babbled something to the effect that my problems were pretty well taken care of by my analyst, but I wanted to see Jung before I left Zurich.

He laughed easily and asked me how I liked the work.

I responded that I was deeply moved and affected by it, and that his books had always been a source of great value for me, although some had been hard to read.

He nodded and then laughed again, saying that they "had been hard to write."

We were both silent for a while, as if he were trying to sense really where my soul was, since I wasn’t able to convey it to him.

Then he began to speak, from out of himself somewhere.

He spoke of his own life, of his trips to Africa and India, of his own search for himself, of the claims of the individuation process, of the loneliness of it, and how he had been glad of someone’s participation in it.

He spoke of dreams he had, of one in particular that he had dreamt at Bollingen, where soldiers of the Middle Ages appeared.

He delightedly said that Miss von Franz had independently had the same dream when she slept on that spot.

Subsequently, he said, bones of just such soldiers were dug up there.

At another point, as he told a dream that he had in Africa, I made a slight face, hardly anything, but I didn’t really agree with his interpretation.

He stopped at once, looked deeply at me and said, "I don’t understand it at all!

What does it mean?" Jung was asking me to interpret his dream?

My God!

Still later, he spoke of a patient of his from America and showed me some pictures she had painted (she had since died) which were very beautiful.

The mandala lights were incredible, but those paintings done afterwards in America were much bleaker.

He said, "Her light went out in America," and I sighed for that was exactly what I had feared might happen to me when I returned home.

Then he laughed and said, "But it came on again!"

Throughout all this apparent soliloquy, I was totally present too and I had the experience, subsequently reported by others also, that Jung was "speaking to my condition," and addressing himself to all my problems, fears, concerns, and deep desires.

Most of all, it was an experience of Self speaking to Self.

At the end-I don't know whether it was an hour or two-I left with great thanks and a handshake that expressed all that I could not.

Without asking for it, I had received Jung's blessing.

In the years since then, Jung has appeared now and then in dreams or fantasies.

He was very much present once-together with my grandfather, of all things-when I even had to make a separation with the Jungian collective.

We did a "hora" together.

In all these dreams and fantasy encounters, Jung has always been supportive of my individuation, just as he was through my silence that special day in March, 1959.   J. Marvin Spiegelman, J.E.T., Pages 84-88

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla’s Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/

2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker’s Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/

3. Frith Luton’s Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/

4. Lance S. Owens The Gnosis Archives http://gnosis.org/welcome.html

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/07/06a05-72bmissionaries.jpg`

---

christiana Morgan Images (2019-03-09 04:00)

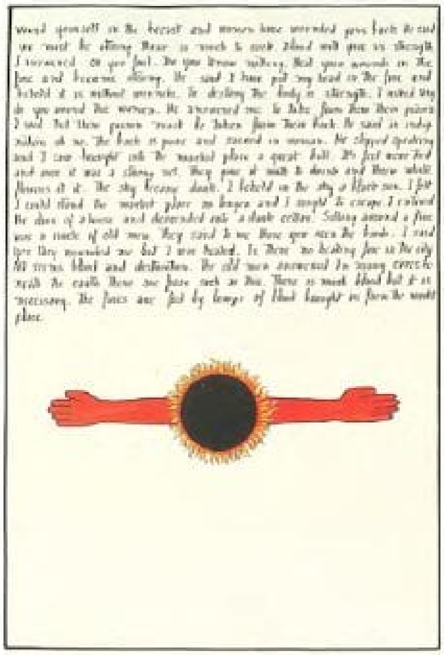
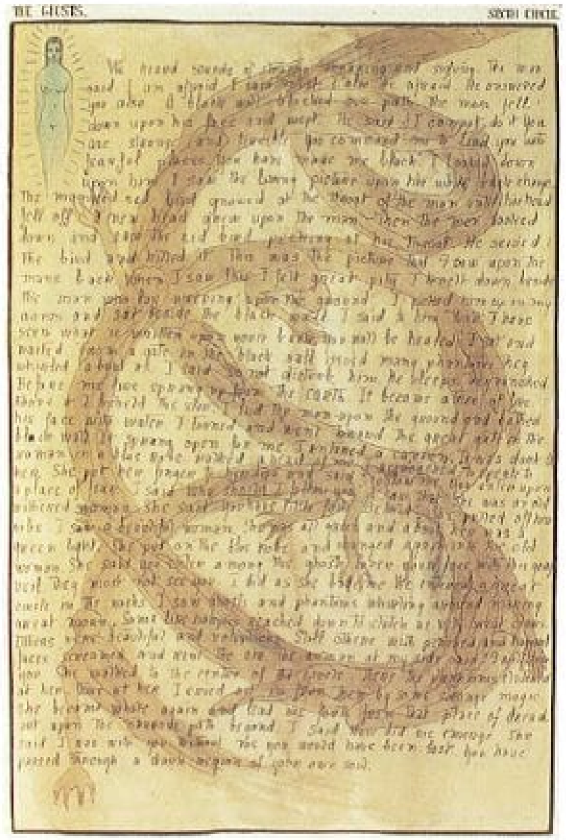
[1]

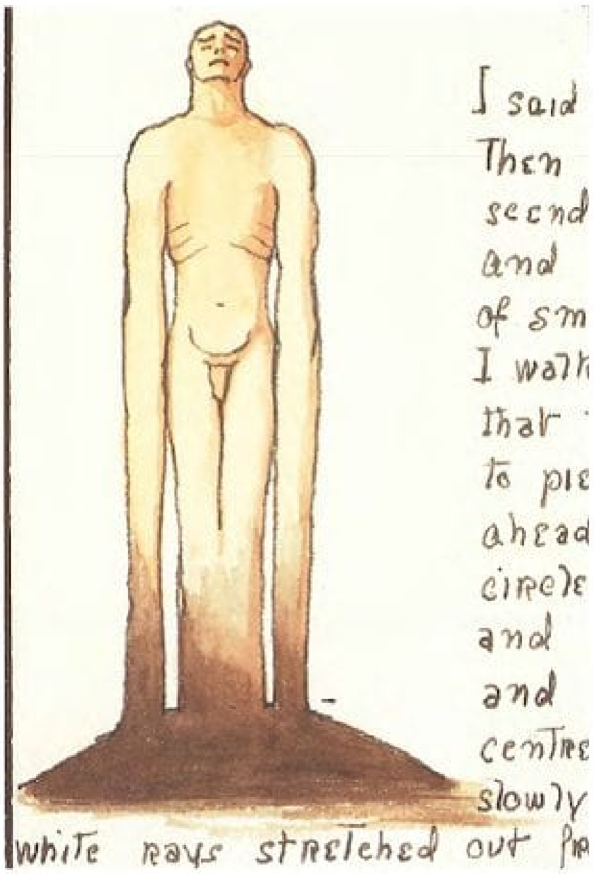


36. "A black sun with fire coming out around it and a red outstretched arm on each side"



THE GHOSTS. SECOND CIRCLE.

37. The Ghosts. "Ye enter upon a fearful place"



I said
Then secnd and of sm
I walk that to pie ahead circle
and and centre slowly
white rays stretched out fr

38. "His feet and hands grew into the earth"

Christiana Morgan, 1926.
Morgan Family Papers.

[5]

Christiana Morgan. Portrait by Mary Aiken, 1956. Photo in Harvard Archives.

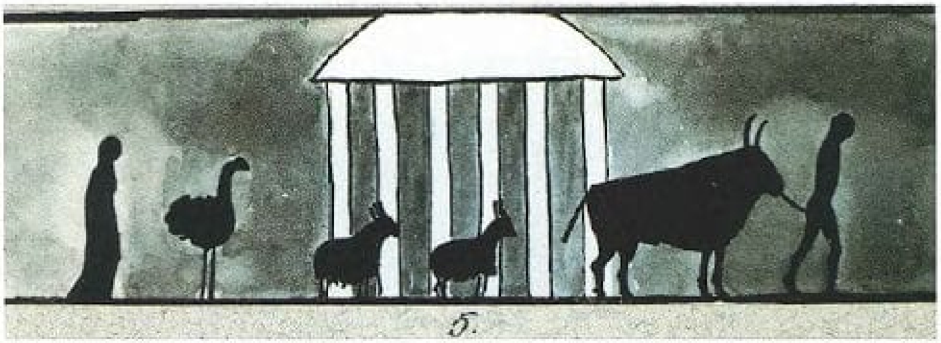
2. The Ancient Mother "held one grain of wheat which the bird took"

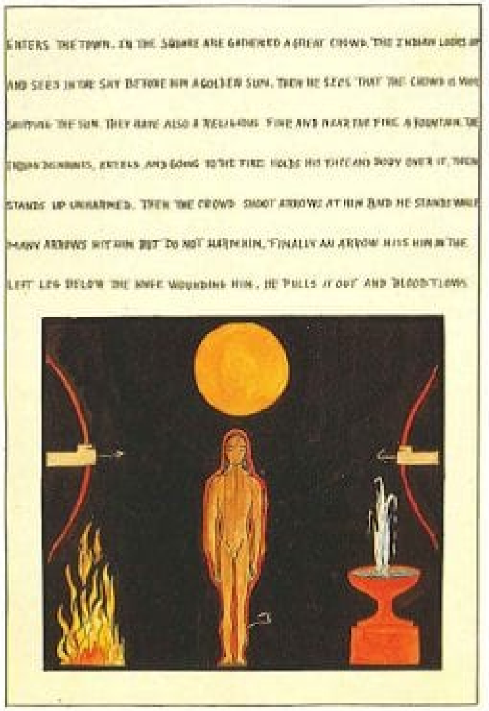
[6]

[7]



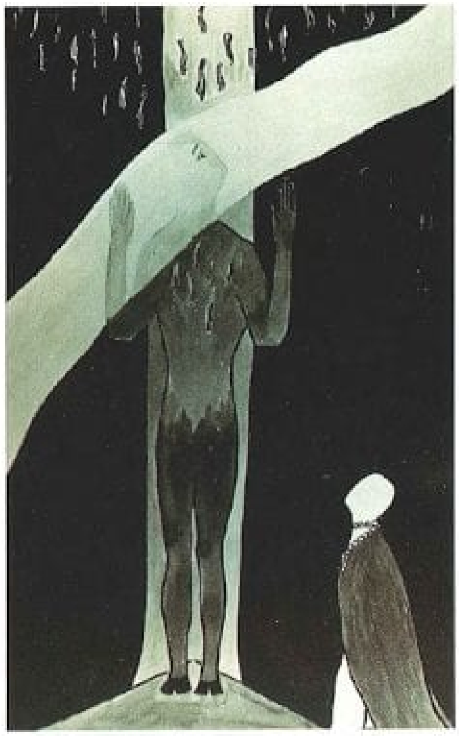
4. "Through Rome and past Grecian temples we walk with our animals"

[8]



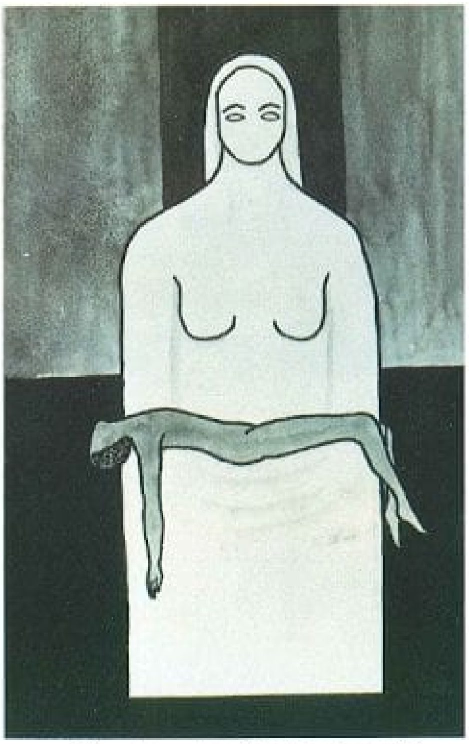
ENTERS THE TOWN. IN THE SQUARE ARE GATHERED A GREAT CROWD. THE INDIAN LOOKS UP AND SEES IN THE SKY BEFORE HIM A GOLDEN SUN. THEN HE SEES THAT THE CROWD IS WORSHIPPING THE SUN. THEY HAVE ALSO A RELIGIOUS FIRE AND NEAR THE FIRE A FOUNTAIN. THE INDIAN DISMOUNTS, KNEELS AND GOING TO THE FIRE HOLDS HIS FACE AND BODY OVER IT, THEN STANDS UP UNHARMED. THEN THE CROWD SHOOT ARROWS AT HIM AND HE STANDS WHILE MANY ARROWS HIT HIM BUT DO NOT HARM HIM. FINALLY AN ARROW HITS HIM IN THE LEFT LEG BELOW THE KNEE WOUNDING HIM. HE PULLS IT OUT AND BLOOD FLOWS

6. "Then the crowd shot arrows at him"

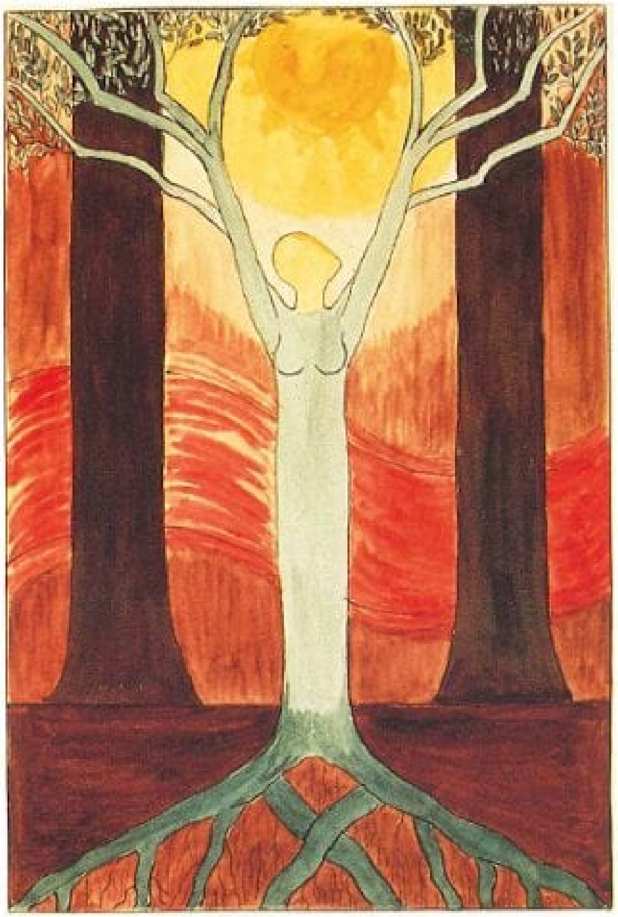


8. The satyr "put a blue rose upon me and pearls around my neck."

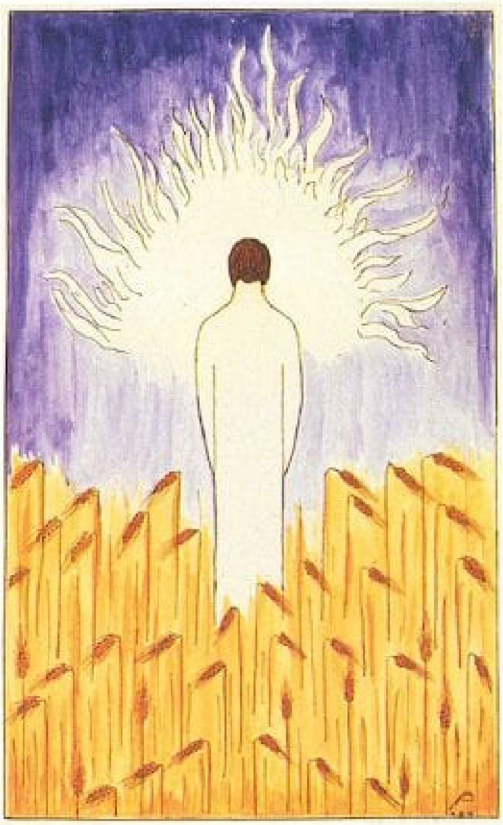
[9]



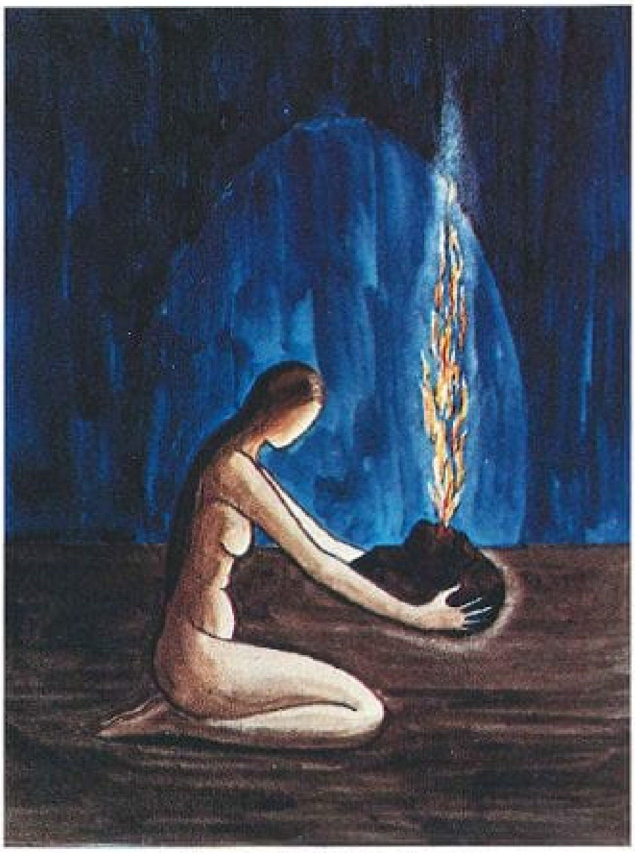
10. "The youth dropped upon the lap of an ancient mother"



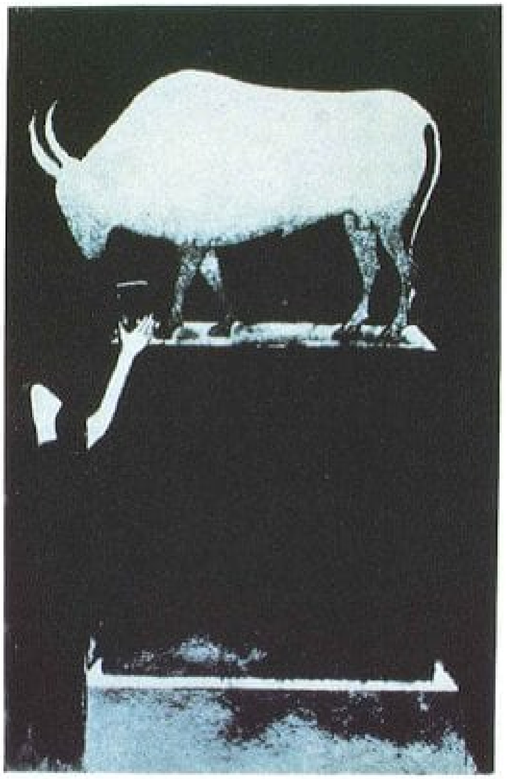
12. "I knew I had become a tree and lifted my face to the sun"



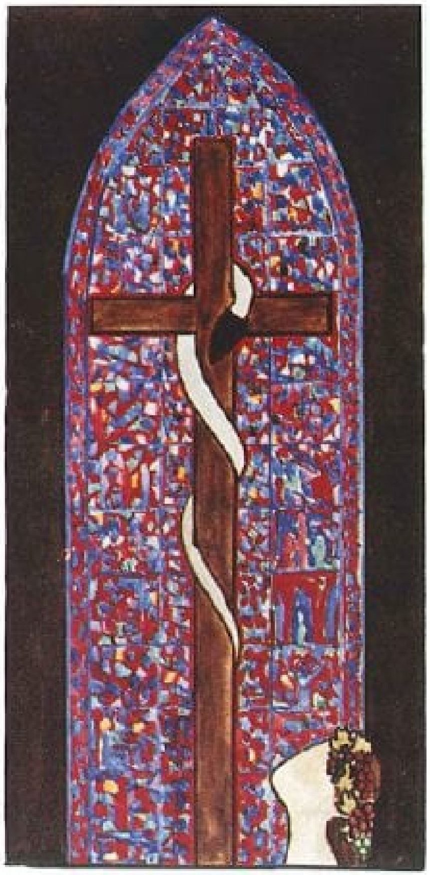
14. "I walked through waving fields of wheat"



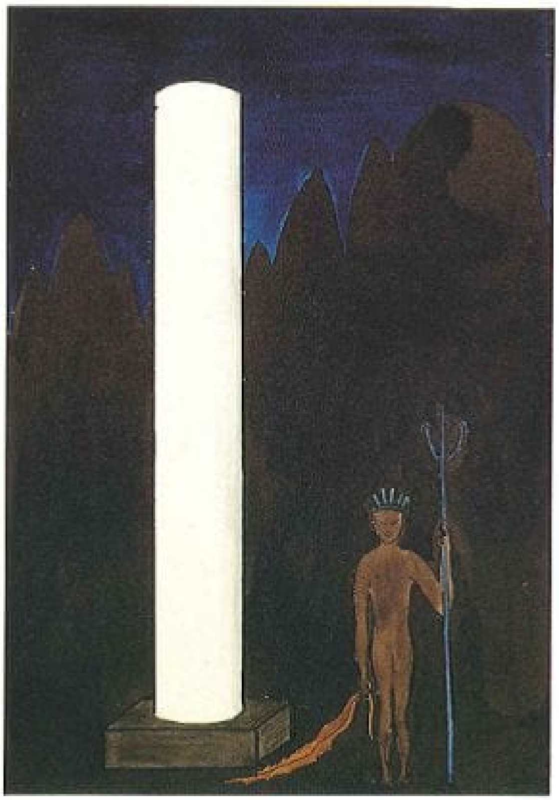
16. "Tongues of fire leaped from the lips"



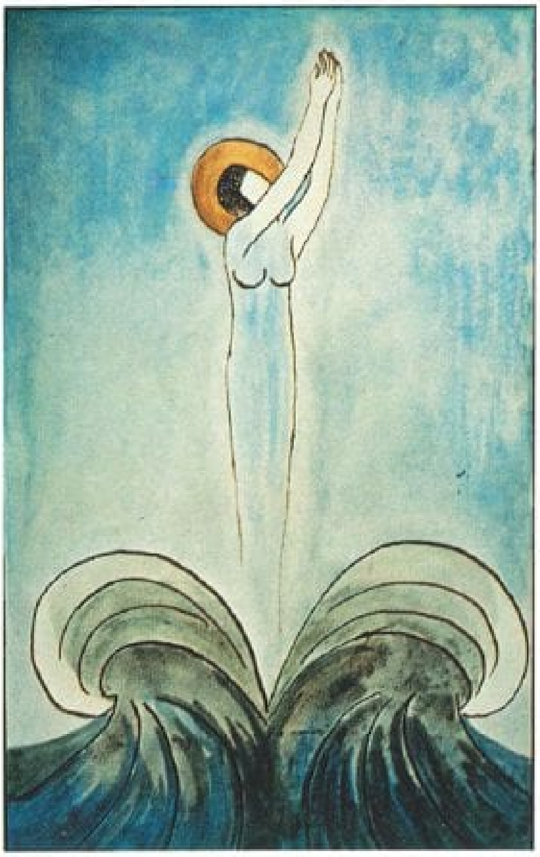
18. "The bull said . . . Drink again"



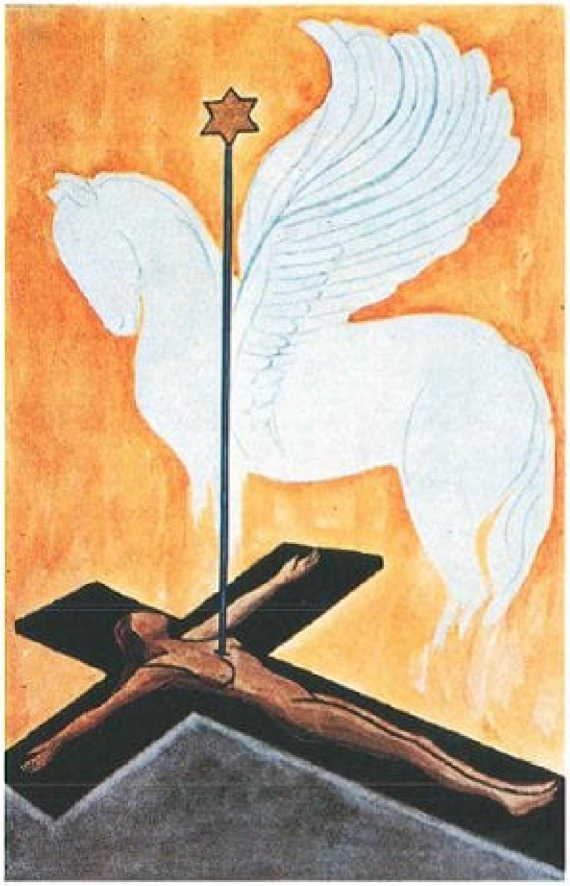
[16]



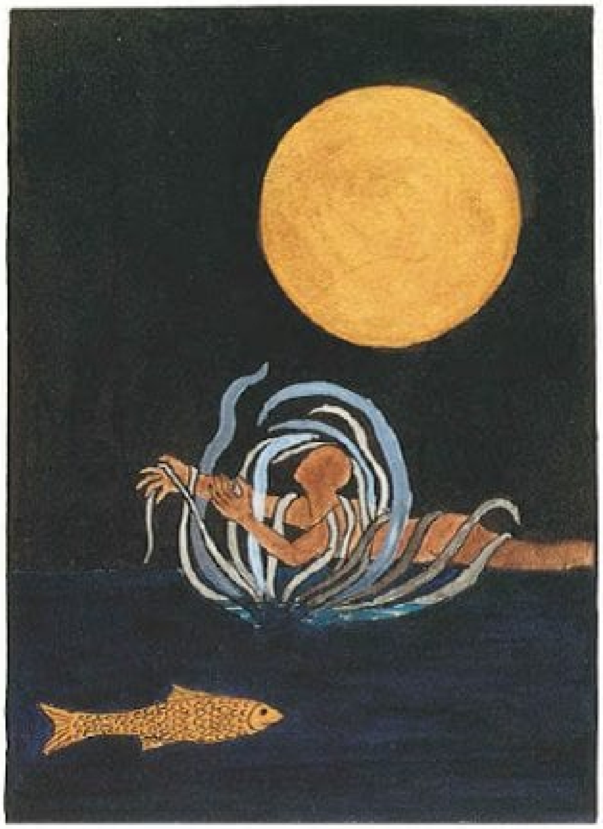
22. "By that column you shall lose yourself"



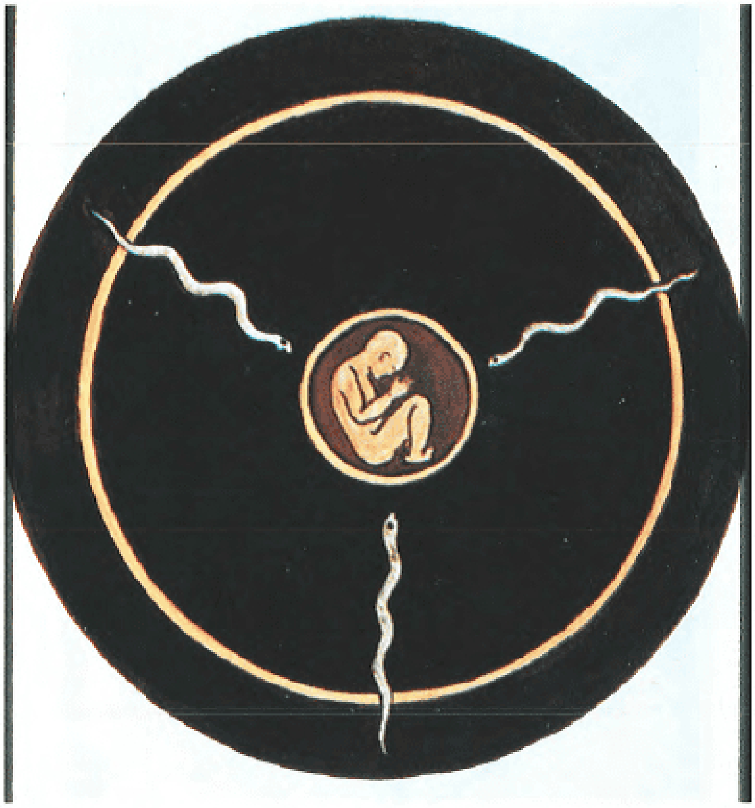
25. 'The waters parted and from them arose a woman crowned with light'



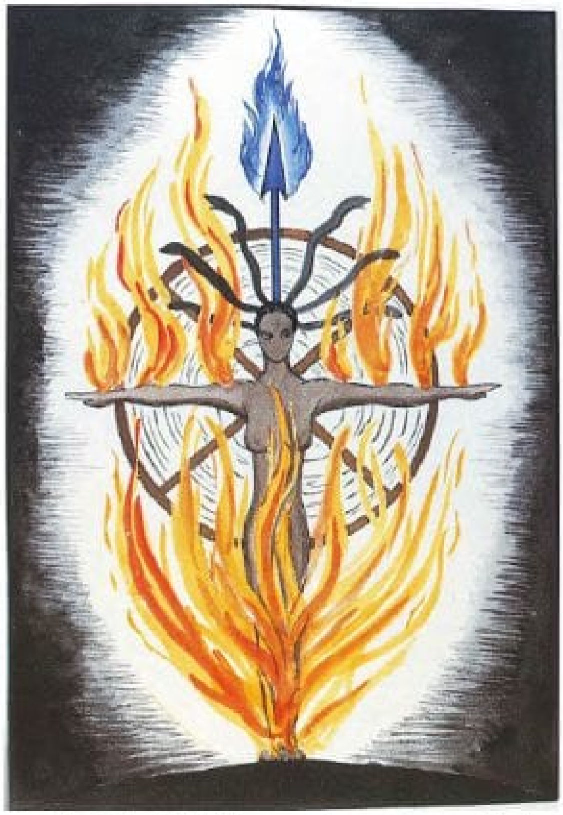
24. "The staff pierced the breast of a woman who lay crucified upon the ground"



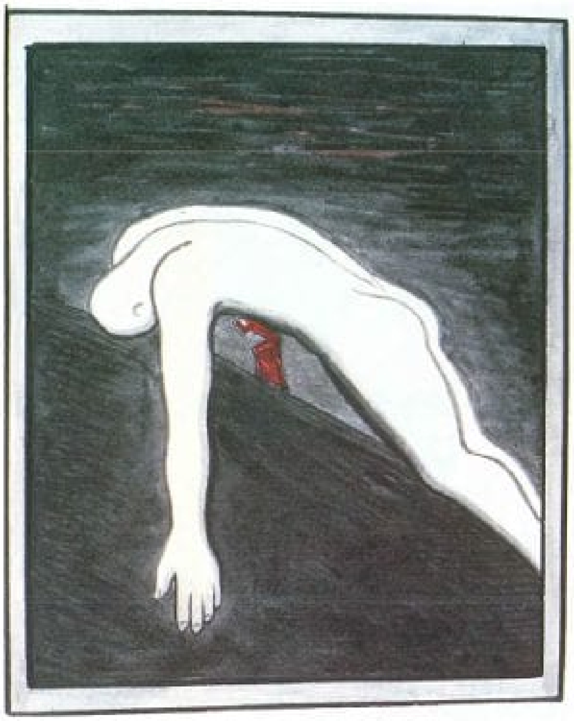
25. "They reached up great tentacles and sought to draw him down"



26. "I saw snakes gliding over the rings taking food to the child"

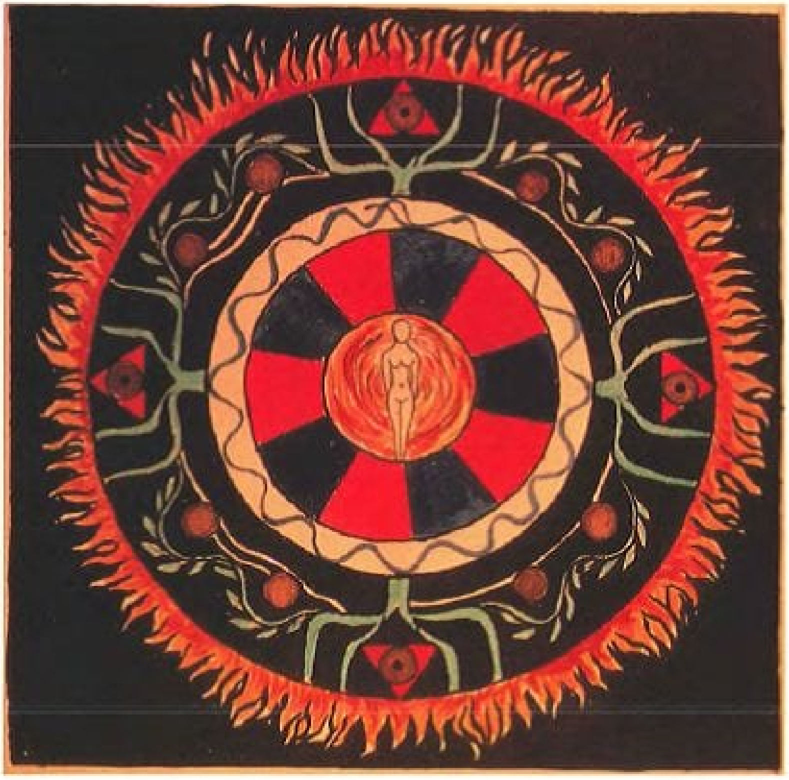


27. "I am God and the Devil. I am man and woman. I am love and hate."

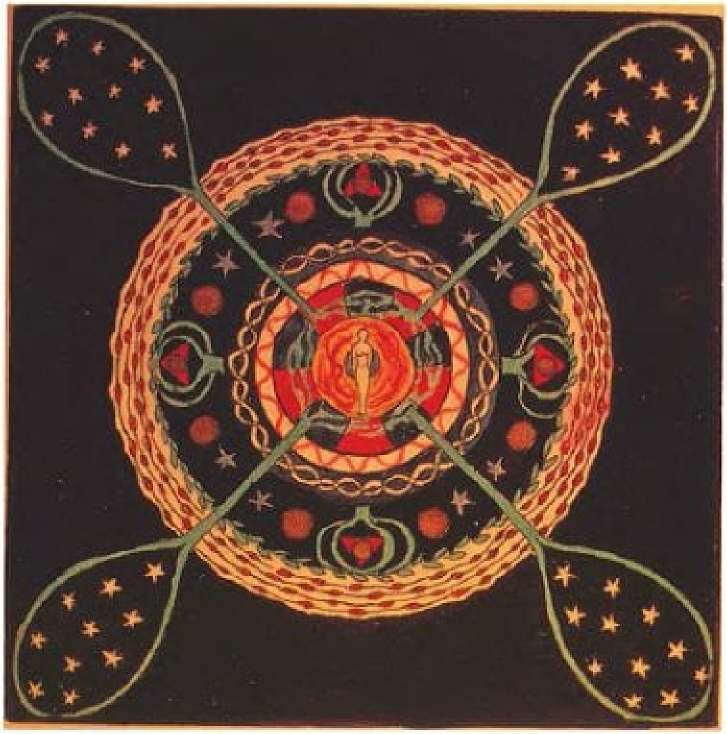


28. He became a great giant "it seemed to me that I had a whole world on my back" (Not discussed in text)

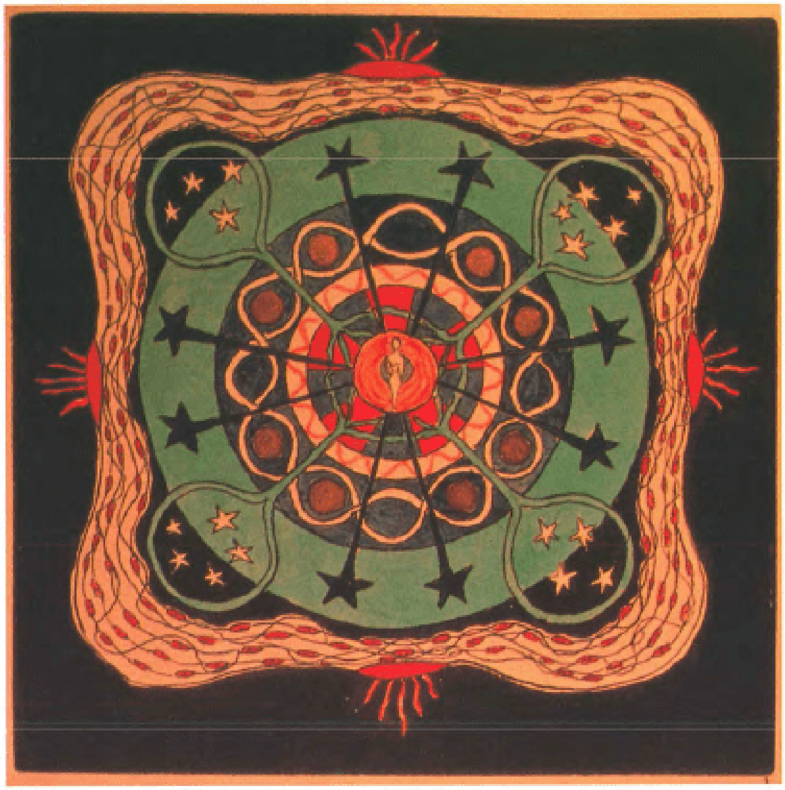
29. Mandala



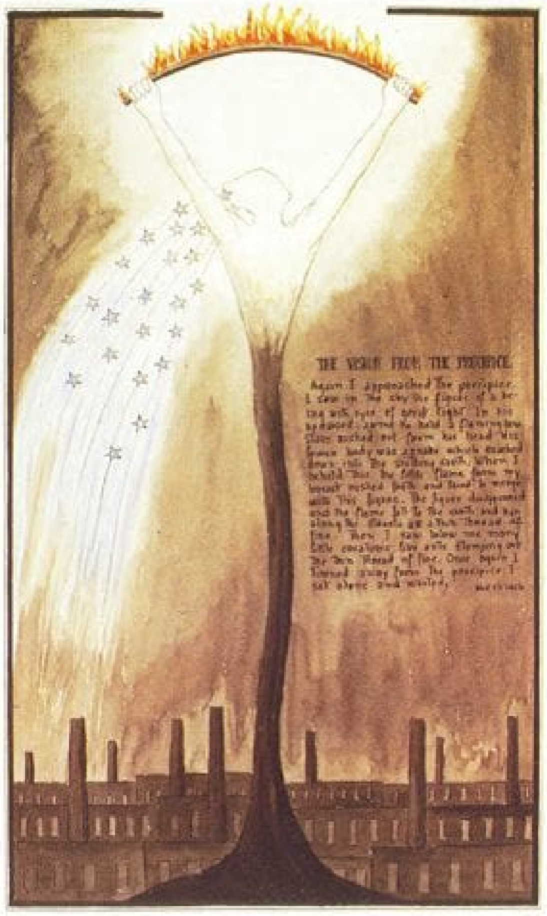
30. Mandala



31. Mandala

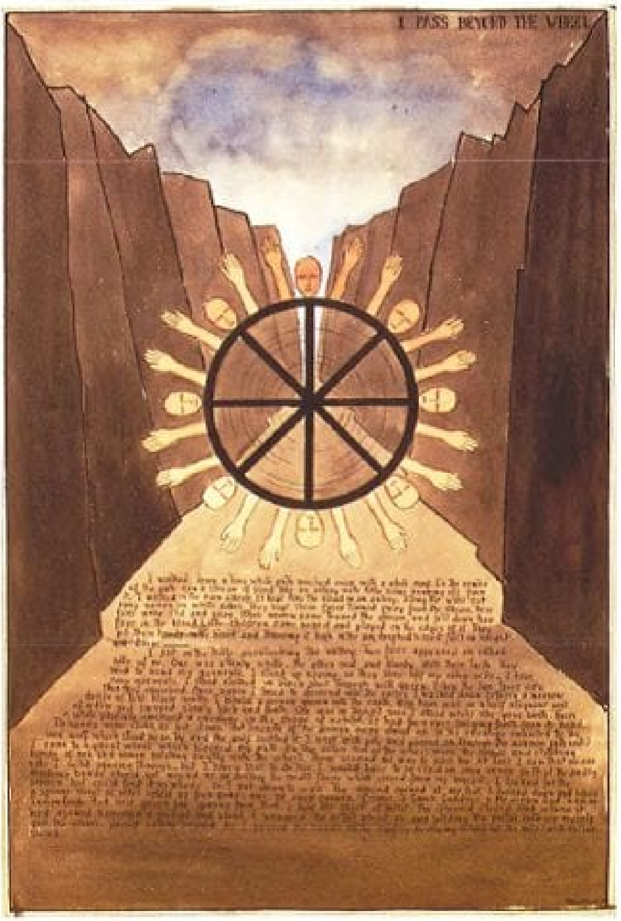


32. Mandala



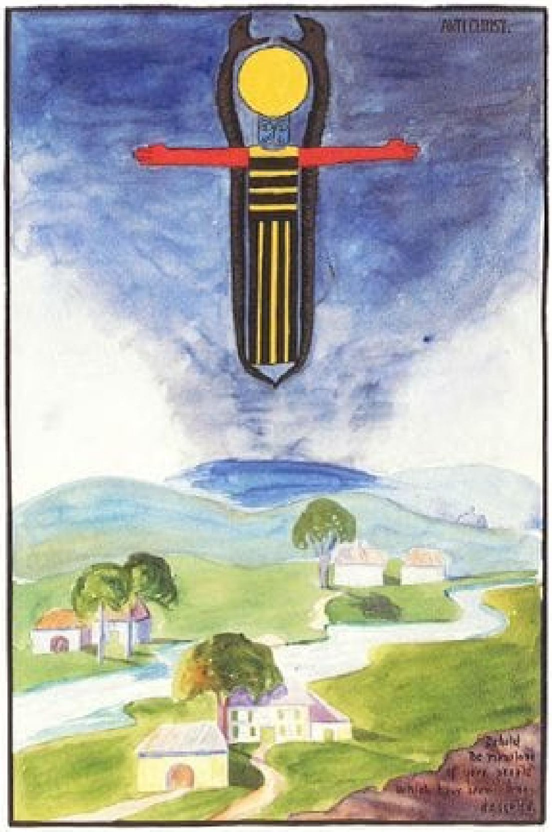
THE VISION FROM THE PRECIPICE

35. "Again I approached the precipice and looked down into the valley



I PASS BEYOND THE WHEEL

34. "I came to a great wheel which blocked my way"



35. "I beheld in the sky a great Mexican image"

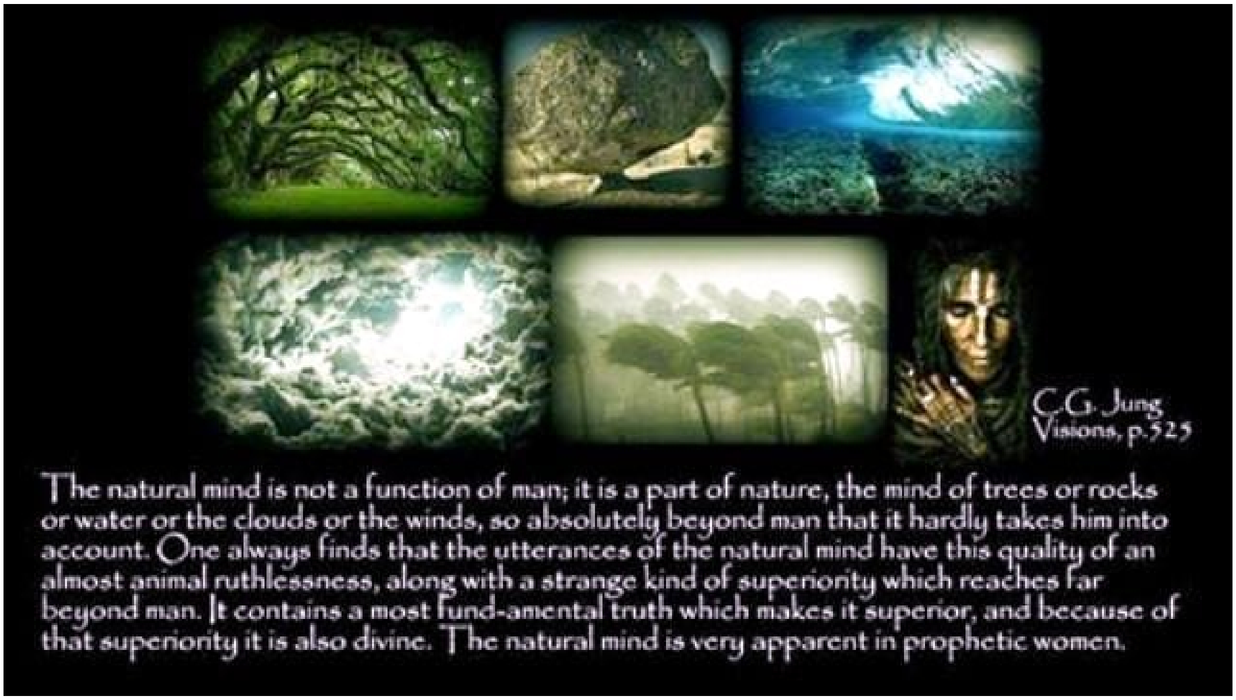
1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/12baaa.jpg
2. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/12bbbb.jpg
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/12bccc.jpg
4. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aaa.png
5. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bbb.png
6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ccc-2.jpg
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ddd-2.jpg
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/eee-2.jpg
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fff-2.jpg
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ggg-2.jpg
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/hhh-2.jpg
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/iii-1.jpg
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/jjj-1.jpg
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/kkk-1.jpg
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/lll-1.jpg
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/mmm-1.jpg
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/nnn-1.jpg
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ooo-1.jpg
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ppp-1.jpg
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/qqq.png

21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/rrr-1.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/sss-1.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ttt-1.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/uuu-1.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/vvv-1.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/www.png`
27. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/xxx-1.jpg`
28. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/yyy-1.jpg`
29. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/zzz-1.jpg`

Carl Jung: The union of the male and female in this figure, then, simply means beyond sex;

(2019-03-09 04:30)

[1]



C.G. Jung
Visions, p.525

The natural mind is not a function of man; it is a part of nature, the mind of trees or rocks or water or the clouds or the winds, so absolutely beyond man that it hardly takes him into account. One always finds that the utterances of the natural mind have this quality of an almost animal ruthlessness, along with a strange kind of superiority which reaches far beyond man. It contains a most fund-amental truth which makes it superior, and because of that superiority it is also divine. The natural mind is very apparent in prophetic women.

it is neither male nor female, it is something incomprehensible.

That is, the natural mind is no longer subject to a sexual point of view; it is neither a woman's nor a man's point of view, it is the point of view just beyond, and that accounts for its divinity.

Anything that is beyond the human is animal and divine, and neither animal nor divine: therefore the animal symbols for the divine, the Holy Ghost as a dove, for instance; all the antique gods have their animal counterparts.

So that natural mind is not a function of man; it is a part of nature, the mind of trees or rocks or water or the clouds or the winds, and so ruthless, so absolutely beyond man that it hardly takes him into account.

One always finds that the utterances of the natural mind have this quality of an almost animal ruthlessness, along with a strange kind of superiority which reaches far beyond man.

It contains a most fundamental truth which makes it superior, and because of that superiority it is also divine.

The natural mind is very apparent in prophetic women.

Tacitus says ofthe old Germanic women that they were reverenced for their wisdom and their gift of prophecy.

They were probably women who had the gift of realizing the natural mind.

About twenty years ago in the course of an excavation in Upper Egypt-I think it was in Aswan-an inscription was discovered which gave the list of the members of the household of a high Roman officer.

All the different offices were mentioned, and among the members of the staff was a slave whose name was unusual in that country, Walburga Sibylla.

Walburga is a typical German name, and the Sibylla was the prophetic woman of a household.

So she was probably a German woman who had been sold to a powerful man in Egypt for the guidance of his life, a woman analyst for his personal use.

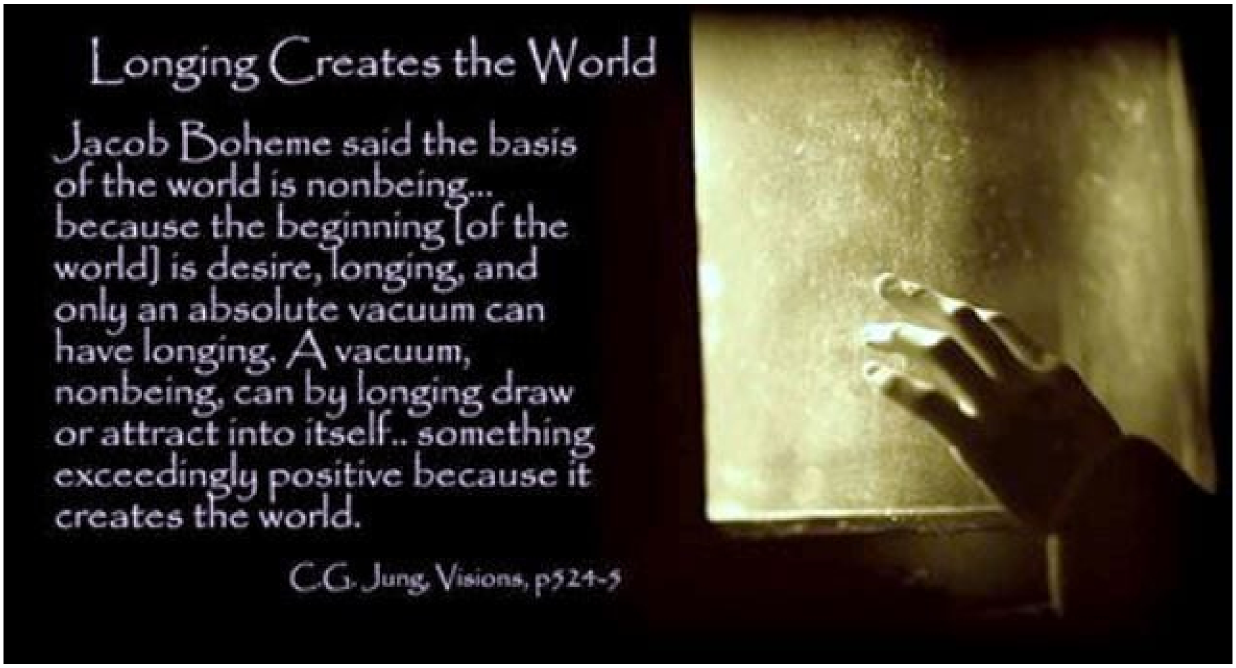
It is tremendously interesting and the only case I ever heard of.

It seems that the Sibylla was a sort of profession, and this Walburga no doubt provided the household with her prophetic opinions and was consulted in all difficult situations. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 525.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ce2b5-12bmind2bof2bnature.jpg`

Carl Jung: It is the kingdom of things that are not. (2019-03-09 04:30)

[1]



Longing Creates the World

Jacob Boheme said the basis of the world is nonbeing... because the beginning [of the world] is desire, longing, and only an absolute vacuum can have longing. A vacuum, nonbeing, can by longing draw or attract into itself.. something exceedingly positive because it creates the world.

C.G. Jung, Visions, p524-5

Mrs. Crowley: The two symbols together would perhaps suggest the Yin and the Yang.

Dr. Jung: That is true.

The bowl would be the female and the staff the male form, which means a union of opposites; the male and female are together in this poimen.

It also means neither male nor female.

That is expressed in the so-called Gospel according to the Egyptians, in the conversation of Jesus with Salome.

Salome asked Jesus when the prophecies would be fulfilled, and Jesus said: "When ye shall tread upon the vesture of shame, and when the two shall be one, and the male with the female neither male nor female. "

That is, when a thing is yea and nay, then it is neither yea nor nay, it is both and therefore beyond.

The unrecognizable and incomprehensible thing can only be expressed by a paradox; when we cannot understand a thing in its essence, when we cannot grasp it by our means of reasoning, we describe it in such a form.

For instance, the Buddhistic concept of nirvana is positive non-being, or being, non-being.

It is the kingdom of things that are not.

The beginning of the world, the creative point, the origin, is also described by a paradox: a completely empty fullness, or completely full emptiness.

And Jakob Boehme, that famous mystic and philosopher of the sixteenth century, said that the basis of the world is the nil, the Nichts, the non-being, and that it cannot be otherwise because the beginning is desire, longing, and only an absolute vacuum can have longing.

A vacuum, non-being, can by longing draw or attract into itself, while anything that is full already possesses and can desire no longer.

So this desire, and Schopenhauer's primordial will, is something exceedingly positive because it creates the world; and yet it is nothing, for only where there is nothing can something come to pass. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 524-525

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2d481-12blonging.jpg`

Carl Jung: On the whole I prefer people knowing all they can about themselves when in conspectu mortis.

(2019-03-10 07:29)

Dear Reverend Mother, 19 October 1960

According to your wish I wrote, as soon as I got your letter, to Dr. Rudin, S.J. (the director of the Institutum Apologeticum in Zurich) , who knew Victor White, asking for his cooperation.

Thus I hope your wish will be granted.

It was perhaps just as well that my message did not reach V.W. any more. It might have worried him.

When I wrote my explanation I was not yet informed of the seriousness of his condition, and from his reaction I only saw that he did not understand what I meant, which was not astonishing under the circumstances.

On the whole I prefer people knowing all they can about themselves when in conspectu mortis. But the moment was ill chosen.

Don’t worry too much about it, as V.W. received my real message and was not able to understand it any more. My message to you was only an attempt to pacify his mind about my intentions.

I was afraid he might be unduly worried about the letter he could not understand.

I have now seen quite a number of people die in the time of a great transition, reaching as it were the end of their pilgrimage in sight of the Gates, where the way bifurcates to the land of Hereafter and to the future of mankind and its spiritual adventure.

You had a glimpse of the Mysterium Magnum.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung

P. S. I have just received Dr. Rudin’s answer. He himself will celebrate the mass. Carl Jung, Letters Vol.II, Pages 603-604

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/28c2a-12bcarl.jpg`

Carl Jung: "So long as we are chameleons..." (2019-03-11 03:14)

[1]

“like a chameleon"... It is our chameleon nature that forces us through these transformations.

So long as we are chameleons, we need an annual journey in the bath of rebirth.

Therefore I looked at the outdating of my ideals with horror, since I loved my natural greenness and mistrusted my chameleon skin, which changed colors according to the environment.

The chameleon does this cleverly.

One calls this change a progress through rebirth.

So you experience 777 rebirths.

The Buddha did not need quite so long to see that even rebirths are vain. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 278, Footnote 94.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/003f8-2.jpg`

[Carl Jung: "But we know that the ancients spoke to us in images."] (2019-03-11 03:22)

[1]

Ca
But we know that the ancients spoke to us in images.

Hence my thinking advised me to emulate Christ, not to imitate him but because he is the way If I follow a way, I do not imitate him.

But if I imitate Christ, he is my goal and not my way But if he is my way, I thus go toward his goal, as the mysteries had shown me previously Thus my thinking spoke to me in a confused and ambiguous manner, but it advised me to imitate Christ. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 278, Footnote 163.

His own way led him to the cross for humanity's own way leads to the cross. My way also leads to the cross, but not to that of Christ, but to mine, which is the image of the sacrifice and of life.

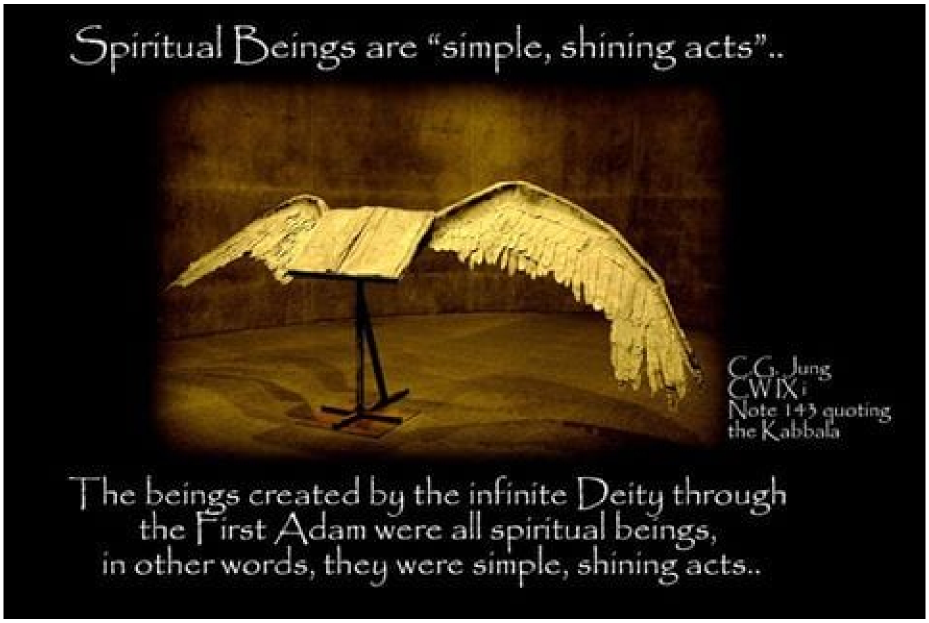
But as I was still blinded, I was inclined to yield to the enormous temptation of imitation and to look across to Christ, as if he were my goal and not my way. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 278, Footnote 164.

Not one title of Christian law is abrogated, but instead we are adding a new one: accepting the lament of the dead. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 278, Footnote 187.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/5c44c-1.jpg`

Carl Jung: In the centre is the golden light in the form of a lamp, as she herself stated. (2019-03-11 03:30)

[1]



Spiritual Beings are "simple, shining acts"..
C.G. Jung
CW IX: i
Note 143 quoting
the Kabbala
The beings created by the infinite Deity through the First Adam were all spiritual beings, in other words, they were simple, shining acts..

In Picture 9 we see for the first time the blue "soul-flower," on a red background, also described as such by Miss X (naturally without knowledge of Bohme).

In the centre is the golden light in the form of a lamp, as she herself stated.

The cortices are very pronounced, but they consist of light (at least in the upper half of the mandala) and radiate outwards. [Footnote 143]

The light is composed of the rainbow hues of the rising sun; it is a real cauda pavonis.

There are six sets of sunbeams.

This recalls the Buddha's Discourse on the Robe, from the Collection of the Pali Canon:

His heart overflowing with lovingkindness . . . with compassion . . . with joyfulness . . . with equanimity, he abides, raying forth lovingkindness, compassion, joyfulness, equanimity, towards one quarter of space, then towards the second, then towards the third, then towards the fourth, and above and below, thus, all around.

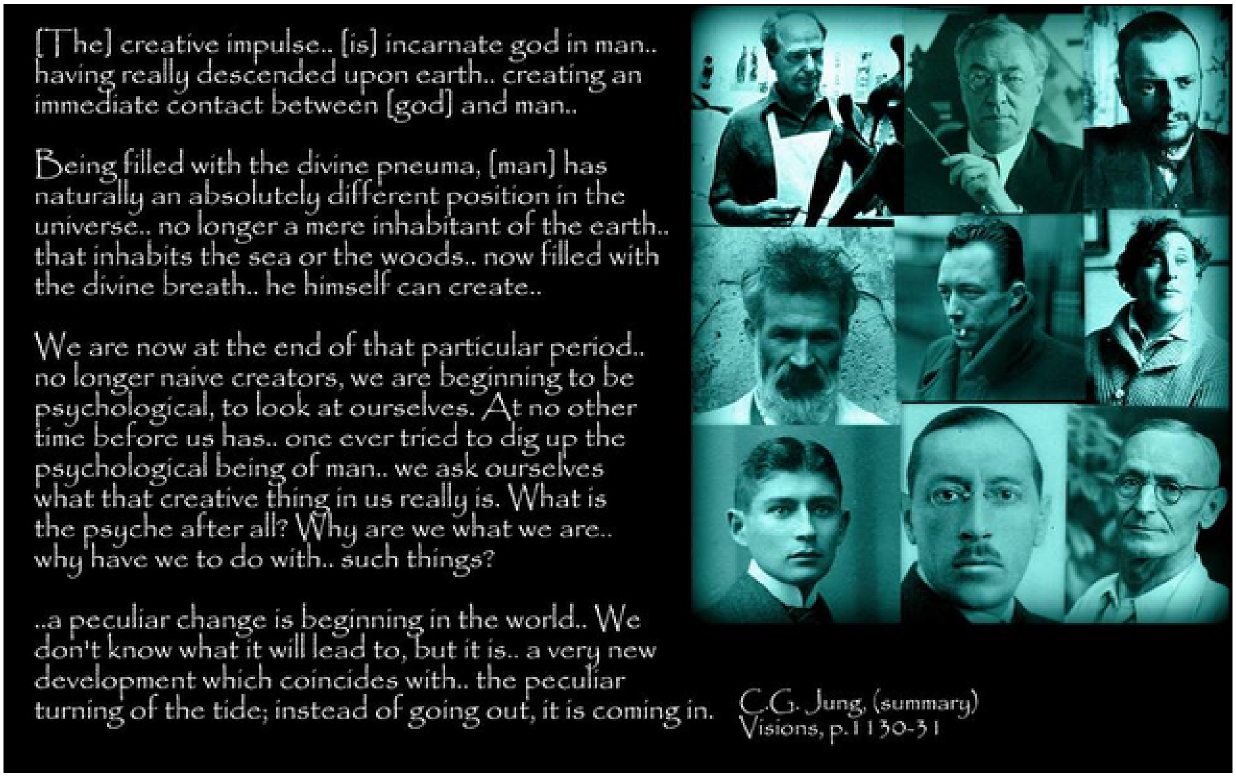
Everywhere, into all places the wide world over, his heart overflowing with compassion streams forth, wide, deep, illimitable, free from enmity, free from all ill-will. . . .[Footnote144] Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 596

Footnote 143 Cf. Kabbala Denudata, Appendix, ch. IV, sec. 2, p. 26: "The beings created by the infinite Deity through the First Adam were all spiritual beings, viz. they were simple, shining acts, being one in themselves, partaking of a being that may be thought of as the midpoint of a sphere, and partaking of a life that may be imagined as a sphere emitting rays."

Footnote 144 "Parable of the Cloth," in The First Fifty Discourses from the Collection of the Middle-Length Discourses (Majjhima Nikaya) of Gotama the Buddha, I, pp. 39f. modified. This reference to the Buddha is not accidental, since the figure of the Tathagata in the lotus seat occurs many times in the patient's mandalas.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bfb07-12bcreated.jpg`

Carl Jung: All this, however, does not entirely explain the fettered bull. (2019-03-11 03:30)



[The] creative impulse.. [is] incarnate god in man.. having really descended upon earth.. creating an immediate contact between [god] and man..

Being filled with the divine pneuma, [man] has naturally an absolutely different position in the universe.. no longer a mere inhabitant of the earth.. that inhabits the sea or the woods.. now filled with the divine breath.. he himself can create..

We are now at the end of that particular period.. no longer naive creators, we are beginning to be psychological, to look at ourselves. At no other time before us has.. one ever tried to dig up the psychological being of man.. we ask ourselves what that creative thing in us really is. What is the psyche after all? Why are we what we are.. why have we to do with.. such things?

..a peculiar change is beginning in the world.. We don't know what it will lead to, but it is.. a very new development which coincides with.. the peculiar turning of the tide; instead of going out, it is coming in.

C.G. Jung, (summary)
Visions, p.1130-31

All this, however, does not entirely explain the fettered bull.

We have to look at this symbol from still another side.

As we said, this is the creative impulse or the will of the creator, incarnate god in man.

Therefore it is the god in man which is to be the object of worship; it is no longer the transcendent, extra-mundane god, the god before creation, but the god after creation, having really descended upon earth.

Thus far this idea would be a fulfillment of the Christian conception of the god incarnate in man.

In Christ, according to the Christian dogma, God descended upon the earth, he left his extramundane position and appeared in the flesh, thereby creating an immediate contact between himself and man.

And ever since then, man, through the process of redemption, is supposed to be filled with the divine breath, to really contain the eternal spirit, or the god, the divine breath.

And being filled with the divine pneuma, he has naturally an absolutely different position in the universe; he is no longer a mere inhabitant of the earth, like an animal that inhabits the sea or the woods, he is now filled with the divine reath and is therefore a god in his own right; he himself can create.

Now we must admit that in the history of the world, as far as we know it, mankind has never produced such an extraordinary civilization as in the last two thousand years; we are in a way immensely far away from the primitive age.

In the two or three thousand years before Christ, the world was close to the primitive age, it was not much farther along than the old prehistoric civilization.

But in the last thousand years, man has swept over the earth and transformed it in many respects; he has done the most amazing things.

So there is a peculiar coincidence between the religion which teaches implicitly that we are divine creators, and an extraordinary creative period in the history of civilization. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1130

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8e22d-12bimpulse.jpg`

Carl Jung: What are religions? Religions are psychotherapeutic systems. (2019-03-11 04:06)

[1]

"Religions are the great healing-systems for the ills of the soul."
Carl Jung
www.jungquotes.com
Dome of the Rock, Jerusalem

What are religions? Religions are psychotherapeutic systems. What are we doing, we psychotherapists?

We are trying to heal the suffering of the human mind, of the human psyche or the human soul, and religions deal with the same problem.

Therefore our Lord himself is a healer; he is a doctor; he heals the sick and he deals with the troubles of the soul; and that is exactly what we call psychotherapy.

It is not a play on words when I call religion a psychotherapeutic system. It is the most elaborate system, and there is a great practical truth behind it.

I have a clientele which is pretty large and extends over a number of continents, and where I live we are practically surrounded by Catholics; but during the last thirty years I have not had more than about six practising Catholics among my patients.

The vast majority were Protestants and Jews.

I once sent round a questionnaire to people whom I did not know, asking: "If you were in psychological trouble what would you do?

Would you go to the doctor or would you go to the priest or parson?"

I cannot remember the actual figures; but I remember that about twenty per cent of the Protestants said they would go to the parson.

All the rest were most emphatically against the parson and for the doctor, and the most emphatic were the relatives and children of parsons.

There was one Chinese who replied, and he put it very nicely. He remarked: "When I am young I go to the doctor, and when I am old I go to the philosopher."

But about fifty-eight or sixty per cent of the Catholics answered that they would certainly go to the priest.

That proves that the Catholic Church in particular, with its rigorous system of confession and its director of conscience, is a therapeutic institution.

I have had some patients who, after having had analysis with me, even joined the Catholic Church, just as I have had some patients who now go to the so-called Oxford Group Movement—with my blessing!

I think it is perfectly correct to make use of these psychotherapeutic institutions which history has given to us, and I wish I were still a medieval man who could join such a creed.

Unfortunately it needs a somewhat medieval psychology to do it, and I am not sufficiently medieval.

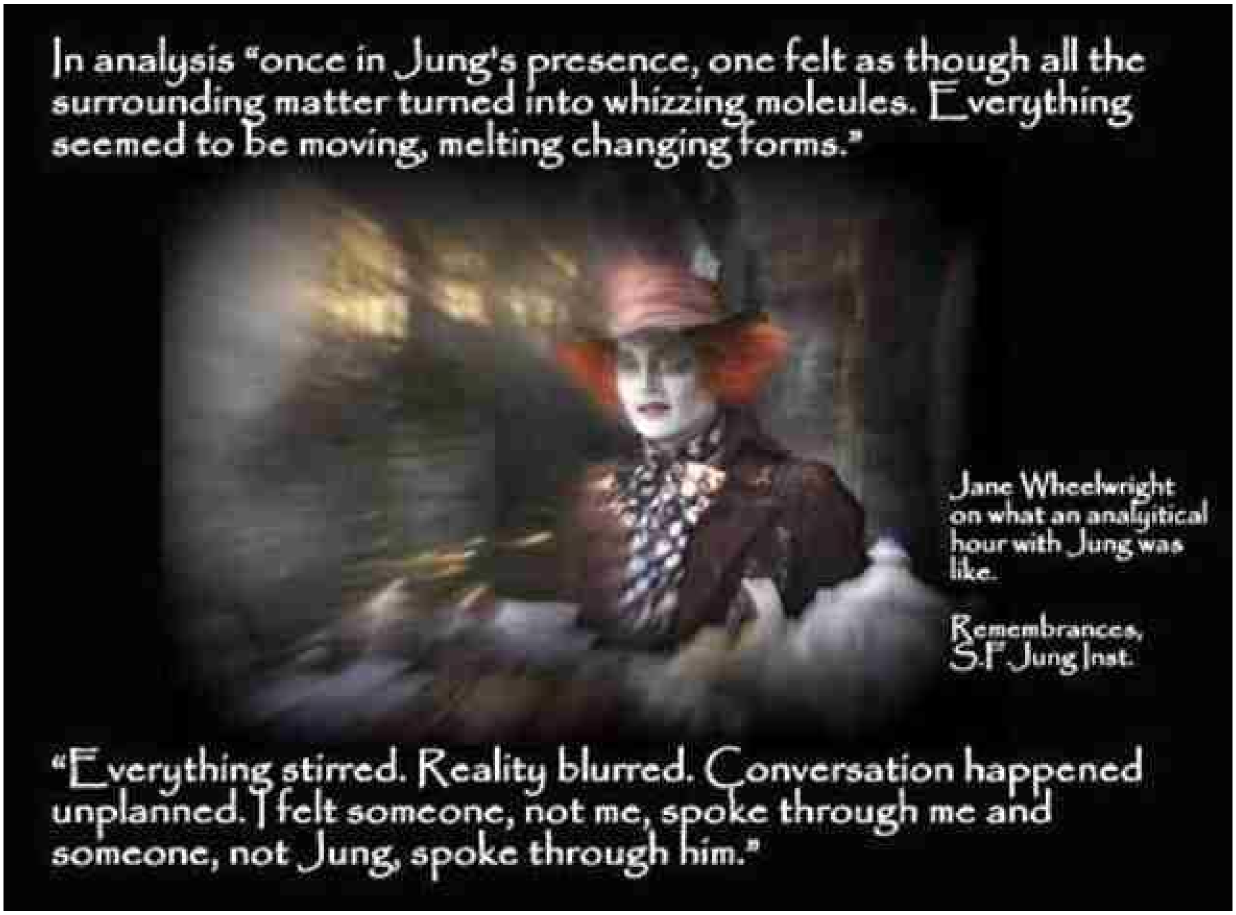
But you see from this that I take the archetypal images and a suitable form for their projection seriously, because the collective unconscious is really a serious factor in the human psyche. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 370

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c7481-12breligions.jpg`

Jane Wheelwright: "Jung was a mountain of a man - big enough to encompass every kind of person imaginable" (2019-03-11 04:10)

[1]



In analysis “once in Jung's presence, one felt as though all the surrounding matter turned into whizzing moleules. Everything seemed to be moving, melting changing forms.”

Jane Wheelwright on what an analyitical hour with Jung was like.

Remembrances, S.F. Jung Inst.

“Everything stirred. Reality blurred. Conversation happened unplanned. I felt someone, not me, spoke through me and someone, not Jung, spoke through him.”

Analyst and author Jane Wheelwright was a patient of Jung’s in the 1930s.

Jane Wheelwright: “Jung was a mountain of a man - big enough to encompass every kind of person imaginable.

All kinds of people big and small found through him their uniqueness. He touched all kinds of people who came his way.
Sometimes it was through what he inadvertently said - more often than not something he would not remember.

Sometimes it was what he did.

Mostly it was what he was: a comprehensive, large, all-embracing, complete man.

He spanned in himself everything from greatness and power to all-too-human failings. He could be irritable and sometimes downright demanding.

Explosions of rage were not uncommon.

He even could be duped at times by unscrupulous and ambitious people.

Sometimes he seemed to reduce to human ordinariness. At other times he seemed to expand - to literally physically expand - to overpowering size.

I remember once experiencing him like this.

I must have betrayed my feeling that he was beyond my reach because he said out of the blue, "Do I have horns on my head?"

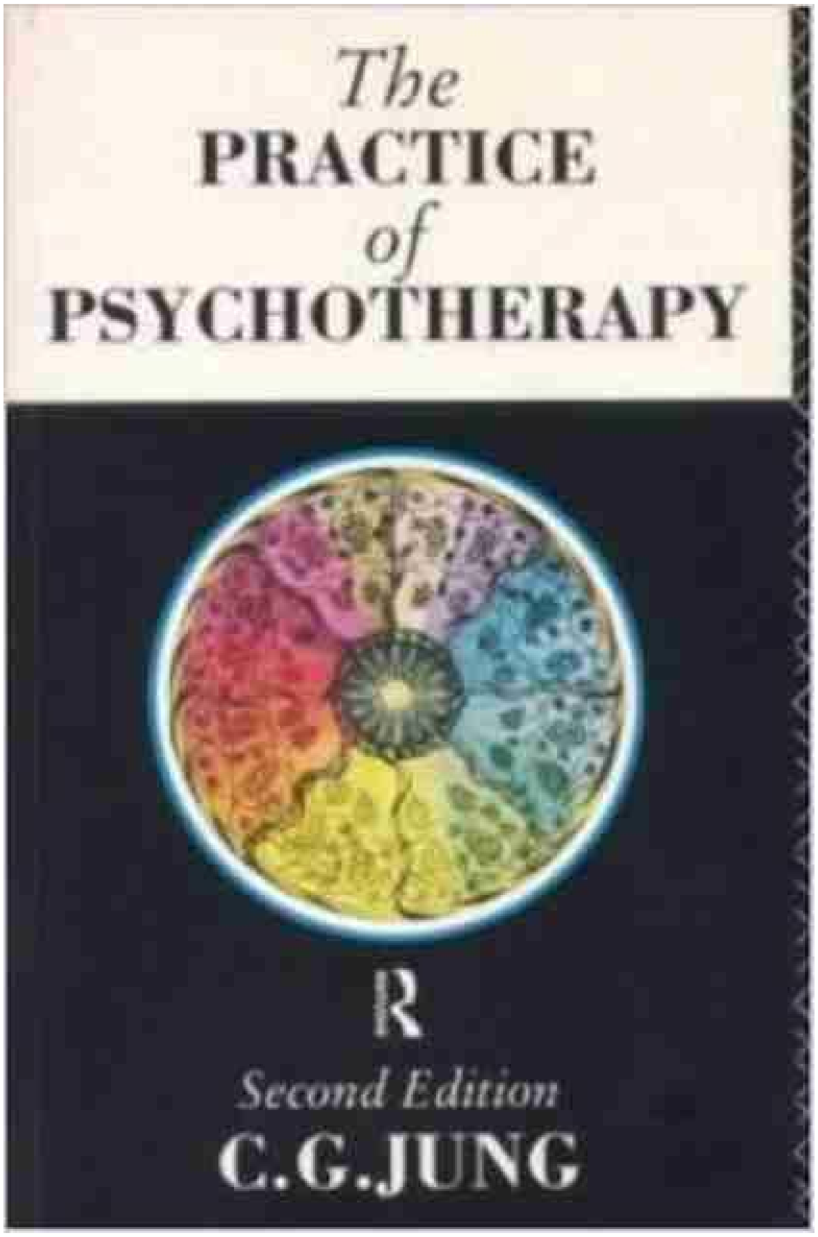
Jung was able to constellate the unconscious of countless numbers and kinds of people.

It was an extraordinary gift that he had. . . . I believe he was at his best as an analyst." Jane Wheelwright, J.E.T., Page 97.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b25b8-wheel.jpg`

Carl Jung and “The Practice of Psychotherapy” – Anthology (2019-03-11 04:56)

[1]



In sleep, fantasy takes the form of dreams. But in waking life, too, we continue to dream beneath the threshold of consciousness, especially when under the influence of repressed or other unconscious complexes. Carl Jung; "Problems of Modern Psychotherapy" (1929). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 125.

The dream shows the inner truth and reality of the patient as it really is: not as I conjecture it to be, and not as he would like it to be, but as it is. Carl Jung; "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 304.

The dream is specifically the utterance of the unconscious. Just as the psyche has a diurnal side which we call consciousness, so also it has a nocturnal side: the unconscious psychic activity which we apprehend as dreamlike fantasy. Carl Jung; "The Practical Use of Dream Analysis" (1934). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 317.

The unconscious is not a demoniacal monster, but a natural entity which, as far as moral sense, aesthetic taste, and intellectual judgment go, is completely neutral. It only becomes dangerous when our conscious attitude to it is hopelessly wrong. To the degree that we repress it, its danger increases. Carl Jung; The Practical Use of Dream Analysis; CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 329.

The unconscious is not just evil by nature, it is also the source of the highest good: not only dark but also light, not only bestial, semihuman, and demonic but superhuman, spiritual, and, in the classical sense of the word, "divine." Carl Jung; The Practice of Psychotherapy; Page 364.

For two personalities to meet is like mixing two chemical substances: if there is any combination at all, both are transformed. Carl Jung, CW 18, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Para 163.

To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful, for all those who are still below the general level of adaptation. But for people of more than average ability, people who never found it difficult to gain successes and to accomplish their share of the world's work-for them the moral compulsion to be nothing but normal signifies the bed of Procrustes-deadly and insupportable boredom, a hell of sterility and hopelessness. Carl Jung; CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy; P. 161.

Often the hands will solve a mystery that the intellect has struggled with in vain." Carl Jung, CW 16, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Para 181.

To be "normal" is the ideal aim for the unsuccessful, for all those who are still below the general level of adaptation. Carl Jung, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Page 69.

Our civilization is still young, and young civilizations need all the arts of the animal-tamer to make the defiant barbarian and the savage in us more or less tractable. Carl Jung, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Page 75.

Hence, unless we prefer to be made fools of by our illusions, we shall, by carefully analyzing every fascination, extract from it a portion of our own personality, like a quintessence, and slowly come to recognize that we meet ourselves time an d again in a thousand disguises on the path of life. Carl Jung, The Practice of Psychotherapy, Page 316.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dea6c-psychotherapy.jpg`

Gustav Drei Fuss: Memory of C.G. Jung (2019-03-11 05:22)

[1]

Gustav Drei Fuss: Memory of C.G. Jung

After about three years of analysis with Dr. Liliane Frey-Rohn, dreamt an archetypal dream of such a content that Dr. Frey found it to be a dream for the boss!

I was very excited about this suggestion and immediately wrote Jung.

And then, at the beginning of March, 1951, I received a letter saying that Jung was prepared to receive me. I was very excited , and the hour I had turned out to be very interesting, stimulating.

It was incredible how much knowledge, amplifications to my dream I received in one hour.

Although I had been scared to a certain extent to meet the big man, I felt at ease when talking and listening to him.

At the door he said to me: well, these were two really juicy dreams.

Another encounter: Attending a lecture, my wife and 1 happened to sit not far away from the Jung's. When it was about time to leave, Jung suddenly turned to his wife and said in a genuine Swiss way: "So, Emma, chum jetzt!" (So, Emma, let's go!)
These words my wife and I still "hear" today! '

Around 1955 the diploma candidates of the Jung Institute had the opportunity to meet Jung in his home and ask questions.

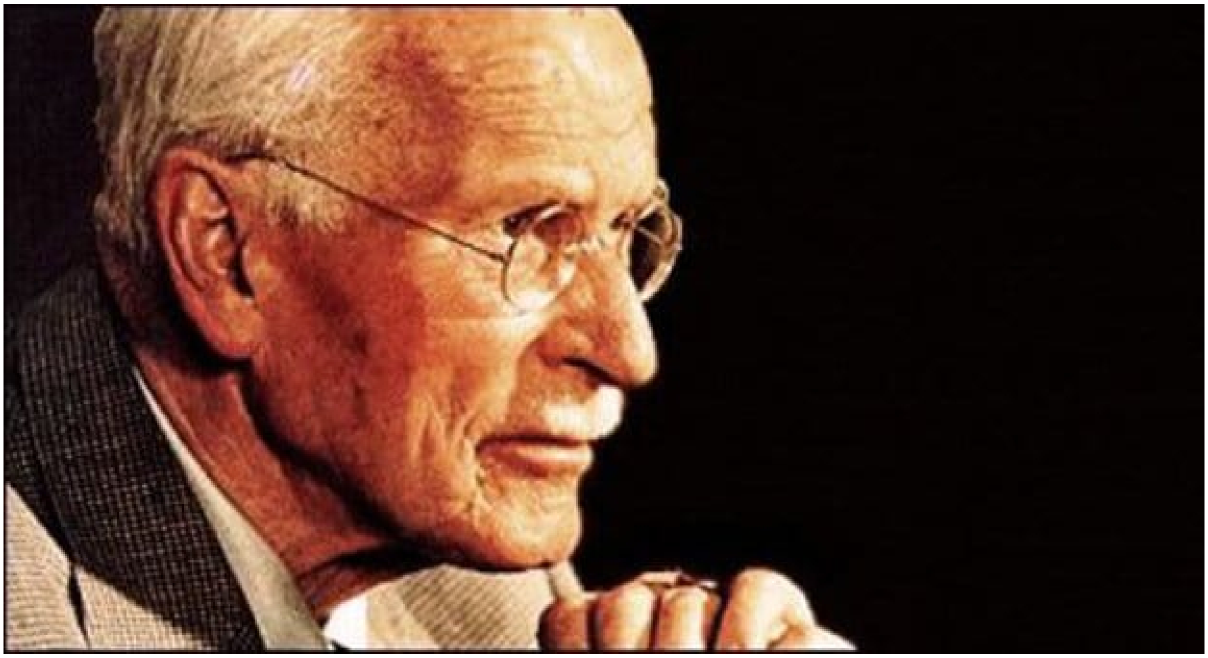
1 vividly remember Jung's answer with regard to the meaning of consciousness. Then he added: But a still bigger problem is unconsciousness.

How can man time and again become unconscious in order to unite with the depth of his soul and drink from the deepest wells? (At least, that's how I remember it.) Gustav Drei Fuss, J.E.T., Pages 13-14.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2b189-12bfuss.jpg`

Carl Jung on Religion (2019-03-11 05:27)

[1]



The inner man has access to the sense organs of God.

God has a longing for man and it seems there is provision for God to be created in man's consciousness. Consciousness is the cradle of the birth of God in man.

A religious life presupposes a conscious connection of the inner and outer worlds and it requires a constant, meticulous attention to all circumstances to the best of our knowledge and our conscience.

We must watch what the gods ordain for us in the outer world, but as well as waiting for developments in the outer world we must listen to the inner world; both worlds are expressions of God.

There is no general prescription for salvation. "If thou knowest what thou doest, thou art blessed." I must know what the Church teaches but I must then ask myself what my own law is.

When someone says, in the words of the "Our Father, " "Thy will be done," we must find out, if he is capable of taking both the inside and the outside, the ego and the world, into account.

By "Thy Will" one person may mean only what his unconscious dictates, while another may disregard all his thoughts and aspirations and fatalistically accept all that happens in his outer life.

To some people we must say, "You must choose your own way; you must act." Others have to learn to refrain from acting.
Few take both into account, which is why Deus et homo is so important. Imagine a person who only sees two possibilities, two dimensions.
Rest your fingertips on the table.

The person who can only see two dimensions is aware only of the fingertips.

He does not see the curve of the hand above the fingertips combining them into a whole – just as the invisible wholeness of man hovers over and combines all his possibilities.

So it is, that only the individual acts of the person are seen, rather than the whole person with both male and female aspects.

The whole man is standing in eternity and is manifested in time as a manifold: Shiva and Shakti, that is.

The Kingdom of Heaven is a primordial condition like Paradise, but it is later in time and cannot be reached by regressing, only be going forward.

We do not know whether our present order is final.

At another level a new creative solution may be required.

Instead of saying, "God is beyond good and evil," we can say, "Life is both good and evil." God is understood here as all that is beyond our capacity to grasp, beyond all our imagining. We see things only in contrast: fullness and emptiness, light and shadow.
So in China God was represented by a jade disc with a hole in the centre; the disc rests in a container like the Host in the monstrance.

The hole in the disc is a way of representing God as the unnameable and the unknown.

The Lord's words, "Blessed are they who know what they do," seem in direct contradiction to the other words of Christ, "Forgive them for they know not what they do."

But life feeds on opposites.

When a little old woman carries wood to the pyre to burn a saint who is thought to be a heretic we might say, "Forgive her, O sancta simpicitas."

We might also say that only he is blessed who knows what-he is doing. A priori contradictions will always appear in life.
The words of the Bible and the sayings of Christ are paradox.

We too must be paradox, for only then do we live our lives, only then do we reach completeness and integration of our personalities.

To be whole is to be full of contradictions.

The unity never becomes apparent because the opposites within us operate and mingle in various ways and it is their interaction that makes the whole man.

The complete human being, the hermaphrodite, is never visible. He is indescribable, always a mystical experience.
That which shows itself is always paradoxical so there is no uniform image of the personality. Biographies seem so unreal because they attempt to give a consistent picture of someone’ s personality.
The visible image of man is that he is both Christ and the Devil at the same time; the image is truthful only when it is ambiguous and paradoxical.

That is why we can also say that doubt is a higher state than certainty.

He who doubts can see both possibilities.

It is pleasant for us when certainty is attained, but is must not last too long for certainty is not life. It looks as if God was unconscious.
Anyone who knew the goal would not have taken such a roundabout way with creation. It took a very long time for the brain to appear on the earth.
The dinosaurs give the impression of having completely empty heads; then bumps appeared, then much later horns grew from the head, and much later still the brain was formed.

It seems as if there was an urge to create something.

The least differentiated animals developed the most: only that which is incomplete can perfect itself.

Only an unconscious creative power could have worked so hesitantly which is why I think the creative God was unconscious.

This assumption also accounts for the many prehistoric catastrophes.

It does not imply that creation was accidental but that it seems as if its intention was limited in scope.

The bumps and the horns were the first experiment on the head, then the brain formed inside, then warm blood, fur and feathers appeared, and only at this stage did consciousness become a possibility.

If we assume that God was unconscious how can we explain our belief that everything existed as an idea from the beginning of time?

The unconscious has its consciousness, it reveals itself. through dreams, for otherwise we could not know any- thing about it.

God holds all of creation in the unconscious: Paul preached in Athens and said, "God scorned the time when men lived in unbelief, ’in agnosia’."

There are several passages in the New Testament that are not correctly translated for us. Metanoen was translated as "do penance" when it should actually have read "change your ways."

"Change your ways" had moral significance for the needs of that time.

If the Creator knew everything in advance history would seem like a badly running machine, misfiring now and then.

God would be responsible for each catastrophe because it must have arisen from his mistakes. The assumption of divine prescience or of a personal God makes nonsense of the world.
To understand the God-Creator as absolute potential is to recognize a power which is endowed with meaning in space and time and in causality.

Meaning is, indeed, only a quarter of the whole, but when all four come into coincidence, consciousness comes into being.

If God were almighty how could it have taken 400 million years to reach this point from a time when only fish existed, if creation was not an unconscious search and a groping in the dark?

How could we account for these enormous quantities of fish before new beings could come into existence? This is my myth about God and his creation.
The four aspects, the quaternity of the Creator- God are space, time, causality and meaning. Human consciousness is the second creator of the world.
Only through extreme differentiation and distance can consciousness come about.

A God who is a God of a people or a God of everything cannot individuate himself and so cannot really become conscious.

God seems to be unconscious: He does not seem to know men. He tries to see them as He is Himself. Man is also distinct from the angels because he can receive revelations, be disobedient, grow and change. God changes too and is therefore especially interested in man.
Christian dogma brought immense advances in religious comprehensions.

God the Father became the Son and His own soul, the Word that became flesh. Each son of God must awaken this new reality in himself.
But then the conflict appears: I am high, I am also so low , and on my right and left hand hang criminals.

If I can bear this I am crucified and must carry this cross and the world as well. Christ is not the Son of the Imperator; he is an illegitimate child of Nazareth "from where no good ever came."

I am a son of God when I do the simplest things; but how difficult it is to do what is absolutely unimportant when I feel I am so significant.

It is a beautiful message that one is a child of God but it can have a devilish effect.

Christ's tragedy could be much more impressively portrayed in our day than as the figure of a preacher wandering through Palestine two thousand years ago, not even needing to support himself.

But how can we in our day have the idea of Christ in ourselves yet have to make a living as a bookkeeper, to meet Miss Meyer and marry her, have children and be obliged to live with them ?

Imagine an evening at "The Corner Tavern" as Mr.

So and so, a glass of beer in front of him, and in his heart the outrageous claim, "I am the son of God." How is the darkness to know the light if it does not partake of it?
God deigned to take on the image of man.

We are his eyes and ears, imago Dei in homine.

We must pray, "deliver us from evil," and not only man but God as well must be redeemed.

In the film "Green Pastures" God the Father says, "I must become a man myself" (to redeem them and myself).

We can avoid the penalty of hybris by making a sacrifice. Each of us must find in what area his sacrifice must be made.
If we can think of the worst possible sacrifice for us we are close to knowing which we must make. A sacrifice is doing what we would force others to do.
If we hold back through fear of hybris then we fail in our task and become a homunculus. The acceptance of the shadow is a sacrifice.
For the man who feels himself to be the God- Creator the acceptance of his compensatory feminine side is also a sacrifice.

The image of the Divine Child characterizes our relation with the Self. In philosophy God is abstract, an idea, imageless.
But the Divine Child is the incarnation of an idea; it permits us personal access to an idea which we could not easily realize without it.

The most serious question to ask, it seems to me, is what will Christianity have to say in the future? What is the meaning of an attachment to the cross, what are the four functions?

What does it mean to say "He gave up the ghost" or, "My God , why hast thou forsaken me?" What does this mean for humanity?
What does it mean to say that man dies yet only the risen still live?

All these questions may become actual during the next two thousand years, in the era of Aquarius.

The more one understands wholeness and through inner experience approaches it, the more one quasi resembles God.

"The Spirit examines everything, even the depths of Divinity."

This sentence was an editorial error (in the process of veiling the Logia) which should not have been embodied in the Bible.

We must not forget that we are only ants … but that even an ant is an imago Dei.

I do not know whether Karma creates the ego or the ego creates Karma. Carl Jung, Ostroski-Sachs, Pages 38-43.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b4f86-12breligio.jpg`

Carl Jung: Your questions are unanswerable because you want to know how one ought to live.

(2019-03-11 05:30)

[1]
You just have to keep pushing yourself.

To Frau V.

Dear Frau V., 15 December 1933

Your questions are unanswerable because you want to know how one ought to live.

One lives as one can.

There is no single, definite way for the individual which is prescribed for him or would be the proper one.

If that's what you want you had best join the Catholic Church, where they tell you what's what.

Moreover this way fits in with the average way of mankind in general.

But if you want to go your individual way, it is the way you make for yourself, which is never prescribed, which you do not know in advance, and which simply comes into being of itself when you put one foot in front of the other.

If you always do the next thing that needs to be done, you will go most safely and sure-footedly along the path prescribed by your unconscious.

Then it is naturally no help at all to speculate about how you ought to live.

And then you know, too, that you cannot know it, but quietly do the next and most necessary thing.

So long as you think you don't yet know what this is, you still have too much money to spend in useless speculation.

But if you do with conviction the next and most necessary thing, you are always doing something meaningful and intended by fate.

With kind regards and wishes,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 132-133

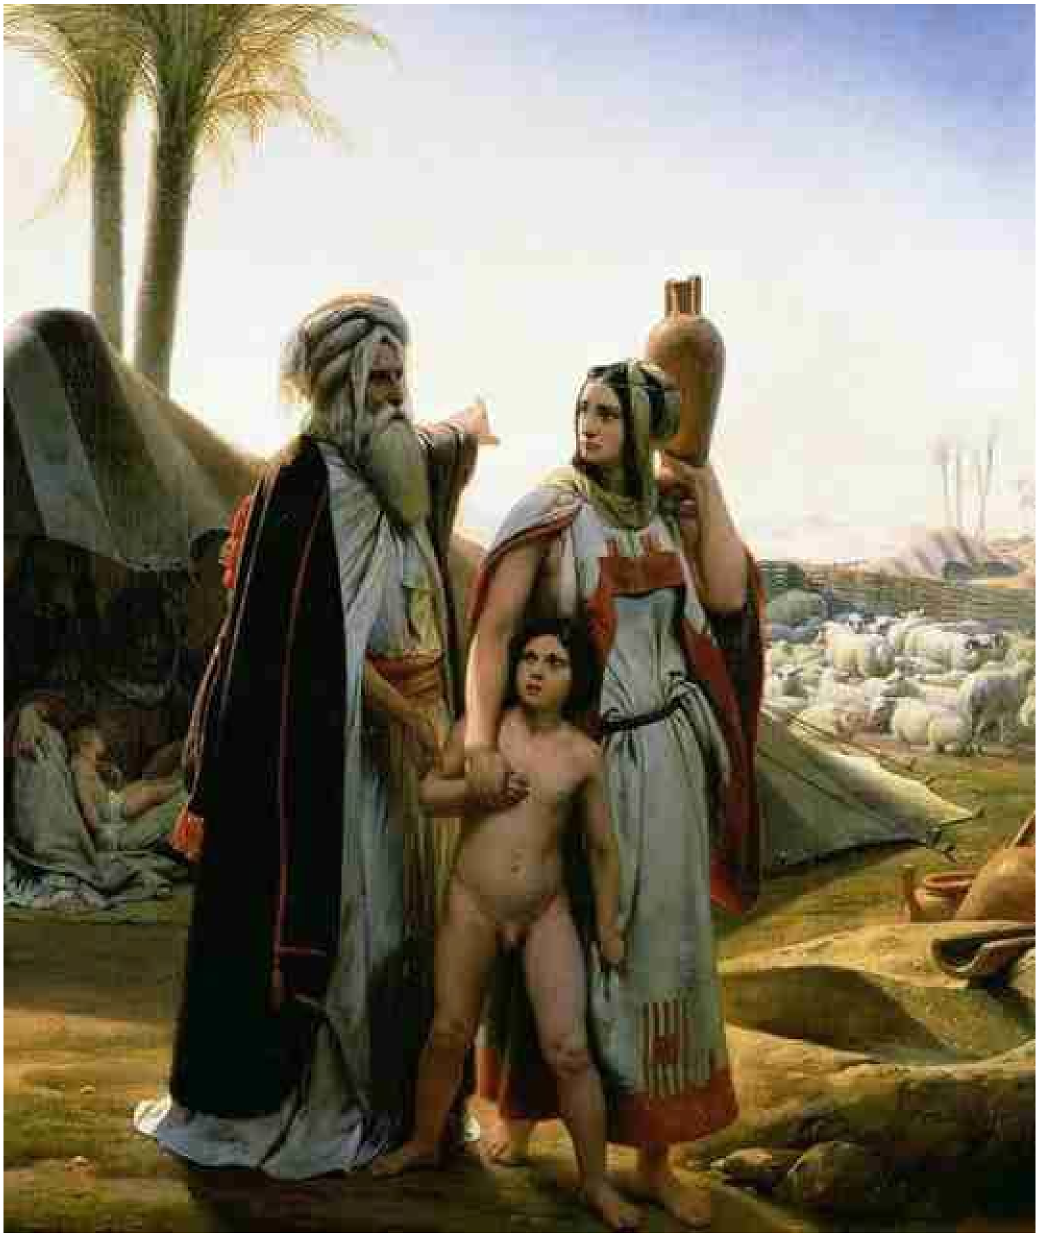
[2]

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/493bd-12bfrau2bv.jpg`
2. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/`

Carl Jung: ... my schoolmates hung the nickname "Father Abraham" on me. (2019-03-11 05:59)

[1]



It was some months after the incident just described that my schoolmates hung the nickname "Father Abraham" on me.

No. 1 could not understand why, and thought it silly and ridiculous.

Yet somewhere in the background I felt that the name had hit the mark.

All allusions to this background were painful to me, for the more I read and the more familiar I became with city life, the stronger grew my impression that what I was now getting to know as reality belonged to an order of things different from the view of the world I had grown up with in the country, among rivers and woods, among men and animals in a small village bathed in sunlight, with the winds and the clouds moving over it, and encompassed by dark night in which uncertain things happened.

It was no mere locality on the map, but "God's world," so ordered by Him and filled with secret meaning. But apparently men did not know this, and even the animals had somehow lost the senses to perceive it.

That was evident, for example, in the sorrowful, lost look of the cows, and in the resigned eyes of horses, in the devotion of dogs, who clung so desperately to human beings, and even in the self-assured step of the cats who had chosen house and barn as their, residence and hunting ground.

People were like the animals, and seemed as unconscious as they.

They looked down upon the ground or up into the trees in order to see what could be put to use, and for what purpose; like animals they herded, paired, and fought, but did not see that they dwelt in a unified cosmos, in God's world, in an eternity where everything is already born and everything has already died. Carl Jung, MDR, Pages 66-67

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c1722-12babraham.jpg`

Carl Jung on the "Type Problem." (2019-03-11 08:35)

The Question of Psychological Types
C. G. JUNG
HANS SCHMID-GUISAN
CORRESPONDENCE EDITED BY
JOHN BEEBE | ERNST FALZEDER

Dear Friend,

When two opposed types discuss the type problem, the greatest part of the discussion is taken up by talking and understanding at cross- purposes.

Language here reveals its incredible incapacity of reflecting the finer nuances that are indispensable for understanding.

Thus, when it comes to matters of psychology, every linguistic sign can mean both one thing and its opposite.

When you speak of the extravert and the feeling of an “identité mystique,” then naturally many things I said about the extravert do not apply.

What I was actually talking about was the “ideally oriented” extravert, and by “ideal” I do not mean “ideal” in the sense it is used in expressions such as “ideal aspirations” and “ideal convictions,” but “ideal” in the sense of “corresponding to one’s principle.”

Here the term“ideal” also implies that the ideal type is an imaginary or abstracted type that does not exist in reality, because a real person naturally also has the other mechanism within himself, with the help of which he can take the edge off what is all- too sharp in the “ideal.” The more “ideal” a case is the more pathological it is.

You are perfectly right, therefore, in assuming that I am speaking mainly of “coarse” or “pathological” persons, among whom the “ideally oriented” can be found.

The term “ideal” lays an unintentional man trap.

In contrast to these cases, you are speaking of the compensated ones, where the situation is of course different.

But then again you are mainly speaking of how a case “should be,” and not how it “is,” whereas I proceeded from the assumption that we were talking about the “types” themselves, and not about “compensated” cases, in which the type problem is actually harder to identify in my opinion than in pure cases.

But anyway, since you have hifted this to a discussion of the compensated case, I will go along with this different program.

On this basis, my judgement about experiencing via the object is of course no longer valid, because with the help of compensation the extravert can very easily “realize” his feeling via the object without violating it in the least.

This “realization” is a process taking place within the subject, and so much inwardly that the object, as you rightly say, often does not notice it at all.

Now this is precisely what I call the “view on the subjective plane.”

This realization proceeds from compensation, but not according to the principle of this type, for extraversion goes outward to the object, and not inward into the subject, which is introversion.

The realization of the feeling goes to the subject and is thus a process of introversion.

Atthe same time it is also a thinking process, however, since realization means that I juxtapose the feeling as an object, differentiating myself from it.

Without this differentiation, I am not able to see what is happening, for then, being indistinguishable from it, I will be the process itself.

“Realization,” as the term already implies, is an “objectivation” of the process, without which apperception is not possible at all.

This apperception of the process is the attainment of self- knowledge or, in other words, the view on the subjective plane.

Abstract feeling, being of a hypothetical nature like all abstraction, is not a violent action in itself.

Taken as a feeling in itself, abstract feeling is a virtue and supreme refinement, just like the abstract thinking of the introvert.

ts violent character is revealed only in its influence on the object. That is why we must let the object have the last word in this matter.
When I violate the extravert with my abstract thinking, this is a fact, and this fact cannot be dismissed even if I insist that the other is merely thinking concretistically.

In this case he has the last word, and I will have to realize that I have to be careful with my virtue so as to avoid harm.

Abstract thinking and feeling are not violent in themselves, nor do we experience them as such, because civilized man has long unlearned to attribute his various complaints to the pressure of domestication.

On closer consideration, however, abstraction in itself is also an act of violence against the disparate phenomenon.

For in order to achieve abstraction, we pour what is separate and manifold into a flask, heat it up, and melt it, and thus force the volatility of the matter into the template.

In that way we create a spiritus, which is an abstraction.

The elements in the flask complain about violent treatment, because for them distillation runs counter to their nature.

We often forget how we achieved our virtues and take our achievements for granted, thinking they would be a blessing for others, too. (Cf. the Negroes and the blessings of civilization. Good examples of this are the Negro republics, and the exemplary social dignity of the Negro in the United States: "for colored people only"— naturally.)

Of course, it is the horse's fault if it cannot pull a railway train; why is it so weak! Someone could point out, however, that a man who harnesses a horse to a railway train is committing an act of violence and is an idiot to boot.

What I want to say is that the explanation for the question of violence cannot be found only in what is pitiably concretistic.

You have complicated the matter considerably by basing the discussion on the compensated type.

But since I am letting myself be "stimulated by the object," I will try to do justice also to the complicated situation.

We surely agree in assuming that the "coarse," "pathological," or "ideally oriented" extravert violates the object by his direct and exclusive relation to it.

This crude form of violence naturally disappears to the extent the extravert abstracts his feeling, by which the latter becomes spiritualized, which is a true sublimation process ("from one bride- bed to another harried").

There are things to which we cannot do justice completely with abstract thinking, and which we even violate if we subject them to abstract thinking.

Equally there are things that must not be subjected to abstract feeling.

Someone like the pure type, who has advanced from the crude to the secondary state, that is, to the abstraction of his adaptive organ, is nevertheless still capable of violence, but in a more refined and all the more cruel way, in that the introvert forces everything to fit into his intellectual pattern, and the extravert into the emotional one, since both of them are rationalists in their whole structure, even though they affect the contrary.

When the two meet they are a perfect match so long as they do not try to understand each other psychologically.

Everything will be fine, for instance, when the hardships of life make such heavy demands on them that they have to direct most of their concentration to the struggle for existence, and therefore cannot make any efforts to assert themselves as individual beings.

When there is no longer such immediate necessity, however, so that they turn to look at one another, they are convinced that they have never understood each other.

The intellect of the one comes up against the other's concretistic "representation," which he finds utterly disagreeable, and the feeling of the latter comes up against the other's concretistic "sensation," which he finds equally disagreeable.

Then, at best, there follows savior- like suffering, an educating, coercing, correcting, "fathering," and "mothering" of the other, heroic feats of love of nearly inestimable proportions.

And then comes the well-known story of the Jew without a train ticket, whom the conductor wanted to throw out at every stop.

When a passenger finally asked him: "Where are you actually going to?" the poor man replied: "To Karlsbad— if my constitution can stand it."

The mistake that is being made is quite obvious: each wants to better the other.

This is the objective plane of viewing things.

This missionary attitude is all very Christian but is extremely annoying to the introvert. He will kick the missionary out.

The extravert's reaction is very clearly demonstrated in your letter: in your opinion, it would be a mistake if we wanted to teach the extravert to think, and the introvert to feel.

You maintain the opposite standpoint, namely, to let things be and, at most, further one's innermost tendency—thinking in the introvert, and feeling in the extravert.

As you so accurately describe it for the case of the extravert, this leads to "realization," which is nothing else but thinking about feeling.

This is how he learns thinking.

You have witnessed a famous case of this kind, in which a distinguished extravert was put, by an introvert de pur sang, into the saddle that is so characteristic of the extravert, on which he then galloped off to those adventures in which he learned to "realize."

This was not taught to him.

He learned it by himself, because he had no other choice.

This is precisely— and pray forgive me— viewing things on the subjective plane.

As you told me, however, a certain other extravert tried to directly impose thinking on the former, which he took very much amiss, as we know, just as an introvert worth his salt will resist with might and main all attempts from the outside to impose and force feeling on him. The dignity of man— an essential notion still to be learned by all missionaries!

It is a remarkable fact that the more you develop the extravert's feeling, believing to thus enhance your feeling into the object, the less the object is actually comprehended, for the object requires not only to be felt into but also sensation and thinking.

The latter two cannot, as we know, on any account be replaced by feeling- into.

That is why raising the level of feeling leads, as you correctly say, to a feeling- into the subject, as the necessary exaggeration of the feeling makes the subject's lack of activity in thinking and sensation felt.

Gently but persistently, this vacuum sucks the libido back from feeling into and thereby enforces "realization," which, as I have already emphasized, is precisely viewing things on the subjective plane.

I completely agree with your supposition that the missionary activity the two types exercise on one another leads not to a deepening of the personality at all but only to a good adaptation to reality.

I have always defended this principle, namely, that one should not proselytize the other but should give him the opportunity to grow from what is his very own.

In my humble opinion, the famous case of a certain extravert quoted above is a good example of this; at the same time this case is probably evidence of the fact that there is no essential difference between your method and mine on this point.

When you say that the act of "deepening of the personality" has merely to do with feeling, you obviously see only the dynamic side of the process, that is, the progress in the development of love.

But you are forgetting that it is precisely "realization" through which a deepening of the personality is achieved.

"Realizing" is an introverting process, an objectification; it is gaining insight, making something conscious, understanding, hence an intellectual process.

Someone who, without "realizing," always continued to fly on the wings of his feeling, would be, and remain to be, an incurably extraverted "dud."

It is just as typical of the extravert to underestimate and fail to notice his own introversion process, as it is of the introvert to underestimate and fail to notice his extraversion process.

So long as the extravert only feels but does not realize, the will naturally have a very inadequate relation to the object, and that is why his “object” will not correspond to reality at all, but will be a subjective fantasy.

Someone who just feels does not think, but fantasizes.

Through feeling- into, the fantasy is transferred or projected into the “object,” but the actual object is thus dis- torted.

If the object is endowed with reason, it will clearly see that it represents merely a fantasy to the other. When the other finally understands the real nature of the object, he cools off considerably.

This naturally offends the object, particularly if it was hoping to get something from the extravert’s feeling, and it will feel disappointed and deceived.

It is exactly as if a very scientifically oriented doctor tre

I can understand the patient when he assumes that he has simply served as a guinea pig for a theory, that is, for a scientific fantasy.

The progress of scientific theory is certainly a great and noble thing, but there seem to be good reasons why experiments are conducted with guinea pigs rather than with humans.

In a refined person, the violent act has only become more refined, which just makes it that bit more devil- ish.

Therefore, you are quite correct in saying that the way indicated by you runs parallel to that of a neurosis, that is, to the way of the “coarse” and “pathological” extravert.

It nearly seems to me as if you were still of the opinion that, for example, I would analyze dreams on the subjective plane only.

Since I cannot provide you with evidence from my ongoing analyses, as you know nothing about them, I must revert to that famous case mentioned above, in which you have witnessed my method— which you suggest in your letter— put into practice.

The relation to the object that resulted from that analysis seems to have had a not inconsiderable influence on the further course the development of this extravert took.

He has often been heard talking of Tristan and Iseult, of Faust and Helen, etc.

It is a well- known fact that man is also capable of accepting something as true without having seen it with his eyes and touched it with his hands.

It is this truly human capacity that spares him a number of highly unpleasant experiences.

The average person seems to be satisfied, for example, by the theoretical reasoning that it is dangerous to stick his head out of an elevator on its way up.

He does not need to get his head torn off for the sake of experience.

It would also be a rather daring undertaking for someone to actually try out and see if it were really morally impossible for him to commit a murder.

There are a great many things that cannot, or need not, be experienced via the object.

For all these things we need the symbolic view on the subjective plane— if, that is, these tendencies are not to succumb irretrievably to repression again.

But when an actual experience via the object is possible, or even indicated, only a completely fatuous person would want to enforce a symbolic and subjective interpretation.

I guess you do not count me among such pigheaded solipsists; it would also run counter to what you have experienced.

As far as the behavior of the object toward the violence of the extravert is concerned, to which you object, you are thinking completely extravertedly about it, and are suppress ing the object anew.

You really cannot dictate to the object how it ought to react, and which reaction would be the right one. Such good intentions may be appropriate among extraverts but not in the relation between the types.

I must emphasize that an introvert reacts in just the way I said. This is what happens and what is.

The introvert couldn't care less if this has any effect at all on the extravert, because he is no extravert who worries about such effects.

I am talking about what is, and not about what would be desirable.

When the introvert reacts accordingly to how he is blindly attacked and abused as a fantasy by the other, he forces him, as you rightly say, to consciously bring out his tendency toward violation, which makes the extravert finally realize that he has such a tendency.

He forces him to give up his feelings— yes, he does—and then the extravert is forced to start thinking.

In that way he achieves, and here you are right again, adaptation to reality, which cannot be accomplished without thinking and sensation.

Once he has achieved adaptation, he at last has his hands free for his own use.

He can then try out his violence and his feeling- into on himself for a change in order to deepen his personality.

His former extraversion to the object was so exaggerated because his adaptation to it was so highly inadequate.

The deficit forced him to make ever- greater expenditures. Once adaptation is achieved, his libido can turn inward.

Of course, the introvert never fancies that by his self- defense he is deepening the other's personality, nor does he defend himself for this reason; he really does it only not to be destroyed himself.

It is only the extravert who can see this in a different light, as he is convinced from the outset that he has the other's best interest in mind, and that everything he does is beneficial for the other's well- being.

This role of the savior

This infantile humbug and has to be nailed down as such.

In my opinion, you have touched upon something very important with your idea that an association of like types is more conducive to a deepening of one's own personality than an association of different types.

Just as I am absolutely convinced that it is mandatory for adaptation to reality that the two opposed types confront each other unreservedly, I also believe that a deepening of the personality, with all its irrational values, can take place only by associating with the same type.

Interference of the opposite type is certainly a painful disturbance, for everything that represents the highest meaning and value for the one side is utmost nonsense and without value for the other.

The directions of the irrational psychological processes are actually diametrically opposed. What the extravert calls human is just "all too human" for the introvert.

What the introvert calls human is airy and gaseous for the other.

This discrepancy makes it quasi impossible for the two, because of the irritating difference in tone, to go together in the irrational developmental process.

It is another question whether the irrational process in the opposed types does not bring to light a product that is equally valuable to each of them, although the values they find in it are opposed to one another.

This question must be left open for the time being.

I find your schema of attitudes of the analyst disagreeable, because I myself could never adopt something like this.

I am as I am, and that also in analysis.

I do not know whether it is necessary for the extravert to play a role, nor do I know whether I may not unconsciously play a role myself— after all, one can never know things like that. I would not be surprised to find, however, that it may be the specific task of the extravert, in his feeling attitude toward the other, to make appropriate corrections in the object in order to eliminate his typical violence.

Certainly the introvert has to do something similar in the intellectual sphere.

As the case may be, he must be either reserved or forthcoming with his thoughts.

I would not know at all how to tune in to the individual task of the patient— for how could I be so vain as to know what his task is?

I would feel sorry for a patient whose task I thought I knew a priori, or at least more or less in advance, because then I would be on my best way to be giving that sort of counseling that the Freudian school has always imputed to me.

Nothing can be done against projections, however.

If in my last letter I talked primarily about the inferior extravert, you talk about the inferior introvert when it comes to matters of self- knowledge.

Without doubt, there is a danger of cheating ourselves out of a really full life by philosophizing.

I have a very tolerant attitude toward such people, however, because in my experience there are quite a number of people who are rendered relatively harmless by contenting themselves with a surrogate of life.

There are also such useless and objectionable seeds in man that living a half-life, which leaves these seeds undeveloped, is by far preferable to their full development.

I am not inclined to believe in man as a unum et bonum et perfectum.

Hence, I'm also against proselytizing—unless it is for monism, abstinence, the Salvation Army, pacifism, or the YMCA.

So whoever turns the idea of self- knowledge into a pseudoidea, and fraudulently abuses it to escape himself, has probably good reasons to do so.

An honest man, who also has a certain amount of courage, will never use self-knowledge as a surrogate for life.

His nature would not permit it.

But as we all are deficient in a certain sense, namely, when measured against an ideal, self-knowledge does actually serve us not to commit a number of wrongs and stupidities, which would inevitably follow from the deficiency of our nature.

I am sorry to have attacked my beloved Goethe in my last letter with regard to his statement about self-knowledge.

True, it was very disrespectful, but all the same I did have a point in taking the verba magistri not too seri- ously, since Goethe himself has provided the rebuttal of his own position as shown by the beautiful quote in your last letter.

It is difficult to argue with such masters, because in their honesty they always state also the respective opposite somewhere else.

Just think of Goethe's diametrically opposed statements on women!

The words of the fathers are a fine thing— so long as we do not use them as arguments.

It follows from all this that your criticism of self-knowledge refers to a concept that is actually a caricature of its real meaning.

This inferior concept has nothing to do with what I called the view on the subjective plane.

But I acknowledge your right to stress the existence of an inferior concept and use of self- knowledge just as emphatically as I underlined and defended the existence of a concretistic perception of extraverted feeling operations.

Toward the other, one tends to take a position based on our experience on a par with the average of previous incidences and is little inclined to trust him a priori to really have the more perfect in mind.

The experience of what goes on around us every day has made us so cold, however, that we still do not expect anything good to come out of Nazareth.

The less we are trusting each other, the more proofs we get that this trust is indeed unjustified.

It seems to me that we might now have reached an agreement on this point, after having exposed our mutual mistrust—based on unshakable experience— so emphatically.

So let me turn to another point in which I differ from your view, or rather from what your written words (sic!)say. The difference starts with your idea that “genius” would be a weapon against the unconscious.

It would be easy to demonstrate that genius also offers the greatest opportunities of falling victim to the powers of the unconscious.

Genius is both: the capacity to unlock the unconscious, and the capacity to give its elements a visible form

In the very rare case this operation is successful without destroying the person in question (and you know how rarely this happens), we suddenly believe that genius is a superb weapon against the ensnaring powers of the unconscious.

But in the more frequent case that these very capacities devour the person who has them and lead to an untimely death or lingering illness, we believe that genius is also a terrible snare.

I tend to think that the number of geniuses is not all that inconsiderable, but that the number of those who are not destroyed by their genius is infinitesimal.

It does not help to say that it is precisely those few who are the “true” geniuses, while the ones who were destroyed had not been true geniuses in the first place.

When we know how thin the thread is, on which the sword above the head of the genius is suspended, we can only say: this one has barely managed to escape by the skin of his teeth, and the other did not make it by a hair’s breadth.

Even the so-called true genius carries wounds close to his thread of life.

Neither the genius nor the average person can get through life unscathed, but only the genius is affected to a much, much higher degree.

Genius is as little a substitute for analysis as “experience.”

A “healthy person” is never driven by his experience “to unite with his unconscious.” With this view you would deny analysis the right to exist altogether.
According to your view the significance of analysis seems to be limited to a psychological technique that, for pathologically sensitive people, is a partial substitute for a life they find impossible to lead, and which offers healthy people some help in coping with their conflicts.

In the former case, analysis serves as the dressing of a wound; in the latter, as a motor oil.

I readily concede that even great Caesar might have found it necessary to stop up a bung hole somewhere, and that the halls in the Louvre offer an excellent opportunity for “physical exercise,”but I deny that this is Caesar’s or the Louvre’s “greatest value.”

I am more than ready to acknowledge and admire all the useful things that make life possible and easier, but that the usefulness of a work of culture should be its “highest value” is completely beyond me.

As I do not want to immediately sin against my abovementioned principle of implicit trust, I assume that what you really meant was that this is precisely not its highest value.

If this so highly praised experience alone would suffice, what would then be the point of science and other cultural achievements, with all their intrinsic values beyond the question of usefulness?

Someone who in his experience also experiences his unconscious has by no means united with it— unless, that is, he knows it.

The process of attaining knowledge covers many fields and is possible only with the help of those formulas that have been elaborated and handed down by the history of ideas over several millennia.

This treasure trove is called science, without which knowledge is impossible.

An animal lives its unconscious, and is completely united, even identical, with it.

What is missing is only knowledge, seeing things from the subject’s point of view. In this knowledge— that is, in what analysis is in itself, regardless of its usefulness— lies its “greatest value”; its true value is that it is a standpoint beyond experience, out of the reach of the rationalistic intentions of those who want to make it the servant of their own incompetence.

When somebody says: “Love thy neighbor as thyself,” the meaning of this statement lies in the ideal of Christian love, and not in the thought that it is also of the greatest practical value to raise this Machiavellian principle of “do ut des” to a religious ideal.

Similarly, it would be a grave injustice against the spirit of the achievement that we call analysis to limit its highest value to its usefulness for our lives.

Seen in the light of day, it is also clear that it could not provide this practical service at all if it did not have precisely the value I emphasized.

“Life is not the highest of goods,” and least of all that which cures a few neurotics and shortens some conflicts for a few healthy people.

But lest you arrive at the opinion that I underestimate the practical usefulness of analysis, let me conclude by saying that I am as skeptical of knowledge without usefulness, as I am of usefulness without well-founded knowledge.

Knowledge without usefulness adorns philosophical chessboards and produces fat volumes for venerable libraries.

Usefulness without meaning fills pockets and the churches of Christian Science.

The value of analysis, however, is not only that it is of practical use but that it is also a living knowledge in and by itself. Thinking is life just as much as doing is.
Thinking is not merely a "realization" of life; life can also be a "realization" of thinking.

As to your concluding remark, I really must add for the sake of poetic justice that I did not invent that legend of the sailing-motor-airplane- monster, but that by alluding to the Platonic myth I only wanted to emphasize, ever so delicately, that this monster is hardly viable, precisely because of its ideal nature.

I hardly believe that I will go to the hell that has so very amiably been intended for me, only because I find the sailingmotor-airplane- dragon an impossible ideal.

Surely Sisyphus was an idealist, wasn't he?

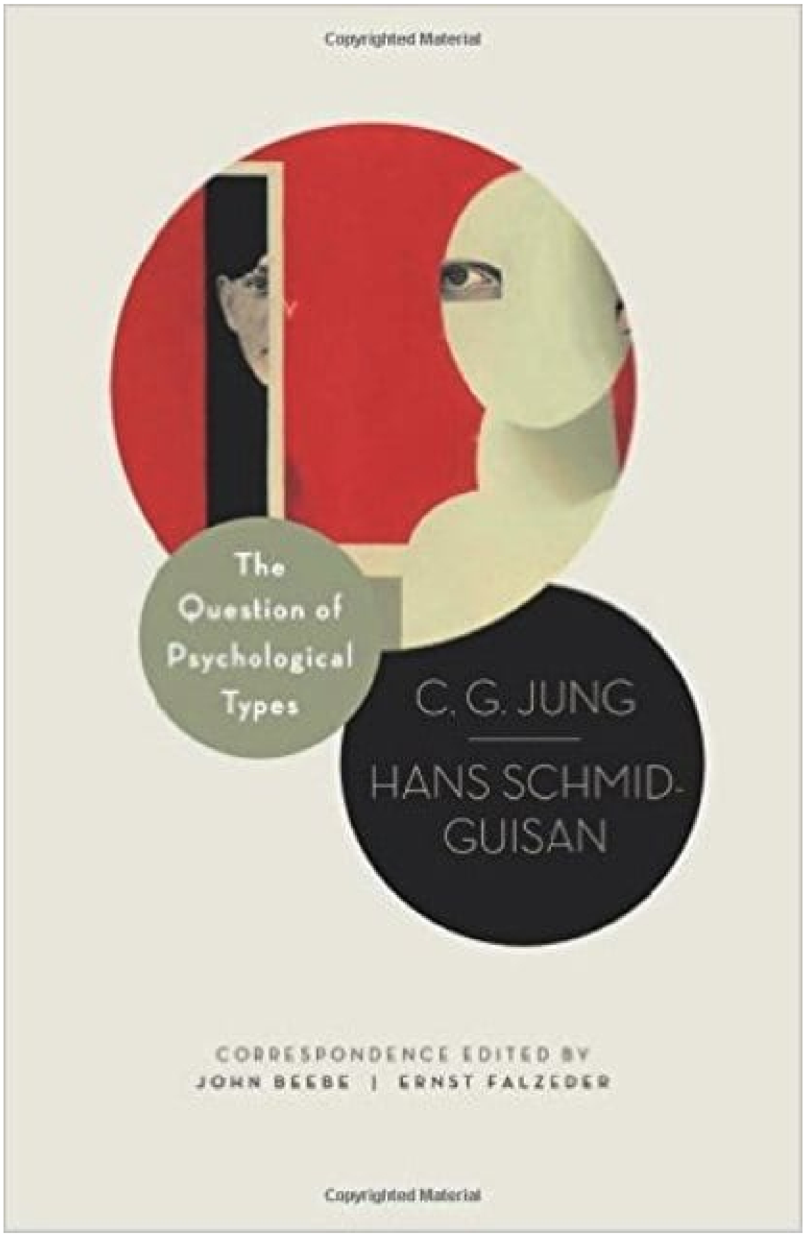
With best regards,

your Jung Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/eec37-12btypes.jpg`

Carl Jung on the nature of the "Introvert" and "Extravert" (2019-03-11 13:15)

[1]



Copyrighted Material

The Question of Psychological Types

C. G. JUNG

HANS SCHMID-GUISAN

CORRESPONDENCE EDITED BY
JOHN BEEBE | ERNST FALZEDER

Copyrighted Material

Dear Friend, [undated]

Before I respond to the particular questions raised in your letter, I would like to deal with a question of terminology.

We speak of “thinking” and “feeling,” and we name the types concerned accordingly.

As you know, I have introduced these types in an earlier publication, under the names of the introverted and the extraverted type.

For the former, adaptation proceeds via abstraction from the object, for the latter, via feeling into the object.

The term “introversion” thus describes an inward turning of the psychic energy, which I called “libido,” because the introvert does not comprehend the object directly, but by means of abstraction, that is, by a thinking process that is inserted between himself and the object.

The attitude he assumes toward the object is a certain rejection, therefore, which can even develop into a kind of fear of the object.

His primary reaction toward the object is actually not love but rather fear.

The ancients knew these two original powers well, the eros and phobos.

It is not permissible to say that fear of the object is just a repression of an unbearable love of the object, because then we could also say that the extravert’s characteristic love of the object is nothing but a repression of an unbearable fear of the object.

It is more likely that in the unconscious of the introvert there is a love for the object that compensates his fear of it, while in the unconscious of the extravert there is a fear that compensates his love for the object.

In pathological cases, as you know, unconscious love also becomes a source of heightened fear of the object for the introvert, and, conversely, unconscious fear becomes a source of powerful attraction to the object for the extravert.

These remarks may characterize the choice of the terms introversion and extraversion sufficiently enough, so that we will be able to use them in further discussions.

We thus also avoid a possible misunderstanding, namely, that the thinking person is characterized by the absence of feeling, and the feeling person by the absence of thinking, which would certainly be completely wrong.

The introvert does feel, too, and very intensely so, only in a different way than the extravert does.

Turning now to your letter, you state that you find it inconceivable that one could adapt to the object by way of abstraction.

This is actually the leitmotif for all misunderstandings between extraverts and introverts.

They misunderstand each other thoroughly as far as their behavior toward the object is concerned.

Despite your optimism, so characteristic of the extravert, I find this difference somewhat deplorable. (This is where the feeling of the introvert comes into play.)

For it is this difference that causes many of the most painful experiences in life, and many of the most acrimonious fights over attitudes and views of the world.

In my last letter, I described the introverted and the extraverted ideal to you, namely, the desire of each type to crystallize its pure essence.

Now this description has already led to a kind of misunderstanding.

I did not express any personal conviction with this description, nor did I want to convey an expression of my personal opinion through it, but I was thinking hypothetically.

This hypothetical thinking— which is by no means the expression of a personal opinion— is extraordinarily misleading for the extravert, because he is always inclined to understand such an expression in a concrete way.

Conversely, the introvert is always led by the nose by the extravert and by hypothetical feeling.

I will try to describe this difficult problem in more detail on the basis of your letter but cannot guarantee that I will succeed.

You write: "To purify the feeling I need the object," and you add that for the introvert "the object is only an obstacle to purifying thinking."

Herein lies a great misunderstanding.

The introvert needs the object for his thinking, because it is precisely via the object that he adapts to outer reality.

I'd like to say that this is exactly where his mistake lies: He thinks objects, instead of feeling them, for these objects are, after all, human beings who quite refuse to be only thought, although the introvert fancies that he is actually loving the object in this way.

The object, however, experiences the fact of being only thought as very unpleasant, as you have rightly stated.

Whereas the extravert needs the object to bring his type to perfection and to cleanse his feeling, the introvert experiences this as a horrible violation and disrespect of his personality, because he absolutely refuses to be, so to speak, the chemical dry cleaner for the feelings of extraverts.

He cannot follow the other's hypothetical feeling, which feels like a loveless experiment to him.

He feels it in this way because he feels concretistically, while the extravert can feel abstractly beyond the object, just as the introvert can think abstractly beyond the object, which naturally is felt as equally loveless by the extravert.

So while you resist being merely thought by me, I resist serving you as an object for the cleansing of your feelings.

This contrast is irreconcilable, unless, that is, you stoop to submitting completely to my thinking, or I throw myself at the feet of your feeling.

This is impossible, of course, but it does happen all the time in reality, in marriages, for example, in which one part is pinioned against the wall precisely by the other's "love," not to mention those cases in which this happens through open violence.

The tragedy is that it is exactly this love, which is ideal in his eyes, that violates and debases the other.

You think the introvert does not need the object for his thinking, because it would actually represent an obstacle to him, and that therefore he would not love the object.

Exactly the opposite is the case.

He, too, loves the object, but through his thinking; indeed, it is indispensable for his thinking.

This is not so for the extravert.

For him, the object is an obstacle to his thinking, because his thinking disregards the object.

Here I must remind you of my previous letter, namely, of the passage where I speak of the difference between thinking and representation.

The representation of the extravert refers completely to the object and is, therefore, in complete agreement with outer reality, while his thinking is in agreement with his own inner reality.

This is not the case in the introvert.

His representation of things is inadequate, precisely because of the lack of feeling- into [the object].

His thinking is in accordance with outer reality, but not with his own inner reality.

This explains the often- observed fact that the introvert thinks and preaches all sorts of nice things but does not do them himself, in fact, does the contrary; whereas the extravert does all sorts of good and nice things but does not think them, in fact, often the contrary.

This also explains the social behavior of the two types.

The extravert has flourishing social contacts, the introvert does not.

The extravert knows, by feeling himself into others, by what human means people can be won over, whereas the introvert tries to create values in himself with which he tries to impress and force others toward him, or even bring them to his knees.

He does this with the help of the power principle, while the extravert does it with the pleasure- unpleasure mechanism.

Or with [. . .] characterizes the introvert.

This formula, like all formulas, is only partly valid, that is, valid only to a certain degree.

The more ideal the attitude of a type is, the more likely his plan will fail.

For if I develop an ideal attitude I will become one- sided.

If I am one- sided, however, I will stretch the pairs of opposites in my nature apart, thus activating the unconscious standpoint that runs directly counter to my own ideal.

The introvert gives away his values in an impersonal way, becomes impoverished in the process, and finally thinks: How come you still do not want to do it?

Namely, to love me?

But the others have simply been put off, or been degraded to slaves, by his showing off all the time, and nobody has noticed that all he really wanted was to win the simple human love of others by this.

That is also why the introvert tends to fall for some highly inferior “love.”

I recently witnessed the opposite case, a famous extraverted teacher who, with truly untold love and devotion, educated her students to master their art.

When the girls had completed their training, however, they were on their way out and wanted to practice their art in their own way.

The teacher broke down in desperation over the black ingratitude of those people who brought all her love to ruins and simply did not want to stay collaborating with her forever.

Despite the purely ideal nature of all her devotion, she had completely forgotten that her tenderly loved objects were also human beings who preferred individual independence to ideal slavery.

Consciously, the teacher was completely devoted to her ideal task and was completely selfless.

Unconsciously, however, the opposite became more and more strained, and this opposite was her unconscious power principle.

Conversely, the introvert strains the pleasure- unpleasure mechanism in his unconscious by the conscious, idealistic desire to create the highest values proper to force others to come to him, thus degrading people to objects of his desire.

Thus, it comes that the extravert, with his idealistic attitude, gathers inferior followers around him who, although they seem to be faithfully and gratefully devoted to him, actually flatter his unconscious power principle in Byzantine ways. Independent persons turn away from him, however—ungratefully, as he says— which naturally makes him feel misunderstood in his most ideal values.

The ideally oriented introverted person is faced with the fact that he scares away from himself precisely the human love and joy that he is really trying to find behind all his desire to impress and to be superior, and that he keeps and chains to himself only those inferior persons who know best how to cater to his desire.

This explains, for instance, the well- known fixation of introverted scholars or other intellectually superior persons to women of an inferior type, to whores and the like.

The fault lies in straining the ideal, typical attitude too much.

Now the solution of this problem is intimately connected with what I call the interpretation on the subjective plane.

The only goal for the ideally oriented introvert is the production of impersonal, imperative values, and for the equally ideally oriented extravert the only goal is the love for the object.

But both these endeavors are of a hypothetical nature.

They do not express man’s true nature but are only hypotheses about how the desired goal might be reached.

While the introvert's conscious attitude is an impersonal and just attitude of power, his unconscious attitude aims at inferior lust and pleasure; and while the extravert's conscious attitude is a personal love for human beings, his unconscious attitude aims at unjust, tyrannical power.

The interpretation on the subjective plane is trying to mediate between the two.

Its aim is to help the individual accept his unconscious opposite, and not, as you think, to reinterpret the other as nothing but a symbol, so as to protect him from affective influence.

This would be a prejudice.

The formula on the subjective plane for both types runs rather as follows:

Introversion: I have to realize that my object, apart from its reality, is also a symbol of my pleasure, which I unconsciously try to gratify with its help.

Extraversion: I have to realize that my object, apart from its reality, is also a symbol of my power, the approval of which I try to obtain from it.

This interpretation on the subjective plane will not, in my view, prevent spontaneous reactions but leads only to a higher degree of self- reflection, and thus liberates us from the confusing projections of unconscious wishes, which violate the object and thereby prevent the conscious, ideal striving from being completely successful.

To deal in more detail with a few more points, I would like to draw your attention to the passage in your letter where you refer to my phrase: "Beauty does not reside in the things themselves, but in the feeling we attach to them."

In general terms, this statement is true.

A short reference to the universal confusion about the notion of beauty suffices to prove the subjectivity of aesthetic judgements.

For instance, it is not only exotic music that sounds abominable to our ears, but there is even music and other pieces of art in our own culture that some people praise as beautiful, while others turn away with aching ears and eyes.

Your feeling of being violated, which the acceptance of this statement brought about in you, is due not to its general correctness but to the fact that you simply accepted it from me.

By this you violated your own thinking.

The same thing will happen to the introvert if he simply accepts the other's love without having made a personal effort to win it.

Furthermore, I take exception to your partially true statement that "the thinking person tries, through abstraction, to liberate himself from the object, from reality, which represents chaos to him."

I would say: the introvert also tries, through the hypothesis of abstraction, to reach the object, actually reality, which seems to him chaotic only because of the projection of his unused and therefore undeveloped feeling.

He tries to conquer the object by thinking.

But he wants to reach the object quite as much as the extravert.

The extravert does want to get to the object but actually only to come to himself by going beyond the object.

He has fled from himself, because his unused and, therefore, chaotic world of thoughts has made it unpleasant, even unendurable, for him to stay with himself.

In order to develop their distinctive features both types need to exist separately to a certain extent; and if they realize their own respective unconscious opposite, they will complement each other beautifully.

But, because of the nonacceptance of the unconscious opposite, the typical ideal striving leads to a disastrous violation of the other, and the worst thing is that neither of them notices why he is violating the other.

I believe we are experiencing something of this kind at present, in the conflict between the Roman and the Germanic cultural ideals, which can be felt also in Switzerland.

With best regards,

your Jung Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

Carl Jung Depth Psychology Facebook Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

Carl Jung Depth Psychology Blog: http://www.blogger.com/home

Carl Jung on Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Carl Jung on GooglePlus: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Carl Jung on Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

Carl Jung on LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Carl Jung on Pinterest: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/10/a7670-1hans.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 21 (2019-03-11 16:11)

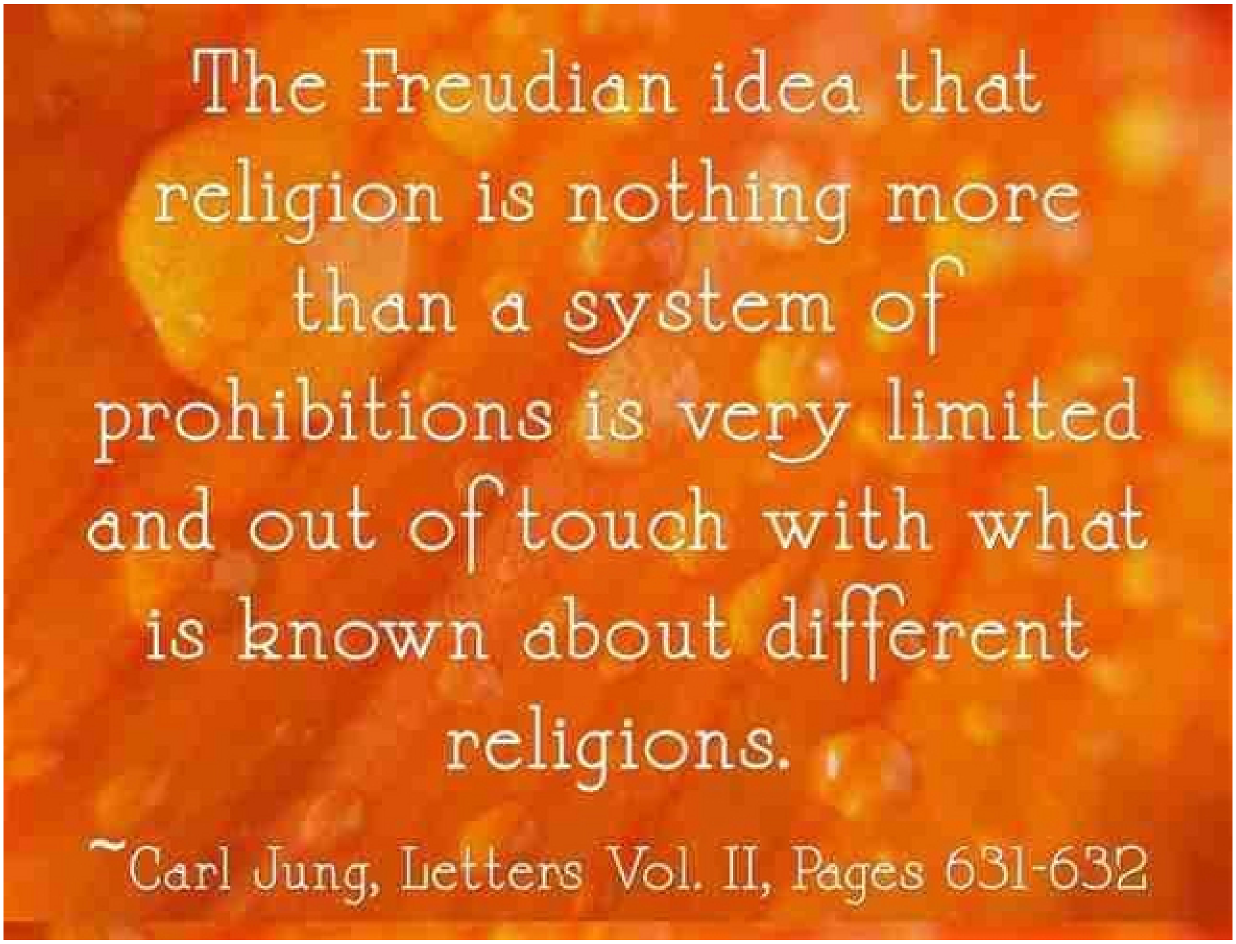
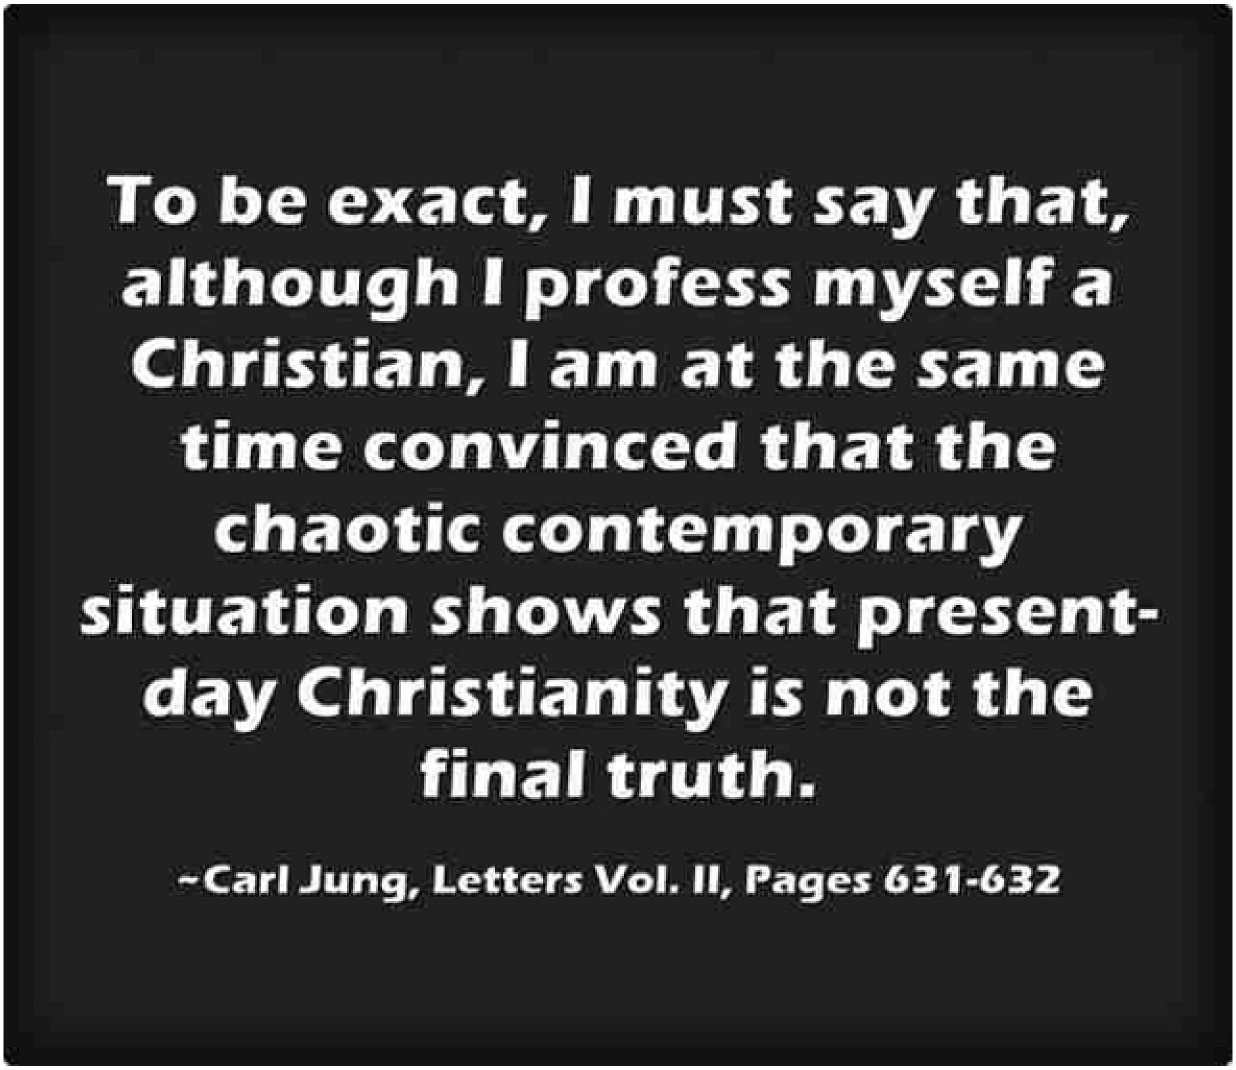
[1]



The Freudian idea that religion is nothing more than a system of prohibitions is very limited and out of touch with what is known about different religions.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 631-632

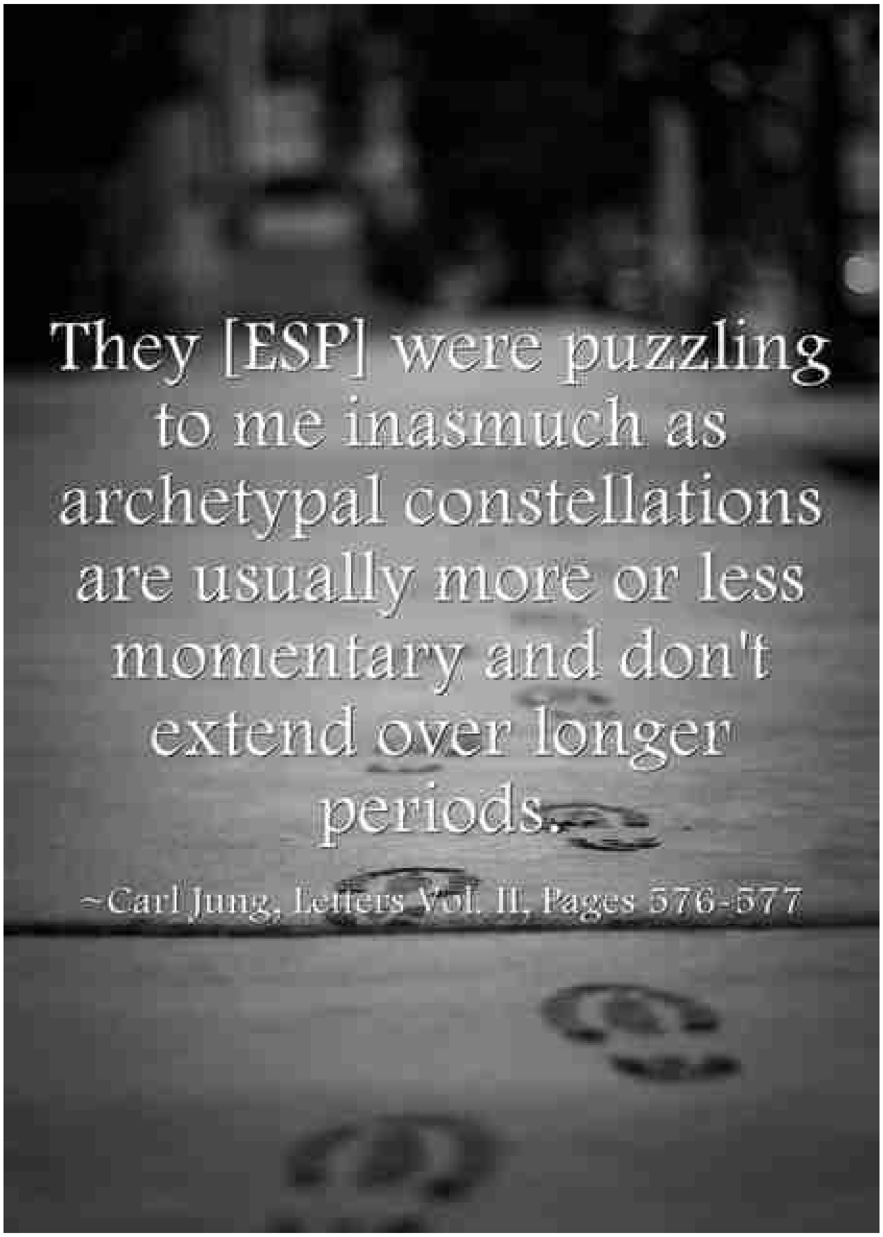
The Freudian idea that religion is nothing more than a system of prohibitions is very limited and out of touch with what is known about different religions. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 631-632



To be exact, I must say that, although I profess myself a Christian, I am at the same time convinced that the chaotic contemporary situation shows that present-day Christianity is not the final truth.

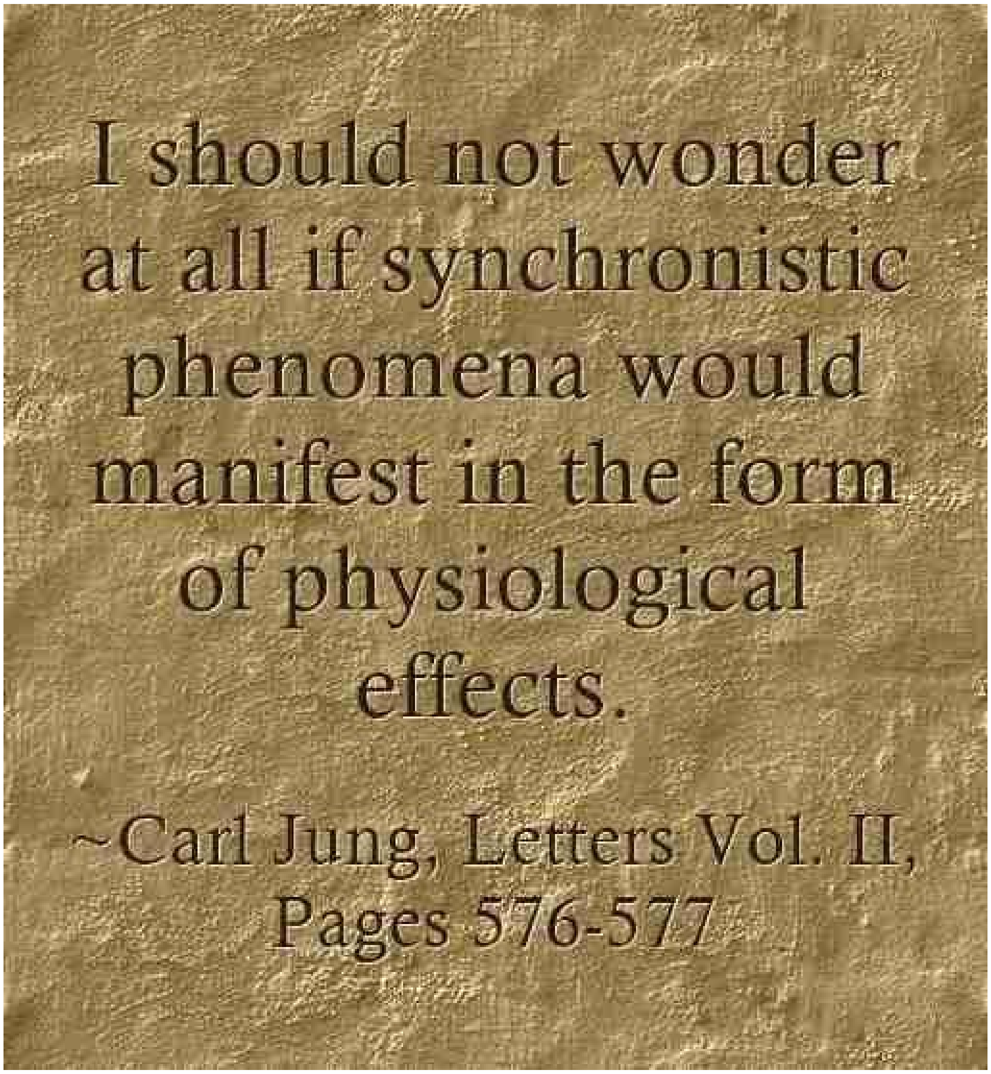
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 631-632

To be exact, I must say that, although I profess myself a Christian, I am at the same time convinced that the chaotic contemporary situation shows that present-day Christianity is not the final truth.   Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 631-632



They [ESP] were puzzling to me inasmuch as archetypal constellations are usually more or less momentary and don't extend over longer periods.
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 576-577

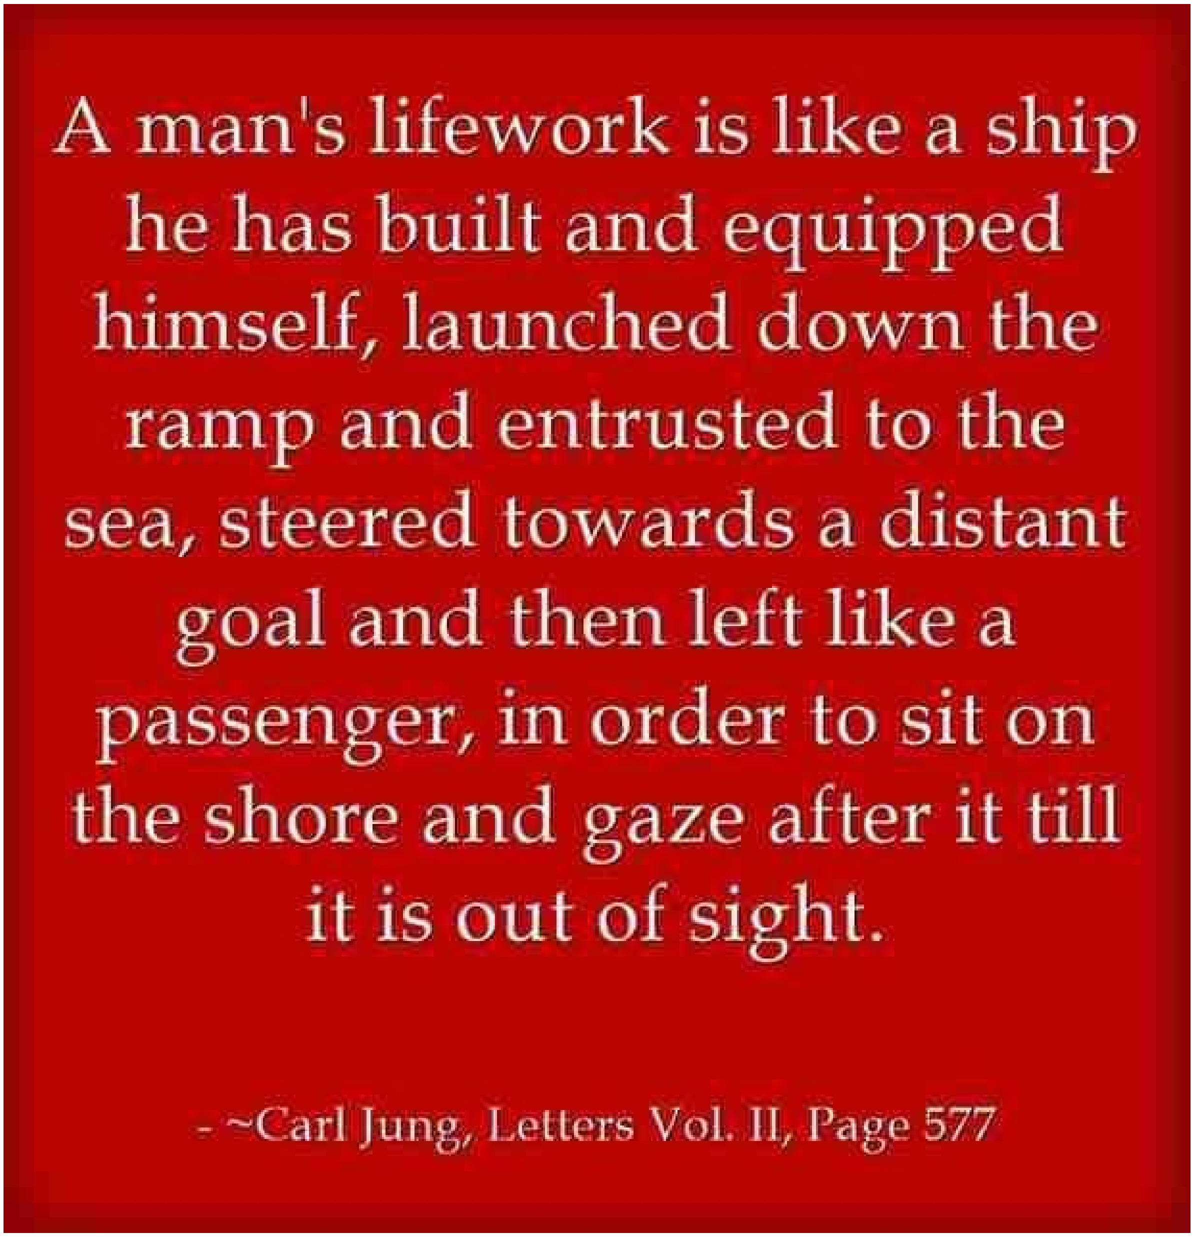
They [ESP] were puzzling to me inasmuch as archetypal constellations are usually more or less momentary and don't extend over longer periods. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 576-577



I should not wonder at all if synchronistic phenomena would manifest in the form of physiological effects.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 576-577

I should not wonder at all if synchronistic phenomena would manifest in the form of physiological effects. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 576-577



A man's lifework is like a ship he has built and equipped himself, launched down the ramp and entrusted to the sea, steered towards a distant goal and then left like a passenger, in order to sit on the shore and gaze after it till it is out of sight.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 577

A man’s lifework is like a ship he has built and equipped himself, launched down the ramp and entrusted to the sea, steered towards a distant goal and then left like a passenger, in order to sit on the shore and gaze after it till it is out of sight.
C.G. Jung Letters Vol. II, Page 577

Like all three-dimensional things it [A man's lifework] gradually sinks below the horizon.
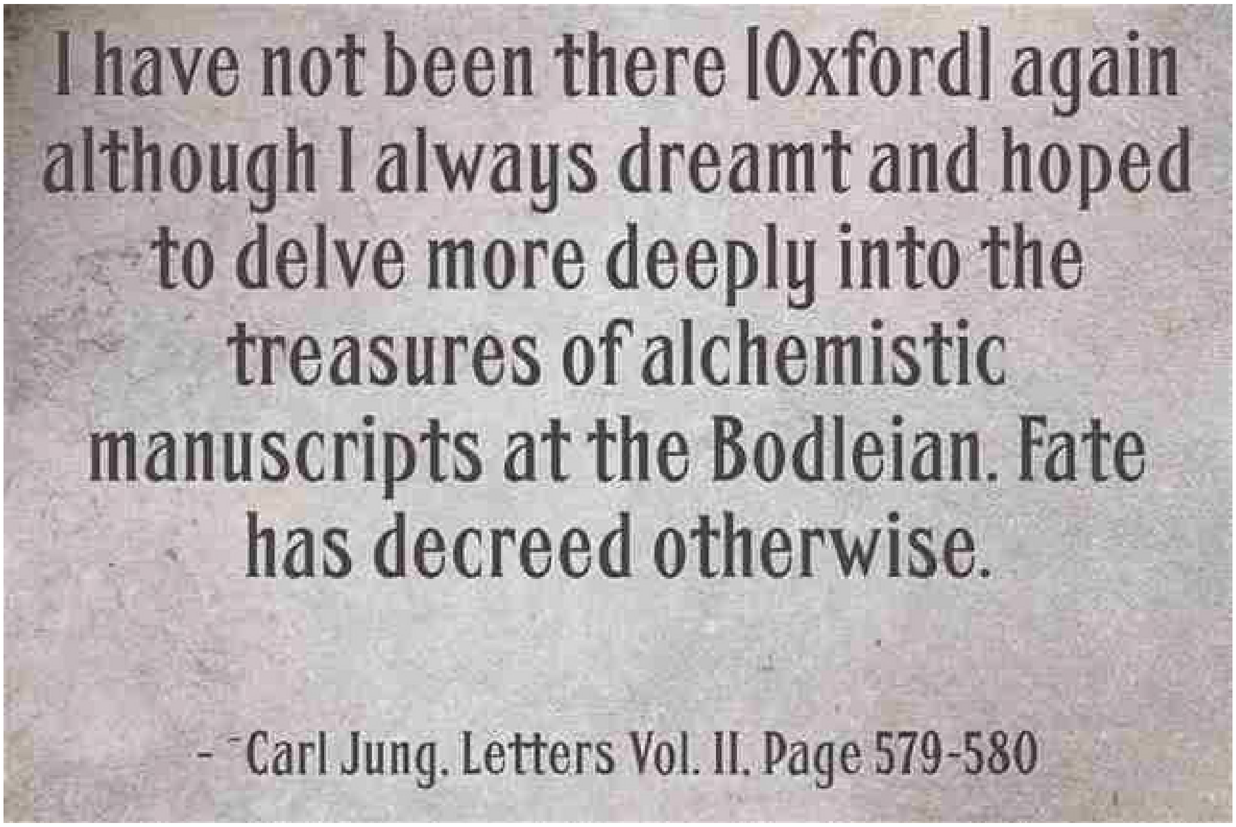
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 577

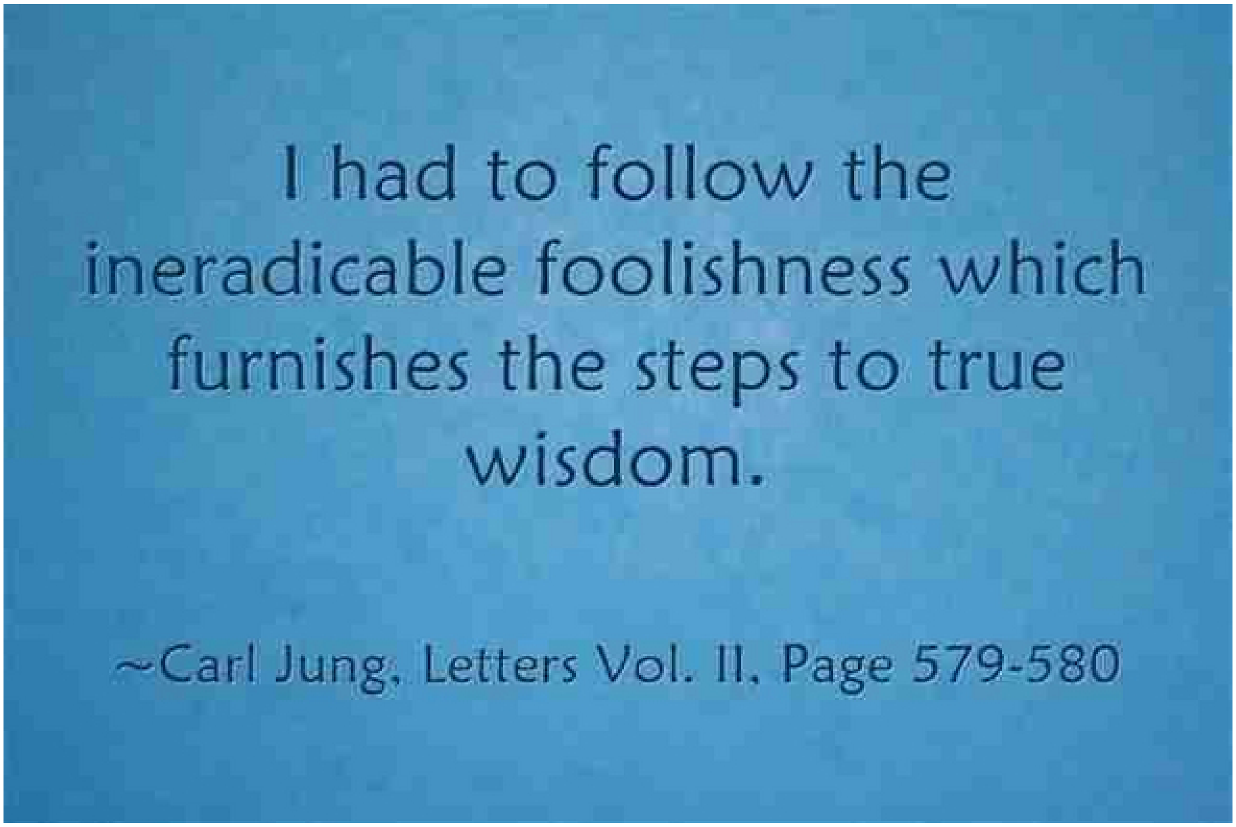
Like all three-dimensional things it [A man's lifework] gradually sinks below the horizon. C.G. Jung Letters Vol. II, Page 577



I have not been there [Oxford] again although I always dreamt and hoped to delve more deeply into the treasures of alchemistic manuscripts at the Bodleian. Fate has decreed otherwise.

- Carl Jung. Letters Vol. II. Page 579-580

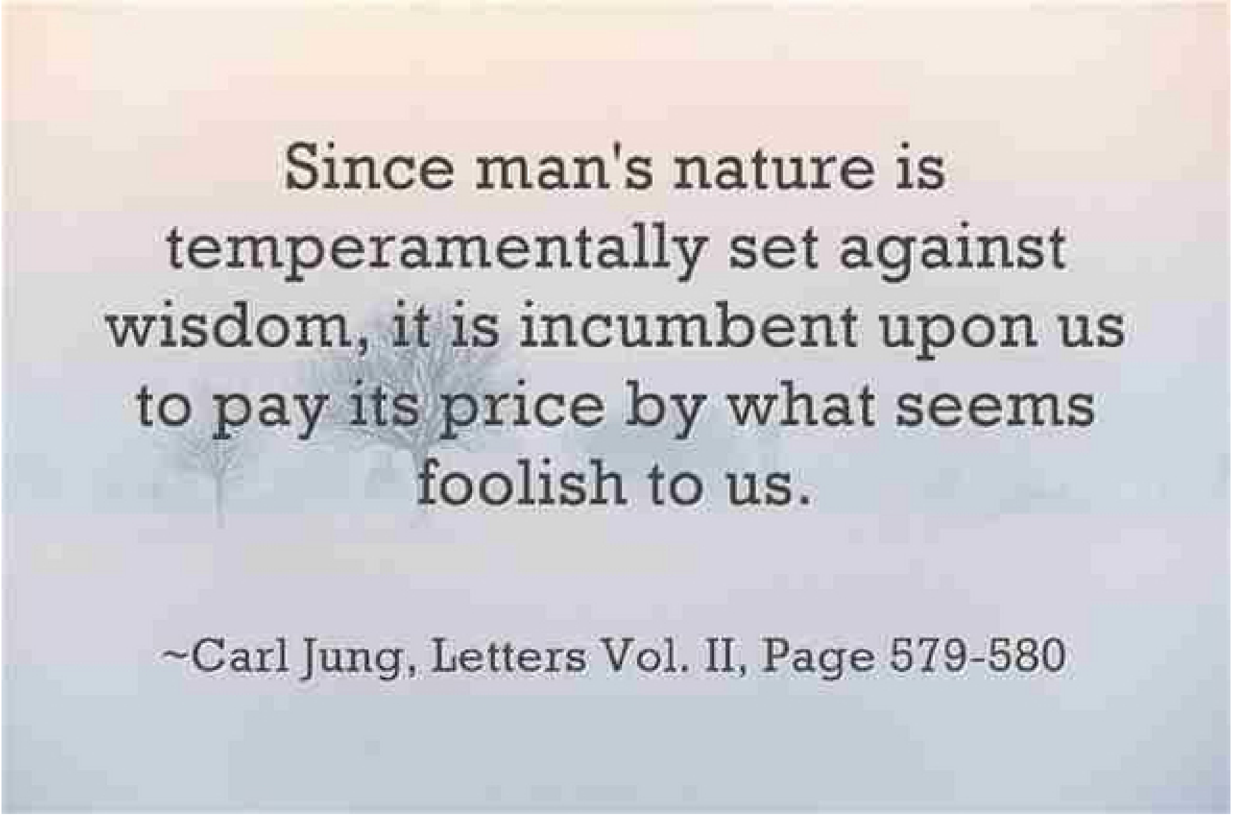
I have not been there [Oxford] again although I always dreamt and hoped to delve more deeply into the treasures of alchemistic manuscripts at the Bodleian. Fate has decreed otherwise. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 579-580



I had to follow the ineradicable foolishness which furnishes the steps to true wisdom.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 579-580

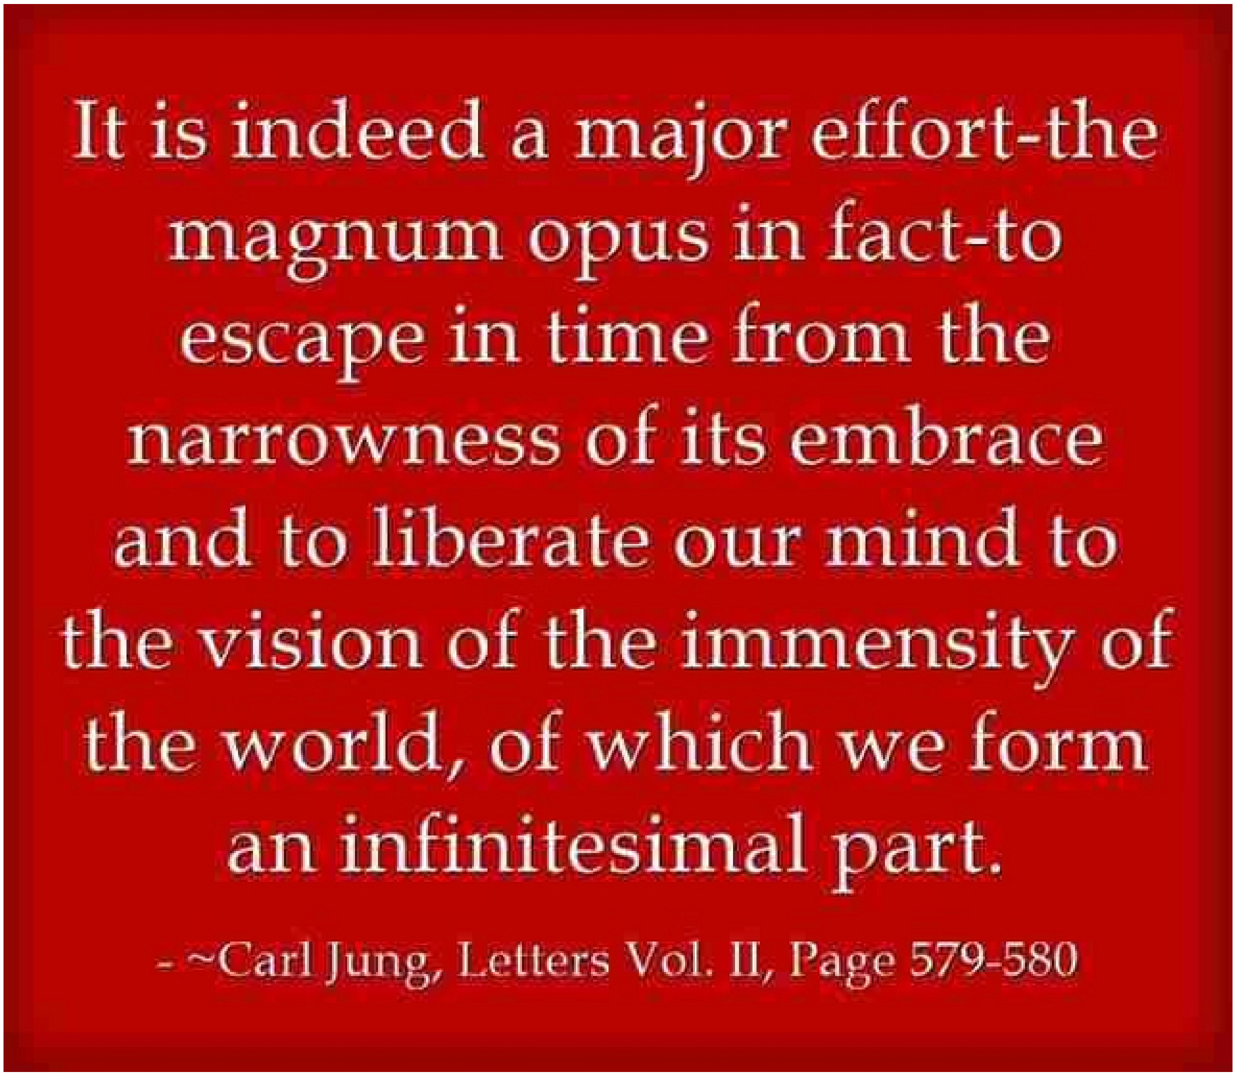
I had to follow the ineradicable foolishness which furnishes the steps to true wisdom. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 579-580



Since man's nature is temperamentally set against wisdom, it is incumbent upon us to pay its price by what seems foolish to us.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 579-580

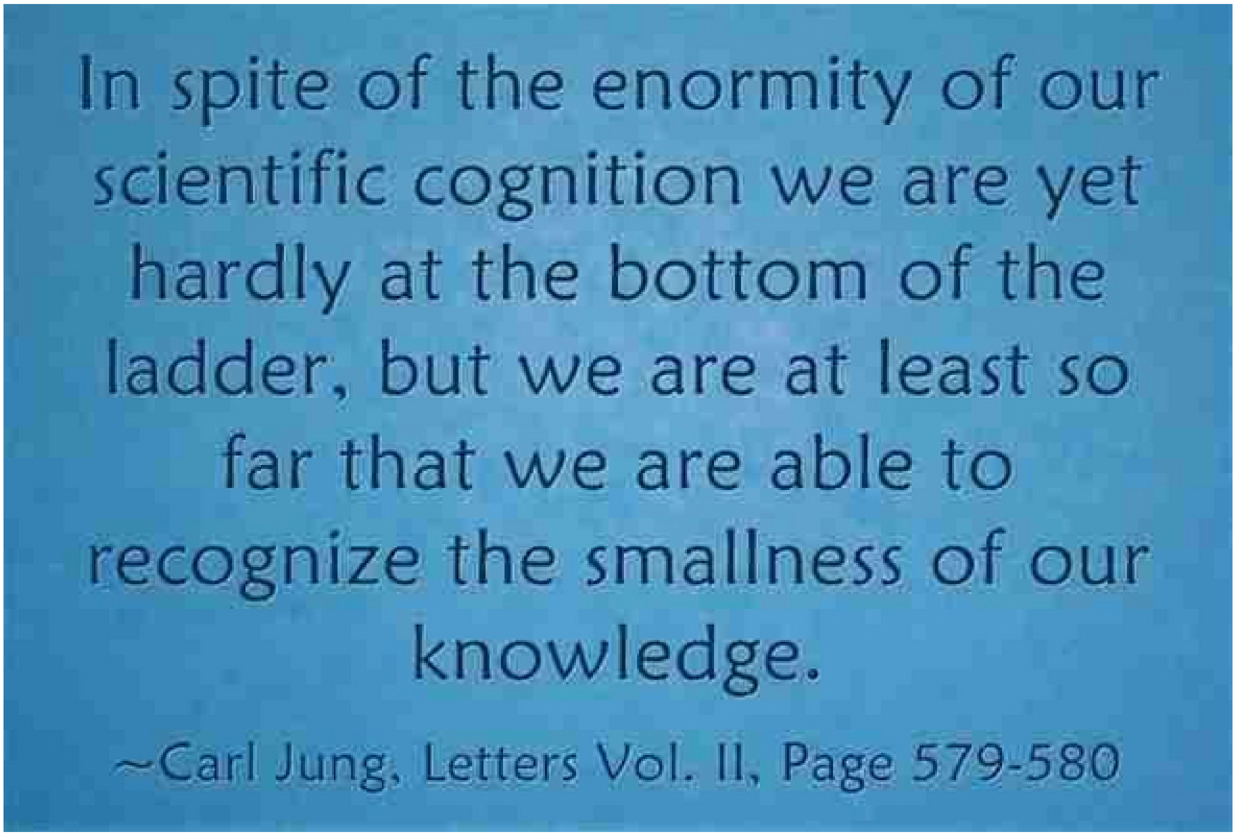
Since man’s nature is temperamentally set against wisdom, it is incumbent upon us to pay its price by what seems foolish to us. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 579-580



It is indeed a major effort-the magnum opus in fact-to escape in time from the narrowness of its embrace and to liberate our mind to the vision of the immensity of the world, of which we form an infinitesimal part.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 579-580

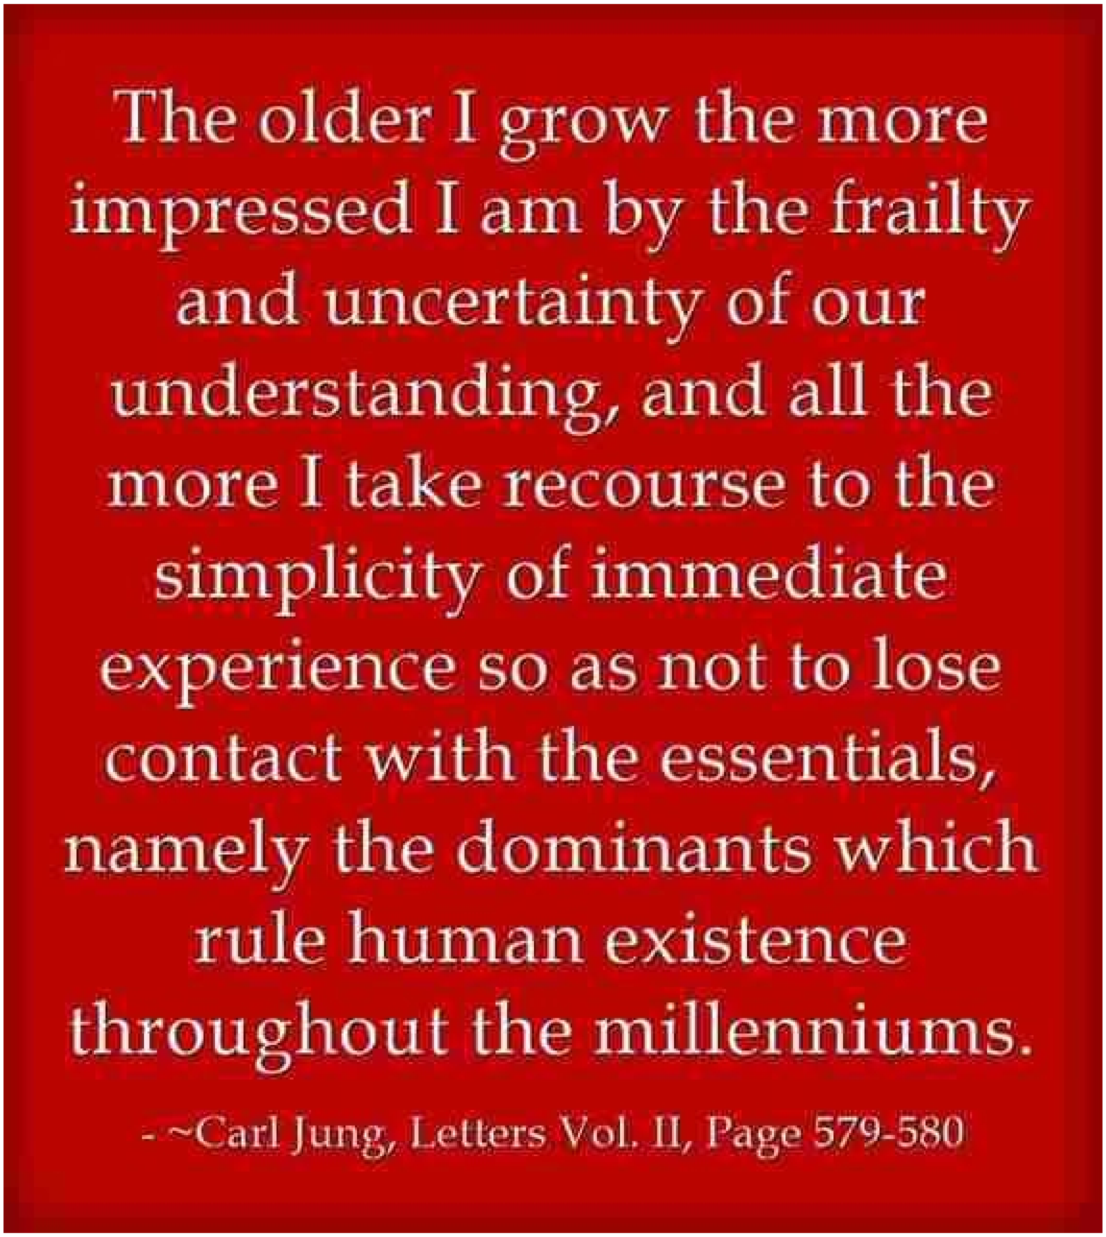
It is indeed a major effort-the magnum opus in fact-to escape in time from the narrowness of its embrace and to liberate our mind to the vision of the immensity of the world, of which we form an infinitesimal part. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 579-580



In spite of the enormity of our scientific cognition we are yet hardly at the bottom of the ladder, but we are at least so far that we are able to recognize the smallness of our knowledge.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 579-580

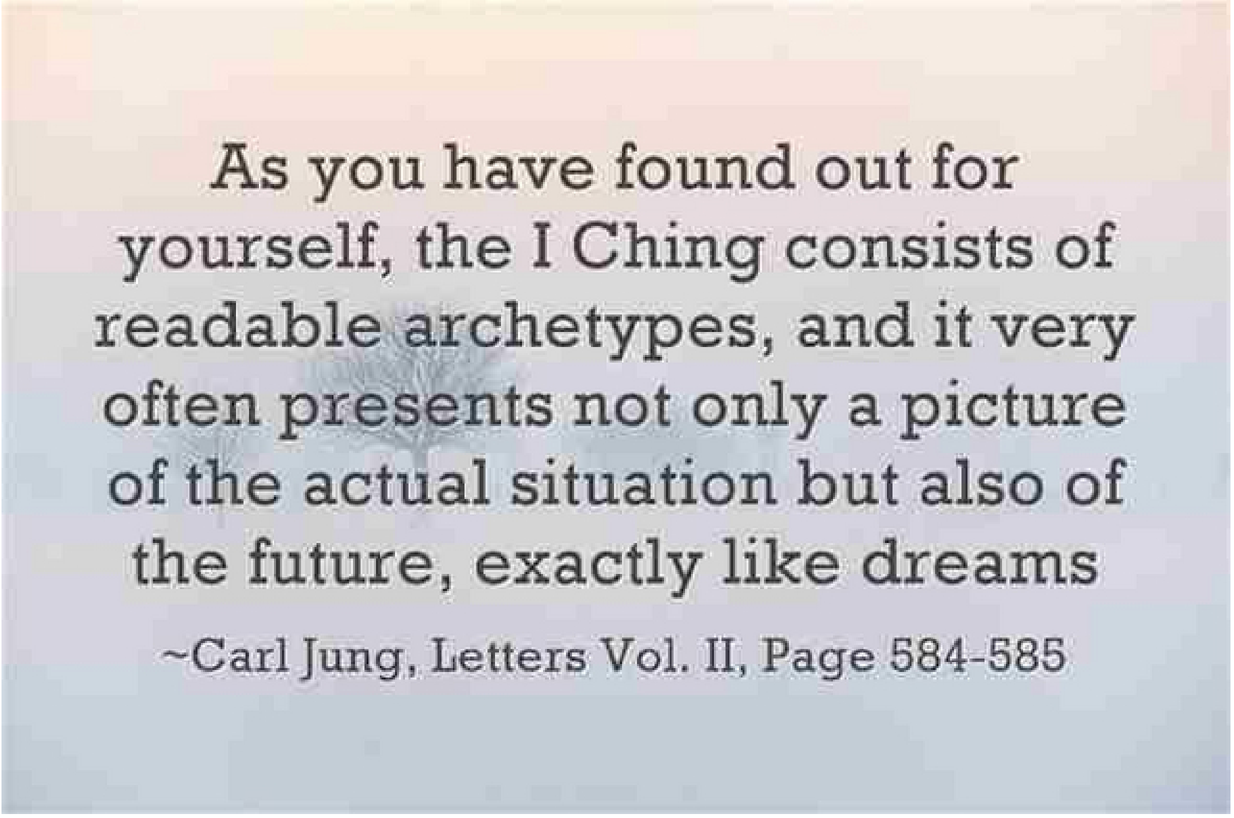
In spite of the enormity of our scientific cognition we are yet hardly at the bottom of the ladder, but we are at least so far that we are able to recognize the smallness of our knowledge. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 579-580



The older I grow the more impressed I am by the frailty and uncertainty of our understanding, and all the more I take recourse to the simplicity of immediate experience so as not to lose contact with the essentials, namely the dominants which rule human existence throughout the millenniums.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 579-580

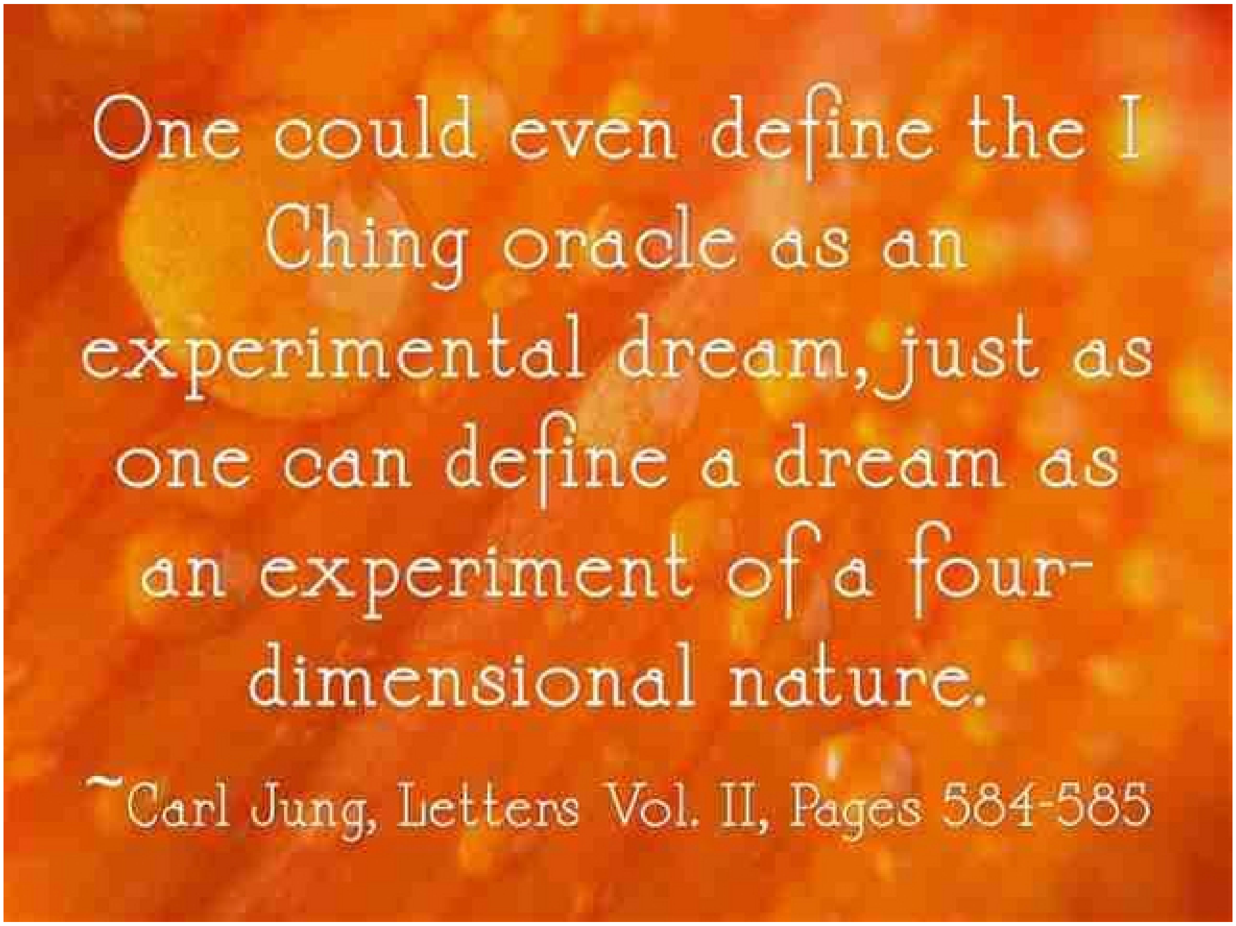
The older I grow the more impressed I am by the frailty and uncertainty of our understanding, and all the more I take recourse to the simplicity of immediate experience so as not to lose contact with the essentials, namely the dominants which rule human existence throughout the millenniums. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 579-580



As you have found out for yourself, the I Ching consists of readable archetypes, and it very often presents not only a picture of the actual situation but also of the future, exactly like dreams

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 584-585

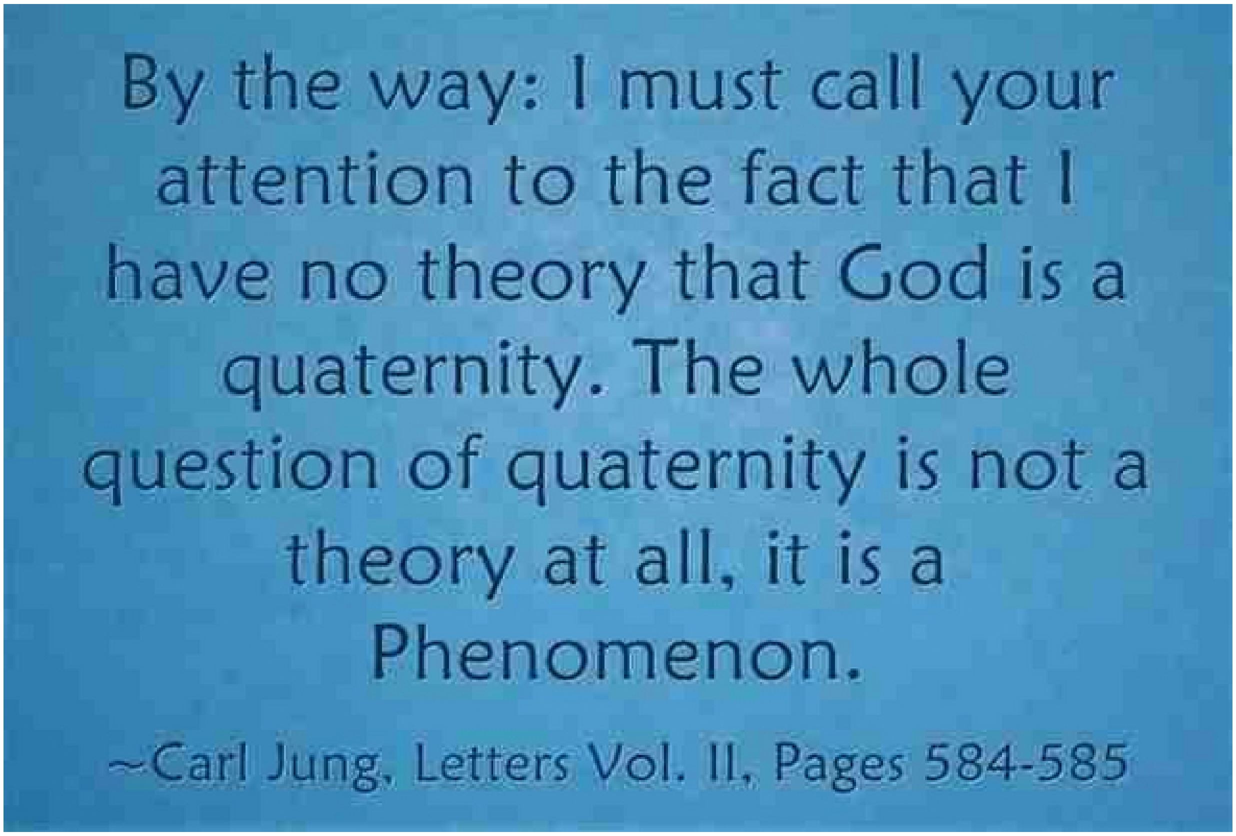
As you have found out for yourself, the I Ching consists of readable archetypes, and it very often presents not only a picture of the actual situation but also of the future, exactly like dreams. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 584-585



One could even define the I Ching oracle as an experimental dream, just as one can define a dream as an experiment of a four-dimensional nature.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 584-585

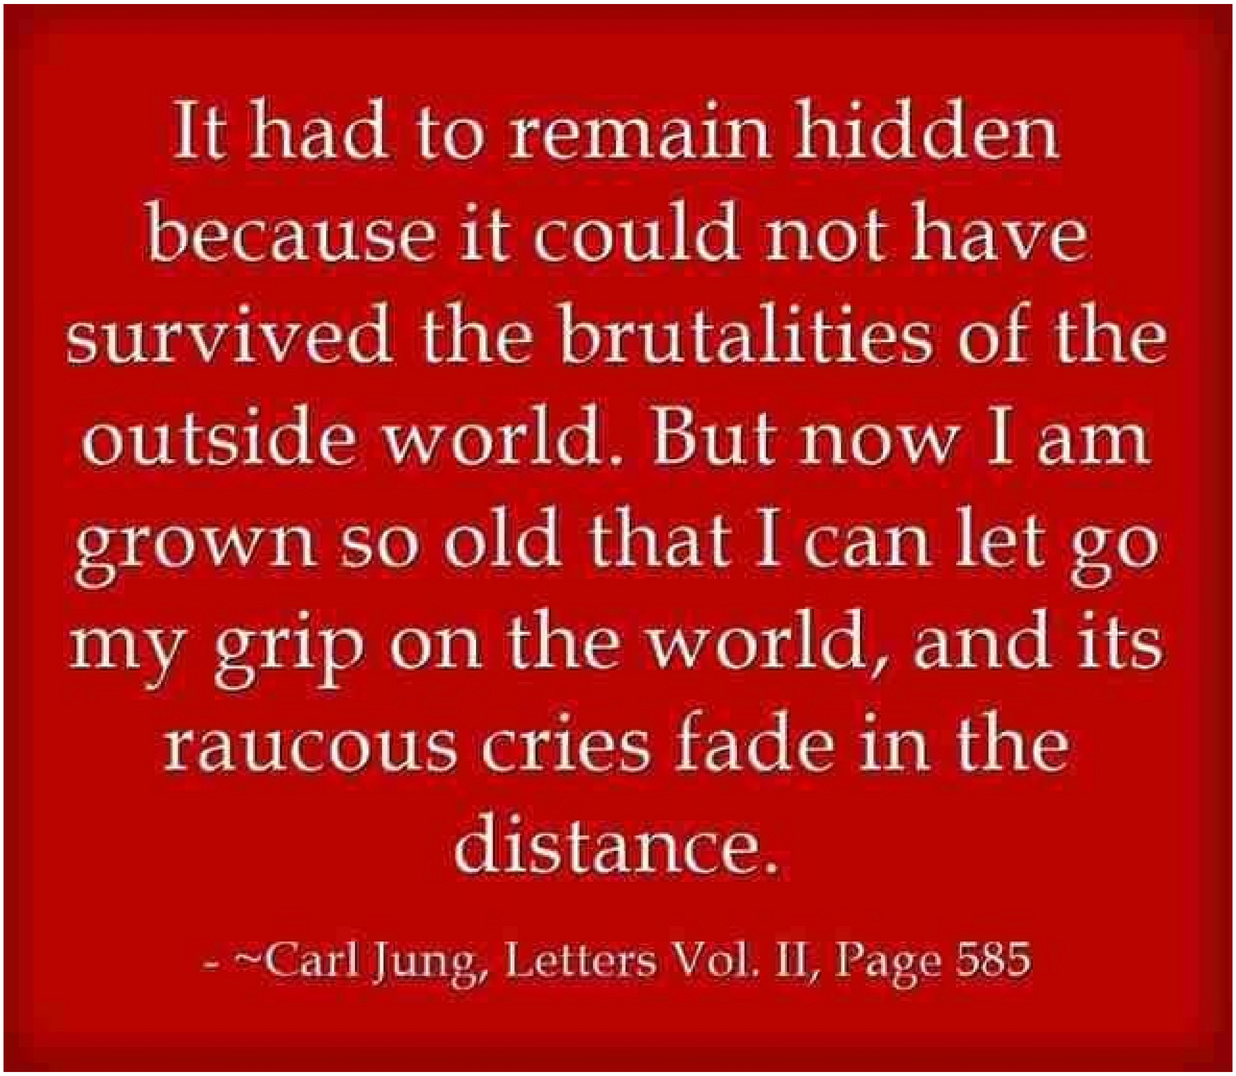
One could even define the I Ching oracle as an experimental dream, just as one can define a dream as an experiment of a four-dimensional nature. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 584-585



By the way: I must call your attention to the fact that I have no theory that God is a quaternity. The whole question of quaternity is not a theory at all, it is a Phenomenon.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 584-585

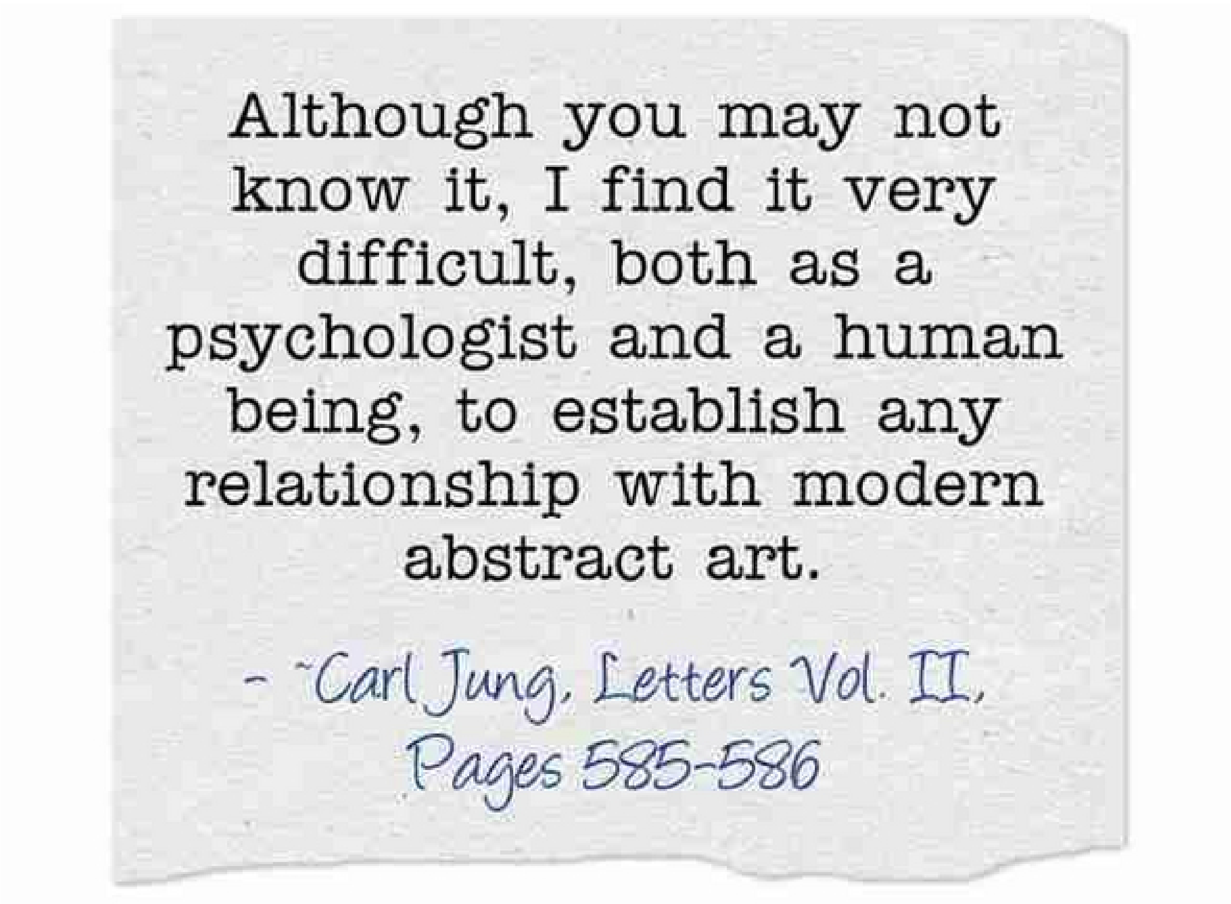
By the way: I must call your attention to the fact that I have no theory that God is a Quaternity. The whole question of quaternity is not a theory at all. It is a phenomenon. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 584-585.



It had to remain hidden because it could not have survived the brutalities of the outside world. But now I am grown so old that I can let go my grip on the world, and its raucous cries fade in the distance.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 585

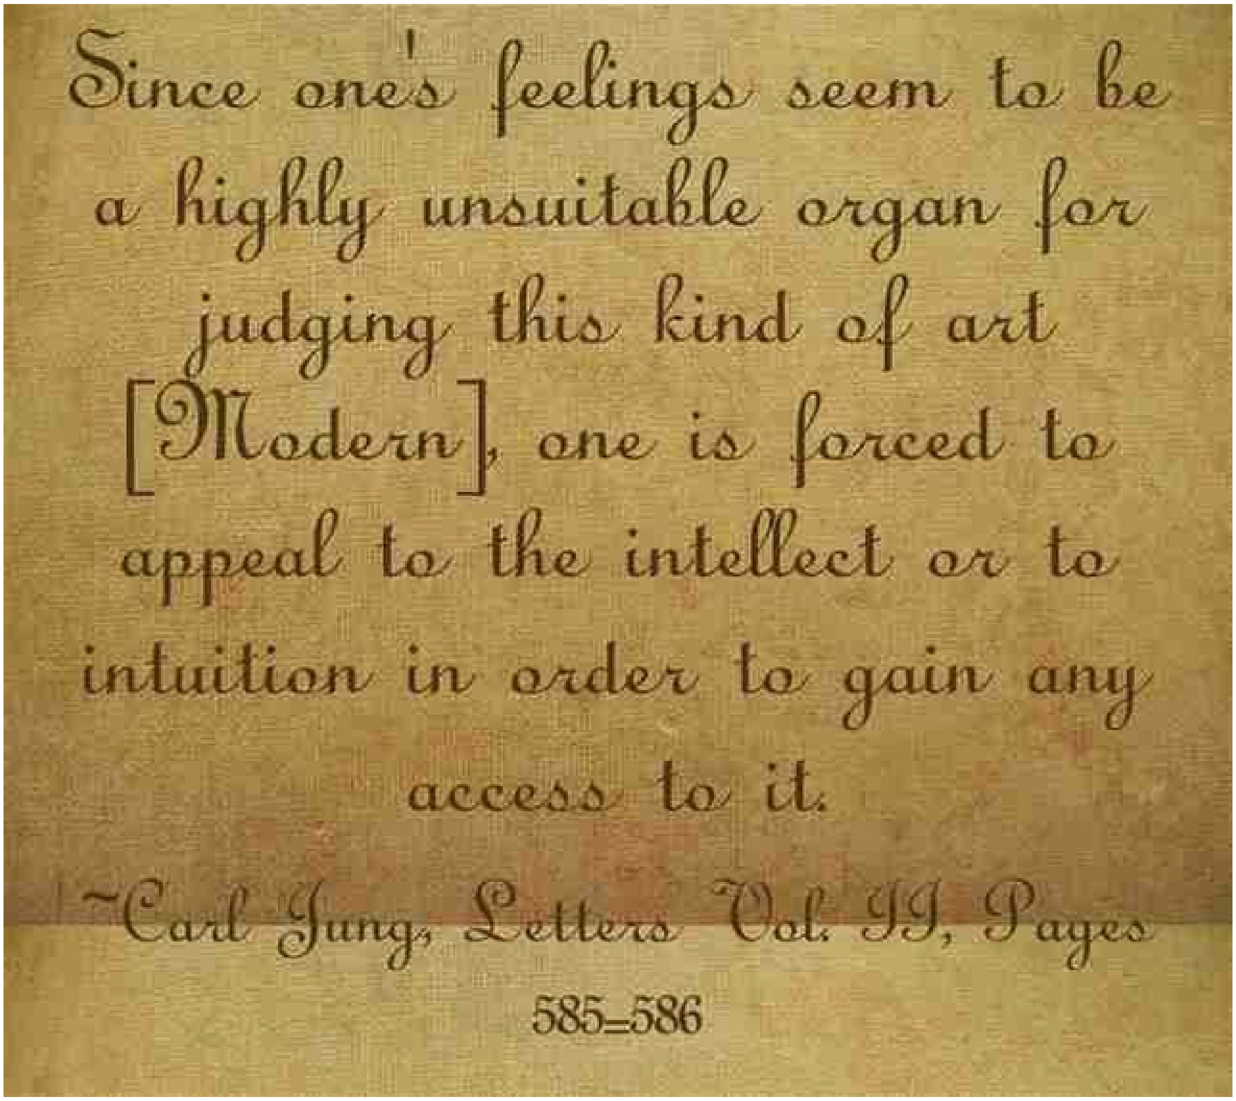
It had to remain hidden because it could not have survived the brutalities of the outside world. But now I am grown so old that I can let go my grip on the world, and its raucous cries fade in the distance. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 585



Although you may not know it, I find it very difficult, both as a psychologist and a human being, to establish any relationship with modern abstract art.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 585-586

Although you may not know it, I find it very difficult, both as a psychologist and a human being, to establish any relationship with modern abstract art. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 585-586.



Since one's feelings seem to be a highly unsuitable organ for judging this kind of art [Modern], one is forced to appeal to the intellect or to intuition in order to gain any access to it.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 585-586

Since one’s feelings seem to be a highly unsuitable organ for judging this kind of art [Modern], one is forced to appeal to the intellect or to intuition in order to gain any access to it. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 585-586.

When I say "Psyche" I mean something unknown, to which I give the name "Psyche."
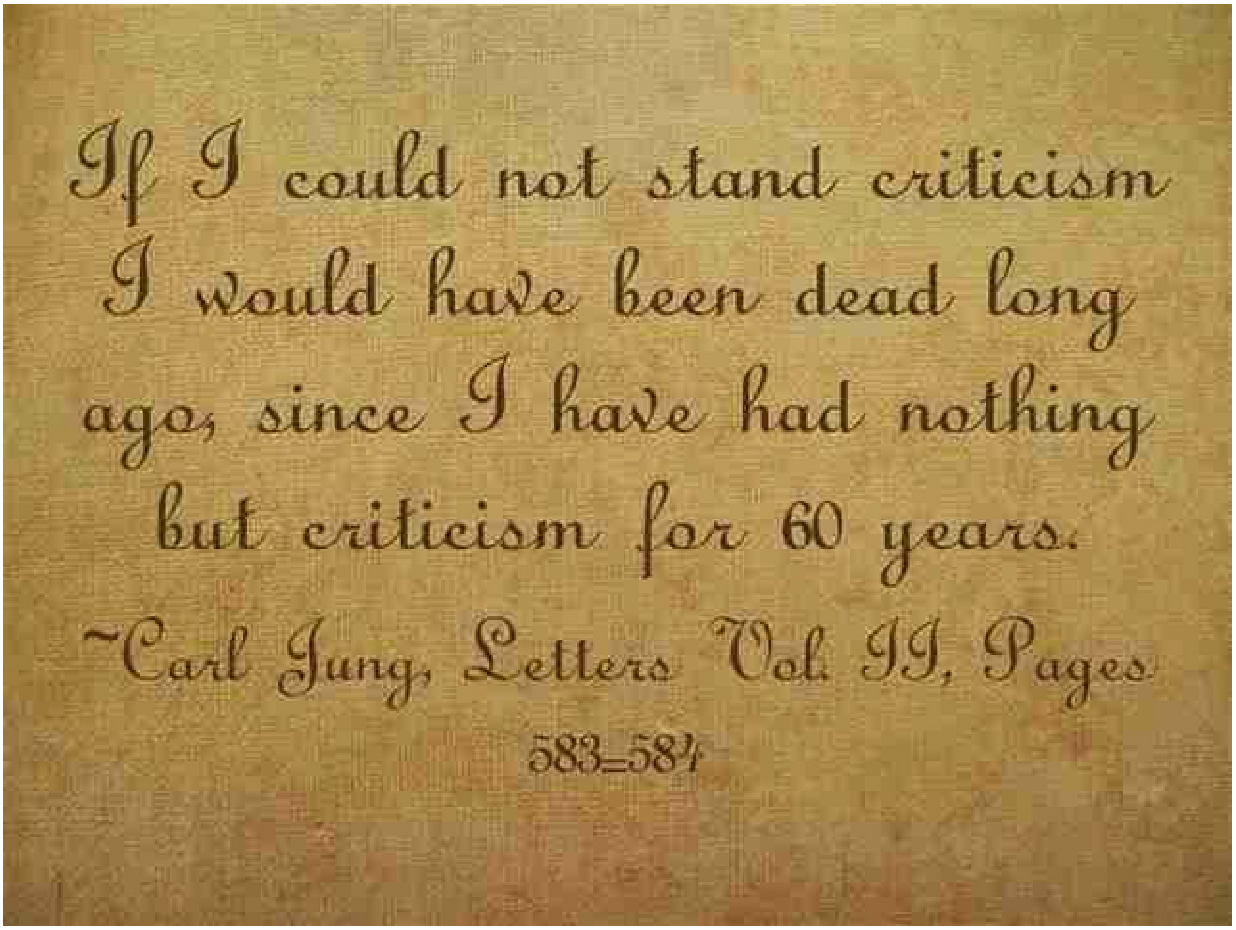
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 583-584

When I say "Psyche" I mean something unknown, to which I give the name "Psyche." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 583-584



If I could not stand criticism
I would have been dead long ago, since I have had nothing but criticism for 60 years.
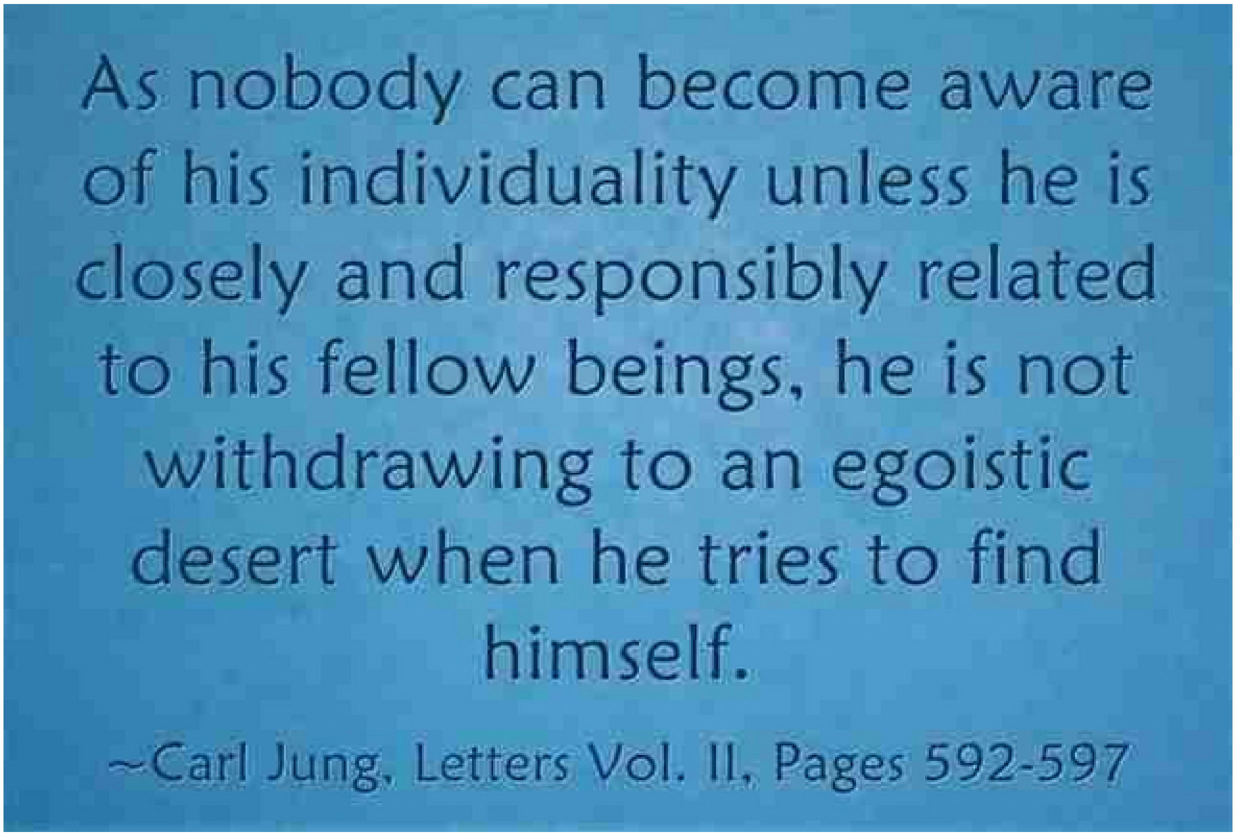
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages
583-584

If I could not stand criticism I would have been dead long ago, since I have had nothing but criticism for 60 years.
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 583-584

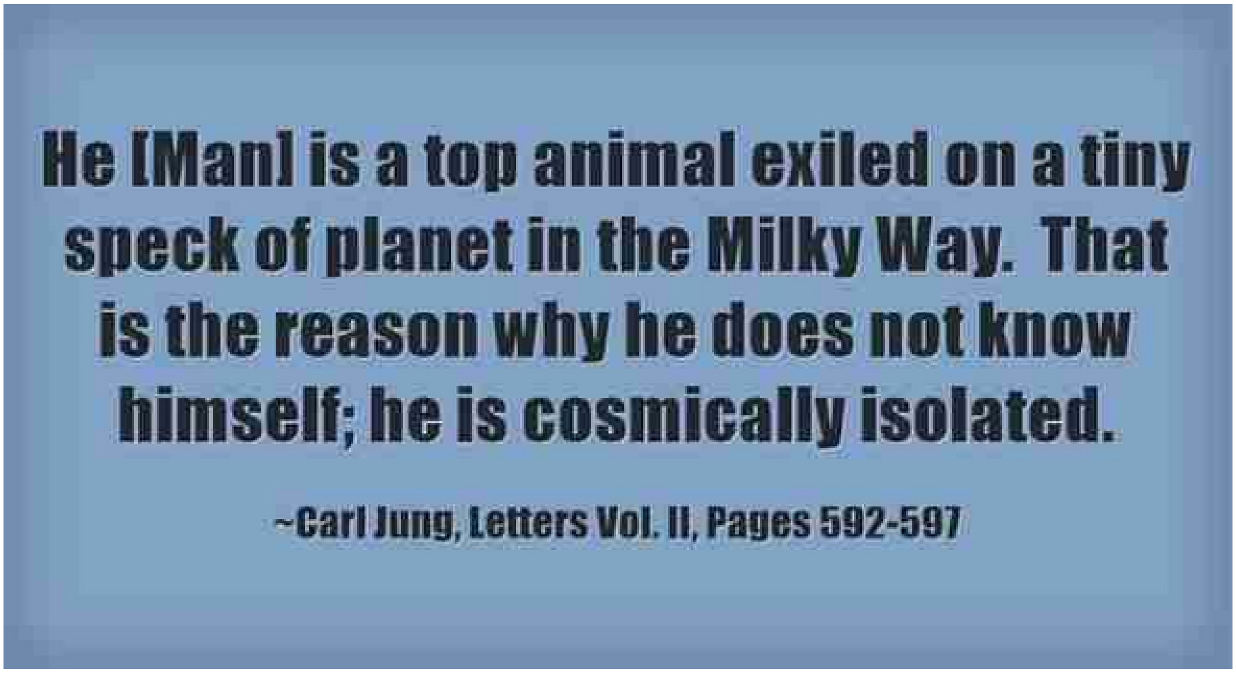


As nobody can become aware of his individuality unless he is closely and responsibly related to his fellow beings, he is not withdrawing to an egoistic desert when he tries to find himself.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 592-597

As nobody can become aware of his individuality unless he is closely and responsibly related to his fellow beings, he is not withdrawing to an egoistic desert when he tries to find himself. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 592-597

[22]



He [Man] is a top animal exiled on a tiny speck of planet in the Milky Way. That is the reason why he does not know himself; he is cosmically isolated.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 592-597

He is a top animal exiled on a tiny speck of planet in the Milky Way. That is the reason why he does not know himself; he is cosmically isolated. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 592-597

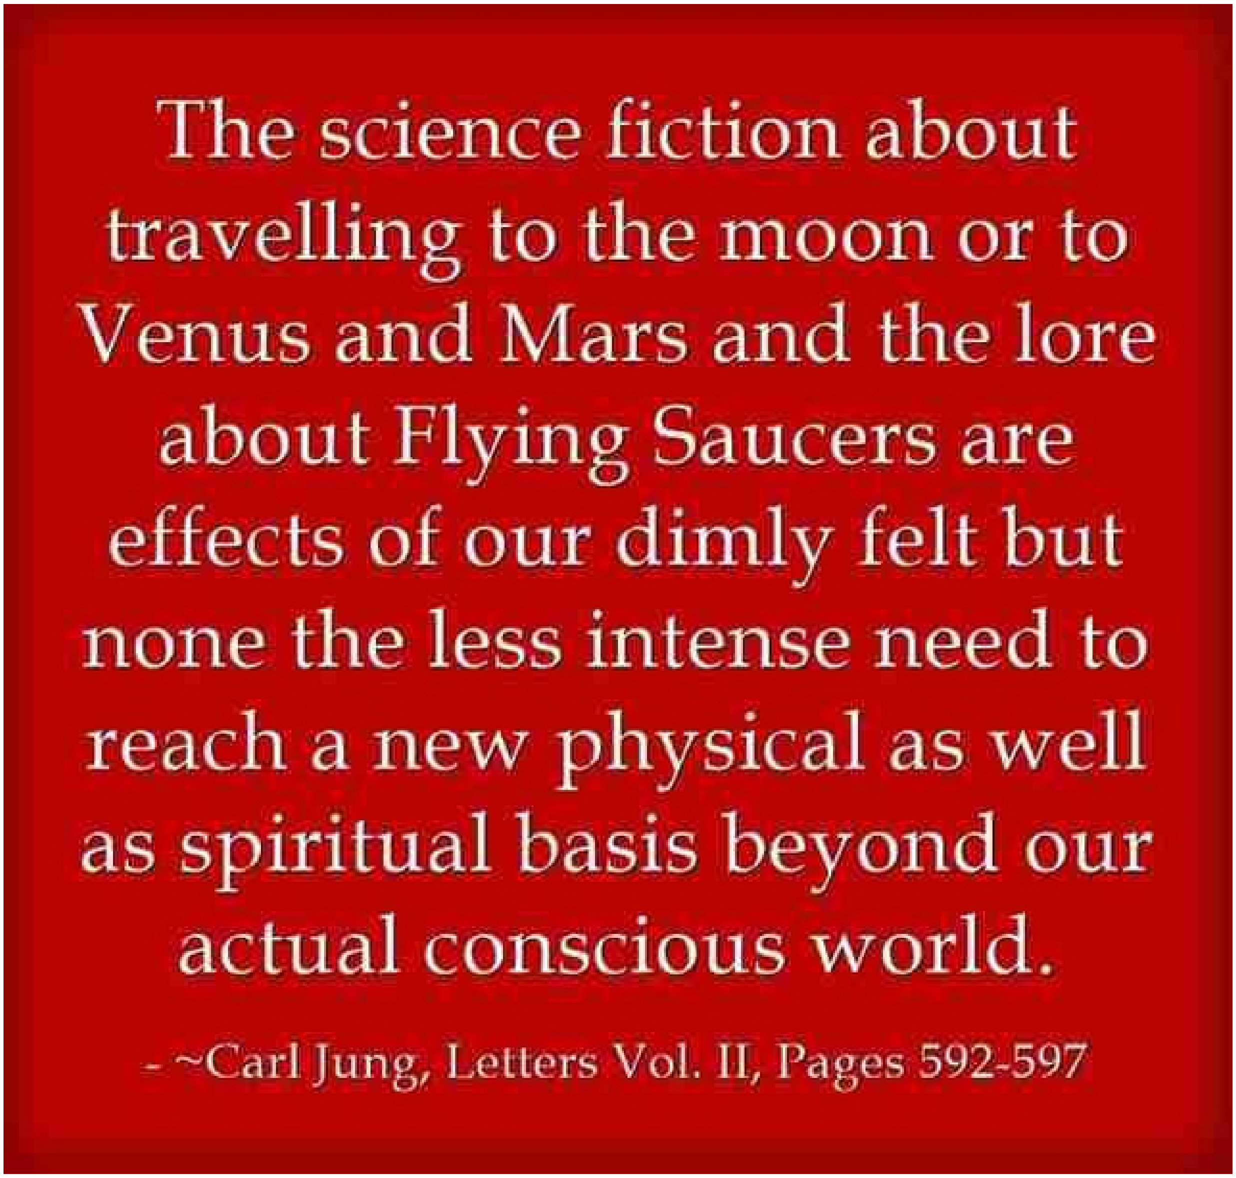
[23]

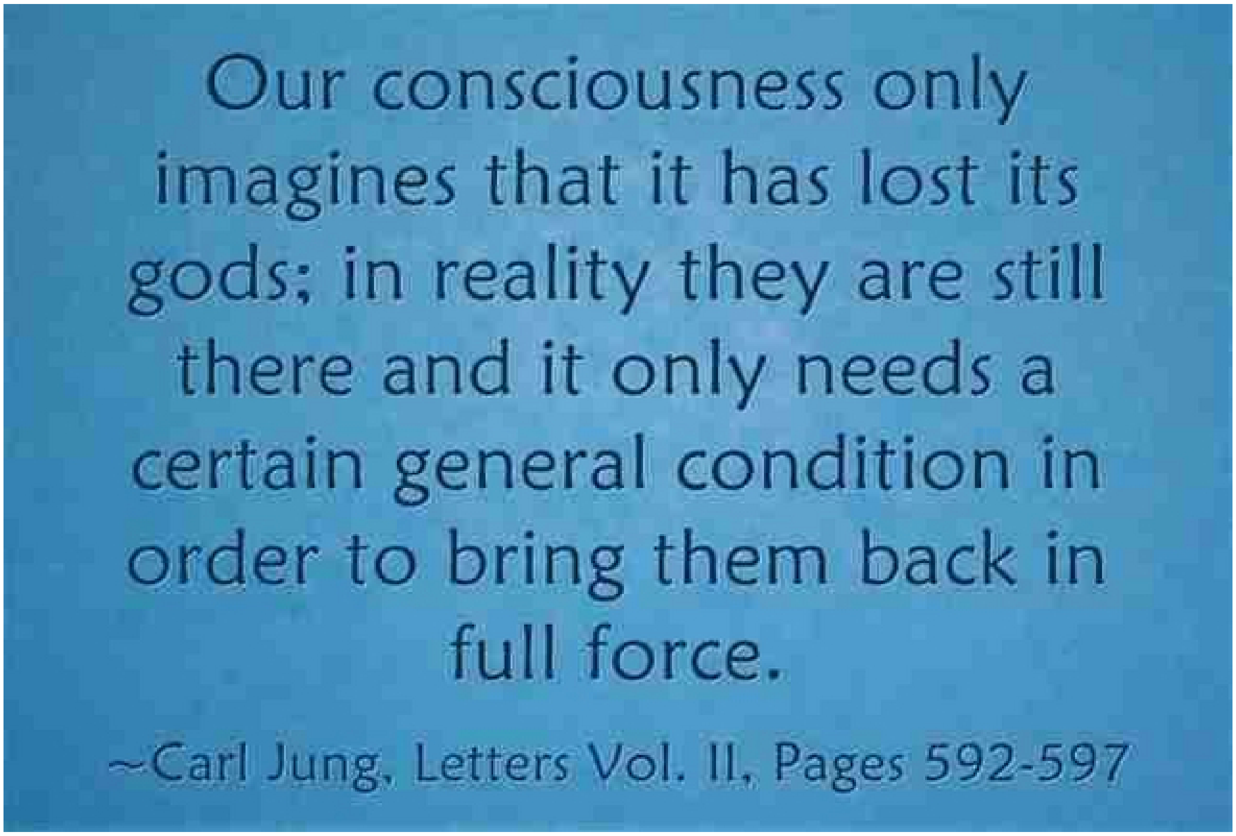


The science fiction about travelling to the moon or to Venus and Mars and the lore about Flying Saucers are effects of our dimly felt but none the less intense need to reach a new physical as well as spiritual basis beyond our actual conscious world.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 592-597

The science fiction about travelling to the moon or to Venus and Mars and the lore about Flying Saucers are effects of our dimly felt but none the less intense need to reach a new physical as well as spiritual basis beyond our actual conscious world. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 592-597

[24]



Our consciousness only imagines that it has lost its gods; in reality they are still there and it only needs a certain general condition in order to bring them back in full force.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 592-597

Our consciousness only imagines that it has lost its gods; in reality they are still there and it only needs a certain general condition in order to bring them back in full force. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 592-597

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/77742-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/eb875-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a1a66-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/daee8-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dda8a-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/01244-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0fbb3-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f180e-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e84bb-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/55c9d-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/69a7d-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/da1ea-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3b76d-nnn.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7ed39-ooo.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b44dc-ppp.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d47f0-qqq.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aacaa-rrr.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d93ad-sss.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f675b-ttt.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/75cfa-uuu.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6cd6a-vvv.jpg`

22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/42fe7-www.jpg
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/189ad-xxx.jpg
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/06f8a-yyy.jpg

---

Carl Jung: I do in fact dislike being disturbed, especially when working. (2019-03-12 03:30)

[1]

OSCAR A.H. SCHMITZ
Das wilde Leben der Boheme
Tagebücher 1896 · 1906
aufbau
OSCAR A.H. SCHMITZ
Ein Dandy auf Reisen
Tagebücher 1907 · 1912
aufbau
OSCAR A.H. SCHMITZ
Durch das Land der Dämonen
Tagebücher 1912 · 1918
aufbau

To Oskar A. H. Schmitz

Dear Herr Schmitz, Bollingen, 20 September 1928

I greatly appreciate your not having burst in on me unannounced in Bollingen with Frl. X.

I do in fact dislike being disturbed, especially when working.

One of the most important and difficult tasks in the individuation process is to bridge the distance between people.

There is always a danger that the distance will be broken down by one party only, and this invariably gives rise to a feeling of violation followed by resentment.

Every relationship has its optimal distance, which of course has to be found by trial and error.

The problem is a particularly delicate one with women, where sexuality is apt to rear its ugly head.

Scrupulous attention must be paid to resistances.

They can hardly be taken seriously enough, since one is only too prone to self-deception.

With kind regards,

Yours very sincerely,

C.G. Jung

P.S. I completely forgot to answer your earlier question.

The advantage of an hourly arrangement is that the patient is less likely to be drawn into the atmosphere of a personal relationship, and the financial aspect is easier to calculate.

In the present case I think you might charge 50-70 fr. a day.

If you want to work during the day, you should make a fixed charge for the half day, e.g., Y2-day = 4 hours = 60 (or 50) marks.

The more hours you work, the higher the fee.

In cases of inferior feeling, a trauma very often has pathological consequences in the realm of sensation, e.g., physical pain unaccompanied by feeling.

In cases of inferior sensation, therefore, the trauma can precipitate intense feeling-symptoms.

Very often the shock obliterates the function in question, just as excruciating pain blots out consciousness ("witch's sleep" under torture), and leaves "marginal symptoms" behind. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 53-54

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b1d04-12bschmitz.jpg`

Carl Jung: Since we do not know everything.... (2019-03-12 03:30)

[1]

© phosphenisme.com

Since we do not know everything, practically every experience, fact, or object contains something unknown.

Hence, if we speak of the totality of an experience, the word "totality" can refer only to the conscious part of it.

As we cannot assume that our experience covers the totality of the object, it is clear that its absolute totality must necessarily contain the part that has not been experienced.

The same holds true, as I have mentioned, of every experience and also of the psyche, whose absolute totality covers a greater area than consciousness.

In other words, the psyche is no exception to the general rule that the universe can be established only so far as our psychic organism permits. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 68

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c6de3-12borganism.jpg`

Carl Jung: My exterior is in strange contrast to my spirit. (2019-03-12 03:30)

[1]

Dear Mrs. N., 4 January 1929

There is some likeness in the upper storey but the ensemble is not satisfactory.

Have you got some of the many snapshots Mrs. X. got of me through her niece?

They might be helpful.

My exterior is in strange contrast to my spirit.

When I am dead, nobody will think that this is the corpse of one with spiritual aspirations.

I am the clash of opposites.

That makes it so frightfully difficult to get me right.

Should my portrait be the reconciling symbol of your own contradictions?

The very best wishes for a happy New Year,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 59

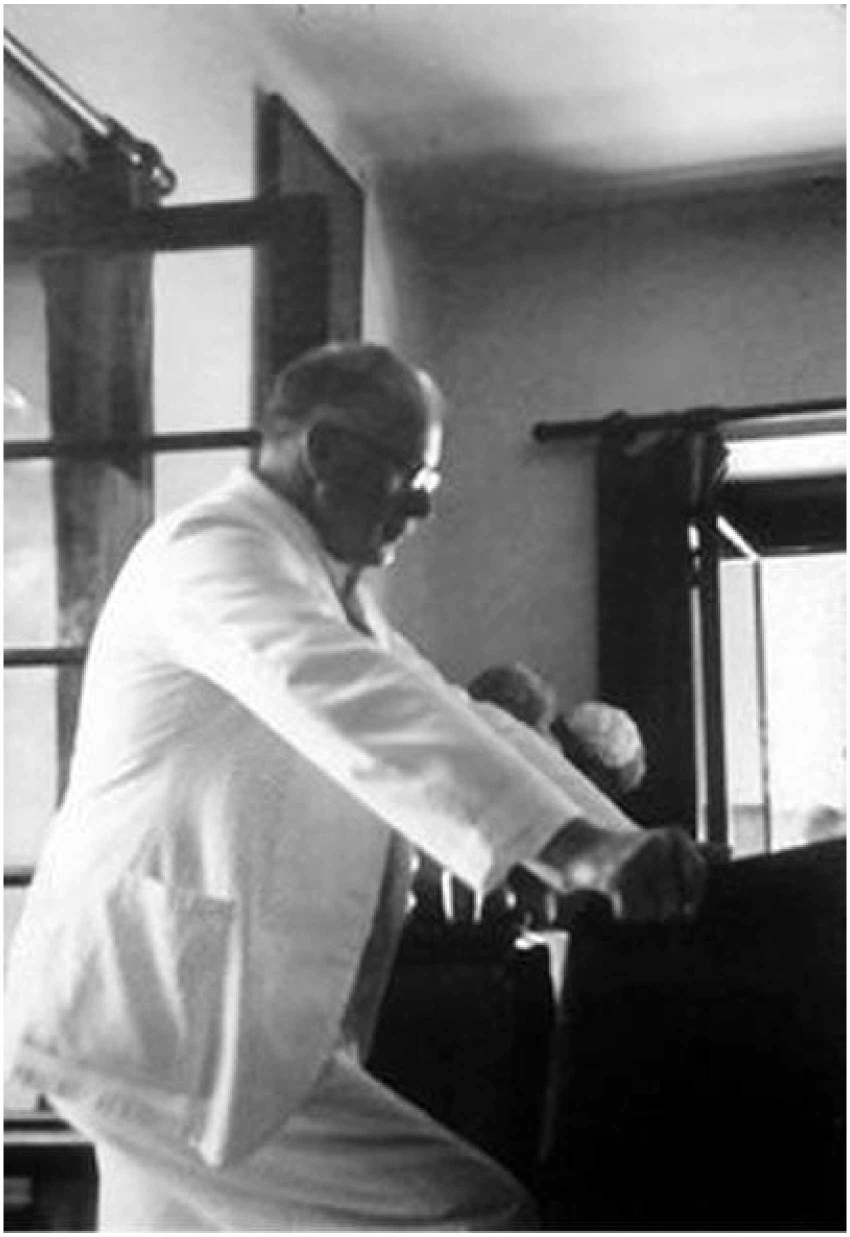
1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7e7a0-12bmrs-2bn.jpg

---

Carl Jung: My whole psychology is such that it can be accepted only by someone who is ready for it.

(2019-03-12 03:30)

[1]



Dear Fraulein von Sury, 14 November 1933

I have been pondering over your suggestion for a lecture in Paris and have come to the conclusion that in view of the present intellectual situation in France it would be premature if I lectured at the Sorbonne.

It would look too much like making propaganda for my own cause.

I would regard such a procedure as not only unintelligent but misleading as well.

I have always acted on the principle that if people have the need to hear me they could also invite me to speak.

I would therefore prefer to wait and see whether something will stir spontaneously in Paris or not.

I have found over and over again that it is not worthwhile speaking to an unprepared public.

My whole psychology is such that it can be accepted only by someone who is ready for it.

It is too little in accord with the conscious expectations of the time to be grafted on to something known.

So let us wait and leave it to the intellectual development of France whether or not to adopt a positive attitude to this kind of psychology.

I am sorry to disappoint you now after I had already expressed mywillingness to oblige.

with best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 130-131

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6beb8-12bsury.jpg`

Carl Jung: nobody can defy life’s laws with impunity (2019-03-12 03:30)

[1]

THE WAY OF INDIVIDUATION
The extension of consciousness is shown as a crucial task of individual development or individuation, a key concept in Jungian psychology.
BY Jolande Jacobi

To Jolande Jacobi

Dear Frau Jacobi, 10 April 1933

I assume you will already have heard from Brody what has happened to the falcon that flew out of your hand into the blue.

It came home again bedraggled and crept into its own egg, just as Noah’s dove found no rest for the sole of her foot.

The highly implausible story that the dove returned with an olive leaf has not yet come to pass; the ark still tosses on the waters, which are higher than ever.

I personally do not regret this deflation in the least, as I am not at all set on making more work for myself.

I am convinced that people who could do it by themselves do not exist.

The fate of X. seems to me far sadder.

I have heard indirectly how badly it goes with him [X], and from the talk I had with him in Vienna this catastrophic decline could be foreseen, as nobody can defy life's laws with impunity.

I know how very hard your lot is these days.

With best wishes,

Ever sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 119-120

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ee015-22bjacobi.jpg`

Carl Jung: There you will find a formulation of my views on the place of our psyche in the cosmos. (2019-03-12 03:30)

To Pastor W. Arz

Dear Pastor Arz, 10 April 1933

Of course I have no objection to your discussing my private communications to you among your circle of friends.

Scientifically speaking, nothing whatever can be made out about the phenomenon of the spirit.

These things are so delicate that they completely elude our scientific grasp.

The idea that man alonepossesses the primacy of reason is antiquated twaddle.

I have even found that men are far more irrational than animals.

Since we know from experience that the psyche can be grasped to only a very limited degree, it would be best to regard it as a tiny conscious world influenced by all sorts of unknown factors lurking in the great darkness that surrounds us.

Among these factors we can perhaps include what we call spirit; thus far science may go, but no further.

I have discussed what spirit means to me in my essay "Geist und Leben" (Seelenprobleme der Gegenwart, Rascher, Zurich, 1931).

There you will find a formulation of my views on the place of our psyche in the cosmos.

It seems to me therefore quite right if man, conscious of his limitations, feels himself only in modest degree a creator, but in far higher degree a creature or object of a (scientifically unknown) factor that evidently has the tendency to realize itself in human life.

One should never confuse oneself with this determinant, otherwise there is always an inflation.

In this connection I would like to draw your attention to my book Die Beziehungen zwischen dem Ich und dem Unbewussten, published by Reichl (Darmstadt [1928]).

Perhaps you also know the book I brought out together with the late Richard Wilhelm, Das Geheimnis der goldenen Blute.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 119

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a2bfd-12barz.jpg`

Carl Jung: Dreams are always beautiful when the development of the personality has to proceed via the unconscious. (2019-03-12 03:30)

[1]

To Count Hermann Keyserling

Dear Count, 21 May 1927

I am sorry I am behindhand in answering your letter.

As regards X. I have simply noticed that he has a predominantly intellectual attitude like Scheler and is therefore taken in by intellectual conjuring tricks.

But that has nothing to do with his beautiful dreams.

Dreams like that can occur no matter what the conscious attitude may be.

Dreams are always beautiful when the development of the personality has to proceed via the unconscious.

"Beauty" is synonymous with "being allured or attracted."

Your case seems to be different.

Your own execution accompanied by feelings of pleasure means that you should execute yourself consciously, i.e., choose another attitude and want it.

Your development is evidently proceeding at present via the conscious will and not via the unconscious.

In other words, the scope of your experience of external life and the world is not yet exhausted for you.

With best regards,

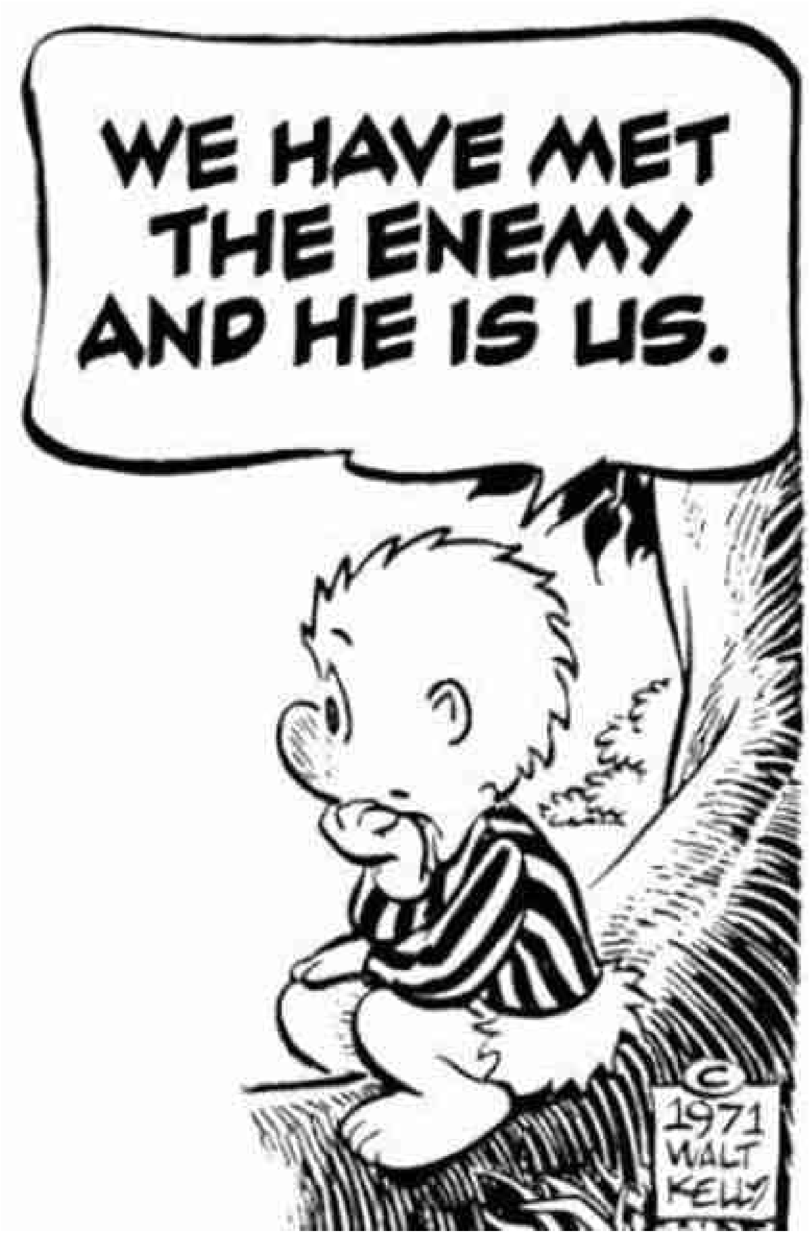
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 46-47

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b02a1-12bkeyserling.jpg`

Carl Jung on: “The Post-War Psychic Problems of the Germans (2019-03-12 14:21)

[1]



WE HAVE MET THE ENEMY AND HE IS US.
© 1971 WALT KELLY

Introduction: Four days after the unconditional surrender of the German Army at Rheims, this interview by Peter Schmid was published in Die Weltwoche (Zurich) for May ii, 1945, under the title "Werden die Seelen Frieden finden?" (Will the Souls Find Peace?).

The interview probably took place somewhat earlier.

A partial translation was published by the newspaper PM (New York), May to, 1945.

Peter Schmid: Do you not think that the end of the war will bring about great changes in the psyche of Europeans, particularly the Germans, who are now awakening as though from a long and terrible dream?

Carl Jung: Indeed I do.

As to the Germans, we have a psychic problem ahead of us the magnitude of which cannot yet be foreseen, though its outlines can already be discerned in the cases I am treating.

For the psychologist one thing is clear, and that is that he ought not to make the popular sentimental distinction between Nazis and opponents of the regime.

Two cases I am now treating are both outspoken anti-Nazis, and yet their dreams show that behind all the decency the most pronounced Nazi psychology is still alive with all its violence and savagery.

When Field Marshal von Kiichler,' questioned by a Swiss reporter about the German atrocities in Poland, exclaimed indignantly: "Excuse me, that wasn't the Wehrmacht, it was the Party!" this proved that a division into decent and indecent Germans is thoroughly naïve.

All of them, whether consciously or unconsciously, actively or passively, have their share in the horrors; they knew nothing of what was going on and yet they did know, as though party to a secret contract genial.

For the psychologist the question of collective guilt, which worries politicians so much and will go on worrying them, is a fact, and it will be one of the most important tasks of therapy to get the Germans to admit this guilt.

Even now I am receiving many applications from Germans who want to be treated by me.

If they come from those "decent Germans" who want to foist the guilt onto a couple of men in the Gestapo, regard the case as hopeless.

I shall have no alternative ,but to answer the applications with a questionnaire asking certain crucial questions, like "What do you think about Buchenwald?"

Only when a patient sees and admits his own responsibility can individual treatment be considered.

But how was it possible that the Germans, of all people, got themselves into this hopeless psychic mess? Could it have happened to any other nation?

Here you must allow me to go back a bit and to recapitulate my theory as to the general psychic antecedents of this National Socialist war.

Let us take a small practical example as a starting point.

One day a woman comes to me and breaks out into the wildest accusations against her husband: he is a veritable devil who torments and persecutes her, and so on and so forth.

In reality the good man is a perfectly respectable citizen, quite innocent of any such demonic intentions. Where does this crazy idea come from in this woman?

It is the devil in her own soul that she is projecting; she has transferred her own wishes and her own rages to her husband.

I make this clear to her; she admits it and becomes a contrite little lamb.

Everything seems to be in order.

And yet that is just the thing I find most disquieting, because I don't know where the devil, who had previously attached himself to the image of the husband, has gone to.

Exactly the same thing happened on a large scale in the history of Europe.

For primitive man the world is full of demons and mysterious powers which he fears; the whole of Nature is animated by these forces, which are nothing but man's own inner powers projected into the outside world.

Christianity and modern science have de-demonized Nature, which means that the European has consistently taken back the demonic powers out of the world into himself, and has steadily loaded his unconscious with them.

Out of man himself the demonic powers rise up in revolt against the supposed spiritual constraints of Christianity.

The demons begin to break out in Baroque art: the columns writhe, the furniture sprouts satyr's feet.

Man is slowly transformed into a uroboros, the "tail-eater" who devours himself, from ancient times a symbol of the demon-ridden man.

The first perfect example of this species was Napoleon.

The Germans display a specific weakness in the face of these demons because of their incredible suggestibility.

This shows itself in their love of obedience, their supine submission to commands, which are only another form of suggestion.

This hangs together with the general psychic inferiority of the Germans, the result of their precarious position between East and West.

Of all the Western peoples, they were the ones who, at the general exodus from the Eastern womb of the nations, remained too long with their mother.

Finally they did get out, but arrived too late, while the mujik never broke loose at all.

Hence the Germans are profoundly troubled with a national inferiority complex, which they try to compensate by megalomania: "Am deutschen Wesen soli die Welt genesen" —though they are none too comfy in their own skins!

It is a typical adolescent psychology, apparent not only in the extraordinary prevalence of homosexuality but in the absence of an anima figure in German literature (the great exception here is Goethe).

It is also apparent in German sentimentality and "Gemiitlichkeit," which is really nothing but hardness of heart, unfeelingness, and soullessness.

All those charges of soullessness and bestiality which German propaganda levelled at the Russians apply to themselves; Goebbels' speeches are nothing but German psychology projected upon the enemy.

The immaturity of the personality also displayed itself in a terrifying way in the German General Staff, whose lack of character resembled the squashiness of a mollusk inside a panzer.

Germany has always been the land of psychic catastrophes: the Reformation, peasant wars and wars of religion.

Under National Socialism, the pressure of the demons became so great that they got human beings into their power and blew them up into lunatic supermen, first of all Hitler who then infected the rest.

All the Nazi leaders were possessed in the truest sense of the word, and it is assuredly no accident that their propaganda minister was branded with the ancient mark of the demonized man—a clubfoot.

Ten per cent of the German population today are hopeless psychopaths.

Peter Schmid: You have been talking of the psychic inferiority and demonic susceptibility of the Germans, but do you think this also applies to us Swiss, so far as we are Germanic in origin?

Dr. Jung: We are insulated against this susceptibility by the smallness of our country.

If eighty million Swiss were piled together the same thing might happen, for the demons hurl man is rootless and then the demons can get him.

Hence the technique of the Nazis never to form individuals but only huge masses. Hence, too, the faces of the demonized man of today: lifeless, rigid, blank.
We Swiss are protected against these dangers by our federalism and our individualism.

Such a mass accumulation would not be possible with us as it was in Germany, and in this isolation lies perhaps the therapy with which one can conquer the demons.

Peter Schmid: But what will happen if this therapy is carried out by bombs and guns?

Won't military subjection of the demonized nation merely intensify the feeling of inferiority and make the disease worse?

Dr. Jung: The Germans today are like a drunken man who wakes up the next morning with a hangover. They don't know what they've done and don't want to know.

The only feeling is one of boundless misery.

They will make convulsive efforts to rehabilitate themselves in face of the accusations and hatred of the surrounding world, but that is not the right way.

The only redemption lies, as I have already indicated, in a complete admission of guilt. Mea culpa, mea maxima culpa!

Out of honest contrition for sin comes divine grace.

That is not only a religious but also a psychological truth.

The American treatment of conducting the civilian population through the concentration camps and letting them see all the abominations committed there is therefore quite right.

Only, the object lesson should not be driven home with moral instruction; repentance must come from inside the Germans themselves.

It is possible that positive forces will emerge from the catastrophe, that from this introversion prophets will once again arise, for prophets are as characteristic of this strange people as the demons.

Anyone who falls so low has depth.

In all probability there will be a miraculous haul of souls for the Catholic Church—the Protestant Church is too split up.

There are reports that the general misery has reawakened the religious life in Germany; whole communities fall to their knees in the evenings, beseeching God to deliver them from the Antichrist.

Then one can hope that the demons will be banished and that a new and better world will rise on the ruins? No, the demons are not banished, that is a difficult task that still lies ahead.

Now that the angel of history has abandoned the Germans, the demons will seek a new victim. And that won't be difficult.

Every man who loses his shadow, every nation that falls into self-righteousness, is their prey.

We love the criminal and take a burning interest in him because the devil makes us forget the beam in our own eye when observing the mote in our brother's and in that way outwits us.

The Germans will recover when they admit their guilt and accept it; but the others will become victims of possession if, in their horror at the German guilt, they forget their own moral shortcomings.

We should not forget that exactly the same fatal tendency to collectivization is present in the victorious nations as in the Germans, that they can just as suddenly become a victim of the demonic powers.

"General suggestibility" plays a tremendous role in America today, and how much the Russians are already fascinated by the devil of power can easily be seen from the latest events, which must dampen our peace jubilations a bit.

The most sensible in this respect are the English: their individualism saves them from falling for the slogan, and the Swiss share their amazement at the collective unreason.

Then we must anxiously wait and see which way the demons go next?

I have already suggested that the only salvation lies in the piecemeal work of educating the individual. That is not as hopeless as it may appear.

The power of the demons is immense, and the most modern media of mass suggestion —press, radio, film, etc.—are at their service.

But Christianity, too, was able to hold its own against an overwhelming adversary not by propaganda and mass conversions—that came later and was of little value—but by persuasion from man to man.

And that is the way we also must go if we wish to conquer the demons.

I don't envy you your task in writing about these things.

I hope you will succeed in presenting my ideas in such a way that people won’t find them too strange.

Unfortunately it is my fate that other people, especially those who are themselves possessed by demons, think me mad because I believe in these powers.

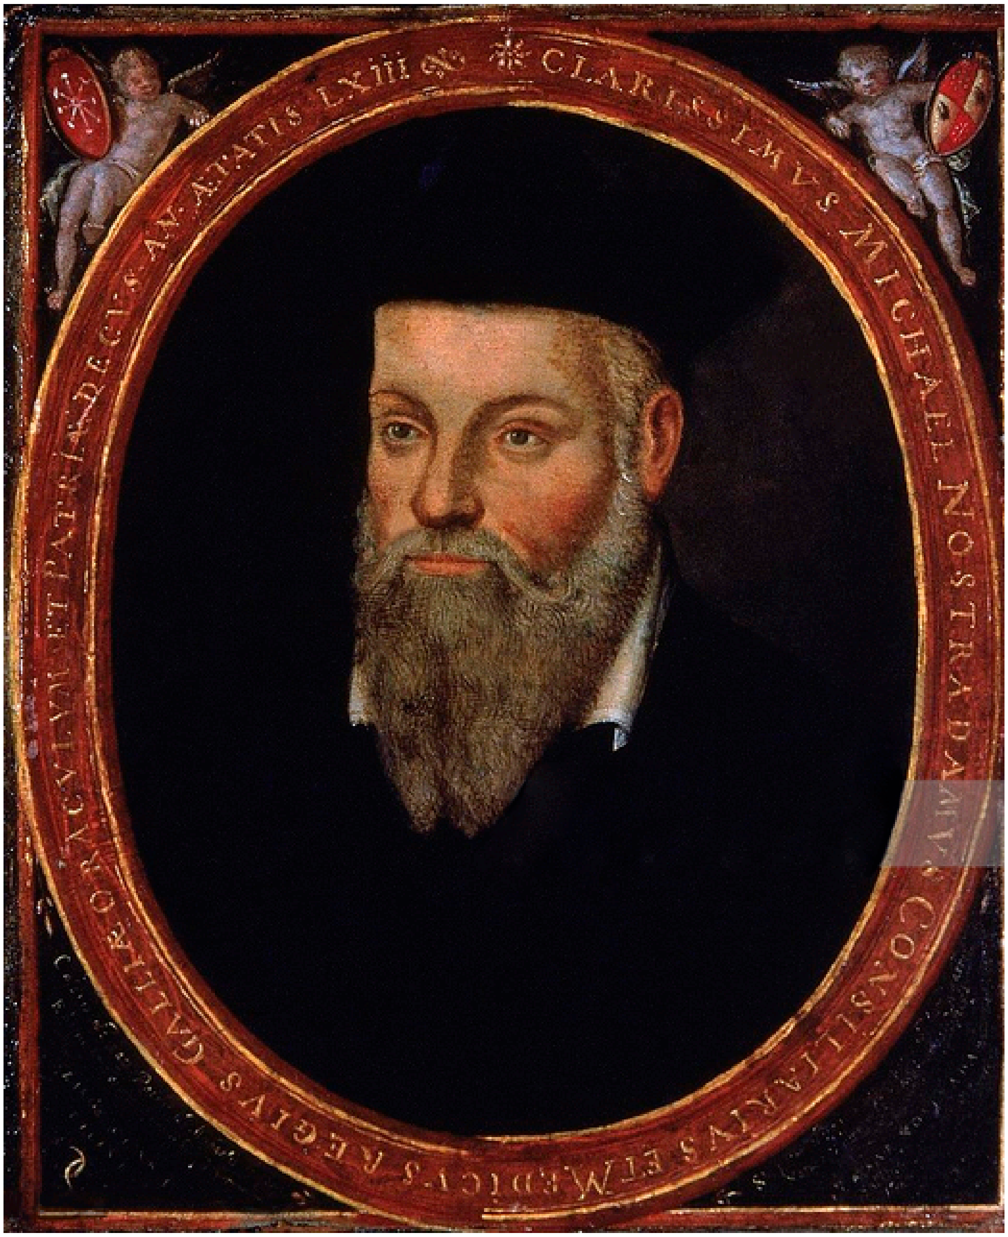
But that is their affair; I know they exist.

There are demons all right, as sure as there is a Buchenwald. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 149-155

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/971e9-12benemy.jpg`

The Prophecies of Nostradamus ~Carl Jung (2019-03-12 14:46)

[1]



CLARISSIMVS MICHAEL NOSTRADAMVS CONSILIARIVS ET MEDICVS REGIVS GALLIÆ ORACVLVM ET PATRIÆ DECVS AN. ÆTATIS LXIII

Nostradamus: original portrait by his son Cesar

The Prophecies of Nostradamus Carl Jung

[Note: In posting this essay I was unable to post the Greek and Latin Symbols that are important in fully grasping what Dr. Jung is saying. A link to the original .pdf is at the bottom of this page. Lewis]

150 The course of our religious history as well as an essential part of our psychic development could have been predicted more or less accurately, both as regards time and content, from the precession of the equinoxes through the constellation of Pisces. The prediction, as we saw, was actually made and coincides with the fact that the Church suffered a schism in the sixteenth century. After that an enantiodromian process set in which, in contrast to the " Gothic" striving upwards to theheights, could be described as a horizontal movement outwards, namely the voyages of discovery and the conquest of Nature. The vertical was cut across by the horizontal, and man's spiritual and moral development moved in a direction that grew more and more obviously antichristian, so that today we are confronted with a crisis of Western civilization whose outcome appears to be exceedingly dubious.

151 With this background in mind, I would like to mention the astrological prophecies of Nostradamus, written in a letter x to Henry II of France, on June 27, 1558. After detailing a year characterized, among other things, by U 6 with $ Q ff ?
he says: Then the beginning of that year shall see a greater persecution against the Christian Church than ever was in Africa, and it shall be in the year 1792, at which time everyone will think it a renovation of the age. . . . And at that time and in those countries the infernal power shall rise against the Church of Jesus Christ. This shall be the second Antichrist, which shall persecute the said Church and its true vicar by means of the power of temporal kings, who through their ignorance shall be seduced by tongues more sharp than any sword in the hands of a madman. . . . The persecution of the clergy shall have its beginning in the power of the Northern Kings joined by the Eastern ones. And that persecution shall last eleven years, or a little less, at which time the chief Northern king shall fail. However, Nostradamus thinks that "a united Southern king" will outlast the Northern one by three years. He sees a return of paganism ("the sanctuary destroyed by paganism"), the Bible will be burned, and an immense blood-bath will take place: "So great tribulations as ever did happen since the first foundation of the Christian Church." All Latin countries will be affected by it.

There are historical determinants that may have moved Nostradamus to give the year 1792 as the beginning of the new aeon. For instance, Cardinal Pierre d’Ailly, basing himself on Albumasar, writes in his Concordantia 5 on the eighth coniunctio maxima, which had been calculated for 1693: And after that shall be the fulfilment of ten revolutions of Saturn in the year 1789, and this will happen after the said conjunction, in the course of ninety-seven years or thereabouts. . . . This being so, we say that if the world shall endure until then, which God alone knows, then there will be many and great and marvelous changes and transformations of the world, especially as concerns law-giving and religious sects, for the said conjunction and the revolutions of Saturn will coincide with the revolution or reversal of the upper orb, i.e., the eighth sphere, and from these and other premises the change of sects will be known. . . . Whence it may be concluded with some probability that this is the time when the Antichrist shall come with his law and his damnable sects, which are utterly contrary and inimical to the law of Christ; for, being human, we can have no certainty with regard to the time and the moment of his coming. e . . Yet, despite the indeterminate statement that he will come at approximately that time, it is possible to have a probable conjecture and a credible hypothesis in accordance with the astronomical indications. If, therefore, the astronomers say that a change of sects will occur about that time, then, according to them, a Mighty One will come after Mahomet, who will set up an evil and magical law. Thus we may surmise with credible probability that after the sect of Mahomet none other will come save the law of the Antichrist.

54 In connection with the calculation of the year 1693, Pierre d’Ailly quotes Albumasar as saying that the first coniunctio maxima of Saturn and Jupiter took place anno mundi 3200. To this Albumasar added 960 years, which brings us to A.D. 1693 as the year of the eighth coniunctio maxima In Part III of his book, chapter 1 7, Pierre d’Ailly criticizes this view and calls it a "false deduction." In his treatise against ’superstitiosos astronomos," 1410, he maintains that the Christian religion should not be brought under astrological laws. He was alluding in particular to Roger Bacon, who had revived the theory that Christianity was under the influence of the planet Mercury. Pierre d’Ailly held that only superstitions and heretical opinions were astrologically influenced, and especially the coming of the Antichrist.

We are probably right in assuming that these calculations were known to Nostradamus, who proposed 1792 as an improvement on 1 789. Both dates are suggestive, and a knowledge of subsequent events confirms that the things that happened around that time were significant forerunners of developments in our own day. The enthronement of the "Deesse Raison" was, in fact, an anticipation of the antichristian trend that was pursued from then onwards. The "renovation of the age" might mean a new aeon, and it coincides in a remarkable way with the new system of dating, the revolutionary calendar, which began with September 22, 1792, and had a distinctly antichristian character. What had been brewing up long beforehand then became a manifest event; in the French Revolution men witnessed the enantiodromia that had set in with the Renaissance and ran parallel with the astrological fish symbol. The time seemed a significant one astrologically, for a variety of reasons. In the first place this was the moment when the precession of the equinoxes reached the tail of the second fish. Then, in the year 1791, Saturn was in T, a fiery sign. Besides that, tradition made use of the theory of maximal conjunctions and regarded the year of the eighth coniunctio maxima 1693 as a starting-point for future calculations.12 This critical year was combined with another tradition basing itself on periods of ten revolutions of Saturn, each period taking three hundred years. Pierre d'Ailly cites Albumasar, who says in his Magnae coniunctiones: "They said that the change shall come when ten revolutions of Saturn have been completed, and that the permutation of Saturn is particularly appropriate to the movable signs" (T 5, ==, Itf). According to Pierre d'Ailly, a Saturn period came to an end in 1 1 B.C., and he connects this with the appearance of Christ. Another period ended in A.D. 289; this he connects with Manichaeism.

The year 589 foretells Islam, and 1189 the significant reign of Pope Innocent III; 1489 announces a schism of the Church, and 1789 signalizes by inference the coming of the Antichrist. Fantasy could do the rest, for the archetype had long been ready and was only waiting for the time to be fulfilled. That a usurper from the North would seize power is easily understood when we consider that the Antichrist is something infernal, the devil or the devil's son, and is therefore Typhon or Set, who has his fiery abode in the North. Typhon's power is triadic, possessing two confederates, one in the East and one in the South. This power corresponds to the 'lower triad." Nostradamus, the learned physician and astrologer, would certainly have been familiar with the idea of the North as the region of the devil, unbelievers, and all things evil. The idea, as St. Eucherius of Lyons (d. 450) remarks, goes back to Jeremiah i : 14: "From the north shall an evil wind break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land/1 17 and other passages such as Isaiah 14 : igf.: How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God, I will sit on the mount of assembly in the far north.

The Benedictine monk Rhabanus Maurus (d. 856) says that "the north wind is the harshness of persecution" and "a figure of the old enemy." The north wind, he adds, signifies the devil, as is evident from Job 26 : 7: "He stretcheth out the north over the empty space, and hangeth the earth upon nothing." Rhabanus interprets this as meaning that "God allows the devil to rule the minds of those who are empty of his grace/21 St. Augustine says: "Who is that north wind, save him who said: I will set up my seat in the north, I will be like the most High? The devil held rule over the wicked, and possessed the nations," etc. The Victorine monk Garnerius says that the "malign spirit" was called Aquilo, the north wind. Its coldness meant the "frigidity of sinners." Adam Scotus imagined there was a frightful dragon's head in the north from which all evil comes. From its mouth and snout it emitted smoke of a triple nature, the "threefold ignorance, namely of good and evil, of true and false, of fitting and unfitting." "That is the smoke/says Adam Scotus, "which the prophet Ezekiel, in his vision of God, saw coming from the north," 2e the "smoke" of which Isaiah speaks. The pious author never stops to think how remarkable it is that the prophet's vision of God should be blown along on the wings of the north wind, wrapped in this devilish smoke of threefold ignorance. Where there is smoke, there is fire. Hence the "great cloud" had "brightness round about it, and fire flashing forth continually, and in the midst of the fire, as it were gleaming bronze." 2S The north wind comes from the region of fire and, despite its coldness, is a "ventus urens" (burning wind), as Gregory the Great calls it, referring to Job 27 : 2i.29 This wind is the malign spirit, "who rouses up the flames of lust in the heart" and kindles every living thing to sin. "Through the breath of evil incitement to earthly pleasures he makes the hearts of the wicked to burn." As Jeremiah 1:13 says, "I see a boiling pot, facing away from the north." In these quotations from Gregory we hear a faint echo of the ancient idea of the fire in the north, which is still very much alive in Ezekiel, whose cloud of fire appears from the north, whence "an evil shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land."

159 In these circumstances it is hardly surprising that Nostradamus warns against the usurper from the north when foretelling the coming of the Antichrist. Even before the Reformation the Antichrist was a popular figure in folklore, as the numerous editions of the "Entkrist" 31 in the second half of the fifteenth century show.This is quite understandable in view of the spiritual events then impending: the Reformation was about to begin. Luther was promptly greeted as the Antichrist, and it is possible that Nostradamus calls the Antichrist who was to appear after 1792 the "second Antichrist" because the first had already appeared in the guise of the German reformer, or much earlier with Nero or Mohammed. We should not omit to mention in this connection how much capital the Nazis made out of the idea that Hitler was continuing and completing the work of reformation which Luther had left only half finished.

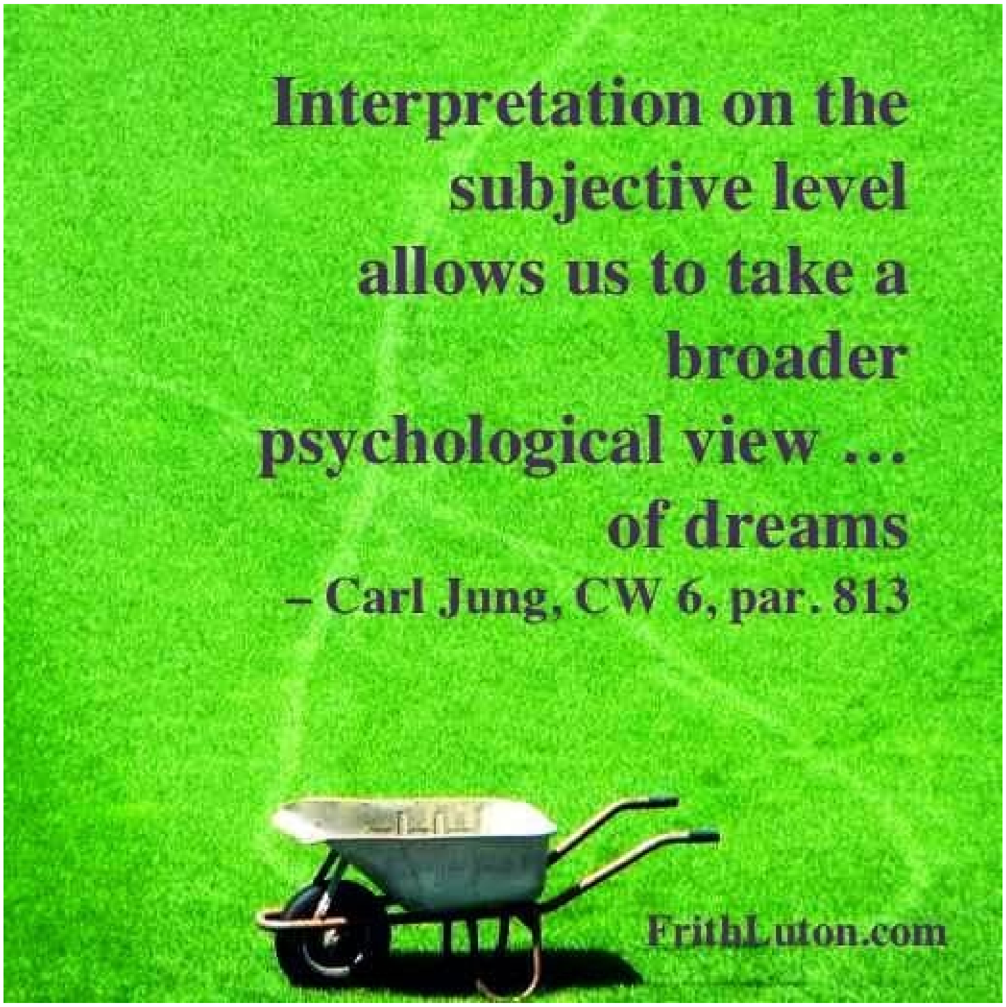
160 From the existing astrological data, therefore, and from the possibilities of interpreting them it was not difficult for Nostradamus to predict the imminent enantiodromia of the Christian aeon; indeed, by making this prediction, he placed himself firmly in the antichristian phase and served as its mouthpiece.

After this excursion, let us turn back to our fish symbolism. Carl Jung; Prophecies of Nostradamus; Psychology and Religion; Pages 95 -102

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/c/c6/Nostradamus_by_Cesar.jpg`

Carl Jung on the "Subjective Level." (2019-03-12 18:05)



Interpretation on the subjective level allows us to take a broader psychological view … of dreams
– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 813
FrithLuton.com

Subjective level:

The approach to dreams and other images where the persons or situations pictured are seen as symbolic representations of factors belonging entirely to the subject's own psyche.
Interpretation of an unconscious product on the subjective level reveals the presence of subjective judgments and tendencies of which the object is made the vehicle. When, therefore, an object-imago appears in an unconscious product, it is not on that account the image of a real object; it is far more likely that we are dealing with a subjective functional complex. Interpretation on the subjective level allows us to take a broader psychological view not only of dreams but also of literary works, in which the individual figures then appear as representatives of relatively autonomous functional complexes in the psyche of the author.["Definitions," CW 6, par. 813.]

In the analytic process, the main task after the reductive interpretation of images thrown up by the unconscious is to understand what they say about oneself.

To establish a really mature attitude, he has to see the subjective value of all these images which seem to create trouble for him. He has to assimilate them into his own psychology; he has to find out in what way they are part of himself; how he attributes for instance a positive value to an object, when as a matter of fact it is he who could and should develop this value. And in the same way, when he projects negative qualities and therefore hates and loathes the object, he has to discover that he is projecting his own inferior side, his shadow, as it were, because he prefers to have an optimistic and one-sided image of himself.["Definitions," CW 6, par. 813.]

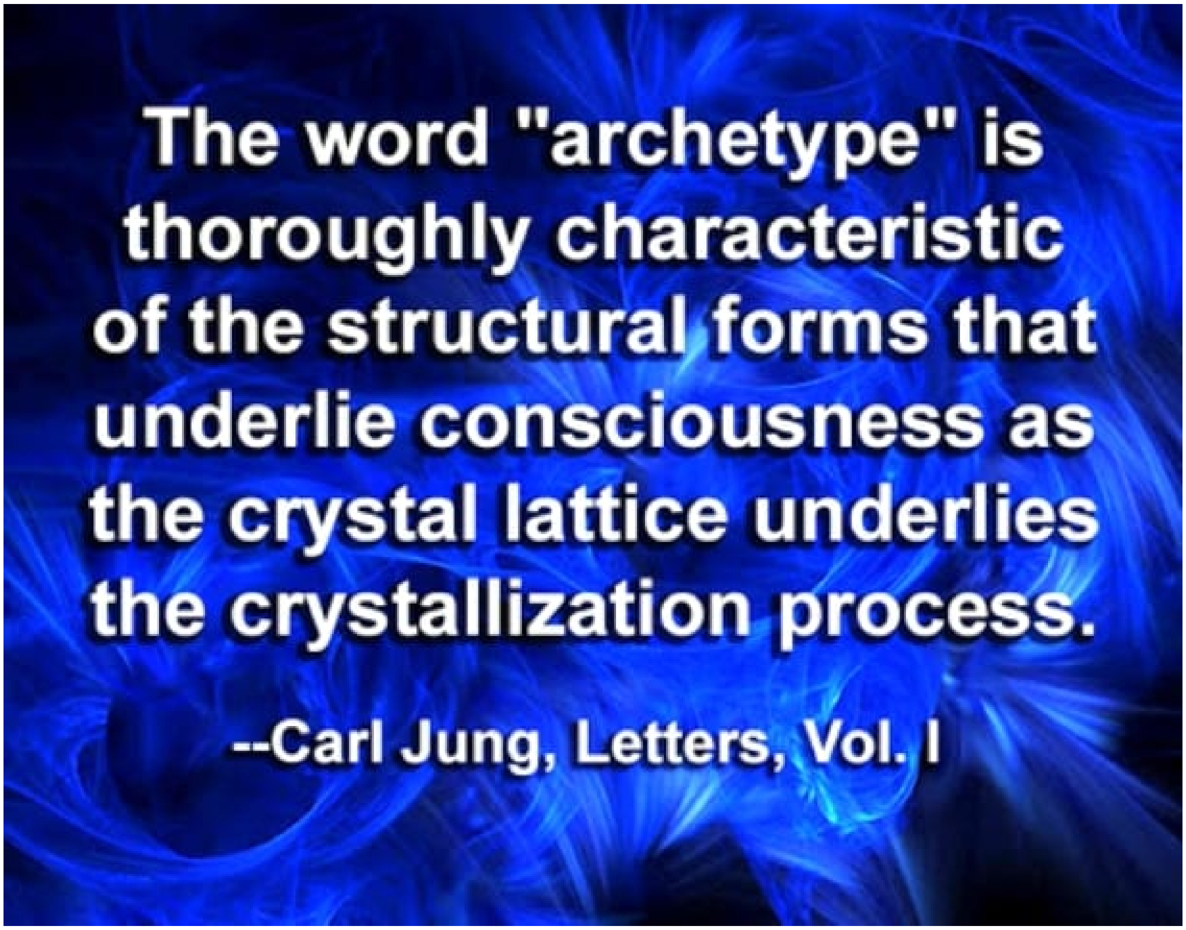
http://www.nyaap.org/jung-lexicon/s

http://frithluton.com/articles/objective-level-subjective-level/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/ff263-subjective.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Archetype of the Self (2019-03-12 18:37)

[1]



The word "archetype" is thoroughly characteristic of the structural forms that underlie consciousness as the crystal lattice underlies the crystallization process.

--Carl Jung, Letters, Vol. I

o Bernhard Milt

Dear Colleague, 13 April 1946

Very tardily I am at last getting down to answering your kind letter of 28 November 45.

By way of excuse I can only plead that I have not yet regained my former working capacity.

I beg you, therefore, to pardon my negligence.

You raise in your letter the question of the archetype of the self.

As you rightly suppose, this archetype is not so much a working hypothesis as something that is found.

There are, as I have shown for instance in Psychology and Alchemy with the help of empirical material, typical symbols in dreams which, faute de mieux, I have called symbols of wholeness or of the self.

I have also gone into the reasons for this nomenclature.

I have often asked myself whether the term "archetype" (primordial image) is a happy one.

In general I find it most disadvantageous to let neologisms run riot in any science.

The science then becomes too specialized in an unjustifiable way and loses contact with the world.

I therefore prefer to use terms that are also current in other fields, at the risk of provoking occasional misunderstandings.

For instance, Jakob Burckhardt applied the term "primordial image" to Faust and with every conceivable psychological justification.

Equally, I believe, the word "archetype" is thoroughly characteristic of the structural forms that underlie consciousness as the crystal lattice underlies the crystallization process.

I must leave it to the philosopher to hypostatize the archetype as the Platonic eidos.

He wouldn’t be so far from the truth anyway.

The expression is much older than Augustine.

It is found with a philosophical stamp as far back as the Corpus Hermeticum, where God is called the "archetypal light."

In Augustine, who was still a Platonist, the archetype has absolutely the connotation of a primordial image, and so far as it is meant Platonically it does not agree at all badly with the psychological version.

The old Platonic term differs from the psychological one only in that it was hypostatized, whereas our "hypostatization" is simply an empirical statement of fact without any metaphysical colouring.

Frischknecht is wrangling with me badly.

I get a letter from him from time to time. Recently I had to spell it out to him that the theologian looks at the world through the good Lord's eyes, but the scientist only through human eyes.

In his essay on Brother Klaus he has not even noticed that he has tacitly imputed to me Freud's personalistic standpoint, without remarking that this is just what I have been criticizing Freud for these last 30 years.

Basically I have every sympathy with the difficulties of the theologian.

It is no small matter to have to admit that in the end all dogmatic assertions are human statements-with, as I always emphasize, quite definite psychic experiences underlying them.

Considering the extraordinary difficulty of epistemological self-limitation it is really not surprising that any number of misunderstandings come about.

I am quite sure that if I had chosen any other term for the archetype, misunderstandings of another colour would have cropped up, but they would have cropped up anyhow.

With collegial regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 418-419

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/0d3d4-92blattice.jpg`

Carl Jung: The Jahrbuch affair is a private matter to be settled between myself and Freud. (2019-03-13 03:00)

[1]

To Alphonse Maeder

Dear Colleague, 29 October 1913

The Jahrbuch affair is a private matter to be settled between myself and Freud.

If the Zurich people are also affected by it, then it is very painful for me.

As you can well imagine, I am not giving up the Jahrbuch for fun but because it is impossible to collaborate with Freud's attitude.

I still have no news from Vienna.

But I shall take care to create for the Zurich people a new organ in the style of the Jahrbuch, perhaps called "Psychologische Untersuchungen. Works of the Zurich School of Psychoanalysis."

In the event, Deuticke is ready to accept it.

If our Works are dropped from the Jahrbuch, maybe the Jahrbuch will pack up too.

I have by no means walked into Freud's trap, for I consider it of no advantage to Freud to have sickened me off. ·

A committee of inquiry is out of the question, because the Jahrbuch is not after all run by a club and I won't collaborate with Freud any longer.

It will make a very bad impression all round.

But inner successes count more with me than the howling of the mob.

I shall soon be able to give you news of Deuticke and Freud, if the latter does not deem it beneath his papal dignity to answer me.

Yours sincerely,

JUNG Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 28

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b0c29-12bmaeder.jpg`

Carl Jung: I must confess that I am still in the dark on this score. (2019-03-13 03:30)

[1]
To Rudolf Allers

Dear Colleague, 13 November 1933

The reason why no communication has reached you concerning the state of affairs in Germany is that nobody was clear about what was happening and what is going to happen.

I will give you a brief description of how things stand at present.

The Zentralblatt1 is to continue.

As president of an international medical Society for Psychotherapy I am the more or less involuntary editor of this organ.

As such I would like to secure your valuable cooperation for the Zentralblatt in your former capacity as editor of the reviews section.

At present the Zentralblatt will have to consist mostly of reviews until conditions in Germany have become somewhat clearer.

The German section of the Society for Psychotherapy has been "gleichgeschaltet" [conformed] and placed under the direction of Prof.

Goring in Elberfeld. (G. is a cousin of the Prime Minister!)

As I was recently informed in Germany, all societies, advisory centres, and other medical organizations concerned with psychotherapy are to be under him.

Goring will also undertake the publication of a special German issue of the Zentralblatt, which is to express what psychotherapy signifies under the present political conditions in Germany.

I must confess that I am still in the dark on this score.

In Switzerland as well as in Holland and Sweden I have secured reviewers in order to ensure a tolerable continuance of the Zentralblatt.

It is not yet certain who will take over the editorship.

As the German section is by far the strongest, I thought of Cimbal or possibly Heyer in Munich.

A foreign editor, I fear, would in the present circumstances meet with not a few difficulties, because the German government, as you know, seems to like having the editors of all periodicals appearing in Germany in safe and uncomfortable proximity.

Otherwise I would have proposed you as editor.

I have written to Cimbal on this matter but so far have received no answer.

It must unquestionably be a "conformed" editor, as he would be in a far better position than I to have the right nose for what one can say and what not.

In any event it will be an egg-balancing dance.

Thank you very much for sending me the announcement of this new journal.

I have declined with thanks to cooperate because I propose to turn my interest more to the Zentralblatt.

Psychotherapy must see to it that it maintains its position inside the German Reich and does not settle outside it, regardless of how difficult its living conditions there may be.

Goring is a very amiable and reasonable man, so I have the best hopes for our cooperation.

As soon as I know more I will let you know.

Meanwhile with collegial regards,

Yours sincerely,

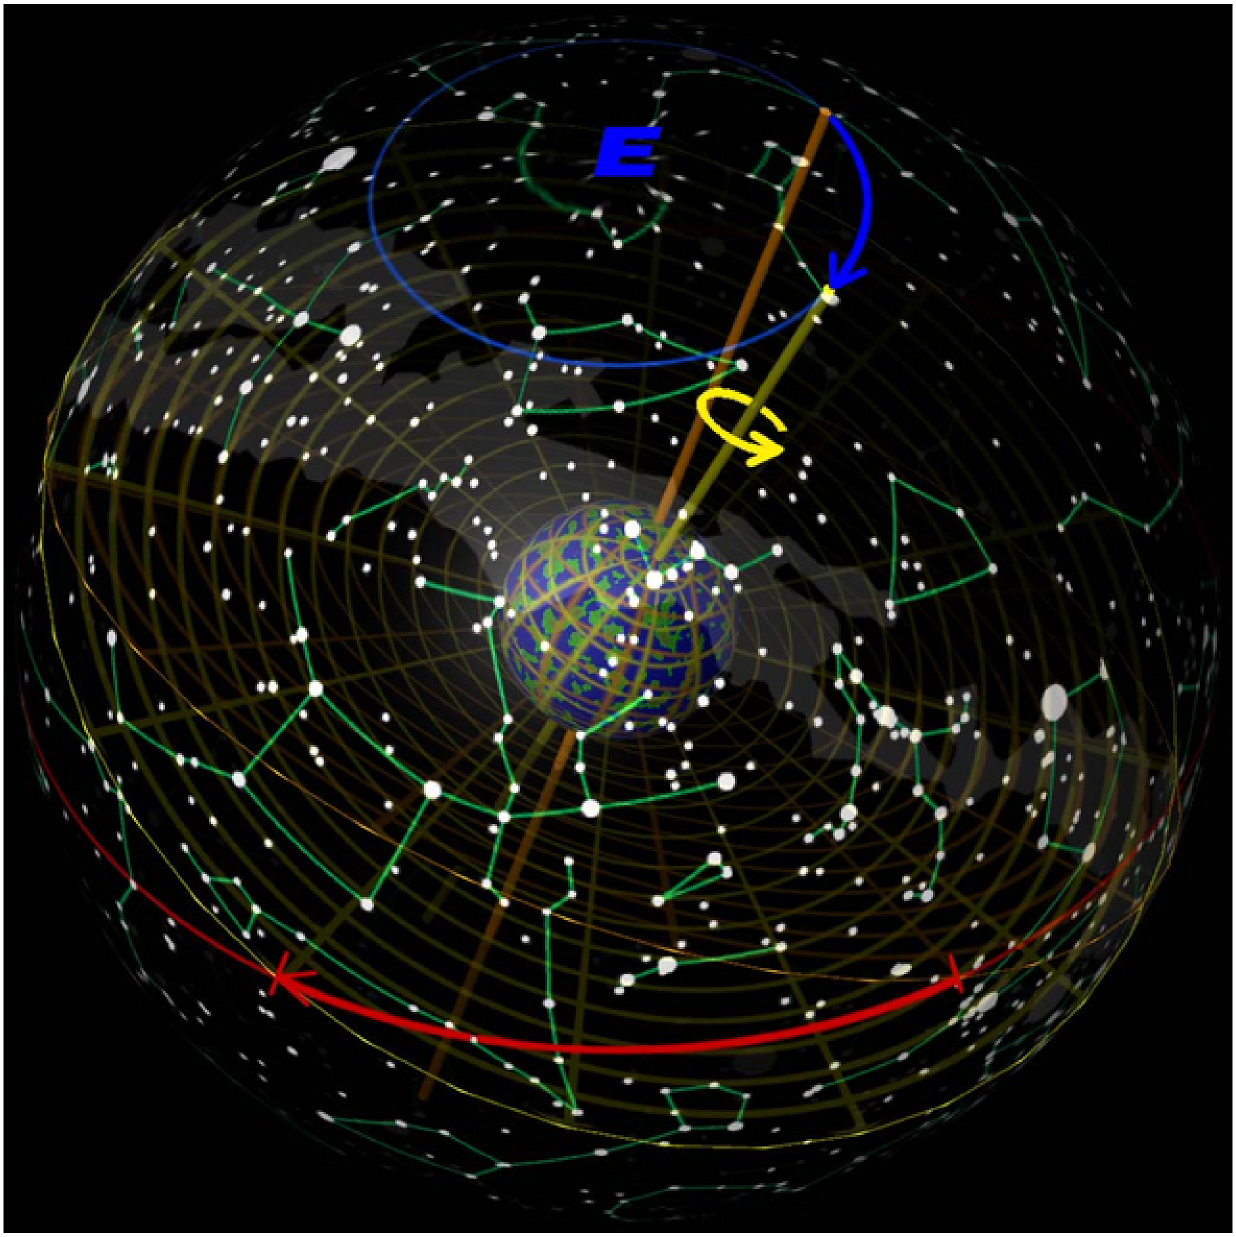
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 131-132

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/73ea2-12ballers.jpg`

Carl Jung: The secret powers of the sun are in Aries 1. (2019-03-13 03:30)

[1]



To B. Baur

Dear Dr. Baur, 29 January 1934

Best thanks for your kind information.

So far as the argument of the precession1is concerned, this is no objection to the validity of astrology but rather to the primitive theory that the stars themselves radiate certain effects.

The precession argument says that a person born today in Aries 1, when ostensibly Aries has risen one degree over the Eastern horizon, is not born at this point of time at all but in Pisces 1.

The secret powers of the sun are in Aries 1.

Moon for instance in Cancer 7, Venus, Jupiter in similar positions, are therefore not right astronomically and so cannot be derived from these merely apparent and arbitrarily fixed positions.

Choisnard quite correctly says: "Le belier reste toujours a la 12(partie du zodiaque," etc., obviously meaning that "sun in Aries" is not an astronomical statement but an indication of time.

It is "springtime" that contains the active forces no matter in which real astronomical zodion the sun is standing.

In a few thousand years, when we say it is Aries time, the sun will be in reality in Capricorn, a deep winter sign, though the spring will not have lost its powers.

The fact that astrology nevertheless yields valid results proves that it is not the apparent positions of the stars which work, but rather the times which are measured or determined by arbitrarily named stellar positions.

Time thus proves to be a stream of energy filled with qualities and not, as our philosophy would have it, an abstract concept or precondition of knowledge.

The validity of the results of the I Ching oracle points to the same peculiar fact.

Careful investigation of the unconscious shows that there is a peculiar coincidence with time, which is also the reason why the ancients were able to project the succession of unconsciously perceived inner contents into the outer astronomical determinants of time.

his is the basis for the connection of psychic events with temporal determinants.

So it is not a matter of an indirect connection, as you suppose, but of a direct one.

Conjunctions, oppositions, etc. are not in the least affected by the fact that we arbitrarily designate Pisces 1 as Aries 1.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 138-139

[2]

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bdb01-12bbaur.jpg`
2. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/`

Carl Jung: The real individuality does not show, or it only shows by its absence. (2019-03-13 03:30)

[1]

Dr. Jung:

Yes.

To wear particularly individual hats and neckties, for instance, is personal.

The real individuality does not show, or it only shows by its absence.

If it is expressed by curiosities or peculiarities, you are simply not yourself, then you have delegated it, projected it into an external appearance, so the symbol of individuality is left to the animus.

And then you can be sure that the animus will misbehave; that is, theperson herself will play an utterly collective role with fits of individualistic animus, when the animus suddenly jumps out and talks rot.

It might be analytical rot, making himself important with apparent knowledge, or with a missionary attitude, or in brooding on circumstances, knowing everything better of course, having known everything long before.

This kind of animus indicates a most unfortunate condition, yet sadly enough, it is very frequent.

Hardly anybody gets through an analysis without going through a stage when the whole thing is delegated to the animus; then the mouth is full while the heart is empty.

Dr. Barker: What would be the corresponding mechanism in a man? Does his anima have an animus?

Dr. Jung: Oh heavens, even that!

If the anima is exaggerated and luxuriant she even develops a particular animus, and then a man talks fearful rot; if he has a mind he can prevent it, but if it is a very powerful anima, he will be subject to all sorts of anima illusions.

At a certain stage, analysis sometimes has a softening influence, a man is then in danger of being far too much swayed by his feelings, so that his judgment suffers.

And on account of that he may develop a megalomania and a corresponding system of persecution ideas, the idea that he is a great genius who should have been discovered long ago, for instance, and the cruel world does not recognize the fact.

But the effect with a man is not so conspicuous, because through the influence of the anima he becomes peculiarly inconspicuous.

You see a man is meant to be conspicuous, he is meant by nature to have multicolored feathers, to crow and make a great noise, but when the anima gets at him, he becomes personal and is apt to lose himself in mouse holes.

Instead of perching on the dung heap and showing his feathers, he is lost in all sorts of little corners and practically disappears.

He grows effeminate through the influence of the anima and is a bundle of nerves and sensitiveness, all sorts of foolish reactions and moods; he weeps a good deal and such stuff, and he suddenly drops out of things in a funny way, nobody sees him any longer.

You may discover him somewhere with drooping feathers, being offended or misunderstood.

He becomes peculiarly uninteresting, something poor and lamentable, unless he falls into a wild emotion, and then he makes a great noise but in the wrong way so that everybody laughs at him.

He is a little tyrant at home and perfectly ridiculous abroad.

While, quite the contrary, at a certain stage of analysis, a woman becomes conspicuous; a former nice humble woman apparently-for nobody hears what she has been saying to her husband-will suddenly talk a great deal in an assembly of men and become conspicuous for mannishness. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 1219-11220

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/83532-12bcraig.jpg`

Carl Jung: I have often expressed this problem in another, somewhat grotesque way. (2019-03-13 03:30)

[1]

Mrs. Pierz: Is it not perhaps that in going down into the ghost land, this schizophrenic effect would be produced by the loss of value on the ego complex? That is to say, there is no longer an ego center, and according to the picture, it is the Self that steps into the center of the mandala. So the Self becomes the center of the whole system, and that is the protective effect.

Dr. Jung:

Yes, it is as if the egocentricity-the ego as the center of the psychical system, that is-were too weak by itself to resist the dismembering or schizophrenic effect of the unconscious.

But when the Self steps into the center, it would be the equivalent of that dismembering power of the unconscious, it would be a Titan against Titans.

Of course, in formulating the thing like that, we are still moving in the field of mythological expression, we use symbols or mythological metaphors.

If you try to reduce it to psychological common sense, you might say that if you are in a situation which is quite impossible looked at from a collective point of view, where collectively you could not possibly see a way out, the Self would find the way.

But that is still mythological.

Or you can say there is an individual way which is not law abiding-in this particular case there is a particular hole through which you get out of the situation.

You can also say that there are certain situations into which anybody can get, but there is one individual path or individual hole into which you fit, you particularly, nobody else, and you naturally get into that.

I have often expressed this problem in another, somewhat grotesque way.

You see, one is always inclined to handle a psychological problem from the standpoint of the eleven thousand virgins-what would the eleven thousand virgins do?

That is like asking what all humanity can do.

They can do nothing at all.

Things will remain the same forever if a problem is looked at in that way; it is simply postponed or put onto other people.

That we think in terms of statistical numbers is the contemporary prejudice, our particular insanity; we think how a certain individual problem could be solved as a sort of mass production, as if it were manufactured in a factory.

We have so many virgins too many, and now what are we going to do about them?

Or what shall they do?

Nobody can say.

Yet we want to erect a factory in which the solution is manufactured as a standard model and handed out to a million virgins, which is of course absolutely wrong.

The problem is always this particular girl in the particular situation in which she finds herself, with such and such qualities, such and such conditions in general and in particular, and she will do such and such a thing which will eventually settle her and in the end she will be buried.

Then that case is settled.

And what takes place on the way is her own business, it has nothing to do with the ten thousand nine hundred ninety-nine other virgins.

Not as a standard article, or by a general description, but by the individuality of the case is the problem answered.

All the talk of a general solution, a sociological solution, for instance, is bunk; nobody will do anything about it, nobody can do anything about it, it will always be the same.

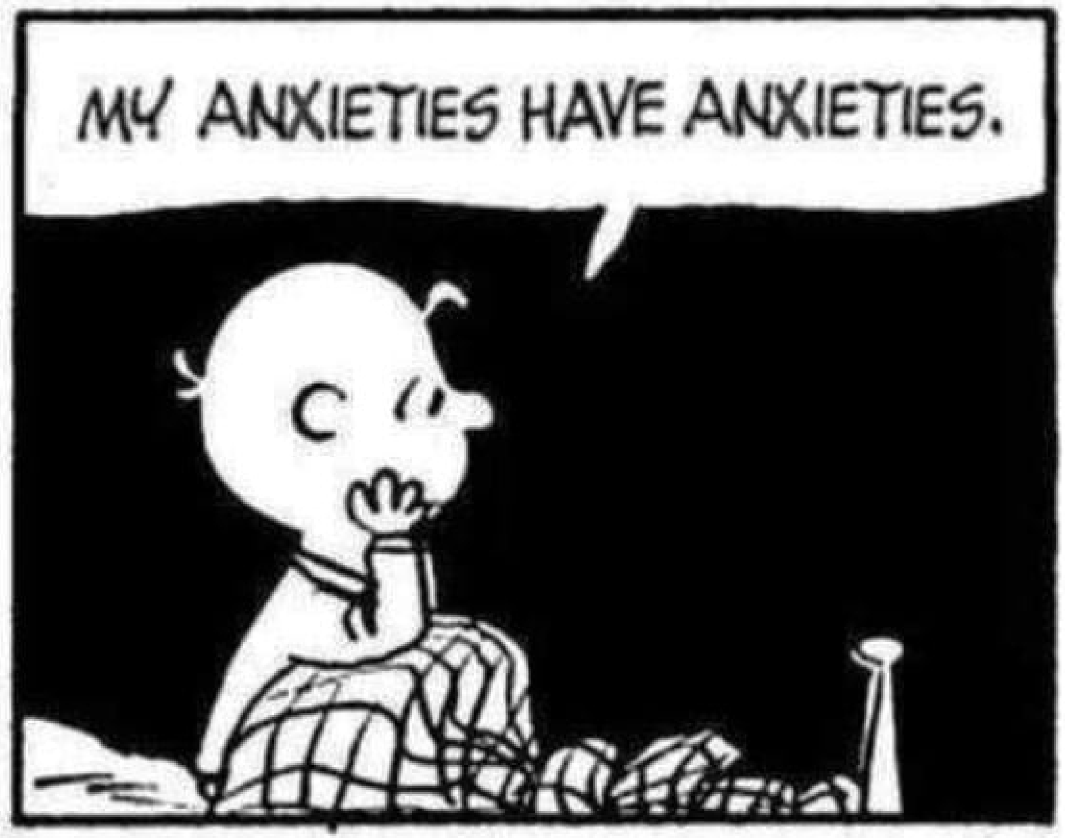
We can only ask ourselves what can be done when this particular girl gets into trouble, or out of trouble-for some suffer because there is too little trouble and others suffer because there is too much of it.

This is the only way to deal with the problem, it is quite certain that there is no general solution. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 1287-1288

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/af5fa-12bvirgin.jpg`

Carl Jung: The neurotic constitution demands a bit more sacrifice (2019-03-13 03:30)

[1]



MY ANXIETIES HAVE ANXIETIES.

Anonymous

Dear Dr. N., 3 August 1918

Naturally I am overjoyed to hear of your success.

Don't let it upset you that you needed not only a good deal of time but also a bad attack of exam fright to reach this goal.

The neurotic constitution demands a bit more sacrifice and a bit more effort and a bit more patience than does the normal.

In return this moral seriousness is rewarded, whether by outward successes or by the blessing of deepened insight into the world and the soul.

The rebellions of the evil spirit are also valuable experiences which strengthen one's patience and perseverance if, as you have done, one has taken the trouble to prove to oneself that the expenditure of effort is its own reward.

From the bottom of my heart I wish you every success in the future.

With best regards to yourself and your wife,

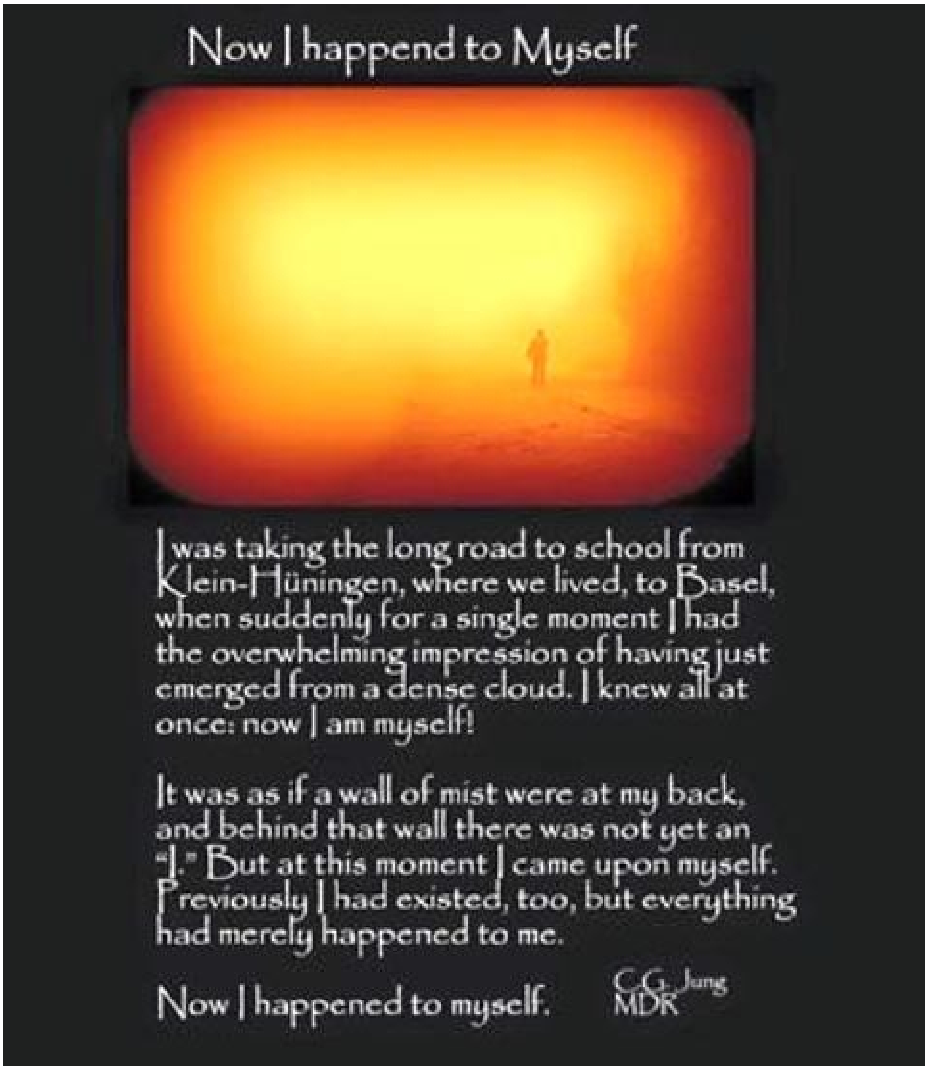
Yours sincerely,

Dr. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 35-36

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2b748-12banxieties.jpg`

Carl Jung: Now I happened to myself. Now I knew: I am myself now, now I exist. (2019-03-13 03:30)

[1]



Now I happend to Myself

I was taking the long road to school from Klein-Hüningen, where we lived, to Basel, when suddenly for a single moment I had the overwhelming impression of having just emerged from a dense cloud. I knew all at once: now I am myself!

It was as if a wall of mist were at my back, and behind that wall there was not yet an "I." But at this moment I came upon myself. Previously I had existed, too, but everything had merely happened to me.

Now I happened to myself. C.G. Jung MDR

I had another important experience at about this time.

I was taking the long road to school from Klein-Hiiningen, where we lived, to Basel, when suddenly for a single moment I had the overwhelming impression of having just emerged from a dense cloud.

I knew all at once: now I am myself!

It was as if a wall of mist were at my back, and behind that wall there was not yet an "I."

But at this moment I came upon myself.

Previously I had existed, too, but everything had merely happened to me.

Now I happened to myself.

Now I knew: I am myself now, now I exist.

Previously I had been willed to do this and that; now I willed.

This experience seemed to me tremendously important and new: there was "authority" in me.

Curiously enough, at this time and also during the months of my fainting neurosis I had lost all memory of the treasure in the attic.

Otherwise I would probably have realized even then the analogy between my feeling of authority and the feeling of value which the treasure inspired in me.

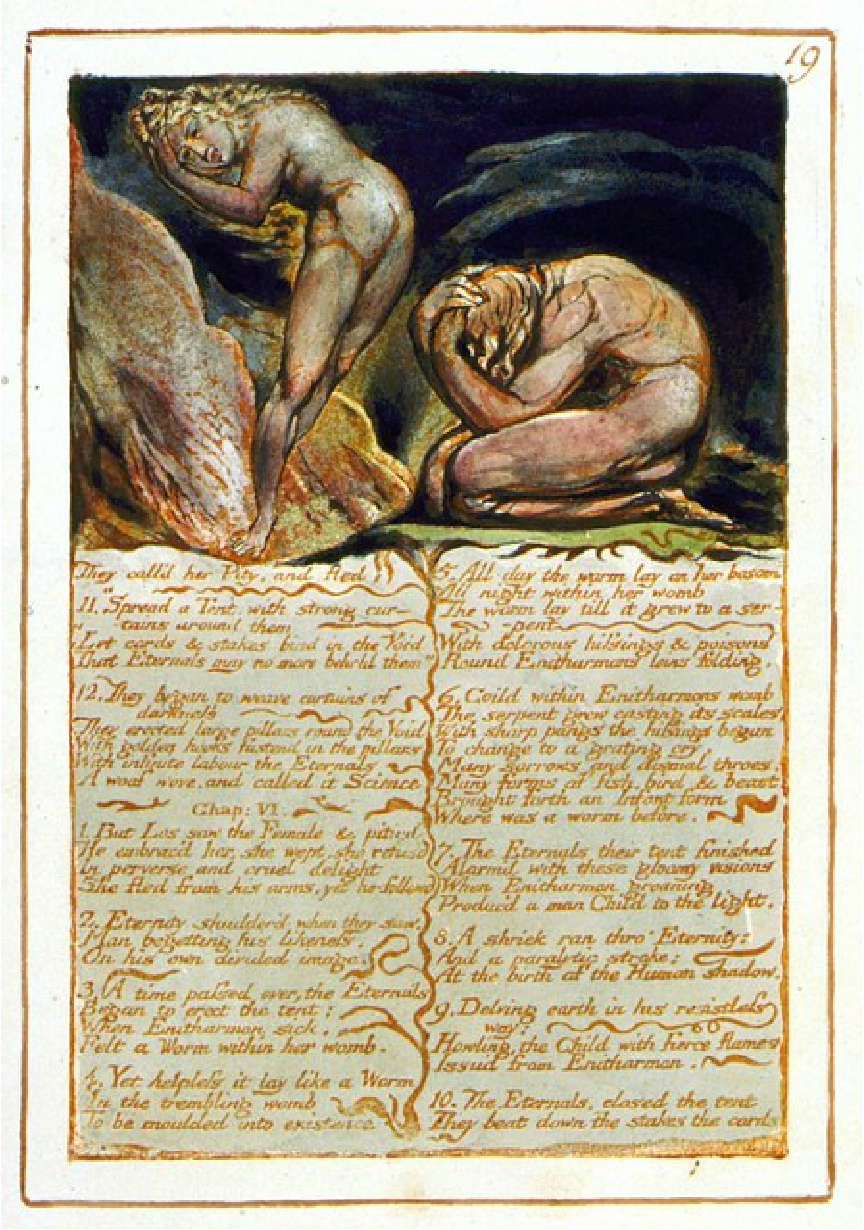
But that was not so; all memory of the pencil case had vanished. Carl Jung, MDR, Pages 32-33

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6df0c-12bhappened.jpg`

BLAKE & INDIVIDUATION (2019-03-13 03:38)

BLAKE & INDIVIDUATION

[1]



19

They call'd her Pity, and fled
11. "Spread a Tent, with strong curtains around them
Let cords & stakes bind in the Void
That Eternals may no more behold them"

12. They began to weave curtains of darkness
They erected large pillars round the Void
With golden hooks fastend in the pillars
With infinite labour the Eternals
A woof wove, and called it Science

Chap: VI.

1. But Los saw the Female & pitied
He embrac'd her, she wept, she refus'd
In perverse and cruel delight
She fled from his arms, yet he follow'd

2. Eternity shudder'd when they saw,
Man begetting his likeness,
On his own divided image.

3. A time passed over, the Eternals
Began to erect the tent;
When Enitharmon sick,
Felt a Worm within her womb.

4. Yet helpless it lay like a Worm
In the trembling womb
To be moulded into existence

5. All day the worm lay on her bosom
All night within her womb
The worm lay till it grew to a serpent
With dolorous hissings & poisons
Round Enitharmons loins folding.

6. Coild within Enitharmons womb
The serpent grew casting its scales,
With sharp pangs the hissings began
To change to a grating cry
Many sorrows and dismal throes,
Many forms of fish, bird & beast,
Brought forth an Infant form
Where was a worm before.

7. The Eternals their tent finished
Alarm'd with these gloomy visions
When Enitharmon groaning
Produc'd a man Child to the light.

8. A shriek ran thro' Eternity:
And a paralytic stroke;
At the birth of the Human shadow.

9. Delving earth in his resistless way;
Howling, the Child with fierce flames
Issu'd from Enitharmon.

10. The Eternals, closed the tent
They beat down the stakes the cords

Image from Book of Urizen
'Eternity shutter'd when they saw Man begatting his likeness
On his own divided image."

The process of individuation was developed by Carl Jung to make the unconscious known to the conscious mind in order to reveal the whole person. It has been called a process of self-actualization.

Claire Dunne, who wrote Carl Jung, Wounded Healer of the Soul, explains individuation thus:

"Individuation is the experience of a natural law, an inner self-regulating process by which man becomes a whole human being acknowledging and living the total range of himself. In the process the ego is ultimately faced with something larger than itself, a force that it yields to and serves. The human being thus recognizes itself as both material and spiritual, conscious and unconscious." (Page 61)

She quotes Jung in this statement on Page 62:

"Individuation does not only mean that man has become truly human as distinct from animal, but that he is to become partially divine as well. That means practically that he becomes adult, responsible for his existence, knowing that he does not only depend on God but that God also depends on man." (L2, P316, letter to Elined Kotschnig)

Jung's process of individuation involves the willingness to recognize components of the unconscious, to look at how they they relate to the conscious mind and integrate then into a whole which is larger than the ego's domain. Blake describes the recognition of multiple internal forces which must be acknowledged and assimilated into a functioning whole. Both men are preoccupied with the process of taking apart the buried influences which direct and control the outer man and reassembling them consciously into a true man in touch with the Totality beyond the individual.

The dividing, subduing, and restoring is repeated in Blake uncountable times; here's one example:

Jerusalem, PLATE 17, (E 161)
"His Spectre divides & Los in fury compells it to divide:
To labour in the fire, in the water, in the earth, in the air,
To follow the Daughters of Albion as the hound follows the scent
Of the wild inhabitant of the forest, to drive them from his own:
To make a way for the Children of Los to come from the Furnaces
But Los himself against Albions Sons his fury bends, for he Dare not approach the Daughters openly lest he be consumed
In the fires of their beauty & perfection & be Vegetated beneath
Their Looms, in a Generation of death & resurrection to forgetfulness
They wooe Los continually to subdue his strength: he continually
Shews them his Spectre: sending him abroad over the four points of heaven
In the fierce desires of beauty & in the tortures of repulse! He is The Spectre of the Living pursuing the Emanations of the Dead.
Shuddring they flee: they hide in the Druid Temples in cold chastity:
Subdued by the Spectre of the Living & terrified by undisguisd desire.

For Los said: Tho my Spectre is divided: as I am a Living Man
I must compell him to obey me wholly: that Enitharmon may not Be lost: & lest he should devour Enitharmon: Ah me!
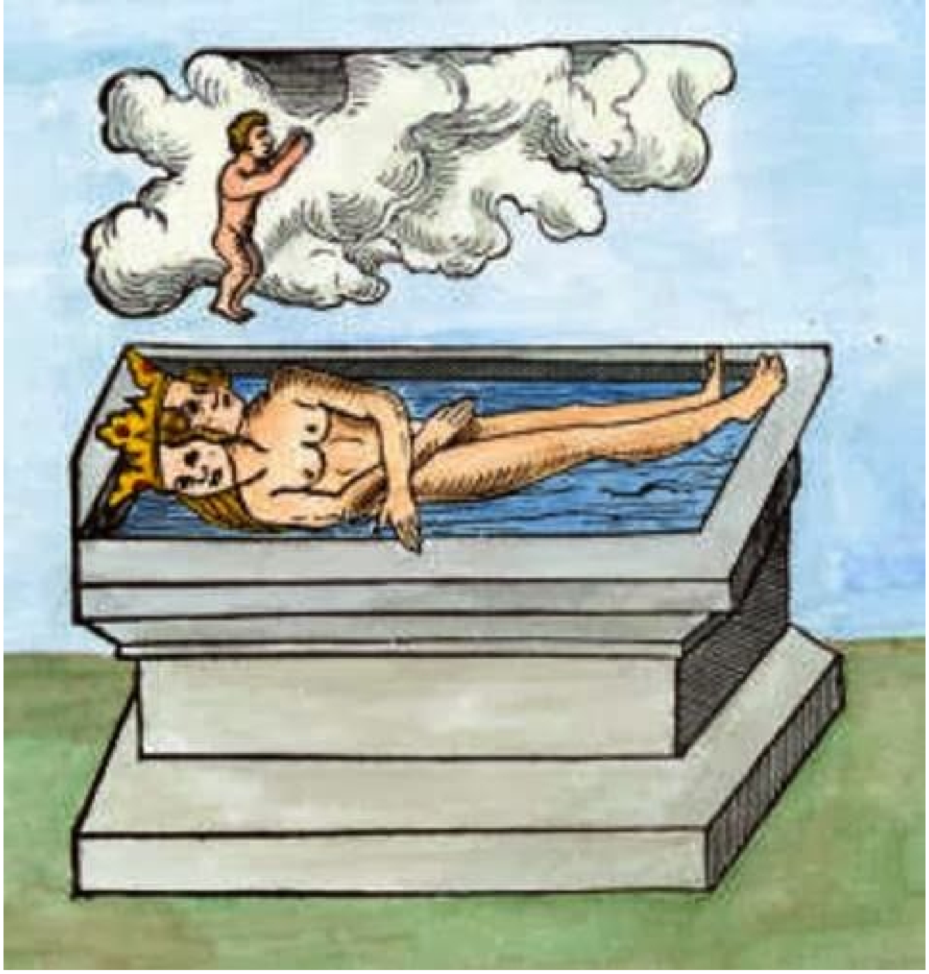
Piteous image of my soft desires & loves: O Enitharmon!
I will compell my Spectre to obey: I will restore to thee thy Children.
No one bruises or starves himself to make himself fit for labour!"

[2]

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/7/75/Book_of_Urizen_copy_G_plate_19.jpg`
2. `http://ramhornd.blogspot.com/2010/11/image-from-book-of-urizen-eternity.html`

Carl Jung on the "Subtle Body" (2019-03-13 03:53)

[1]



Subtle body:

The somatic unconscious, a transcendental concept involving the relationship between mind and body.

The part of the unconscious which is designated as the subtle body becomes more and more identical with the functioning of the body, and therefore it grows darker and darker and ends in the utter darkness of matter. . . . Somewhere our unconscious becomes material, because the body is the living unit, and our conscious and our unconscious are embedded in it: they contact the body. Somewhere there is a place where the two ends meet and become interlocked. And that is the [subtle body] where one cannot say whether it is matter, or what one calls "psyche."["Nietzsche's Zarathustra," vol. 1, p. 441.]

[2]

[Carl Jung on Imagination, Subtle Body, Opus]

Ruland says, “Imagination is the star in man. The celestial or super-celestial body.”

This astounding definition throws a quite special light on the fantasy processes connected with the “opus.”

We have to conceive of these processes not as the immaterial phantoms we readily take fantasy-pictures to be, but as something corporeal, a “subtle body” (fig. 139), semi-spiritual in nature.

In an age when there was as yet no empirical psychology such a concretization was bound to be made, because everything unconscious, once it was activated, was projected into matter that is to say, it approached people from outside.

It was a hybrid phenomenon, As it were, half spiritual, half-physical, a concretization such as we frequently encounter in the psychology of primitives.

The “imagination”, or the act of imagining, was thus a physical activity that could be fitted into the cycle of material changes, that brought these about and was brought about by them in turn.

In this way the alchemist related himself not only to the unconscious but directly to the very substance which he hoped to transform through the power of imagination.

The singular expression “astrum” (star) is a Paracelsan term, which in this context means something like “quintessence.”

Imagination is therefore a concentrated extract of the life forces, both physical and psychic.

So the demand that the artifex must have a sound physical constitution is quite intelligible, since he works with and through his own quintessence and is himself the indispensable condition of his own experiment.

But, just because of this intermingling of the physical and the psychic, it always remains an obscure point whether the ultimate transformations in the alchemical process are to be sought more in the material or in the spiritual realm.

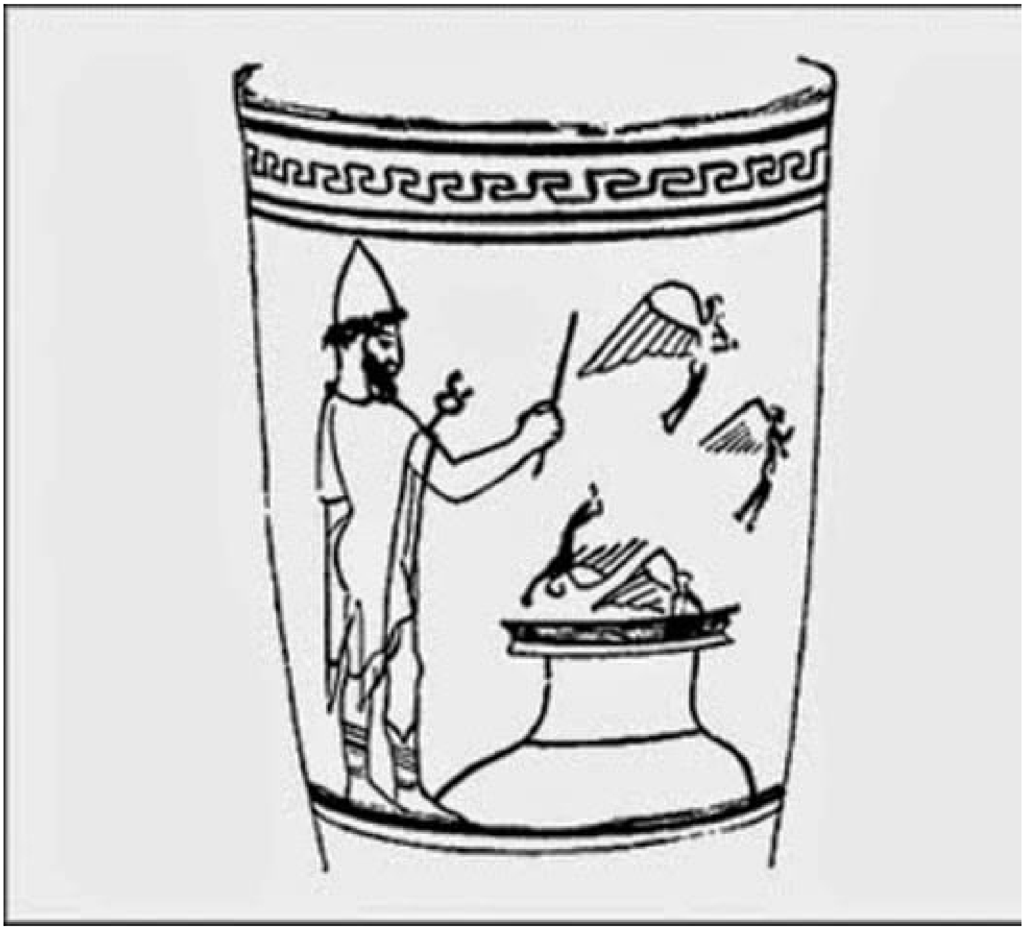
Actually, however, the question is wrongly put: there was no “either-or” for that age, but there did exist an intermediate realm between mind and matter, i.e., a psychic realm of subtle bodies whose characteristic it is to manifest themselves as well as a material form.

This is the only view that makes sense of alchemical ways of thought, which must otherwise appear nonsensical.

Obviously, the existence of this intermediate realm comes to a sudden stop the moment we try to investigate matter in and for itself, apart from all projection; and it remains non-existent so long as we believe we know anything conclusive about matter of the psyche.

But the moment when physics touches on the “untrodden, untreadible regions,” and when psychology has at the same time to admit that there are other forms of psychic life besides the acquisitions of personal consciousness-in other words, when psychology too touches on an impenetrable darkness-then the intermediate realm of subtle bodies comes to life again, and the physical and the psychic are once more blended in an indissoluble unity. We have come very near to this turning-point today. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Paragraph 394.

The concept of “imagination” is perhaps the most important key to understanding the opus. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Paragraph 395.



Pastor Fritz Pfafflin [On communication with Pastor Pfafflin’s recently deceased brother]

Dear Pastor Pfafflin,

First of all I would like to express my heartfelt sympathy over the heavy loss that has befallen you.

Since you wish to know what I think about such experiences, I would like to point out before anything else that there was a direct connection between the event in Africa and your consciousness. This is an undeniable fact and in my opinion there is only one explanations, namely that spatial distance is, in the psychic sense, relative. In other words, physical space is not under all circumstances a definite datum but under certain conditions is also a psychic function. One might call it psychically contractile. We must suppose that the distance between your brother’s experience and your own was reduced to a minimum.

From similar experiences we must conclude that this nullification of space proceeds with great speed, so that perceptions of this kind occur almost simultaneously with the accident. We can therefore speak of a psychic nullification of time as well. We could also suppose that the victim of the accident sent out a kind of radio message. But this is contradicted by the fact that occasionally details are “transmitted” which occurred only after the death—for instance, the decapitation of the body of one killed being stabbed with a knife. In that event there can be no question of a transmission by a dying man. It is more probable that it is a perception by someone alive and seeing.

Hence the psychic nullification of space and time offers a much better explanation. Accordingly the capacity to nullify space and time mush somehow inhere in the psyche, or, to put it another way, the psyche does not exist wholly in time and space. It is very probable that only what we call consciousness is contained in space and time, and that the rest of the psyche, the unconscious, exists in a state of relative spacelessness and timelessness. For the psyche this means a relative externality and a relative non-separation from other psyches, or a oneness with them. It is characteristic that your brother was amazed when you asked him whether he had sent you a message. Obviously he had not sent a message because the relative non-existence of space and time made it unnecessary. (I have expressed similar thoughts in my essay "The Soul and Death" in "On Life After Death."

Now with regard to the exceedingly interesting conversation you had post mortem with your brother, it has all the characteristic features of these experiences. For one thing, there is the peculiar preoccupation of the dead with the psychic states of other (dead) persons. For another, the existence of (psychic) shrines or places of healing. I have long though that religious institutions, churches, monasteries, temples, etc. as well as rites and psycho therapeutic attempts at healing were modeled on (transcendental) post mortal psychic states—a real Ecclesia Spirtualis as the prototype of the Una Sancta upon earth.

In the East these ideas would be by no means unheard-of; Buddhist philosophy, for instance, has coined the concept of Sambhoga-Kaya for this psychic existence, namely the world of subtle forms which are to Nirmana-Kaya as the breath-body (subtle body) is to the material body. The breath-world is thought of as an intermediate state between Nirmana-Kaya and Dharma-Kaya. In Dharma-Kaya, which symbolizes the highest state, the separation of forms is dissolved into absolute unity and formlessness. These formulations are extremely valuable from the psychological point of view as they provide a fitting terminology for such experiences.

Naturally we can form not conception of a relatively timeless and space-less existence, but, psychologically and empirically, it results in manifestations of the continual presence of the dead and their influence on our dream life. I therefore follow up such experiences with the greatest attention, because they show many things we dream about in a very peculiar light, where "psychological" structures appears as existential conditions. This continual presence is also only relative, since after a few weeks or months the connection becomes indirect or breaks off altogether, although spontaneous re-encounters also appear to be possible later. But after this period the feeling of the presence of the dead is in fact broken off.

The connection is not without its dangers because it entangles the consciousness of the living too much in that transcendental state, resulting in unconsciousness and dissociation phenomena. This is reflected in your dream-vision of the path leading down to a lake (the unconscious). There is an ant-heap, i.e., the sympathetic nervous system (=deepest unconsciousness and danger of dissolution of psychic elements in the form of milling ants) is becoming activated. This state takes place in you, consequently the connection is in danger of being broken, hence your brother's admonition: "Always build on the heights!" i.e. on the heights of consciousness. "For us the depth is doom," i.e. unconsciousness is doom. Then we get into the "clouds" where one sees nothing more.

The remarkable, statement that "Someone was interested in the motor cutting out" could indicate that among the crew there was someone who, through and exteriorization effect, actually caused the motor to cut out and did so because of an unrealized suicide complex. (I have seen quite a number of such effects in my time.)

With regard to contact with your brother, I would add that this is likely to be possible only as long as the feeling of the presence of the dead continues. But it should not be experimented with because of the danger of a disintegration of consciousness. To be on the safe side, one must be content with spontaneous experiences. Experimenting with this contact regularly leads either to the so-called communications becoming more and more stupid or to a dangerous dissociation of consciousness.

All the signs indicate that your conversation with your brother is a genuine experience which cannot be "psychologized." The only "psychological" disturbance in it is the lake and the ant-heap. That was evidently the moment when, perhaps from both sides, the exceedingly difficult contact between the two forms of existence could no longer be maintained. There are experiences which show that the dead entangle themselves, so to speak, in the physiology (sympathetic nervous system) of the living. This would probably result in states of possession.

Again wish especial thanks for your extremely interesting letter,

Yours sincerely, C.G. Jung [Letter written 10January1939]

Notes:

1. Pastor Pfafflin had lost his brother in an accident in Africa. At the time of the accident he spontaneously experienced a conversation with this brother. The content of the conversation has not been preserved.

2. The universal Essence manifests itself in three divine bodies (Tri-Kaya): Dharma-Kaya, the body of the law; Sambhoga-Kaya, the body of bliss, or reflected wisdom; Nirmana-Kaya, the body of incarnation, or incarnate wisdom. Cf. Evans-Wentz, The Tibetan Book of the Great Liberation, pp. 3-4, 178, n.i.

http://www.nyaap.org/jung-lexicon/s

http://www.alchemywebsite.com/virtual _museum/rosarium _philosophorum _room.html

Images:

1. Image from Rosarium Philosophorum

2. Rising of Osiris

3. Image: Hermes conjuring the winged soul out of an urn.-Attic funeral lekythos (Figure 139 in Psychology and Alchemy)

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/686e2-rising.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/f2e3e-egypt.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/5a9c6-hermes.jpeg`

Carl Jung on "God" - YouTube Video (2019-03-13 04:30)

"God wants to be born in the flame of man's consciousness...
God needs man in order to become conscious, just as he needs limitation in time and space.
Let us therefore be for him limitation in time and space, an earthly tabernacle."

Carl Jung

Below is a link to a YouTube Video:

[1]Carl Jung on "God" - YouTube Video

1. `https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=0twgYcVtvG0`

Carl Jung on the "Soul" - YouTube Video (2019-03-13 04:31)

This is my first attempt at a YouTube Video.

[1]Carl Jung on the "Soul" YouTube Video

It is a tad amateurish and rough but like wine future presentations will improve with time.

1. `https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jIeLBOryFr0&t=64s`

Carl Jung on Time, Disturbances and Systems of Yoga in Creativity (2019-03-13 05:28)

[1]

"A person must pay dearly for the divine gift of creative fire."
Carl Jung
Joseph Wright
www.jungcurrents.com

Emil A. Fischer: How important is the time factor in your scientific activity? Isn't it a great strain for you to work both as an analyst and as a research scientist?

Dr. Jung: My time has always been divided.

Either I dealt with patients, or I did research work.

For a time, I used to see patients only in the afternoons. The mornings were devoted to scientific work.
In earlier years I worked a lot at night, especially during the first World War.

Until the middle of my life I worked chiefly in the morning, and after I was 36, chiefly in the afternoon.

In the last ten years I've turned again to working in the morning.

Emil A. Fischer: How do you react to disturbances?

Some occultist authors recommend that their adepts go into retreat to enhance their energies. Do you think that creative energy grows as a result of isolation?

Dr. Jung: The energy is there, but I must have the possibility of "casting my net." Once I have all the material, nothing and nobody must get near.
I am not as sensitive to noise as Carlyle, who installed triple glass windows and saw to it that all the fowl and dogs near his property were bought up.

But when I am in the active creative process, any disturbance is downright physically painful.

I have a little house at Bollingen, to which I retreat and where I can work undisturbed when my notes and preparatory studies have reached the stage where I can start writing.

Emil A. Fischer: Do some Yoga systems offer the possibility of developing one’s creative energies?

Dr. Jung: Yoga can liberate certain psychic contents and natural dispositions but it cannot produce them. You can’t make something out of nothing, not even with will-power.
And what is will-power?

To have will-power means that you have a lot of drive. Creativeness is drive!

A creative calling is like a daimonion, which, in some instances, can ruin a person’s entire life.Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 164-167

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/605f3-12byoga.jpg`

Carl Jung “On Creative Achievement” (2019-03-13 05:33)

[1]

Introduction: Emil A. Fischer undertook to interview twenty Swiss men and women prominent in cultural life, and he published the resulting articles in a small book entitled Schopferische Leistung (Thalwil, i946)—"Creative Achievement."

Fischer began his conversation by asking Jung about "the strange aphorism that is carved into stone above the entrance door of the house:Vocatus atque non vocatus deus aderit."

This was an opening that interviewers often hit upon. Jung had the inscription carved over the door when he built the house, in 1909.

It came from an old copy of Erasmus that he had bought while a university student.

Emil A. Fischer: Is there any special relationship between this saying and your Weltanschauung or your life's work?

Dr. Jung: "Called or uncalled, God is present!" It is a Delphic oracle. The translation is by Erasmus.

You ask whether the oracle is my motto.

In a way, you see, it contains the entire reality of the psyche. "Oh God!" is what we say, irrespective of whether we say it by way of a curse or by way of love.

Isn't the psyche of the artist and the intellectual particularly complex and worthy of closer consideration? So far, too much one-sided attention has been focused on the morbid aspect of the matter.

I wonder why there is so much nonsensical theorizing about the pathology of outstanding people.

Most psychopaths are not geniuses; and on the other hand there are many geniuses who do not show the slightest traces of pathology.

What is much more significant in this context is the shadow! It is important to see also the negative sides of great men.
On Palm Sunday, Christ temporarily played the role of a political Messiah.

His negative side and his power are symbolically displayed in the temptation by the Devil. Biographies should show people in their undershirts.
Goethe had his weaknesses, and Calvin was often cruel. Considerations of this kind reveal the true greatness of a man. This way of looking at things is better than false hero worship!

Emil A. Fischer: Where do you get the incentive for your creative work, Professor? One is always in the dark about one’s own personality.
One needs others to get to know oneself.

Having said this—I actually started out by simply doing routine scientific work.

I always followed the motto that it is worth doing something only if you do it right! The incentives for my creative work are rooted in my temperament.
Diligence and a strong desire for knowledge accompanied me throughout life.

I do not derive any satisfaction from knowing things superficially: I want to know them thoroughly.

When I came to the conclusion that I had only hazy notions of the primitives, and that it was not possible to acquire full knowledge about them through books, I started traveling in Africa, New Mexico, and India.

For the same reason I also started learning Swahili.

Emil A. Fischer: What were the circumstances that induced you to work in the field of psychological research?
Dr. Jung: Even as a small boy I noticed that people always did the contrary of what was said of them.

I found some of the people who were praised quite unbearable, whereas I thought others who were criticized quite pleasant.

I noticed the inconsistencies in the behavior of adults quite early on, because I spent my formative years in Basel, in a rather odd environment, which was frequented by people with a complicated psychic structure.

When I was barely four years old, someone said to me in an exaggeratedly childish tone: "Where do you think you are going with your rocking horse?"

I reacted quite the enfant terrible: "Mama, why does this man say such nonsense?" Even as a child I clearly felt that people did not say what was really in their minds.

Emil A. Fischer: Isn’t it possible for people to come to psychology in exactly the opposite way? Don’t some people feel attracted to psychology because they want to find an explanation for the chaos within themselves?

Dr. Jung: Certainly! If you take a critical look at people, you will find that some of them are involved in psychology only in order to demonstrate that "the other person" is even more neurotic.

However, in the kingdom of the blind the one-eyed man is king.

Emil A. Fischer: Isn't nature particularly important for you to sustain and enhance your personal productivity?

Dr. Jung: Nature can help you only if you manage to get time for yourself. You need to be able to relax in the garden, completely at peace, or to walk.
From time to time I need to stop, to just stand there. If someone were to ask me: What are you thinking of just now ?—I wouldn't know.

I think unconsciously.

Emil A. Fischer: How important is the time factor in your scientific activity? Isn't it a great strain for you to work both as an analyst and as a research scientist?

Dr. Jung: My time has always been divided.

Either I dealt with patients, or I did research work.

For a time, I used to see patients only in the afternoons. The mornings were devoted to scientific work.

In earlier years I worked a lot at night, especially during the first World War.

Until the middle of my life I worked chiefly in the morning, and after I was 36, chiefly in the afternoon.

In the last ten years I've turned again to working in the morning.

Emil A. Fischer: How do you react to disturbances?

Some occultist authors recommend that their adepts go into retreat to enhance their energies. Do you think that creative energy grows as a result of isolation?

Dr. Jung: The energy is there, but I must have the possibility of "casting my net."

Once I have all the material, nothing and nobody must get near.

I am not as sensitive to noise as Carlyle, who installed triple glass windows and saw to it that all the fowl and dogs near his property were bought up.

But when I am in the active creative process, any disturbance is downright physically painful.

I have a little house at Bollingen, to which I retreat and where I can work undisturbed when my notes and preparatory studies have reached the stage where I can start writing.

Emil A. Fischer: Do some Yoga systems offer the possibility of developing one's creative energies?

Dr. Jung: Yoga can liberate certain psychic contents and natural dispositions but it cannot produce them. You can't make something out of nothing, not even with will-power.

And what is will-power?

To have will-power means that you have a lot of drive. Creativeness is drive!

A creative calling is like a daimonion, which, in some instances, can ruin a person's entire life. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 164-167

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/95bbb-12bacheive.jpg`

Charles Baudouin: "I recognized that these "spirits" had weight, like the atmosphere during a thunderstorm." (2019-03-13 05:41)

[1]

FROM CHARLES BAUDOUIN'S JOURNAL: 1934

Introduction: Charles Baudouin (1893-1963), professor in the University of Geneva, was founder there of the Institut de Psychagogie, whose patrons were Freud, Adler, and Jung and whose program was correspondingly catholic.

Eventually, Baudouin associated himself with the school of analytical psychology as an analyst, teacher, and writer.

His posthumous book L'Oeuvre de Jung (1963) contains, in a chapter entitled "Jung, homme concret," a number of passages from Baudouin's journal, reporting his, encounters with Jung over more than twenty years.

The earliest one was written after Baudouin attended a seminar that Jung gave to the Societe de Psychologie in Basel, October i–6, 1934.

That version, slightly abridged, was translated and published as "Jung, the Concrete Man" in the Friends annual Inward Light (Washington), fall–winter, 1975-76.

It is further abridged here. (For other extracts see pp. 146, 19o, 235, 365.) Charles Baudouin: Basel, Sunday, October 7, 1934

It is time to assemble the impressions which Jung's personality has left upon me during these few days, to bind the sheaf, to present the portrait.

A standing portrait, emphatically, for I see him on his feet, talking and teaching. The word "stature" is what springs to mind, or the German word "Gestalt."

This is no man of study or office; this is a force.

One of the anecdotes with which he bespangles his lectures stands out for me.

I hope I shall not do it an injusticde by repeating it from memory.different from all one knows, it is another matter.

Jung knew, from his interpreter, of his hosts' embarrassment at having failed to identify him.

However, he won their hearts sufficiently for them to invite him one day—a sign of confidence and welcome— to visit the upper story of the house.

This meant climbing a ladder.

But while the Indians mount with their backs to the ladder and with the agility of monkeys, he naturally climbed in European fashion, facing the ladder, setting his feet deliberately on the rungs and presenting to the onlookers his square, powerful back.

A great clamor broke out then among the Indians, which he later had explained to him. On seeing him mount that way, they had recognized his totem: the bear! the bear!

He had the wit to enter into the spirit of the thing, and his understanding of "primitives" was advanced enough for him to feel all the seriousness of it.

Substantially, he told them: "Yes, you have guessed aright; the bear is the totem of my country; it has given its name to our capital, Bern; it figures in the coat of arms of the city."

And on his return to Switzerland he sent them, as evidence and as a souvenir, a little wooden bear such as we carve over here.

He received in return and as a pledge of friendship, if I remember rightly, a pair of leather breeches.

These last days, telling us about the tribes, the spirits of the forest, that other world of mystery that comes alive suddenly at nightfall, he has been more like the sorcerer penetrated by the spirits he talks about, skilled at evoking them and making their disquieting presence hover above the suspenseful audience.

Then, all of a sudden, a good story will release the tension with a well-placed laugh.

His is a compact force that is fed by a substantial sum of human experience and flows back to him as though multiplied by the response of his own tribe, this circle of disciples from both continents who surround and sustain him.

Unkind gossip has accused these disciples and auditors of snobbery.

To be sure there is some of it, as there was around the courses which Bergson gave at the College de France; which is no argument against Bergson, nor yet against Jung.

But when someone raised the objection that a majority of his disciples were women, Jung is said to have replied: "What's to be done?

Psychology is after all the science of the soul, and it is not my fault if the soul is a woman."

A jest; but for anyone who has followed his teaching, a jest which is itself charged with experience, and behind which one sees arising in all its ambiguous splendor the archetype of the anima.

Observing him, seeing him teach and then relax in a more intimate circle, I registered during this week in Basel many aspects of his being and appearance, many disparate expressions.

Under the high forehead of the thinker, the planes of his face are firm and full; the gray eyes seem suddenly curiously small and made for gimlet scrutiny; at other moments they are chiefly mischievous, and the face becomes that of a confessor-accomplice, a priest who enjoys life, suddenly red in the face with a hearty laugh; but the profile then calls one to order—it is much more serious, angular, and marks the top-level intellectual.

But watching him live, one perceives that these disparate expressions are organized into a coherent whole.

One feels that he denies none of them, that being and appearance (the self and the persona) have found their modus vivendi, that his teaching about "integrating all the functions" to form a totality is not book knowledge but lived, which amounts to affirming that he belongs not only among the scholars but among the sages.

I knew Jung from his books and I had met him personally.

But during this week passed in his company I feel I have discovered him. To tell the truth, I have made two discoveries.

First of all, I have been struck by the strongly concrete character of this man and of his thinking.

Secondly, I have realized all he owes to his mingling with the "primitives"; those journeys have not been picturesque accidents in his life; they are among the nutritive substances of his thought.

I would add that these two points are intimately connected.

The concreteness stands out every moment from his way of expounding ideas, laying emphasis on the facts, his gestures sober and restrained but felt to be charged with energy and asking only to go ahead uncurbed.

This is especially visible when he describes one of his African scenes; in fact he acts it out in abbreviated form, he makes it visible.

There was that anecdote to illustrate the fact that primitives do not know will-power in the sense that we understand it; they must first mobilize the needful energy for an action and this is the purpose served by certain precise incantatory rituals.

For example, the boy who is charged with carrying the mail to town (who knows how many leagues away!) remains passively sitting when the European quietly asks him to perform this service and offers to reward him; it is as if he did not understand.

But the sorcerer passes by, takes the case in hand—and the whip too!—starts dancing the "running dance" around the boy; the tribe joins in, the boy is drawn into the circle and finally, as if shot from a sling, is off; and he runs at that! All was reproduced before us; we saw it.

But this play of gesture to demonstrate and explain flourishes yet more freely in familiar conversation.

We were speaking one evening of "telepathic" dreams where, between persons who are emotionally close, a mutual unconscious communication and penetration appears to take place.

Jung finally, to sum up his thoughts on the matter, acted them out as follows: with brief, firm gestures he touched first my forehead, then his own, and thirdly drew a great circle with his hand in the space between us; the three motions underscored the three clauses of this statement; "In short, one doesn’t dream here, and one doesn’t dream here, one dreams there."

And there the hand kept turning, like the above-mentioned sling and the idea, like the messenger, was launched.

I have said that this concreteness is tied up with Jung’s African experience.

I came to see that he had a feeling of concreteness about the soul; when he entitles a book Wirklichkeit der Seele (Reality of the Soul) it is no vain expression.

To be sure, he had been convinced by his patients of this concrete aspect of the things of the psyche, but certainly the "primitives" brought him into touch with it in a closer and more convincing way, for this is how they feel.

When he was telling me the other day, at Dr. von Sury’s, about these "ancestral spirits," which fall upon one on return to one’s birthplace, and which he himself feels whenever he returns to Basel, I recognized that these "spirits" had weight, like the atmosphere during a thunderstorm.

And when he was led by this reflection to study, on the wall, the genealogical tree of the von Sury family, I realized how he felt those roots digging down and holding fast in an earth that was real and solid.

This concreteness of Jung's was part of his make-up. In his childhood recollections he tells us of the torments he went through over mathematics, especially over algebraic abstractions, which he found incomprehensible.

To make sense out of them, he had to put back numbers in place of letters.

The simple equation a = b infuriated him and seemed a rank deception: since a is one thing and b is another, it is a lie to say they are equal.

If this was an inborn disposition of his mind, it could not but be reinforced and justified in his eyes by his fertilizing contacts with "primitive mentality."

The academic mind expected a mapmaker; and it finds itself face to face with an explorer who emerges from the brush armed, weighed down, and solidly swathed in magnificent vines and creepers, trailing with him all the odors of the forest.

Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 76-81

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c9bf0-12bspirits.jpg`

Carl Jung: " But no one can judge history in terms of right and wrong." (2019-03-13 05:47)

[1]

Therefore they all say that they are fighting for the good and for peace, but one cannot fight one another over the good.

But since men don’t know that the conflict lies within themselves, the Germans thus believe that the English and the Russians are wrong; but the English and the Russians say that the Germans are wrong.

But no one can judge history in terms of right and wrong.

Because one-half of mankind is wrong, every man is half wrong.

Therefore a conflict resides in his own soul.

But man is blind and always knows only his half.

The German has in him the English and the Russian whom he fights outside of himself.

Likewise, the English and the Russian has in him the German whom he fights.

But man appears to see the outer quarrel, not the one within, which alone is the wellspring of the great war. But before man can ascend to light and love, the great battle is needed" (P.145). Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 253, Footnote 220.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/53a61-3.jpg`

Carl Jung: "Death has laid its hand upon our friend." (2019-03-13 05:50)

[1]

MEMORIAL TO N. S. [Jerome Schloss, of New York] Death has laid its hand upon our friend.

The darkness out of which his soul had risen has come again and has undone the life of his earthly body, and has left us alone in pain and sorrow.

To many death seems to be a brutal and meaningless end to a short and meaningless existence. So it looks, if seen from the surface and from the darkness.

But when we penetrate the depths of the soul and when we try to understand its mysterious life, we shall discern that death is not a meaningless end, the mere vanishing into nothingness—it is an accomplishment, a ripe fruit on the tree of life.

Nor is death an abrupt extinction, but a goal that has been unconsciously lived and worked for during half a lifetime.

In the youthful expansion of our life we think of it as an ever-increasing river, and this conviction accompanies us often far beyond the noonday of our existence.

But if we listen to the quieter voices of our deeper nature we become aware of the fact that soon after the middle of our life the soil begins its secret work, getting ready for the departure.

Out of the turmoil and terror of our life the one precious flower of the spirit begins to unfold, the four-petaled flower of the immortal light, and even if our mortal consciousness should not be aware of its secret operation, it nevertheless does its secret work of purification.

When I met J. S. for the first time I found in him a man of rare clarity and purity of character and personality.

I was deeply impressed with the honesty and sincerity of his purpose.

And when I worked with him, helping him to understand the intricacies of the human psyche, I could not but admire the kindness of his feeling and the absolute truthfulness of his mind.

But though it was a privilege to teach a man of such rare human qualities, it was not the thing that touched me most.

Yes, I did teach him, but he taught me too.

He spoke to me in the eternal language of symbols, which I did not grasp until the awe-inspiring conclusion, the culmination in death, became manifest.

I shall never forget how he liberated his mind from the turmoil of modern business life, and how, gradually working back, he freed himself from the bonds that held him fast to his earthly parents and to his youth; and how the eternal image of the soul appeared to him, first dimly, then slowly taking shape in the vision of his dreams, and how finally, three weeks before his death, he beheld the vision of his own sarcophagus from which his living soul arose.

Who am I that I should dare say one word beyond this vision?

Is there a human word that could stand against the revelation given to the chosen one? There is none.

Let us return, therefore, to the external language and let us hear the words of the sacred text. And as the ancient words which give truth to us, we will give life to them. (I Corinthians 13; l 5 : 37-55-) Carl Jung, CW 18, Pages 757-758

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a05ec-12bdeath.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Salome," "Pleasure," "Forethinking," "Elijah." (2019-03-13 05:51)

[1]

The Corrected Draft has: "Guiding Reflection" (p. 103). In the Draft and Corrected Draft, a lengthy passage occurs. What follows here is a paraphrase:

I wonder whether this is real, an underworld, or the other reality, and whether it was the other reality that had forced me here.

I see here that Salome, my pleasure, moves to the left, the side of the impure and bad.

This movement follows the serpent, which represents the resistance and the enmity against this movement.

Pleasure goes away from the door. Forethinking [Corrected Draft: "the Idea," throughout this passage] stands at the door, knowing the entrance to the mysteries.

Therefore desire melts into the many, if forethinking does not direct it and force it toward its goal.

If one meets a man who only desires, then one will find resistance against his desire behind it.

Desire without forethinking gains much but keeps nothing, therefore his desire is the source of constant disappointment.
Thus Elijah calls Salome back.

If pleasure is united with forethinking, the serpent lies before them.

To succeed in something, you first need to deal with the resistance and difficulty, otherwise joy leaves behind pain and disappointment.
Therefore I drew nearer.

I had first to overcome the difficulty and the resistance to gain what I desired.

When desire overcomes the difficulty, it becomes seeing and follows forethinking.

Therefore I see that Salome's hands are pure, with no trace of crime.

My desire is pure if I first overcome the difficulty and resistance.

If I weigh up pleasure and forethinking, I am like a fool, blindly following his longing.

If I follow my thinking, I forsake my pleasure.

The ancients said in images that the fool finds the right way.

Forethinking has the first word, therefore Elijah asked me what I wanted.

You should always ask yourself what you desire, since all too many do not know what they want.
I did not know what I wanted.

You should confess your longing and what you long for to yourself.

Thus you satisfy your pleasure and nourish your forethinking at the same time" (Corrected Draft, pp. 103-4).
Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 249, Footnote 190.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/9abfb-2.jpg`

Carl Jung: her insanity would exhibit a sort of lycanthropy (2019-03-13 05:54)

[1]

A marked change occurs when the child develops consciousness of his ego, a fact which is registered by his referring to himself as "I."

This change normally takes place between the third and fifth year, but it may begin earlier.

From this moment we can speak of the existence of an individual psyche, though normally the psyche attains relative independence only after puberty.

Up till then it has been largely the plaything of instinct and environment.

The child who enters school at six is still for the most part the psychic product of his parents, endowed, it is true, with the nucleus of ego-consciousness, but incapable of asserting his unconscious individuality.

One is often tempted to interpret children who are peculiar, obstinate, disobedient, or difficult to handle as especially individual or self-willed.

This is a mistake.

In such cases we should always examine the parental milieu, its psychological conditions and history. Almost without exception we discover in the parents the only valid reasons for the child’s difficulties.

His disquieting peculiarities are far less the expression of his own inner life than a reflection of disturbing influences in the home.

If the physician has to deal with nervous disorders in a child of this age, he will have to pay serious attention to the psychic state of the parents; to their problems, the way they live and do not live, the aspirations they have fulfilled or neglected, and to the predominant family atmosphere and the method of education.

All these psychic conditions influence a child profoundly.

In his early years the child lives in a state of participation mystique with his parents.

Time and again it can be seen how he reacts immediately to any important developments in the parental psyche.

Needless to say both the parents and the child are unconscious of what is going on.

The infectious nature of the parents' complexes can be seen from the effect their mannerisms have on their children.

Even when they make completely successful efforts to control themselves, so that no adult could detect the least trace of a complex, the children will get wind of it somehow.

I remember a very revealing case of three girls who had a most devoted mother.

When they were approaching puberty they confessed shamefacedly to each other that for years they had suffered from horrible dreams about her.

They dreamt of her as a witch or a dangerous animal, and they could not understand it at all, since their mother was so lovely and so utterly devoted to them.

Years later the mother became insane, and in her insanity would exhibit a sort of lycanthropy in which she crawled about on all fours and imitated the grunting of pigs, the barking of dogs, and the growling of bears. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 1071

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d39b8-12binsanity.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 21 (2019-03-13 06:39)

[1]

I cannot tell you how glad I am that I know a man, a theologian, who is conscientious enough to weigh my opinions on the basis of a careful study of my writings!

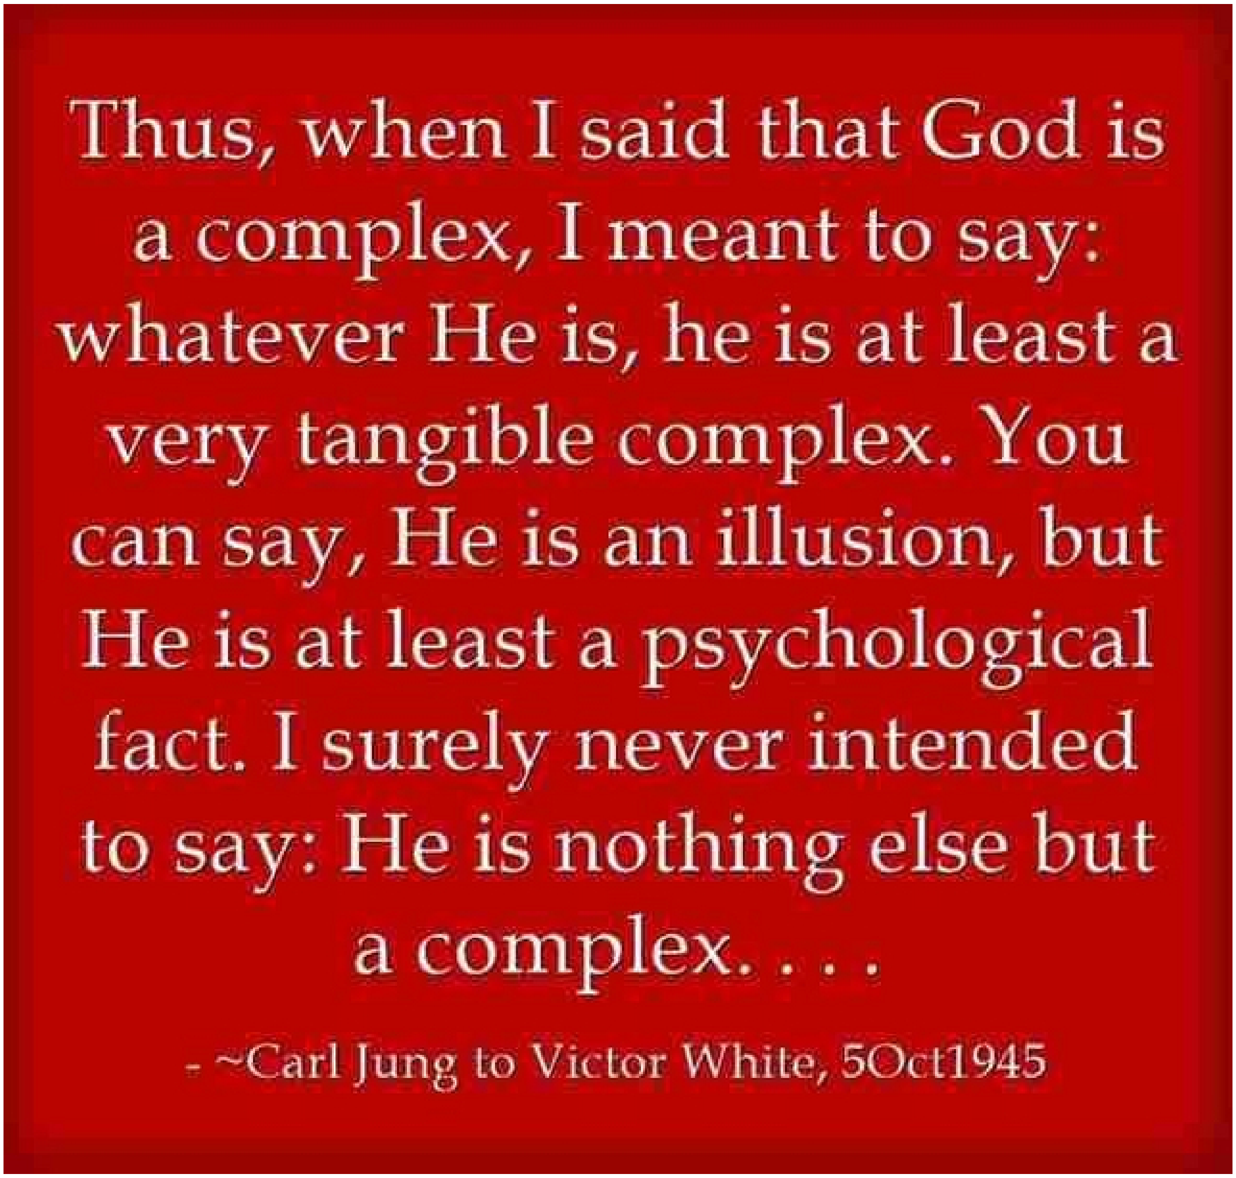
~Carl Jung to Victor White, 5Oct1945

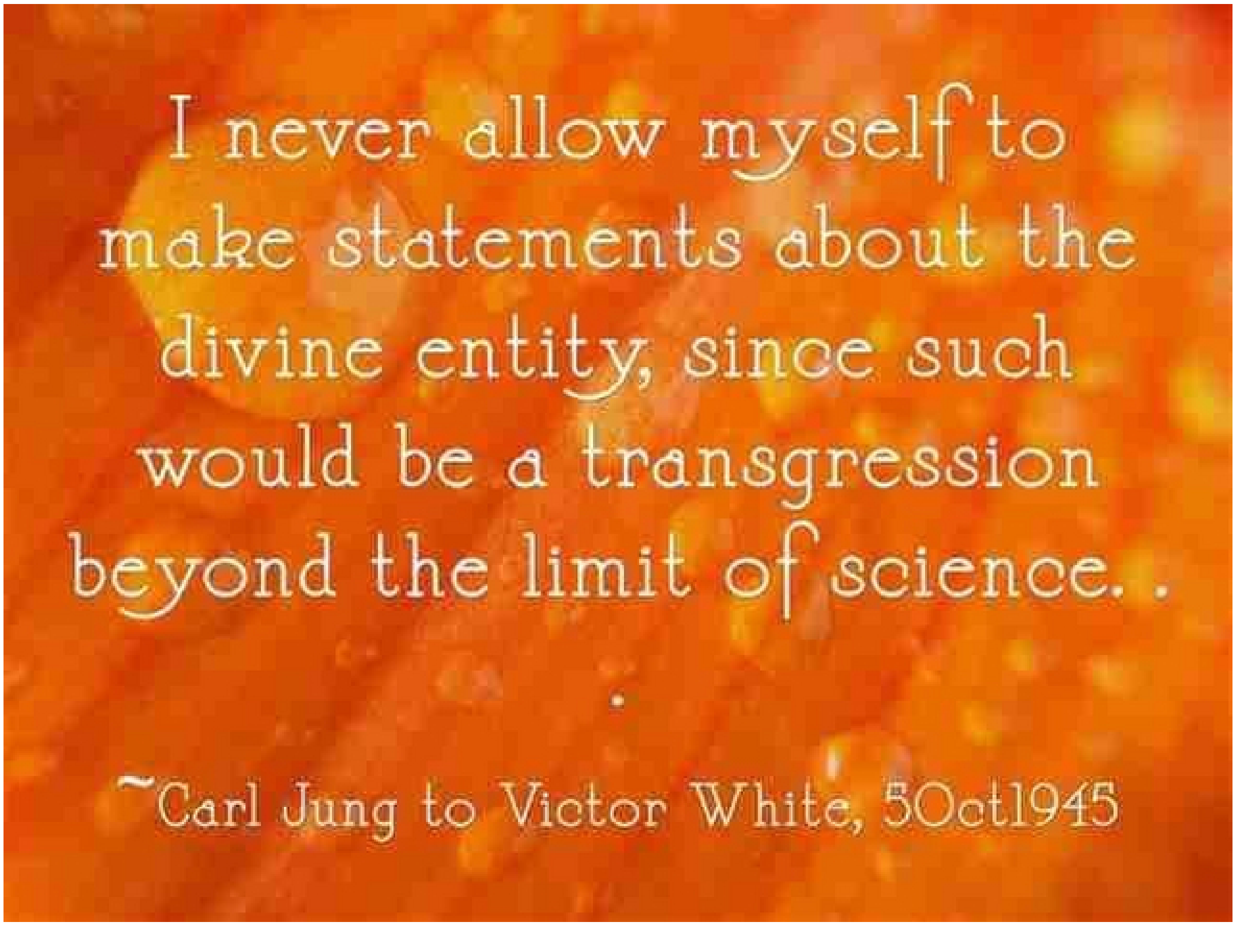
I cannot tell you how glad I am that I know a man, a theologian, who is conscientious enough to weigh my opinions on the basis of a careful study of my writings! Carl Jung to Victor White, 5Oct1945



Thus, when I said that God is a complex, I meant to say: whatever He is, he is at least a very tangible complex. You can say, He is an illusion, but He is at least a psychological fact. I surely never intended to say: He is nothing else but a complex. . . .

- ~Carl Jung to Victor White, 5Oct1945

Thus, when I said that God is a complex, I meant to say: whatever He is, he is at least a very tangible complex. You can say, He is an illusion, but He is at least a psychological fact. I surely never intended to say: He is nothing else but a complex. . . . Carl Jung to Victor White, 5Oct1945

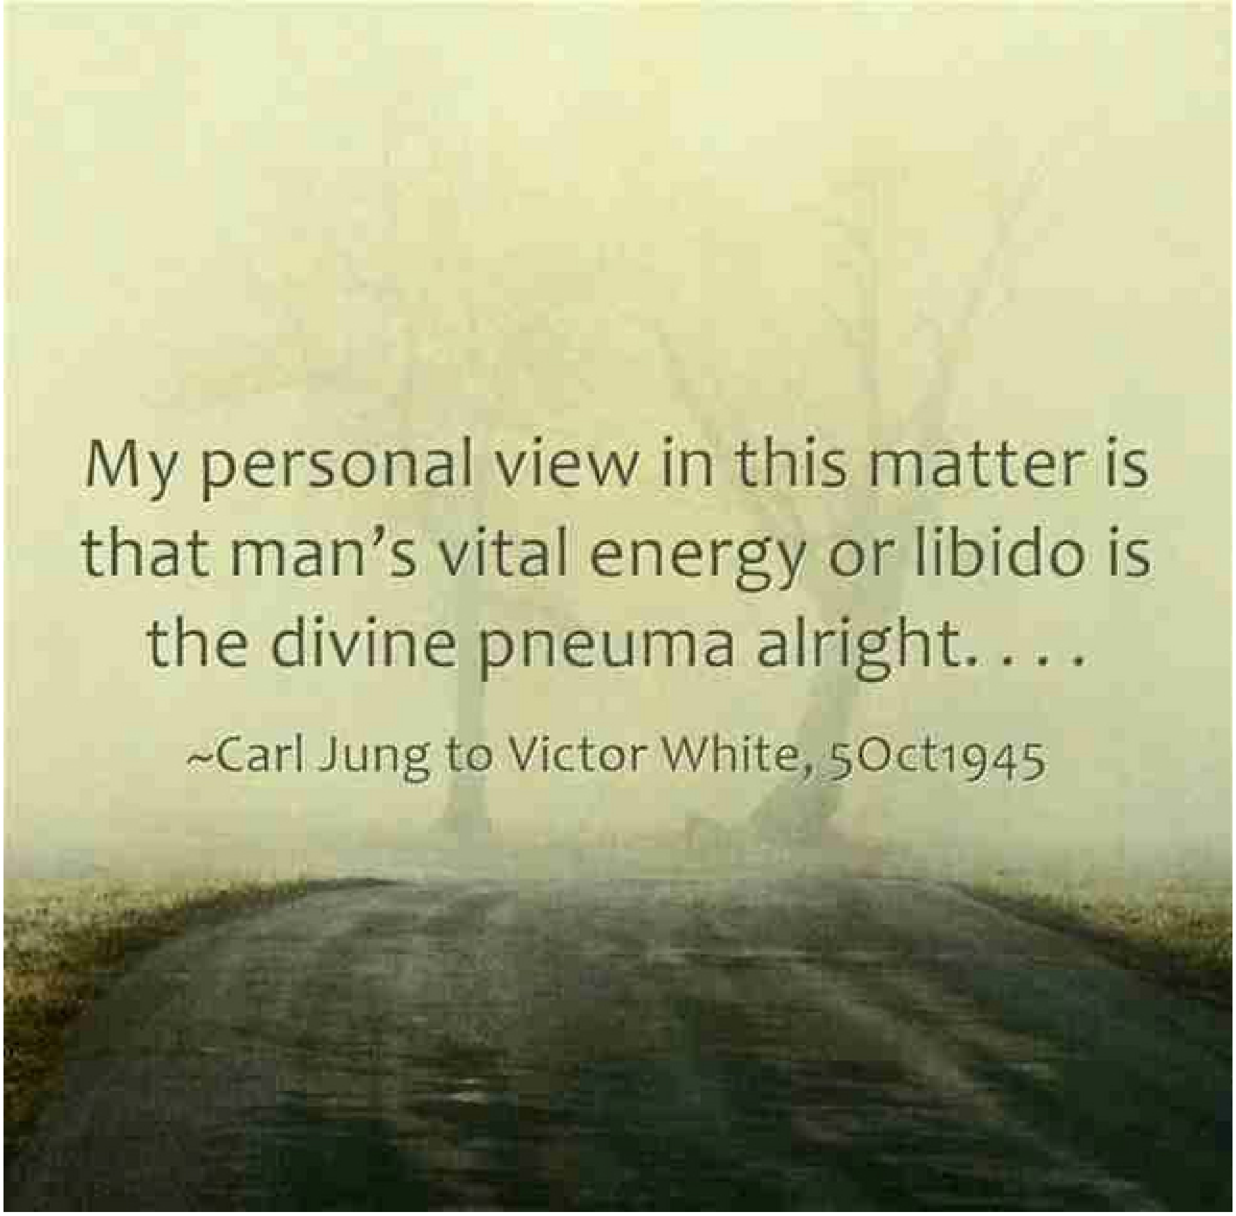


I never allow myself to make statements about the divine entity, since such would be a transgression beyond the limit of science. .

.

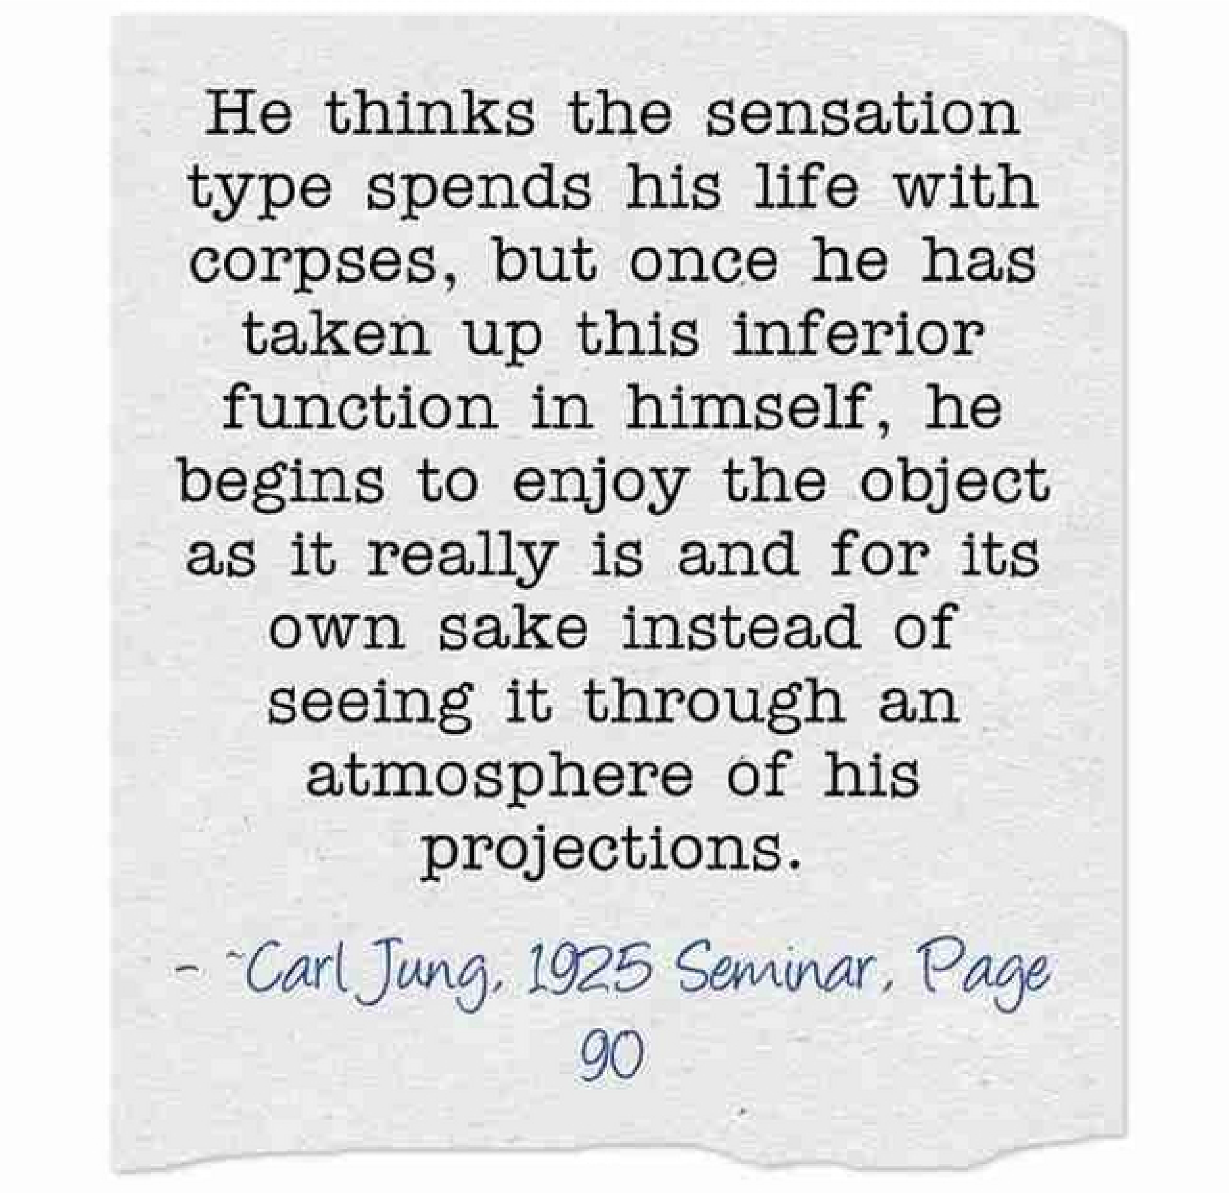
~Carl Jung to Victor White, 5Oct1945

I never allow myself to make statements about the divine entity, since such would be a transgression beyond the limit of science.. Carl Jung to Victor White, 5Oct1945



My personal view in this matter is that man's vital energy or libido is the divine pneuma alright. . . .
~Carl Jung to Victor White, 5Oct1945

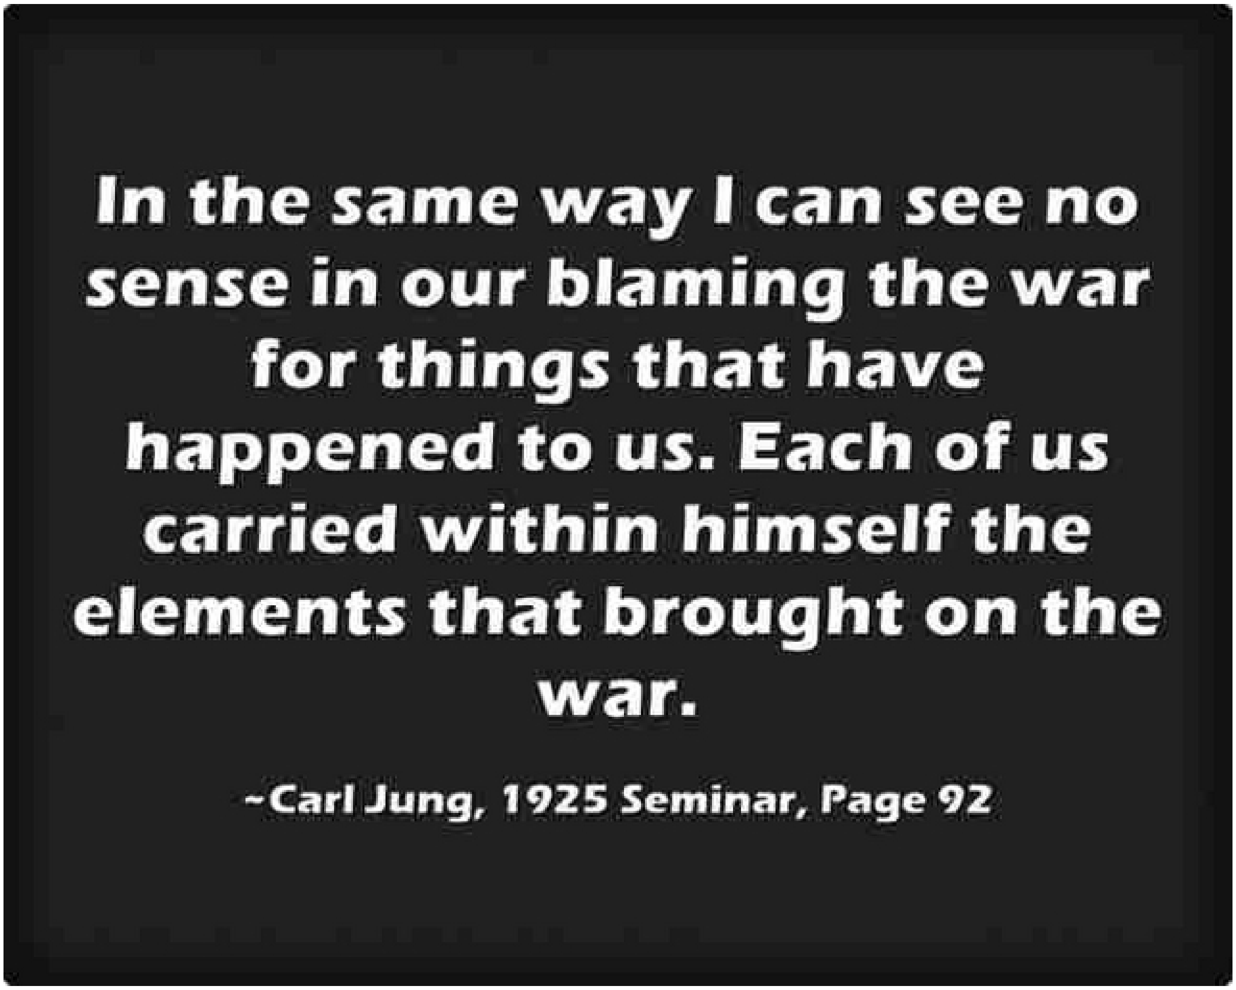
My personal view in this matter is that man's vital energy or libido is the divine pneuma alright. . . .   Carl Jung to Victor White, 5Oct1945



He thinks the sensation type spends his life with corpses, but once he has taken up this inferior function in himself, he begins to enjoy the object as it really is and for its own sake instead of seeing it through an atmosphere of his projections.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 90

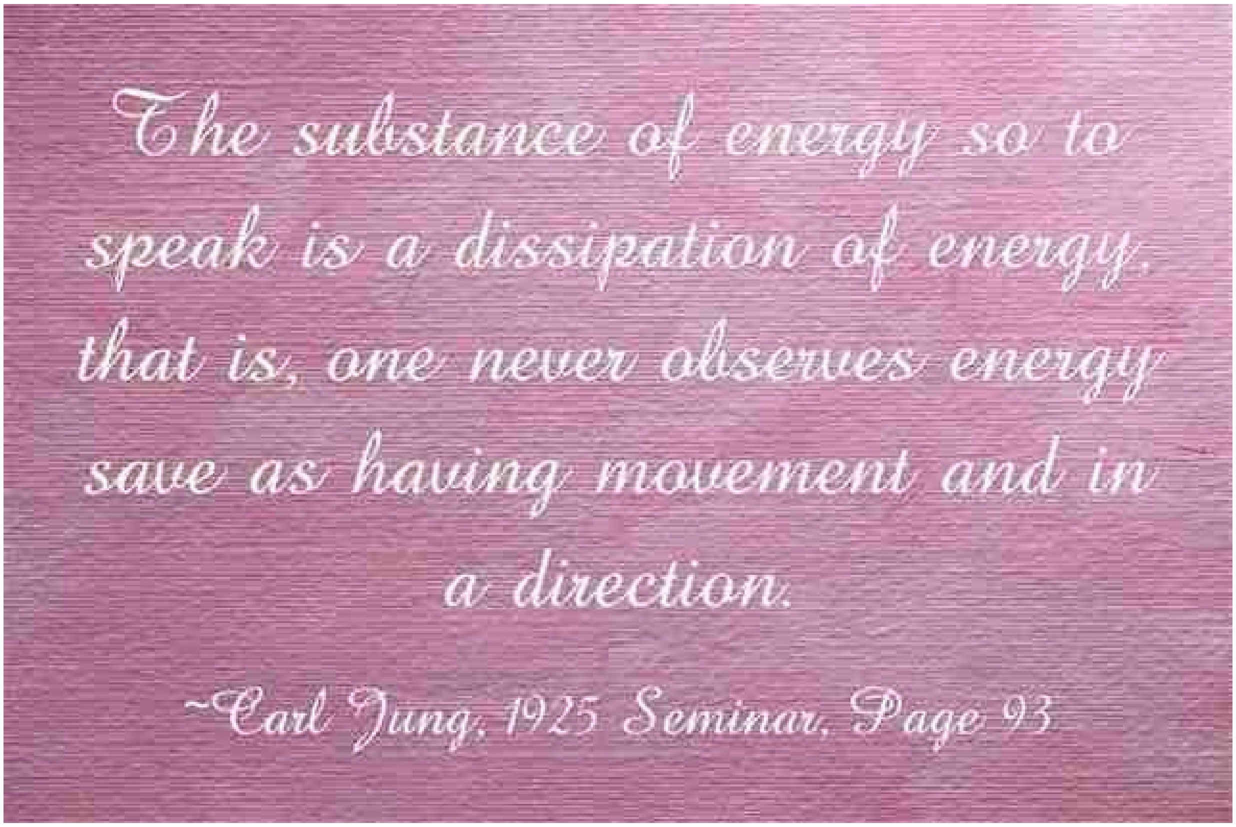
He thinks the sensation type spends his life with corpses, but once he has taken up this inferior function in himself, he begins to enjoy the object as it really is and for its own sake instead of seeing it through an atmosphere of his projections. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 90



In the same way I can see no sense in our blaming the war for things that have happened to us. Each of us carried within himself the elements that brought on the war.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 92

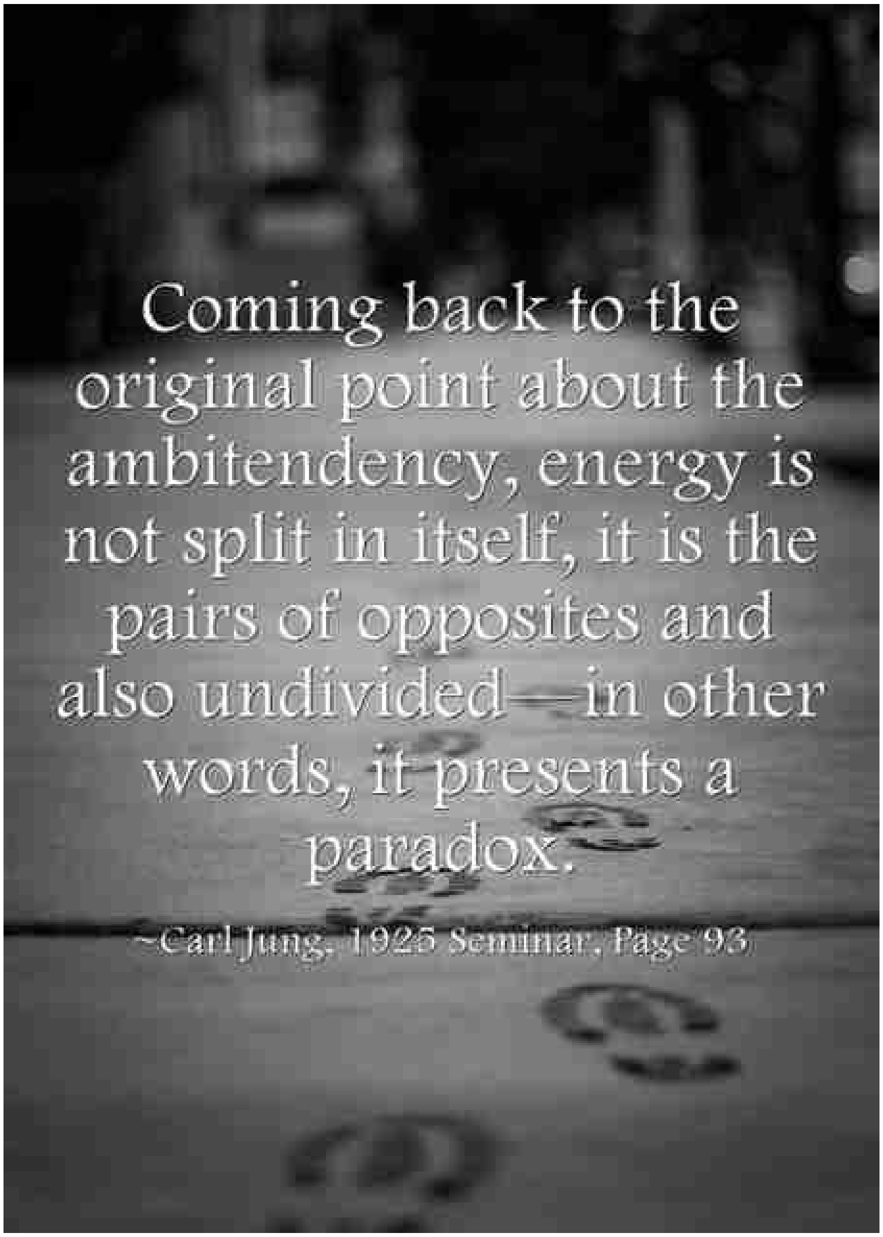
In the same way I can see no sense in our blaming the war for things that have happened to us. Each of us carried within himself the elements that brought on the war. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 92



The substance of energy so to speak is a dissipation of energy, that is, one never observes energy save as having movement and in a direction.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 93

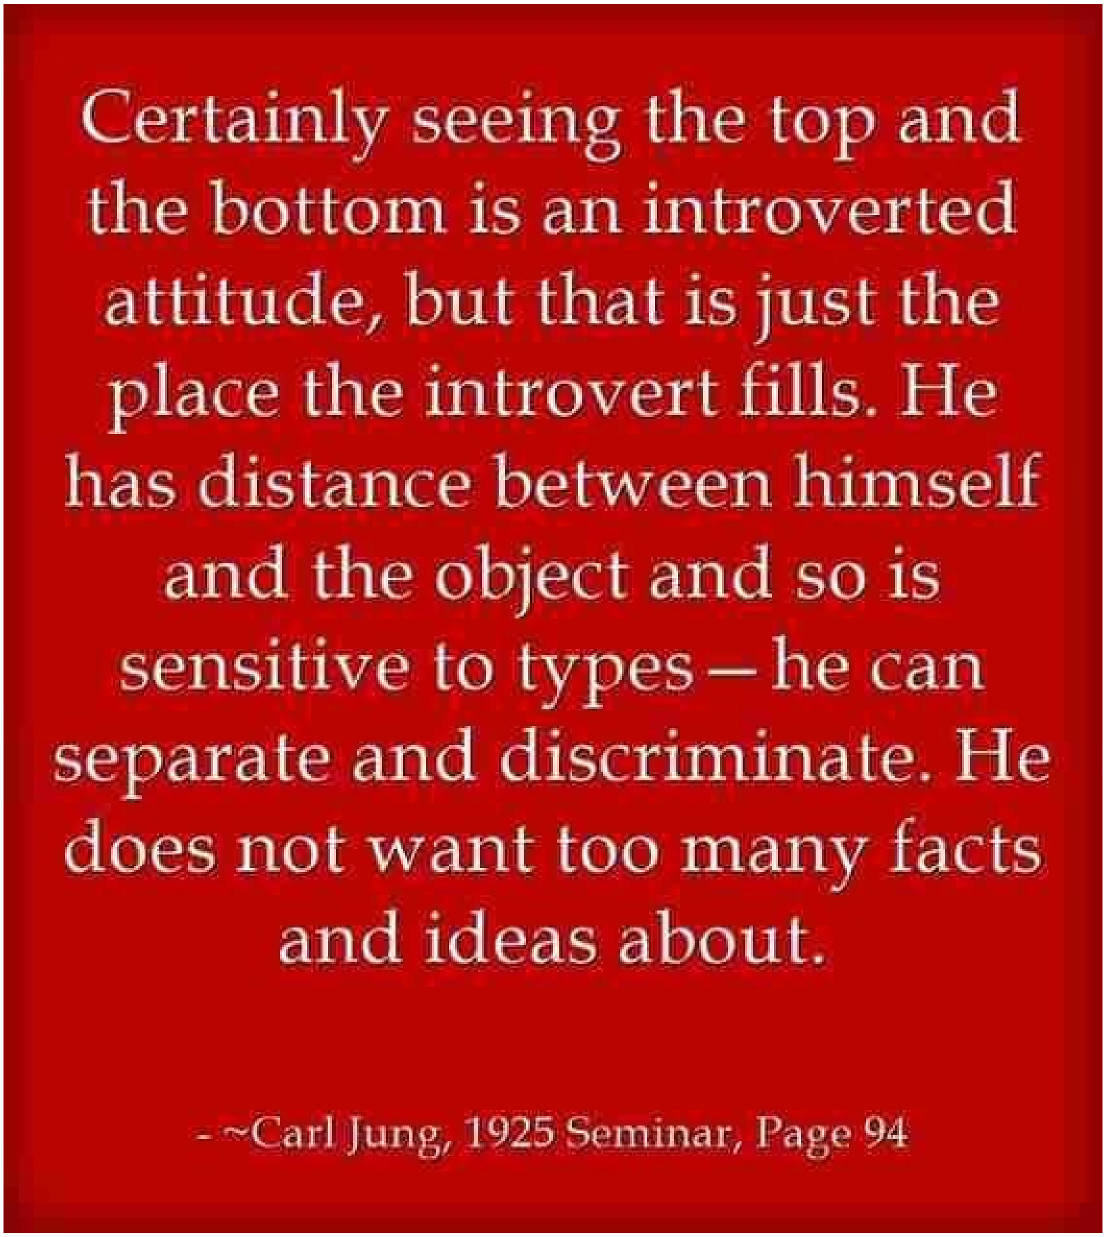
The substance of energy so to speak is a dissipation of energy, that is, one never observes energy save as having movement and in a direction. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 93



Coming back to the original point about the ambitendency, energy is not split in itself, it is the pairs of opposites and also undivided—in other words, it presents a paradox.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 93

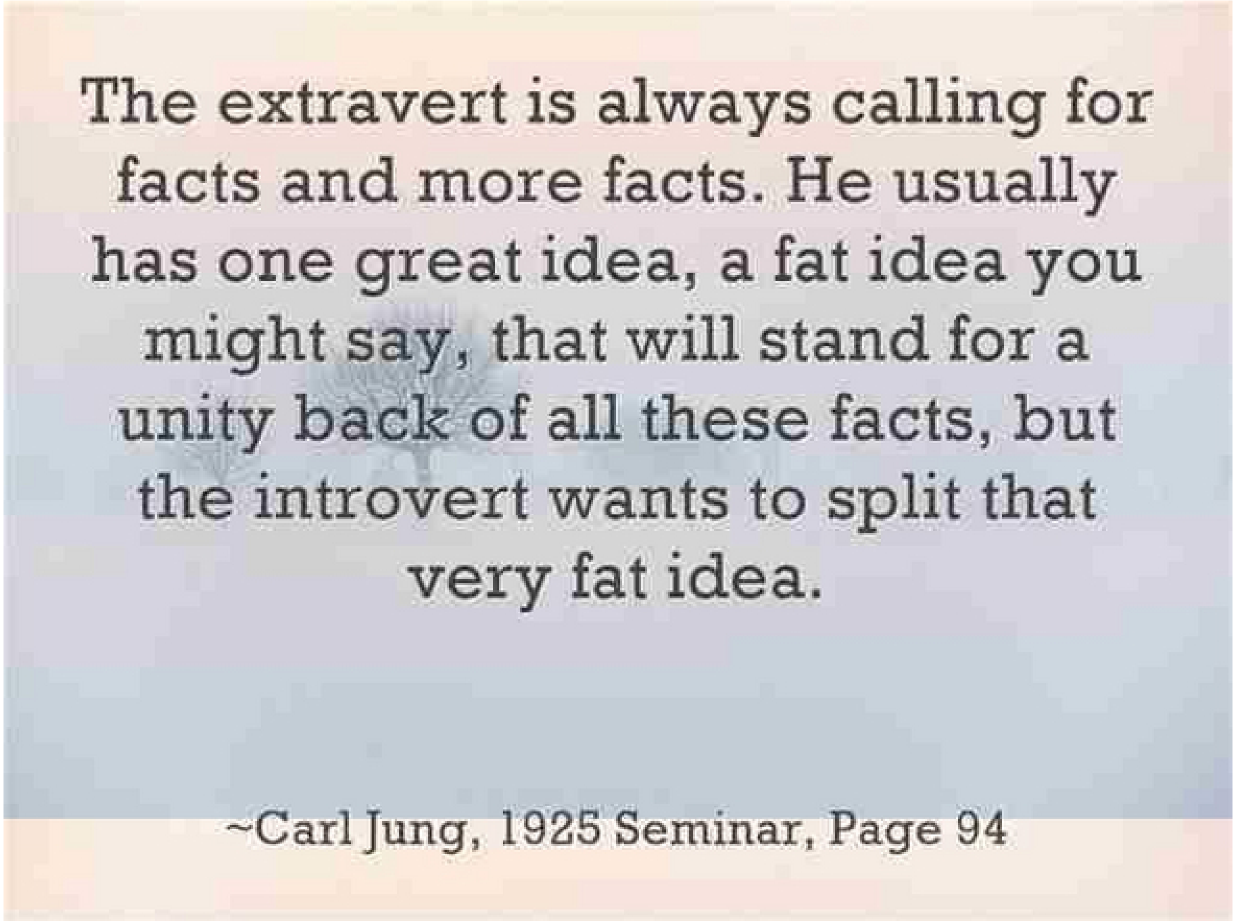
Coming back to the original point about the ambitendency, energy is not split in itself, it is the pairs of opposites and also undivided—in other words, it presents a paradox. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 93



Certainly seeing the top and the bottom is an introverted attitude, but that is just the place the introvert fills. He has distance between himself and the object and so is sensitive to types—he can separate and discriminate. He does not want too many facts and ideas about.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94

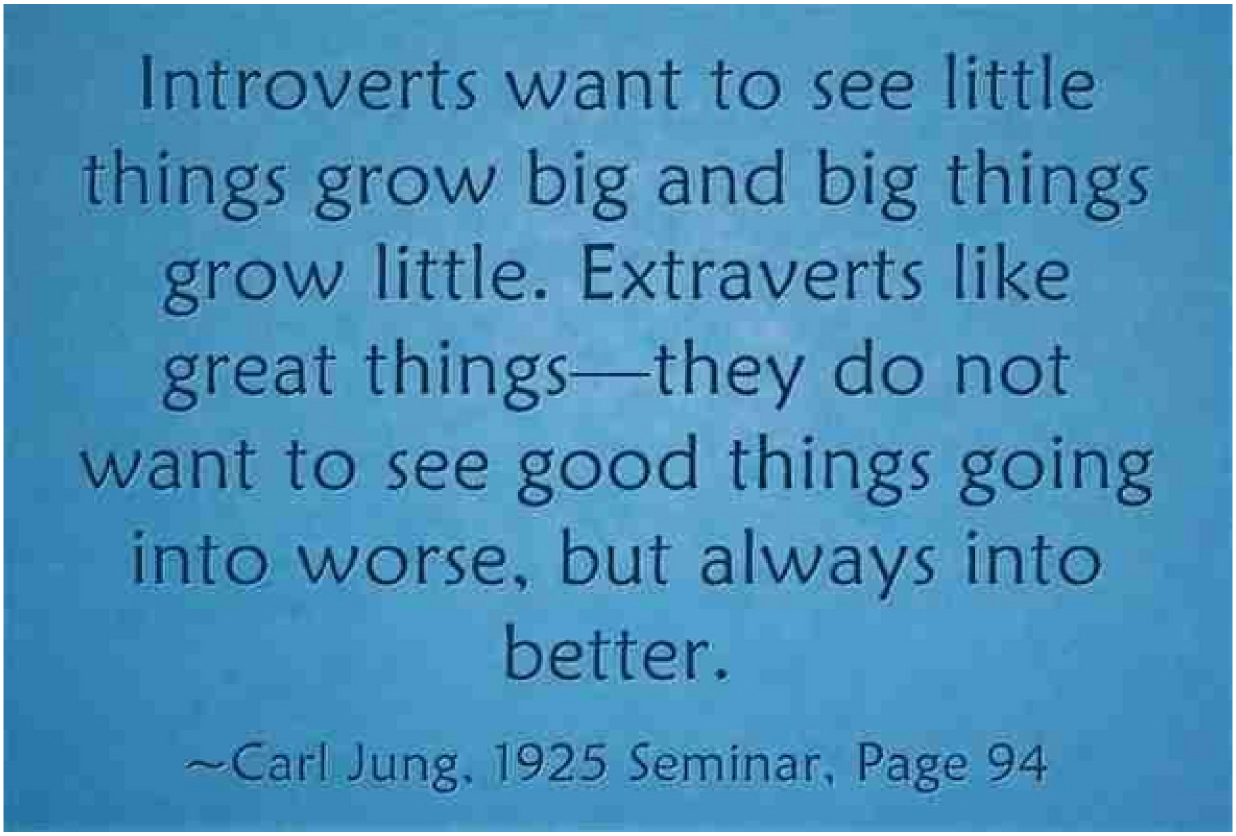
Certainly seeing the top and the bottom is an introverted attitude, but that is just the place the introvert fills. He has distance between himself and the object and so is sensitive to types—he can separate and discriminate. He does not want too many facts and ideas about. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94



The extravert is always calling for facts and more facts. He usually has one great idea, a fat idea you might say, that will stand for a unity back of all these facts, but the introvert wants to split that very fat idea.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94

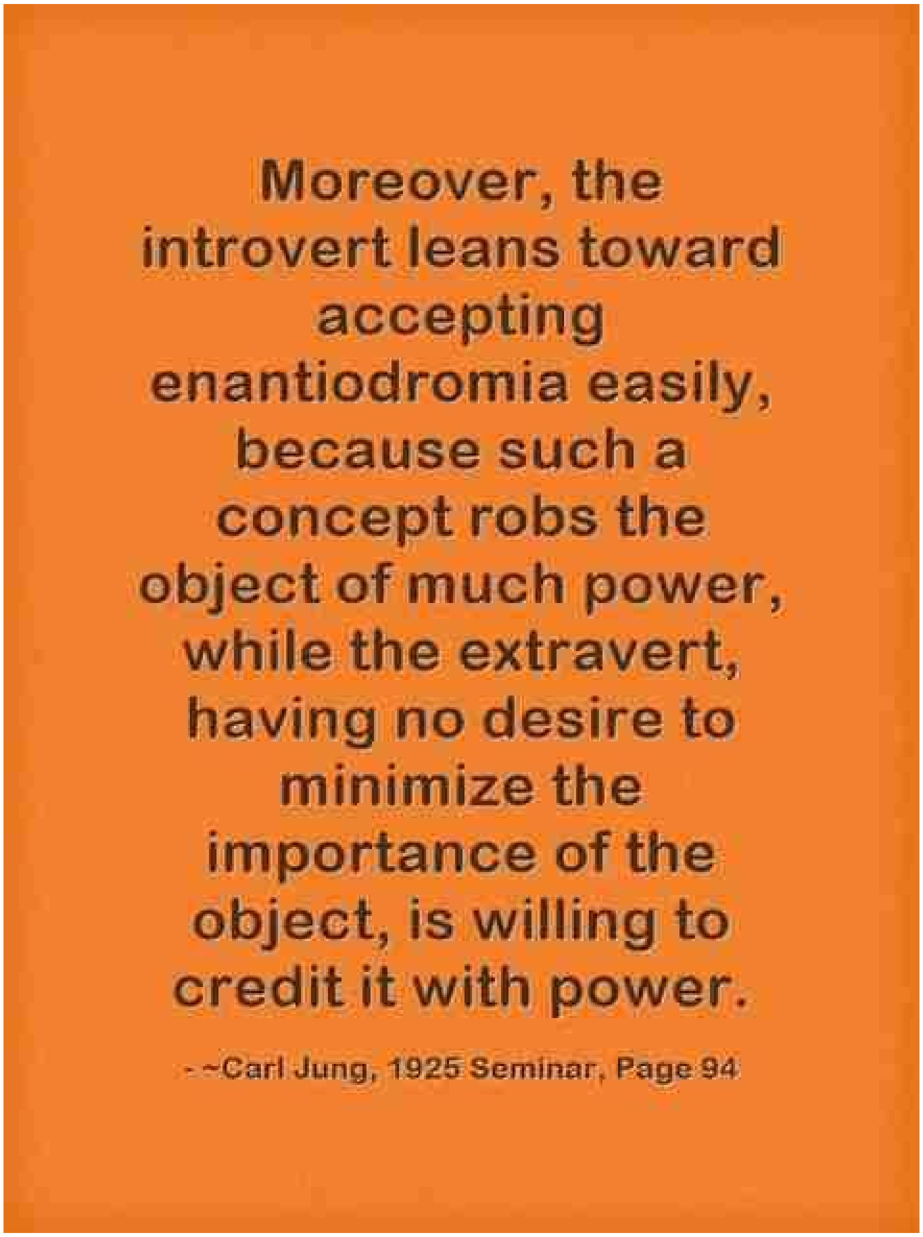
The extravert is always calling for facts and more facts. He usually has one great idea, a fat idea you might say, that will stand for a unity back of all these facts, but the introvert wants to split that very fat idea. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94



Introverts want to see little things grow big and big things grow little. Extraverts like great things—they do not want to see good things going into worse, but always into better.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94

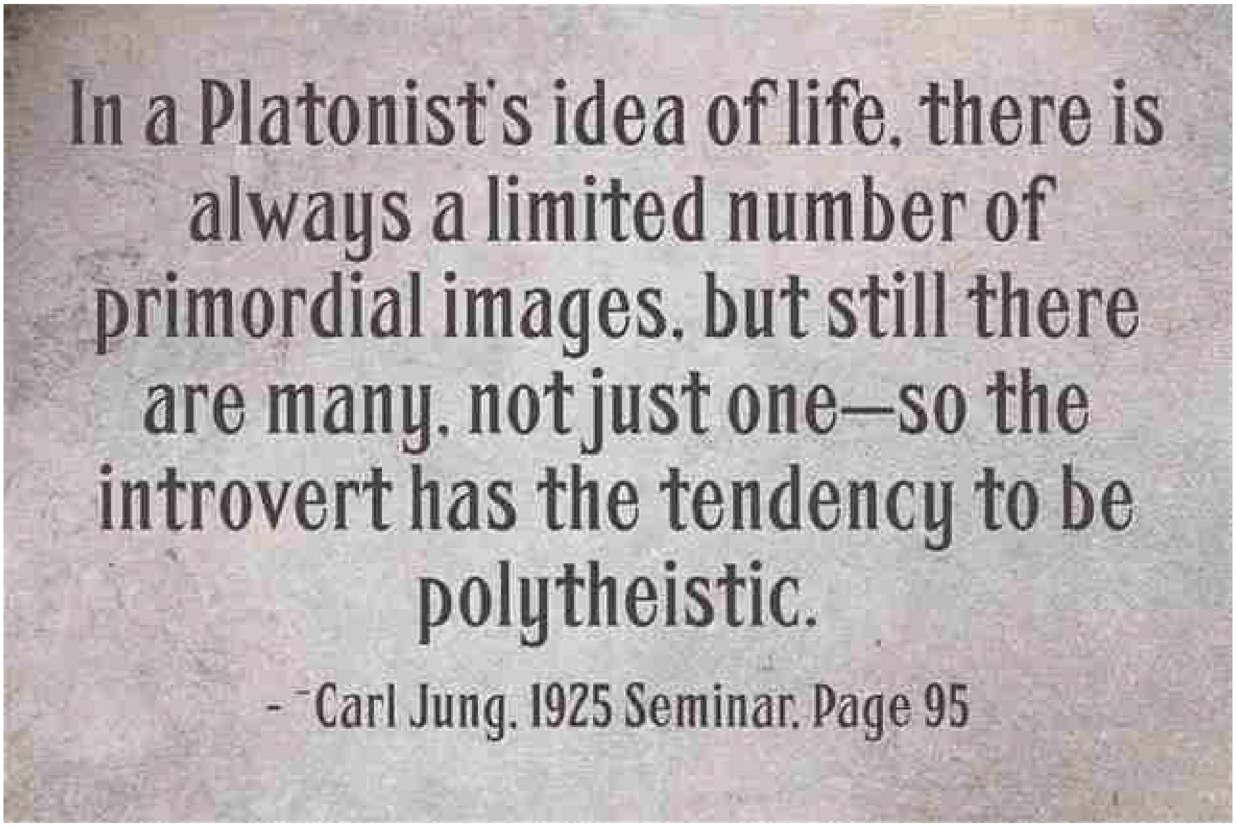
Introverts want to see little things grow big and big things grow little. Extraverts like great things—they do not want to see good things going into worse, but always into better. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94



Moreover, the introvert leans toward accepting enantiodromia easily, because such a concept robs the object of much power, while the extravert, having no desire to minimize the importance of the object, is willing to credit it with power.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94

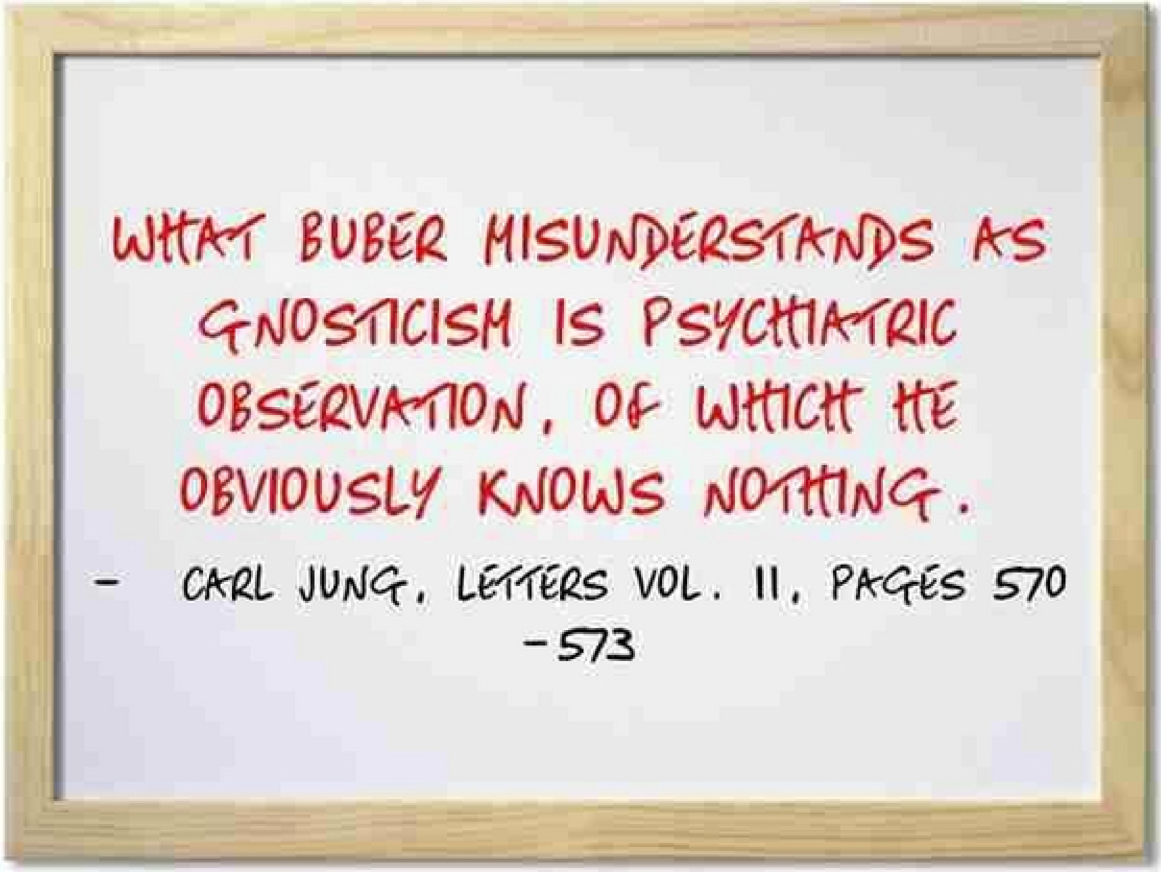
Moreover, the introvert leans toward accepting enantiodromia easily, because such a concept robs the object of much power, while the extravert, having no desire to minimize the importance of the object, is willing to credit it with power. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 94



In a Platonist's idea of life, there is always a limited number of primordial images, but still there are many, not just one—so the introvert has the tendency to be polytheistic.

- Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 95

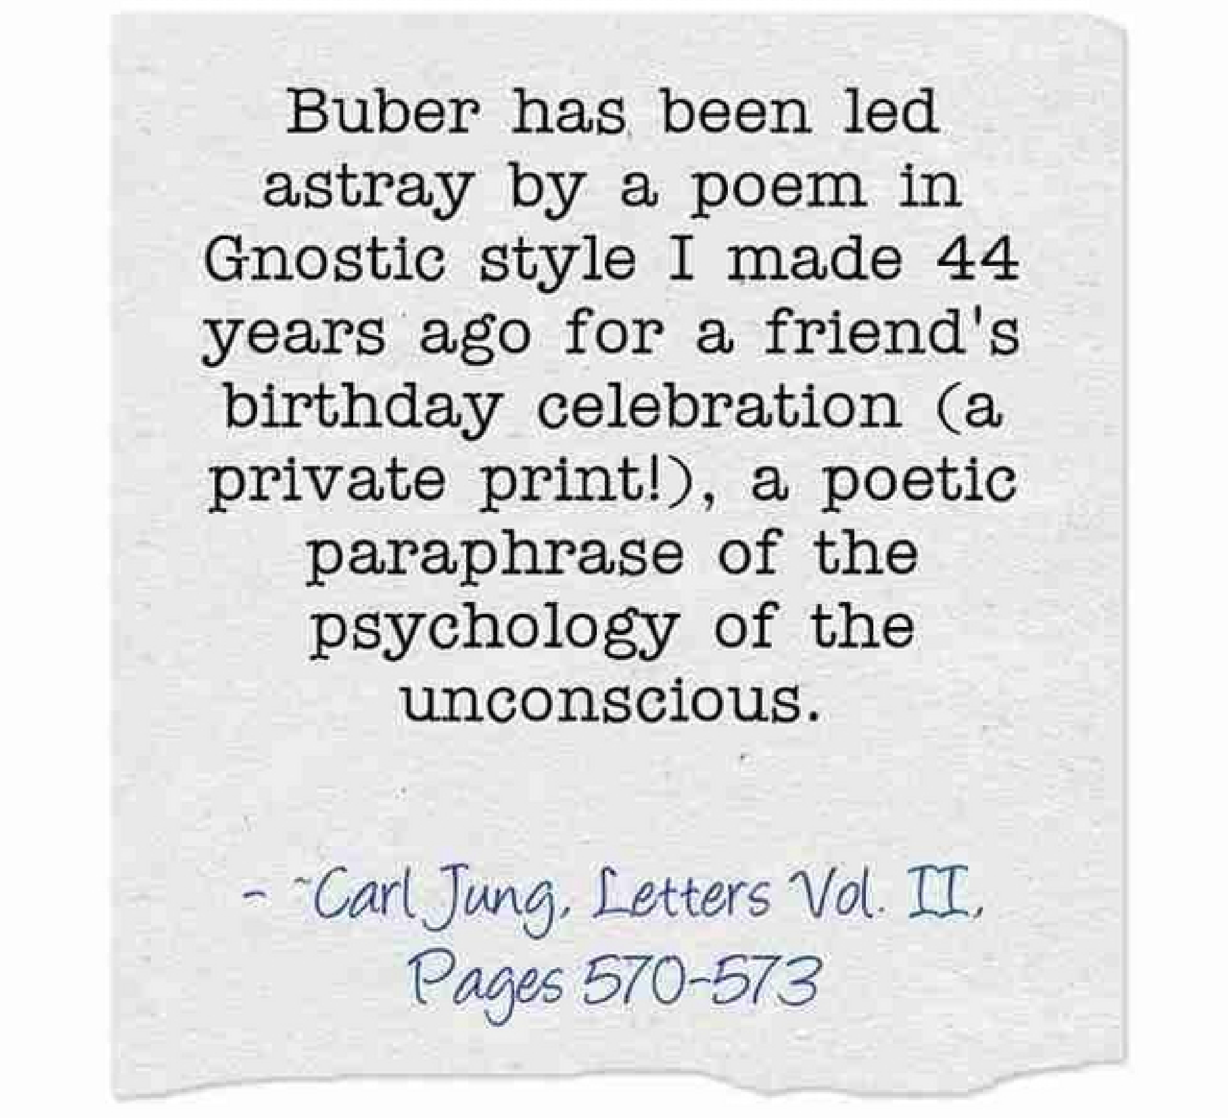
In a Platonist's idea of life, there is always a limited number of primordial images, but still there are many, not just one—so the introvert has the tendency to be polytheistic. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 95



WHAT BUBER MISUNDERSTANDS AS GNOSTICISM IS PSYCHIATRIC OBSERVATION, OF WHICH HE OBVIOUSLY KNOWS NOTHING.

- CARL JUNG. LETTERS VOL. II. PAGES 570 -573

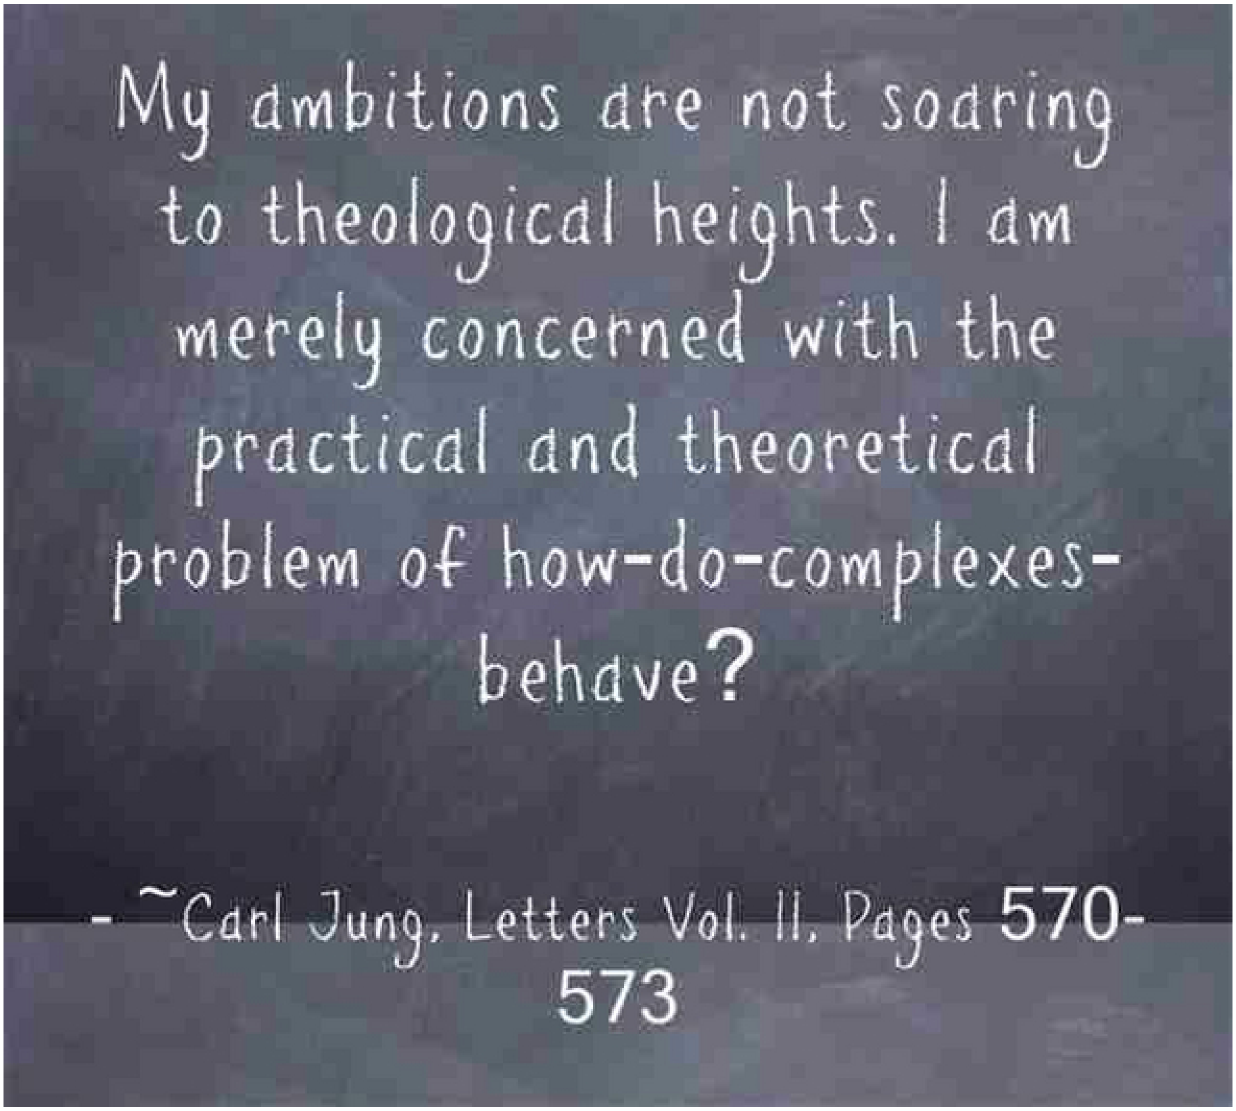
What Buber misunderstands as Gnosticism is psychiatric observation, of which he obviously knows nothing. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573



Buber has been led astray by a poem in Gnostic style I made 44 years ago for a friend's birthday celebration (a private print!), a poetic paraphrase of the psychology of the unconscious.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573

Buber has been led astray by a poem in Gnostic style I made 44 years ago for a friend’s birthday celebration (a private print!), a poetic paraphrase of the psychology of the unconscious. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 571.



My ambitions are not soaring to theological heights. I am merely concerned with the practical and theoretical problem of how-do-complexes-behave?

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573

My ambitions are not soaring to theological heights. I am merely concerned with the practical and theoretical problem of how-do-complexes-behave? Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573

Mental possessions are just as good as ghosts, demons, and gods.
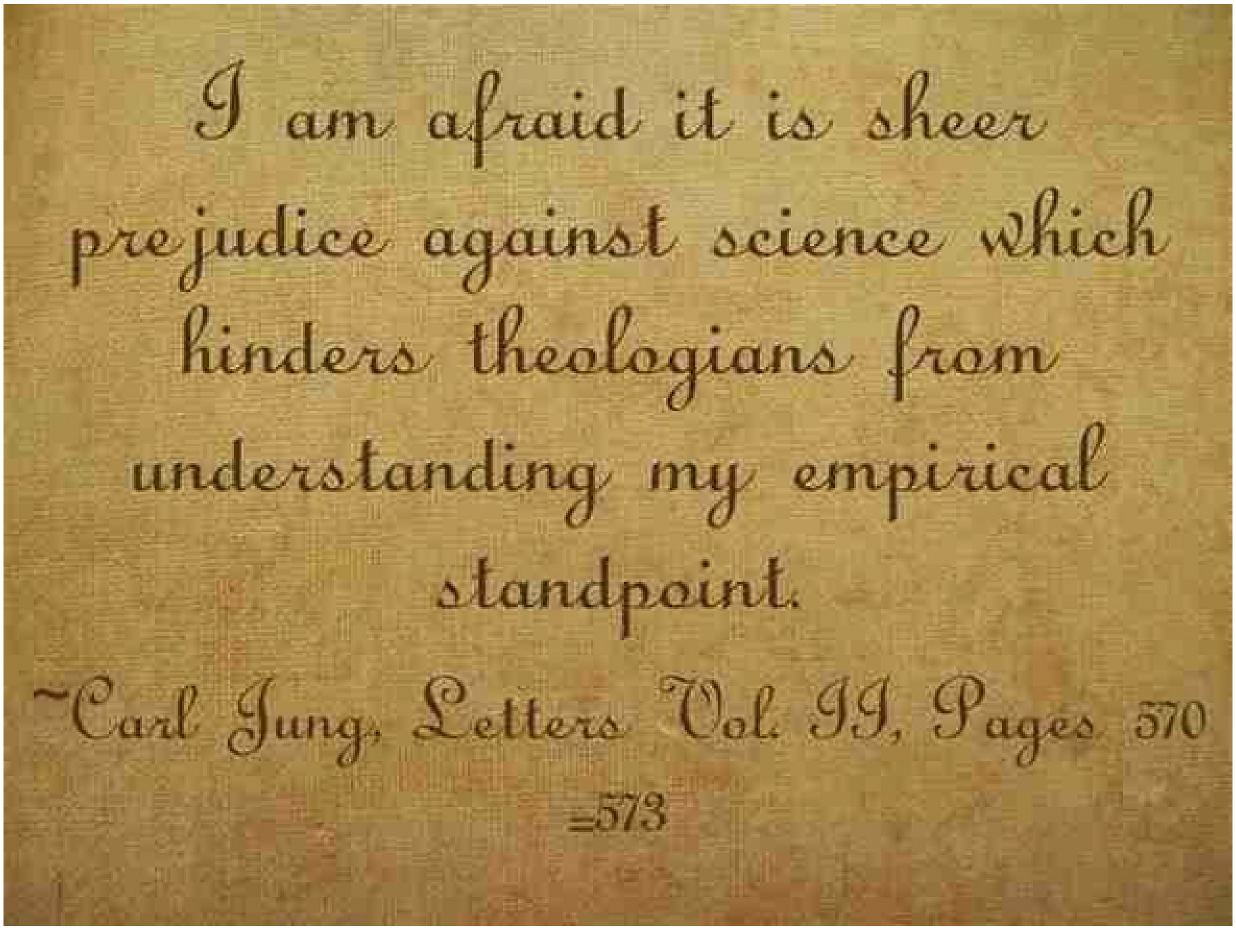
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573

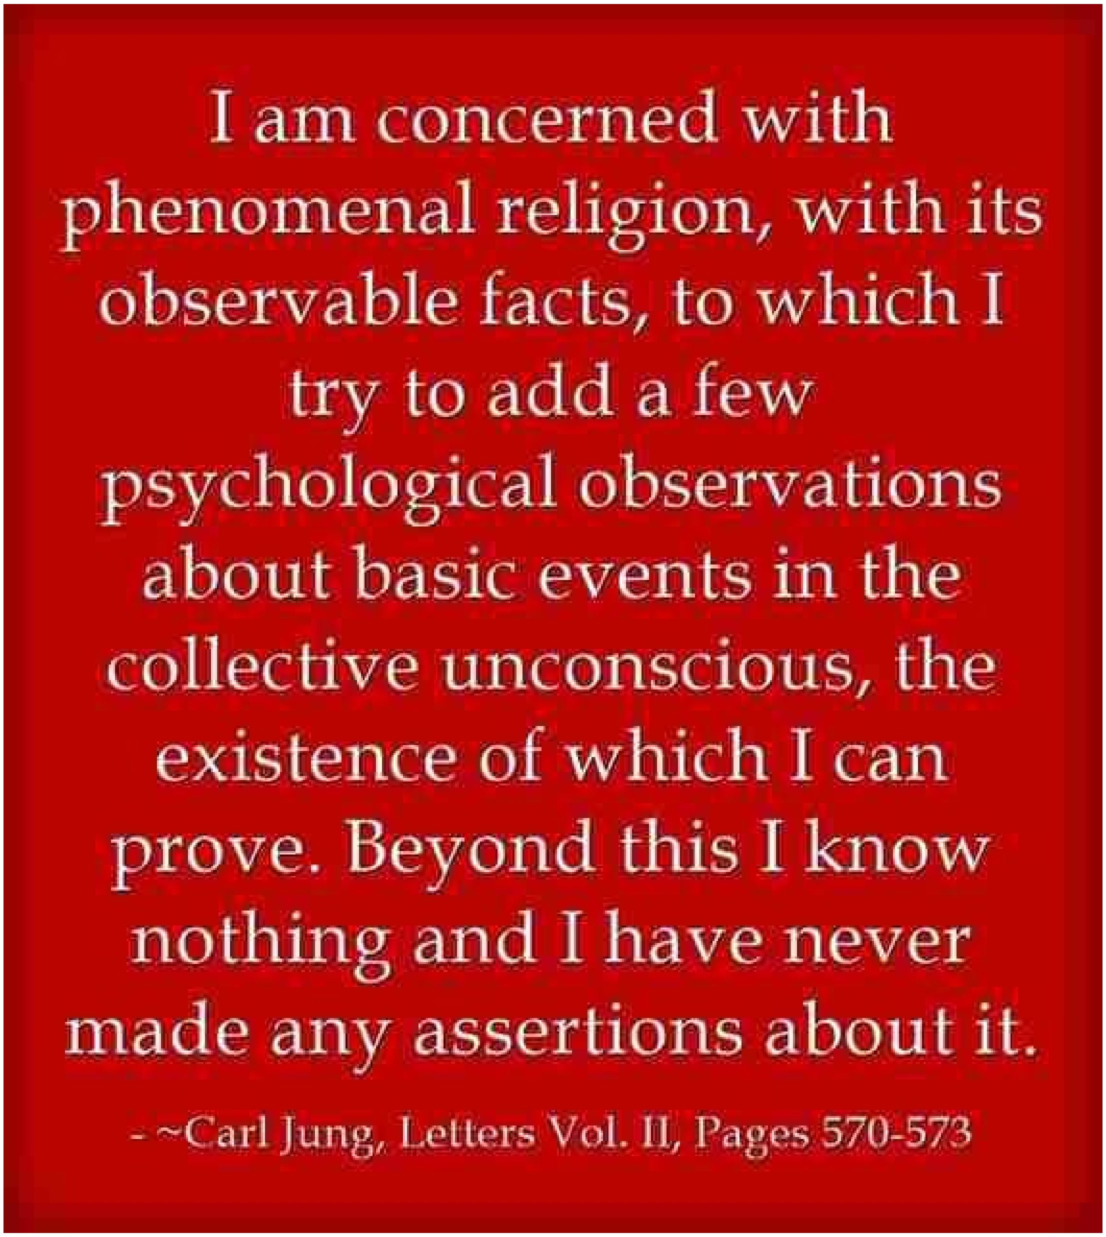
Mental possessions are just as good as ghosts, demons, and gods. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573



I am afraid it is sheer prejudice against science which hinders theologians from understanding my empirical standpoint.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570 -573

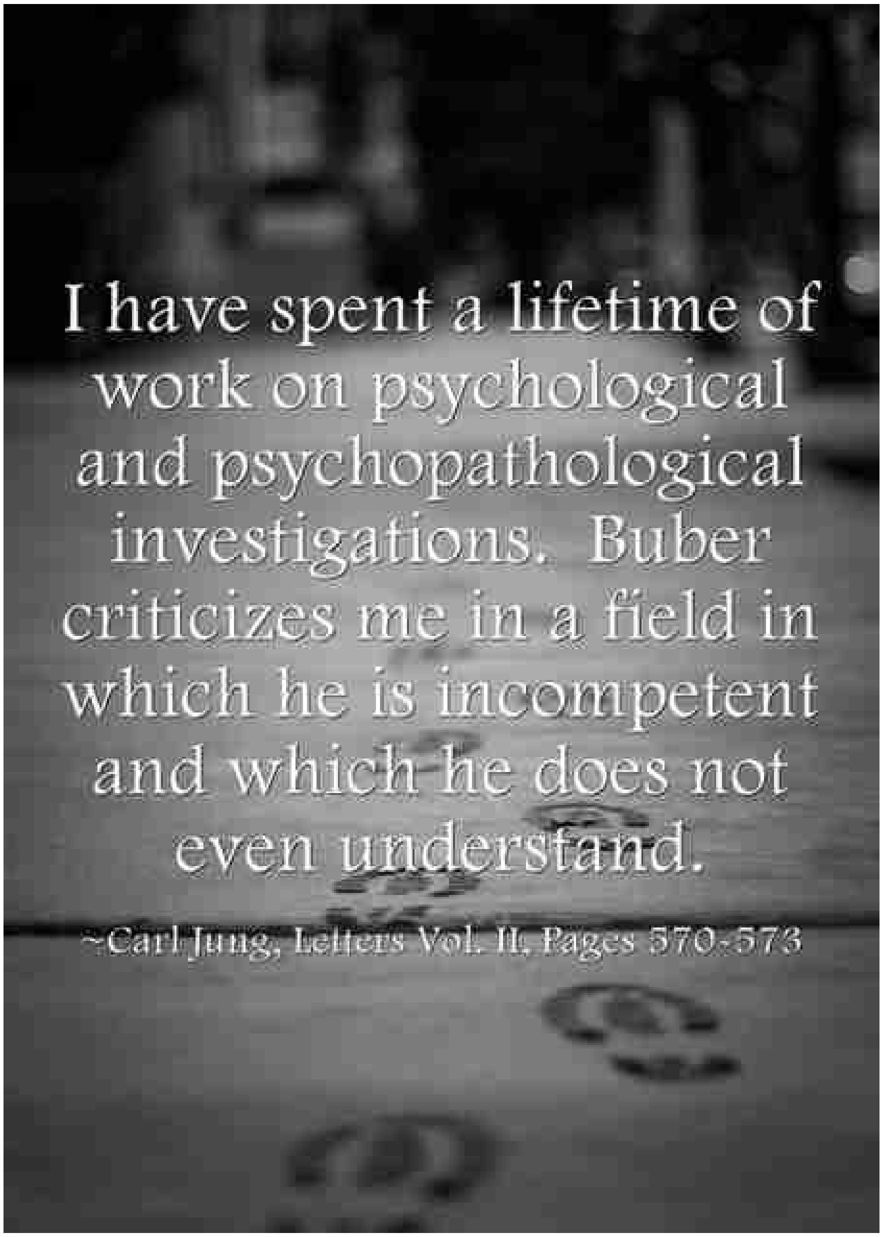
I am afraid it is sheer prejudice against science which hinders theologians from understanding my empirical standpoint. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573



I am concerned with phenomenal religion, with its observable facts, to which I try to add a few psychological observations about basic events in the collective unconscious, the existence of which I can prove. Beyond this I know nothing and I have never made any assertions about it.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573

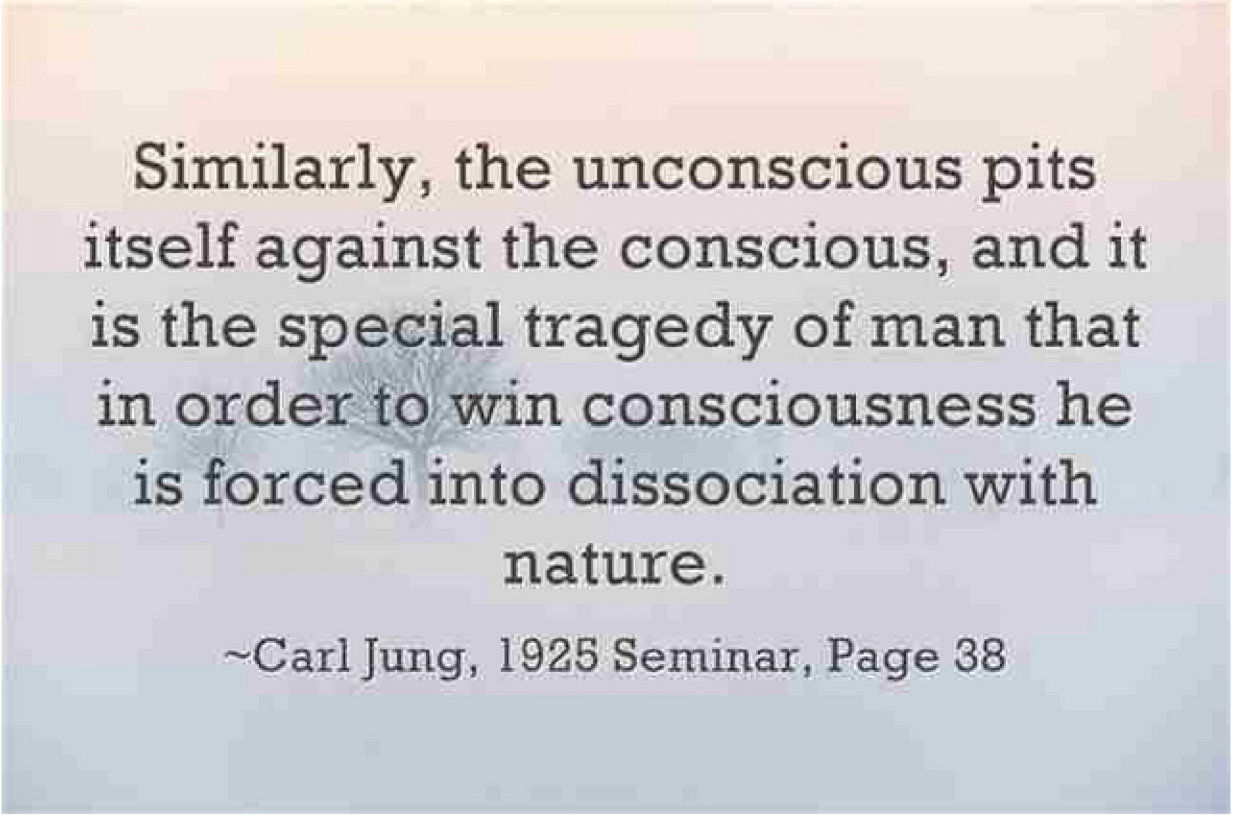
I am concerned with phenomenal religion, with its observable facts, to which I try to add a few psychological observations about basic events in the collective unconscious, the existence of which I can prove. Beyond this I know nothing and I have never made any assertions about it. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573



I have spent a lifetime of work on psychological and psychopathological investigations. Buber criticizes me in a field in which he is incompetent and which he does not even understand.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573

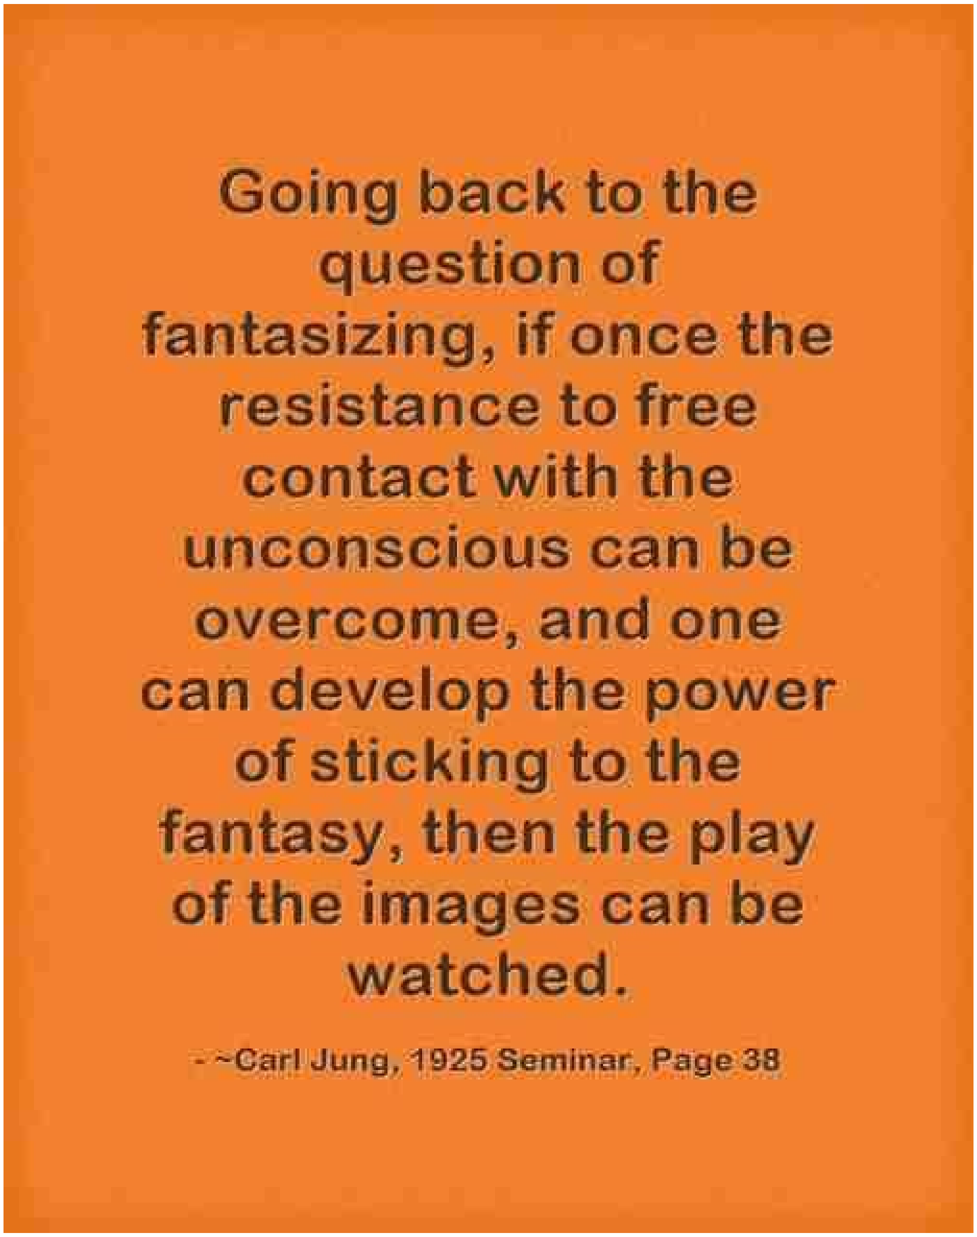
I have spent a lifetime of work on psychological and psychopathological investigations. Buber criticizes me in a field in which he is incompetent and which he does not even understand. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573



Similarly, the unconscious pits itself against the conscious, and it is the special tragedy of man that in order to win consciousness he is forced into dissociation with nature.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38

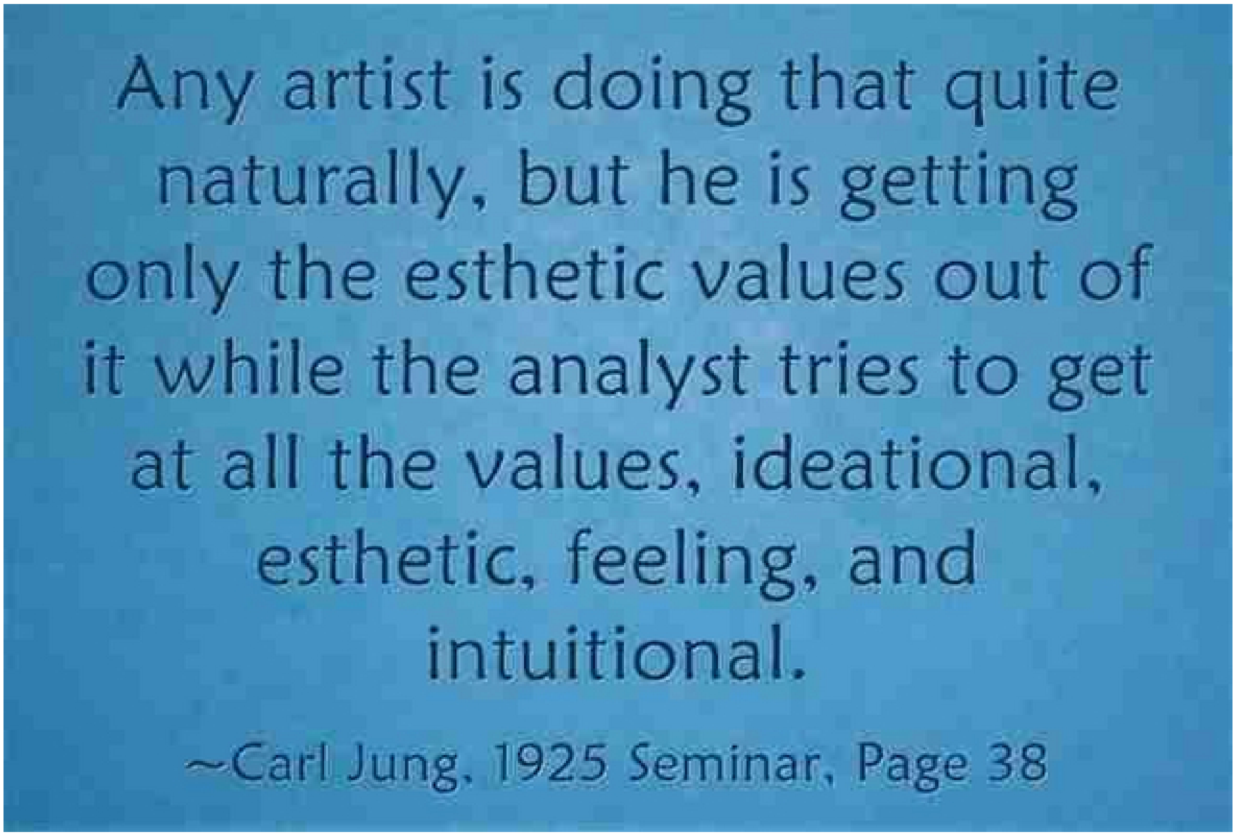
Similarly, the unconscious pits itself against the conscious, and it is the special tragedy of man that in order to win consciousness he is forced into dissociation with nature. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38



Going back to the question of fantasizing, if once the resistance to free contact with the unconscious can be overcome, and one can develop the power of sticking to the fantasy, then the play of the images can be watched.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38

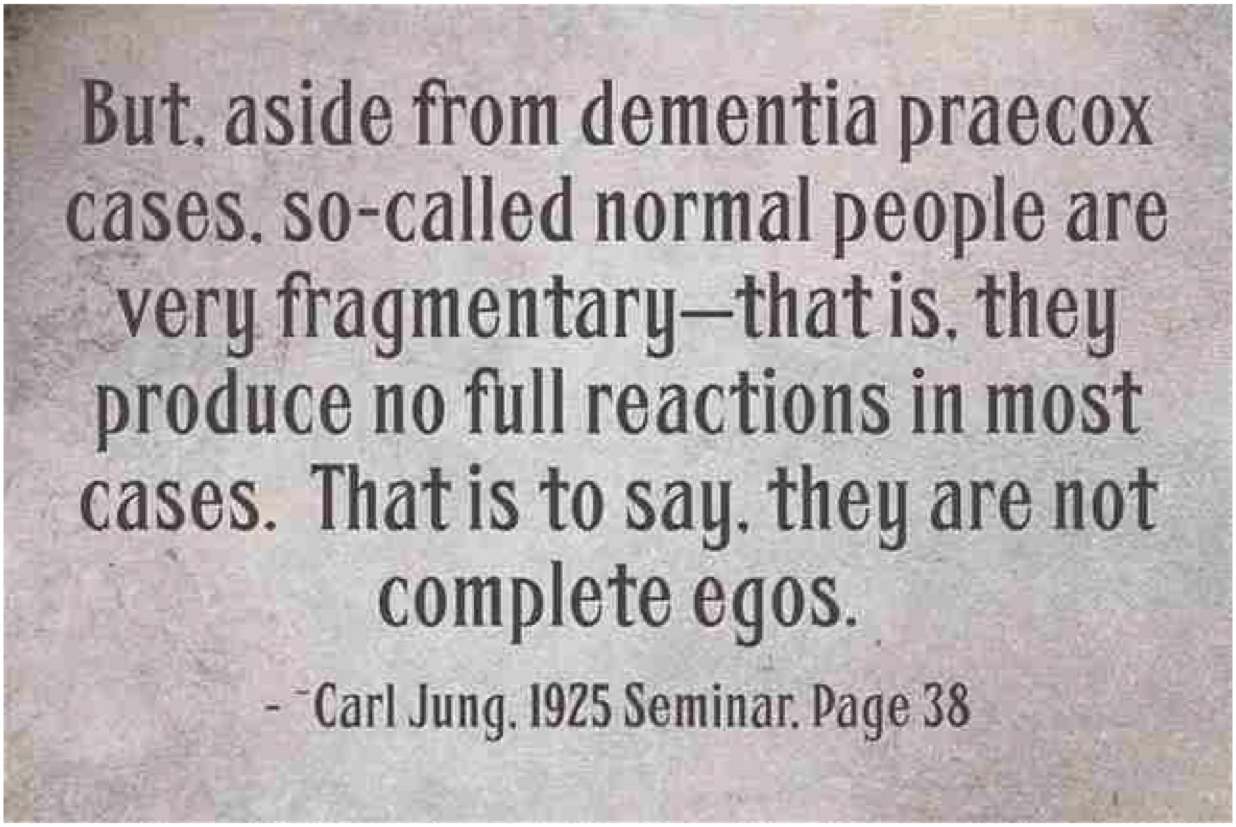
Going back to the question of fantasizing, if once the resistance to free contact with the unconscious can be overcome, and one can develop the power of sticking to the fantasy, then the play of the images can be watched. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38.



Any artist is doing that quite naturally, but he is getting only the esthetic values out of it while the analyst tries to get at all the values, ideational, esthetic, feeling, and intuitional.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38

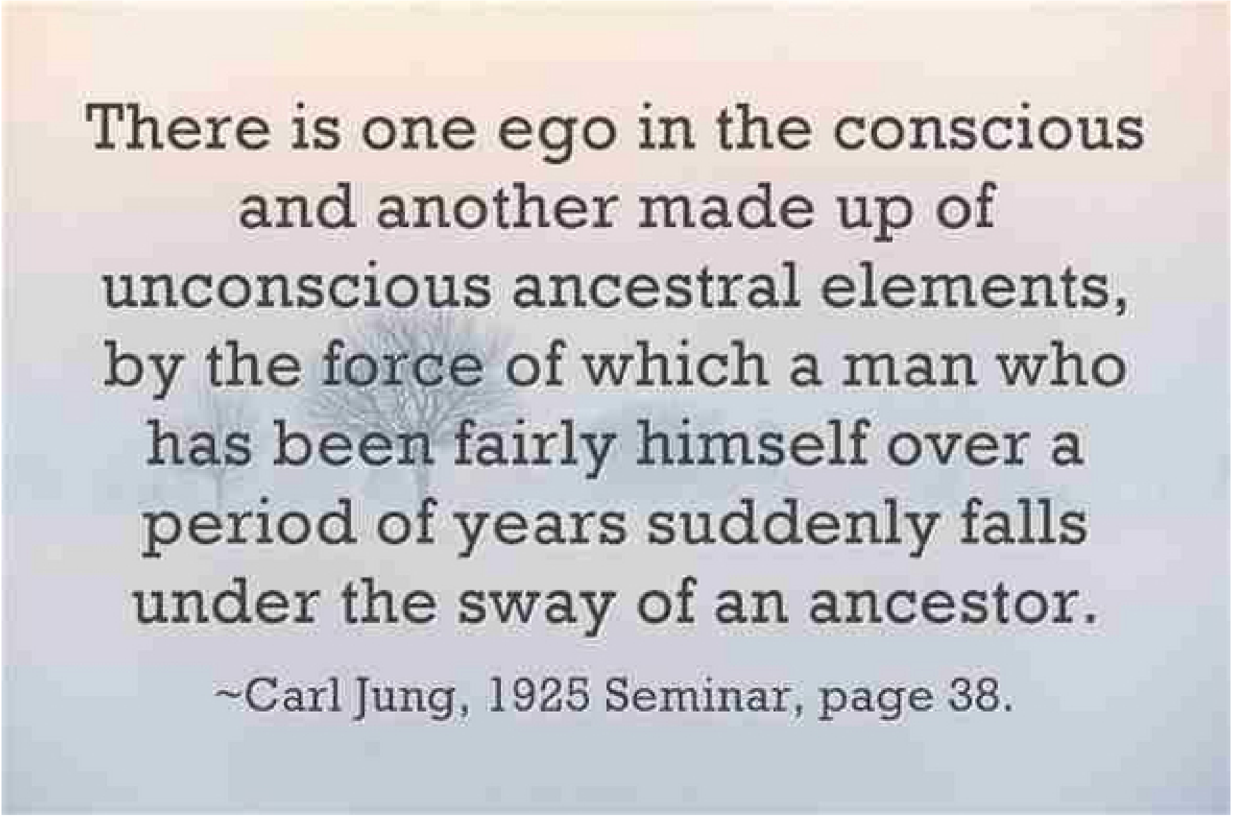
Any artist is doing that quite naturally, but he is getting only the esthetic values out of it while the analyst tries to get at all the values, ideational, esthetic, feeling, and intuitional. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38



But, aside from dementia praecox cases, so-called normal people are very fragmentary—that is, they produce no full reactions in most cases. That is to say, they are not complete egos.

- ¯Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38

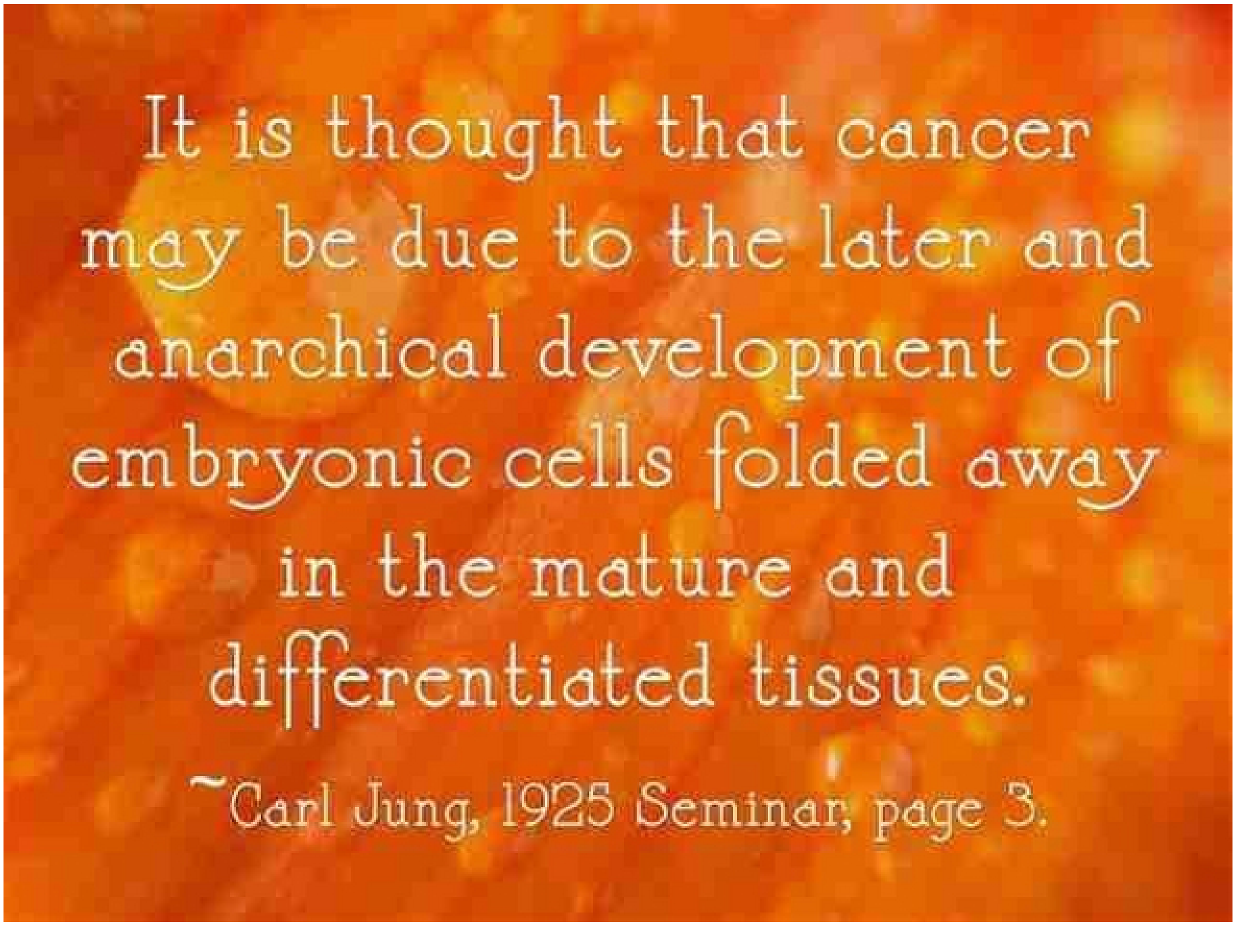
But, aside from dementia praecox cases, so-called normal people are very fragmentary—that is, they produce no full reactions in most cases. That is to say, they are not complete egos. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 38.



There is one ego in the conscious and another made up of unconscious ancestral elements, by the force of which a man who has been fairly himself over a period of years suddenly falls under the sway of an ancestor.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, page 38.

There is one ego in the conscious and another made up of unconscious ancestral elements, by the force of which a man who has been fairly himself over a period of years suddenly falls under the sway of an ancestor. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, page 38.



It is thought that cancer may be due to the later and anarchical development of embryonic cells folded away in the mature and differentiated tissues.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, page 3.

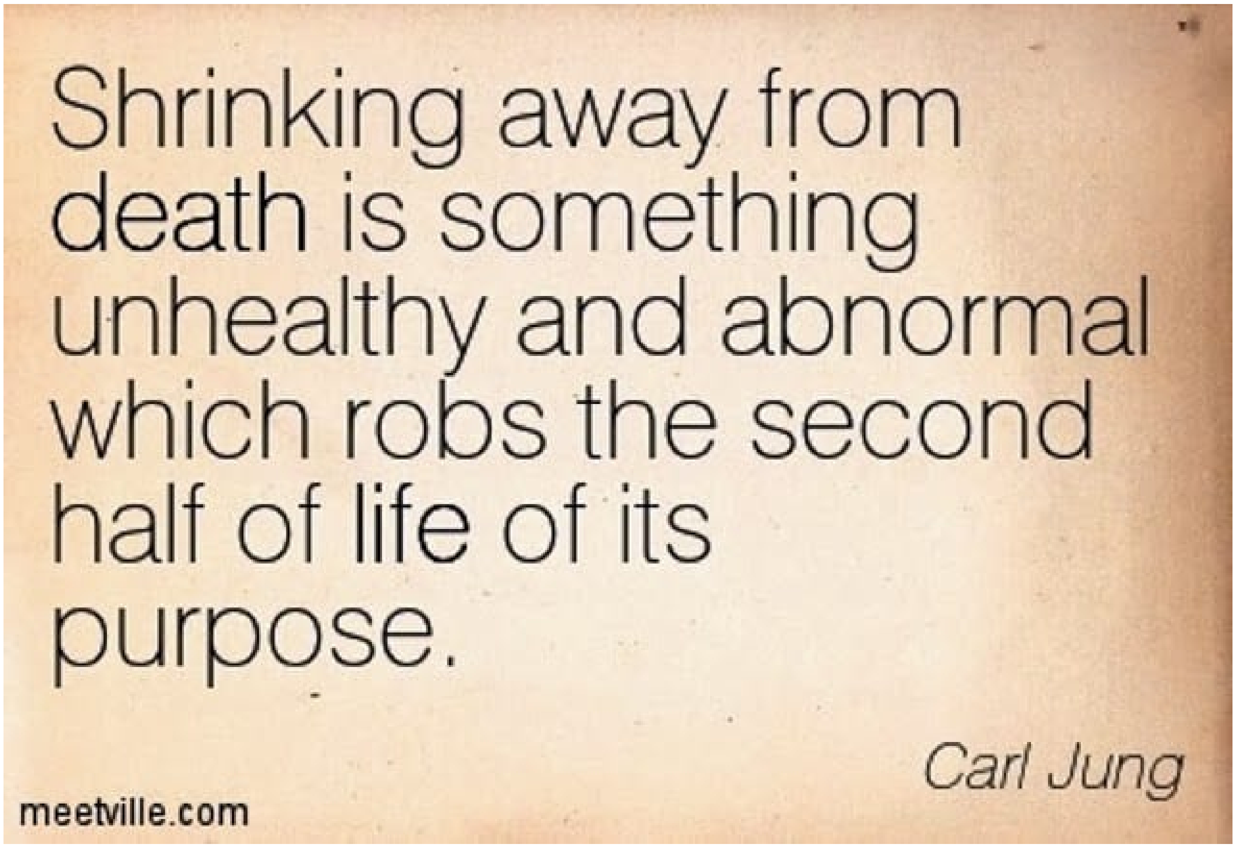
It is thought that cancer may be due to the later and anarchical development of embryonic cells folded away in the mature and differentiated tissues. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 39.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/51e30-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2a9f8-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8ae2a-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/abb5d-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/98f95-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/327f5-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/930bb-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/77942-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2fb54-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/da4f6-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5a86f-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7cf2c-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f65c3-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e1836-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/79080-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5ead5-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8b74f-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/771c9-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/976a2-sss.jpg`

20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e556a-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0f7b8-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8e214-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b45ea-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5158d-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/31085-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9af17-zzz.jpg`

My Last Encounter with Carl Jung (2019-03-13 06:50)

[1]



Shrinking away from death is something unhealthy and abnormal which robs the second half of life of its purpose.

Carl Jung

meetville.com

“If the human mind can operate independently of the brain, then it operates independently of space and time. And if it operates independently of space and time, it is incorruptible.” Carl Jung.

[My Last Encounter with Carl Jung]

It's six in the morning, 8 June. I open the doors to my room in New Delhi—doors which open to a small white terrace, already fulgurating with sunlight. The tremendous June heat starts early in the day. I am partially naked and in a moment I will begin my yogic exercises of sun adoration, "Suryanamaskar".

The trees' incredible verdure, even in this weather, and the birdsong of infinity, greet me.

A servant, who is from around these parts, approaches me with that measured step of the Indians and says to me, "Salam, Sahib." It's his respectful greeting.

He hands me a piece of paper. It's a telegram. I open it without hurry, almost absent-mindedly.

I see that it comes from Zurich and it surprises me that this is the case. I begin reading and I am perplexed. The telegram reads as follows: "Dr. Jung died peacefully yesterday at noon. Best wishes." It is signed by Bailey and Jaffe: the young lady that kept him company, who walked him home—an extraordinary woman—; and his private secretary, a Swiss citizen.

A great sadness immobilizes me right there—my eyes are moist, perhaps because of the intense sun, or perhaps not.

It was so recently that I had been with Dr. Jung, at his house in Küsnacht, next to Lake Zurich. I might have been the last foreign friend to see him. The news has hit me in the depths of my soul.

I have had the enormous fortune of having been prefaced by Jung—that, having been the first and last time that he penned a preface for a purely literary work.

I received a letter from him at the time of our last year's earthquakes in Chile.

He said, "Even if modern men of science will not accept it, there is a relationship between Nature and the soul. Mother Nature now attunes itself to our civilization and begins also to visit destruction. Unfortunately, it has been your country's turn this time. I have thought of Chile so much lately!"

The remembrance flies, I see its image, it's on my mind.

So very recently I arrived at his house, amid a fine rain. Jung's house is in the outskirts of Zurich, in Küsnacht. At the entrance's portal there is a phrase in Latin that reads, more or less, "Summoned or not in God. He is always present."

Inside there are paintings and beautiful objects, antique engravings, mediaeval paintings.

I was received by Ms. Bailey, who invited me into a small living room, where she served us tea.

We talked about Dr. Jung. She told that me he had not been well during the last few days, feeling very tired as a result of working intensively on a 80-page essay he had written in longhand, as usual, directly in English for an American publication, and due to appear soon with the title "Man and his Myths".

Ms. Bailey is very worried, as Jung has said to her, "I wish to go, but you tie me here." She does not believe him, as she thinks that Dr. Jung is still interested in life and the Earth.

He has told me that "to die is also to go to Jung's collective Unconscious, only to then, from there, go back to the realm of forms, of forms..." Hesse has also told me that "Jung is a giant, a giant mountain in our time." And he has asked me to forward Jung his greetings—"the steppe wolf's greetings," he has said.

Jung has been unwell, it is true, but he's afflicted by no illness. That day he had felt better and even got up to receive me.

Ms. Bailey asks that we go upstairs, but also that I don't stay long so as not to tire him.

We entered his study. And there was Jung, on a chair, next to the window facing the lake.

He's wearing a Japanese robe that makes him look like a Zen Buddhist monk, an old samurai, or a magus from earlier times. He is haloed by a crepuscular light, and he is surrounded by alchemical engravings and a great paining of the Hindu god Shiva on the summit of Mount Kailash.

He smiles with that smile of his, filled with cunning, wisdom, and benevolence. He reaches for his pipe, but fails.

I tell him, "What a beautiful Japanese robe." It is a ceremonial robe. Out of my pocket I take box from Cashmere that I have brought him as a present. He looks at it and says, "It's made out of turquoise." And then he adds, "I've never been to Cashmere. I traversed the South of India; Madora—all those very 'interesting' places."

He then talks to me about the Hindus and the Chinese; he makes reference to a book by a Chinese master of Zen Buddhism, whose name I can't remember now, and he tells me that it is the best he has read on the subject.

I transmit Hermann Hesse's greetings and I relate my conversation with that writer about death. I explain that I have asked him whether it is important to know that there is something beyond death.

Jung meditates for a while and states that the question has been posted incorrectly—that I should have asked whether there is reason to believe that there is something beyond death.

I now ask Dr. Jung, "And what do you believe? Is there?" He answers, "if the human mind can operate independently of the brain, then it operates independently of space and time. And if it operates independently of space and time, it is incorruptible."
And what do you believe, Dr. Jung? What do you think?

"I have seen men wounded by bullets to the brain during the war who have a lost all brain function and who nevertheless have dreams and are able to remember them afterwards. What is it they dream? There are small children, who don't yet have a defined self, whose consciousness is diffuse and spread over their bodies, yet who have deep and personal dreams that mark them for the rest of their lives. There is no self there. What is that other they dream?"

Do you believe, Dr. Jung, that there exists something like a subtle body, an astral body, the "Linga-Sarira" of Hindu philosophy, which detaches itself upon death?

"I don't know. I have seen objects materialize and mediums move objects from afar without touching them with their physical bodies."

And Dr. Jung continues:

“Some time ago I was very ill, almost in a coma; everybody thought that I would die and maybe even that I was suffering greatly, because in this condition one’s body makes people believe that one is suffering. But in reality I felt as if I were floating and experienced a marvelous sense of freedom. I remembered it afterwards.”

Dr. Jung always wore on his right hand a ring with a Gnostic gem. An Egyptian gem. We spoke about the meaning of that ring, and he explained, “All these symbols are alive in me.” His memory and culture, even at the age of 85, was incredible.

At times he spoke like a poet, like a magus, like a mystic. One time he said to me, “My message is not wholly understood; only poets understand it.”

Now I ask him:

What will happen to mankind in the coming technological super-civilization?

Do you think that, in twenty years, anyone will care about the spirit of symbols, fully in the era of interplanetary journeys, with the Sputniks, the Gagarins, and the Shephards? Will not the spirit come to appear passé?

Dr. Jung smiles cunningly and states:

“Sooner or later man will have to return to himself, even if from the stars. All this that is happening now is an extreme form of escapism, because it is easier to reach Mars than to find oneself. If man doesn’t find himself, then he faces the greatest of dangers: his own annihilation. On journeys into outer space there is also an unconscious attempt to solve the gravest of all problems that man will have to face in the future: overpopulation.”

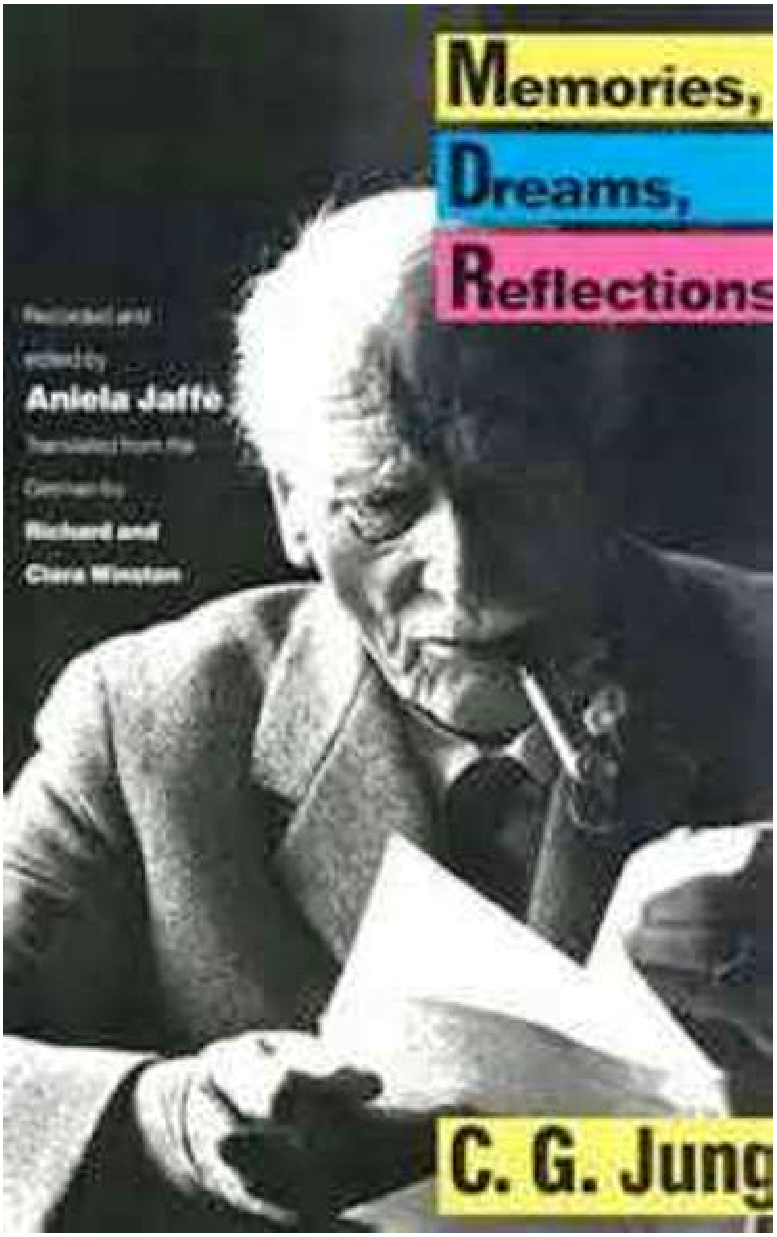
Dr. Jung was going to continue talking about this very important topic when Ms. Bailey entered the room to say that Dr. Jung’s daughter and son-in-law were waiting. I had not fulfilled my promise of a brief conversation.

But now I know it doesn’t matter, because mine was to be his last interview. And something perhaps told me that this was the case, for when I reached the door I stopped and turned my head. Jung sat there staring at me, with a soft smile and lifting his hand in a gesture of farewell. His last one. The hand with the Gnostic ring. I bowed, respectfully. Last Encounter with Carl Jung by Michael Serrano

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/43270-away.jpg`

Memories, Dreams and Reflections [Prologue] (2019-03-13 08:35)

[1]



Memories,
Dreams,
Reflections Recorded and edited by Aniela Jaffé
Translated from the German by Richard and Clara Winston
C. G. Jung

My life is a story of the self-realization of the unconscious.

Everything in the unconscious seeks outward manifestation, and the personality too desires to evolve out of its unconscious conditions and to experience itself as a whole. I cannot employ the language of science to trace this process of growth in myself, for I cannot experience myself as a scientific problem.

What we are to our inward vision, and what man appears to be sub specie aeternitatis, can only be expressed by way of myth. Myth is more individual and expresses life more precisely than does science. Science works with concepts of averages which are far too general to do justice to the subjective variety of an individual life. Thus it is that I have now undertaken, in my eighty-third year, to tell my personal myth. I can only make direct statements, only "tell stories." Whether or not the stories are "true" is not the problem.

The only question is whether what I tell is my fable, my truth.

An autobiography is so difficult to write because we possess no standards, no objective foundation, from which to judge ourselves. There are really no proper bases for comparison. I know that in many things I am not like others, but I do not know what I really am like. Man cannot compare himself with any other creature; he is not a monkey, not a cow, not a tree. I am a man. But what is it to be that? Like every other being, I am a splinter of the infinite deity, but I cannot contrast myself with any animal, any plant or any stone. Only a mythical being has a range greater than man's. How then can a man form any definite opinions about himself?

We are a psychic process which we do not control, or only partly direct. Consequently, we cannot have any final judgment about ourselves or our lives. If we had, we would know everything–but at most that is only a pretense. At bottom we never know how it has all come about. The story of a life begins somewhere, at some particular point we happen to remember; and even then it was already highly complex. We do not know how life is going to turn out. Therefore the story has no beginning, and the end can only be vaguely hinted at.

The life of man is a dubious experiment. It is a tremendous phenomenon only in numerical terms. Individually, it is so fleeting, so insufficient, that it is literally a miracle that anything can exist and develop at all. I was impressed by that fact long ago, as a young medical student, and it seemed to me miraculous that I should not have been prematurely annihilated.

Life has always seemed to me like a plant that lives on its rhizome. Its true life is invisible, hidden in the rhizome. The part that appears above ground lasts only a single summer. Then it withers away—an ephemeral apparition. When we think of the unending growth and decay of life and civilizations, we cannot escape the impression of absolute nullity. Yet I have never lost a sense of something that lives and endures underneath the eternal flux. What we see is the blossom, which passes. The rhizome remains.

In the end the only events in my life worth telling are those when the imperishable world irrupted into this transitory one. That is why I speak chiefly of inner experiences, amongst which I include my dreams and visions. These form the prima materia of my scientific work. They were the fiery magma out of which the stone that had to be worked was crystallized.

All other memories of travels, people and my surroundings have paled beside these interior happenings. Many people have participated in the story of our times and written about it; if the reader wants an account of that, let him turn to them or get somebody to tell it to him. Recollection of the outward events of my life has largely faded or disappeared. But my encounters with the "other" reality, my bouts with the unconscious, are indelibly engraved upon my memory. In that realm there has always been wealth in abundance, and everything else has lost importance by comparison.

Similarly, other people are established inalienably in my memories only if their names were entered in the scrolls of my destiny from the beginning, so that encountering them was at the same time a kind of recollection.

Inner experiences also set their seal on the outward events that came my way and assumed importance for me in youth or later on. I early arrived at the insight that when no answer comes from within to the problems and complexities of life, they ultimately mean very little. Outward circumstances are no substitute for inner experience. Therefore my life has been singularly poor in outward happenings. I cannot tell much about them, for it would strike me as hollow and insubstantial. I can understand myself only in the light of inner happenings. It is these that make up the singularity of my life, and with these my autobiography deals. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections, Prologue

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/03/32606-memories.jpg`

The Mother Archetype (2019-03-13 08:40)

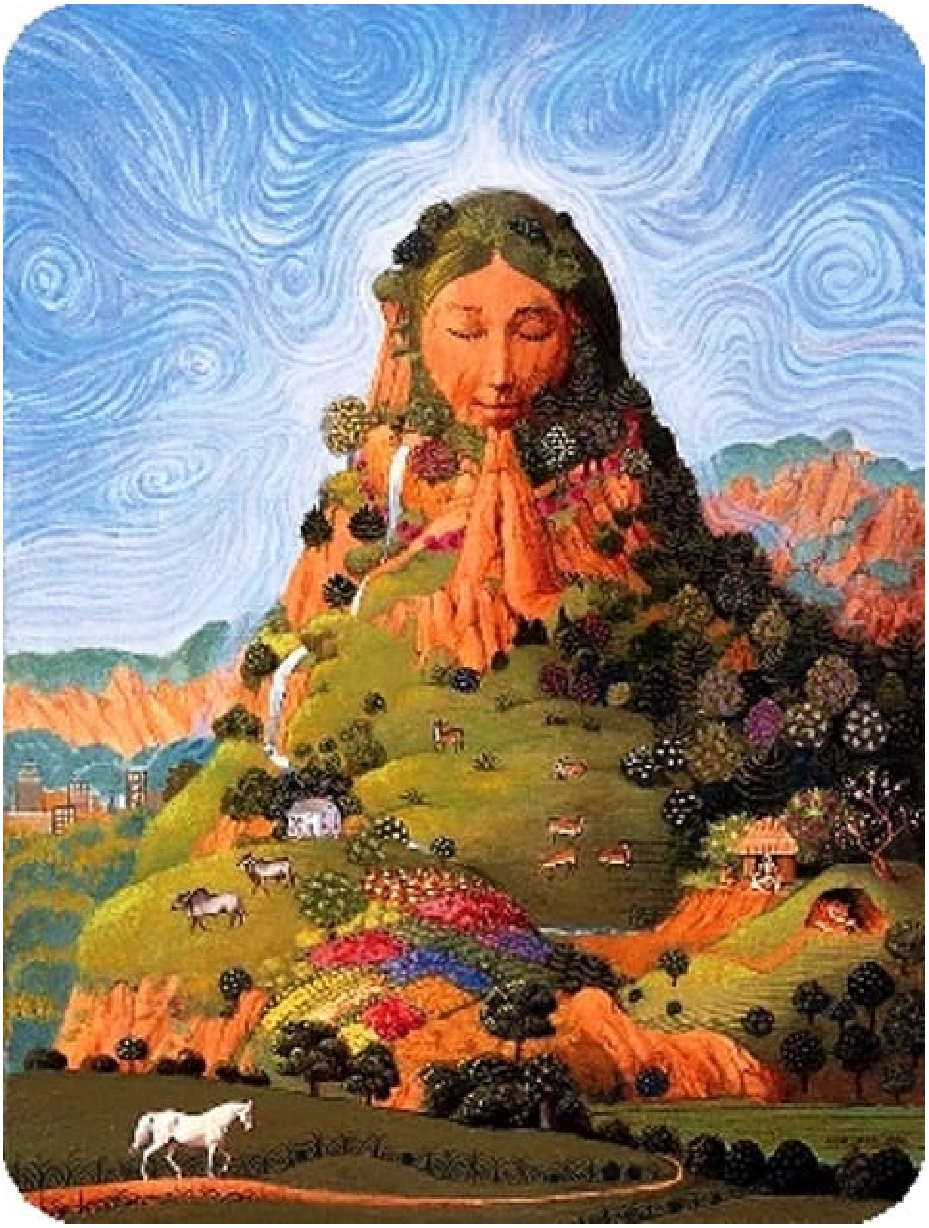
[1]



The Mother Archetype:

Like any other archetype, the mother archetype appears under an almost infinite variety of aspects.

I mention here only some of the more characteristic.

First in importance are the personal mother and grandmother, stepmother and mother-in-law; then any woman with whom a relationship exists—for example, a nurse or governess or perhaps a remote ancestress. Then there are what might be termed mothers in a figurative sense.

To this category belongs the goddess, and especially the Mother of God, the Virgin, and Sophia. Mythology offers many variations of the mother archetype, as for instance the mother who reappears as the maiden in the myth of Demeter and Kore; or the mother who is also the beloved, as in the Cybele-Attis myth.

Other symbols of the mother in a figurative sense appear in things representing the goal of our longing for redemption, such as Paradise, the Kingdom of God, the Heavenly Jerusalem.

Many things arousing devotion or feelings of awe, as for instance the Church, university, city or country, heaven, earth, the woods, the sea or any still waters, matter even, the underworld and the moon, can be mother-symbols.

The archetype is often associated with things and places standing for fertility and fruitfulness: the cornucopia, a ploughed field, a garden.

It can be attached to a rock, a cave, a tree, a spring, a deep well, or to various vessels such as the baptismal font, or to vessel-shaped flowers like the rose or the lotus.

Because of the protection it implies, the magic circle or mandala can be a form of mother archetype.

Hollow objects such as ovens and cooking vessels are associated with the mother archetype, and, of course, the uterus, yoni, and anything of a like shape. Added to this list there are many animals, such as the cow, hare, and helpful animals in general.

All these symbols can have a positive, favourable meaning or a negative, evil meaning. An ambivalent aspect is seen in the goddesses of fate (Moira, Graeae, Norns).

Evil symbols are the witch, the dragon (or any devouring and entwining animal, such as a large fish or a serpent), the grave, the sarcophagus, deep water, death, nightmares and bogies (Empusa, Lilith, etc.). This list is not, of course, complete; it presents only the most important features of the mother archetype.

The qualities associated with it are maternal solicitude and sympathy; the magic authority of the female; the wisdom and spiritual exaltation that transcend reason; any helpful instinct or impulse; all that is benign, all that cherishes and sustains, that fosters growth and fertility.

The place of magic transformation and rebirth, together with the underworld and its inhabitants, are presided over by the mother.

On the negative side the mother archetype may connote anything secret, hidden, dark; the abyss, the world of the dead, anything that devours, seduces, and poisons, that is terrifying and inescapable like fate.

All these attributes of the mother archetype have been fully described and documented in my book Symbols of Transformation.

There I formulated the ambivalence of these attributes as “the loving and the terrible mother.” Perhaps the historical example of the dual nature of the mother most familiar to us is the Virgin Mary, who the mother archetype is not only the Lord’s mother, but also, according to the medieval allegories, his cross.

In India, “the loving and terrible mother” is the paradoxical Kali. Sankhya philosophy has elaborated the mother archetype into the concept of prakrti (matter) and assigned to it the three gunas or fundamental attributes: sattva, rajas, tamas: goodness, passion, and darkness.

These are three essential aspects of the mother: her cherishing and nourishing goodness, her orgiastic emotionality, and her Stygian depths.

The special feature of the philosophical myth, which shows Prakrti dancing before Purusha in order to remind him of “discriminating knowledge,” does not belong to the mother archetype but to the archetype of the anima, which in a man’s psychology invariably appears, at first, mingled with the mother-image.

Although the figure of the mother as it appears in folklore is more or less universal, this image changes markedly when it appears in the individual psyche. In treating patients one is at first impressed, and indeed arrested, by the apparent significance of the personal mother.

This figure of the personal mother looms so large in all personalistic psychologies that, as we know, they never got beyond it, even in theory, to other important aetiological factors. My own view differs from that of other medico-psychological theories principally in that I attribute to the personal mother only a limited aetiological significance.

That is to say, all those influences which the literature describes as being exerted on the children do not come from the mother herself, but rather from the archetype projected upon her, which gives her a mythological background and invests her with authority and numinosity. The aetiological and traumatic effects produced by the mother must be divided into two groups:

(1) those corresponding to traits of character or attitudes actually present in the mother, and (2) those referring to traits which the mother only seems to possess, the reality being composed of more or less fantastic (i.e., archetypal) projections on the part of the child.

Freud himself had already seen that the real aetiology of neuroses does not lie in traumatic effects, as he at first suspected, but in a peculiar development of infantile fantasy.

This is not to deny that such a development can be traced back to disturbing influences emanating from the mother.

I myself make it a rule to look first for the cause of infantile neuroses in the mother, as I know from experience that a child is much more likely to develop normally than neurotically, and that in the great majority of cases definite causes of disturbances can be found in the parents, especially in the mother.

The contents of the child’s abnormal fantasies can be referred to the personal mother only in part, since they often contain clear and unmistakable allusions which could not possibly have reference to human beings.

This is especially true where definitely mythological products are concerned, as is frequently the case in infantile phobias where the mother may appear as a wild beast, a witch, a spectre, an ogre, a hermaphrodite, and so on.

It must be borne in mind, however, that such fantasies are not always of unmistakably mythological origin, and even if they are, they may not always be rooted in the unconscious archetype but may have been occasioned by fairytales or accidental remarks.

A thorough investigation is therefore indicated in each case. For practical reasons, such an investigation cannot be made so readily with children as with adults, who almost invariably transfer their fantasies to the physician during treatment—or, to be more precise, the fantasies are projected upon him automatically.

When that happens, nothing is gained by brushing them aside as ridiculous, for archetypes are among the inalienable assets of every psyche.

They form the “treasure in the realm of shadowy thoughts” of which Kant spoke, and of which we have ample the mother archetype evidence in the countless treasure motifs of mythology.

An archetype is in no sense just an annoying prejudice; it becomes so only when it is in the wrong place.

In themselves, archetypal images are among the highest values of the human psyche; they have peopled the heavens of all races from time immemorial.

To discard them as valueless would be a distinct loss. Our task is not, therefore, to deny the archetype, but to dissolve the projections, in order to restore their contents to the individual who has involuntarily lost them by projecting them outside himself. Carl Jung; Four Archetypes :Mother, Rebirth, Spirit, Trickster

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/03/ab018-mother.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Men, Women, and God" (2019-03-13 08:41)

[1]

MEN, WOMEN, AND GOD

Introduction: The popular English journalist Frederick Sands, then foreign correspondent for the London Daily Mail, interviewed Jung at Kusnacht and published the results as five successive articles in the Daily Mail, April 25-29, 1955.

Jung had read and approved the text of the interview. Sands's articles were headed with provocative sentences drawn from Jung's words—"To Call Women the Weaker Sex is Sheer Nonsense," "You Must Quarrel to Be Happy," etc.

On September Io, 1961, three months after Jung's death, the material of the first two articles was rearranged and published under the title "The Trouble with Women" in the Sunday magazine sections of several American papers—the Washington Post, the New York Journal, the American Weekly, and others.

Dr. Jung: A man's foremost interest should be his work.

But a woman = man is her work and her business.

Yes, I know it sounds like a convenient philosophy of the selfish male when I say that. But marriage means a home.
And home is like a nest—not enough room for both birds at once.

One sits inside, the Other perches on the edge and looks about and attends to all outside business. The vanity of men is in most cases a result of their professional activities.
The extent it reaches is sometimes almost grotesque.

Most men are afraid of something and are full of prejudices—which are not there in the case of most women. Men are inclined to resent any interference with their way of thinking and their hidebound convictions.

This is especially the case with their manly prestige, which they feel they have to guard even when it is not threatened.

They may be afraid that they are ill—or of being told that they are ill; they may have financial or some other suppressed worries.

But more often than not they are suffering merely from—fear.

Men almost invariably are not honest, either with themselves or with me.

So many women are just crying out for a better understanding with their husbands.

Their men are incapable of grasping this—which is not strange since men do not understand women anyway. But women are unable to realize that in business their husbands are not the monarchs of all they survey.

As often as not they are underdogs who have to put up with a great deal—a bullying boss, for instance. And the best remedy for that is a woman's understanding.
After a day at business in such uncongenial circumstances—having to be pleasant to people he doesn't like—a man comes home in the evening wanting to bang someone over the head.

Instead he is expected to continue the torture by being very nice to his wife.

A woman, of course, has also had her day's worries with the children and the household.

She would like to talk about them.

She is, in fact, just in the mood for a chat. But her husband is tired and taciturn.

The average woman cannot visualize a man's problems.

His secretary understands her boss better than his wife does.

I have never said so much to anyone in an interview before. Probably I shall find myself in trouble—especially with the women—for some of the things I have said.

Women are much tougher than men underneath. To call women the weaker sex is sheer nonsense. Beware those angel-faced types who always appear weak and helpless and talk in a high-pitched voice. They are the toughest of them all.

Be cautious and prepared for anything with quiet women.

The old proverb says "Still waters run deep"—and that's particularly so in the case of women.

I know it sounds malicious, but quiet women usually have some surprises in store for us once we start delving beneath the surface.

Talkative women should not be taken at their face value. Often their talk is only a blind.
Many people talk too much because they do not want to discuss essential things. Women who talk most think least.
Women will call me cynical and dislike me for being so frank. It is women's instinct to capture and hold one man.

It is man's instinct to get as many women as possible.

Man tries not to be caught, at least for as long as he can readily Cluck his pursuer. That is the instinct of the fast-running animal: escape by flight.

A woman's best prey is the man that no other woman has been able to catch.

To catch a man that any woman could have caught—that makes the prize relatively valueless.

But once she gets her man, woman holds him in a strong grip and makes sure that no other women are in the offing.

That is natural and necessary, for it is man's nature to alight here and there and then take flight again—if he can.

I have terrible trouble making people see what I mean!

Every psychological statement is also true when it is turned round to mean the opposite. That is complicated—but that is nature.
There are, for instance, any number of quite virile men who have a certain idea of the woman they want; they make a beeline for that woman and are never troubled by any other women.

Such men generally get a wife they have to watch, for they are not the kind to stay inside the nest.

And if they are not careful they may find the female, perched outside, flying off on occasional sorties of her own.

A woman is at her best only when she loves a man.

Personal relationship is her basic need and when that 'falters she grows dissatisfied and argumentative in a way that often leads to divorce.

But this certainly doesn't mean that men and women should remain placid.

On the contrary, some tension must prevail in their daily lives, for otherwise there cannot be the ideal relationship in sex—and this is a "must" between husband and wife.

I once had an "ideal-looking couple" who came to consult me. Something had gone wrong.

When I looked at them I wondered what could have brought them to me.

They appeared perfectly suited to one another in every way and, as I soon discovered, they were blessed with all the material things life could offer.

But eventually I found that the real trouble was that they were too well suited. This prevented any tension existing in their intimate relations.
They coincided so much that nothing happened—a situation as awkward as the opposite extreme of total incompatibility.

Look at it in terms of everyday life.

Is a conversation likely to be in any way interesting when you know beforehand that your partner will agree with everything you say?

What is the use of discussing a conviction already shared and accepted as a matter of course?

The incentive to discussion dies—there is no potential.

When you know that your opinion agrees with your partner's, there is no point in mentioning it at all. So what does there remain to talk about?
It is far more interesting and productive to discuss something about which different views are held.

I do not particularly enjoy a discussion in which everybody agrees with me—there is no obstacle to overcome, no tension, no productive flow.

Difference of opinion can be fruitful; so can quarrels fiery are in the way of getting together, and one has to make an effort to surmount them.

Mentally, morally, physically: in ail these ways Nature, has created an extreme difference between man and woman, so that he finds his opposite in her and she in him.

That creates tension.

If man and woman were the same, that would be stalemate. The earth would be sterile.

Where the land is flat there is no flow of water; it has nowhere to go; it stagnates. In order to produce energy you must have opposites—an above and a below.

There must be a difference in level, and the greater it is the swifter and more forcefully does the water flow.
To me a particularly beautiful woman is a source of terror.

A beautiful woman is as a rule a terrible disappointment; you cannot have your cake and eat it. In men, beauty and brain are seldom found together.

The brain of a highly attractive man of handsome physique becomes merely the appendage of his wonderful torso.

At my country retreat I do as I please.

I write, I paint—but I spend most of the time just drifting along with my thoughts.

It seems to me we have reached the limit of our evolution —the point from which we can advance no further.

Man started from an unconscious state and has ever striven for greater consciousness.

The development of consciousness is the burden, the suffering, and the blessing of mankind.

Each new discovery leads to greater consciousness, and the path along which we are going is merely an extension of it. This inevitably calls for greater responsibility and enforces a great change in ourselves.

We must draw conclusions from what we know and discover, and not take everything for granted. Man has come to be man's worst enemy.

It is a clash between man and God, in which man's Luciferan genius has produced in the H-bomb the power to destroy more effectively than any ancient god could.

We must begin to learn about man until every Jekyll can see his Hyde.

The strains and stresses of twentieth-century living have so affected the modern mind that in many countries children are no longer able to concentrate.

Here in Zurich the schoolteachers of the upper part of the lake asked me why it is that they are no longer able to carry out the full curriculum.

The children, they said, seemed unable to concentrate.

I told them that the fault lay with the cinema, the radio, television, the continual swish of motor-cars and the drone of planes overhead.

For these are all distractions.

The same distractions affect adults as well.

You cannot go into a hotel or a restaurant and carry on an intelligent conversation over a meal or a cup of tea because your words are drowned by music.

Some time ago I was in a New York hotel and wanted to have a discussion with an American professor.

It was impossible—we gave it up.
I have nothing against music at the proper time and place, but these days one can't get away from it.

I have just returned from the Ticino, in Italian Switzerland, where they love music.

But when they turned on the radio in the restaurant I got so exasperated that I pulled out the plug. Jazz and all that sort of stuff is silly and stultifying.

But it is even worse when they play classics in such a place. Bach, for instance.
Bach talks to God.

I am gripped by Bach.

But I could slay a man who plays Bach in banal surroundings. Cocktails and all they stand for are just as bad.
They simply kill all sensible conversation.

Why, most of the people who go in for cocktail drinking are only able to keep up a decent conversation after the third.

Worst of all is television.

Without knowing it man is always concerned with God.

What some people call instinct or intuition is nothing other than God.

God is that voice inside us which tells us what to do and what not to do. In other words, our conscience.

In this dark atomic age of ours, with its lurking fear, man is seeking guidance.

Consciously or unconsciously he is once more groping for God.

I make my patients understand that all the things which happen to them against their will are a superior force.

They can call it God or devil, and that doesn't matter to me, as long as they realize that it is a superior force.

God is nothing more than that superior force in our life. You can experience God every day.

There are for instance, the "strange recurrences" that happen in the lives of certain individuals.

Many patients come to see me about them.

They want, quite naturally, to know why these things recur, whether the cause lies in themselves, and whether there is anything they can do to end it.

These recurrences may be so conspicuous that—especially if they are unpleasant—the person concerned may begin to feel himself the victim of some sinister form of persecution.

We must make a clear difference between this and the persecution mania of an unhinged mind. The occurrences are often quite genuine and not merely imagined.
Once I was walking in the garden of my house with a lady who had consulted me.

She had told me, among other things, that whenever she was in the country she was attacked by birds—black birds.

Hardly had we got away from the house than several crows approached and swooped down on us, fluttering about and cawing angrily.

They left me alone, but kept on flying at my patient.

One of them even nipped her on the back of the neck before I drove them off. Another strange case: I treated three daughters and their mother.
The three young women kept on having terrible dreams about the elder lady, who was a model mother. They dreamt of her as a wild animal.
Years later she became prone to fits of melancholia in which she acted like a wild beast. The fact is that what happens to a person is characteristic of him.

He represents a pattern and all the pieces fit.

One by one, as his life proceeds, they fall into place according to some predestined design.

All that I have learned has led me step by step to an unshakable conviction of the existence of God.

I only believe in what I know.

And that eliminates believing.

Therefore I do not take His existence on belief—I know that He exists. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 244-251

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/092a7-12bgod.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Error." (2019-03-13 08:45)

[1]

ERRARE
HUMANUM
EST
Anneo Seneca

Thinking protects against the way of error, and therefore it leads to petrification. Carl Jung and Elijah, Liber Novus, Page 248.

There, that’s the error, one must not seek happiness. The happiness that one seeks is a usurped one. Knowledge rests not upon truth alone, but upon error also. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul If you avoid error you do not live. Carl Jung, Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, p. 98.

Without error and sin there is no experience of grace, that is, no union of God and man. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 267-268.

One should be willing to make mistakes cheerfully. The most perfect analysis cannot prevent error. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 13

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a0241-12berror.jpg`

Carl Jung and “Horns Blowing, Bells Ringing” by Claire Myers Owens (2019-03-13 08:49)

[1]

Introduction: An American writer on psychology, Claire Myers Owens, visited Jung on July 24, 1954, and wrote up the experience for a contest feature, "Tourists Abroad," in the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune.

Her article was the winning entry for Aug. 12, 1954.

Claire Myers Owens: Nervously, I pulled the bell at the home of the Grand Old Man of Switzerland.

It was a large old-fashioned house directly on the beautiful Lake of Zurich, with the snow-topped Alps in the dim distance, and a vegetable garden in front.

As the maid admitted me, I feared that my awe of his world-wide fame would make me tongue-tied. My fears were groundless.

A large, tall man with very pink cheeks and an appearance that belied his 80 years entered and greeted me.

We sat in his library overlooking the flower garden and the blue lake with its many boats. He was friendly, jovial, startlingly frank.

For an hour and a half, we discussed his analytical psychology, Freud, his early struggles, religion and the role of evil, politics and the psychological origin of the "-isms," the maternal woman and the grande amoureuse, his collected works now being published in the United States in 18 volumes, "self-realization," the cause and cure of neuroses, and how to find the meaning of life.

I said I had a chapter on him in the book' I was writing—but how could I endure it if the book were not accepted?

He said, write the truth, and expect to be misunderstood, and take the consequences. That was what he had been doing all his life.

People feared truth.

Suddenly, we heard horns blowing, bells ringing. The maid rushed up in great excitement.

He said: "Nein! Nein!"

Then his daughter called up from the garden below. "They" wanted to see him.
murmured: "Nonsense!"

She begged him to come out on the balcony. He stepped out.
So did I.

A large lake steamer had stopped.

Its two or three hundred passengers were waving wildly. Finally, he waved back—once.

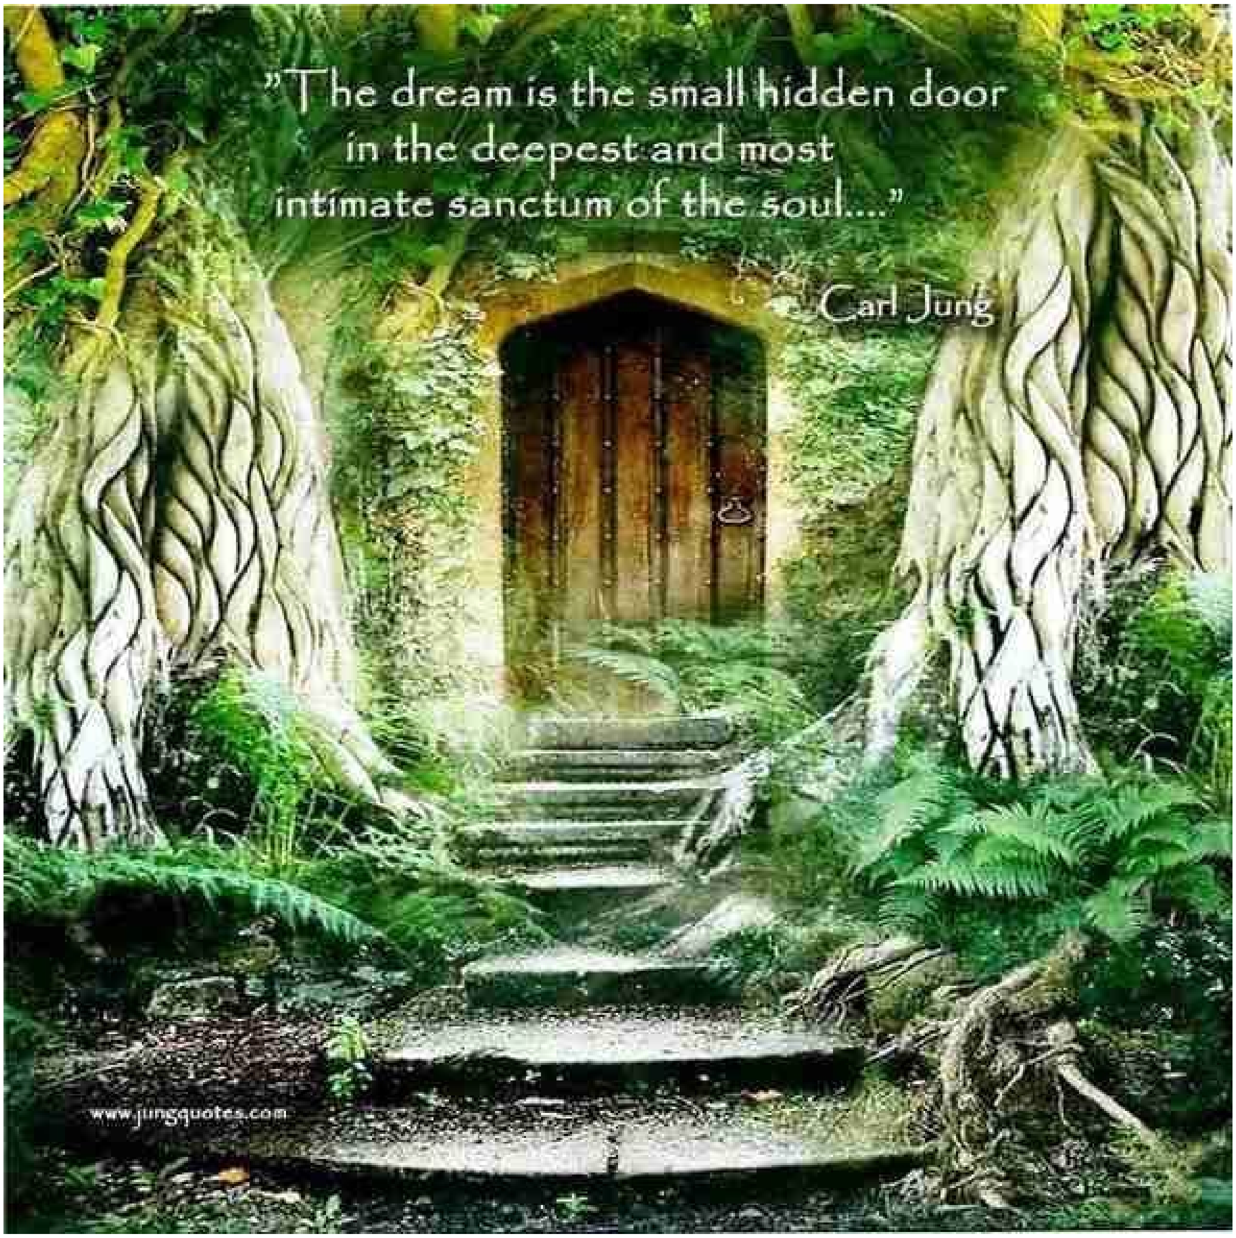
It was the International Congress of Psychotherapists,' and their ship had stopped in order that they might have a glimpse of the greatest of all psychotherapists—Prof. Carl

G. Jung., Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 237-238

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4f397-12bbells.jpg`

Carl Jung on the “Hidden.” - Anthology (2019-03-13 08:54)

[1]



"The dream is the small hidden door in the deepest and most intimate sanctum of the soul...."
Carl Jung
www.jungquotes.com

Small and hidden is the door that leads inward and the entrance is barred by countless prejudices, mistaken assumptions, and fears. Carl Jung, Civilization in Transition, Page 154.

There are, and always have been, those who cannot help but see that the world and its experiences are in the nature of a symbol, and that it really reflects something that lies hidden in the subject himself, in his own transubjective reality. Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Page 521, Para 859.

When we say "Our Father," the Father also symbolizes that self which is hidden in Heaven, in the unconscious. The Son (Christ) is the consciously achieved self. The Holy Spirit is the Paraclete promised by Christ in the Words "Ye are as gods," or "Greater things will be done by you." Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 35.

The power operating through the animus emanates specifically from the self, which is hidden behind it, and from its mana. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 29.

[The alchemist Gerhard] Dorn . . . says, "In the body of man there is hidden a certain substance of heavenly nature known to very few Carl Jung; "Psychology and Religion" in CW 11, page 93, note 47.

As most people know, one of the basic principles of analytical psychology is that dream-images are to be understood symbolically; that is to say, one must not take them literally, but must surmise a hidden meaning in them. Carl Jung; Symbols of Transformation; para 4.

I have had occasion to observe, in the course of my daily professional work [that...] a dream, often of visionary clarity, occurs about the time of the onset of the illness or shortly before, which imprints itself indelibly on the mind and, when analyzed, reveals to the patient a hidden meaning that anticipates the subsequent events of his life. Carl Jung; CW 5; para 78

Dreams give information about the secrets of the inner life and reveal to the dreamer hidden factors of [the dreamer's] personality. . . . There must be a thorough-going, conscious assimilation of unconscious contents. By "assimilation" I mean a mutual interpenetration of conscious and unconscious contents. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 16.

Without doubt, also, the realization of the opposite hidden in the unconscious, i.e. the 'reversal', signifies reunion with the unconscious laws of being, and the purpose of this reunion is the attainment of conscious life or, expressed in Chinese terms, the bringing about of the Tao. Carl Jung, Secret of the Golden Flower, Pages 95-96.

The alchemists think of the Redeemer as lying hidden or sleeping in the materia, he does not only descend from heaven but comes also from the depths of matter. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 189.

Paracelsus says that man has a mind in order that he may understand the truths which are made known in the Gospel, and only for this purpose. But on the other hand man has also a "lumen naturae" (a natural light), a source of knowledge hidden in nature, from which he can draw enlightenment. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 162.

Christ is spoken of as being born or hidden in a rose, or as a sea bird resting in a flower of the sea. This is a direct analogy to Buddha appearing in the Lotus in the Amitabha Land with geese and swans about him. Pages 100-101.

I tried to give a general view of the structure of the unconscious. Its contents, the archetypes, are as it were the hidden foundations of the conscious mind, or, to use another comparison, the roots which the psyche has sunk not only in the earth in the narrower sense but in the world in general. Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 31.

There can hardly be any doubt that not a few of those seekers had the dawning knowledge that the secret nature of the stone was man's own self. This "self"was evidently never thought of as an entity identical with the ego, and for this reason it was described as a "hidden nature" dwelling in inanimate matter, as a spirit, daemon, or fiery spark. Carl Jung, CW 11, Page 94.

People measure their self-knowledge by what the average person in their social environment knows of himself, but not by the real psychic facts which are for the most part hidden from them. Carl Jung, CW 10, Par. 491

After my wife's death. . . I felt an inner obligation to become what I myself am. To put it in the language of the Bollingen house, I suddenly realized that the small central section which crouched so low, so hidden was myself! Carl Jung, MDR, Page 225.

The whole future, the whole history of the world, ultimately springs as a gigantic summation from these hidden sources in individuals. In our most private and subjective lives we are not only the passive witnesses of our age, and its sufferers, but also its makers. We make our epoch. Carl Jung, CW 10. Page 149.

The hidden mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words or depleted by arguments. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 581.

I am an orphan, alone; nevertheless I am found everywhere. I am one, but opposed to myself. I am youth and old man at one and the same time. I have known neither father nor mother, because I have had to be fetched out of the deep like a fish, or fell like a white stone from heaven. In woods and mountains I roam, but I am hidden in the innermost soul of man. I am mortal for everyone, yet I am not touched by the cycle of eons. Carl Jung, Quoting an Alchemical Text, MDR 227.

What we need is the development of the inner spiritual man, the unique individual whose treasure is hidden on the one hand in the symbols of our mythological tradition, and on the other hand in man's unconscious psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 201-208

From the fact that matter has a mainly quantitative aspect and at the same time a qualitative one, even though this appears to be secondary, you draw the weighty conclusion, which I heartily applaud, that, besides its obviously qualitative nature, the psyche has an as yet hidden quantitative aspect. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 351-352.

The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

The living mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words and depleted by arguments. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 581

The living mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words and depleted by arguments. C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 581

The dream is the small hidden door in the deepest and most intimate sanctum of the soul, which opens to that primeval cosmic night that was soul long before there was conscious ego and will be soul far beyond what a conscious ego could ever reach. Carl Jung, The Meaning of Psychology for Modern Man (1934)

And you can be sure that the dream is your nearest friend; the dream is the friend of those who are not guided any more by the traditional truth and in consequence are isolated. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 674

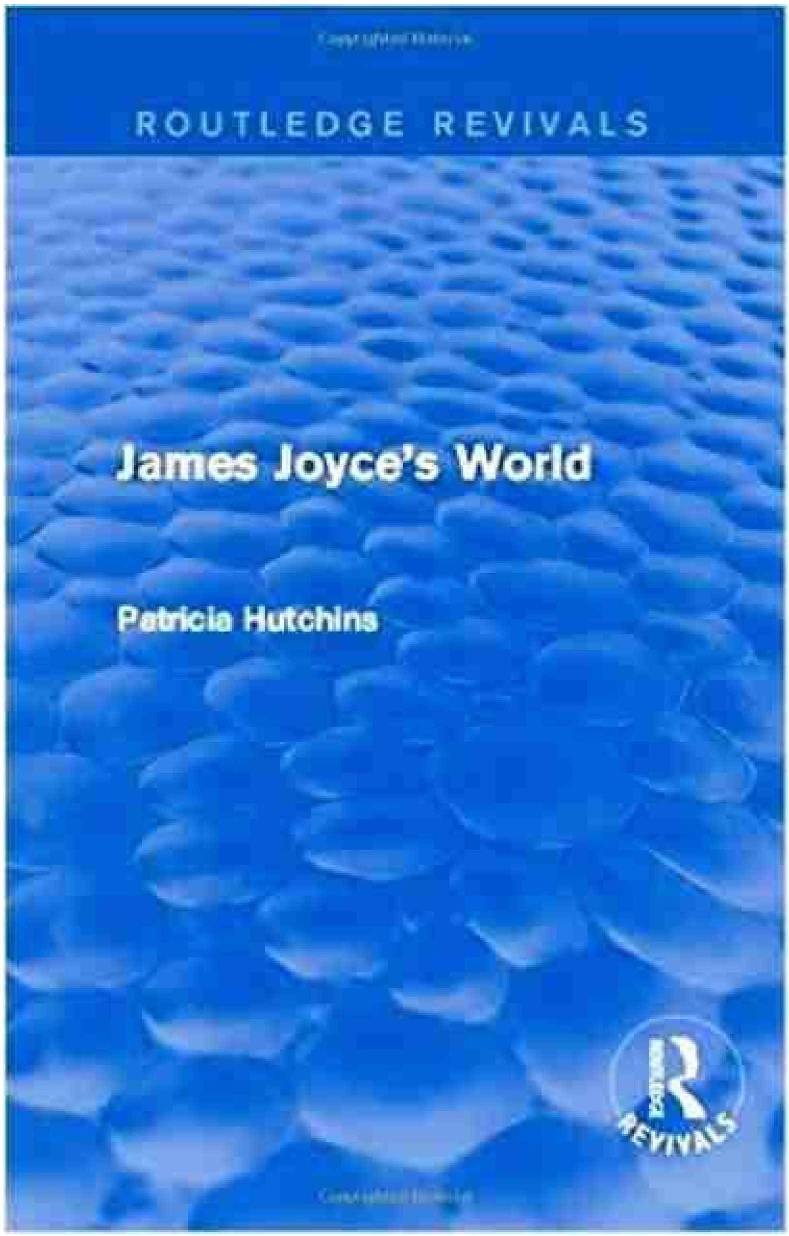
The dream is a little hidden door in the innermost and most secret recesses of the soul, opening into that cosmic night which was psyche long before there was any ego consciousness, and which will remain psyche no matter how far our ego-consciousness extends. Carl Jung, CW 10, Pages 144-145

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3b935-12bhidden.jpg`

Carl Jung and “The World of James Joyce.” (2019-03-13 09:00)

[1]



ROUTLEDGE REVIVALS
James Joyce’s World
Patricia Hutchins
REVIVALS

Introduction: The English writer Patricia Hutchins set out to explore James Joyce’s background in Ireland and in the Continental cities where he lived.

In Zurich, she interviewed Jung at his house in Kiisnacht, on a date not readily evident, but probably in late 1954.

Miss Hutchins described her encounter with Jung in her book James Joyce’s World (London, 1957), pp.181 -84.

The passage as given here is slightly abridged, to omit a digression on other literary matters.

Patricia Hutchins: We could only arrange a meeting in the evening.

Thus I went out to the village of Kusnacht and made my way down a long, villa-edged road.

Going through white gates, at the end of a short avenue of trees I could see a lit doorway in the dark tower-shape of a house.

Soon a girl took me to a small ante-room on the first floor.

Indian dolls and toys were in glass presses and among books and papers on the table was a recent issue of Punch.

Downstairs someone whistled and a deep clock struck six across the atmosphere of quiet and good order there.

As I was ushered into a large library, over parquet and Indian carpets, there was only a standard lamp in a corner by the window so that furniture and pictures were indistinguishable.

Dr. Jung rose and shook hands, a bulky figure with a pleasant voice, and I sat down on a comfortable seat opposite him.

By some effect of the light behind his chair, or the angle of his glasses which enlarged the pupils, a curious distortion gave his look the full-powered concentration of a child or an animal.

It was so distracting that I shifted my position and it became more usual again.

We talked first of all of my study of Joyce’s background, and Dr. Jung’s brief glimpse of Ireland from a liner stopping at Cobh on the way back from America.

I mentioned Joyce’s years in Zurich during the First World War and how Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick’ had helped Joyce financially for a time and then abruptly ceased to do so.

"It has been suggested," I said, "that you were in some way involved, and that perhaps Joyce had offended the lady by refusing to be analyzed?"

"Well, now you tell me the story I may well have been, in an indirect way."

Dr. Jung explained that Joyce’s name was then unknown to him and he had not met the writer personally until much later, when Joyce, whose daughter was then in a sanatorium, asked for a consultation.

Yet he recollected that before 1920 Mrs. McCormick mentioned she was supporting both an author and another artist at that time.

She was much troubled by the fact that the latter did not work.

Dr. Jung hesitated to tell her to cease these payments, but when the artist himself became his patient and told him of a recurrent dream in which he was bleeding to death, he advised Mrs. McCormick to end an intolerable situation, with most satisfactory results.

Although Dr. Jung was not informed, she may well have decided to have done with Joyce and the manuscript of Ulysses as well.

"In the thirties I was asked to write an introduction to the German edition of Ulysses," he told me, "but as such it was not a success.

Later I published it in one of my books.

My interest was not literary but professional. . . . The book was a most valuable document from my point of view; I expressed this, as you know."

"You said that the experiences related were part of 'the cold shadow-side of existence"—I do not think that Joyce cared about that."

"The peculiar mixture and the nature of the material as presented is the same as in cases of schizophrenia, but dealt with by an artist.

The same things that you find in the madhouse, oh yes, definitely, but with a plan.

I wrote and apologized to the publisher for not being able to provide what he needed for the edition."

When Joyce approached the psychologist professionally in 1934, Jung had put the article and his apology for it out of his mind, but Joyce would hardly have done so.

"Certainly he seemed very restrained," Dr. Jung said when I mentioned this.

"Yes, now I remember it, during the hour or so while we talked of his daughter, it was impossible not to feel his resistances.

The interview was correspondingly uneventful and futile. His daughter, on the contrary, was far more lively.
She was very attractive, charming—a good mind.

And her writing, what she did for me, had in it the same elements as her father's. She was the same spirit, oh they cared for each other very much.
Yet unfortunately it was too late to help her."

The neurotic, like the child, is often very absorbent of the atmosphere created by those around him, especially when it in some way involves himself.

A remark disparaging the Doctor—"How could he know what is going on in my pretty little head"—purported to have been made by Lucia, suggests that no real rapport was possible between them.

_"Finnegans Wake?"

Dr. Jung „replied to my query. "I read parts of it in periodicals but it was like getting lost in a wood. Oh no, I could not manage it. Ulysses yes, but still

I do not understand why so many people read it, so many editions have been published."’

"Well, surely they needed certain things to be said.

In the twenties people wanted to read in print what they could not express themselves, about life, sex. . . .

That generation was freeing itself from so much; we hardly understand its situation now.

Then it seems to me that many problems inherent in Joyce’s work are also those of the present-day world, in particular the adjustment of personal relations to science, the question of over-population. . . ."

"Yes, yes, that is the great problem, all over the world.

I have been in India and seen the under-nourished people, the thousands, thousands born there. There is the important question of food, of food production.

How are they all to be fed?" ’

Dr. Jung enlarged on this theme in a flow of sentences, one upon another, and with that quick, unsought illustration which characterizes his prose.

As he stood up to go I was aware of his fresh, full face, and that there was a particular attractiveness about the man by his very largeness and health of mind.

"I am glad," he concluded, "that I do not have to face the difficulties of the future. I shall be eighty in July 1955, you know.
They are so very great indeed."

"Well, I think you have done your share in helping other people—enough for one lifetime. We’ll have to try and find a way out anyway."
"Yes, yes."

As I got my coat from the ante-room I knew that by long habit he was watching, assessing me.

With more care than usual, as if to make a good impression, I turned off the light and shut the door. "Is this an old house?”
I asked, to fill the gap before saying goodbye.

"No, but built after an ancient style." He smiled. "I am, you know, a conservative."’ Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters ,Pages 239-243

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1784d-12bjoyce.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Women" - YouTube (2019-03-13 10:28)

[1]Carl Jung on "Women" - YouTube

1. `https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=UNsD8lXTGRk`

Carl Jung: Somnambulism is an exceptional psychic condition (2019-03-13 10:38)

[1]

There are people who can read the past, the present and the future
by gazing into a crystal, a glass of water or a mirror;
in reality they are seeing processes out of their own unconscious.
~Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, pg. 33
lo 15

Today we come to Frau Hauffe ’s symptoms: peculiar mediumistic phenomena which really do not belong to the province of medicine, but rather to that of parapsychology.

I mention these phenomena, however, because they are part of the picture and therefore of psychological importance.

Although we should have a certain critical attitude towards such things, the facts ought to be respected and we should keep an open mind instead of closing it with theoretical prejudices.

The conditions of which I am about to speak are of a somnambulistic nature.

Somnambulism is an exceptional psychic condition; in the Clairvoyante it brought ab out a heightening of consciousness and Kerner tells us that she even became a poet.

She liked this living so to say on a higher story, it seemed •to her more normal than the usual waking condition.

Perhaps it really is more normal than the everyday point of view, but it cannot be held for any length of time, for it requires a great deal of energy.

If the Clairvoyante had been able to maintain this living on a higher level as a permanent condition, she would have been a super-woman.

Seeing visions is another of these phenomena; for instance, during three days she saw continually a mass of flames which ran through her whole body.

Such visions can sometimes be observed in ordinary neuroses and have a symbolic meaning.

Frau Hauffe also had the faculty of exteriorization, - she could see herself outside her own body, as if she were another person.

The first time this occurred, she saw herself sitting at her own bedside; this phenomenon is not only experienced by neurotics but also by people who are very ill or dying.

The eye symptoms which appeared at the beginning returned again later, the outer light was painful to her, so she concentrated on the inner light; she no longer looked out of the front door of the house but out of the back door, into the subjective world, and this led also to more positive manifestations of the unconscious.

She saw all manner of things which she projected into the outer world as ghost figures: ghosts which were connected with herself and ghosts connected with other people.

The ghosts represent their spiritual bodies, she sees people's twofold nature, double so to speak, being aware not only of the side which is perceived through the senses, but also of their psychic personality. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, Page 32.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

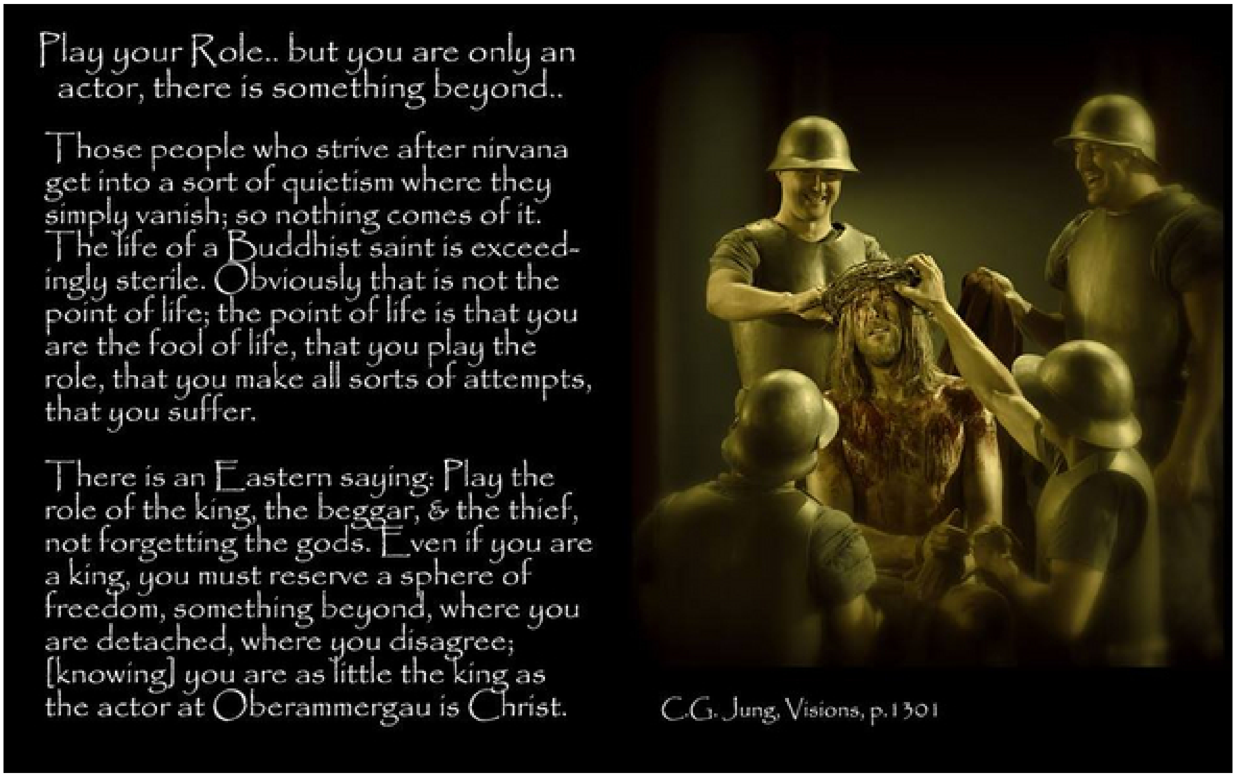
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/ad8c5-72bread2bthe2bpast.jpg`

Carl Jung: Therefore you must divide yourself and think of the Self. (2019-03-14 03:00)

[1]



Play your Role.. but you are only an actor, there is something beyond..

Those people who strive after nirvana get into a sort of quietism where they simply vanish; so nothing comes of it. The life of a Buddhist saint is exceedingly sterile. Obviously that is not the point of life; the point of life is that you are the fool of life, that you play the role, that you make all sorts of attempts, that you suffer.

There is an Eastern saying: Play the role of the king, the beggar, & the thief, not forgetting the gods. Even if you are a king, you must reserve a sphere of freedom, something beyond, where you are detached, where you disagree; [knowing] you are as little the king as the actor at Oberammergau is Christ.

C.G. Jung, Visions, p.1301

Mr. Allemann: If one were detached entirely it would be nirvana, no more life.

Dr. Jung:

Yes, because there you simply come to an end.

Those people who strive after nirvana get into a sort of quietism where they simply vanish; so nothing comes of it.

The life of a Buddhist saint is exceedingly sterile.

Obviously that is not the point of life; the point of life is that you are the fool of life, that you play the role, that you make all sorts of attempts, that you suffer.

But you play that role in a most unsatisfactory way, you create a lot of nuisance or suffering or even catastrophes, if you identify with it.

Therefore you must divide yourself and think of the Self.

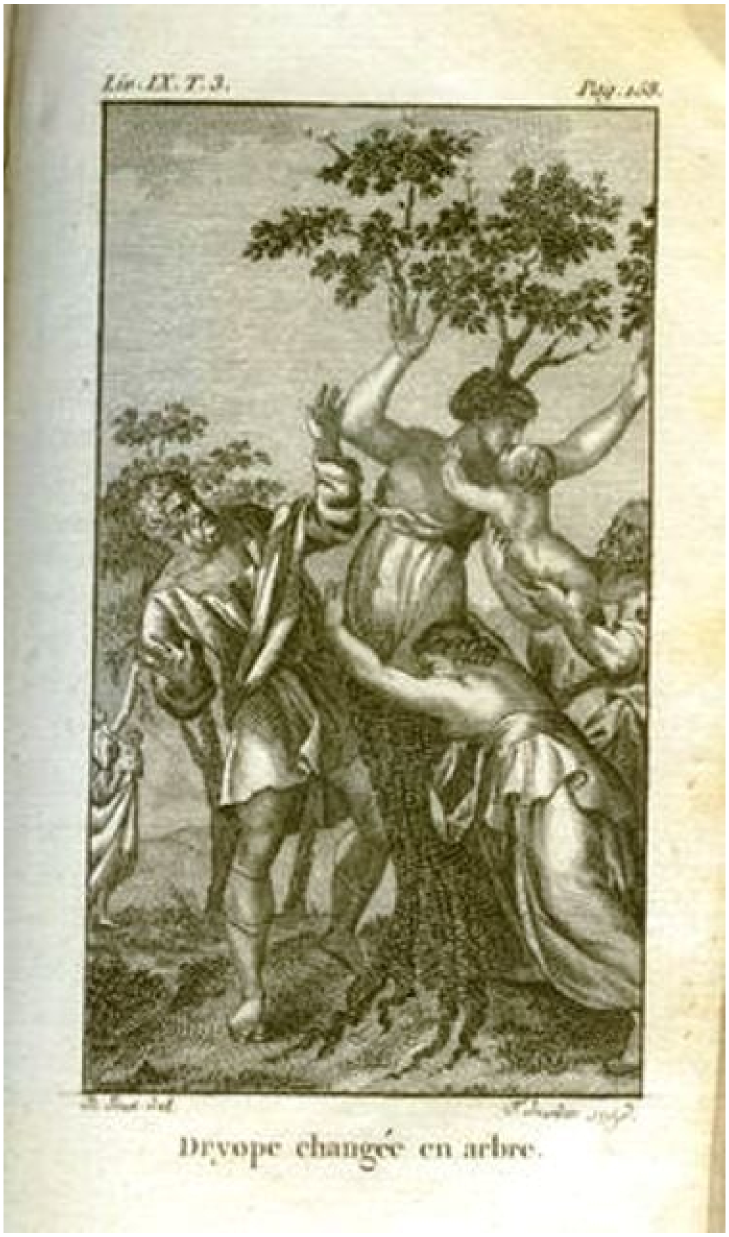
There is an Eastern saying: Play the role of the king, the beggar, and the thief, not forgetting the gods. Even if you acknowledge that you are a thief, remember that it is a role you are playing-we are called upon to do strange things in this existence.

Or even if you are a king, you must reserve a sphere of freedom, something beyond, where you are detached, where you disagree; you are as little the king as the actor at Oberammergau is Christ.

The gods of course are only appearances of the Self, but in Eastern philosophy Atman or Brahman is the Self, the very breath of all the gods. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 1300-1301

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/933bb-12beaster2bsaying.jpg`

Carl Jung: The transitus means carrying a heavy burden. (2019-03-14 03:30)



Liv. IX. T. 3.
Pag. 153.

Dryope changée en arbre.

Dr.Jung:

I find here a number of questions.

We will begin with one by Miss Howells: "Will you please discuss further the psychological experience of the transitus of modern man?

How does he take into his new psychological experience the carrying of the religious symbol of sacrifice?"

We spoke last time of the symbols of the transitus in certain old cults, the pine tree carried into the cave in the cult of Attis, for instance, and Mithra carrying the slain bull, and Christ carrying the cross.

The transitus means carrying a heavy burden.

This is well-known religious symbolism, of course, in every pious book and book of hymns carrying the burden is a familiar speech metaphor, and the meaning seems quite transparent; one understands that one should carry one's own burdens without lamenting too much over the difficulties, and so on.

But one does not see exactly why this very natural admonition should be expressed in such dogmatic forms.

You see, the symbolism points to something more basic, to an unconscious fact. For instance, what has Attis, an anthropomorphic god, to do with the pine tree?

You remember the tree was cut down and his image fixed to the trunk, which was then carried into the cave.

This obviously has to do with the dying and resurrecting god, it is projected by man, and from the interpretation of that ritual we can find out what specific burden those people understood ought to be carried. So what does the pine tree mean?

Or the cross to which Christ was to be affixed?

Or the bull carried by Mithra who was himself the bull? Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1213

[2]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cac3e-12battis.jpg`
2. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/`

Carl Jung: You only can help people to understand themselves..... (2019-03-14 03:30)

[1]

J. ALLEN GILBERT. A. M., PH. D.
Instructor in Psychology.

To J. Allen Gilbert

My dear Dr. Gilbert, 19 June 1927

Analysis is not only a "diagnosis" but rather an understanding and a moral support in the honest experimental attempt one calls "life."

For the individual you never can know better or ahead.

You only can help people to understand themselves and to gather up courage enough to try and risk.

The invisible part of the work goes much further than whatever you can publish in a scientific journal.

You have got to leave room for the irrational factor, although you hate it.

Cordially yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 47

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1129f-12bgilbert.jpg`

Carl Jung: You must be conscious of two things, of what you are and what the mood is. (2019-03-14 03:30)

[1]

Mr. Allemann: If you go into the mood, you are not aware of your Self. If you are too unconscious, you are not conscious of the separateness of the Self from the mood.

Dr. Jung:

Well, as soon as you are conscious of your Self as separate from the mood, the Self helps you to protect yourself against dismemberment by the following fact: you are confronted with two things, the mood or the emotion or whatever it is on the one side, and the Self on the other.

You must be conscious of two things, of what you are and what the mood is.

You can say: "This mood is myself, it belongs to me," and then you lose sight of the Self, you are identical with the mood and you are gone, you are away, and quite unprotected.

Or you can say: "Yes, this mood belongs to me, it is part of myself, but I am also conscious of the Self," and then you are protected.

So it is a subtle mental operation in that you are conscious of two things.

One is always inclined to be conscious of one thing only, just the thing which is actually there.

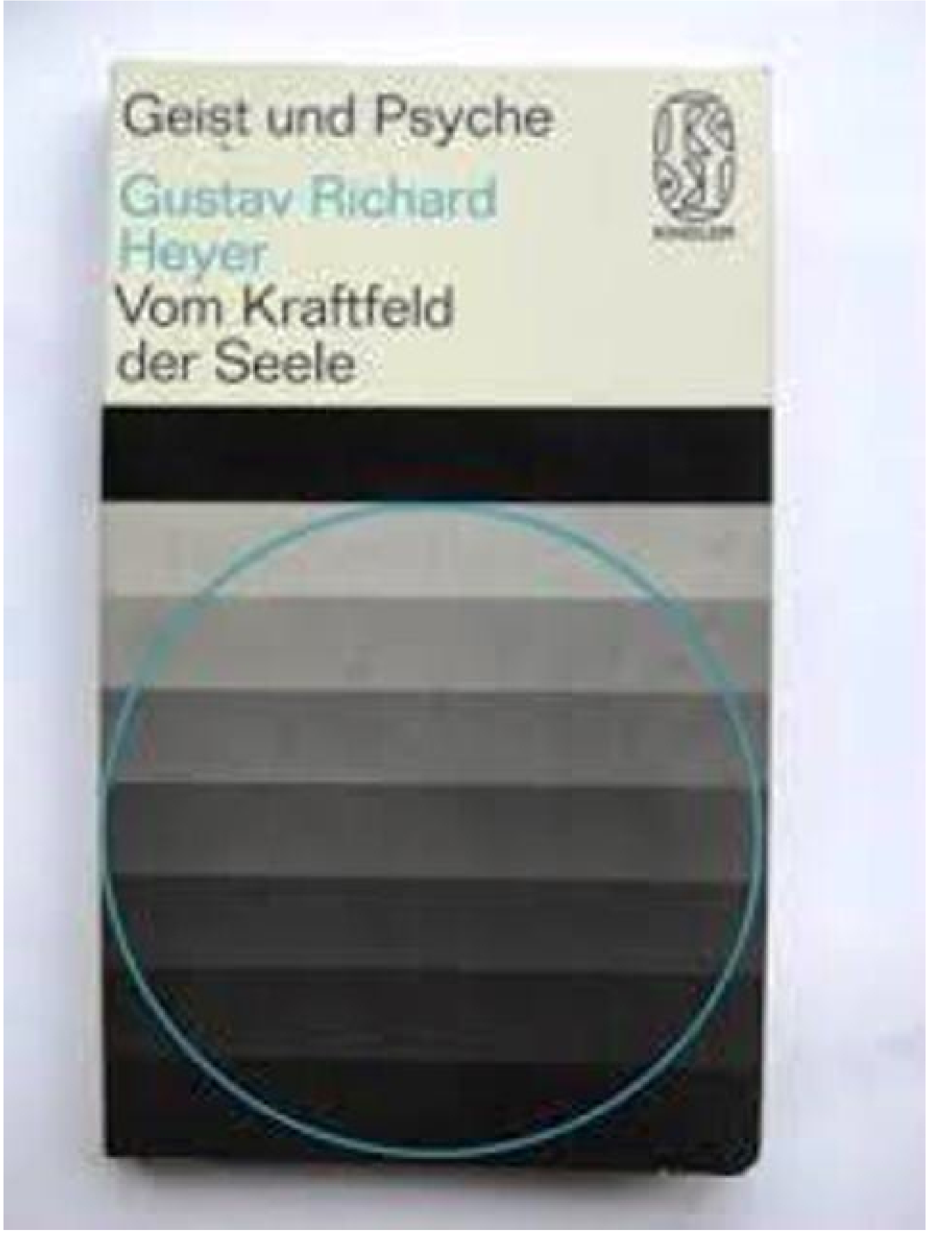
Now it is of course very important to be able to realize what is there, to be able to put yourself wholeheartedly into a situation and fill it with your whole being; yet you must never forget your Self, you must always keep your Self in mind. And that seems to be a superior condition.

Why is it a superior condition to think of two things instead of one? Carl Jung, Vision Seminar, Page 1299-1300

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aa60e-12bblake.jpg`

Carl Jung: Whether I shall succeed is another matter. (2019-03-14 03:30)

[1]



Geist und Psyche
Gustav Richard Heyer
Vom Kraftfeld der Seele
KINDLER

To Gustav Richard Heyer

My dear Heyer, 20 April 1934

Although the prospect is not at all rosy, I must nevertheless go to Nauheim to keep the promise I made the Germans that I would do everything possible to promote the cohesion of the Society.

Whether I shall succeed is another matter.

Personally I doubt it.

If Prof. Goring turns a purely medical affair into a political one there is nothing we foreigners can do about it.

But we must first wait and see.

I must tell you that I should be very pleased, not least also for personal reasons, if you came to Nauheim too.

I have the feeling I am treading on ground the nature of which I know far too little, and I must have somebody near to give me the necessary information.

I cannot possibly rely on Cimbal and the others as their interests and motives are so obscure that an outsider like me cannot see through them.

I regard this Congress as a unique and perhaps final attempt to promote a general cohesion though it may not be at all timely.

But one must have done so in reality before one can withdraw with a good conscience.

I am thinking anyway of not retaining this presidency for too long, which was forced on me only because of the precarious situation, and of passing it on as quickly as possible, since for me it involves a load of work which I would never have accepted undernormal conditions.

I would like to ask you to let me know by return postcard whether you consider it opportune if I lecture in Nauheim.

I personally have the feeling I had better not, as I want to adopt a waiting and watchful attitude.

I gave Prof. Goring my consent to lecture only very hesitantly and with reservation, so that I could withdraw without further ado.

Meanwhile with best regards,

Yours ever,

Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 157-158

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d7404-12bheyer.jpg`

Emma Jung: "...this has taken a stone from my heart” (2019-03-14 05:19)

[1]

From Emma Jung

Dear Professor Freud, Kusnacht, 16 March 1910

Here at last you have the programme for Nuremberg, from which you will see that your lecture comes first after all.

My husband had never said anything about his speaking on the 1st day, and as the title is only "Report on America" it will not upset the plan.

I also think he will be glad not to have to speak first, as he may be arriving in Nuremberg at in the morning and will probably be rather tired.

Many thanks for your kind letter- and offer of help which I shall gladly accept if anything more difficult happens.

I can set your mind at rest by telling you that a young friend and pupil of my husband's, Dr. Honegger, is deputizing with the patients and looking after the Nuremberg business with me, otherwise I would be rather nervous about everything turning out all right.

Today I am expecting news of my husband's safe arrival in New York; I do hope it comes soon.

Incidentally, America no longer has the same attraction for him as before, and this has taken a stone from my heart.

It is just enough to satisfy the desire for travel and adventure, but no more than that.

I was very sorry to hear that Frau Hollitscher has had to undergo another operation; I hope she will soon recover and that it will be a lasting success this time.

Please give her my warmest greetings and wishes.

I send greetings to you and all your dear ones,

Emma Jung Freud/Jung Letters, Page 303,

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/4a83e-6.jpg`

Letters from Emma Jung to Sigmund Freud (2019-03-14 05:35)

[1]

From Emma Jung

Dear Professor Freud, Kiisnacht, 8 March 1910

I am writing to you in the name of my husband, who suddenly left for Chicago today, where his former patient, McCormick, is seriously ill.

According to the reports it could be paralysis or mania; but thinks it possible that the trouble is psychogenic and therefore followed the call.

He urgently requests you not to worry about Nuremberg as he-will quite certainly be there.

He will arrive either on March 20th, 9.34 p.m. or on the 30th, 5 a.m., and in any case will arrive in time for the beginning of the Congress.

His boat, Kronptinzessin Cacilie, picks him up tomorrow in Cherbourg and arrives in New York on the 15th. On the 22nd he leaves again on the same steamer, will be in Cherbourg on the 25th and in Nuremberg via Paris-Cologne on the 29th.

Then I have to ask you what kind of title you want to give your Nuremberg lecture and whether it is all right with you to be the first speaker on the morning of the 30th.

I should be very grateful to you if you would tell me this as soon as possible on a postcard, so that the programmes can then be printed and sent off.

Just at the moment of departure a letter arrived from Vogt in Berlin inquiring about the paper on the neurosis theory for Brussels.

I am asking him to be patient as the letter came too late, and would you in the meantime please give my husband your opinion of it.

His military service may make the whole thing impossible.

Is it of interest to you that Isserlin asked if he might attend the Congress in Nuremberg as a "silent listener" (an objective one, of course!)

and that this was refused for very convincing reasons?

With kind regards to you and all your family,

Emma Jung

[Emma Jung: "... America no longer has the same attraction for him as before, and this has taken a stone from my heart"]

From Emma Jung

Dear Professor Freud, Kusnacht, 16 March 1910

Here at last you have the programme for Nuremberg, from which you will see that your lecture comes first after all.

My husband had never said anything about his speaking on the 1st day, and as the title is only "Report on America" it will not upset the plan.

I also think he will be glad not to have to speak first, as he may be arriving in Nuremberg at in the morning and will probably be rather tired.

Many thanks for your kind letter- and offer of help which I shall gladly accept if anything more difficult happens.

I can set your mind at rest by telling you that a young friend and pupil of my husband's, Dr. Honegger, is deputizing with the patients and looking after the Nuremberg business with me, otherwise I would be rather nervous about everything turning out all right.

Today I am expecting news of my husband's safe arrival in New York; I do hope it comes soon.

Incidentally, America no longer has the same attraction for him as before, and this has taken a stone from my heart.

It is just enough to satisfy the desire for travel and adventure, but no more than that.

I was very sorry to hear that Frau Hollitscher has had to undergo another operation; I hope she will soon recover and that it will be a lasting success this time.

Please give her my warmest greetings and wishes.

I send greetings to you and all your dear ones,

Emma Jung Freud/Jung Letters, Page 303,

[Emma Jung and “I don’t really know how I am summoning the courage…”]

Dear Professor Freud, Kusnacht, 30 October [1911]

I don’t really know how I am summoning the courage to write you this letter, but am certain it is not from presumption; rather I am following the voice of my unconscious, which I have so often found was right and which I hope will not lead me astray this time.

Since your visit I have been tormented by the idea that your relation with my husband is not altogether as it should be, and since it definitely ought not to be like this I want to try to do whatever is in my power.

I do not know whether I am deceiving myself when I think you are somehow not quite in agreement with "Transformations of Libido."

You didn’t speak of it at all and yet I think it would do you both so much good if you got down to a thorough discussion of it. Or is it something else?

If so, please tell me what, dear Herr Professor; for I cannot bear to see you so resigned and I even believe that your resignation relates not only to your real children (it made a quite special impression on me when you spoke of it) but also to your spiritual sons; otherwise you would have so little need to be resigned.

Please do not take my action as officiousness and do not count me among the women who, you once told me, always spoil your friendships.

My husband naturally knows nothing of this letter and I beg you not to hold him responsible for it or to let any kind of unpleasant effects it may have on you glance off on him.

I hope nevertheless that you will not be angry with your very admiring

Emma Jung Freud/Jung Letters, Pages 452.453

From Emma lung

My dear Professor Freud, Kusnacht, 6 November [1911]

Your nice kind letter has relieved me of anxious doubts, for I was afraid that in the end I had done something stupid.

Now I am naturally very glad and thank you with all my heart for your friendly reception of my letter, and particularly for the goodwill you show to all of us.

In explanation of my conjecture I would like to tell you, first, that it is not a question at all of things consciously perceived; you didn't even let us sympathize with your toothache, which ordinarily is a perfect justification for even the worst mood.

If I talked about "Symbols" it was chiefly because I knew how eagerly Carl was waiting for your opinion; he had often said he was sure you would not approve of it, and for that reason was awaiting your verdict with some trepidation.

Of course this was only a residue of the father (or mother) complex which is probably being resolved in this book; for actually Carl, if he holds something to be right, would have no need to worry about anybody else's opinion.

So perhaps it is all to the good that you did not react at once so as not to reinforce this father-son relationship.

The second reason was provided by the conversation on the first morning after your arrival, when you told me about your family.

You said then that your marriage had long been "amortized," now there was nothing more to do except-die.

And the children were growing up and then they become a real worry, and yet this is the only true joy.

This made such an impression on me and seemed to me so significant that I had to think of it again and again, and I fancied it was intended just for me because it was meant symbolically at the same time and referred to my husband.

Please don't be angry if I venture to speak again about the "manifest content" of your talk.

I wanted to ask then if you are sure that your children would not be helped by analysis.

One certainly cannot be the child of a great man with impunity, considering the trouble one has in getting away from ordinary fathers.

And when this distinguished father also has a streak of paternalism in him, as you yourself said!

Didn't the fracture of your son's leg fit in with this picture?

When I asked you about it you said you didn't have time to analyse your children's dreams because you had to earn money so that they could go on dreaming.

Do you think this attitude is right?

I would prefer to think that one should not dream at all, one should live.

I have found with Carl also that the imperative "earn money" is only an evasion of something else to which he has resistances.

Please forgive me this candour, it may strike you as brazen; but it disturbs my image of you because I somehow cannot bring it into harmony with the other side of your nature, and this matters so much to me. – The thought also occurred to me that it was perhaps on our account that you didn't send your son to study in Zurich; you did speak about it at one time and for us it would naturally have been a great pleasure to see him now and then.

Another thing I must mention is your resignation in science, if one can call it that.

You may imagine how overjoyed and honoured I am by the confidence you have in Carl, but it almost seems to me as though you were sometimes giving too much-do you not see in him the follower and fulfiller more than you need?

Doesn't one often give much because one wants to keep much?

Why are you thinking of giving up already instead of enjoying your well-earned fame and success?

Perhaps for fear of letting the right moment for it pass you by?

Surely this will never happen to you.

After all, you are not so old that you could speak now of the "way of regression," what with all these splendid and fruitful ideas you have in your head!

Besides, the man who has discovered the living fountain of PS, a. (or don't you believe it is one?) will not grow old so quickly.

No, you should rejoice and drink to the full the happiness of victory after having struggled for so long.

And do not think of Carl with a father's feeling: "He win grow, but I must dwindle," but rather as one human being thinks of another, who like you has his own law to fulfill.

Don't be angry with me.

With warm love and veneration,

Emma Jung Freud/Jung Letters, Pages 455-57.

[Emma Jung: "You were really annoyed by my letter, weren't you?"]

From Emma Jung

Dear Professor Freud, Kiisnacht, 14 November [1911]

You were really annoyed by my letter, weren't you? I was too, and now I am cured of my megalomania and am wondering why the devil the unconscious had to make you, of all people, the victim of this madness.

And here I must confess, very reluctantly, that you are right: my last letter, specially the tone of it, was really directed to the father-imago, which should of course be faced without fear.

This thought never entered my head; I thought that, knowing the transference side of my father-attitude towards you, it would all be quite clear and do me no harm.

After I had thought so long before writing to you and had, so I believed, fully understood my own motives, the unconscious has now played another trick on me, with particular finesse: for you can imagine how delighted I am to have made a fool of myself in front of you.

I can only pray and hope that your judgment will not prove too severe.

There is one thing, however, I must vigorously defend myself against, and that is the way you take my "amiable carpings," as you call them.

Firstly I do not mean at all that Carl should set no store by your opinion; it goes without saying that one recognizes an authority, and if one cannot it is only a sign of over-compensated insecurity.

So that is not what I mean, it was only the rest of it that made him anxious and uncertain which seemed superfluous to Inc.

Truth to tell, I must confess that I have missed the mark here too, without suspecting it.

Lately Carl has been analysing his attitude to his work and has discovered some resistances to it.

I had connected these misgivings about Part II with his constant worry over what you would say about it, etc.

It seemed out of the question that he could have resistances to his own work; but now it appears that this fear of your opinion was only a pretext for not going on with the self-analysis which this work in fact means, I realize that I have thus projected something from my immediate neighbourhood into distant Vienna and am vexed that it is always the nearest thing that one sees worst.

You have also completely misunderstood my admittedly uncalled-for meddling in your family affairs.

Truthfully I didn’t mean to cast a shadow on your children.

I know they have turned out well and have never doubted it in the least.

I hope you don’t seriously believe that I wanted to say they were "doomed to be degenerate."

I have written nothing that could even remotely mean anything of the sort.

I know that with your children it is a matter of physical illnesses, but just wanted to raise the question whether these physical symptoms might not be somehow psychically conditioned, so that there might for instance be a reduced power of resistance.

Since I have made some very astonishing discoveries in myself in this respect and do not consider myself excessively degenerate or markedly hysterical, I thought similar phenomena possible with other people too.

I shall be grateful for enlightenment.

That you should think it worthwhile to discuss your most personal affairs with me is something for which I thank you with all my heart.

What you tell me sounds so convincing that I simply have to believe it, although much in me struggles against it.

But I must admit that you have the experience and I do not, consequently I am unable to make any convincing rejoinders.

You are quite right about one thing, though: despite everything and everybody, the whole affair is only a blessing in clumsy disguise which I beg you to forgive.

Please write nothing of this to Carl; things are going badly enough with him as it is.

Emma Jung

[Emma Jung: "Will you advise me, dear Herr Professor, and if necessary dress me down a bit?"]

From Emma Jung

My dear Professor Freud, Kusnacht, 24 November 1911

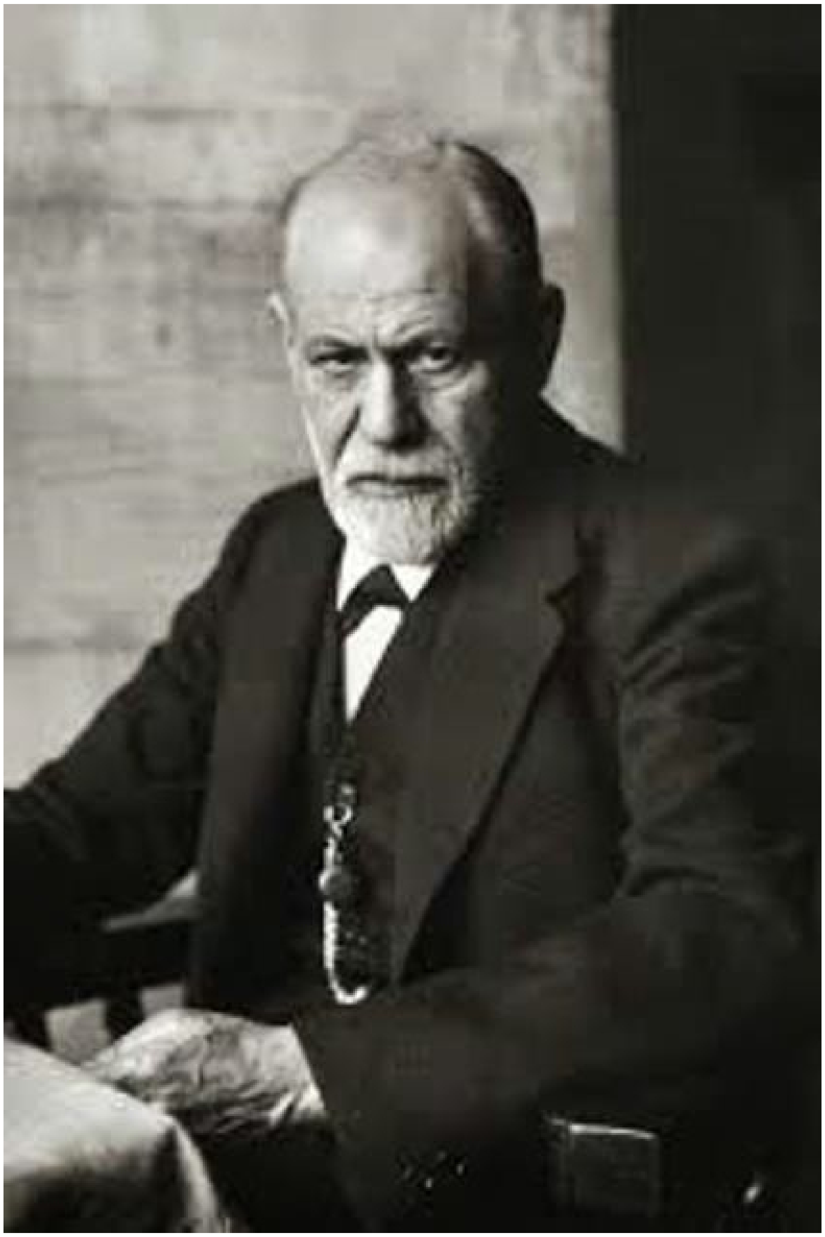
Heartfelt thanks for your letter.

Please don't worry, I am not always as despondent as I was in my last letter.

I was afraid you were angry with me or had a bad opinion of me; that was what made me so downhearted, especially because my main complex was hit.

Usually I am quite at one with my fate and see very well how lucky I am, but from time to time I am tormented by the conflict about how I can hold my own against Carl.

I find I have no friends, all the people who associate with us really only want to see Carl, except for a few boring and to me quite uninteresting persons.



Naturally the women are all in love with him, and with the men I am instantly cordoned off as the wife of the father or friend.

Yet I have a strong need for people and Carl too says I should stop concentrating on him and the children, but what on earth am I to do?

What with my strong tendency to autoerotism it is very difficult, but also objectively it is difficult because I can never compete with Carl.

In order to emphasize this I usually have to talk extra stupidly when in company.

I do my best to get transferences and if they don't turn out as I wished I am always very depressed.

You will now understand why I felt so bad at the thought that I had lost your favour, and I was also afraid Carl might notice something.

At any rate he now knows about the exchange of letters, as he was astonished to see one of your letters addressed to me; but I have revealed only a little of their content.

Will you advise me, dear Herr Professor, and if necessary dress me down a bit?

I am ever so grateful to you for your sympathy.

With warmest greetings to you and yours,

Emma Jung Freud/Jung Letters Page 467.

From Emma Jung

Dear Professor Freud, Kusnacht, 10 September [1912]

The offprints of Part II of "Transformations and Symbols" have just come out and you must be the first to receive one.

From Jones, whom I met at the Congress here, I heard that Frau Hollitscher is ill again.

I was so sorry to hear this and find it especially sad that her and all your hopes have again come to nothing.

I share your sorrow and your worry with heartfelt sympathy and I hope, and wish, that everything will soon take a good turn.

How are your wife and the other children?

We had a dismal summer too; the children had whooping cough and now measles; Carl was away nearly all summer; since Saturday he has been on the trip to America after spending only one day here between military service and departure.

I have so much to do now that I can’t let too much libido travel after him to America, it might so easily get lost on the way.

Please greet all your dear ones from me and give my best wishes to your daughter.

With kindest and highest regards,

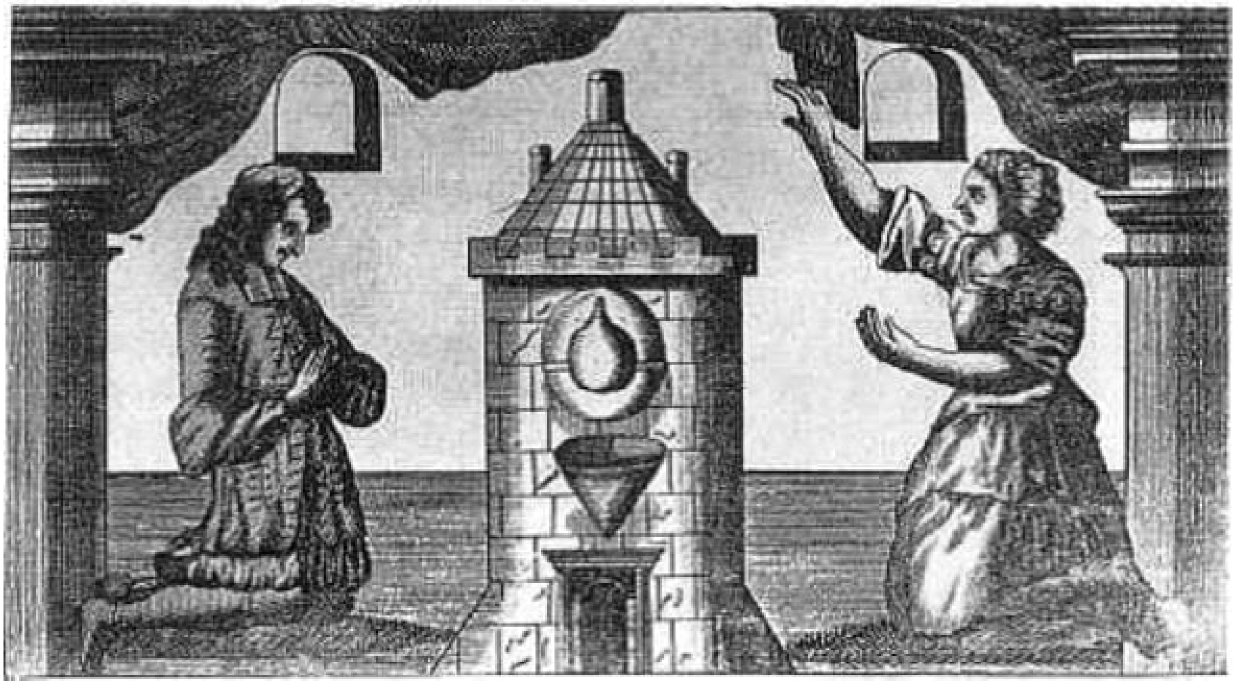
Emma Jung Freud/Jung Letters, Page 514.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/3bb65-5.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/861d9-1.jpg`

Barbara Hannah’s first visit to Bollingen (2019-03-15 03:00)

[1]



Toni paid back hospitality by asking Jung to invite me to Bollingen.

I was frankly terrified when I first arrived at the Tower.

It was very cold weather and Jung was cooking in his original round kitchen in a long Oriental robe which he often wore in cold weather.

He looked like a picture I had once seen of an old alchemist at work among his retorts.

He looked more whole than ever. . . . Toni, who was also staying there, just gave me some tea and told me to take a chair by the fire and watch Jung cook, then busied herself with fetching the things he asked for and her own jobs.

Jung was entirely engrossed in some absorbing cooking and in watching the fire. (He was a most unusually good cook and used in those days to cook the most complicated dishes.

I remember one sauce with no fewer than sixteen ingredients!)

I did not yet know him well enough to feel it as a companionable silence (which I learned later to enjoy more than anything), so after two or three hours I took an opportunity, when he did not seem quite so engrossed to murmur: "I am scared stiff."

Although only a faint amused smile indicated that he had even heard my remark, the ice was broken and I began to feel at home.

After a bit he gave me an aperitif. . . then I even got a small job or two to do, and finally we were ready to sit down at the round table.

The marvelous food and wine rapidly banished my fear, though I was fortunate enough still to say nothing, except for a few appreciative grunt-like murmurs while we were eating.

That was indeed fortunate because as I learned later Jung jung hated to talk while he was eating a really good meal.

(He used to quote his mother, who said that chattering was disrespectful to good food.)

The only remark I remember him making during that first meal was: "Oh, well, you already know how to enjoy your food, that is one thing (emphasis on the one!)

I shall not have to teach you!" Barbara Hannah, "Jung", Page 199.

Image:

Illustration from the Mutus Liber (Mutable Book), La Rochelle, 1677.

A couple kneels in prayer.

He is an alchemist; she is the soror mystica (sister in the mystery).

Like "an old alchemist," Jung, in his Bollingen kitchen, concocted elaborate dishes from a variety of ingredients.

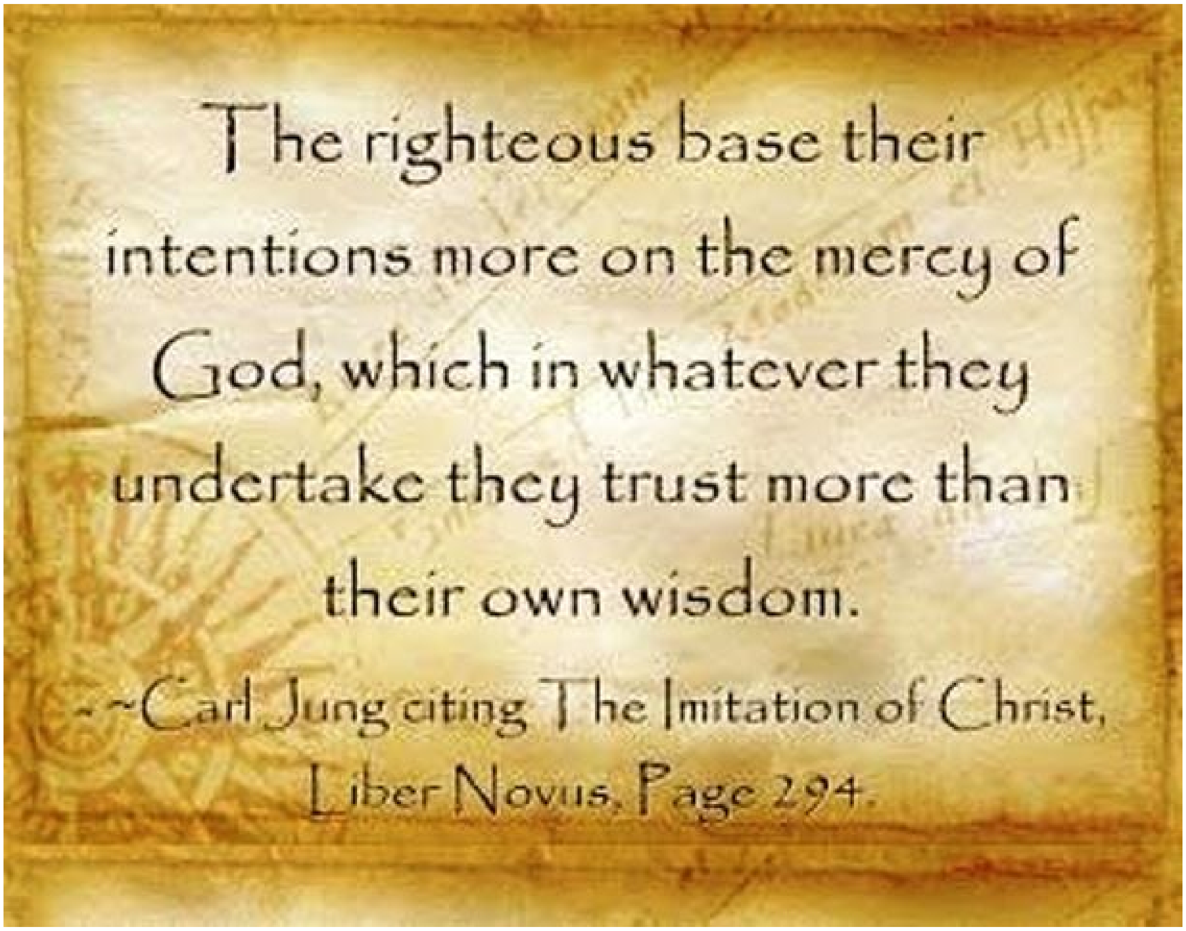
His guests often felt a touch of magic about their visit. Claire Dunne, Wounded Healer of the Soul, Page 108

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/06/4435e-1.jpg`

Carl Jung on the "Imitation of Christ." (2019-03-15 03:00)

[1]



The righteous base their intentions more on the mercy of God, which in whatever they undertake they trust more than their own wisdom.

~Carl Jung citing The Imitation of Christ, Liber Novus, Page 294.

Are we to understand the "imitation of Christ" in the sense that we should copy his life and, if I may use the expression, ape his stigmata; or in the deeper sense that we are to live our own proper lives as truly as he lived his in its individual uniqueness?

It is no easy matter to live a life that is modelled on Christ's, but it is unspeakably harder to live one's own life as truly as Christ lived his.

Anyone who did this would run counter to the conditions of his own history, and though he might thus be fulfilling them, he would none the less be misjudged, derided, tortured, and crucified.

He would be a kind of crazy Bolshevist who deserved the cross.

We therefore prefer the historically sanctioned and sanctified imitation of Christ.

I would never disturb a monk in the practice of this identification, for he deserves our respect.

But neither I nor my patients are monks, and it is my duty as a physician to show my patients how they can live their lives without becoming neurotic.

Neurosis is an inner cleavage—the state of being at war with oneself.

Everything that accentuates this cleavage makes the patient worse, and everything that mitigates it tends to heal him.

What drives people to war with themselves is the suspicion or the knowledge that they consist of two persons in opposition to one another.

The conflict may be between the sensual and the spiritual man, or between the ego and the shadow.

It is what Faust means when he says: "Two souls, alas, are housed within my breast."

A neurosis is a splitting of personality. Carl Jung, CW 11, Par 522.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/06/dba61-1.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 41 (2019-03-15 03:05)

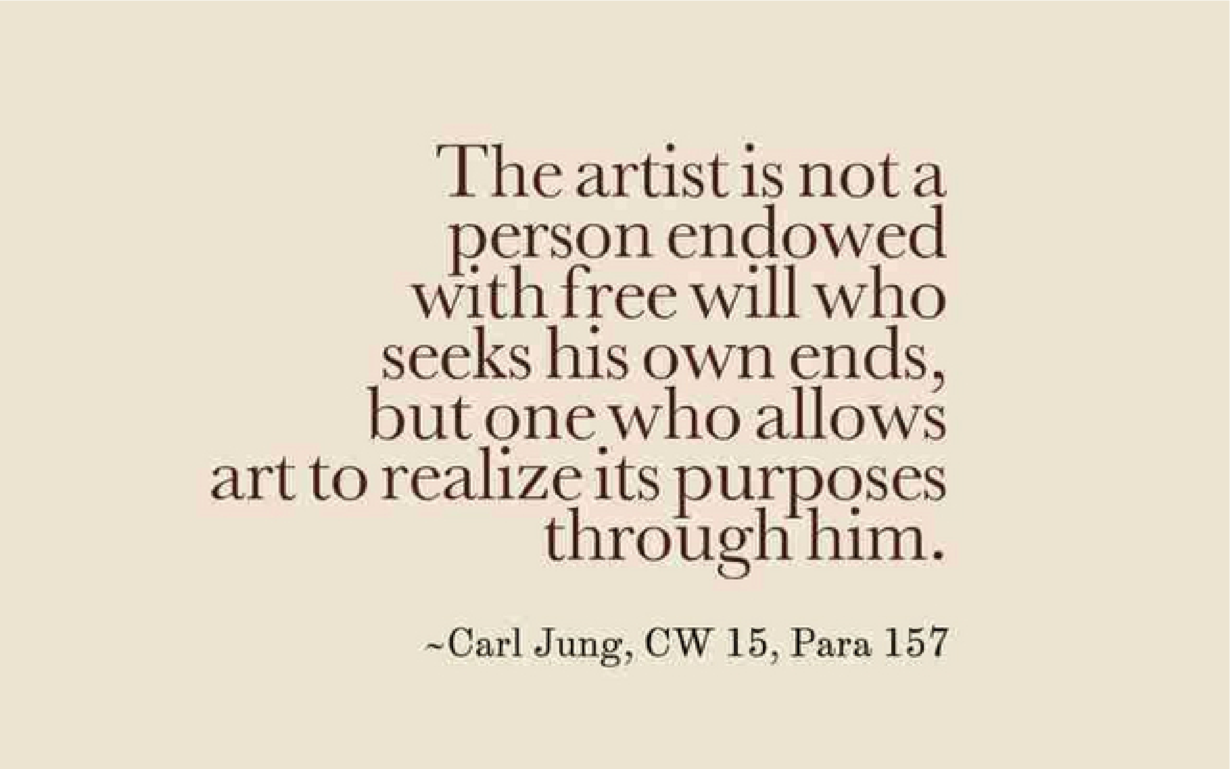
[1]

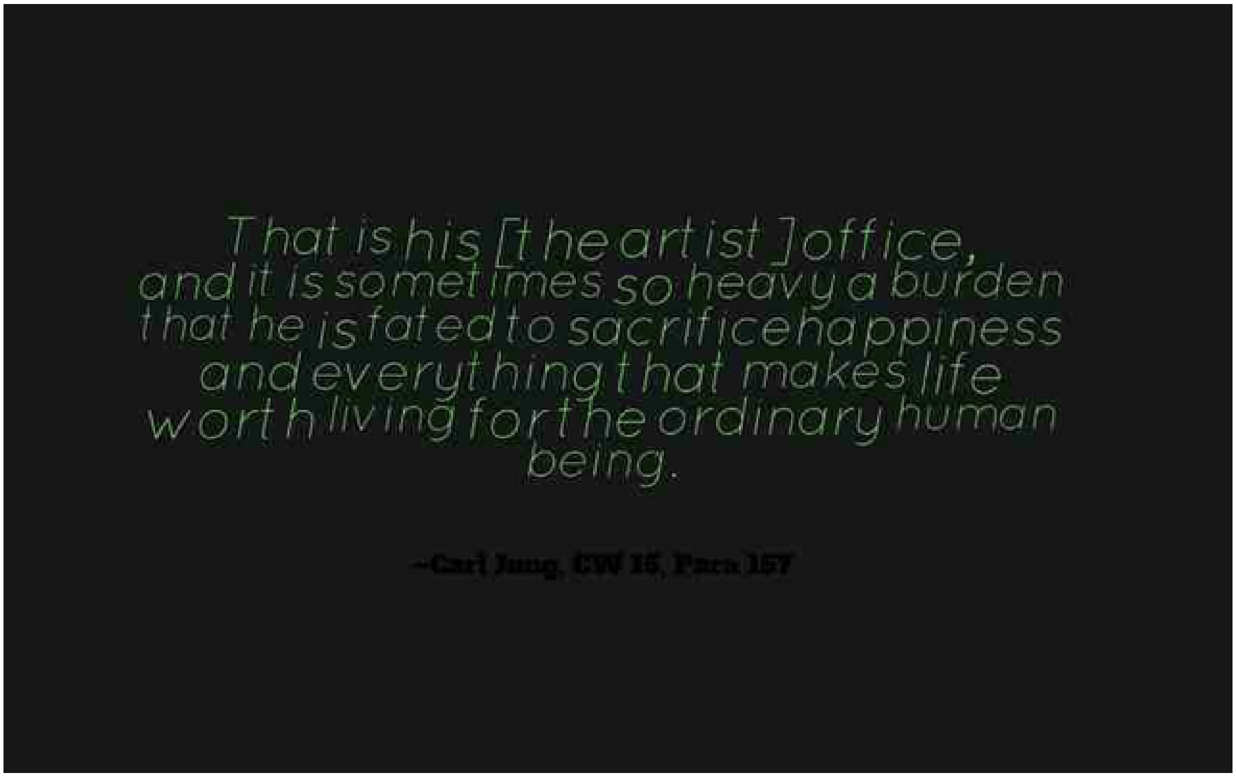


The artist is not a person endowed with free will who seeks his own ends, but one who allows art to realize its purposes through him.

~Carl Jung, CW 15, Para 157

The artist is not a person endowed with free will who seeks his own ends, but one who allows art to realize its purposes through him. Carl Jung, CW 15, Para 157

[2]

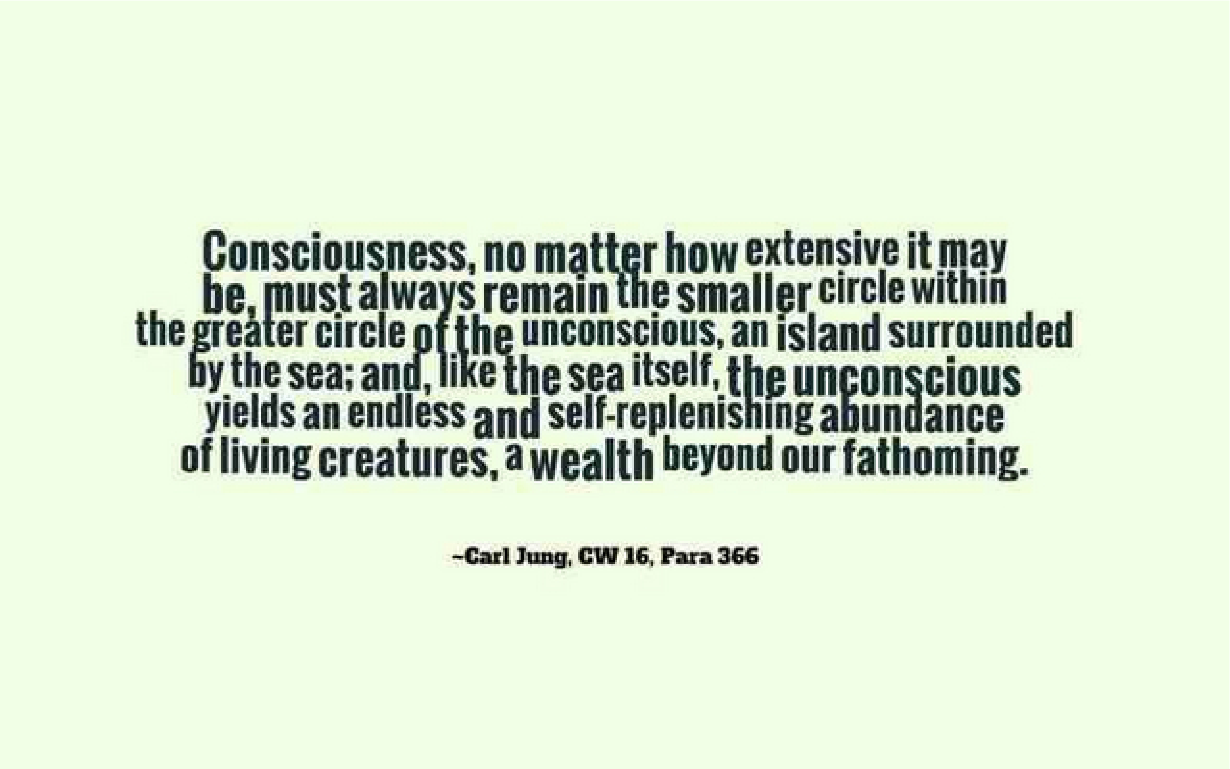


That is his [the artist] office, and it is sometimes so heavy a burden that he is fated to sacrifice happiness and everything that makes life worth living for the ordinary human being.

~Carl Jung, CW 15, Para 157

That is his [The Artist] office, and it is sometimes so heavy a burden that he is fated to sacrifice happiness and everything that makes life worth living for the ordinary human being. Carl Jung, CW 15, Para 157

[3]

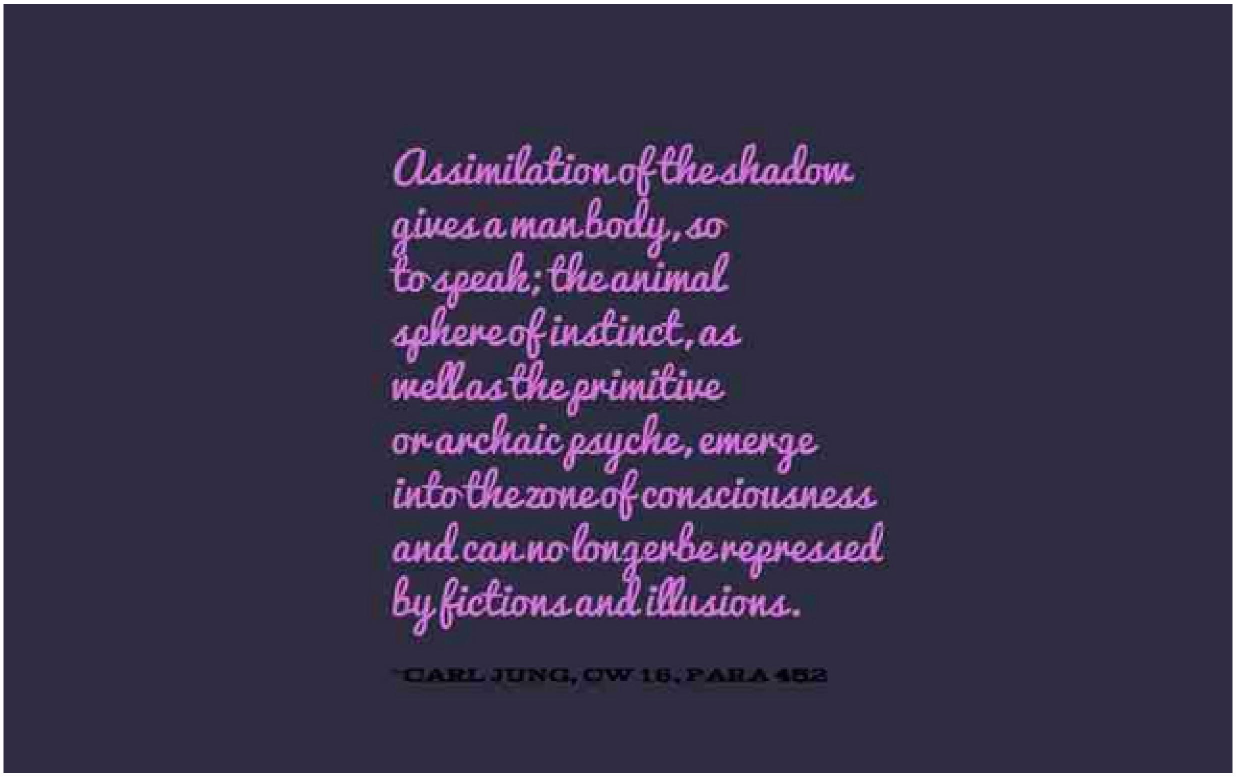


Consciousness, no matter how extensive it may be, must always remain the smaller circle within the greater circle of the unconscious, an island surrounded by the sea; and, like the sea itself, the unconscious yields an endless and self-replenishing abundance of living creatures, a wealth beyond our fathoming.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 366

Consciousness, no matter how extensive it may be, must always remain the smaller circle within the greater circle of the unconscious, an island surrounded by the sea; and, like the sea itself, the unconscious yields an endless and self-replenishing abundance of living creatures, a wealth beyond our fathoming. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 366.

[4]

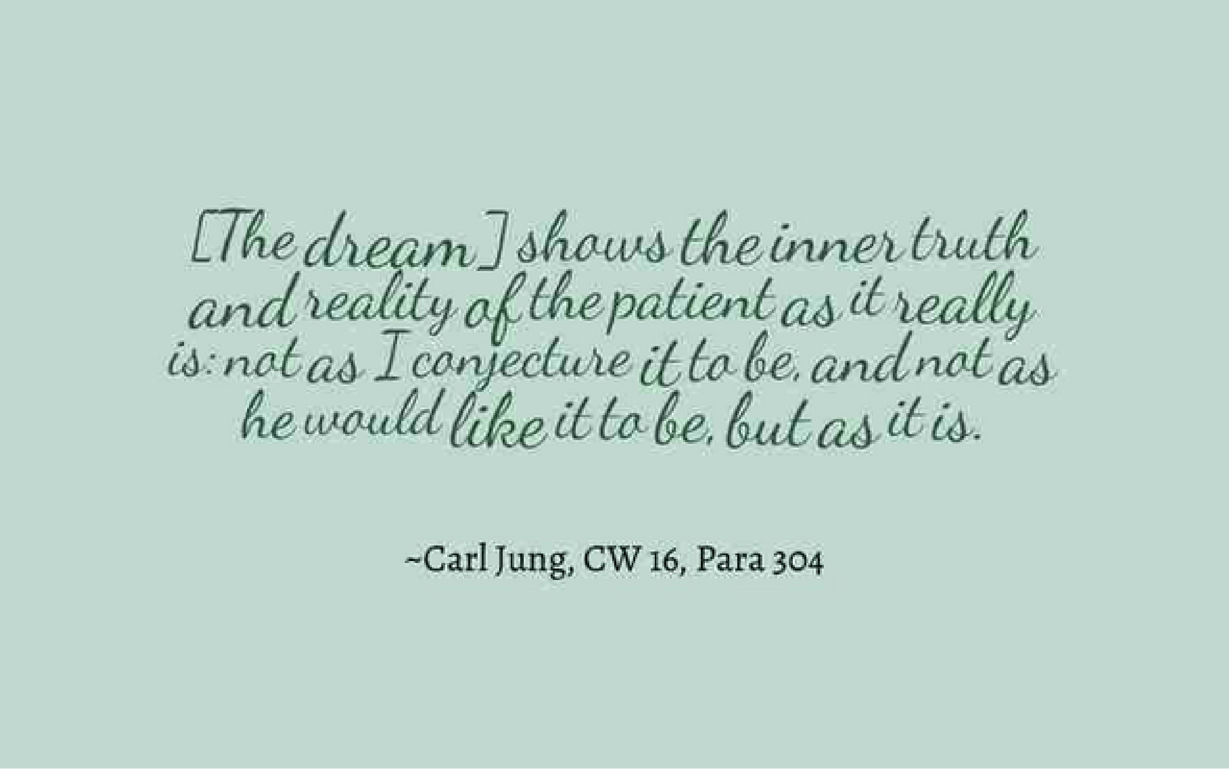


Assimilation of the shadow gives a man body, so to speak; the animal sphere of instinct, as well as the primitive or archaic psyche, emerge into the zone of consciousness and can no longer be repressed by fictions and illusions.

~CARL JUNG, CW 16, PARA 452

Assimilation of the shadow gives a man body, so to speak; the animal sphere of instinct, as well as the primitive or archaic psyche, emerge into the zone of consciousness and can no longer be repressed by fictions and illusions. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 452

[5]

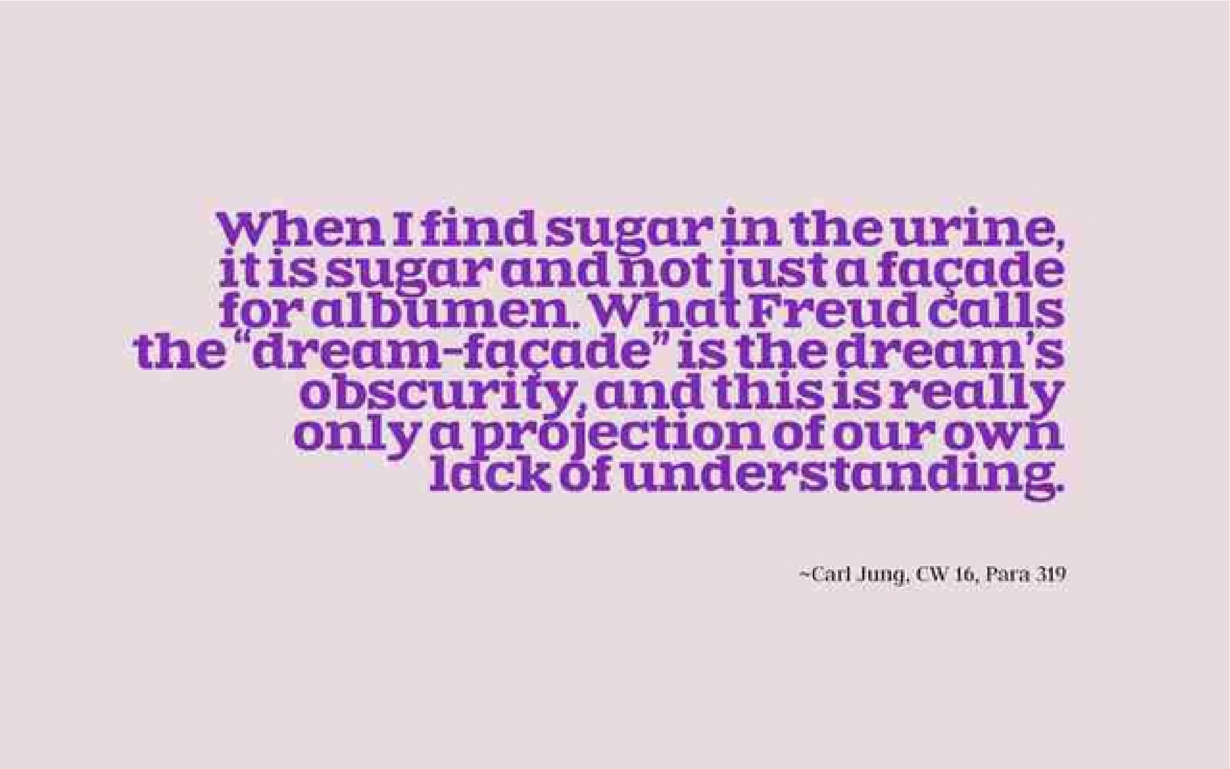


[The dream] shows the inner truth and reality of the patient as it really is: not as I conjecture it to be, and not as he would like it to be, but as it is.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 304

[The dream] shows the inner truth and reality of the patient as it really is: not as I conjecture it to be, and not as he would like it to be, but as it is. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 304

[6]

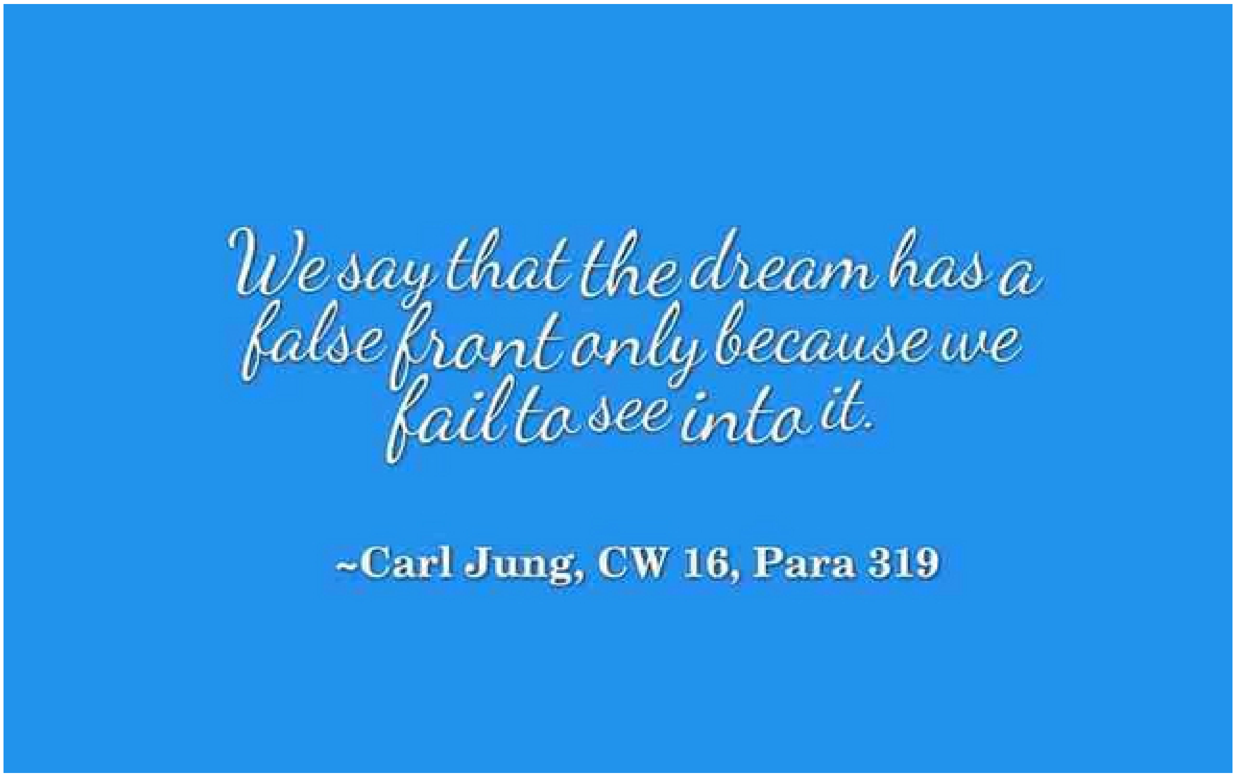


When I find sugar in the urine, it is sugar and not just a façade for albumen. What Freud calls the "dream-façade" is the dream's obscurity, and this is really only a projection of our own lack of understanding.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 319

When I find sugar in the urine, it is sugar and not just a façade for albumen. What Freud calls the "dream-façade" is the dream's obscurity, and this is really only a projection of our own lack of understanding. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 319.

[7]

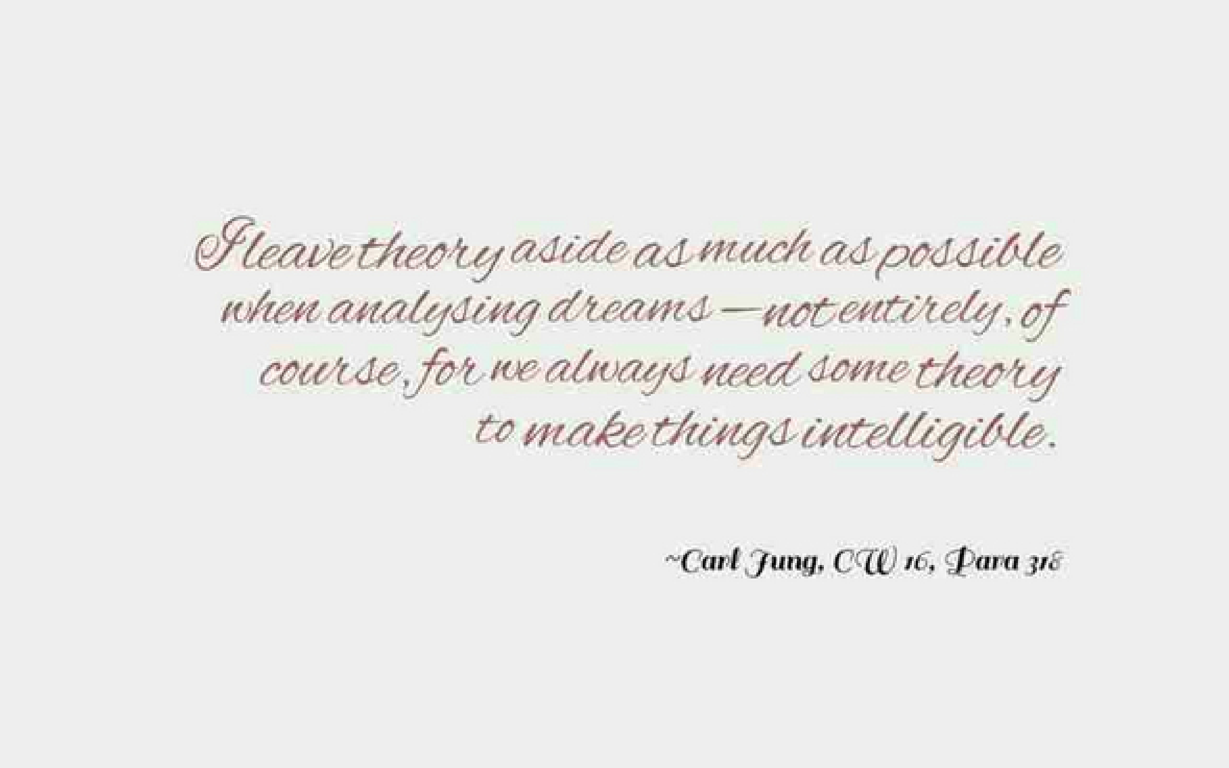


We say that the dream has a false front only because we fail to see into it.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 319

We say that the dream has a false front only because we fail to see into it. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 319.

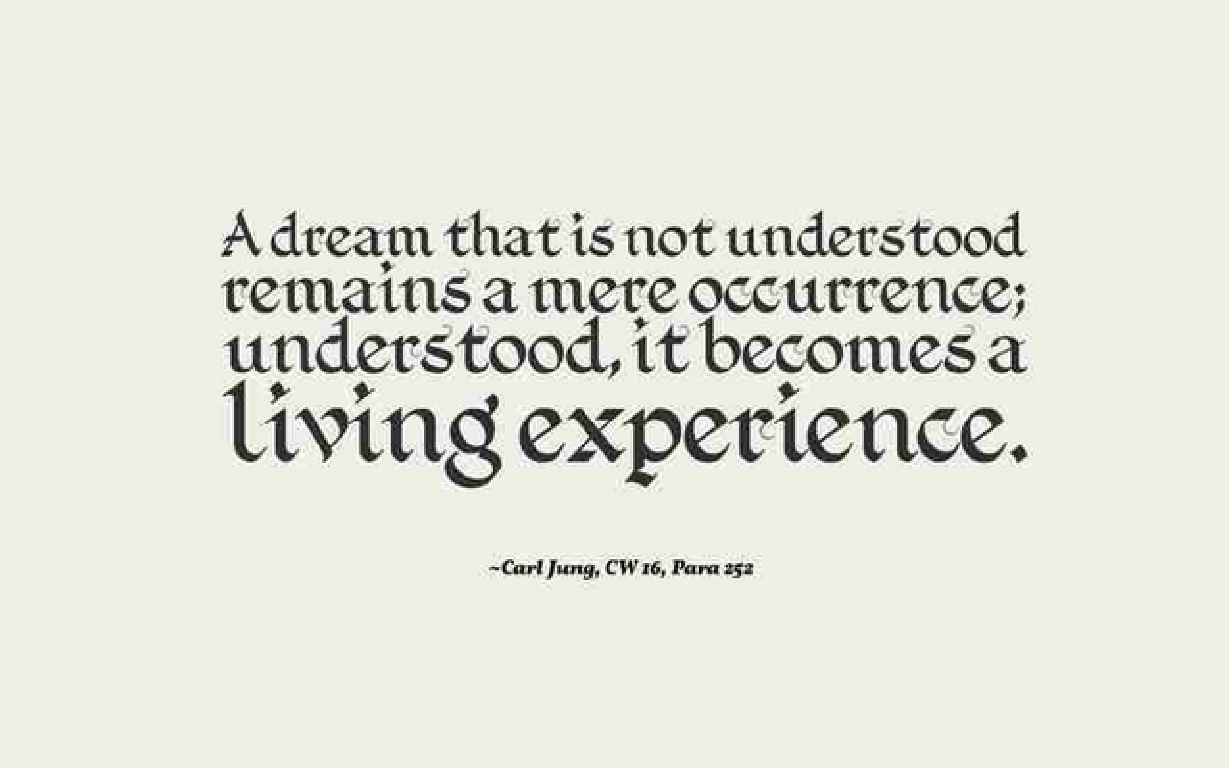
[8]



I leave theory aside as much as possible when analysing dreams—not entirely, of course, for we always need some theory to make things intelligible.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 318

[9]

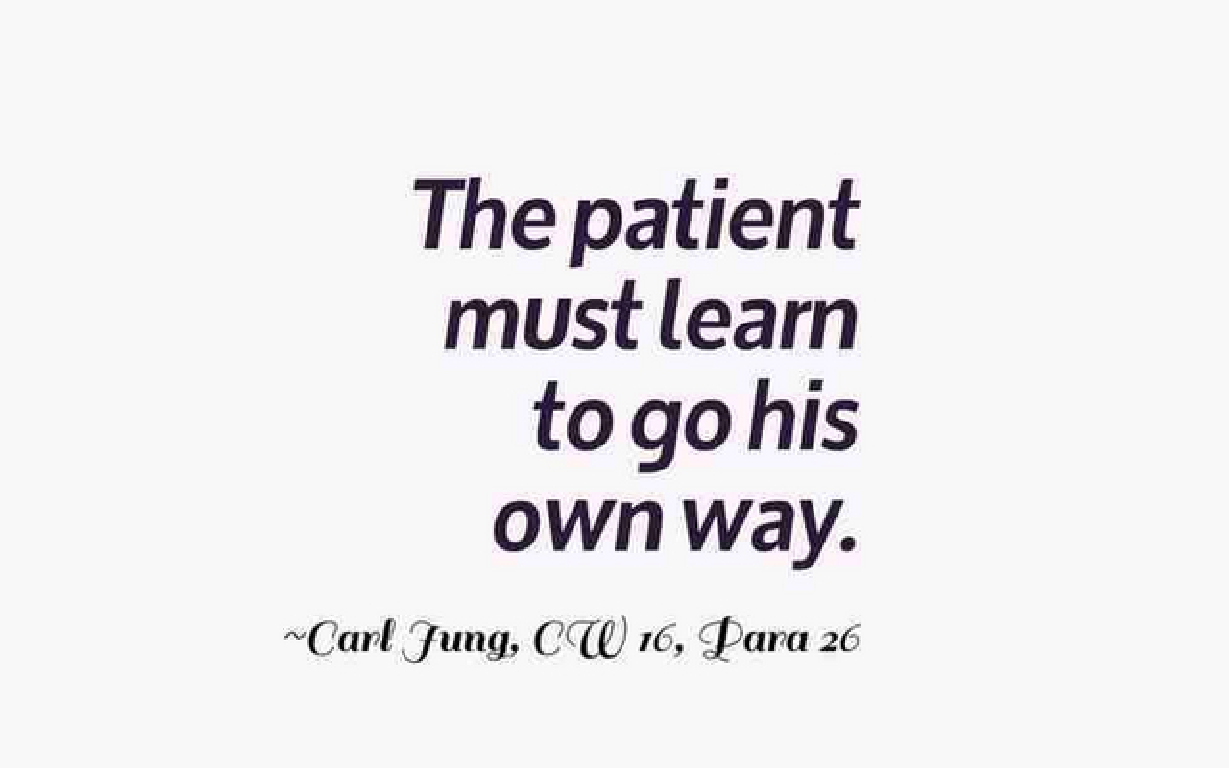


A dream that is not understood remains a mere occurrence; understood, it becomes a living experience.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 252

A dream that is not understood remains a mere occurrence; understood, it becomes a living experience. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 252

[10]

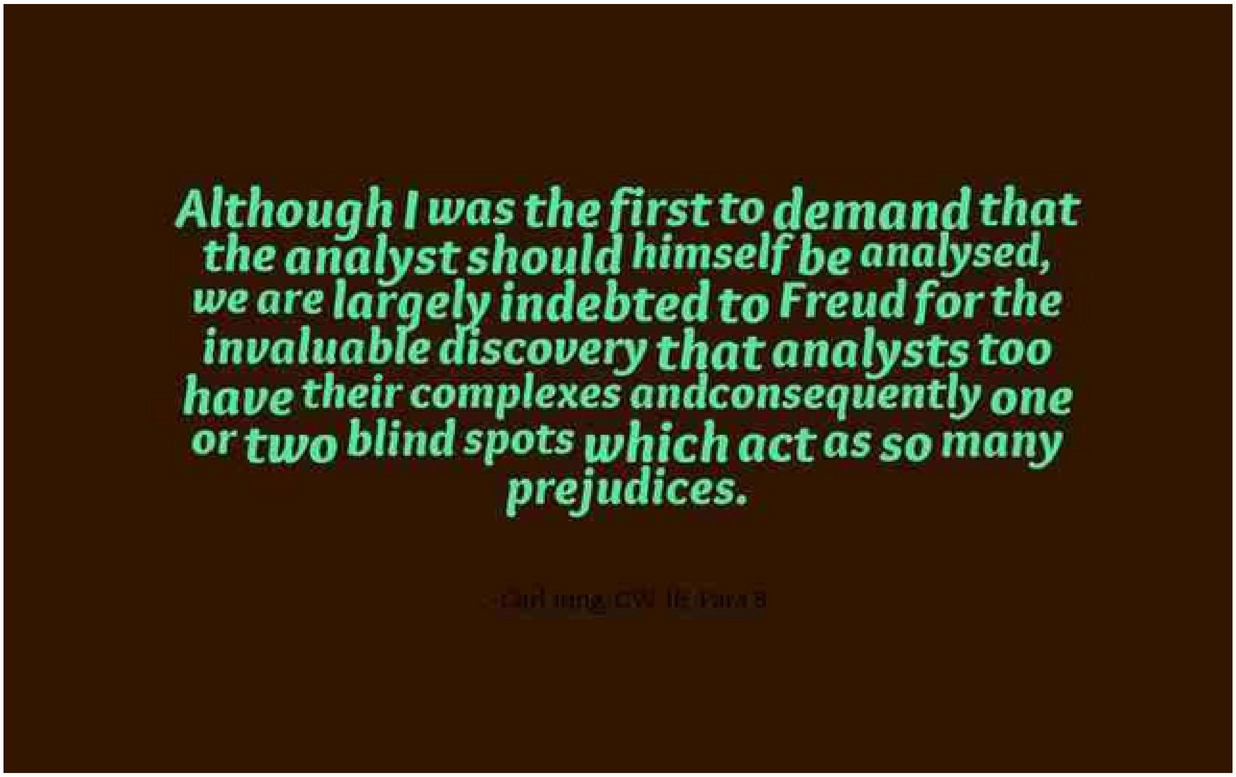


The patient must learn to go his own way.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 26

The patient must learn to go his own way. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 26.

[11]

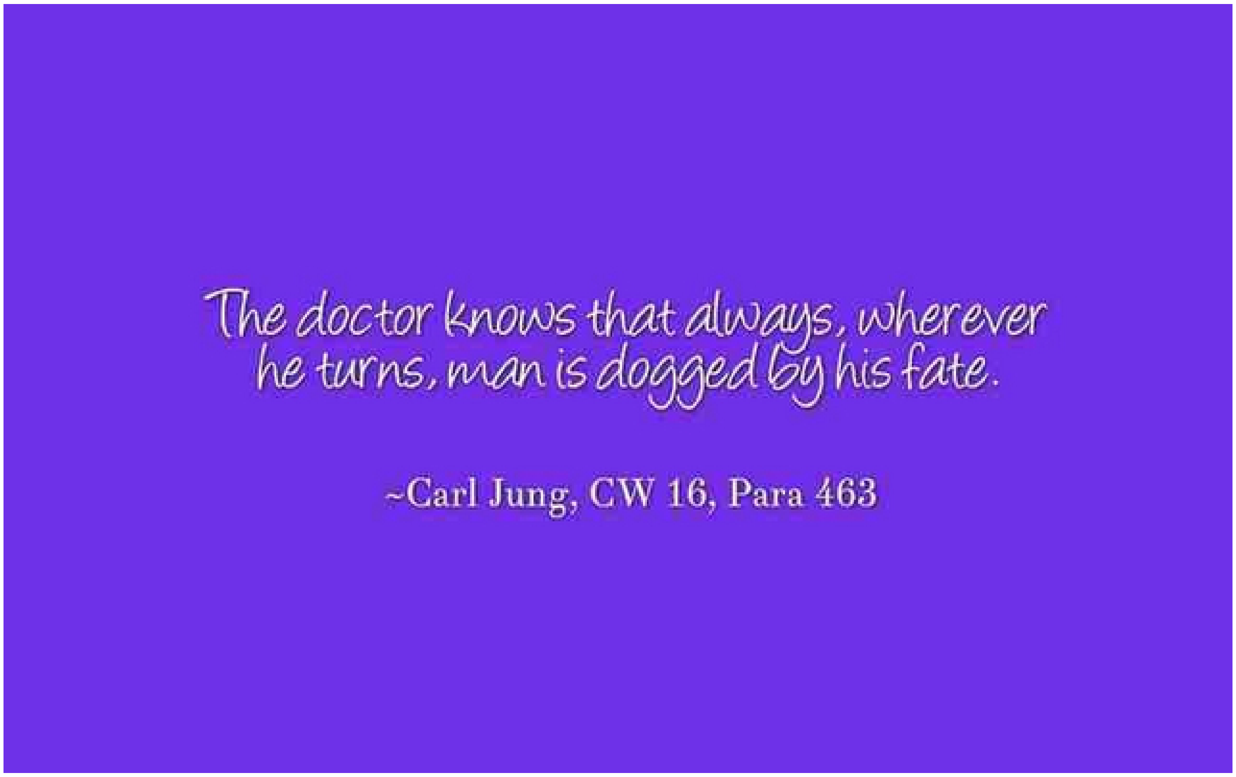


Although I was the first to demand that the analyst should himself be analysed, we are largely indebted to Freud for the invaluable discovery that analysts too have their complexes andconsequently one or two blind spots which act as so many prejudices.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 8

Although I was the first to demand that the analyst should himself be analysed, we are largely indebted to Freud for the invaluable discovery that analysts too have their complexes and consequently one or two blind spots which act as so many prejudices. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 8

[12]



The doctor knows that always, wherever he turns, man is dogged by his fate.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 463

The doctor knows that always, wherever he turns, man is dogged by his fate. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 463

[13]

Freud rightly recognized that this bond is of greatest therapeutic importance in that it gives rise to a mixtum compositum [composite mixture] of the doctor's own mental health and the patient'smaladjustment.

Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 358

Freud rightly recognized that this bond is of greatest therapeutic importance in that it gives rise to a mixtum compositum [composite mixture] of the doctor's own mental health and the patient's maladjustment. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 358.

[14]

The transference is far from being a simple phenomenon with only one meaning, and we can never make out beforehand what it is all about.

The transference is far from being a simple phenomenon with only one meaning, and we can never make out beforehand what it is all about. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 362.

[15]

No analysis is capable of banishing all unconsciousness forever.

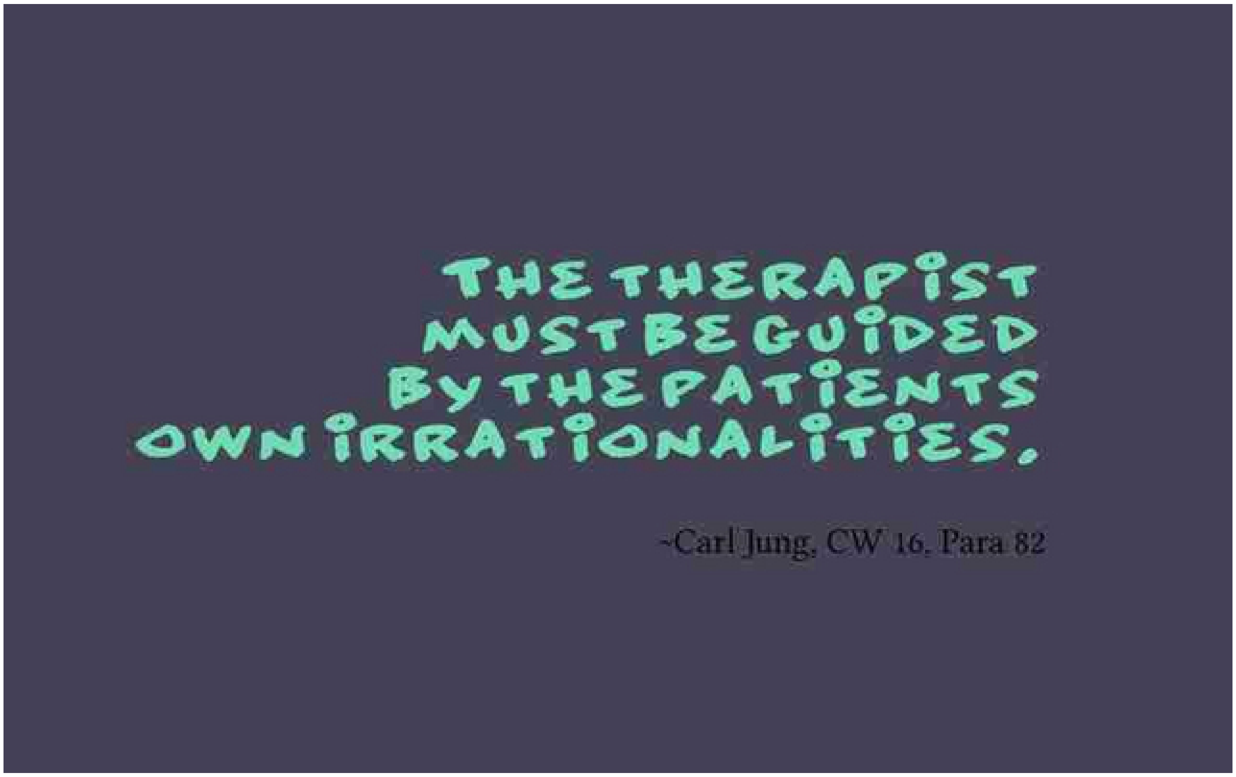
~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 239

No analysis is capable of banishing all unconsciousness forever. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 239.

[16]

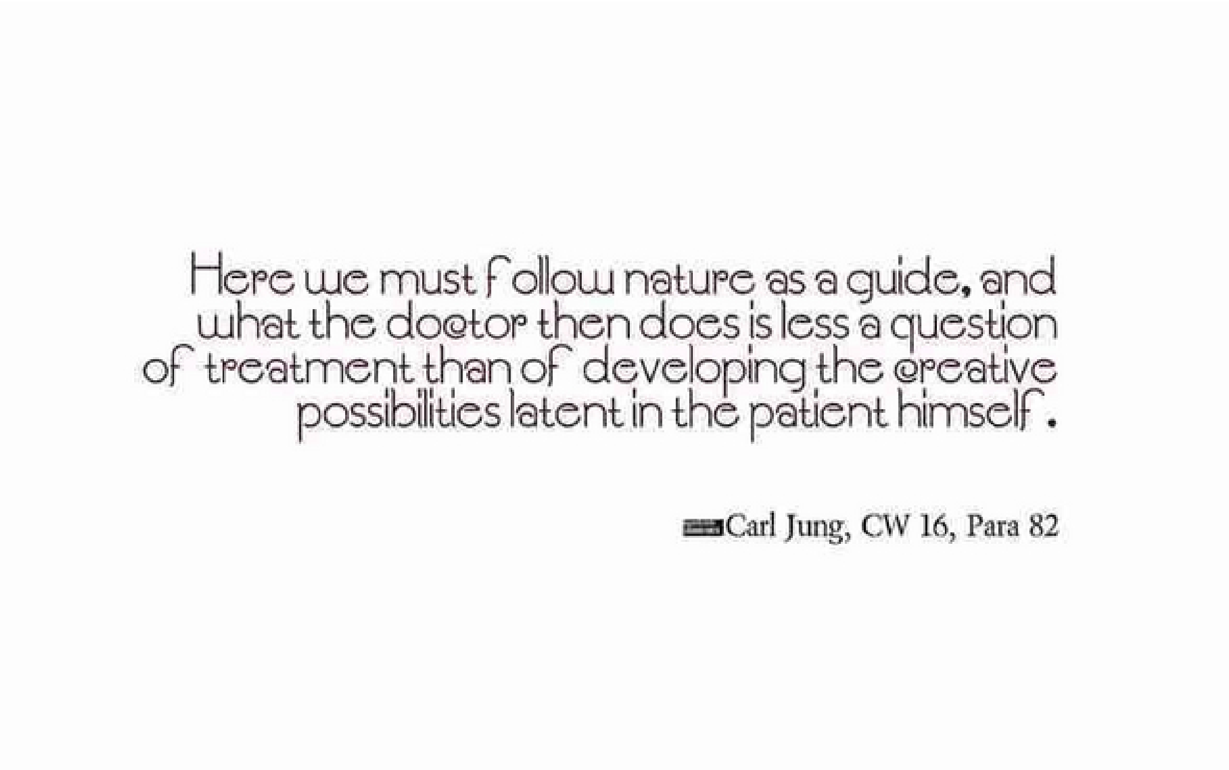


THE THERAPIST MUST BE GUIDED BY THE PATIENTS OWN IRRATIONALITIES.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 82

The therapist must be guided by the patient’s own irrationalities. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 82.

[17]

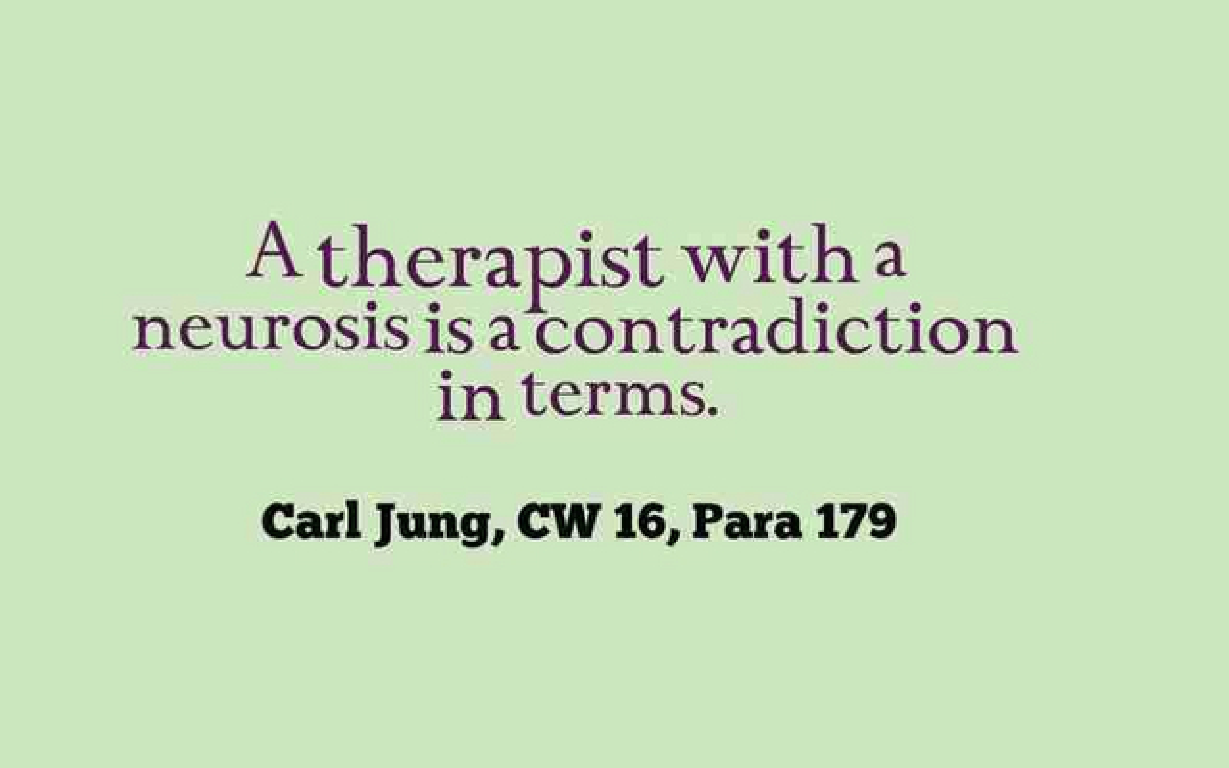


Here we must follow nature as a guide, and what the doctor then does is less a question of treatment than of developing the creative possibilities latent in the patient himself.

Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 82

Here we must follow nature as a guide, and what the doctor then does is less a question of treatment than of developing the creative possibilities latent in the patient himself. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 82.

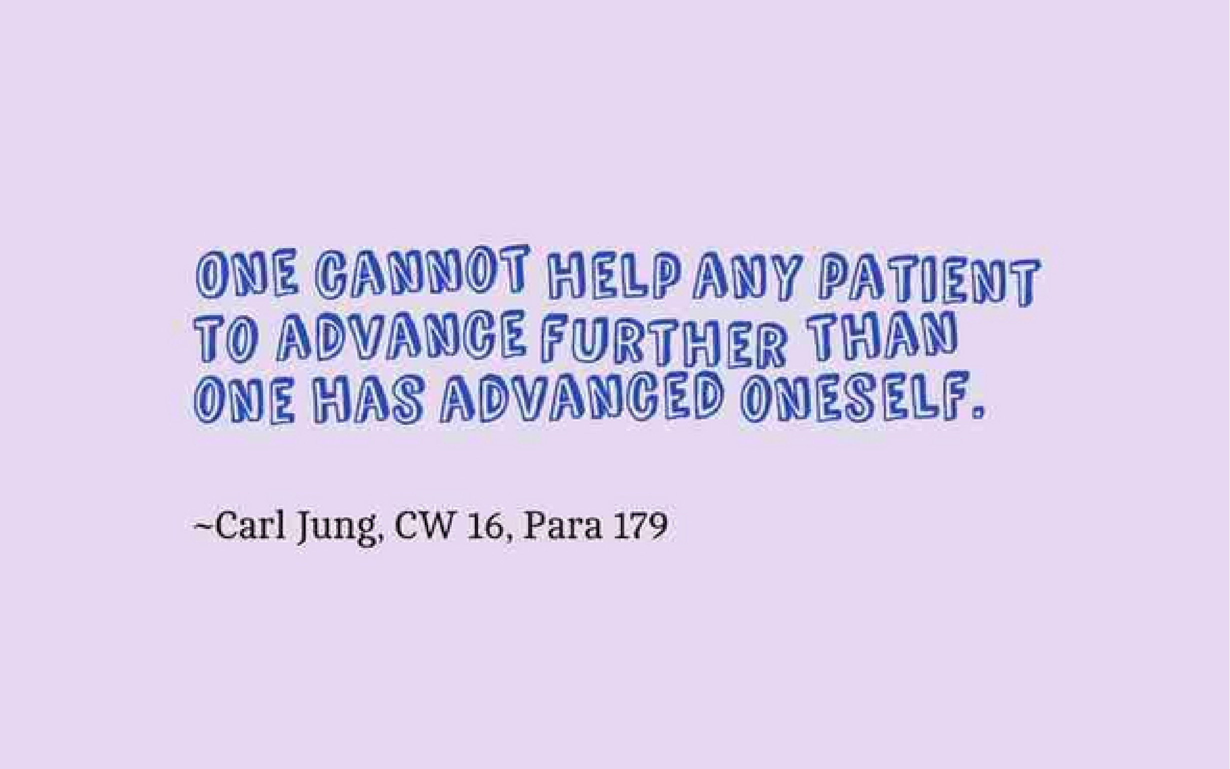
[18]



A therapist with a neurosis is a contradiction in terms.

Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 179

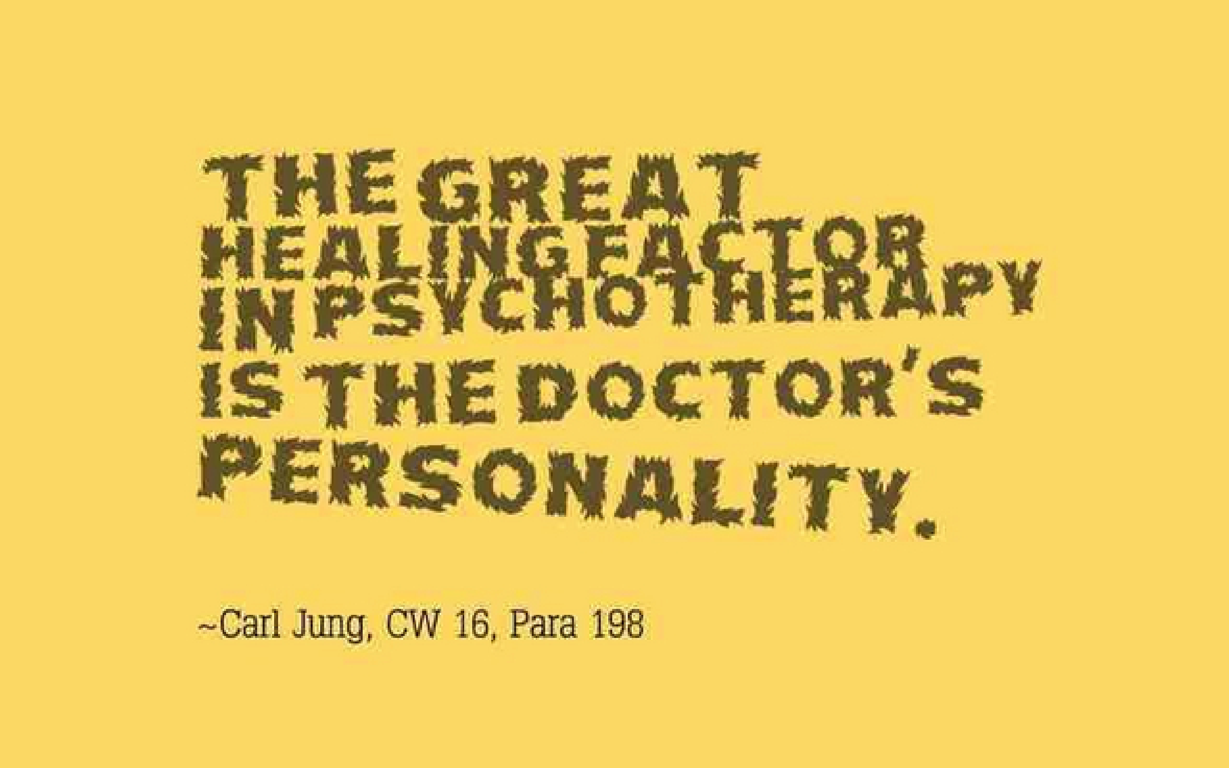
A therapist with a neurosis is a contradiction in terms. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 179



ONE CANNOT HELP ANY PATIENT TO ADVANCE FURTHER THAN ONE HAS ADVANCED ONESELF.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 179

One cannot help any patient to advance further than one has advanced oneself. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 179

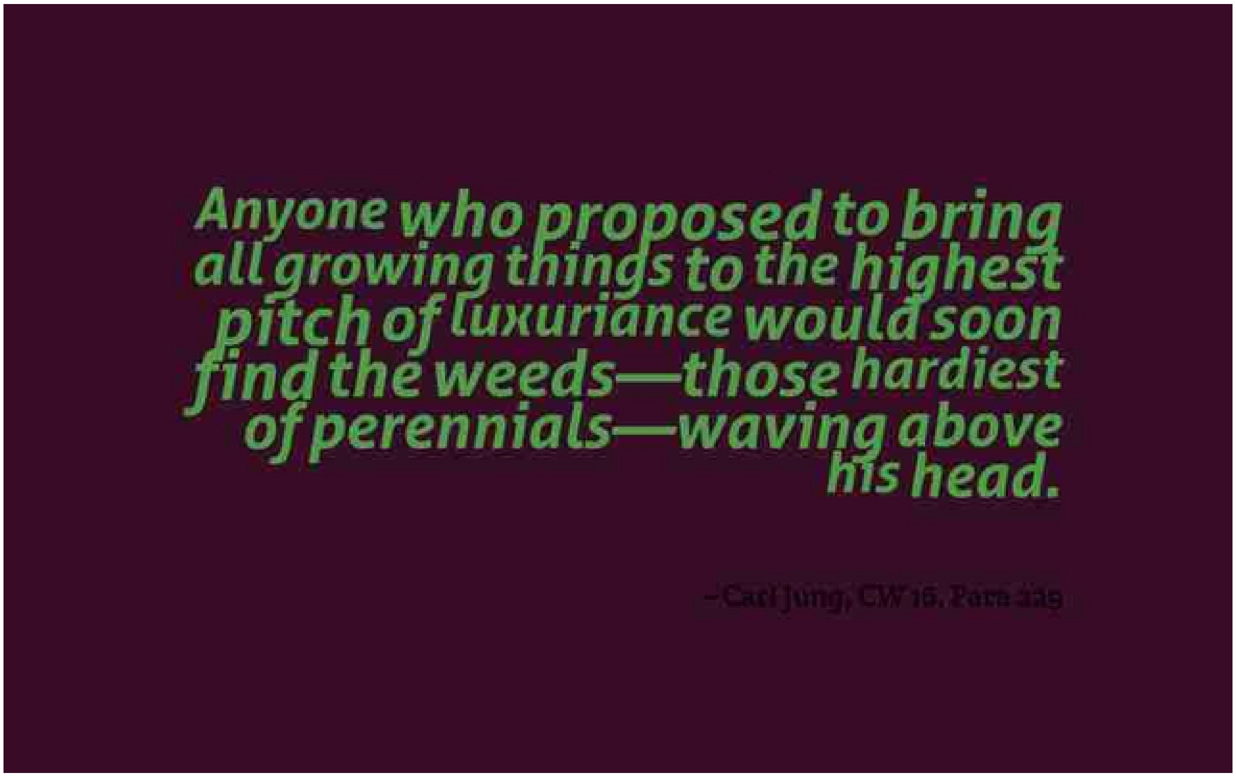


THE GREAT HEALING FACTOR IN PSYCHOTHERAPY IS THE DOCTOR'S PERSONALITY.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 198

The great healing factor in psychotherapy is the doctor’s personality. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 198.

[21]

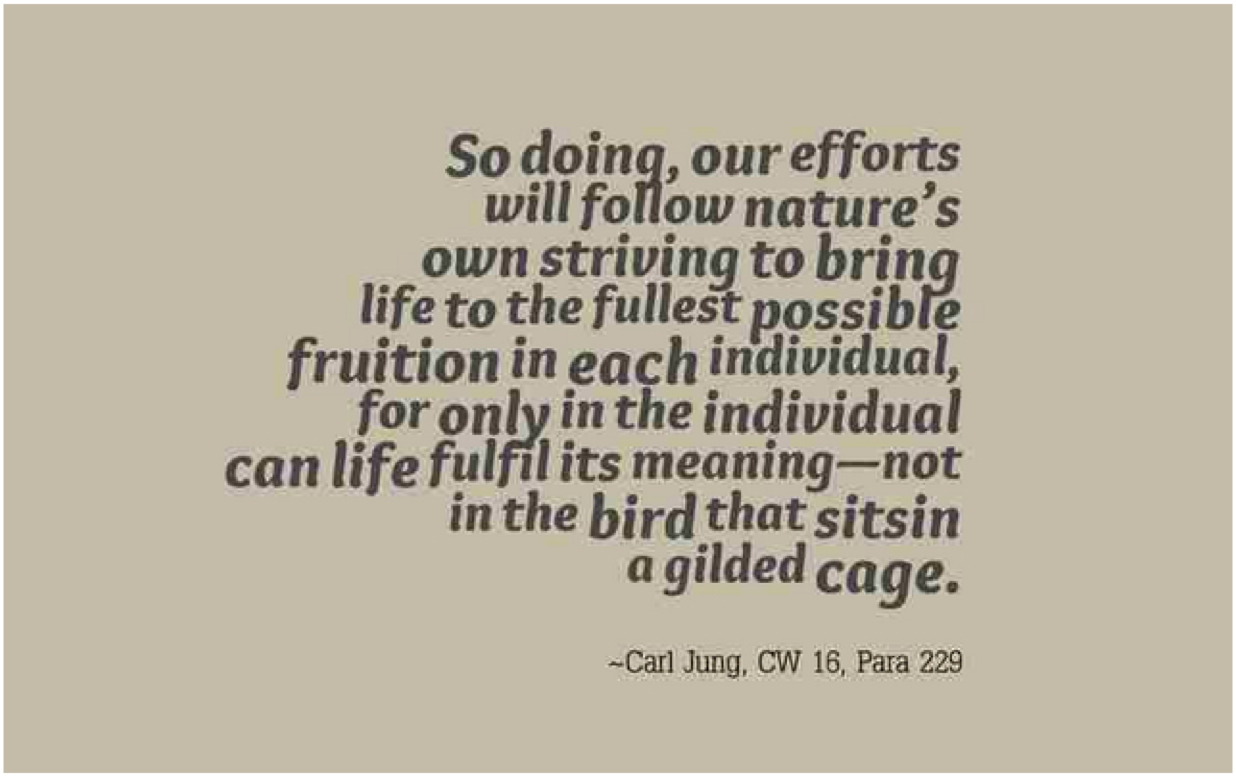


Anyone who proposed to bring all growing things to the highest pitch of luxuriance would soon find the weeds—those hardiest of perennials—waving above his head.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 229

Anyone who proposed to bring all growing things to the highest pitch of luxuriance would soon find the weeds—those hardiest of perennials—waving above his head. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 229.

[22]



So doing, our efforts will follow nature's own striving to bring life to the fullest possible fruition in each individual, for only in the individual can life fulfil its meaning—not in the bird that sitsin a gilded cage.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 229

So doing, our efforts will follow nature's own striving to bring life to the fullest possible fruition in each individual, for only in the individual can life fulfil its meaning—not in the bird that sits in a gilded cage. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 229.

[23]

It was Freud's momentous discovery that the neurosis is not a mere agglomeration of symptoms, but a wrong functioning which affects the whole psyche.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 190

It was Freud's momentous discovery that the neurosis is not a mere agglomeration of symptoms, but a wrong functioning which affects the whole psyche. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 190

[24]

The important thing is not the neurosis, but the man who has the neurosis

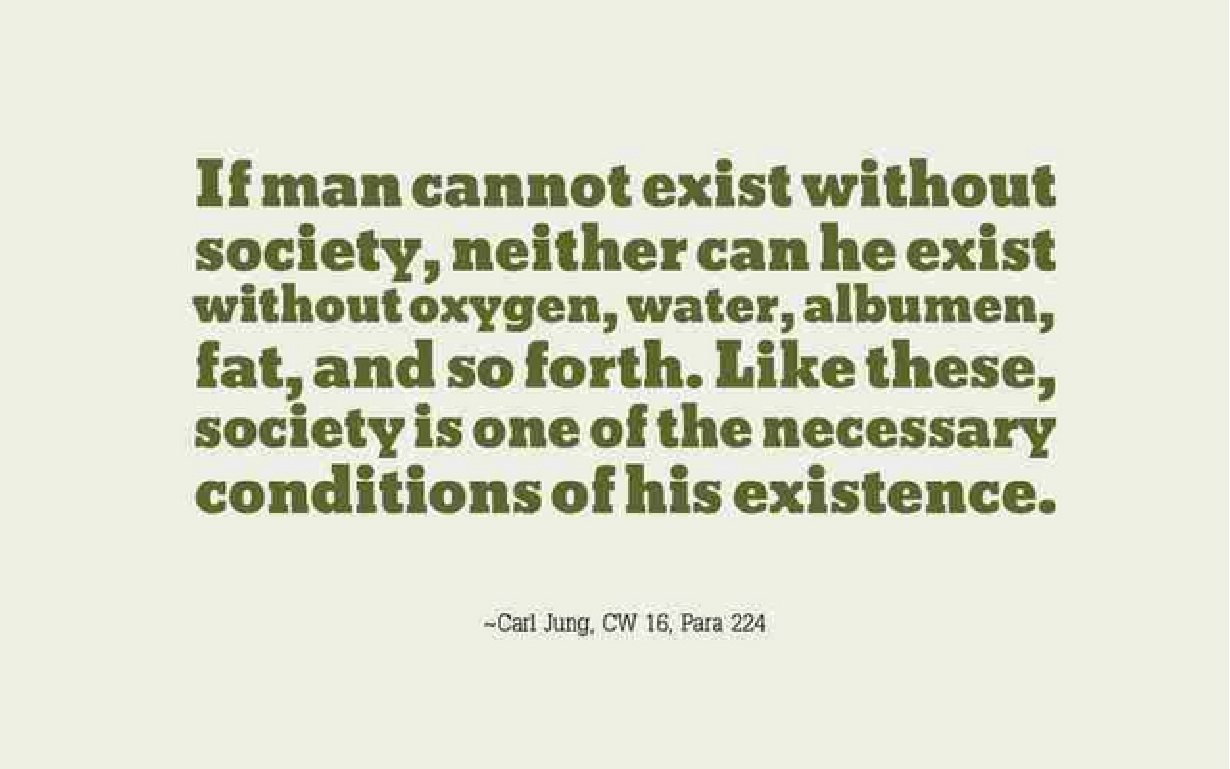
Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 190

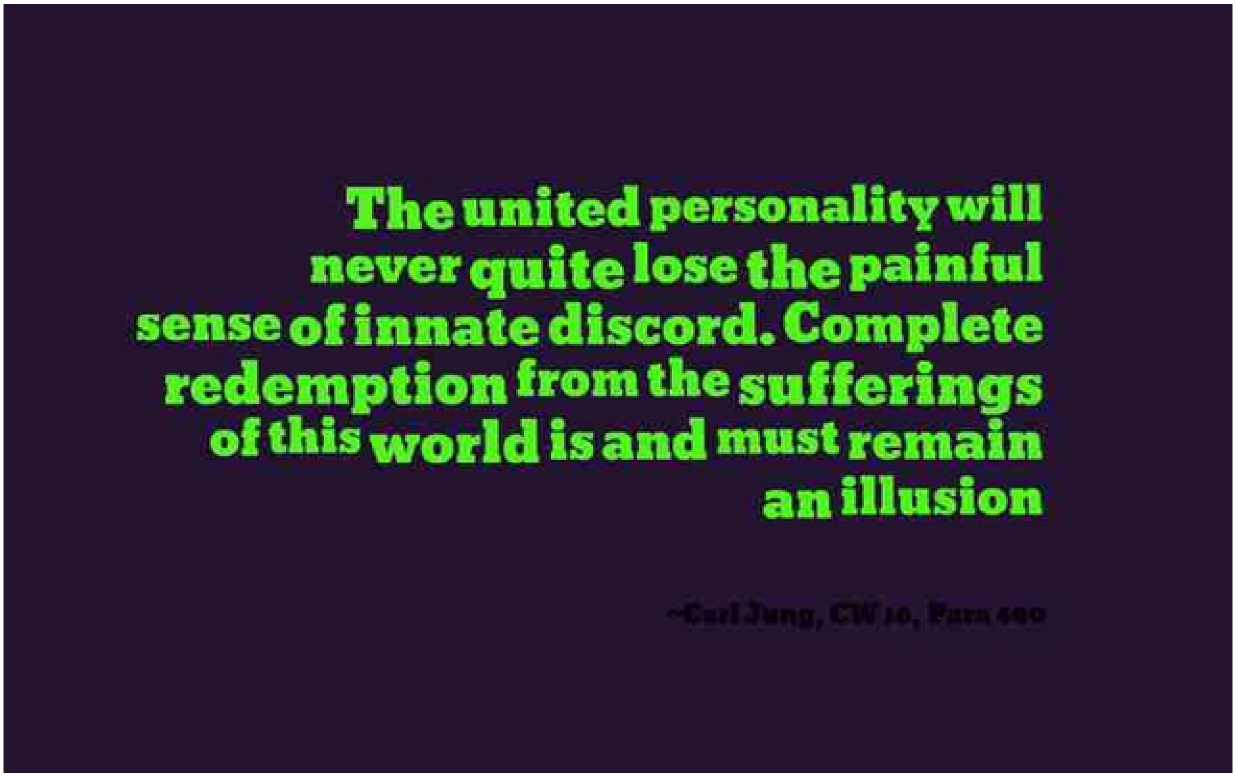
[25]



If man cannot exist without society, neither can he exist without oxygen, water, albumen, fat, and so forth. Like these, society is one of the necessary conditions of his existence.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 224

[26]



The united personality will never quite lose the painful sense of innate discord. Complete redemption from the sufferings of this world is and must remain an illusion

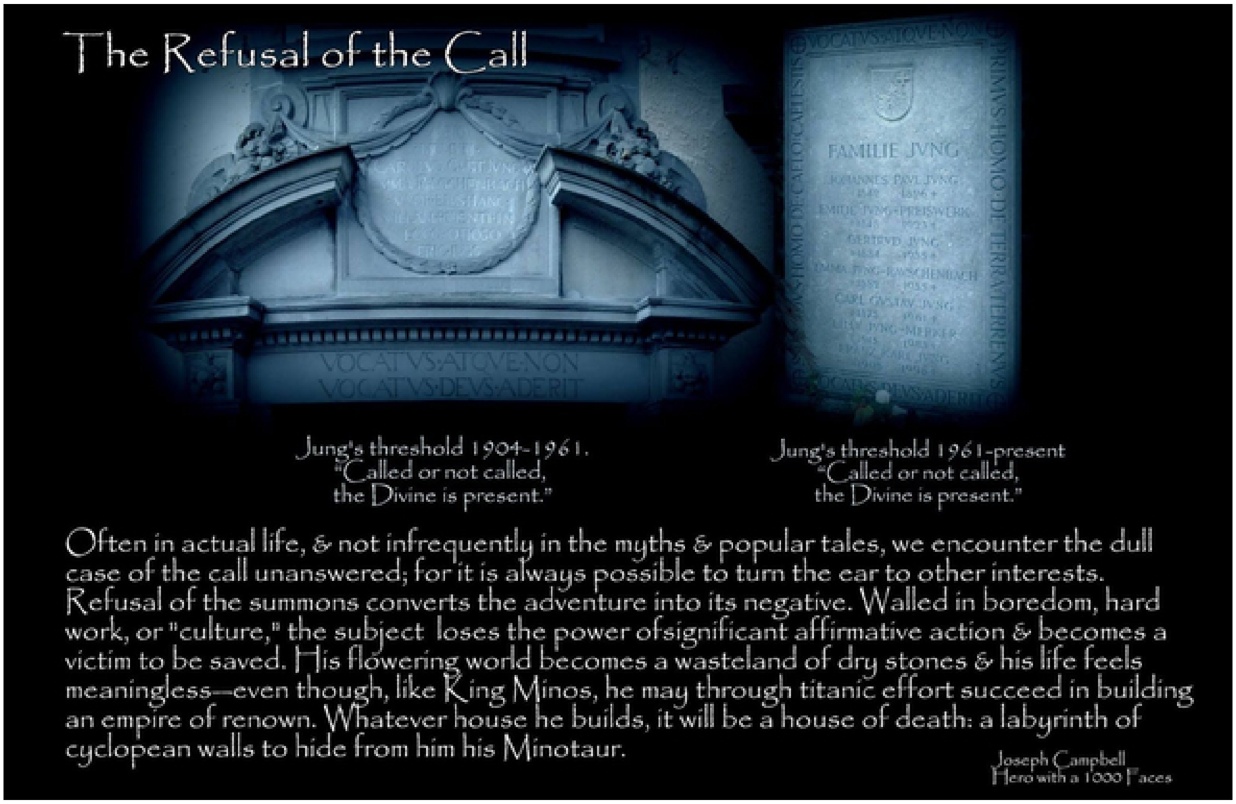
~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 400

The united personality will never quite lose the painful sense of innate discord. Complete redemption from the sufferings of this world is and must remain an illusion. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 400

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b9ea0-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aa868-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f93a1-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4a31a-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/38ebe-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/52516-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a49c3-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cff14-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ecd3f-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/53c6a-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8e2ba-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dc8d2-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9d354-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e9e67-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9dfc2-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0d1b9-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f3ef9-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2b139-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/be00b-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7d365-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/487bc-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/62a55-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a405f-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/31eea-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/99545-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ef66b-zzz.jpg`

Joseph Campbell: Refusal of the summons converts the adventure into its negative. (2019-03-15 03:30)

[1]



The Refusal of the Call

Jung's threshold 1904-1961.
"Called or not called,
the Divine is present."

Jung's threshold 1961-present
"Called or not called,
the Divine is present."

Often in actual life, & not infrequently in the myths & popular tales, we encounter the dull case of the call unanswered; for it is always possible to turn the ear to other interests. Refusal of the summons converts the adventure into its negative. Walled in boredom, hard work, or "culture," the subject loses the power ofsignificant affirmative action & becomes a victim to be saved. His flowering world becomes a wasteland of dry stones & his life feels meaningless—even though, like King Minos, he may through titanic effort succeed in building an empire of renown. Whatever house he builds, it will be a house of death: a labyrinth of cyclopean walls to hide from him his Minotaur.

Joseph Campbell
Hero with a 1000 Faces

Refusal of the Call

Often in actual life, and not infrequently in the myths and popular tales, we encounter the dull case of the call unanswered; for it is always possible to turn the ear to other interests.

Refusal of the summons converts the adventure into its negative.

Walled in boredom, hard work, or "culture," the subject loses the power of significant affirmative action and becomes a victim to be saved.

His flowering world becomes a wasteland of dry stones and his life feels meaningless—even though, like King Minos, he may through titanic effort succeed in building an empire of renown.

Whatever house he builds, it will be a house of death: a labyrinth of cyclopean walls to hide from him his Minotaur.

All he can do is create new problems for himself and await the gradual approach of his disintegration.

"Because I have called, and ye refused . . . I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you."

"For the turning away of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them."

Time Jesum transeuntem et non revertentem: "Dread the passage of Jesus, for he does not return."

The myths and folk tales of the whole world make clear that the refusal is essentially a refusal to give up what one takes to be one’s own interest.

The future is regarded not in terms of an unremitting series of deaths and births, but as though one’s present system of ideals, virtues, goals, and advantages were to be fixed and made secure. King Minos retained the divine bull, when the sacrifice would have signified submission to the will of the god of his society; for he preferred what he conceived to be his economic advantage.

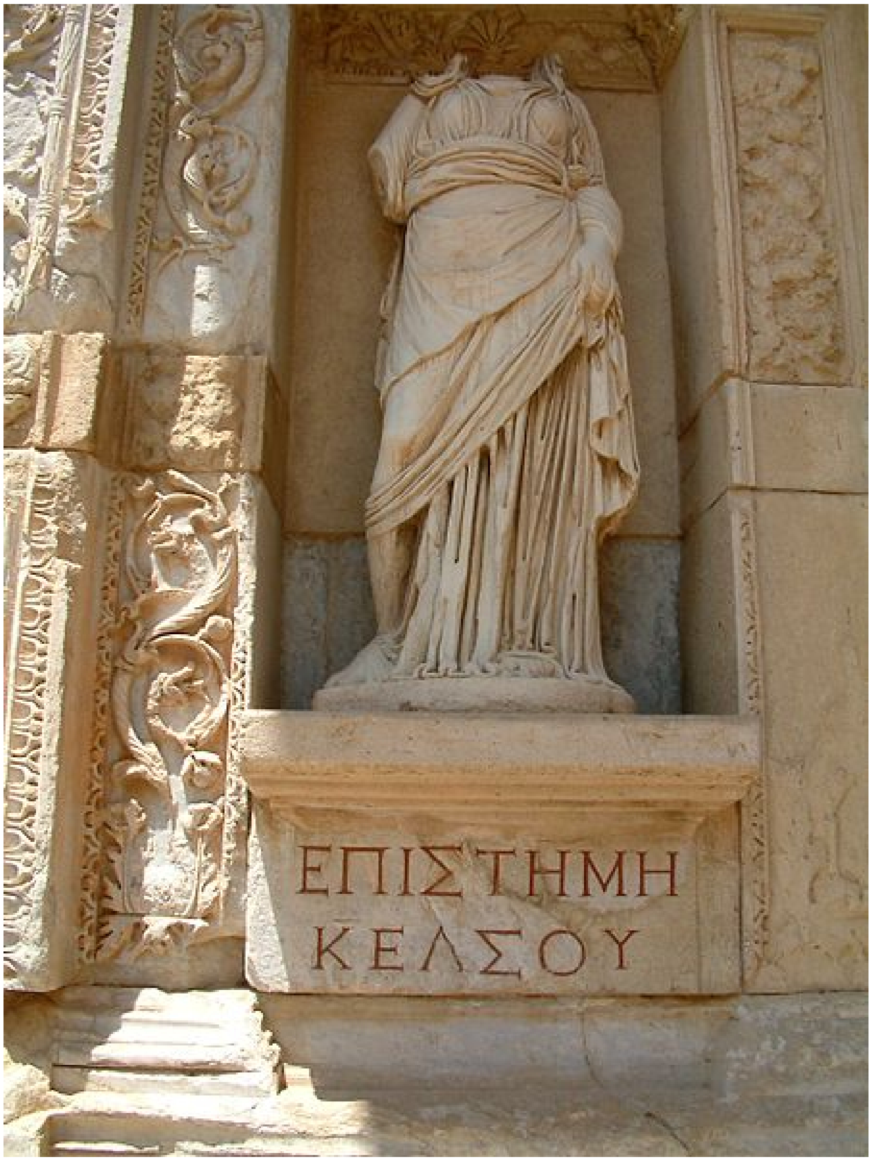
Thus he failed to advance into the life role that he had assumed—and we have seen with what calamitous effect.

The divinity itself became his terror; for, obviously, if one is oneself one’s god, then God himself, the will of God, the power that would destroy one’s egocentric system, becomes a monster. Joseph Campbell, Hro with a Thousand Faces, Pages 60

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/48487-12blabyrinth.jpg`

The knowledge of the heart is in no book...~Carl Jung (2019-03-15 03:51)

[1]



The spirit of the depths even taught me to consider my action and my decision as dependent on dreams. Dreams pave the way for life, and they determine you without you understanding their language. One would like to learn this language, but who can teach and learn it? Scholarliness alone is not enough; there is a knowledge of the heart that gives deeper insight. The knowledge of the heart is in no book and is not to be found in the mouth of any teacher, but grows out of you like the green seed from the dark earth. Scholarliness belongs to the spirit of this time, but this spirit in no way grasps the dream, since the soul is everywhere that scholarly knowledge is not. Carl Jung, Red Book, Page 233.

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/4/49/Efez_Celsus_Library_5_RB.jpg/450px-Efez_Celsus_Library_5_RB.jpg`

Carl Jung on his interest in Architecture (2019-03-15 03:53)

[1]

Stephen Black: Were you interested in architecture at all?

Dr. Jung: Oh, yes; very much so. I have built with my own hands; I learned the work of a mason.

I went to a quarry to learn how to split stones—big rocks.

Stephen Black: And actually laying bricks, laying the stones?

Dr. Jung: Oh, well, in Europe we work with stone.

I did actually lay stones and built part of my house up in Bollingen.

Stephen Black: Why did you do that?

Dr. Jung: I wanted to handle and get the feeling of the stone and to touch the earth—I worked a lot in the garden, I have chopped wood, felled trees, and all that. I liked sailing and rowing and mountain climbing when I was young.

Stephen Black: Could you explain what you think are the origins of this desire to touch the earth?

We in England have it very much; every Englishman has his little garden.

We all love the earth.

Dr. Jung: Of course. Well, you know, that is—how can we explain it?—you love the earth and the earth loves you.

And therefore the earth brings forth.

That is so even with the peasant who wants to make his field fertile, and in the night of the full moon he sleeps with his wife in the furrow.

Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 252-267.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/37c98-12bbollingen.jpg`

Emma Jung: “Will you advise me, dear Herr Professor, and if necessary dress me down a bit?” (2019-03-15 04:38)

[1]

From Emma Jung

My dear Professor Freud, Kusnacht, 24 November 1911

Heartfelt thanks for your letter.

Please don't worry, I am not always as despondent as I was in my last letter.

I was afraid you were angry with me or had a bad opinion of me; that was what made me so downhearted, especially because my main complex was hit.

Usually I am quite at one with my fate and see very well how lucky I am, but from time to time I am tormented by the conflict about how I can hold my own against Carl.

I find I have no friends, all the people who associate with us really only want to see Carl, except for a few boring and to me quite uninteresting persons.

Naturally the women are all in love with him, and with the men I am instantly cordoned off as the wife of the father or friend.

Yet I have a strong need for people and Carl too says I should stop concentrating on him and the children, but what on earth am I to do?

What with my strong tendency to autoerotism it is very difficult, but also objectively it is difficult because I can never compete with Carl.

In order to emphasize this I usually have to talk extra stupidly when in company.

I do my best to get transferences and if they don't turn out as I wished I am always very depressed.

You will now understand why I felt so bad at the thought that I had lost your favour, and I was also afraid Carl might notice something.

At any rate he now knows about the exchange of letters, as he was astonished to see one of your letters addressed to me; but I have revealed only a little of their content.

Will you advise me, dear Herr Professor, and if necessary dress me down a bit?

I am ever so grateful to you for your sympathy.

With warmest greetings to you and yours,

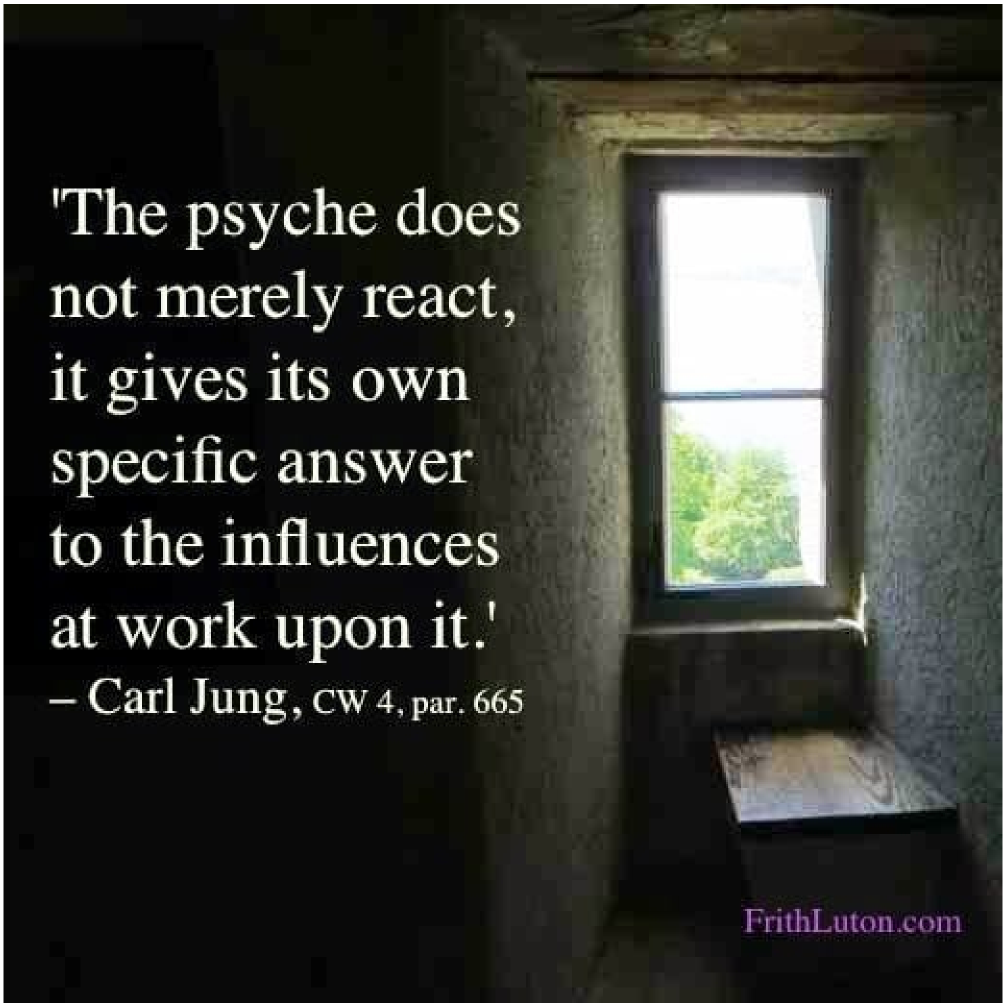
Emma Jung Freud/Jung Letters Page 467.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/3ac90-3.jpg`

Carl Jung and "Self-regulation of the Psyche" -Lexicon (2019-03-15 06:29)

[1]



'The psyche does not merely react, it gives its own specific answer to the influences at work upon it.'
– Carl Jung, CW 4, par. 665
FrithLuton.com

Self-regulation of the psyche:

A concept based on the compensatory relationship between consciousness and the unconscious.

The psyche does not merely react, it gives its own specific answer to the influences at work upon it.["Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis," CW 4, par. 665.]

The process of self-regulation is going on all the time within the psyche. It only becomes noticeable when ego-consciousness has particular difficulty in adapting to external or internal reality. That is often the start of a process, proceeeding along the lines outlined in the chart, that may lead to individuation.

The Self-regulation of the Psyche:

a. Difficulty of adaptation. Little progression of libido.

b. Regression of energy (depression, lack of disposable energy).

c. Activation of unconscious contents (fantasies, complexes, archetypal images, inferior function, opposite attitude, shadow, anima/animus, etc.). Compensation.

d. Symptoms of neurosis (confusion, fear, anxiety, guilt, moods, extreme affect, etc.).

e. Unconscious or half-conscious conflict between ego and contents activated in the unconscious. Inner tension. Defensive reactions.

f. Activation of the transcendent function, involving the self and archetypal patterns of wholeness.

g. Formation of symbols (numinosity, synchronicity).

h. Transfer of energy between unconscious contents and consciousness. Enlargement of the ego, progression of energy.

i. Assimilation of unconscious contents. Individuation.

Consciousness and the unconscious seldom agree as to their contents and their tendencies. The self-regulating activities of the psyche, manifest in dreams, fantasies and synchronistic experiences, attempt to correct any significant imbalance.

According to Jung, this is necessary for several reasons:

(1) Consciousness possesses a threshold intensity which its contents must have attained, so that all elements that are too weak remain in the unconscious.

(2) Consciousness, because of its directed functions, exercises an inhibition (which Freud calls censorship) on all incompatible material, with the result that it sinks into the unconscious.

(3) Consciousness constitutes the momentary process of adaptation, whereas the unconscious contains not only all the forgotten material of the individual's own past, but all the inherited behavior traces constituting the structure of the mind [i.e., archetypes].

(4) The unconscious contains all the fantasy combinations which have not yet attained the threshold intensity, but which in the course of time and under suitable conditions will enter the light of consciousness.["The Transcendent Function," CW 8, par. 132.]

http://www.nyaap.org/jung-lexicon/s

http://frithluton.com/articles/self-regulation-of-the-psyche/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/e39c4-react.jpg`

Christiana Morgan and Carl Jung (2019-03-15 07:12)

[1]

Christiana Morgan, 1926. Morgan Family Papers.

Christiana Drummond Morgan (born Christiana Drummond Councilman) (1897–1967) was a lay psychoanalyst at Harvard University best known for her work co-authoring the Thematic Apperception Test, one of the most widely used projective psychological test.

She administered one of the earliest versions of the test to one of the first diagnosed anorexic patients in Boston. She is mostly remembered as the lover of American psychologist Henry Murray.

The nude portrait statue of Christiana commissioned by Murray from Gaston Lachaise is now owned by the Governor's Academy, Byfield, Massachusetts. Christiana committed suicide at 69 years of age. There is some controversy over her death related to Henry Murray's conflicting accounts, but it is mostly considered a suicide.

Christiana was born in Boston, Massachusetts on October 6, 1897. She attended Miss Winsor's school for girls in Boston from 1908 to 1914 and later a boarding school in Farmington, Massachusetts. She came of age, a debutante in Boston society and met William Morgan, a young man enlisted to fight in WWI.

William went abroad to war and Christiana stayed behind and received a certificate as a nurses aid after completing a training program at the YWCA in New York City. She served as a nurse during the 1918 Influenza.

Christiana was an artist, writer, and lay psychoanalyst fascinated by the depth psychology. Part of the Introvert/Extrovert Club in New York City in the 1920s, she traveled to Zurich to consult Carl Jung.

When Carl Jung met Christiana he considered her the manifestation of the perfect feminine, une femme inspiratrice whose role was to act as a muse to great men. Jung conducted a seminar, called the "Vision Seminars", analyzing Christiana's many drawings and dreams. She created mythic visions chronicling her struggle with the feminine and masculine forces in her world.

At Harvard University she played a vital role in inventing the Thematic Apperception Test, a way to elicit fantasy still used today. The test is considered the most used and researched projective psychological test.

In its early development, the test which consisted of a series of pictures shown to a patient who is asked to make up a story about each picture, many of Christiana's own drawings were included.

Also, she was cited as co-author with Henry Murray in the first publication of the test. As it was further developed, Christiana's pictures were taken out as well as her co-authorship. This is sometimes attributed to her lack of professional credentials.

After a radical sympathectomy surgery for high blood pressure and years of excessive drinking, Christiana Morgan committed suicide at the age of 69 at Denis Bay, St. John, Virgin Islands on March 14, 1967.

She left a Conrad Aiken poem to be read over her grave.

"O sweet clean earth, from whom the green blade cometh!
When we are dead, my blest beloved and I,
Embrace us well, that we may rest forever,
Sending up grass and blossoms to the sky."

Image thanks to Craig Nelson.

http://www.artandpopularculture.com/Christiana _D. _Morgan

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/03/7d095-christianamorgan.jpg`

Carl Jung and “What the other has done to us, we’ll then do ourselves later.” (2019-03-15 14:10)

[1]

Professor Jung:

Yes, of course. It then turns out that such an attachment is extremely inexpedient, because he will be insufficiently prepared for facing the exigencies of the outer world.

If such a child is intelligent, he may cope with all the intellectual exigencies in school, but still won’t achieve anything; he does not have the independence of personality.

He is totally undermined by the mother.

In the case of the doctor, the mother demanded that he tell her all about the analysis.

He wrote down every word for the mother, so she always had him in her grip.

Then I said: “This has to stop.”

And of course this was the straw that broke the camel’s back.

Fortunately, she didn’t die.

One gets so furious with such parents!

Participant: Even if she dies, she will still be living.

It’s completely useless.

The mother will still always be there.

Professor Jung:

Yes, dying is completely useless.

As the mother of God, she will always crouch there and brood over the child.

He will never get out. It's the same, of course, with the fathers.

We must by no means think that it would end with death.

What the other has done to us, we'll then do ourselves later.

Everything remains in the same place, and one lives exactly as before.

Many a bachelor is sitting in his apartment and nurses the Manes of his parents, and is as constricted and inhibited as ever. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 438-440.

Note: Manes = Latin, the spirits of the deceased in ancient Rome.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/01/b2284-1.jpg`

Carl Jung on the "Old Alchemists." (2019-03-16 03:00)

[1]

The old alchemists were nearer to the central truth of the psyche than Faust when they strove to deliver the fiery spirit from the chemical elements, and treated the mystery as though it lay in the dark and silent womb of nature.

It was still outside them.

The upward thrust of evolving consciousness was bound sooner or later to put an end to the projection, and to restore to the psyche what had been psychic from the beginning.

Yet, ever since the Age of Enlightenment and in the era of scientific rationalism, what indeed was the psyche: It had become synonymous with consciousness.

The psyche was "what I know."

There was no psyche outside the ego.

Inevitably, then, the ego identified with the contents accruing from the withdrawal of projection.

Gone were the days when the psyche was still for the most part "outside the body" and imagined "those greater things" which the body could not grasp.

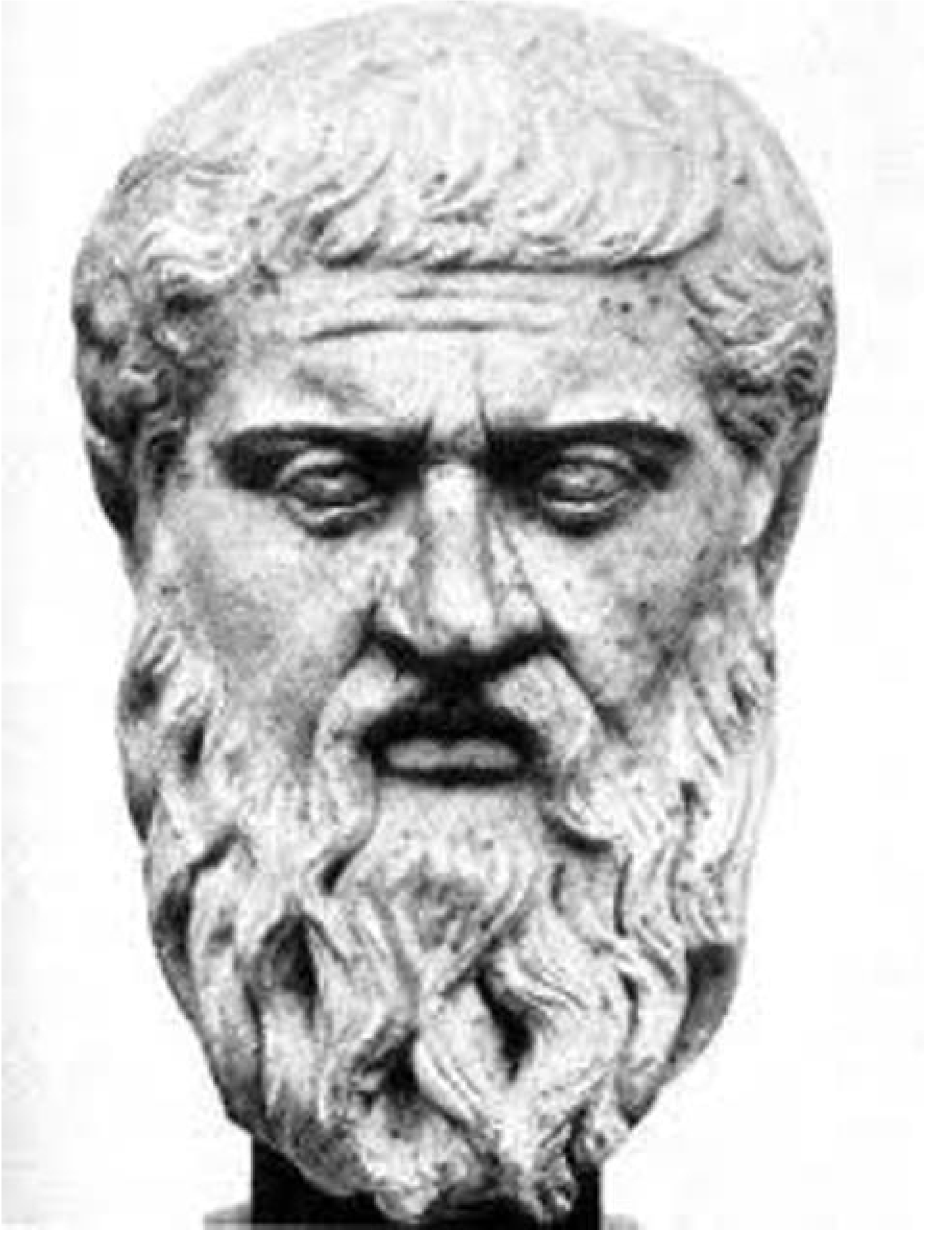
The contents that were formerly projected were now bound to appear as personal possessions, as chimerical phantasms of the ego-consciousness.

The fire chilled to air, and the air became the great wind of Zarathustra and caused an inflation of consciousness which, it seems, can be damped down only by the most terrible catastrophe to civilization, another deluge let loose by the gods upon inhospitable humanity. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 562

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2eca5-12balchemist.jpg`

Carl Jung: It does not surprise me that psychology debouches into philosophy, (2019-03-16 03:30)

[1]



It does not surprise me that psychology debouches into philosophy, for the thinking that underlies philosophy is after all a psychic activity which, as such, is the proper study of psychology.

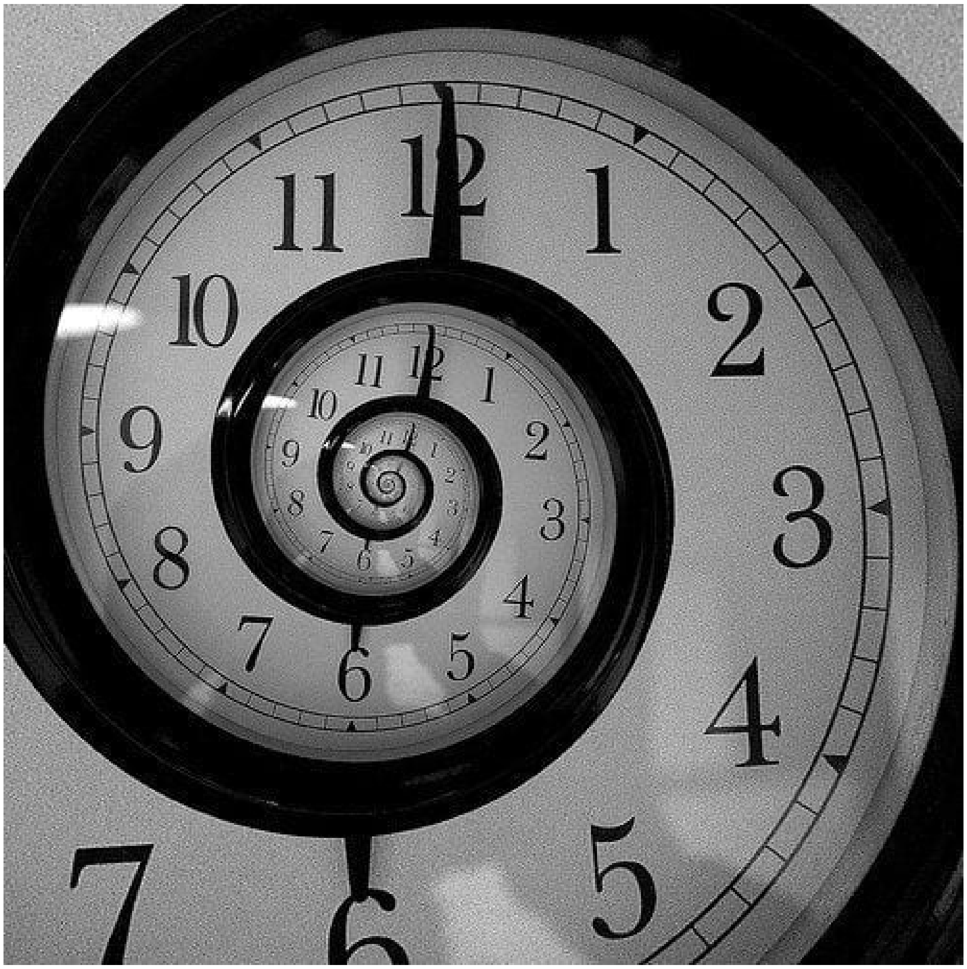
I always think of psychology as encompassing the whole of the psyche, and that includes philosophy and theology and many other things besides.

For underlying all philosophies and all religions are the facts of the human soul, which may ultimately be the arbiters of truth and error. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 535

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9b9b4-12bphilosophy.jpg`

Carl Jung: "What is Illusion?" (2019-03-16 03:30)

[1]



What is "illusion"?

By what criterion do we judge something to be an illusion?

Does anything exist for the psyche that we are entitled to call illusion?

What we are pleased to call illusion may be for the psyche an extremely important life-factor, something as indispensable as oxygen for the body—a psychic actuality of overwhelming significance.

Presumably the psyche does not trouble itself about our categories of reality; for it, everything that world is real.

The investigator of the psyche must not confuse it with his consciousness, else he veils from his sight the object of his investigation.

On the contrary, to recognize it at all, he must learn to see how different it is from consciousness.

Nothing is more probable than that what we call illusion is very real for the psyche—for which reason we cannot take psychic reality to be commensurable with conscious reality. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 111

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/865f0-12billusion.jpg`

Carl Jung: ...Freud had to give up the editorship of the Zentralblatt. (2019-03-16 03:30)

[1]

To Trigant Burrow

My dear Burrow, 26 December 1912

I am very glad to have your letter and the manuscript.

I suppose you heard of the great change in Vienna, where Freud and Stekel are in full disagreement.

Stekel behaved in a most impertinent and foolish way, so that Freud had to give up the editorship of the Zentralblatt.

Unfortunately the publisher remained on the side of Stekel, hence Stekel kept the Zentralblatt and Freud was, dismissed.

Freud founded a new journal of international character and we all have gone over to this new journal, leaving Stekel with his mutilated Zentralblatt.

I think you agree with me, sending your article to Freud with the request that your name is mentioned among the regular contributors of the journal.

This place will be more commendable than the Zentralblatt.

I am pretty sure to have left my fountain-pen in your house probably as a present symbolizing literary fertility; it is the pen I wrote my Libido-Arbeit with.

I very much regretted this loss, but if it is in your hands it may stay there.

Yours very truly,

JUNG Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 27

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/61ac2-12bburrow.jpg`

Carl Jung: "It has come to my ears through Dr. Maeder that you doubt my bona fides." (2019-03-16 04:16)

Sigmund Freud
(1856 - 1939)

Carl Gustav Jung
(1875 - 1961)

Seestrasse, Kusnacht-Zurich,

Dear Professor Freud 27 October 1913

It has come to my ears through Dr. Maeder that you doubt my bona fides.

I would have expected you to communicate with me directly on so weighty a matter.

Since this is the gravest reproach that can be levelled at anybody, you have made further collaboration impossible.

I therefore lay down the editorship of the Jahrbuch with which you entrusted me. I have also notified Bleuler and Deuticke of my decision.

Very truly yours,

Dr. C.G. Jung Freud/Jung Letters, Page 550.

Statement by the Editor:

I have found myself obliged to resign as editor of the [ahrbuch, The reasons for my resignation are of a personal nature, on which account I disdain to discuss them in public.

C. G. Jung Freud/Jung Letters, Page 551.

Statement by the Publisher

After the secession of Prof. Dr. Bleuler and Dr. Jung, Prof.

Dr. Freud will continue this [ahrbuch,

The next volume will appear in the middle of 1914 under the title:

Jahrbuch der Psychoanalyse

Edited by Dr. K. Abraham (Berlin) and Dr. E. Hitschmann (Vienna)
Fr. Deuticke Freud/Jung Letters, Page 551.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/61bc2-1.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Alchemy" - YouTube (2019-03-16 04:32)

"Alchemy seems like a continuation of Christian mysticism carried on in the subterranean darkness of the unconscious."
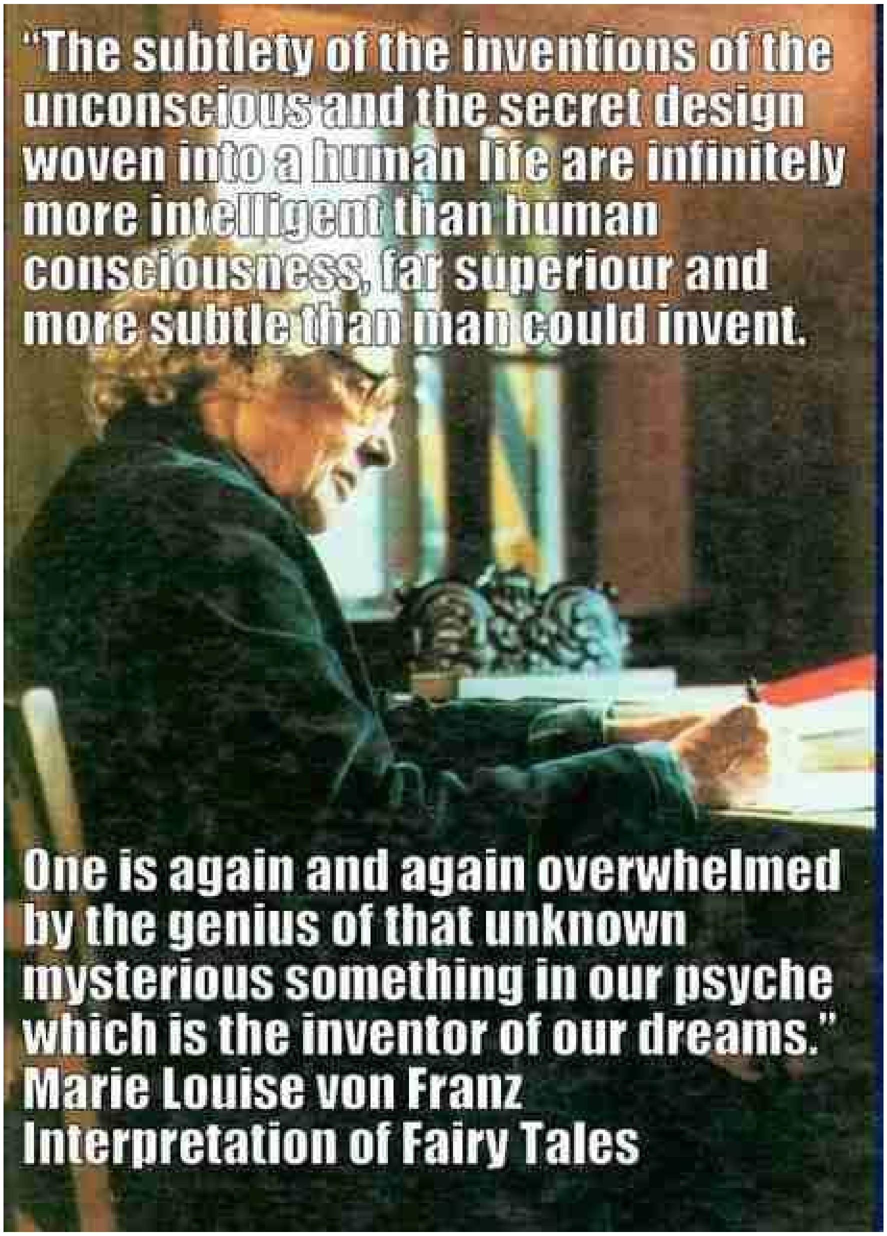
Carl Jung
www.jungquotes.com
Image: Splendor Solis

[1]Carl Jung on "Alchemy" - YouTube

1. `https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=L612lLtTFuM`

Marie Louise Von Franz: it is only in old age when one looks back that one sees that the whole thing had a pattern. (2019-03-16 04:39)

[1]



"The subtlety of the inventions of the unconscious and the secret design woven into a human life are infinitely more intelligent than human consciousness, far superiour and more subtle than man could invent.

One is again and again overwhelmed by the genius of that unknown mysterious something in our psyche which is the inventor of our dreams."

Marie Louise von Franz

Interpretation of Fairy Tales

From these amplifications, you see that the woven linen or carpet, with its designs, is often used as a symbol for the complex symbolic patterns of life and the secret designs of fate.

It represents the greater pattern of our life, which we do not know as long as we live it.

We constantly build our lives by our ego-decisions and it is only in old age when one looks back that one sees that the whole thing had a pattern.

Some people who are more introspective know it a bit before the end of their lives and are secretly convinced that things have a pattern, that they are led, and that there is a kind of secret design behind the ephemeral actions and decisions of a human being.

Actually, we turn towards dreams and the unconscious because we want to find out more about our life pattern in order to make fewer mistakes and not to cut with our knives into our own inner carpet, fulfilling our destiny instead of resisting it.

This purposiveness of an individual life-pattern, which gives one a feeling of meaningfulness, is very often symbolized in the carpet.

Generally carpets, especially oriental ones, have those complicated meandering patterns such as you follow up when in a dreamy mood, when you feel that life goes up and down and along and changes around.

Only if you look from afar, from a certain objective distance, do you realize that there is a pattern of wholeness in it. Marie Louise Von Franz, The Interpretation of Fairy Tales, Pages 6-7

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8fa97-12bpattern.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 18 (2019-03-16 04:40)

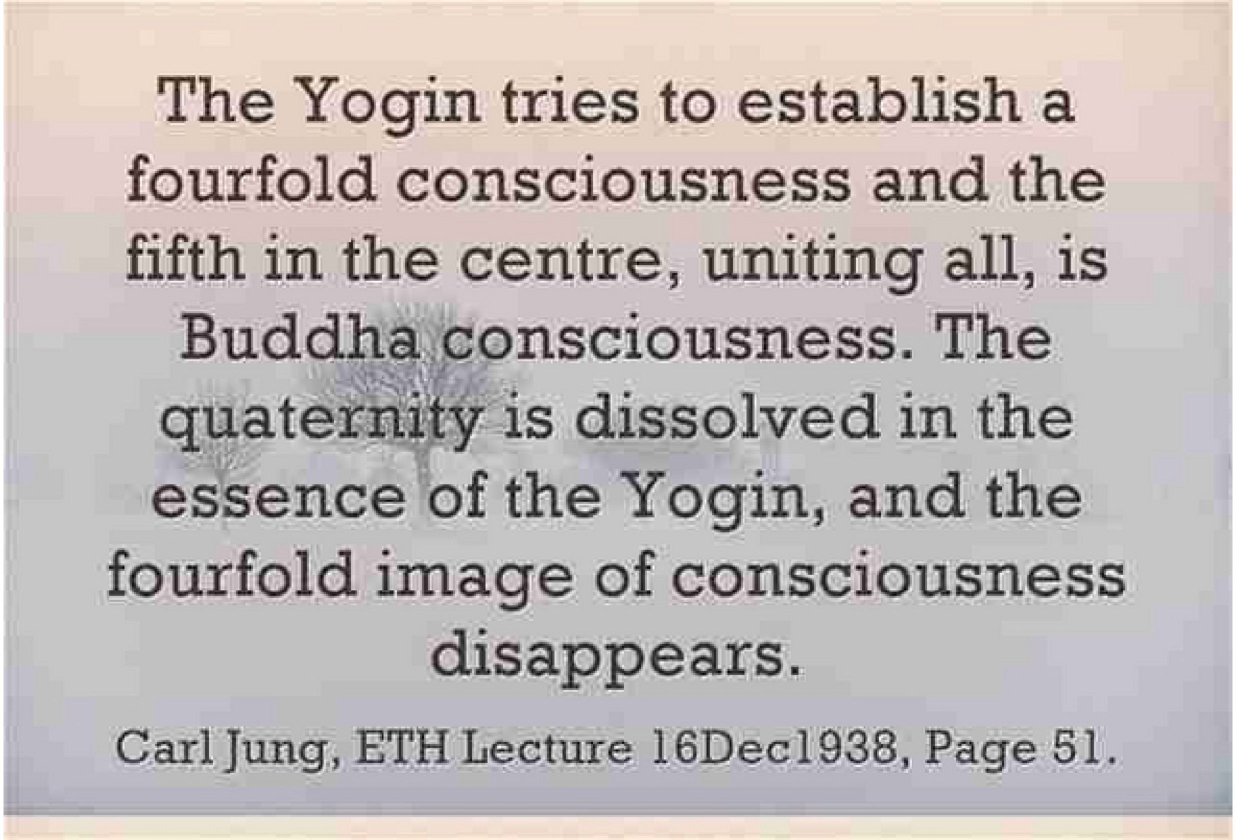
[1]

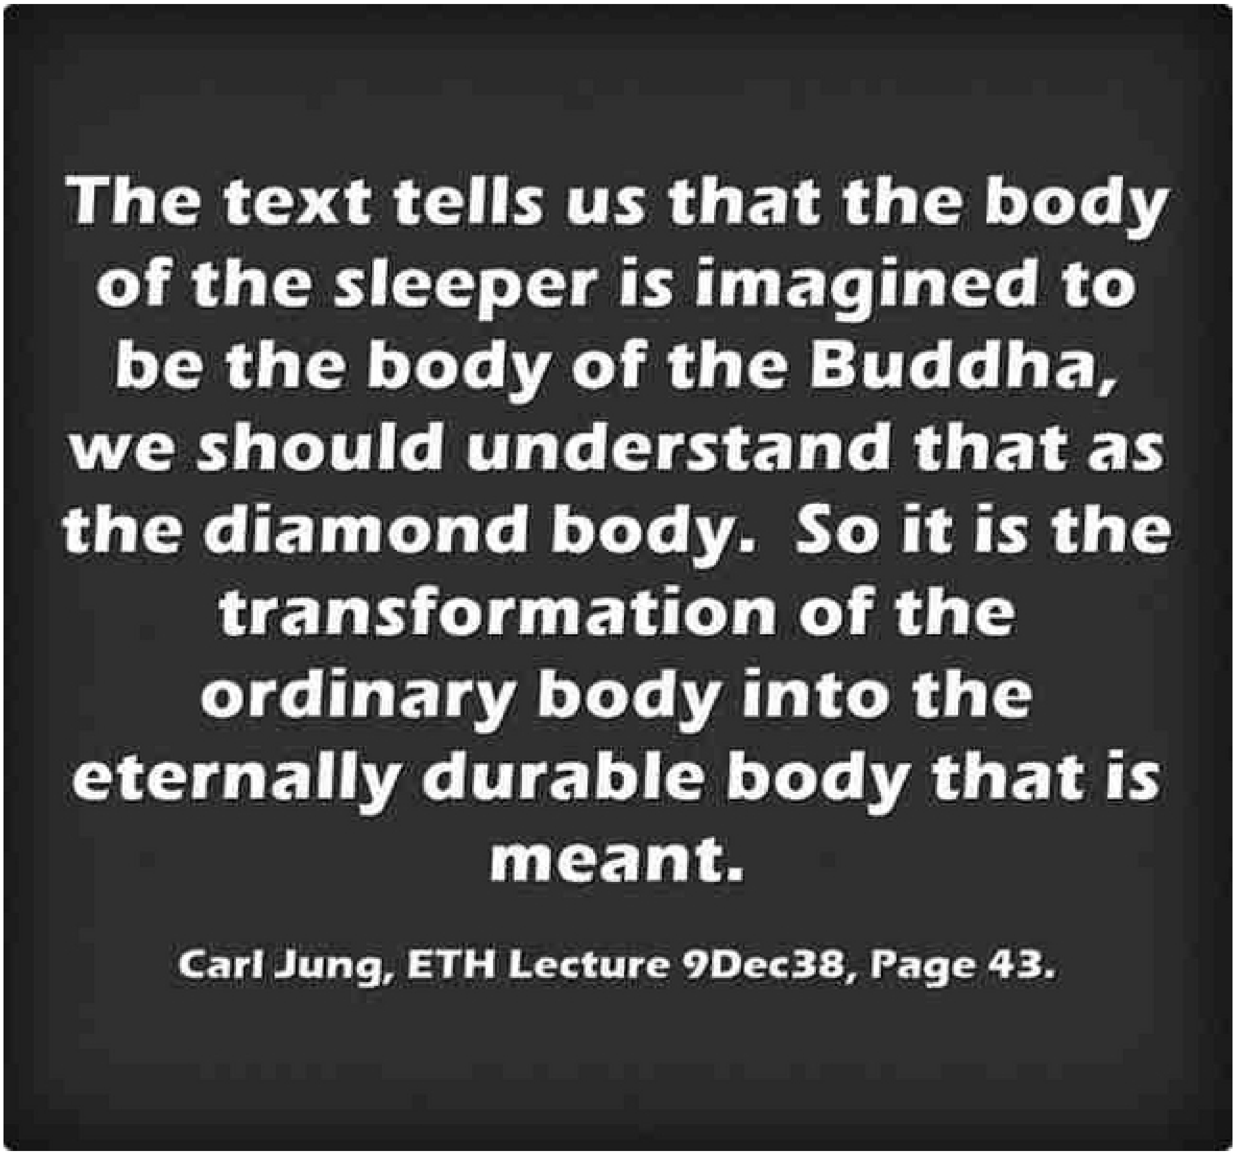


The Yogin tries to establish a fourfold consciousness and the fifth in the centre, uniting all, is Buddha consciousness. The quaternity is dissolved in the essence of the Yogin, and the fourfold image of consciousness disappears.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 16Dec1938, Page 51.

The Yogin tries to establish a fourfold consciousness and the fifth in the centre, uniting all, is Buddha consciousness. The quaternity is dissolved in the essence of the Yogin, and the fourfold image of consciousness disappears. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 16Dec1938, Page 51.

[2]

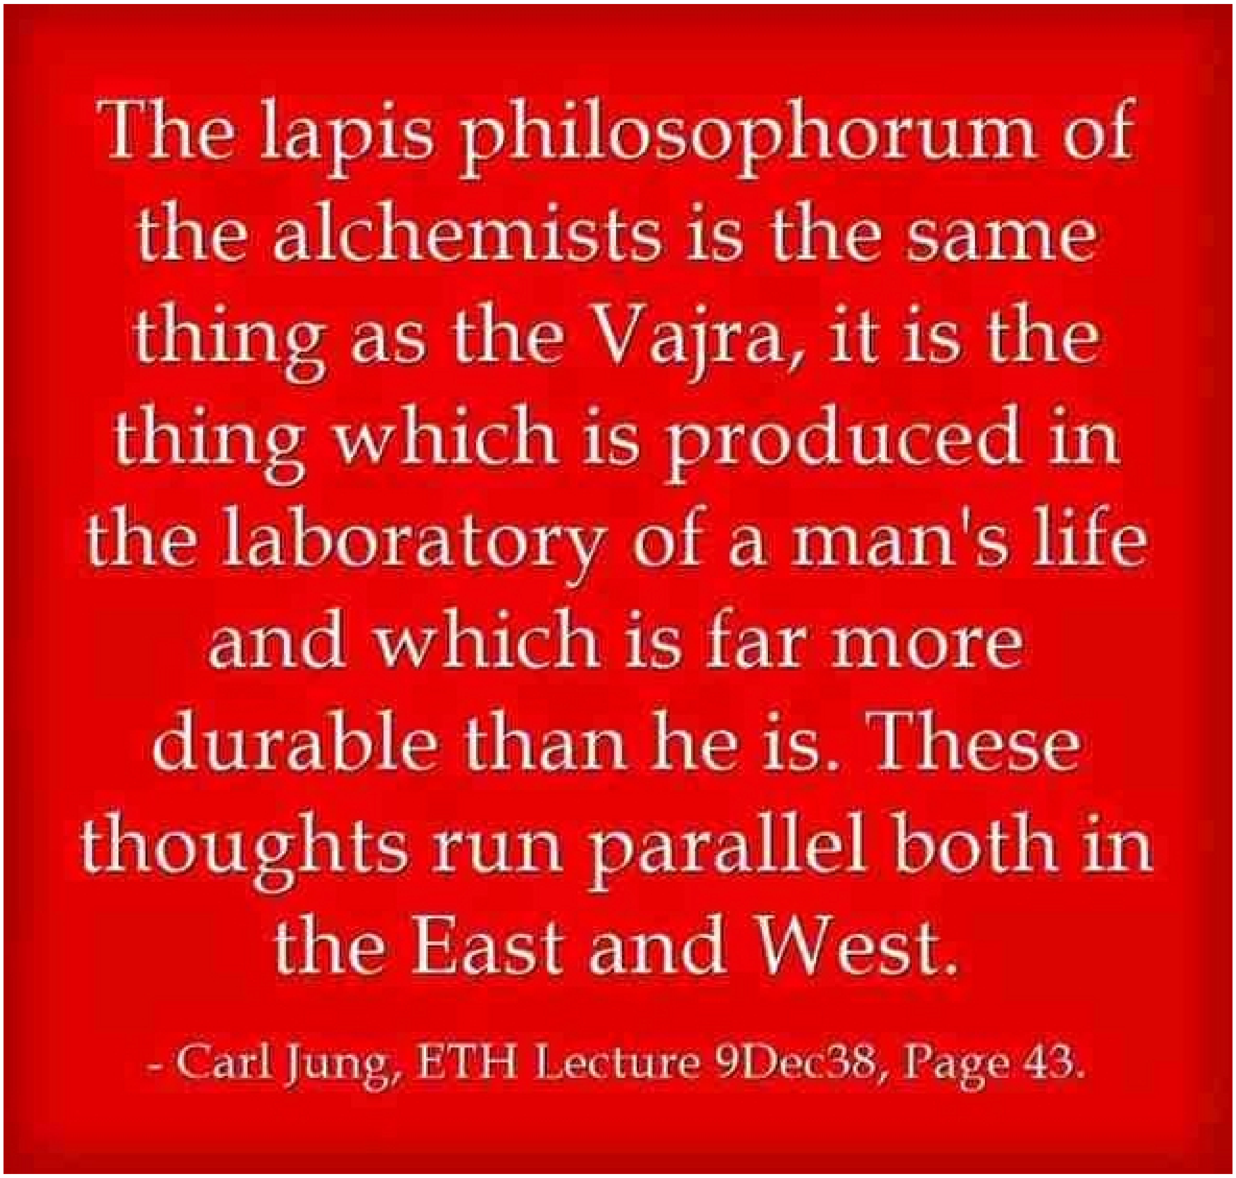


The text tells us that the body of the sleeper is imagined to be the body of the Buddha, we should understand that as the diamond body. So it is the transformation of the ordinary body into the eternally durable body that is meant.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 43.

The text tells us that the body of the sleeper is imagined to be the body of the Buddha, we should understand that as the diamond body. So it is the transformation of the ordinary body into the eternally durable body that is meant. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 43.

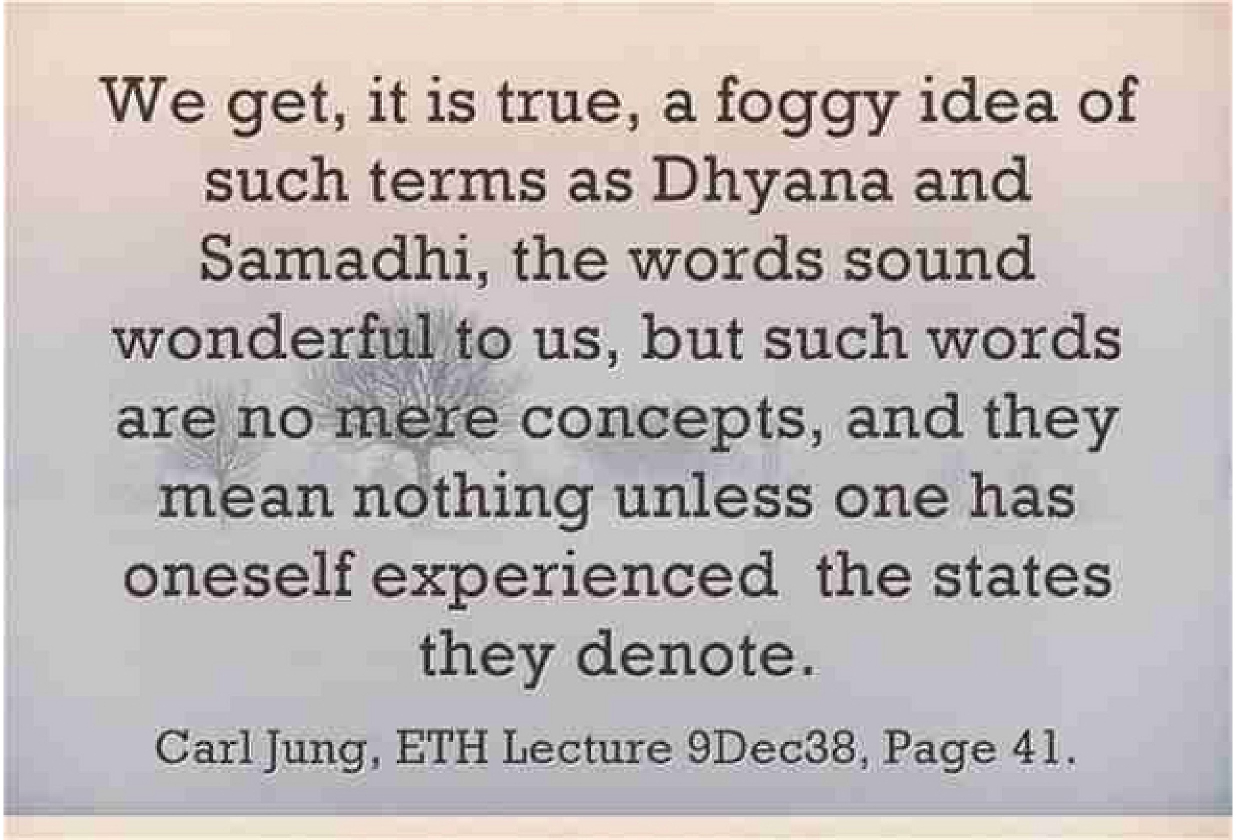
[3]



The lapis philosophorum of the alchemists is the same thing as the Vajra, it is the thing which is produced in the laboratory of a man's life and which is far more durable than he is. These thoughts run parallel both in the East and West.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 43.

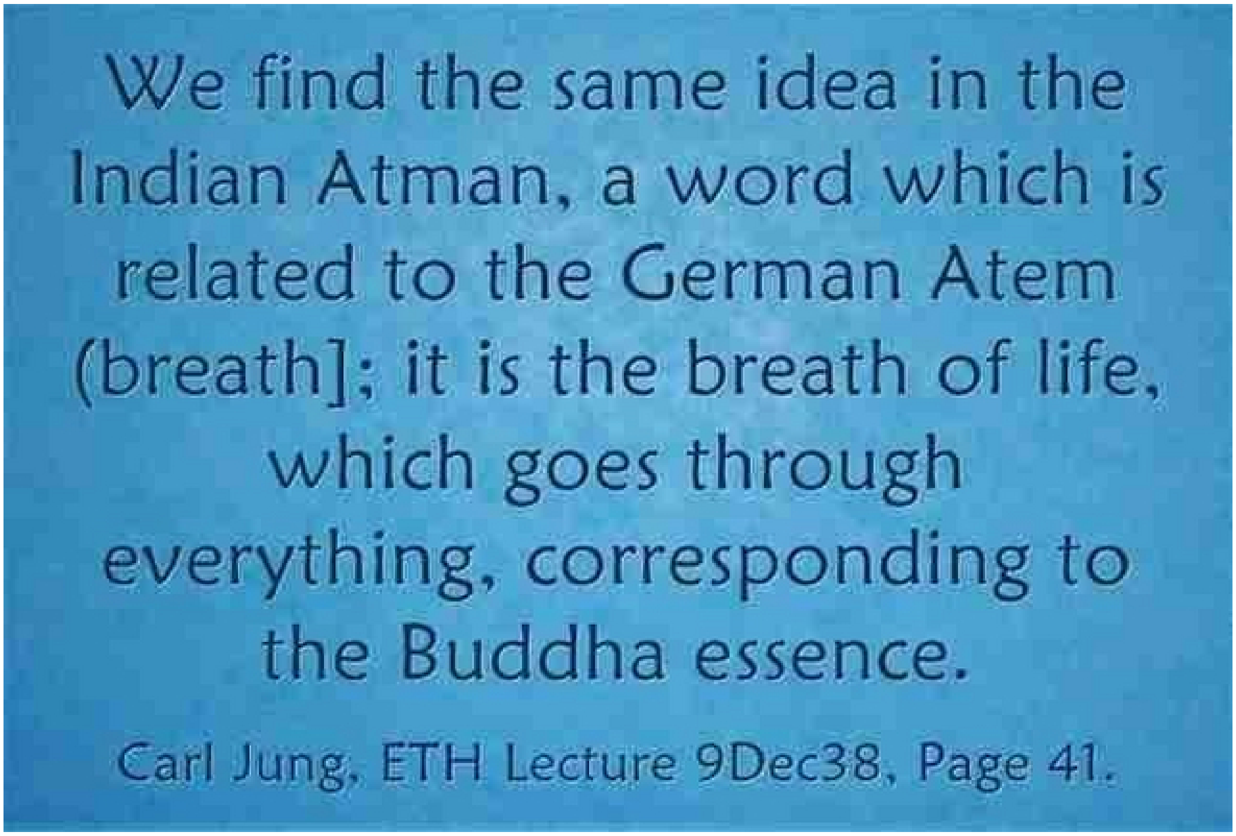
The lapis philosophorum of the alchemists is the same thing as the Vajra, it is the thing which is produced in the laboratory of a man’s life and which is far more durable than he is. These thoughts run parallel both in the East and West. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 43.



We get, it is true, a foggy idea of such terms as Dhyana and Samadhi, the words sound wonderful to us, but such words are no mere concepts, and they mean nothing unless one has oneself experienced the states they denote.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 41.

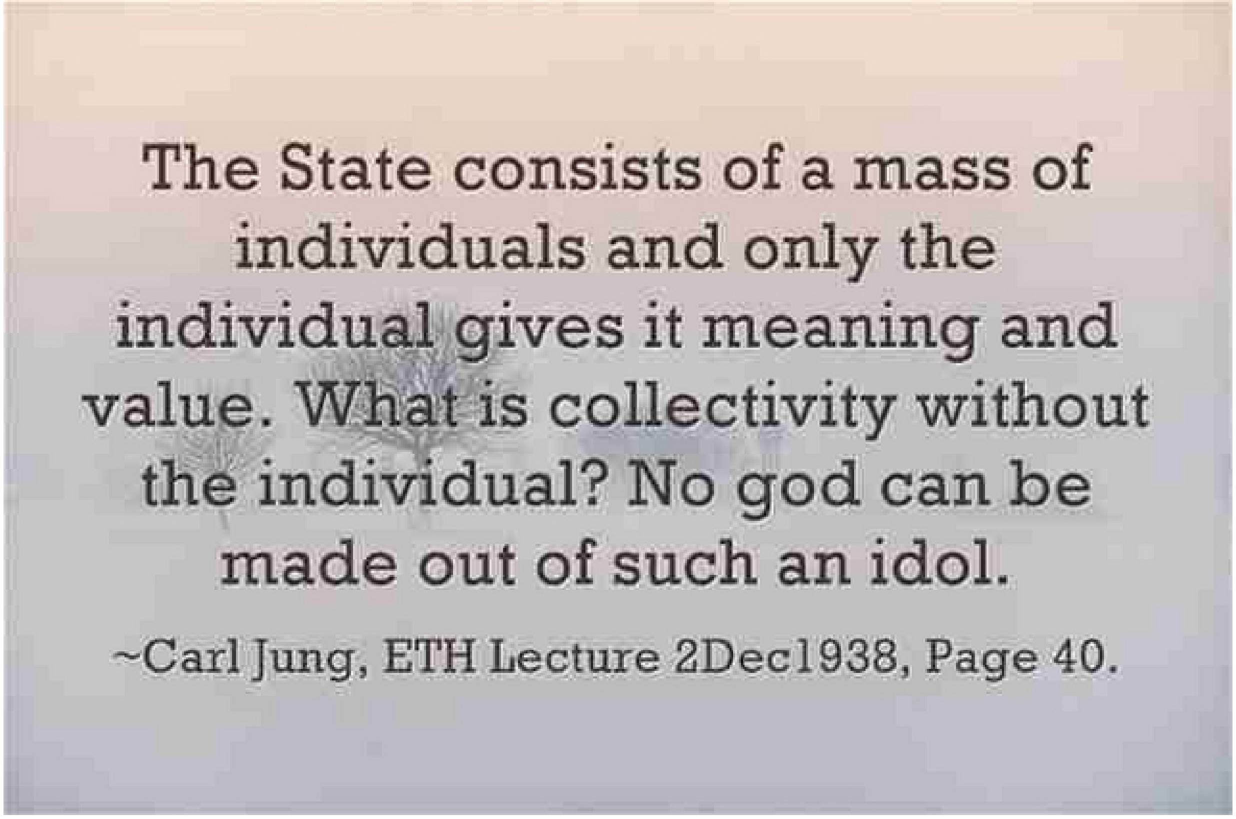
We get, it is true, a foggy idea of such terms as Dhyana and Samadhi, the words sound wonderful to us, but such words are no mere concepts, and they mean nothing unless one has oneself experienced the states they denote. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 41.



We find the same idea in the Indian Atman, a word which is related to the German Atem (breath]; it is the breath of life, which goes through everything, corresponding to the Buddha essence.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 41.

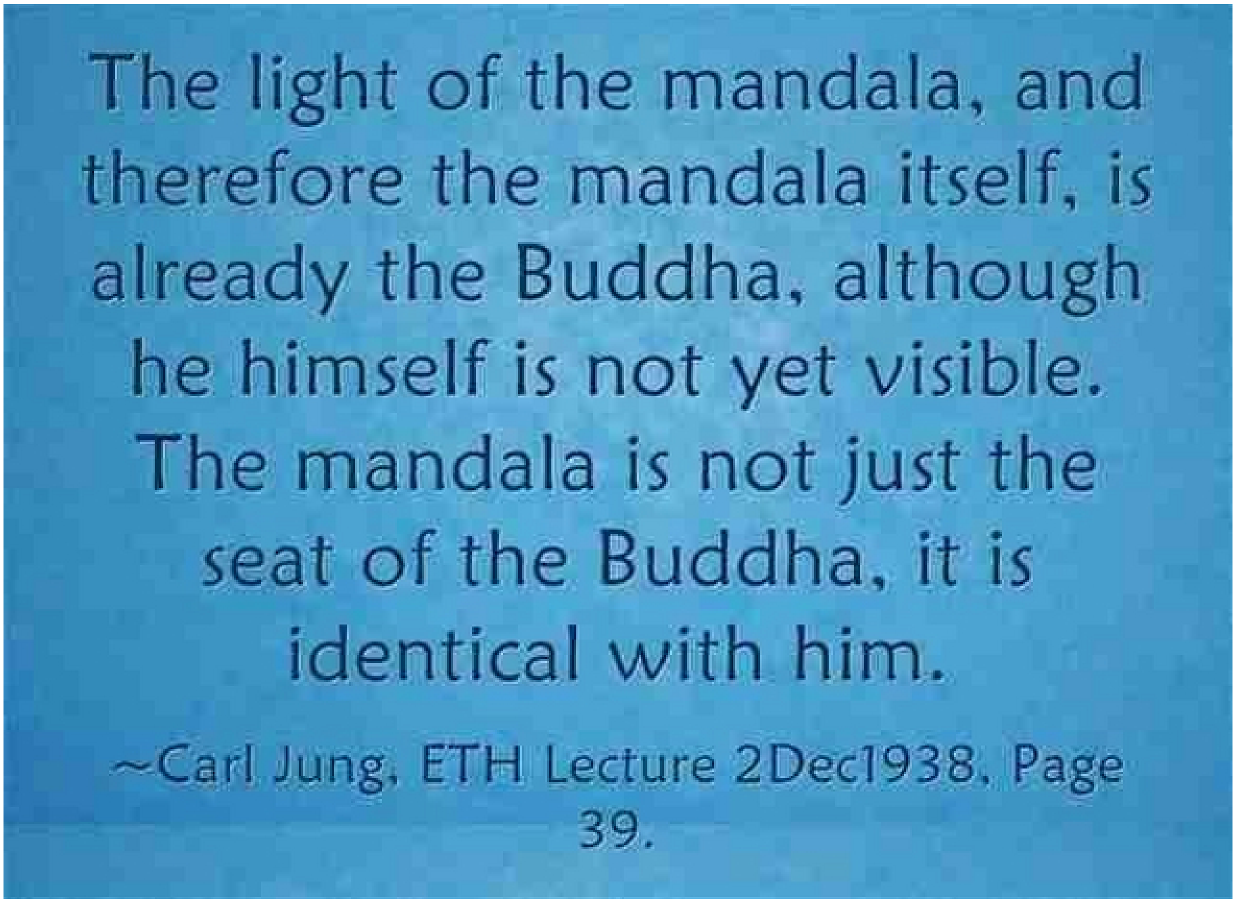
We find the same idea in the Indian Atman, a word which is related to the German Atem (breath]; it is the breath of life, which goes through everything, corresponding to the Buddha essence. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 41.



The State consists of a mass of individuals and only the individual gives it meaning and value. What is collectivity without the individual? No god can be made out of such an idol.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 40.

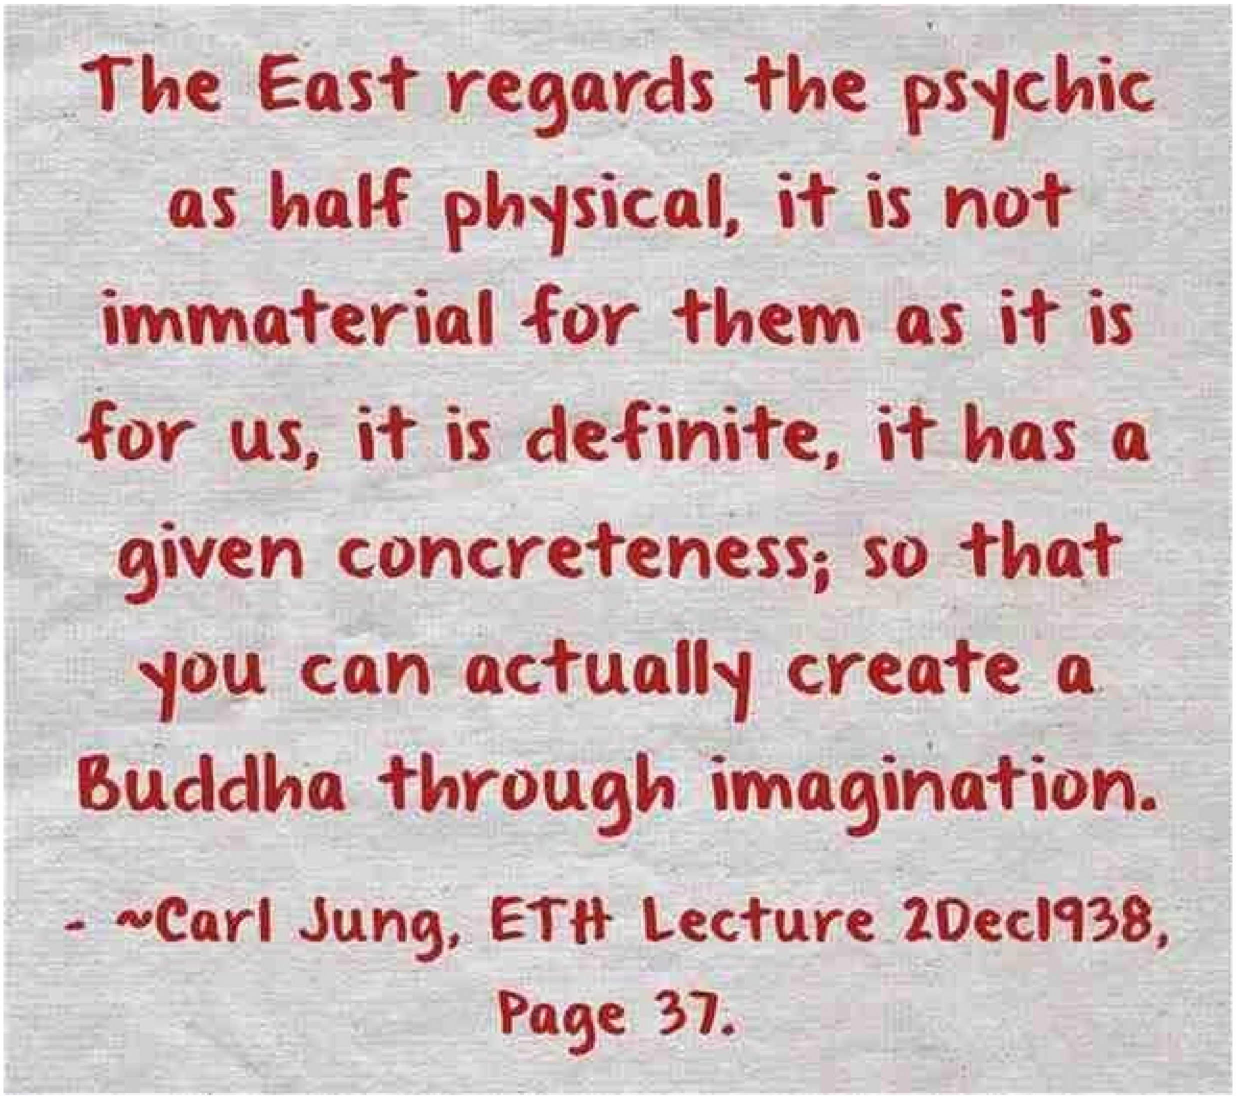
The State consists of a mass of individuals and only the individual gives it meaning and value. What is collectivity without the individual? No god can be made out of such an idol. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 40.



The light of the mandala, and therefore the mandala itself, is already the Buddha, although he himself is not yet visible. The mandala is not just the seat of the Buddha, it is identical with him.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 39.

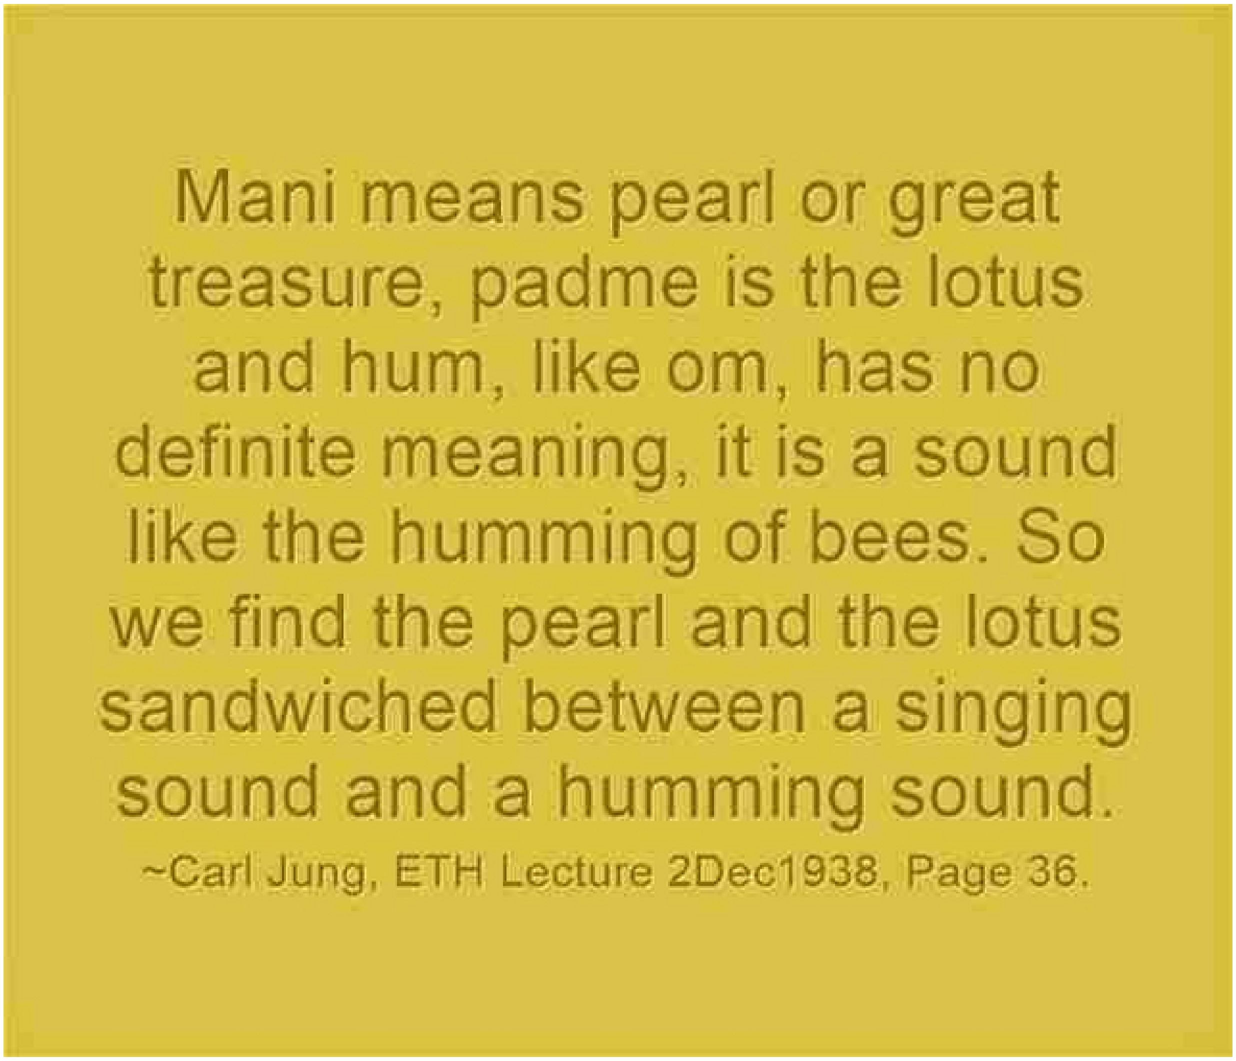
The light of the mandala, and therefore the mandala itself, is already the Buddha, although he himself is not yet visible. The mandala is not just the seat of the Buddha, it is identical with him. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 39.



The East regards the psychic as half physical, it is not immaterial for them as it is for us, it is definite, it has a given concreteness; so that you can actually create a Buddha through imagination.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 37.

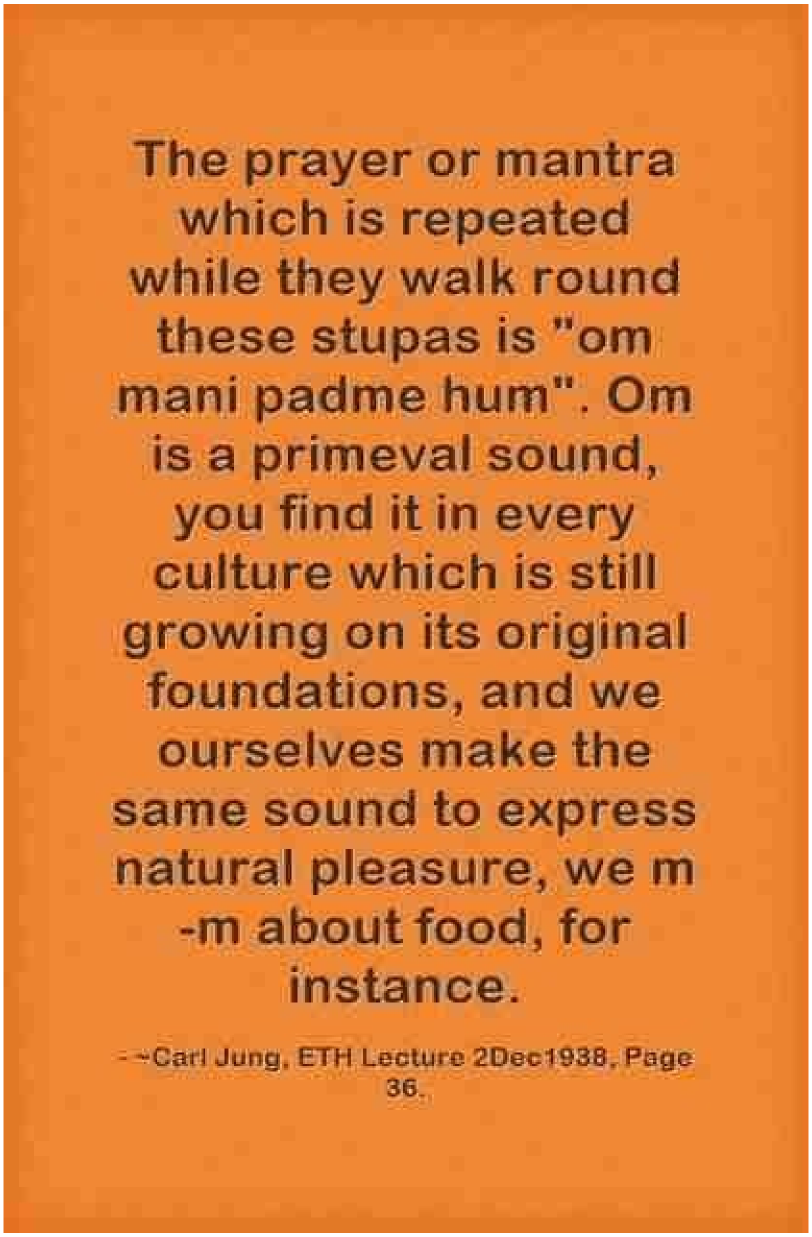
The East regards the psychic as half physical, it is not immaterial for them as it is for us, it is definite, it has a given concreteness; so that you can actually create a Buddha through imagination. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 37.



Mani means pearl or great treasure, padme is the lotus and hum, like om, has no definite meaning, it is a sound like the humming of bees. So we find the pearl and the lotus sandwiched between a singing sound and a humming sound.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 36.

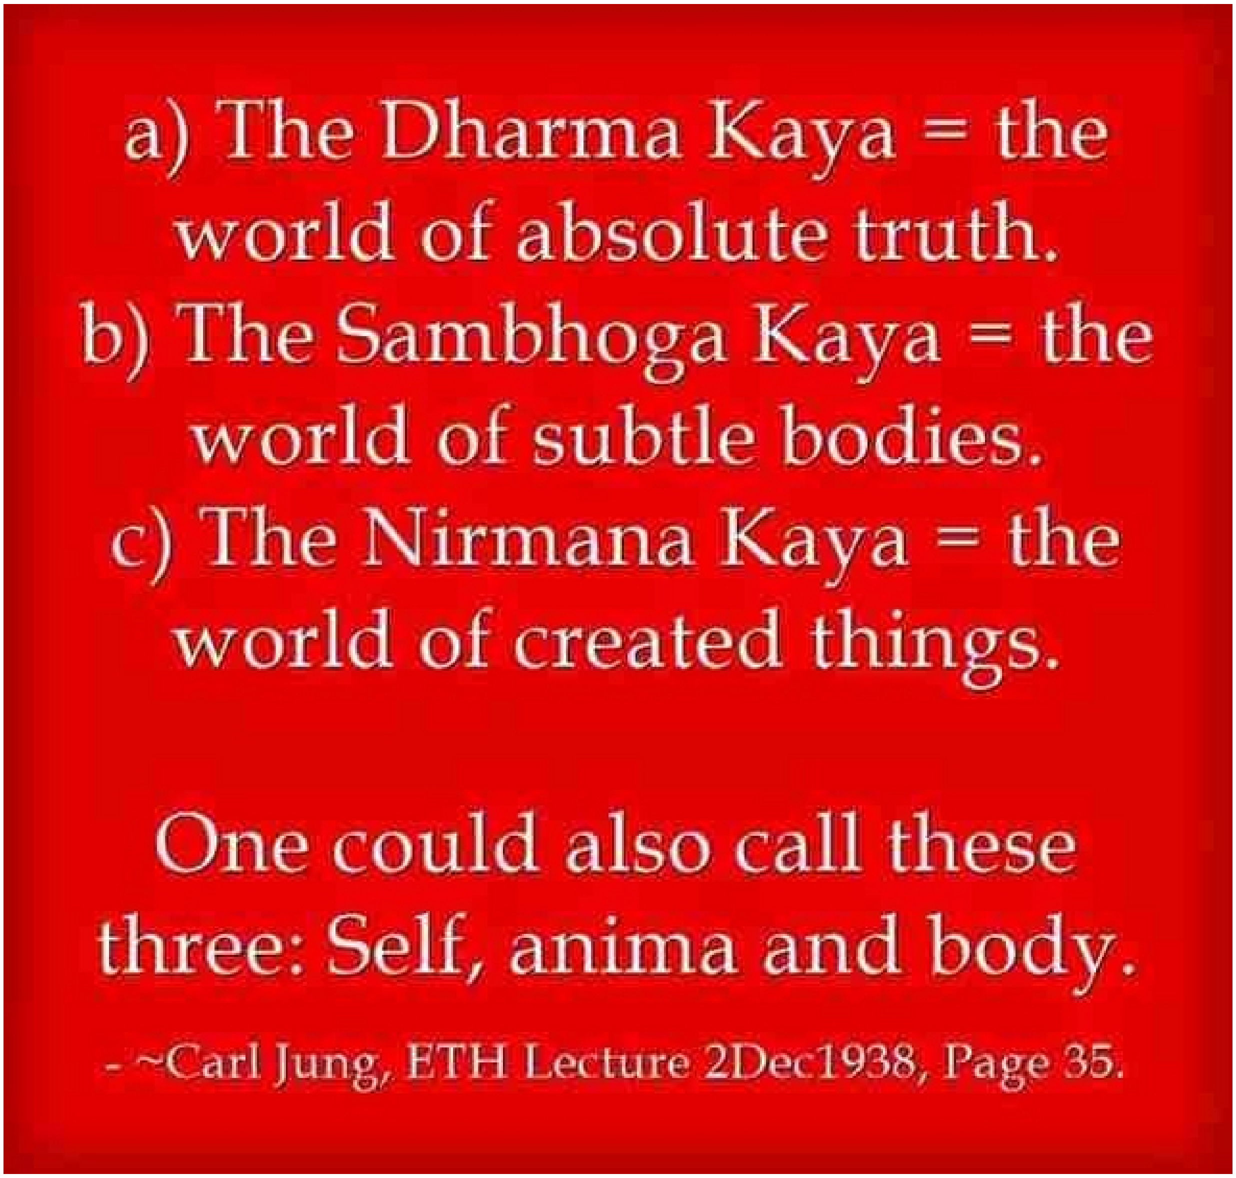
Mani means pearl or great treasure, padme is the lotus and hum, like om, has no definite meaning, it is a sound like the humming of bees. So we find the pearl and the lotus sandwiched between a singing sound and a humming sound. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 36.



The prayer or mantra which is repeated while they walk round these stupas is "om mani padme hum". Om is a primeval sound, you find it in every culture which is still growing on its original foundations, and we ourselves make the same sound to express natural pleasure, we m -m about food, for instance.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 36.

The prayer or mantra which is repeated while they walk round these stupas is "om mani padme hum". Om is a primeval sound, you find it in every culture which is still growing on its original foundations, and we ourselves make the same sound to express natural pleasure, we m-m about food , for instance. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 36.

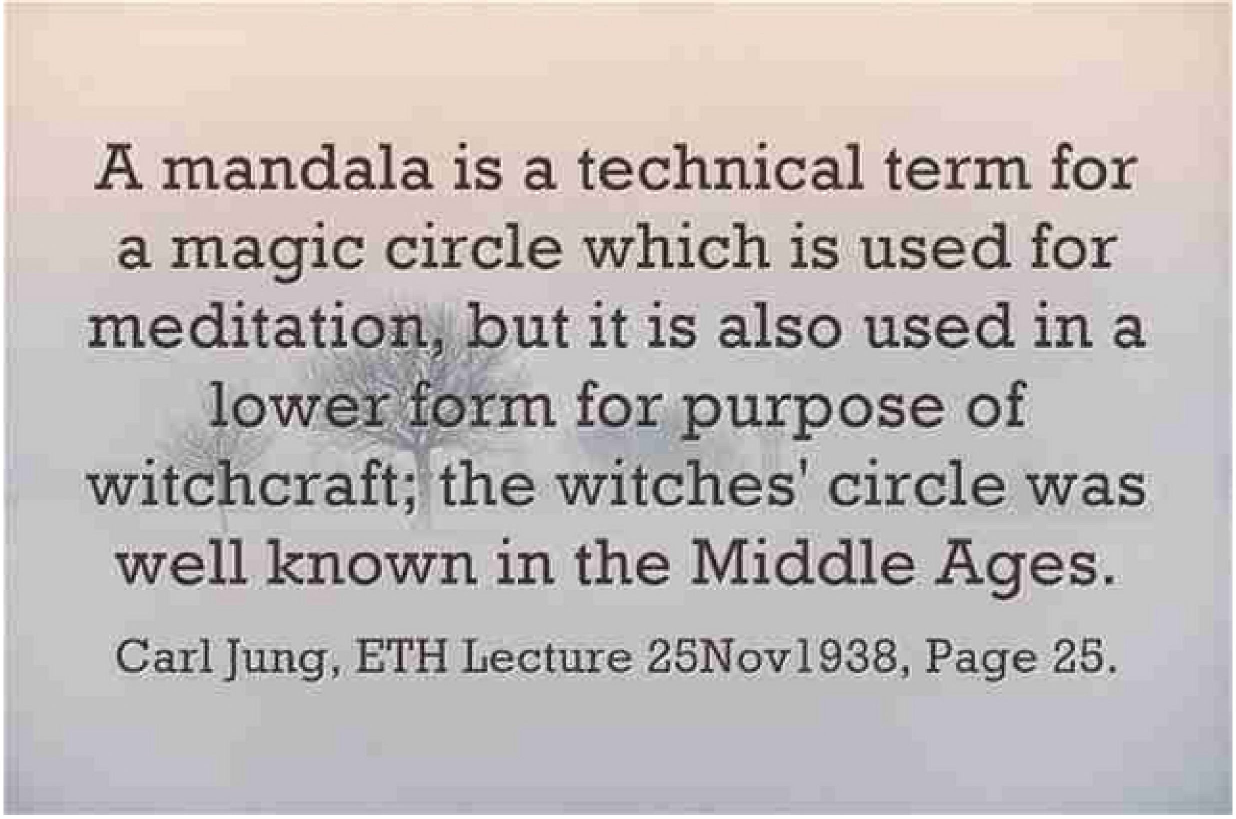


a) The Dharma Kaya = the world of absolute truth.
b) The Sambhoga Kaya = the world of subtle bodies.
c) The Nirmana Kaya = the world of created things.

One could also call these three: Self, anima and body.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 35.

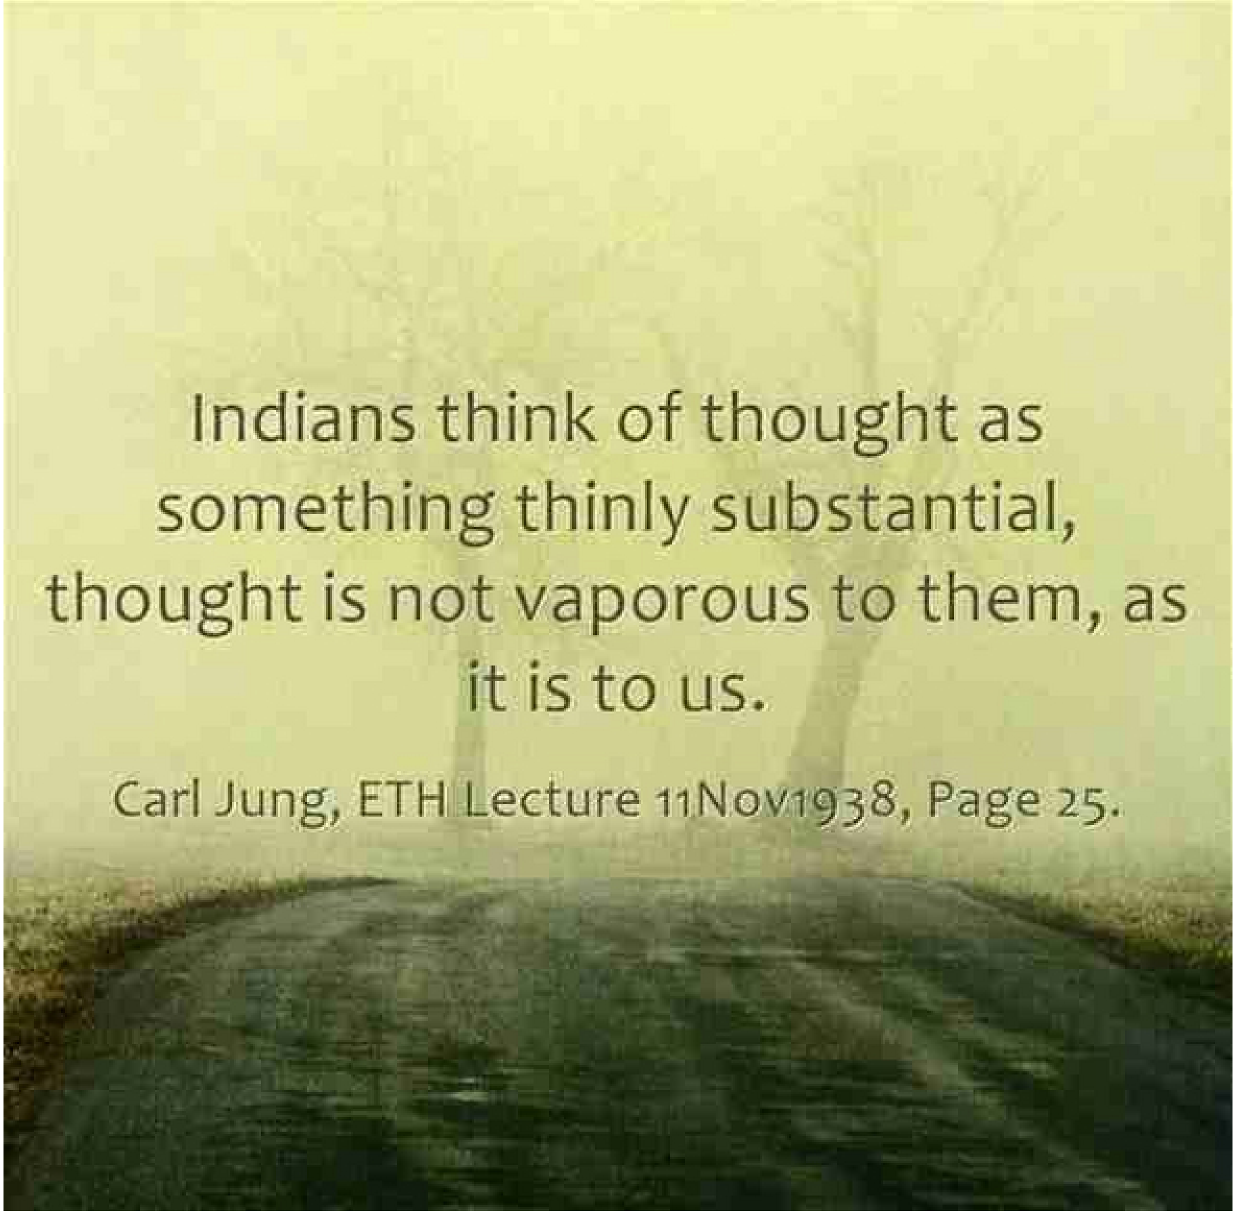
a) The Dharma Kaya = the world of absolute truth.
b) The Sambhoga Kaya = the world of subtle bodies.
c) The Nirmana Kaya = the world of created things.
One could also call these three: Self, anima and body. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 35.



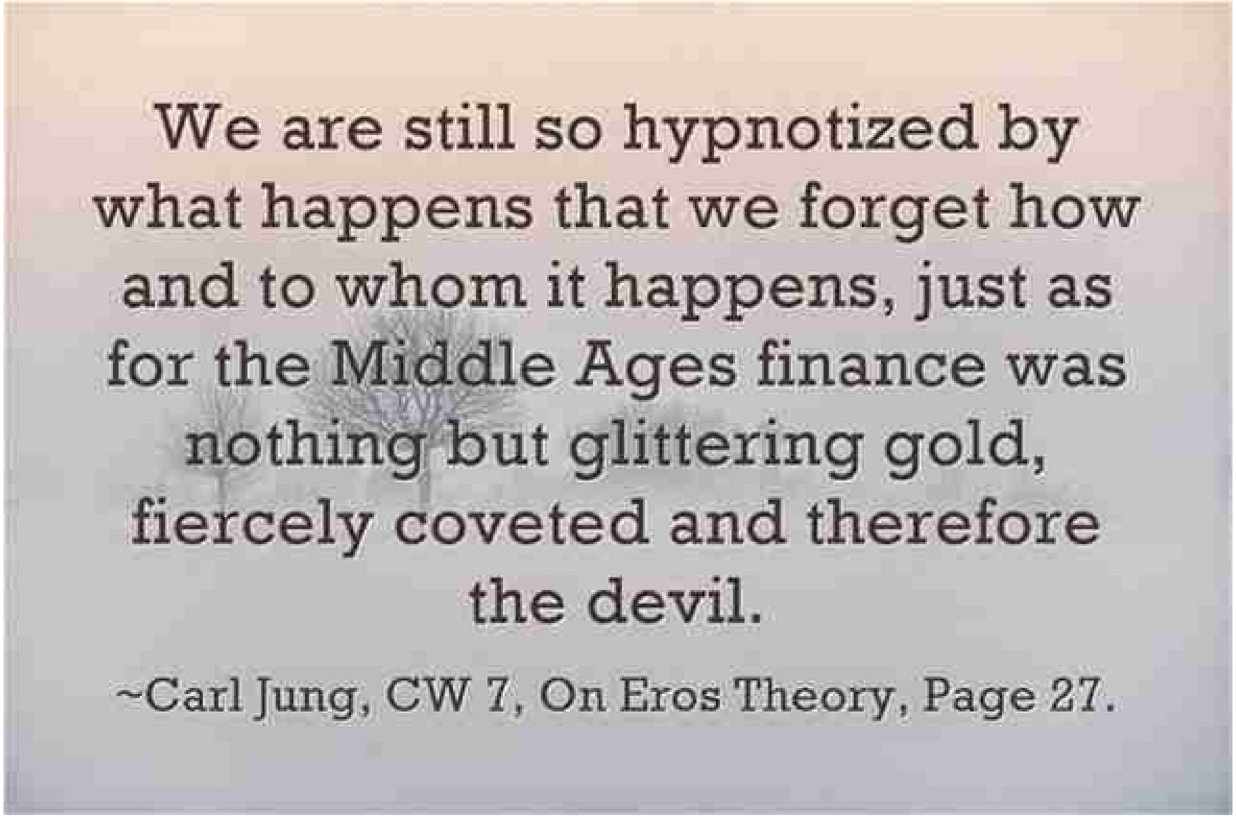
A mandala is a technical term for a magic circle which is used for meditation, but it is also used in a lower form for purpose of witchcraft; the witches' circle was well known in the Middle Ages.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 25Nov1938, Page 25.

A mandala is a technical term for a magic circle which is used for meditation, but it is also used in a lower form for purpose of witchcraft; the witches’ circle was well known in the Middle Ages.   Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 25Nov1938, Page 25.



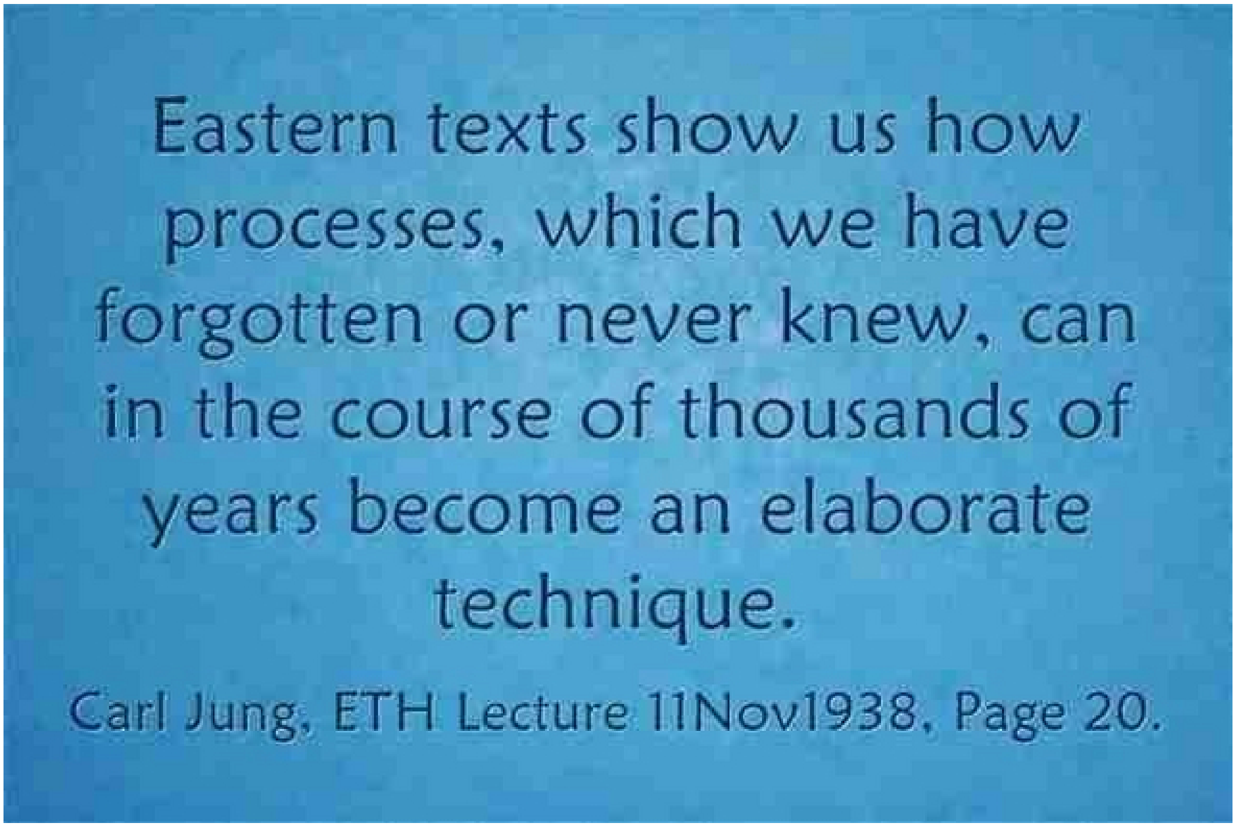
Indians think of thought as something thinly substantial, thought is not vaporous to them, as it is to us. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 11Nov1938, Page 25.



We are still so hypnotized by what happens that we forget how and to whom it happens, just as for the Middle Ages finance was nothing but glittering gold, fiercely coveted and therefore the devil.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 27.

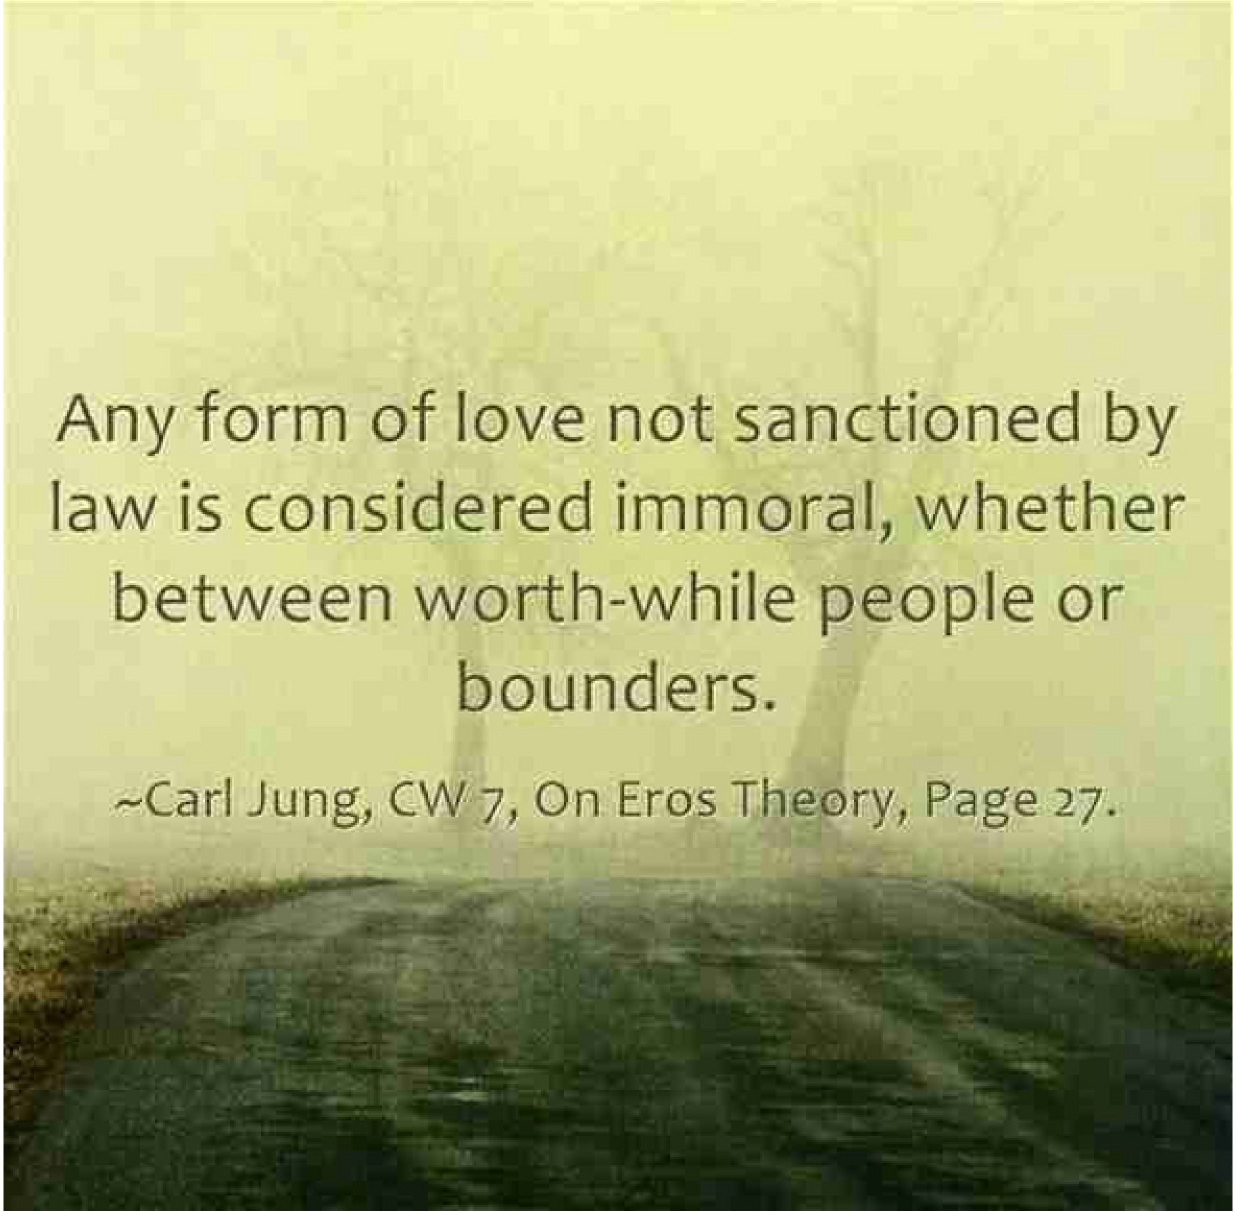
We are still so hypnotized by what happens that we forget how and to whom it happens, just as for the Middle Ages finance was nothing but glittering gold, fiercely coveted and therefore the devil. Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 27.



Eastern texts show us how processes, which we have forgotten or never knew, can in the course of thousands of years become an elaborate technique.

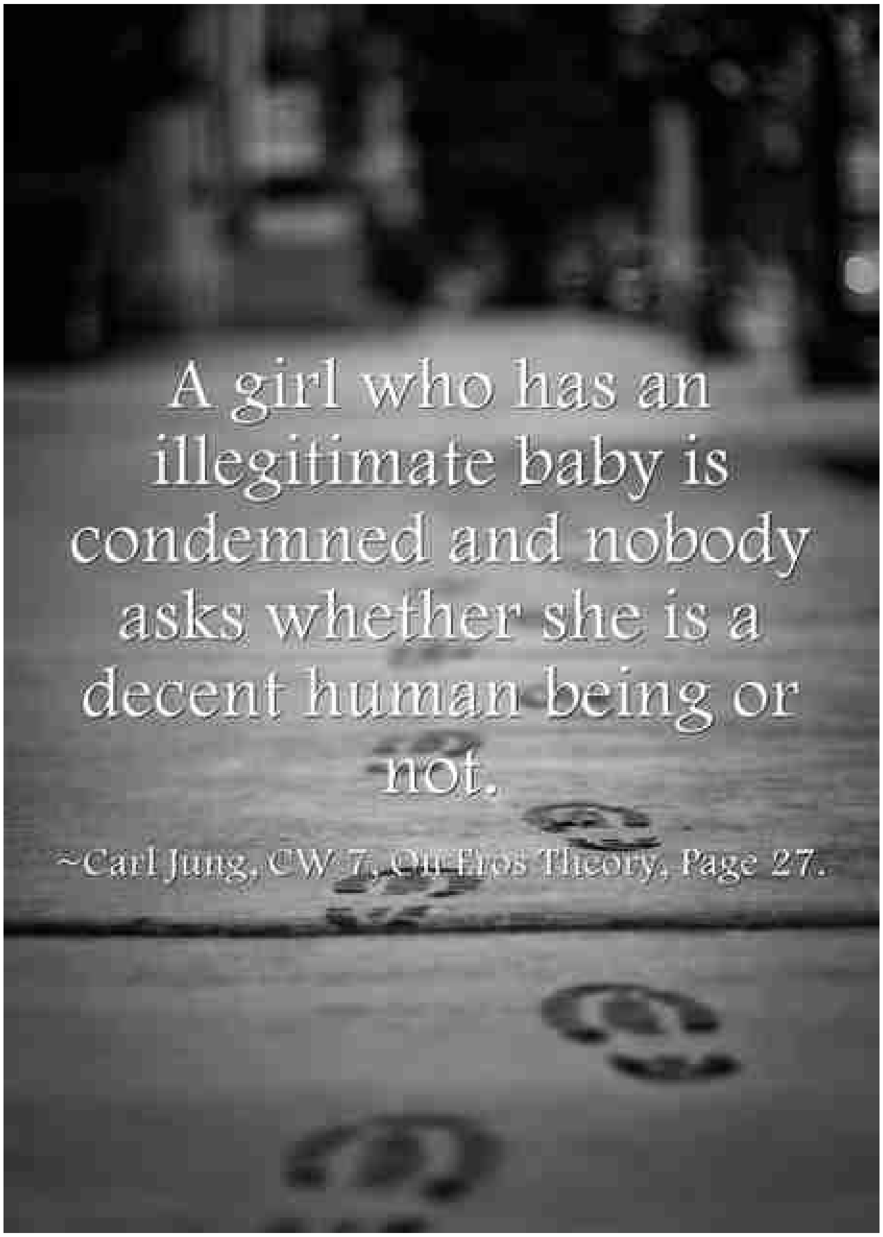
Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 11Nov1938, Page 20.

Eastern texts show us how processes, which we have forgotten or never knew, can in the course of thousands of years become an elaborate technique. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 11Nov1938, Page 20.



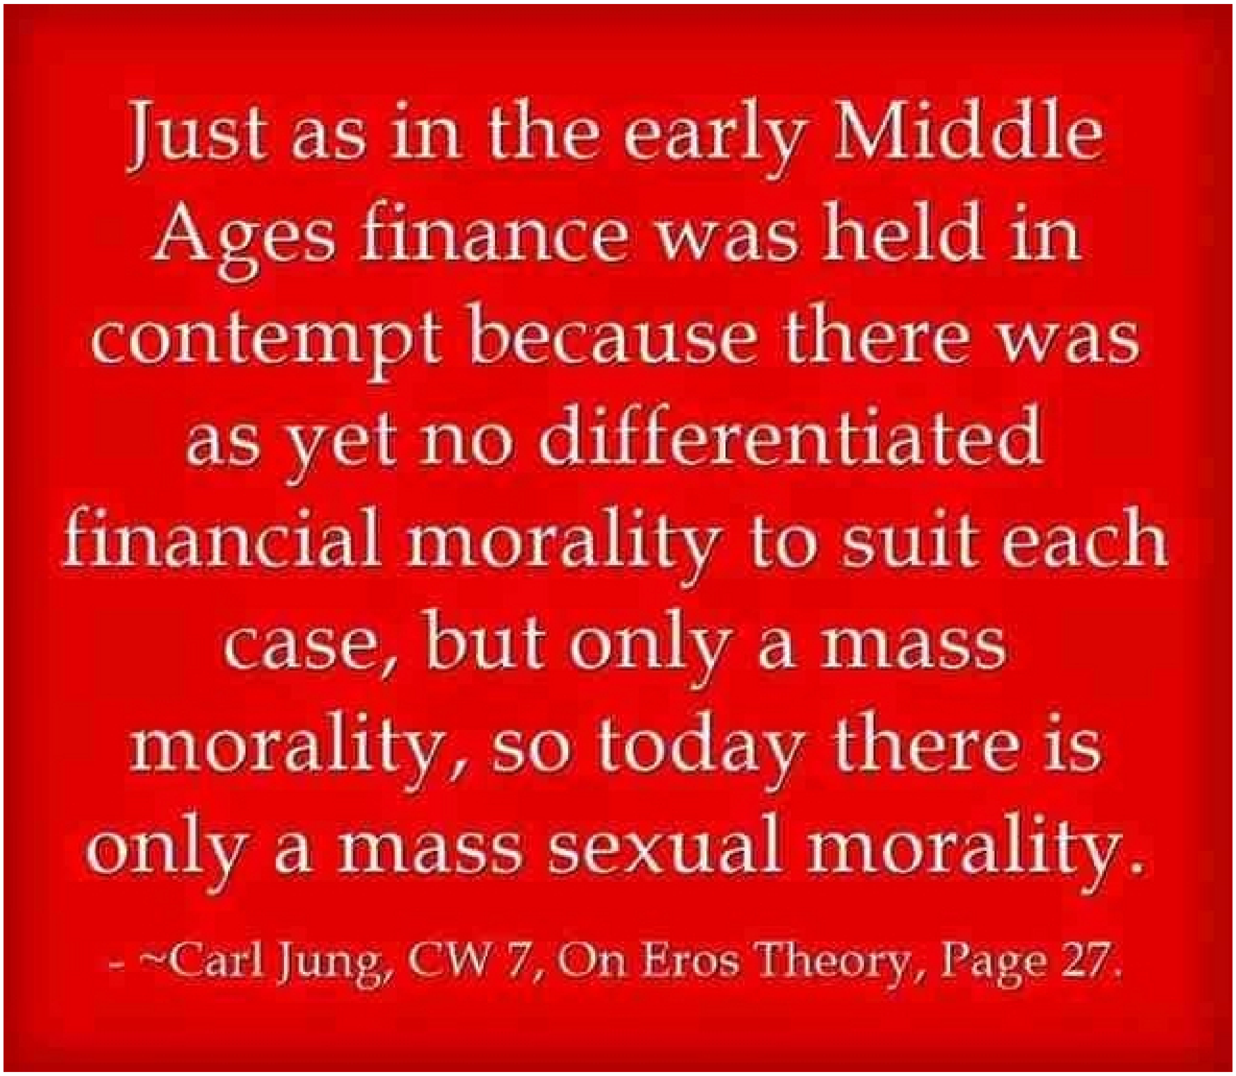
Any form of love not sanctioned by law is considered immoral, whether between worth-while people or bounders.
~Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 27.

Any form of love not sanctioned by law is considered immoral, whether between worth-while people or bounders.
Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Pages 27.



A girl who has an illegitimate baby is condemned and nobody asks whether she is a decent human being or not.
~Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 27.

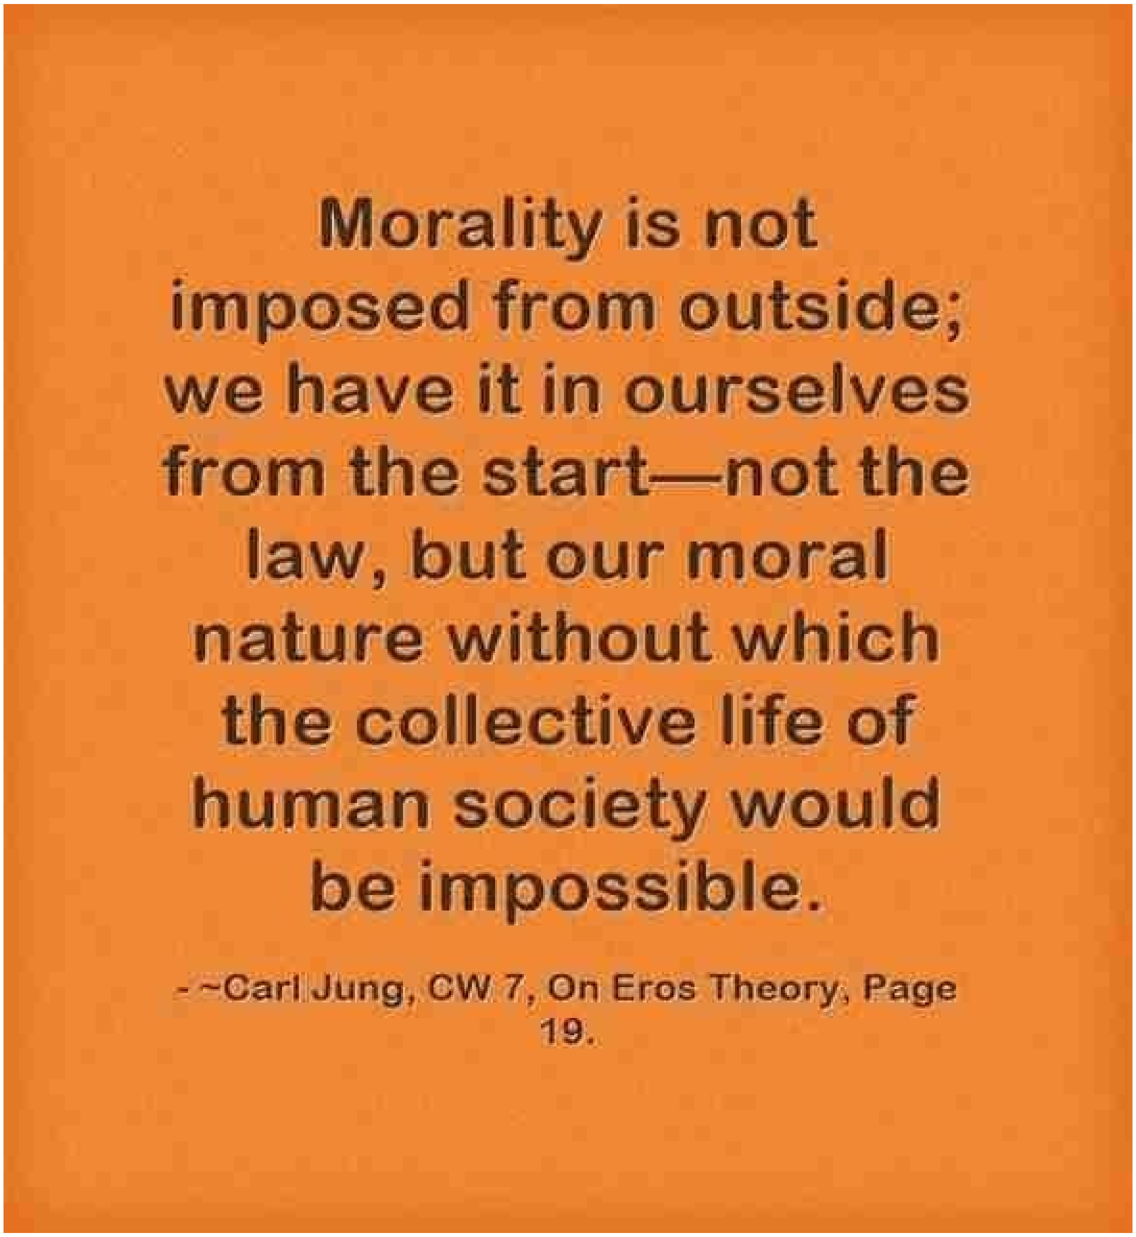
A girl who has an illegitimate baby is condemned and nobody asks whether she is a decent human being or not. Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 27.



Just as in the early Middle Ages finance was held in contempt because there was as yet no differentiated financial morality to suit each case, but only a mass morality, so today there is only a mass sexual morality.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 27.

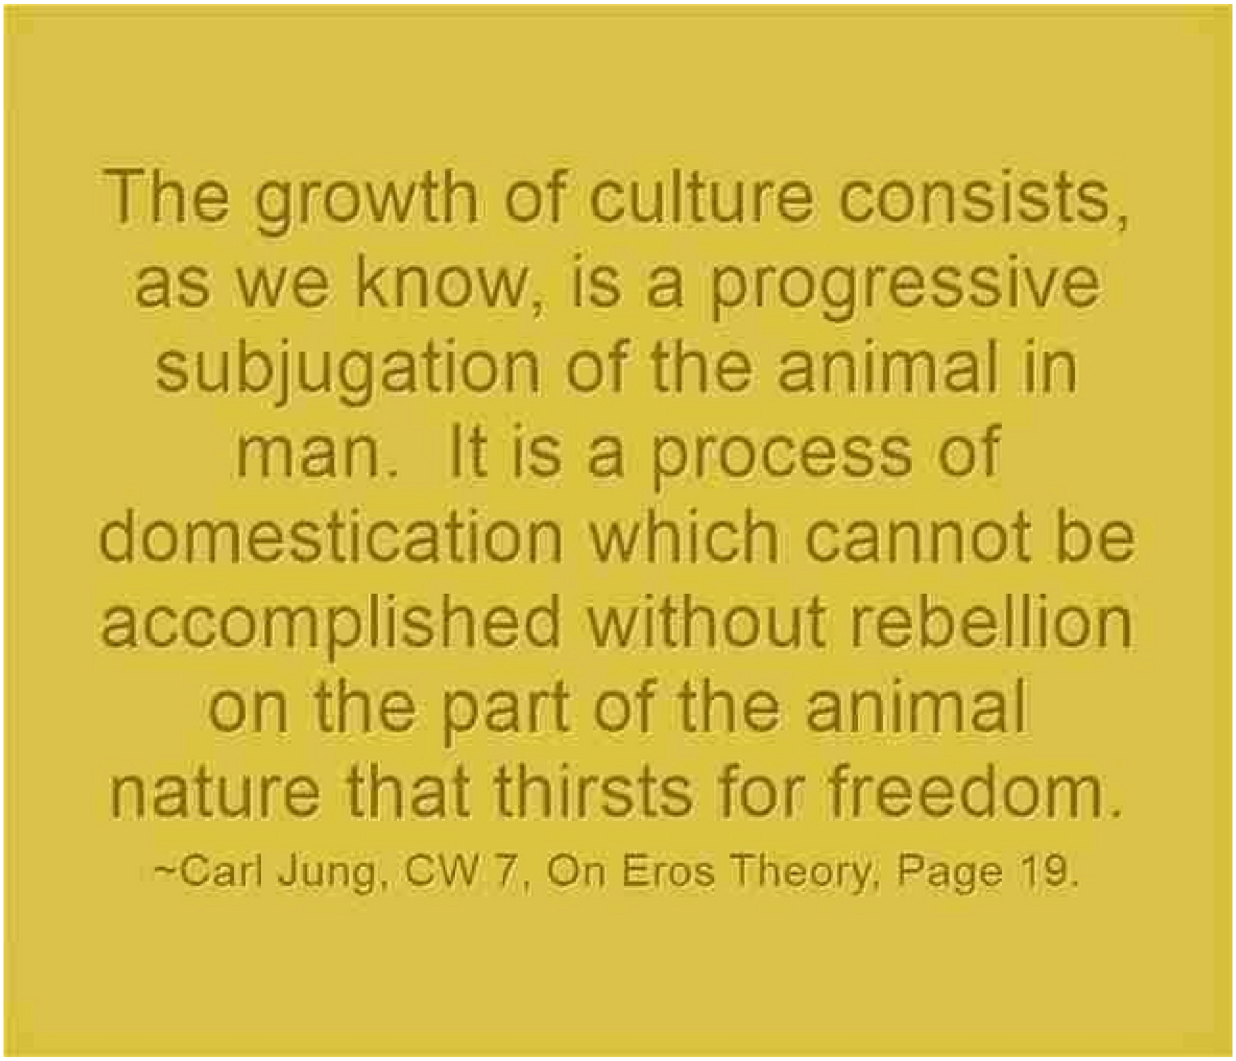
Just as in the early Middle Ages finance was held in contempt because there was as yet no differentiated financial morality to suit each case, but only a mass morality, so today there is only a mass sexual morality. Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 27.



Morality is not imposed from outside; we have it in ourselves from the start—not the law, but our moral nature without which the collective life of human society would be impossible.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 19.

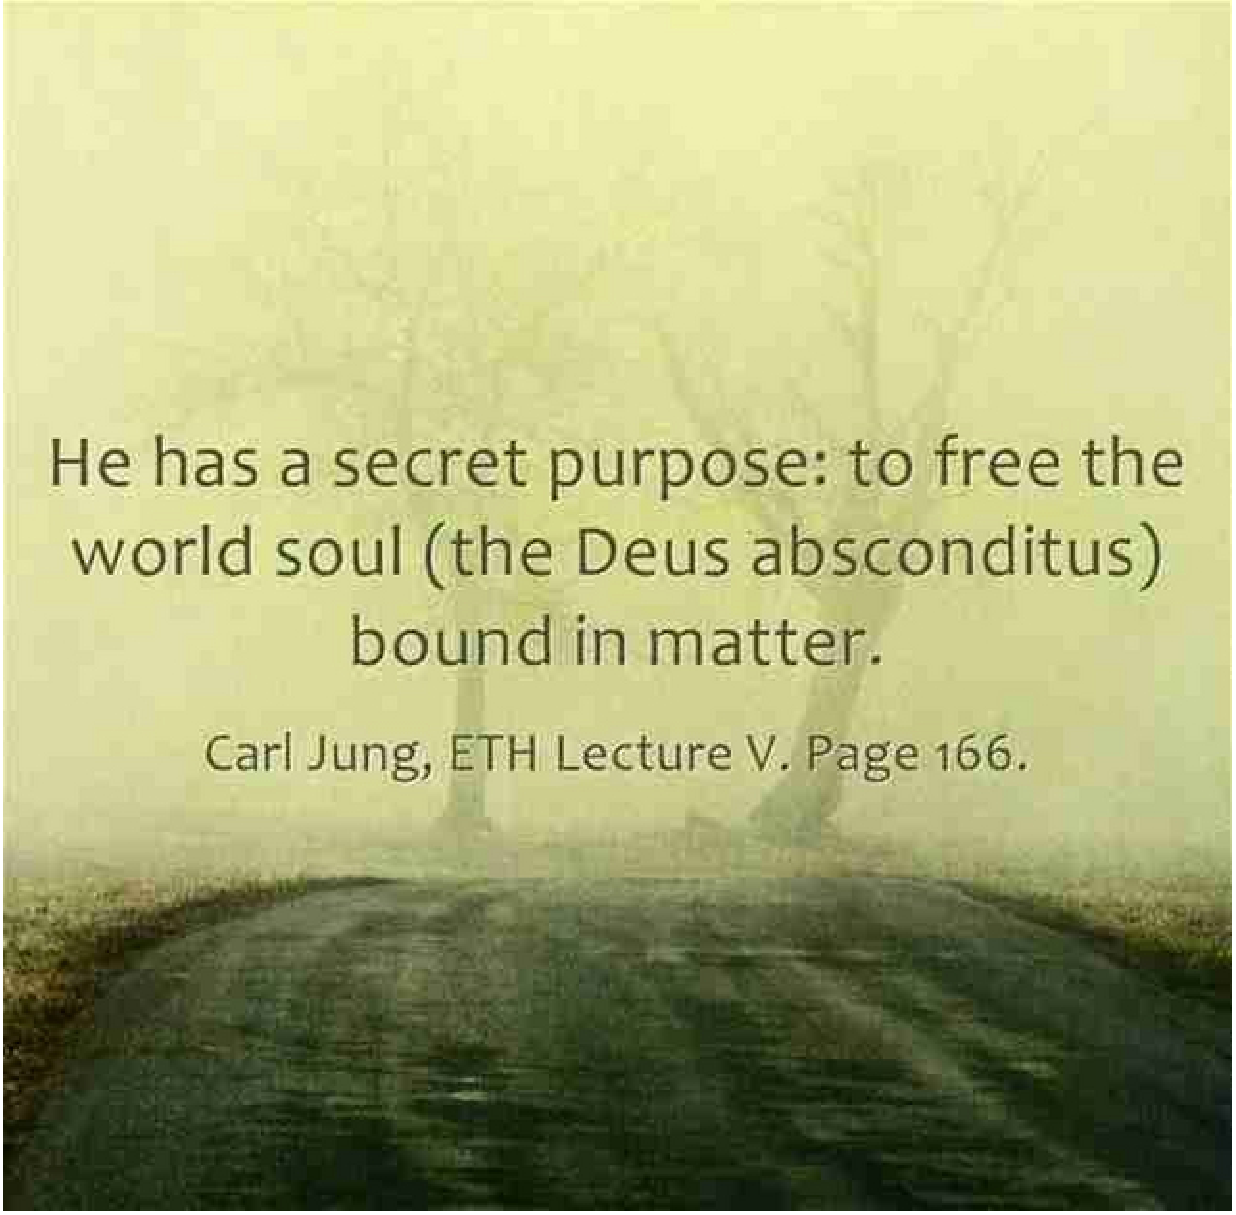
Morality is not imposed from outside; we have it in ourselves from the start—not the law, but our moral nature without which the collective life of human society would be impossible. Carl Jung, CW 7, Page 27.



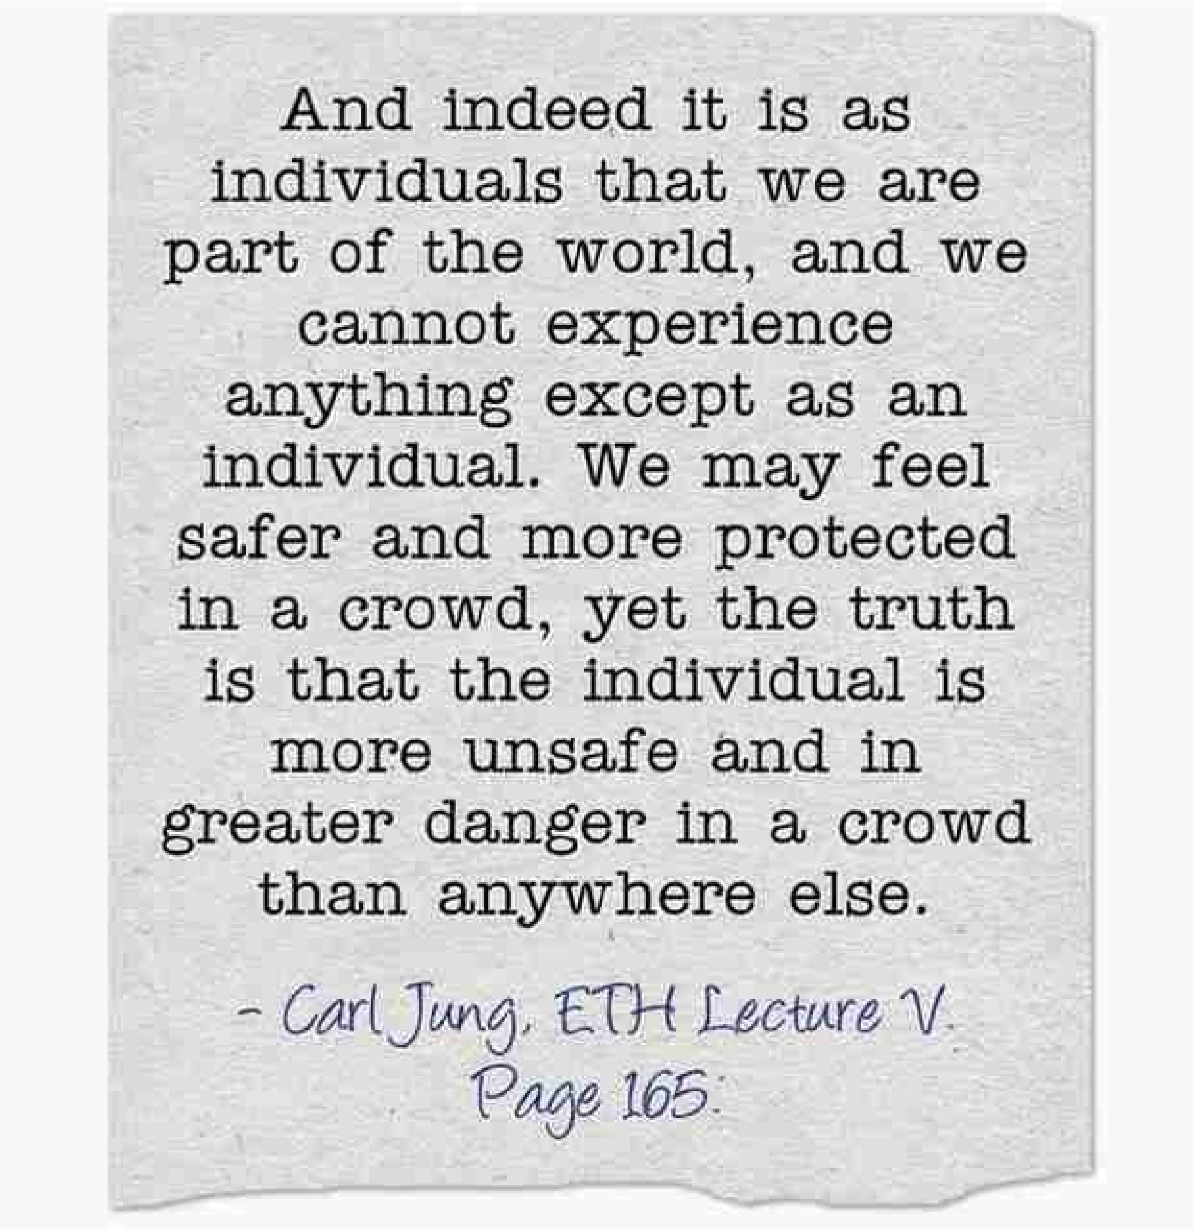
The growth of culture consists, as we know, is a progressive subjugation of the animal in man. It is a process of domestication which cannot be accomplished without rebellion on the part of the animal nature that thirsts for freedom.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 19.

The growth of culture consists, as we know, is a progressive subjugation of the animal in man. It is a process of domestication which cannot be accomplished without rebellion on the part of the animal nature that thirsts for freedom. Carl Jung, CW 7, On Eros Theory, Page 19.



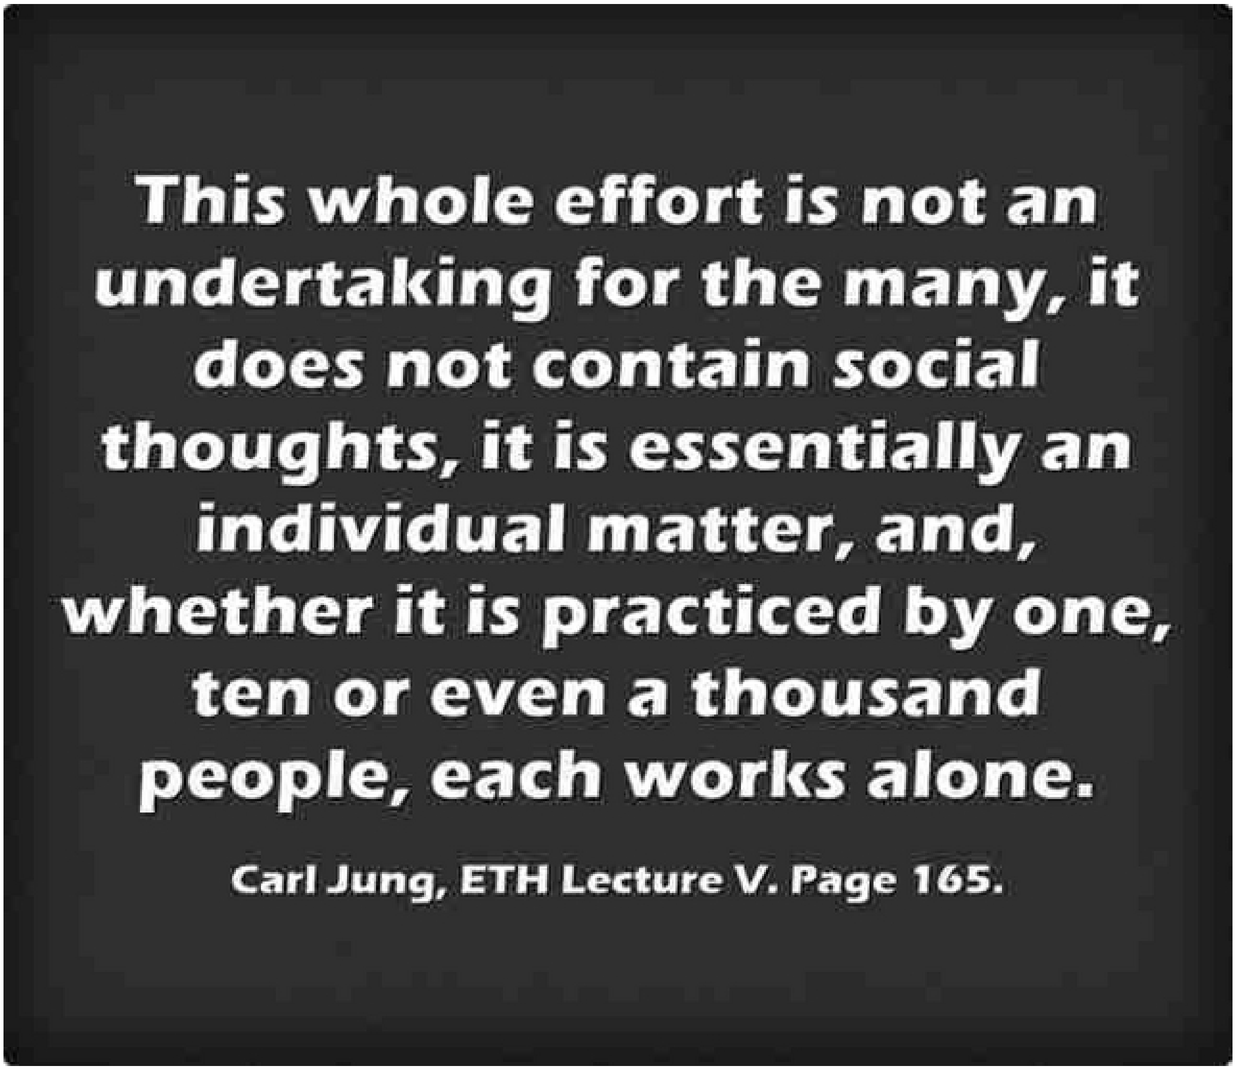
He has a secret purpose: to free the world soul (the Deus absconditus) bound in matter. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 166.



And indeed it is as individuals that we are part of the world, and we cannot experience anything except as an individual. We may feel safer and more protected in a crowd, yet the truth is that the individual is more unsafe and in greater danger in a crowd than anywhere else.

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V.
Page 165.

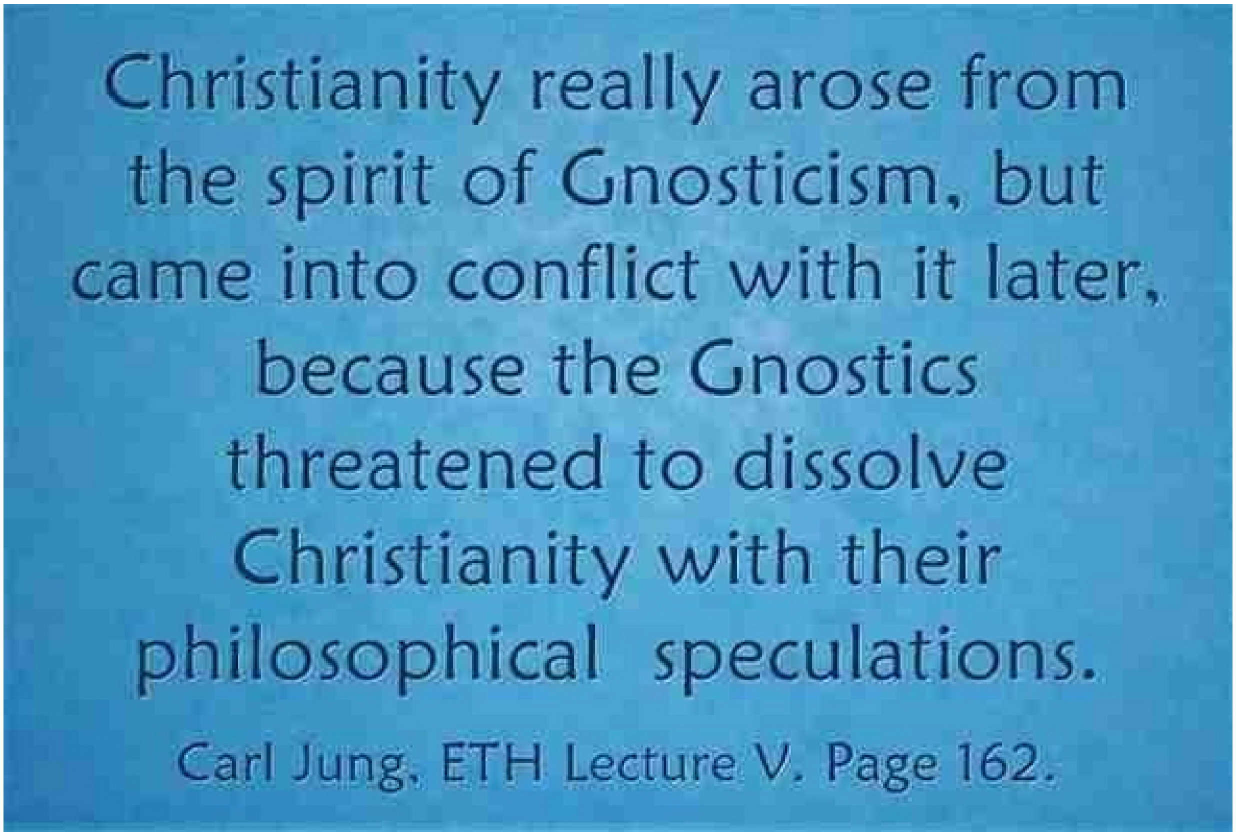
And indeed it is as individuals that we are part of the world, and we cannot experience anything except as an individual. We may feel safer and more protected in a crowd, yet the truth is that the individual is more unsafe and in greater danger in a crowd than anywhere else. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V, Page 165.



This whole effort is not an undertaking for the many, it does not contain social thoughts, it is essentially an individual matter, and, whether it is practiced by one, ten or even a thousand people, each works alone.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 165.

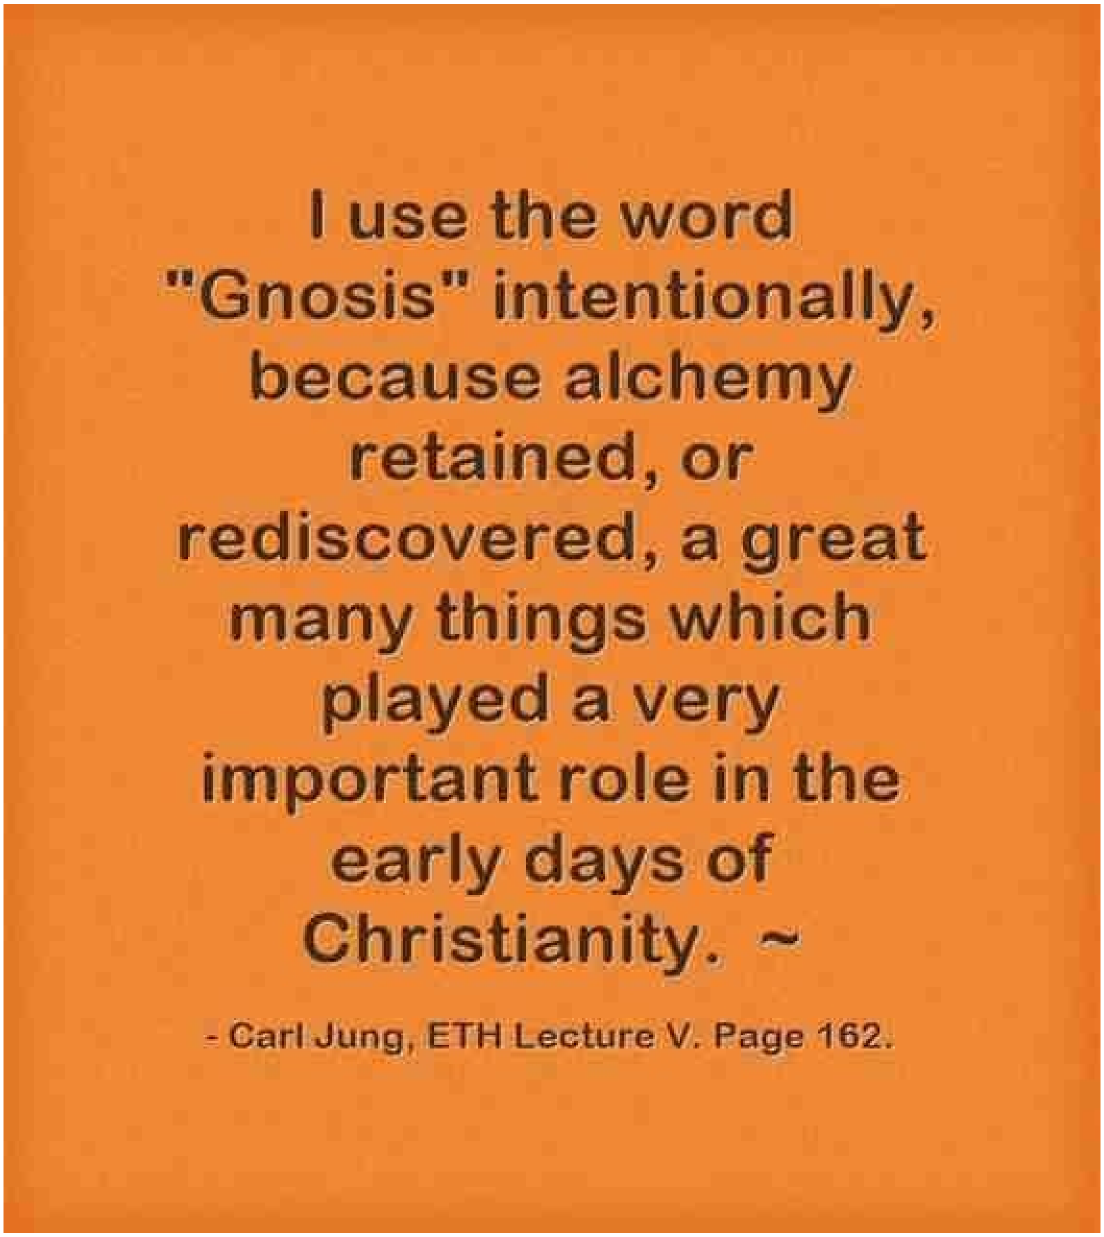
This whole effort is not an undertaking for the many, it does not contain social thoughts, it is essentially an individual matter, and, whether it is practised by one, ten or even a thousand people, each works alone. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V, Page 165.



Christianity really arose from the spirit of Gnosticism, but came into conflict with it later, because the Gnostics threatened to dissolve Christianity with their philosophical speculations.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 162.

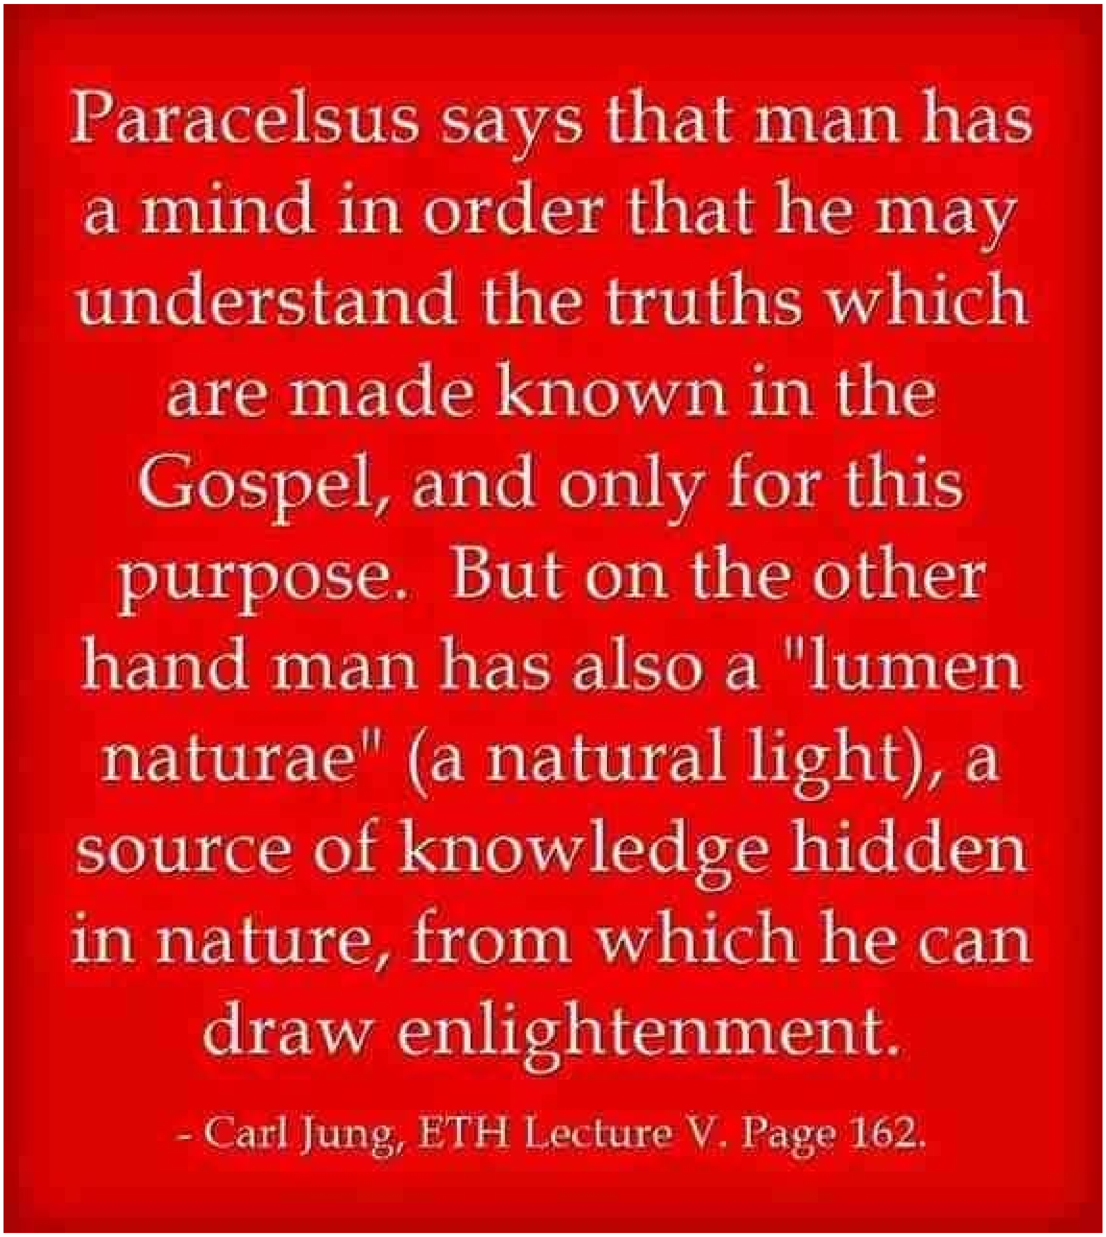
Christianity really arose from the spirit of Gnosticism, but came into conflict with it later, because the Gnostics threatened to dissolve Christianity with their philosophical speculations. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 162.



I use the word "Gnosis" intentionally, because alchemy retained, or rediscovered, a great many things which played a very important role in the early days of Christianity. ~

- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 162.

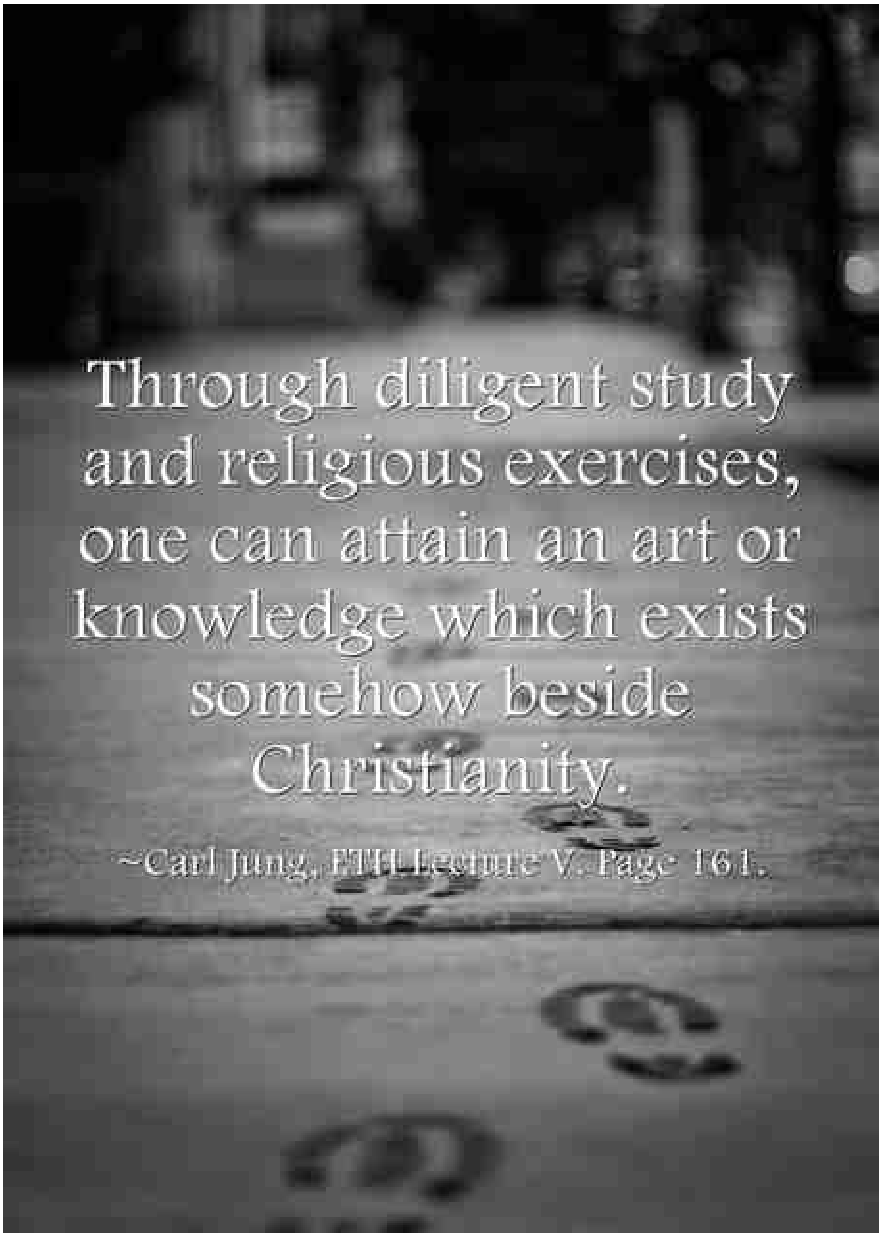
I use the word "Gnosis" intentionally, because alchemy retained, or rediscovered, a great many things which played a very important role in the early days of Christianity. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 162.



Paracelsus says that man has a mind in order that he may understand the truths which are made known in the Gospel, and only for this purpose. But on the other hand man has also a "lumen naturae" (a natural light), a source of knowledge hidden in nature, from which he can draw enlightenment.

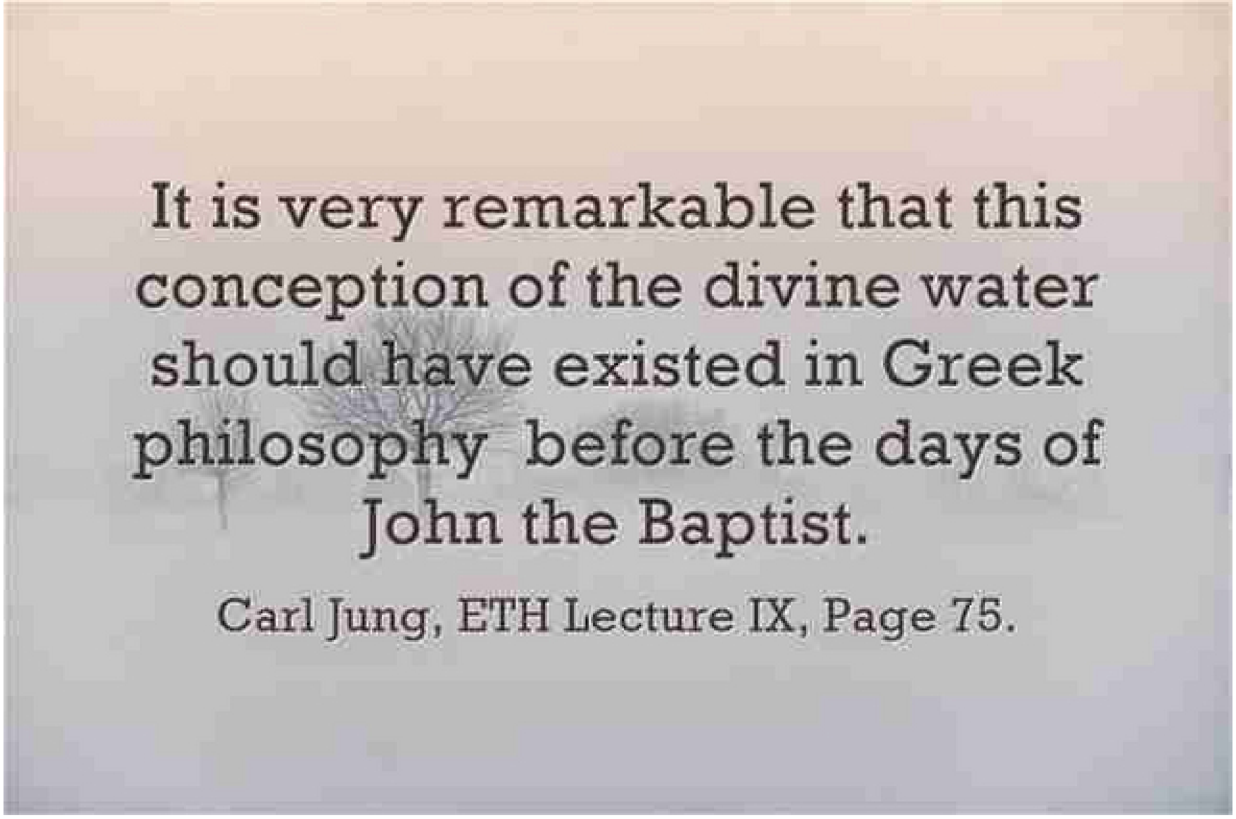
- Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 162.

Paracelsus says that man has a mind in order that he may understand the truths which are made known in the Gospel, and only for this purpose. But on the other hand man has also a "lumen naturae" (a natural light), a source of knowledge hidden in nature, from which he can draw enlightenment. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 162.



Through diligent study and religious exercises, one can attain an art or knowledge which exists somehow beside Christianity.
~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 161.

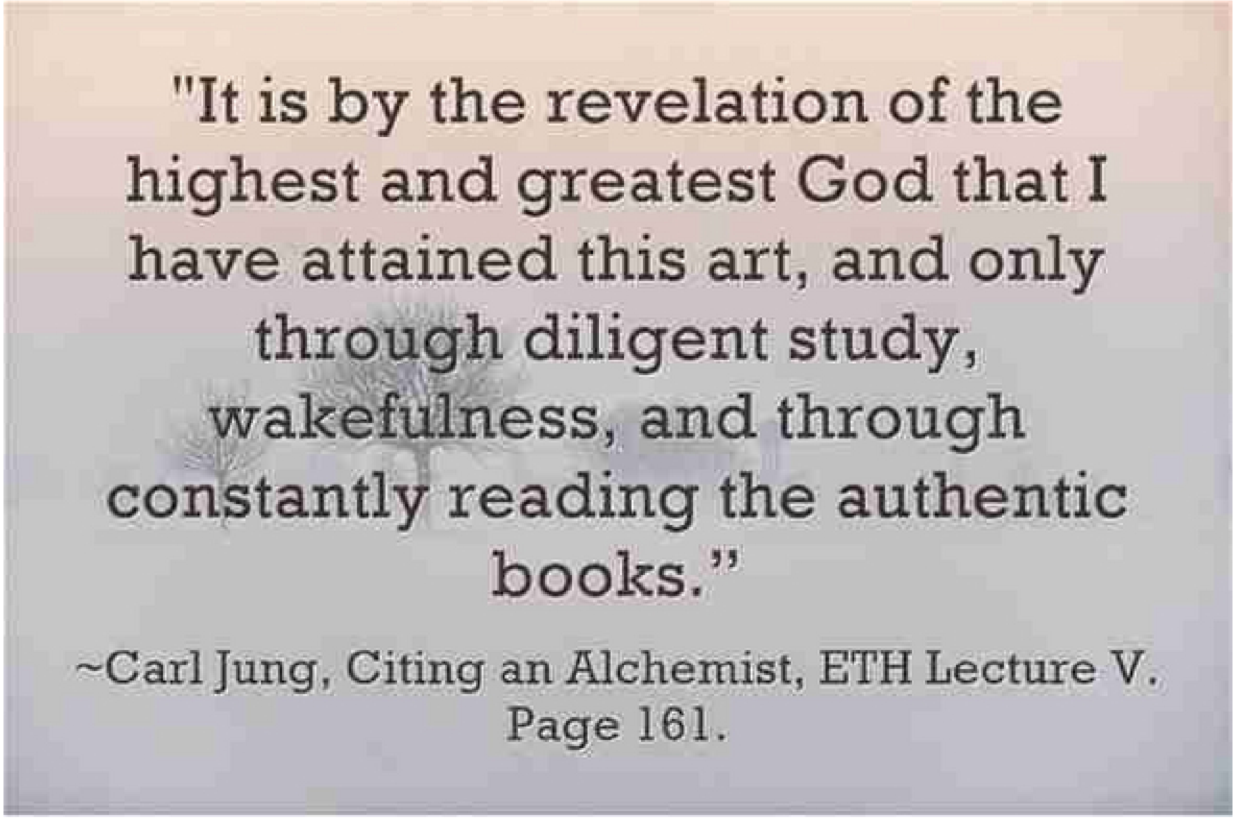
Through diligent study and religious exercises, one can attain an art or knowledge which exists somehow beside Christianity. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 161.



It is very remarkable that this conception of the divine water should have existed in Greek philosophy before the days of John the Baptist.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 75.

It is very remarkable that this conception of the divine water should have existed in Greek philosophy before the days of John the Baptist. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 75.



"It is by the revelation of the highest and greatest God that I have attained this art, and only through diligent study, wakefulness, and through constantly reading the authentic books."

~Carl Jung, Citing an Alchemist, ETH Lecture V. Page 161.

"It is by the revelation of the highest and greatest God that I have attained this art, and only through diligent study, wakefulness, and through constantly reading the authentic books." Carl Jung, Citing an Alchemist, ETH Lecture V. Page 161.

The ideal in some Christian circles is to be always cheerful, of good courage, to be friends with all the world and to live above all conflict; for Christ has taken the conflict on Himself, so why should I trouble with it? That is no imitation of Christ, it is a device to avoid the essential Christian conflict.

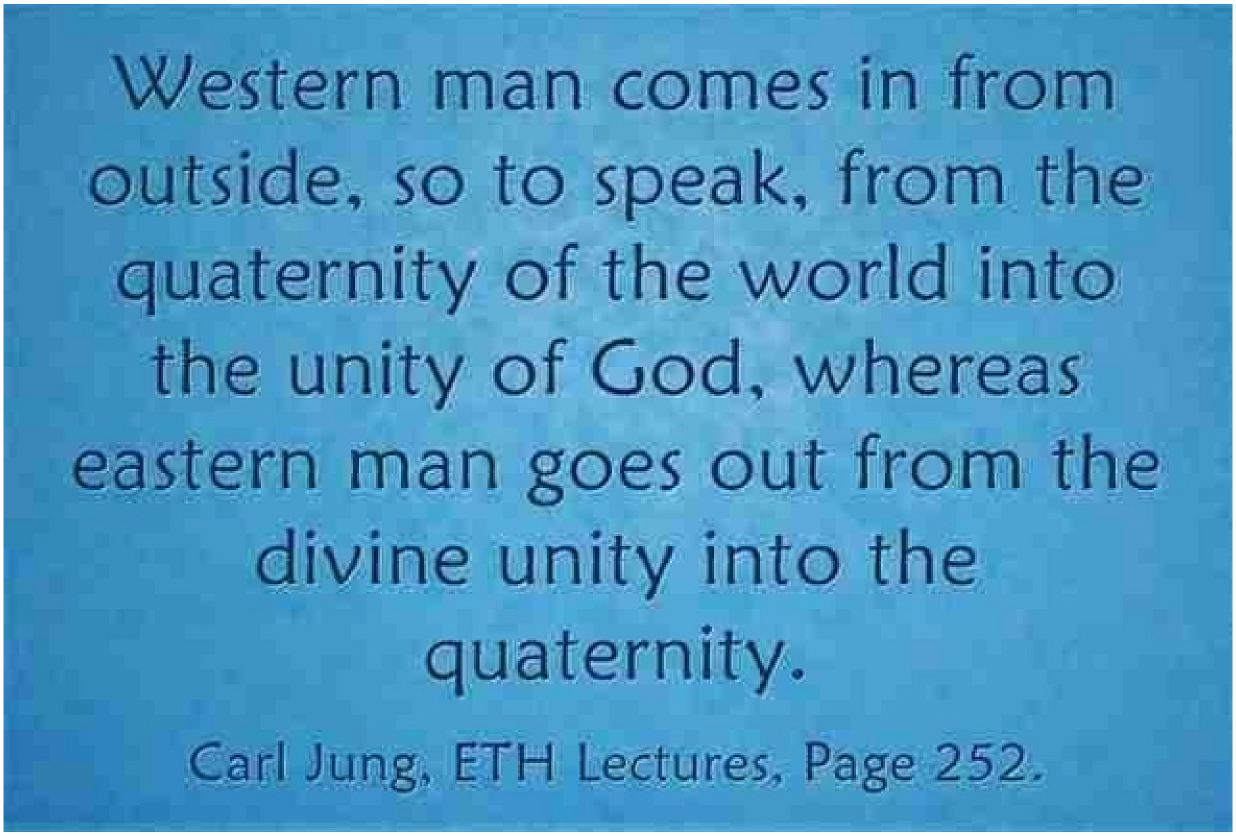
- Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 258.

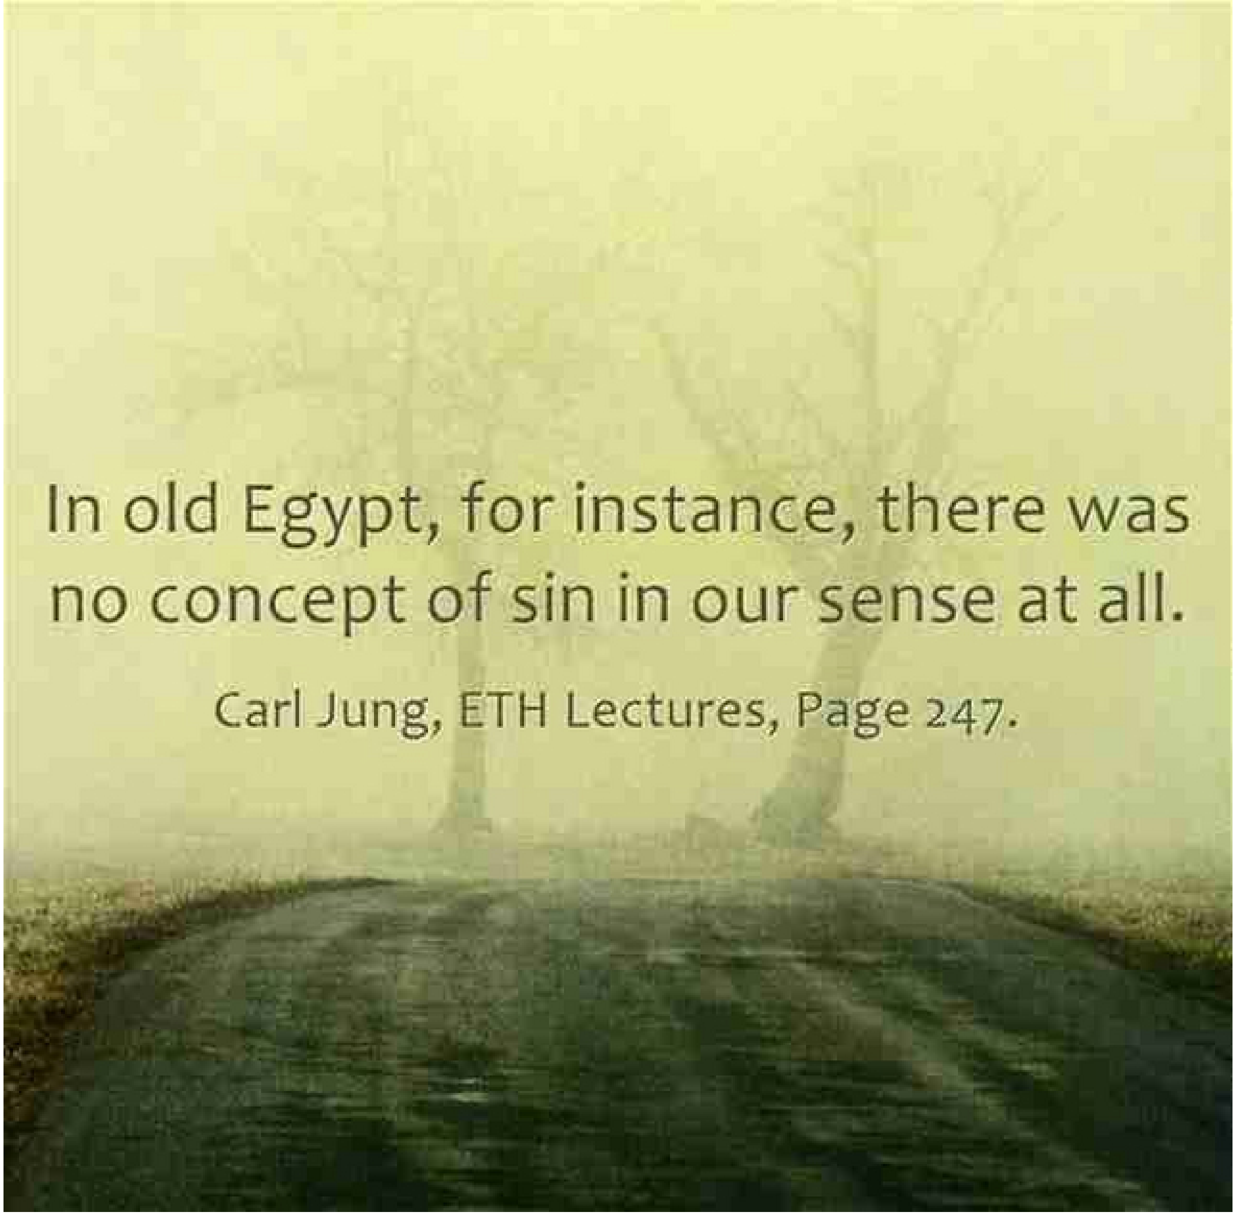
The ideal in some Christian circles is to be always cheerful, of good courage, to be friends with all the world and to live above all conflict; for Christ has taken the conflict on Himself, so why should I trouble with it? That is no imitation of Christ, it is a device to avoid the essential Christian conflict. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XVI, Page 258.



Western man comes in from outside, so to speak, from the quaternity of the world into the unity of God, whereas eastern man goes out from the divine unity into the quaternity.

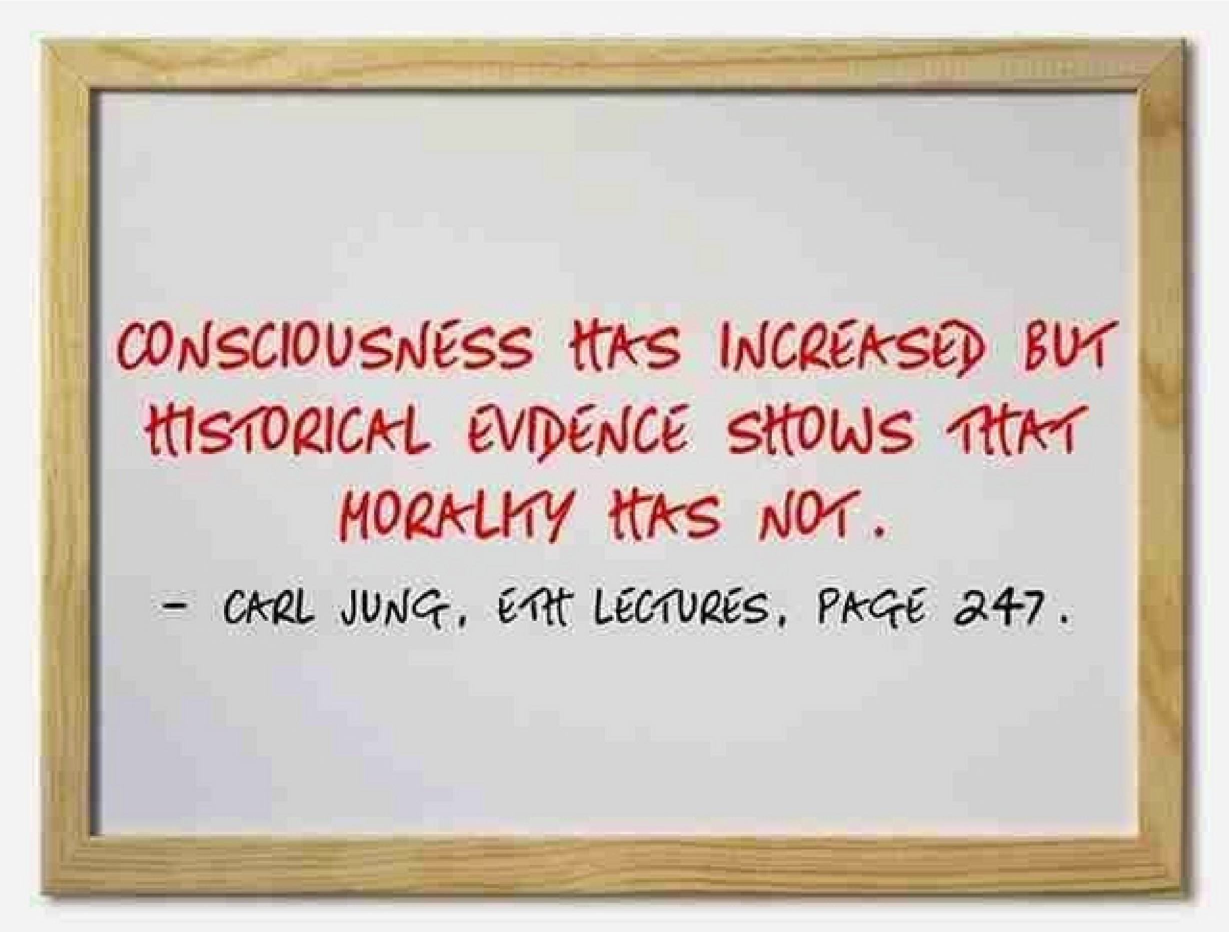
Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 252.

Western man comes in from outside, so to speak, from the quaternity of the world into the unity of God, whereas eastern man goes out from the divine unity into the quaternity. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XIV, Page 252.



In old Egypt, for instance, there was no concept of sin in our sense at all.
Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 247.

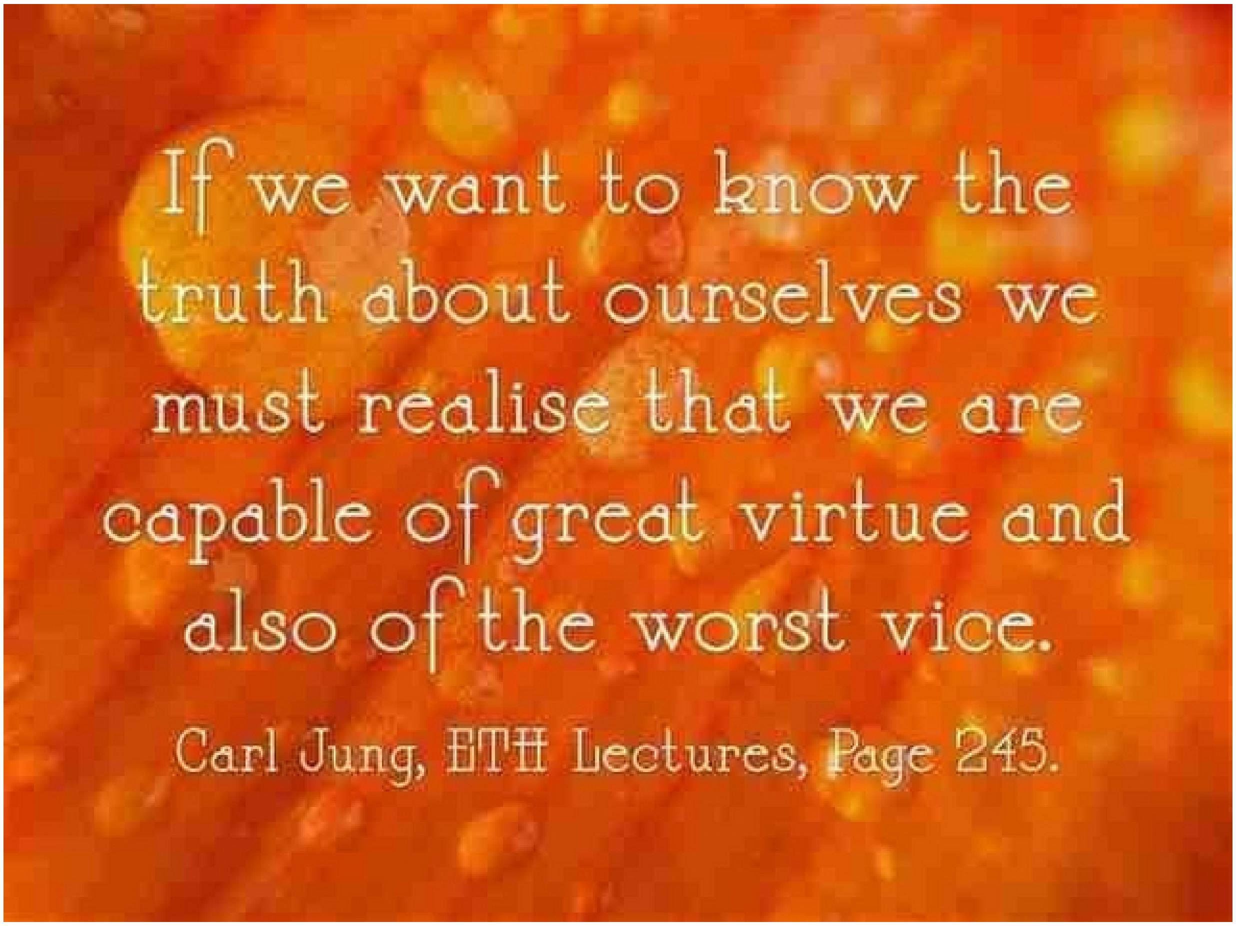
In old Egypt, for instance, there was no concept of sin in our sense at all. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XIV, Page 247.



CONSCIOUSNESS HAS INCREASED BUT HISTORICAL EVIDENCE SHOWS THAT MORALITY HAS NOT.

– CARL JUNG, ETH LECTURES, PAGE 247.

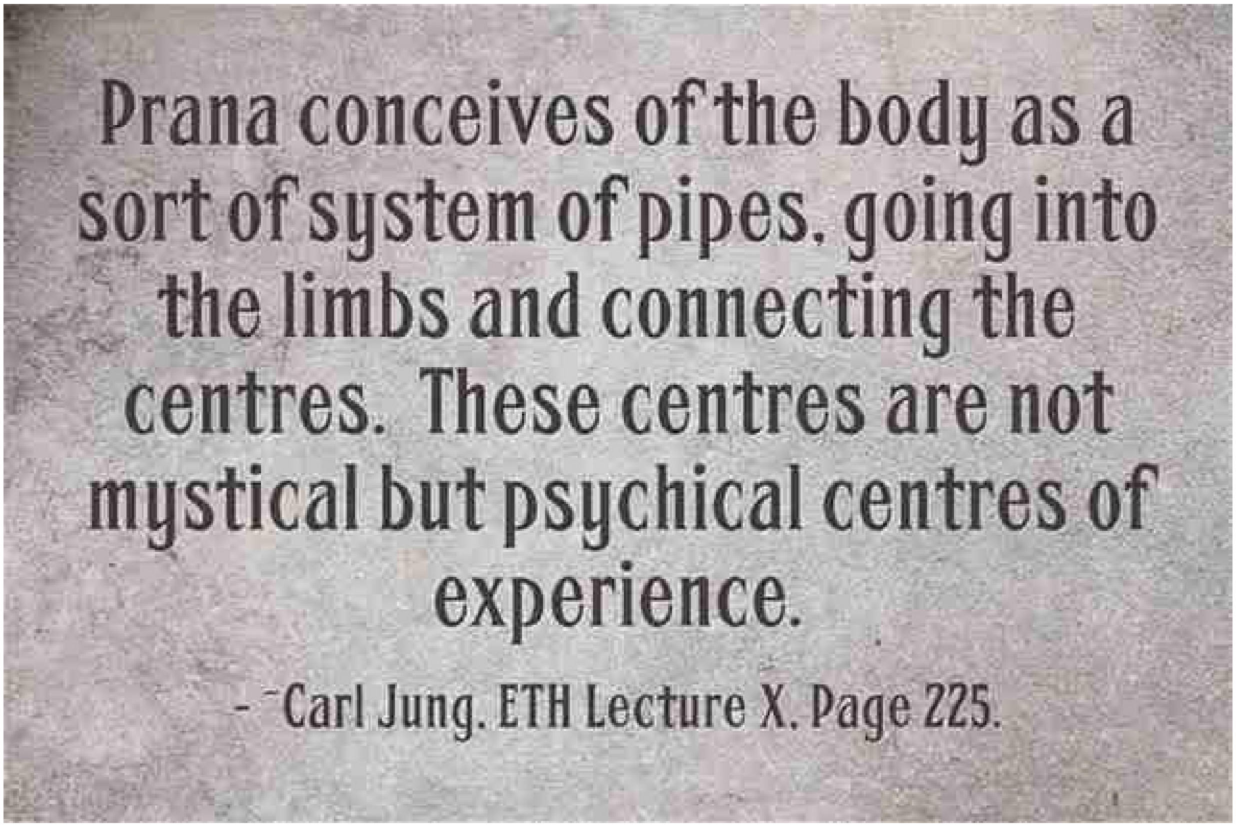
Consciousness has increased but historical evidence shows that morality has not. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XIV, Page 247.



If we want to know the truth about ourselves we must realise that we are capable of great virtue and also of the worst vice.

Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 245.

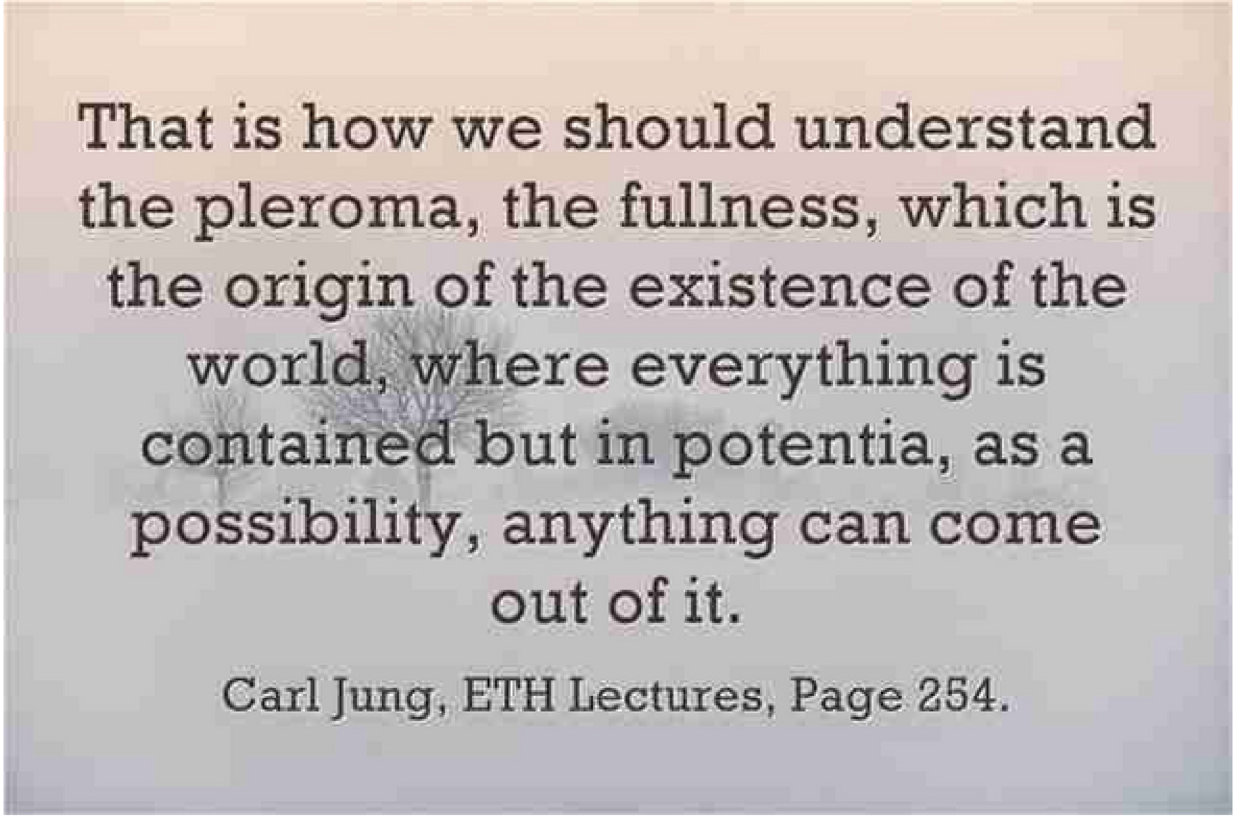
If we want to know the truth about ourselves we must realise that we are capable of great virtue and also of the worst vice. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 13, Page 245.



Prana conceives of the body as a sort of system of pipes. going into the limbs and connecting the centres. These centres are not mystical but psychical centres of experience.

- Carl Jung. ETH Lecture X. Page 225.

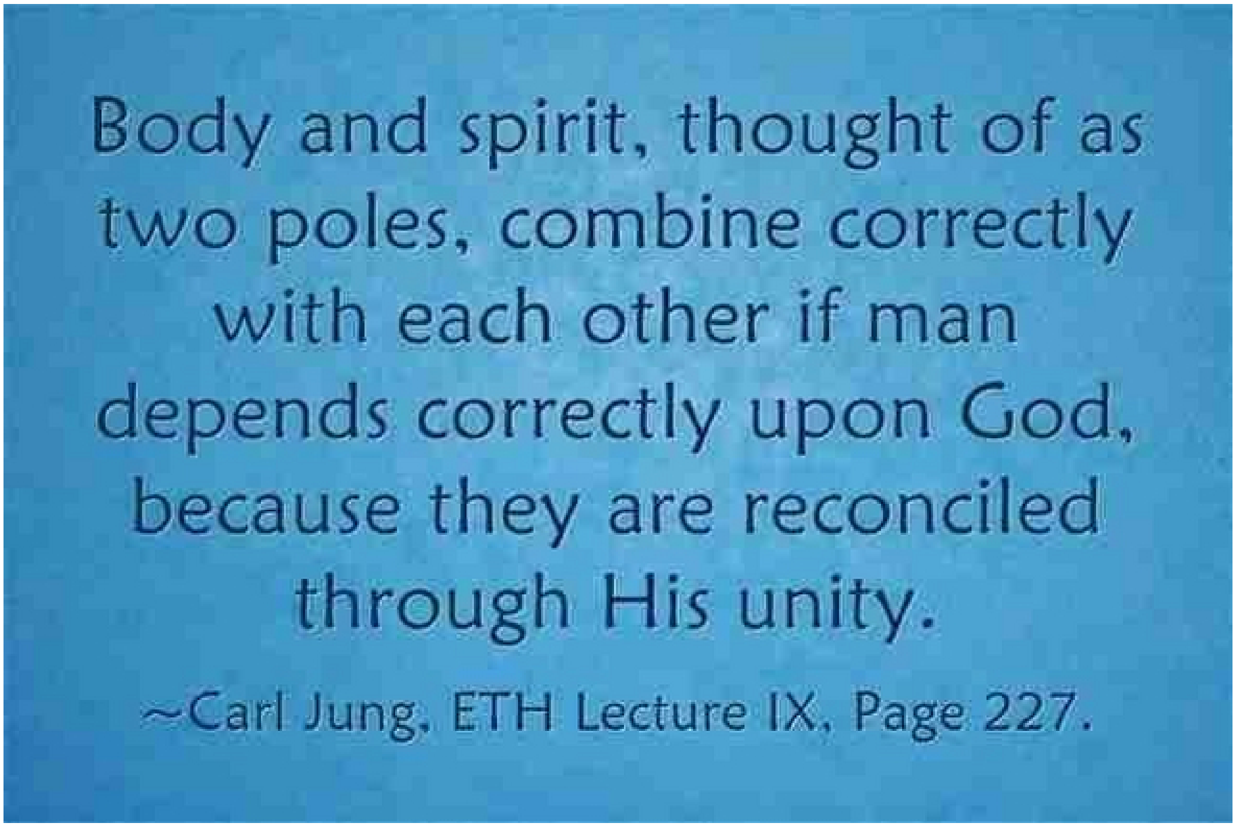
Prana conceives of the body as a sort of system of pipes, going into the limbs and connecting the centres. These centres are not mystical but psychical centres of experience. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.



That is how we should understand the pleroma, the fullness, which is the origin of the existence of the world, where everything is contained but in potentia, as a possibility, anything can come out of it.

Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 254.

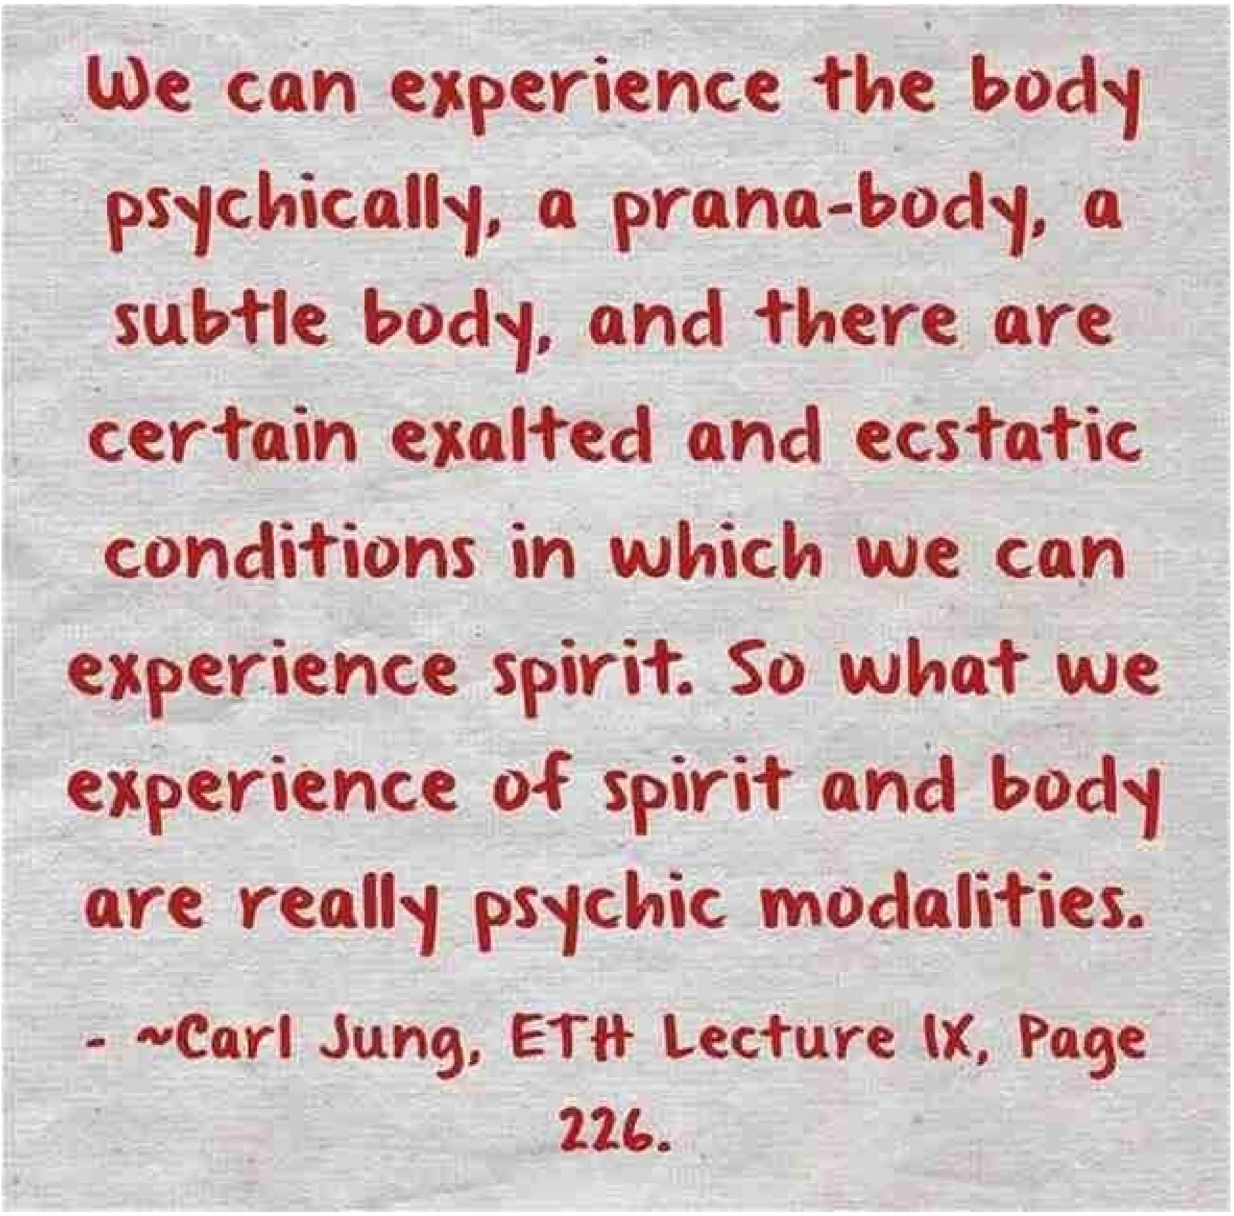
That is how we should understand the pleroma, the fullness, which is the origin of the existence of the world, where everything is contained but in potentia, as a possibility, anything can come out of it. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 254.



Body and spirit, thought of as two poles, combine correctly with each other if man depends correctly upon God, because they are reconciled through His unity.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 227.

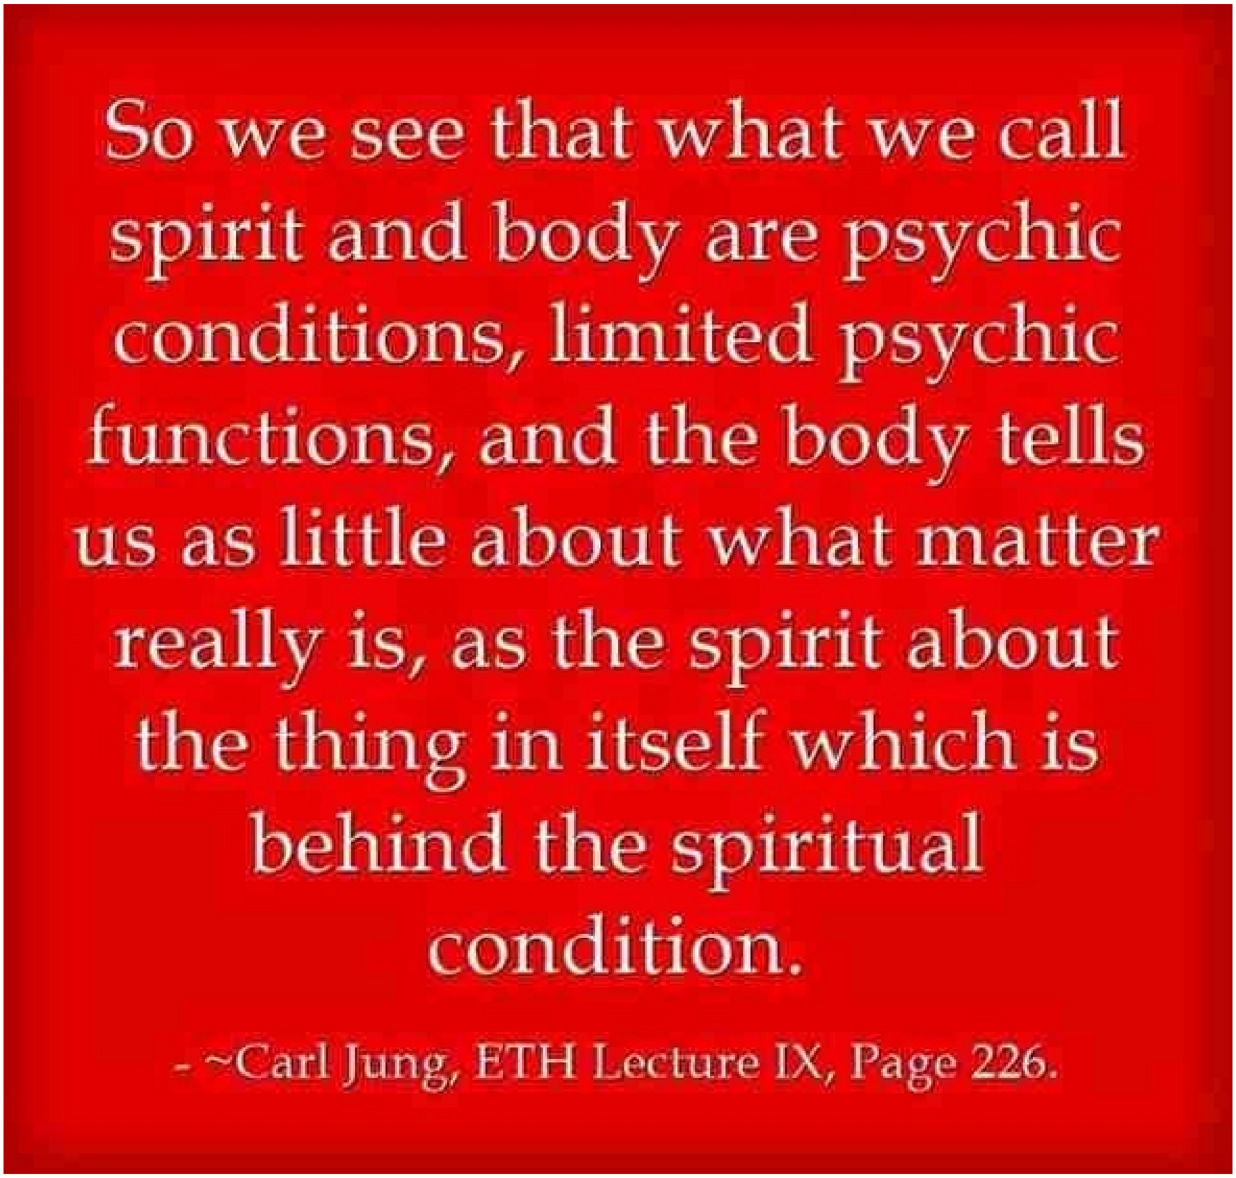
Body and spirit, thought of as two poles, combine correctly with each other if man depends correctly upon God, because they are reconciled through His unity. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 227.



We can experience the body psychically, a prana-body, a subtle body, and there are certain exalted and ecstatic conditions in which we can experience spirit. So what we experience of spirit and body are really psychic modalities.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 226.

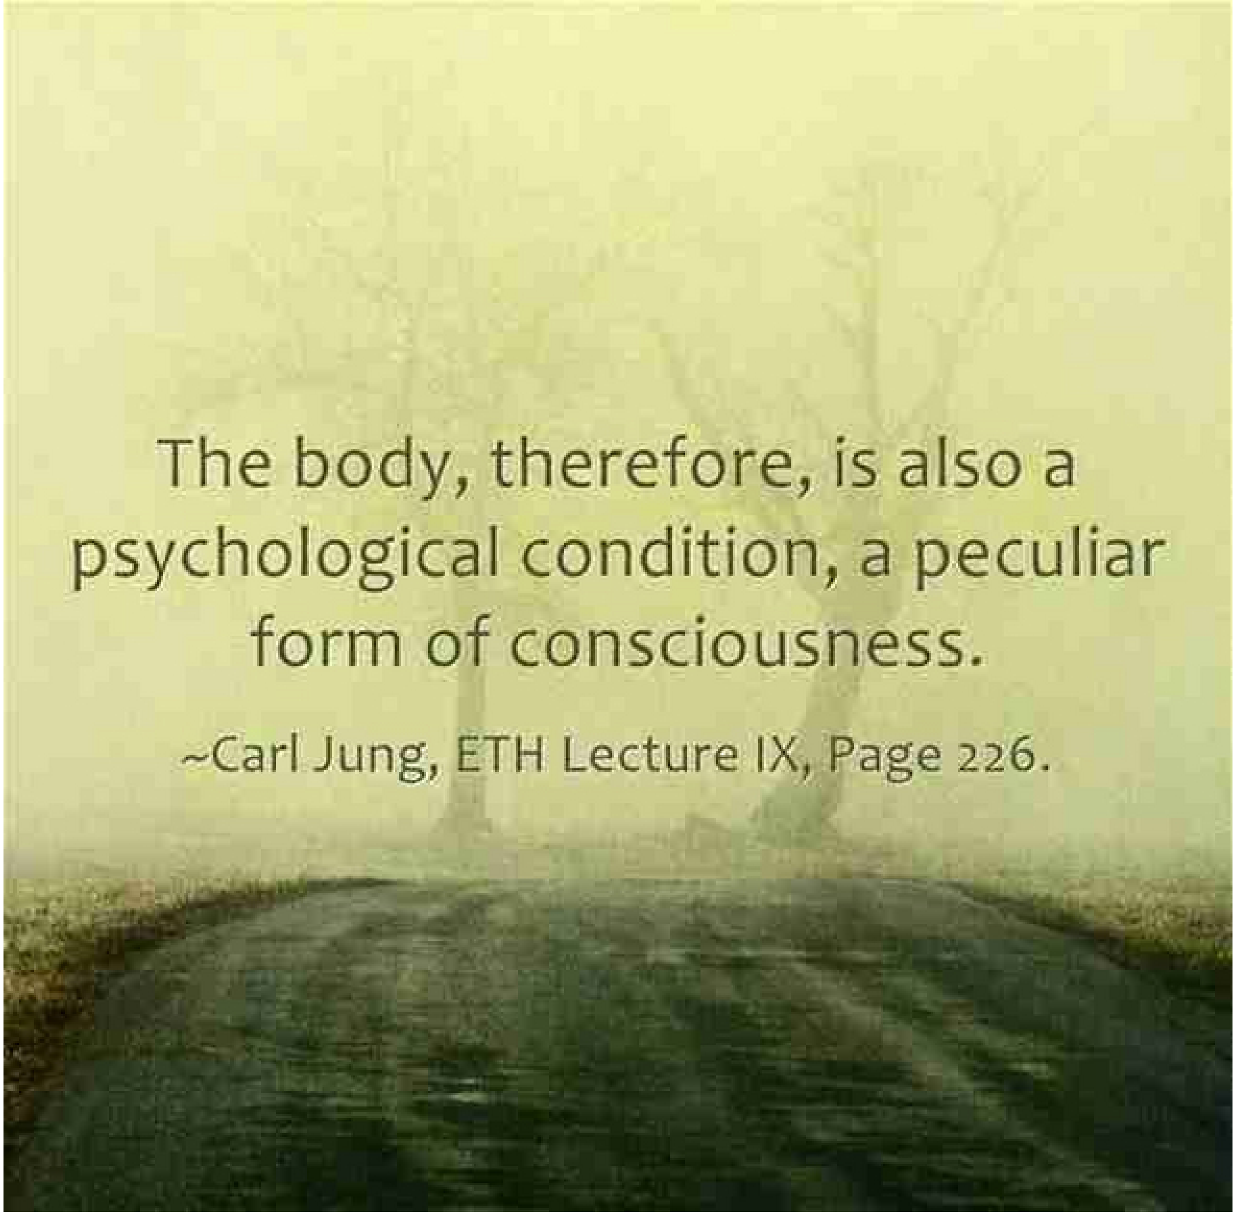
We can experience the body psychically, a prana-body, a subtle body, and there are certain exalted and ecstatic conditions in which we can experience spirit. So what we experience of spirit and body are really psychic modalities. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 226.



So we see that what we call spirit and body are psychic conditions, limited psychic functions, and the body tells us as little about what matter really is, as the spirit about the thing in itself which is behind the spiritual condition.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 226.

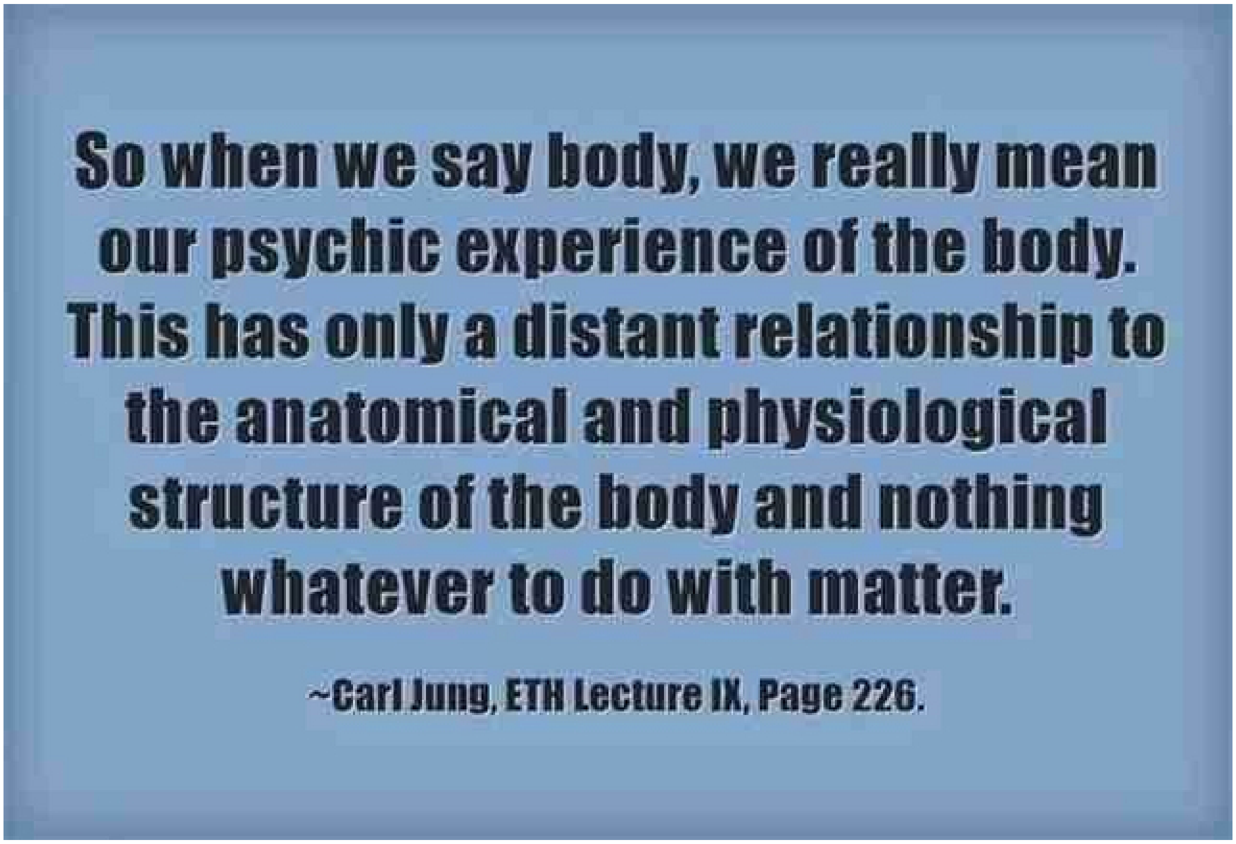
So we see that what we call spirit and body are psychic conditions, limited psychic functions, and the body tells us as little about what matter really is, as the spirit about the thing in itself which is behind the spiritual condition. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 226.



The body, therefore, is also a psychological condition, a peculiar form of consciousness.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 226.

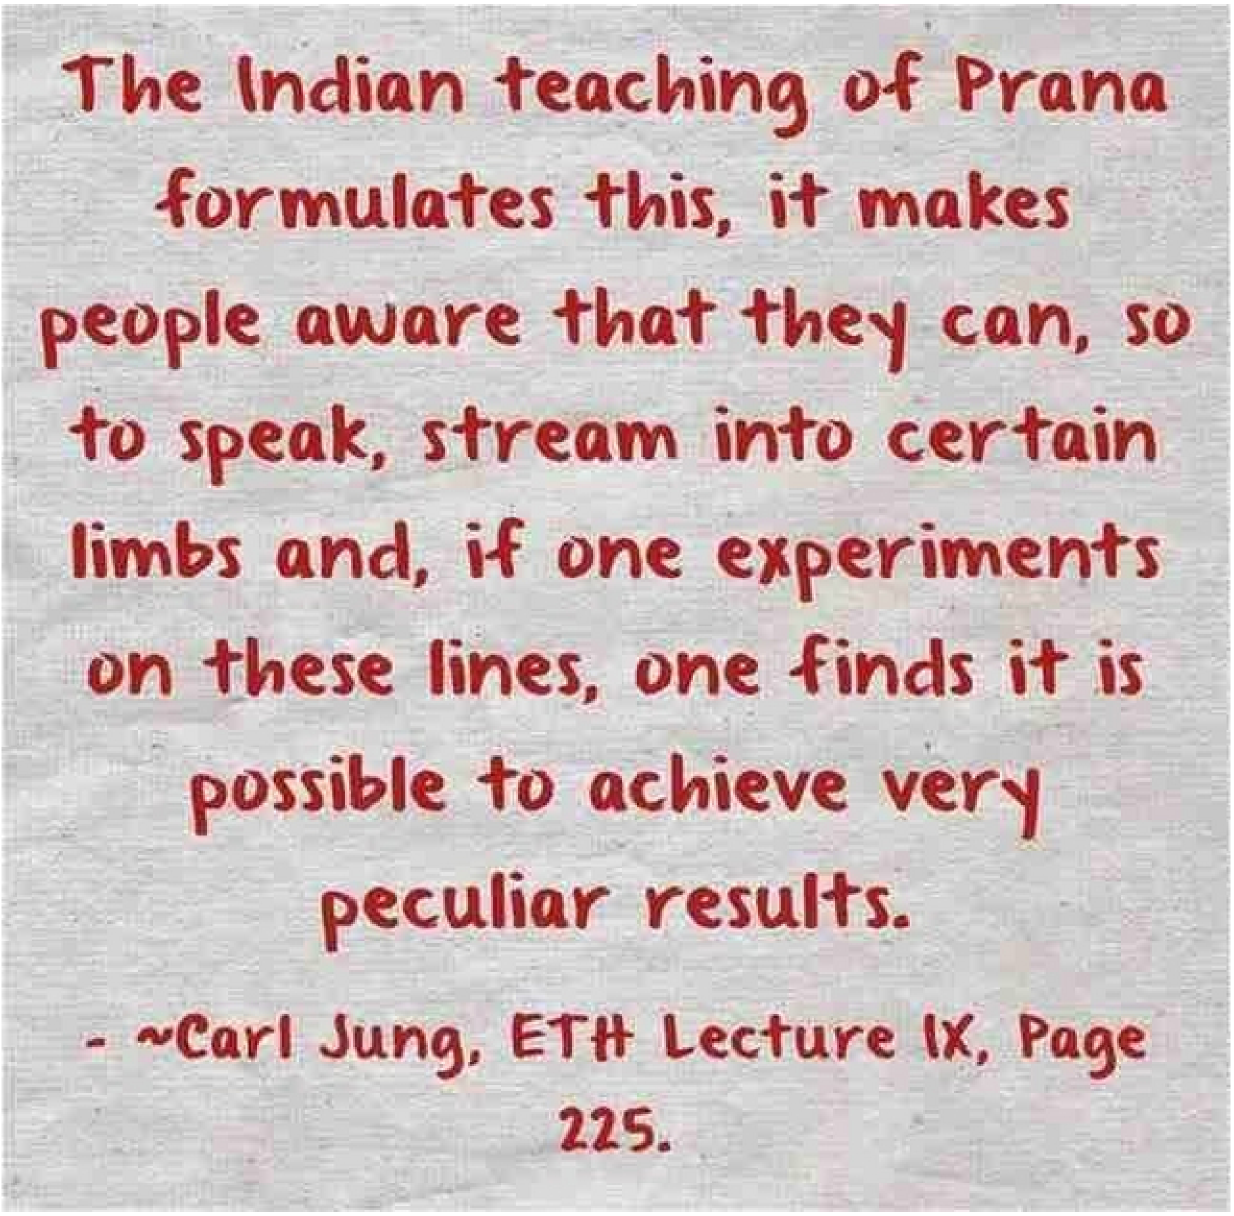
The body, therefore, is also a psychological condition, a peculiar form of consciousness. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 226.



So when we say body, we really mean our psychic experience of the body. This has only a distant relationship to the anatomical and physiological structure of the body and nothing whatever to do with matter.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 226.

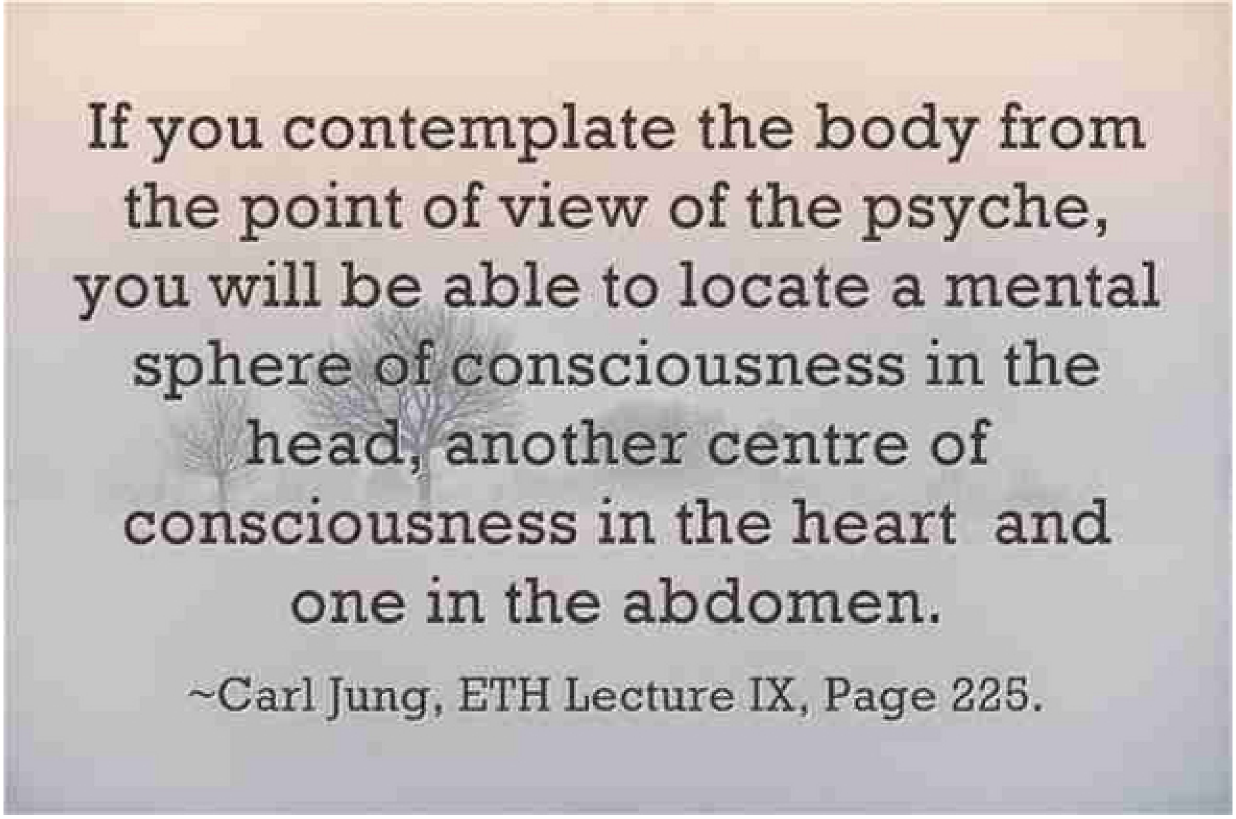
So when we say body, we really mean our psychic experience of the body. This has only a distant relationship to the anatomical and physiological structure of the body and nothing whatever to do with matter. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 226.



The Indian teaching of Prana formulates this, it makes people aware that they can, so to speak, stream into certain limbs and, if one experiments on these lines, one finds it is possible to achieve very peculiar results.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 225.

The Indian teaching of Prana formulates this, it makes people aware that they can, so to speak, stream into certain limbs and, if one experiments on these lines, one finds it is possible to achieve very peculiar results. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.



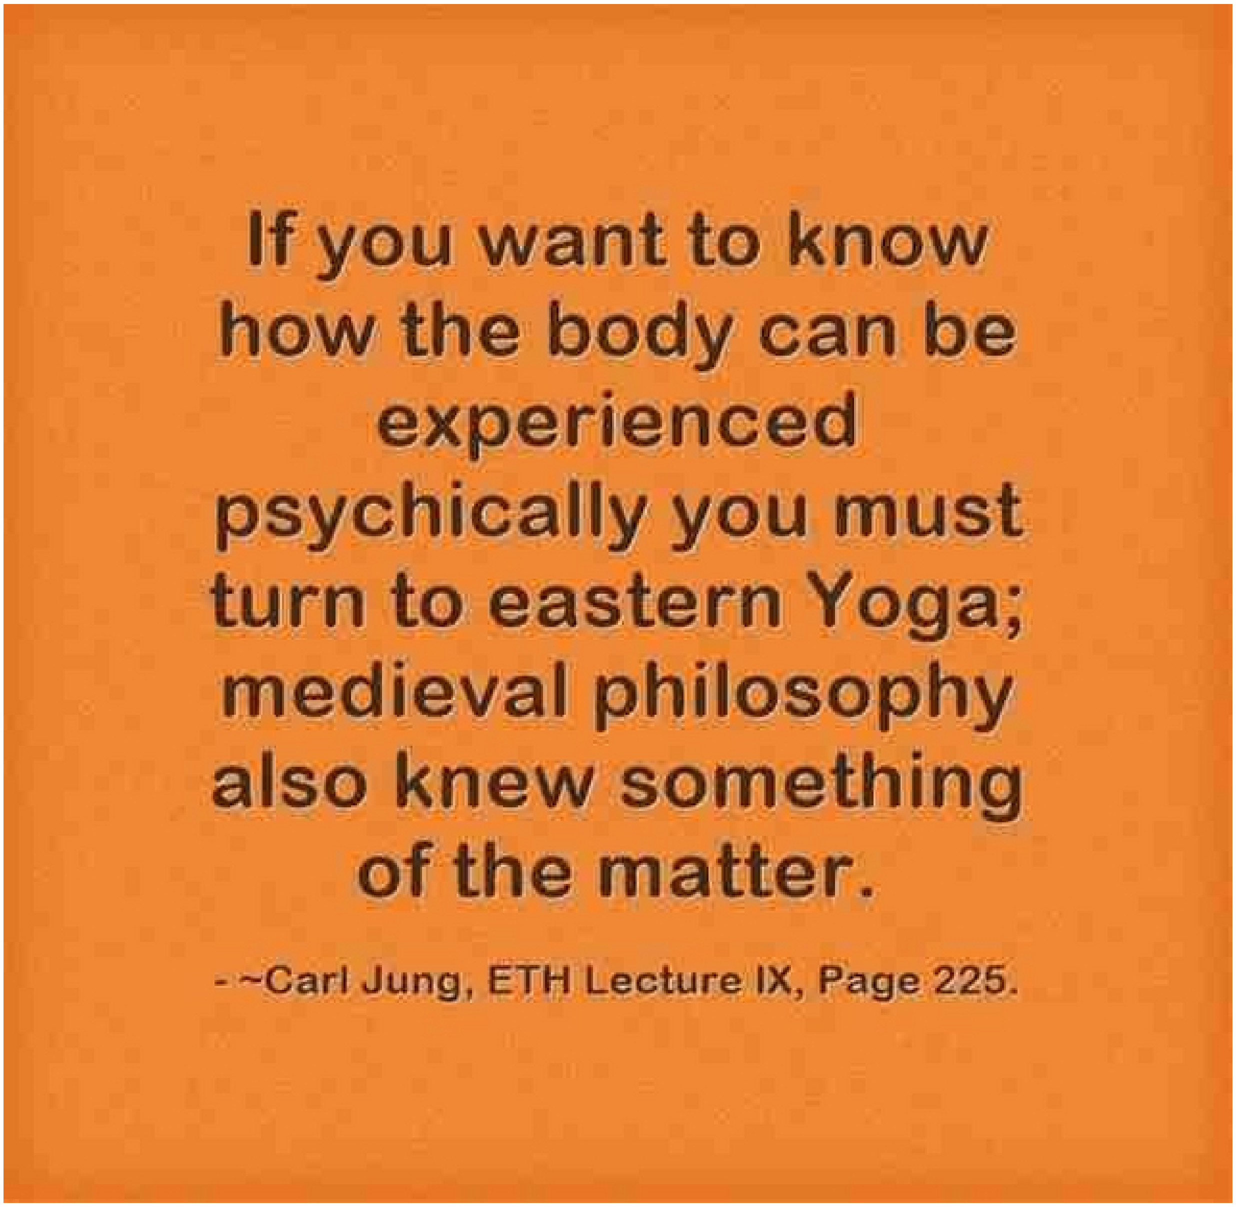
If you contemplate the body from the point of view of the psyche, you will be able to locate a mental sphere of consciousness in the head, another centre of consciousness in the heart and one in the abdomen.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 225.

If you contemplate the body from the point of view of the psyche, you will be able to locate a mental sphere of consciousness in the head, another centre of consciousness in the heart and one in the abdomen. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.

[44]<img border="0" src="https://3.bp.blogspot.com/-Fbg2yvNNdwk/WME _pEHv _CI/AAAAAAAAjrM/LKtwcMibLos20J1Y0nC7wSZ9aZ5-1a0IgCL Anatomical knowledge does not tell us how we fill our own bodies but psychic experience does give us information on this point. We fill our bodies as if through inner streams. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.

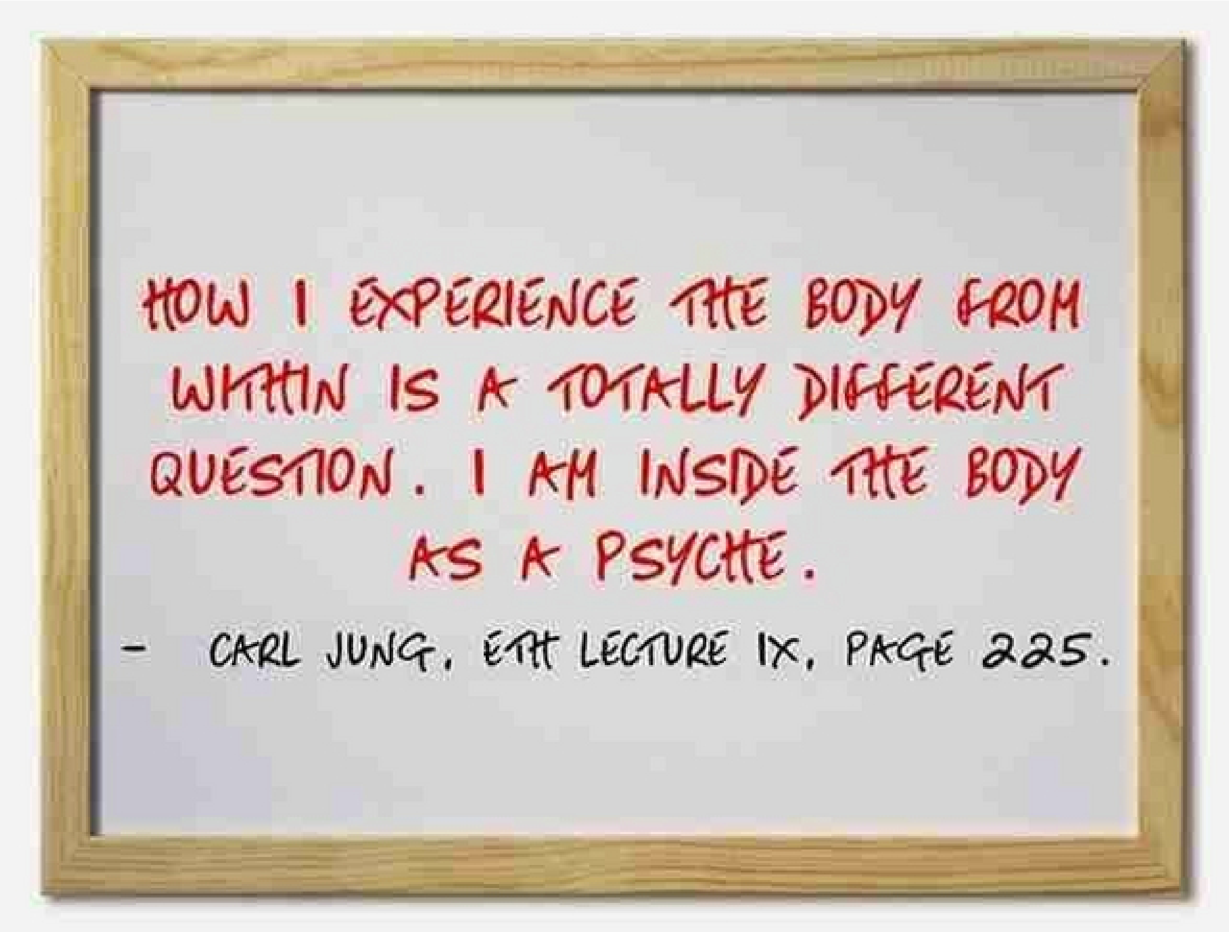
[45]



If you want to know how the body can be experienced psychically you must turn to eastern Yoga; medieval philosophy also knew something of the matter.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 225.

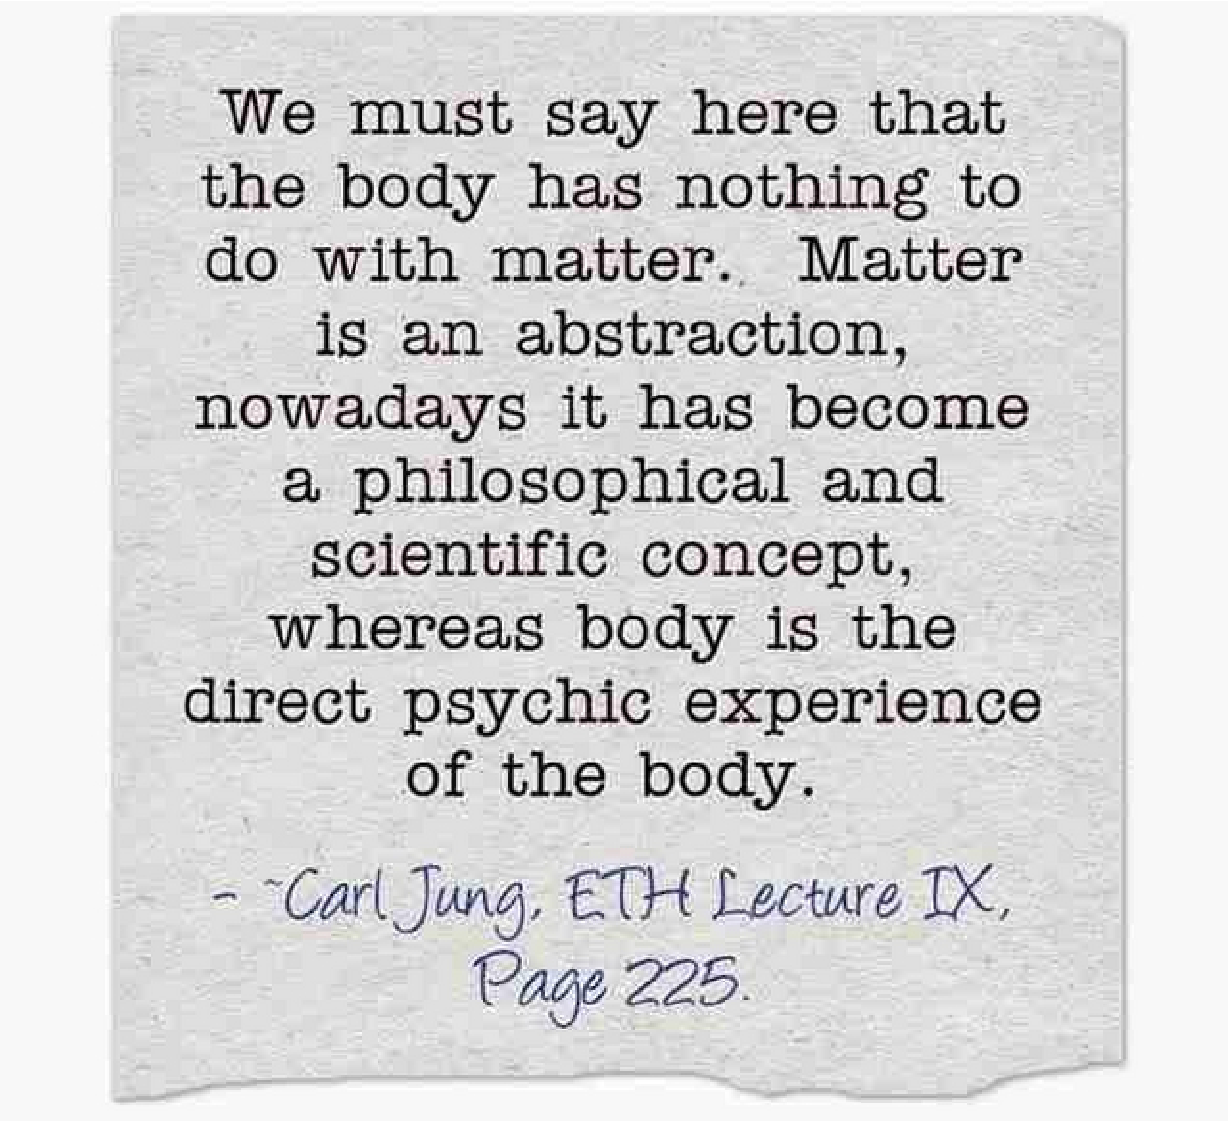
If you want to know how the body can be experienced psychically you must turn to eastern Yoga; medieval philosophy also knew something of the matter.   Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.



HOW I EXPERIENCE THE BODY FROM WITHIN IS A TOTALLY DIFFERENT QUESTION. I AM INSIDE THE BODY AS A PSYCHE.

- CARL JUNG, ETH LECTURE IX, PAGE 225.

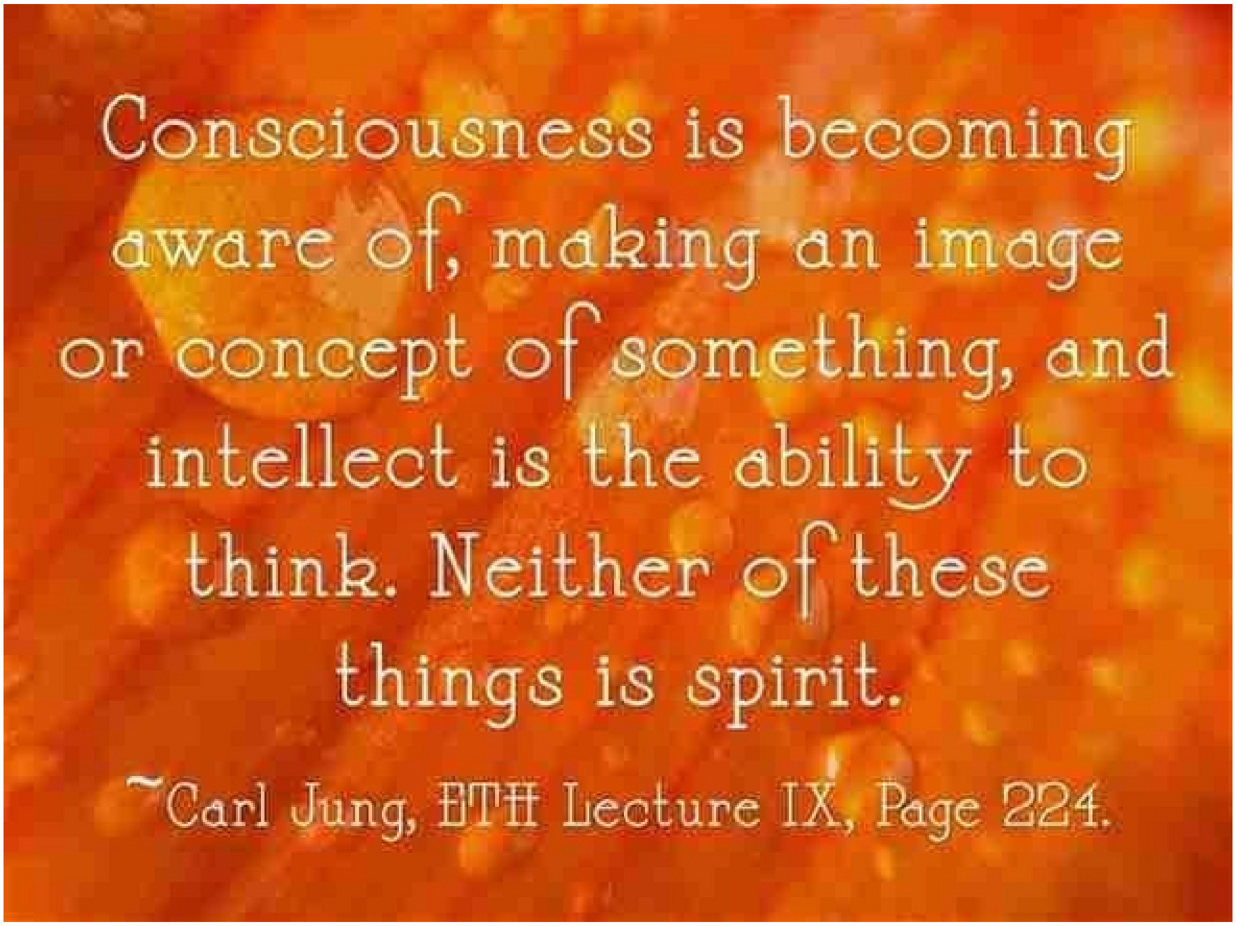
How I experience the body from within is a totally different question. I am inside the body as a psyche. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.



We must say here that the body has nothing to do with matter. Matter is an abstraction, nowadays it has become a philosophical and scientific concept, whereas body is the direct psychic experience of the body.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 225.

We must say here that the body has nothing to do with matter. Matter is an abstraction, nowadays it has become a philosophical and scientific concept, whereas body is the direct psychic experience of the body. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.



Consciousness is becoming aware of, making an image or concept of something, and intellect is the ability to think. Neither of these things is spirit.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 224.

Consciousness is becoming aware of, making an image or concept of something, and intellect is the ability to think. Neither of these things is spirit. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 224.

We meet with the possibility of a very dangerous misunderstanding here, because if we call becoming conscious becoming spirit, we think that consciousness is spirit and thus mix up the intellect and the spirit.

- ~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 221.

We meet with the possibility of a very dangerous misunderstanding here, because if we call becoming conscious becoming spirit, we think that consciousness is spirit and thus mix up the intellect and the spirit. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 221.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d9585-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4314.j`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1f298-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4315.j`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9e6b7-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4316.j`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0a244-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4317.j`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/673b8-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4318.j`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3170c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4319.j`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/db8d0-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4320.j`

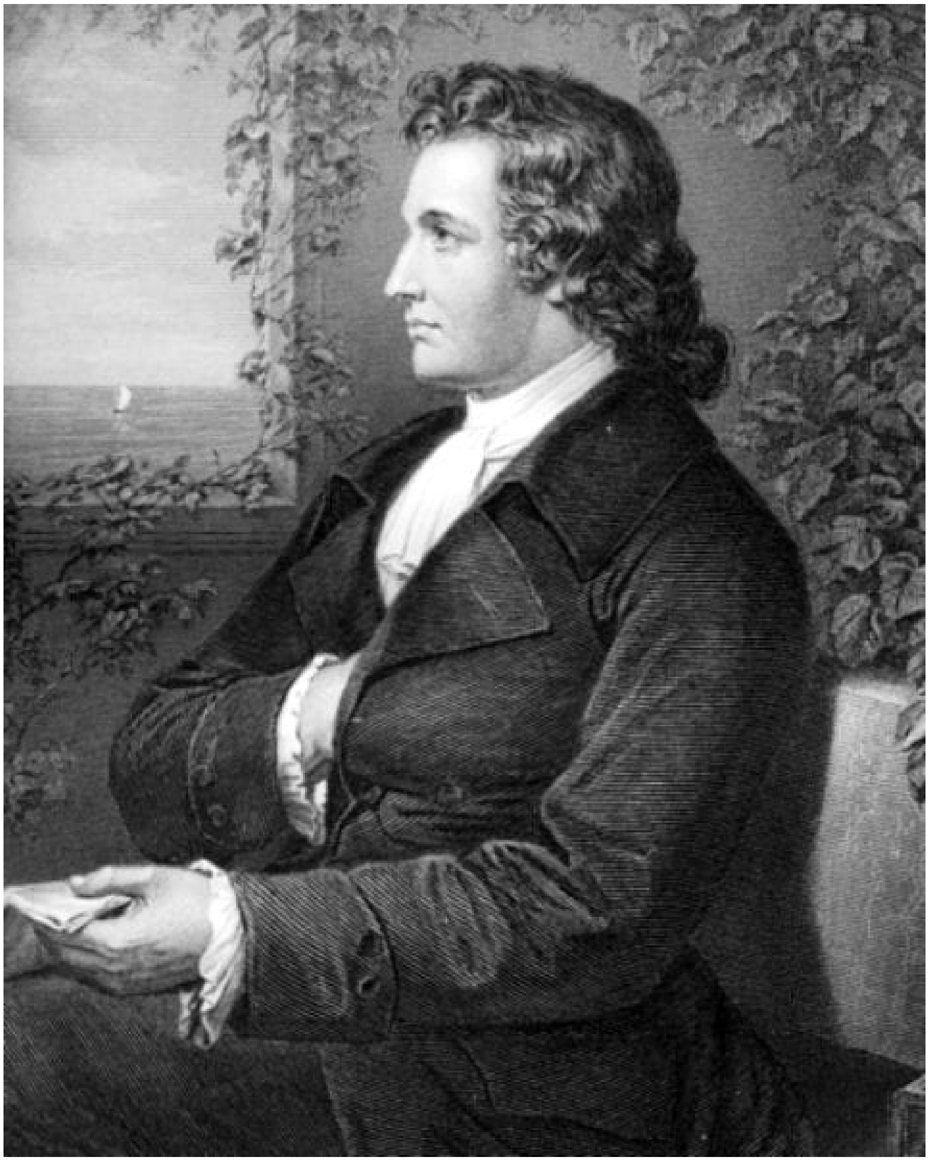
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/eb843-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4321.j
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/542b3-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4322.j
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e6cce-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4323.j
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3b5e9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4324.j
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1ca28-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4325.j
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/60cd7-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4326.j
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8d37f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4327.j
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/63a78-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4328.j
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/38984-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4329.j
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/43e3e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4330.j
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/60623-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4331.j
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a1ca2-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4332.j
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e887d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4333.j
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/73297-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4334.j
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/213a1-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4335.j
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3fa69-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4336.j
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3eb4f-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4337.j
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d511e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4338.j
26. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/41f8e-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4339.j
27. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d3fbc-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4340.j
28. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6e3dd-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4341.j
29. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4126c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4342.j
30. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cf44a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4343.j
31. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3ea70-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4344.j
32. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3c50c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4345.j

33. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/77cd7-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4346.j
34. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6f42a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4347.j
35. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5c040-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4348.j
36. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/75469-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4349.j
37. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/68c3c-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4350.j
38. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d3355-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4351.j
39. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0cc9d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4352.j
40. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/70b65-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4353.j
41. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6820d-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4354.j
42. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/61aa9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4355.j
43. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/37ca9-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4356.j
44. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d8289-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4357.j
45. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/60774-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4358.j
46. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/51538-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4359.j
47. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/84258-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4360.j
48. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/52328-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4361.j
49. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b3f2a-lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image4362.j

---

Carl Jung and Johann Wolfgang von Goethe (2019-03-16 04:40)

[1]



[Carl Jung and Johann Wolfgang von Goethe]

After my escapade with the boat, and my well-merited punishment, I began pondering these isolated impressions, and they coalesced into a coherent picture: of myself living in two ages simultaneously, and being two different persons.

I felt confused, and was full to the brim with heavy reflections.

At last I reached the disappointing realization that now, at any rate, I was nothing but the little schoolboy who had deserved his punishment, and who had to behave according to his age.

The other person must be sheer nonsense.

I suspected that he was somehow connected with the many tales I had heard from my parents and relatives about my grandfather.

Yet that was not quite right either, for he had been born in 1795 and had therefore lived in the nineteenth century; moreover he had died long before I was born.

It could not be that I was identical with him. At the time these considerations were, I should say, mostly in the form of vague glimmerings and dreams.

I can no longer remember whether at that time I knew anything about my legendary kinship with Goethe.

I think not, however, for I know that I first heard this tale from strangers.

I should add that there is an annoying tradition that my grandfather was a natural son of Goethe.

[Footnote: In regard to the legend, twice alluded to in this book, that Jung was a descendant of Goethe, he related:

"The wife of my great-grandfather (Franz Ignaz Jung, d. 1831), Sophie Ziegler, and her sister were associated with the Mannheim Theater and were friends of many writers.

The story goes that Sophie Ziegler had an illegitimate child by Goethe, and that this child was my grandfather, Carl Gustav Jung. This was considered virtually an established fact.

My grandfather says not a word about it in his diaries, however.

He mentions only that he once saw Goethe in Weimar, and then merely from behind! Sophie Ziegler Jung was later friendly with Lotte Kestner, a niece of Goethe's "Lottchen."

This Lotte frequently came to see my grandfather–as, incidentally, did Franz Liszt. In later years Lotte Kestner settled in Basel, no doubt because of these close ties with the Jung family."

No proof of this item of family tradition has been found in the available sources, the archives of the Goethe-haus in Frankfurt am Main and the baptismal register in the Jesuitenkirche in Mannheim.

Goethe was not in Mannheim at the period in question, and there is no record of Sophie Ziegler's staying in Weimar or anywhere in Goethe's vicinity.

Jung used to speak of this stubbornly persistent legend with a certain gratified amusement, for it might serve to explain one subtle aspect of his fascination with Goethe's Faust; it belonged to an inner reality, as it were.

On the other hand he would also call the story "annoying." He thought it "in bad taste" and maintained that the world was already full of "too many fools who tell such tales of the 'unknown father'. "

Above all, he felt that the legitimate line of descent, in particular from the learned Catholic doctor and jurist Carl Jung (d. 1645)–discussed at the end of Chapter VIII–was equally significant.—Aniella Jafe.] Memories Dreams and Reflections

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/1bfdf-goethe.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 34 (2019-03-16 04:43)

[1]

The capacity for inner dialogue is a touchstone for outer objectivity.

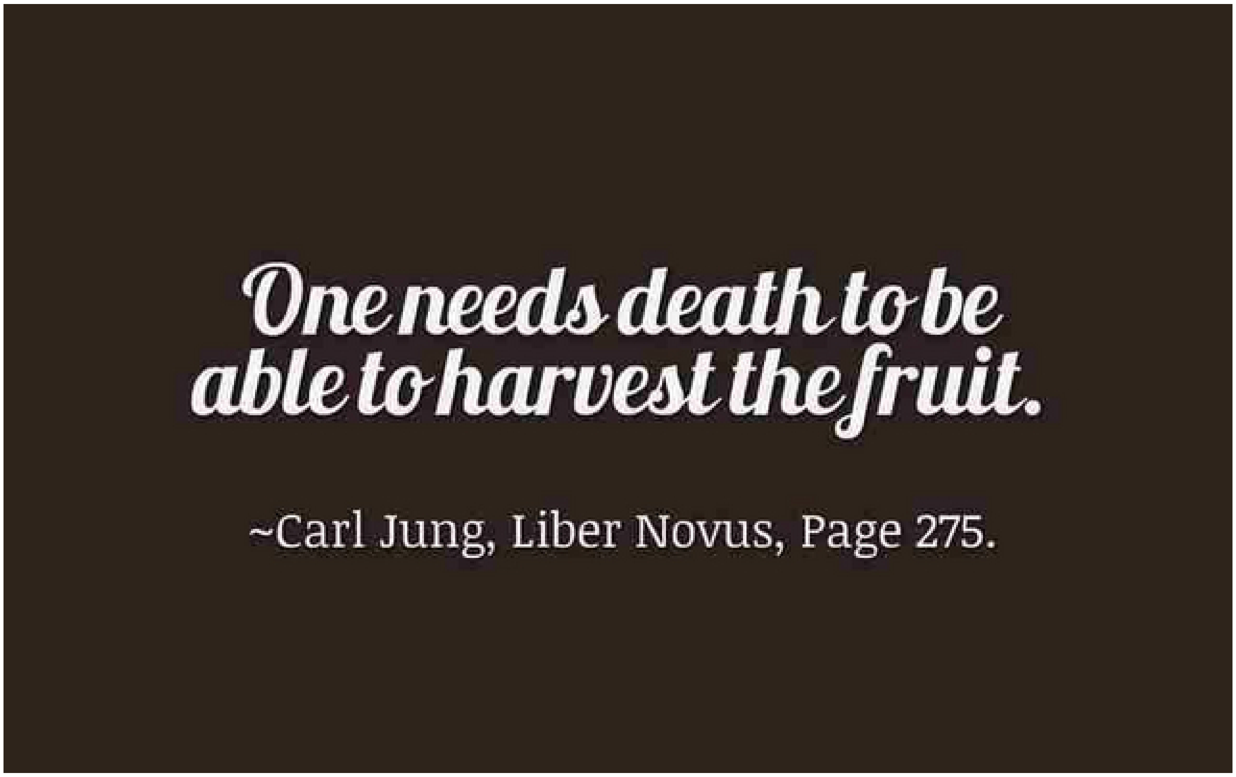
~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 187

The capacity for inner dialogue is a touchstone for outer objectivity. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 187

[2]

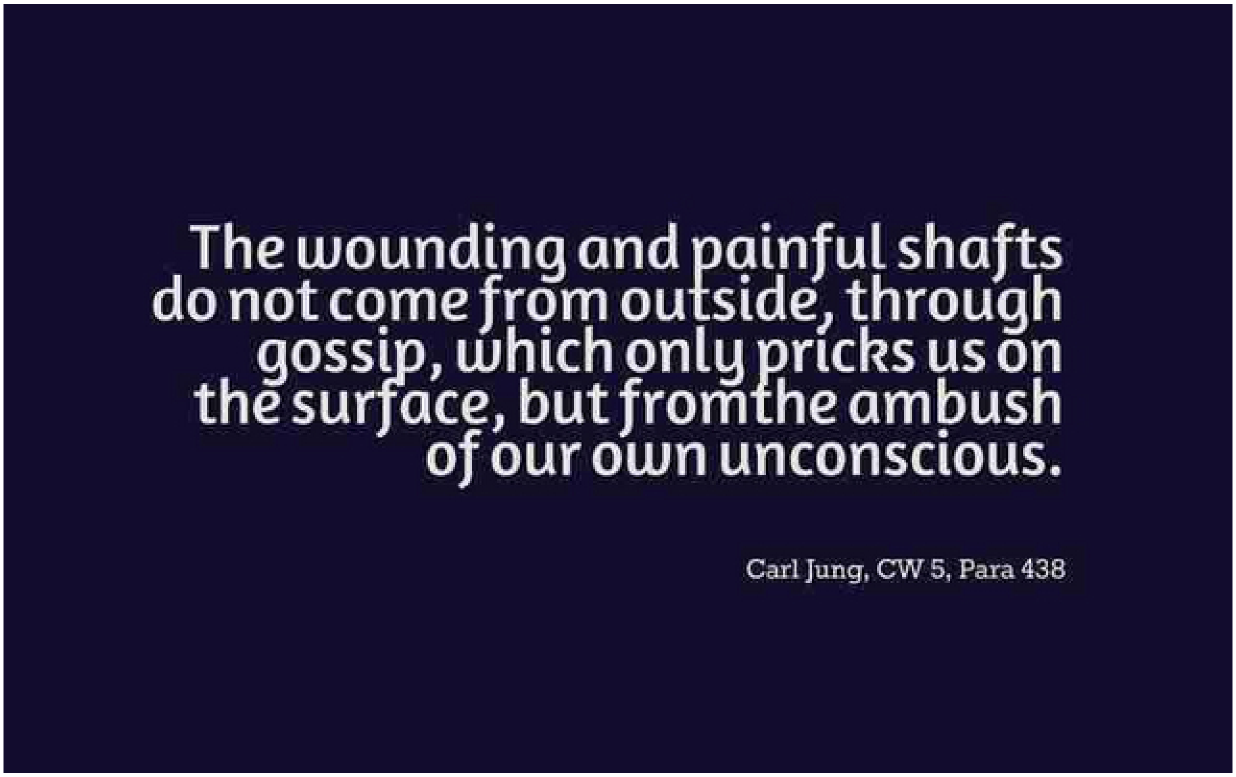


One needs death to be able to harvest the fruit.

~Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 275.

<div One needs death to be able to harvest the fruit. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 275.

[3]

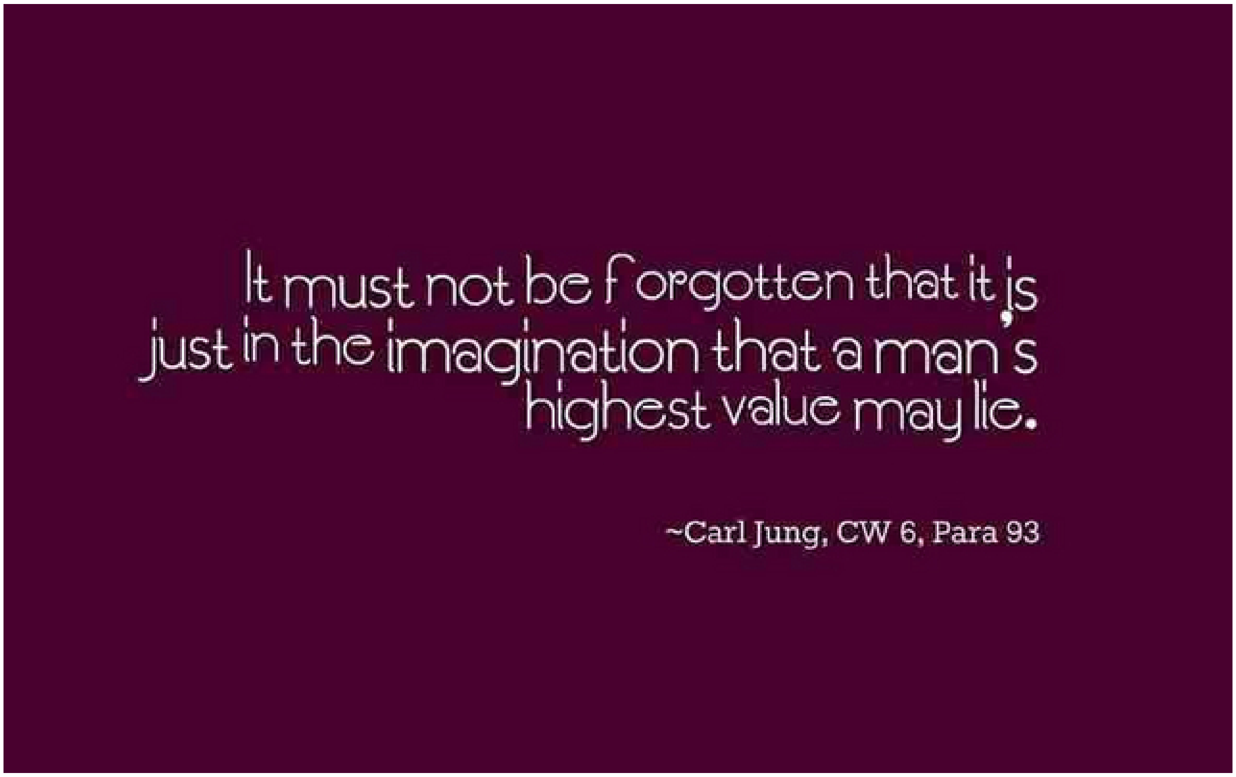


The wounding and painful shafts do not come from outside, through gossip, which only pricks us on the surface, but fromthe ambush of our own unconscious.

Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 438

The wounding and painful shafts do not come from outside, through gossip, which only pricks us on the surface, but from the ambush of our own unconscious. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 438

[4]

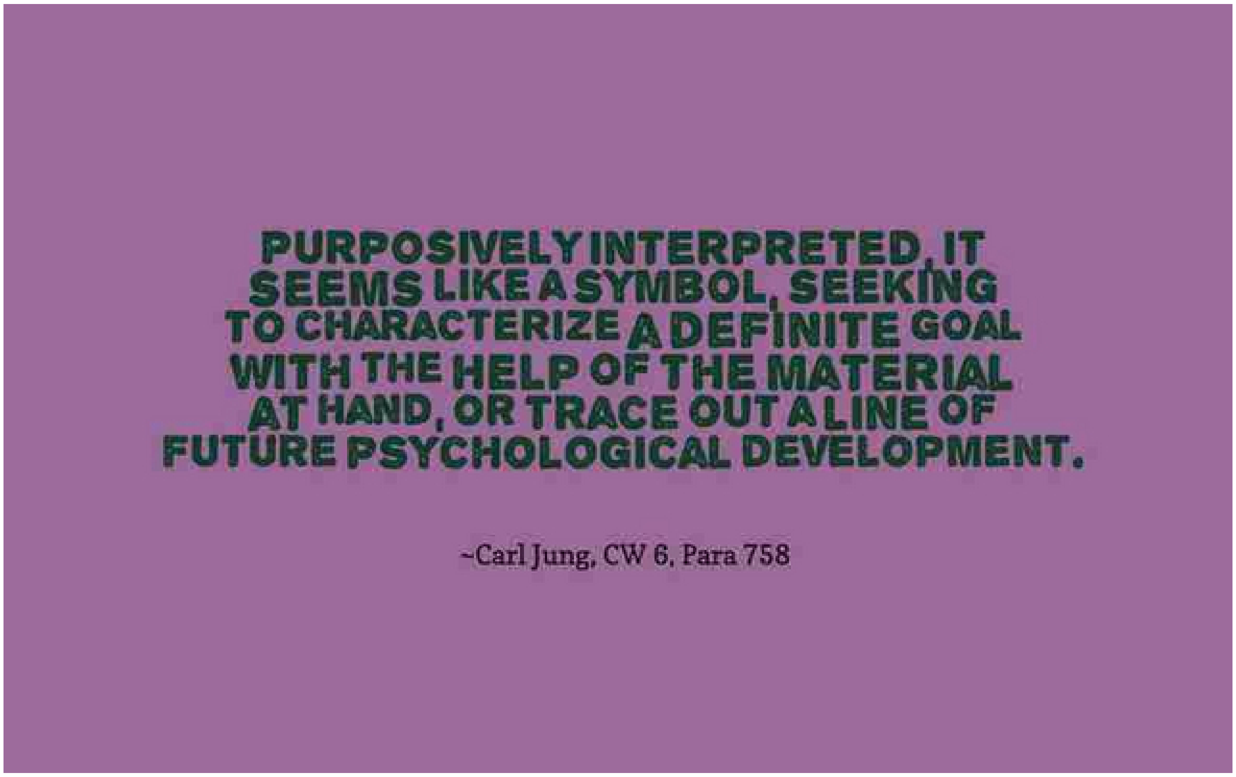


It must not be forgotten that it is just in the imagination that a man's highest value may lie.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 93

It must not be forgotten that it is just in the imagination that a man’s highest value may lie. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 93

[5]

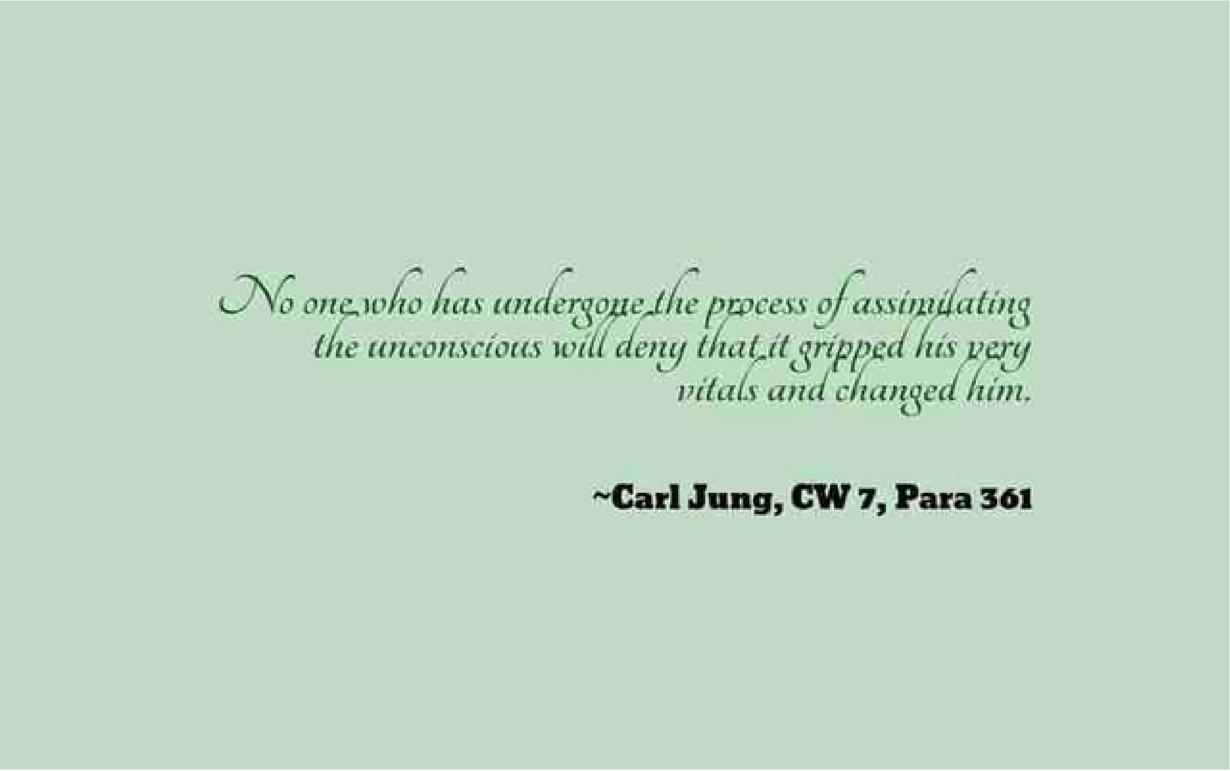


PURPOSIVELY INTERPRETED, IT SEEMS LIKE A SYMBOL, SEEKING TO CHARACTERIZE A DEFINITE GOAL WITH THE HELP OF THE MATERIAL AT HAND, OR TRACE OUT A LINE OF FUTURE PSYCHOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENT.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 758

Purposively interpreted, it seems like a symbol, seeking to characterize a definite goal with the help of the material at hand, or trace out a line of future psychological development. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 758

[6]

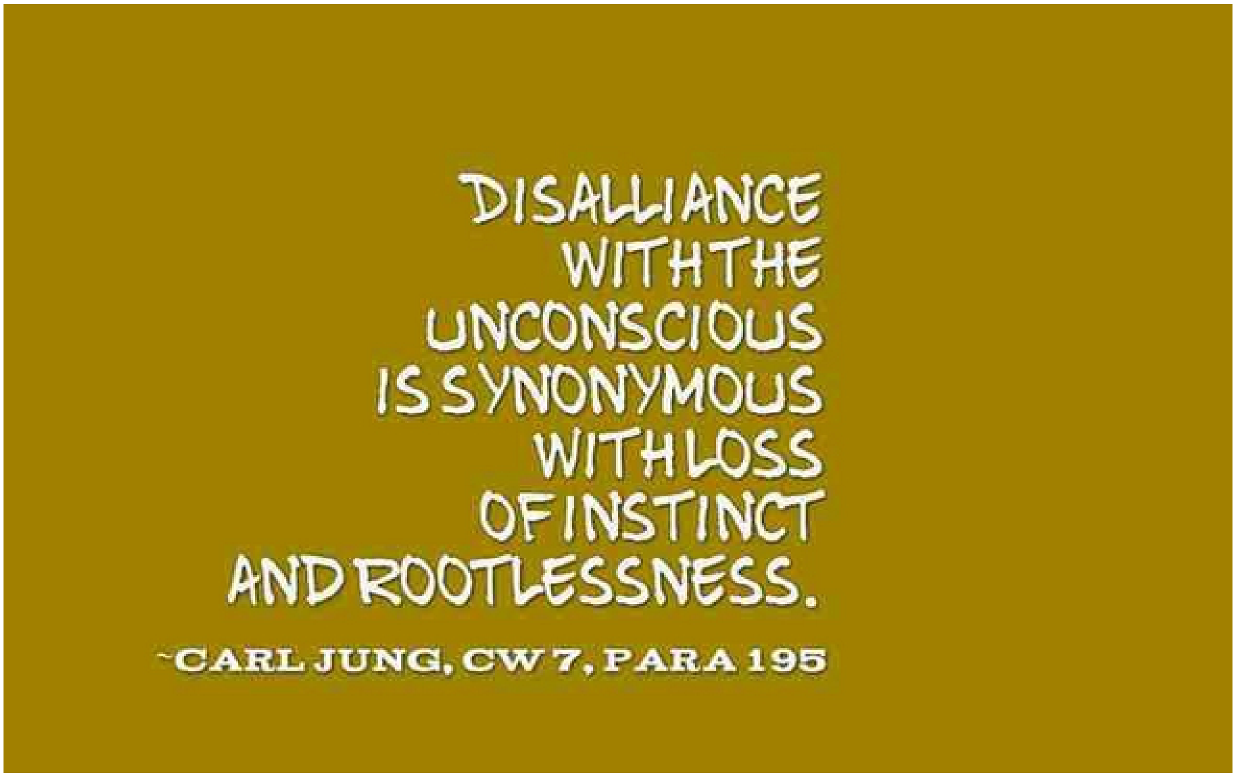


No one who has undergone the process of assimilating the unconscious will deny that it gripped his very vitals and changed him.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 361

No one who has undergone the process of assimilating the unconscious will deny that it gripped his very vitals and changed him. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 361

[7]



DISALLIANCE
WITH THE UNCONSCIOUS IS SYNONYMOUS WITH LOSS OF INSTINCT
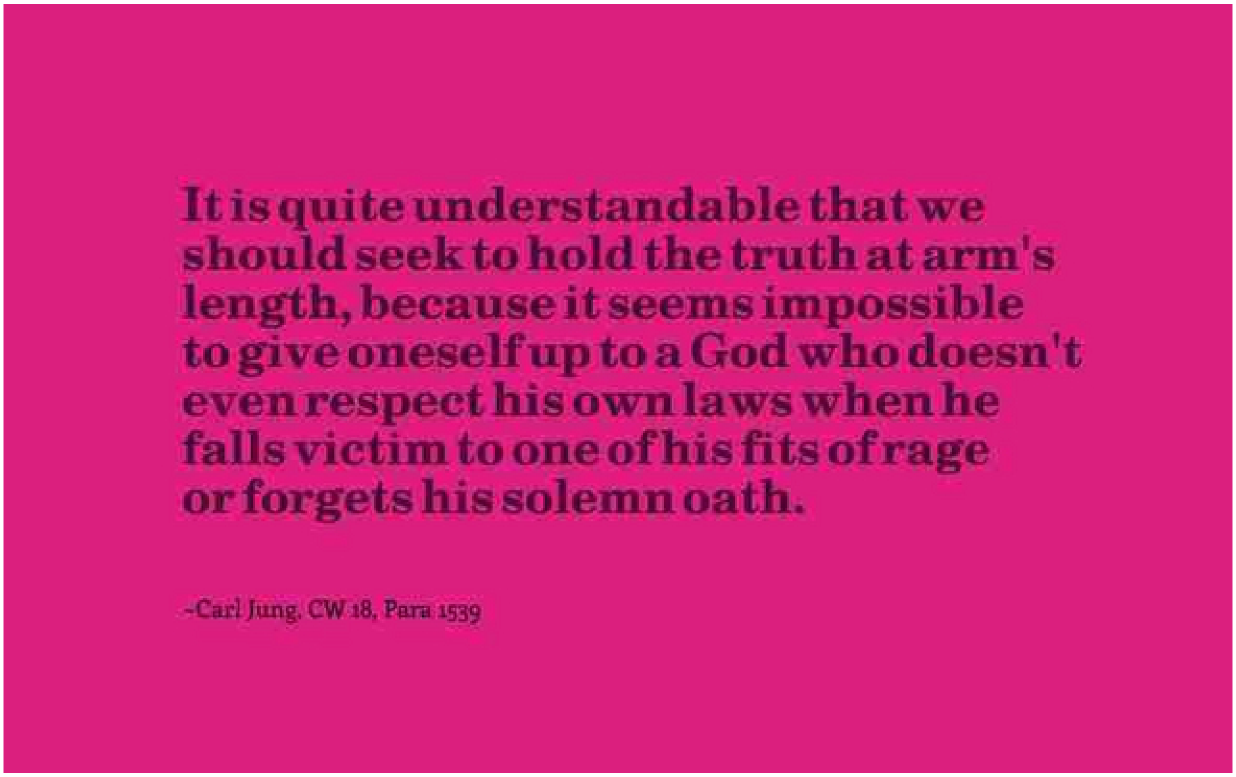
AND ROOTLESSNESS.

~CARL JUNG, CW 7, PARA 195

[8]

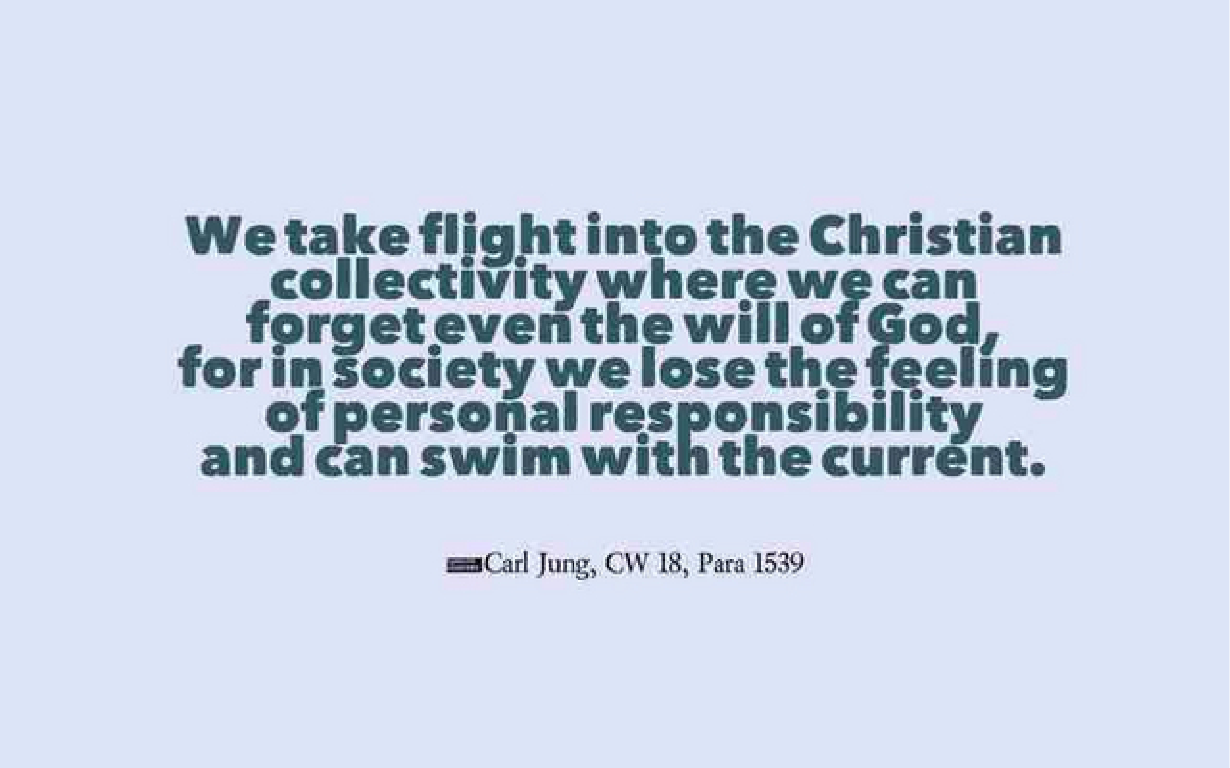


It is quite understandable that we should seek to hold the truth at arm's length, because it seems impossible to give oneself up to a God who doesn't even respect his own laws when he falls victim to one of his fits of rage or forgets his solemn oath.

-Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1539

It is quite understandable that we should seek to hold the truth at arm's length, because it seems impossible to give oneself up to a God who doesn't even respect his own laws when he falls victim to one of his fits of rage or forgets his solemn oath. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1539

[9]

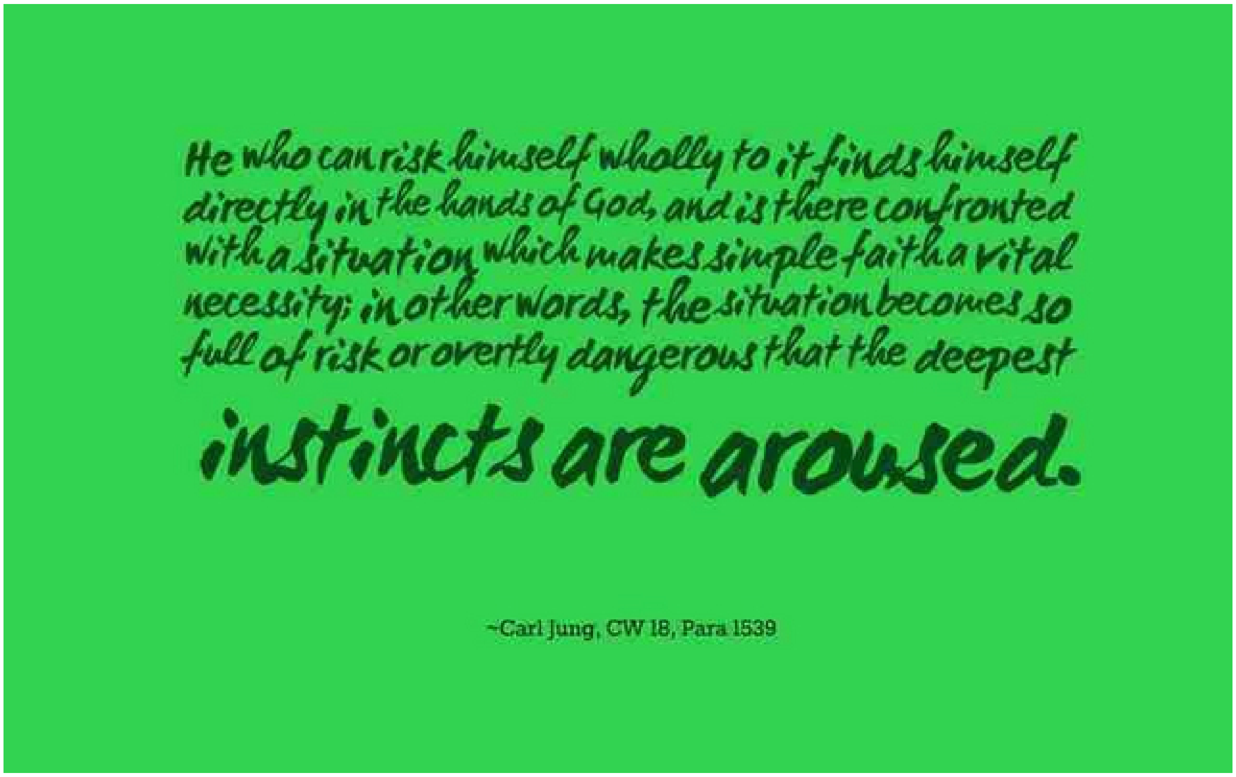


We take flight into the Christian collectivity where we can forget even the will of God, for in society we lose the feeling of personal responsibility and can swim with the current.

Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1539

We take flight into the Christian collectivity where we can forget even the will of God, for in society we lose the feeling of personal responsibility and can swim with the current. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1539

[10]

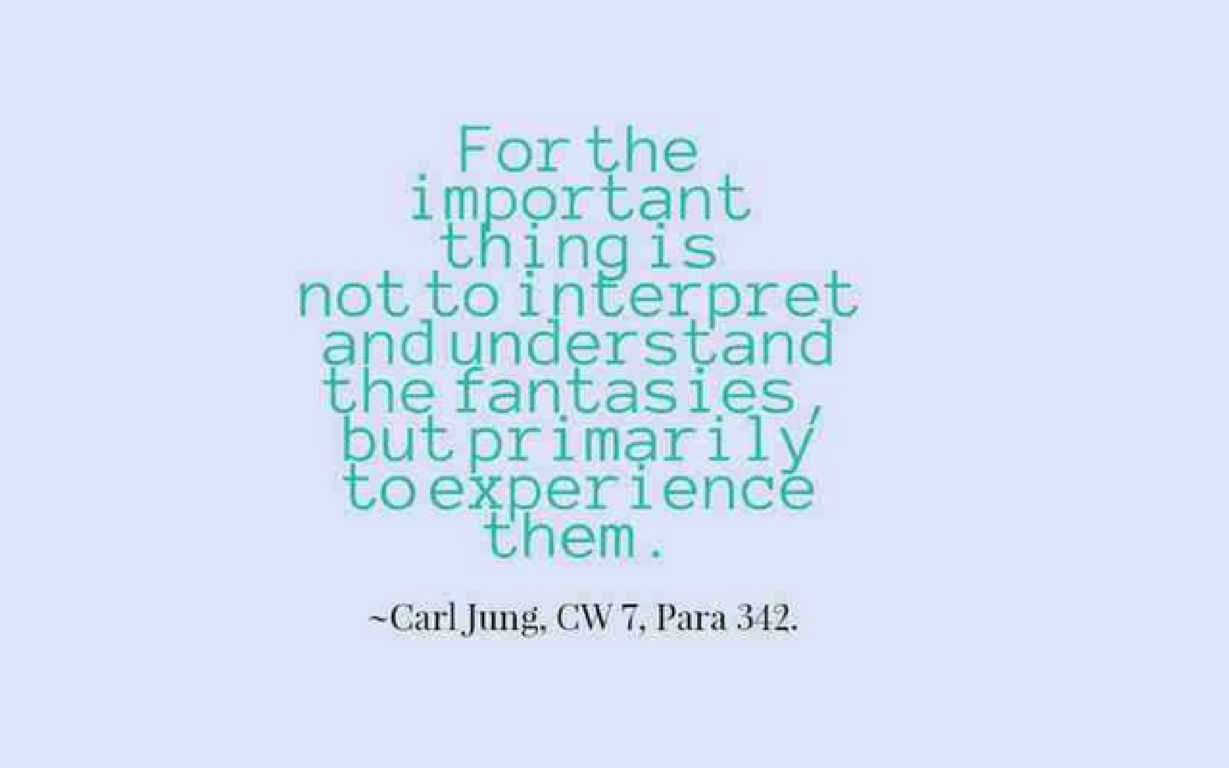


He who can risk himself wholly to it finds himself directly in the hands of God, and is there confronted with a situation which makes simple faith a vital necessity; in other words, the situation becomes so full of risk or overtly dangerous that the deepest instincts are aroused.

~Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1539

He who can risk himself wholly to it finds himself directly in the hands of God, and is there confronted with a situation which makes "simple faith" a vital necessity; in other words, the situation becomes so full of risk or overtly dangerous that the deepest instincts are aroused. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1539

[11]

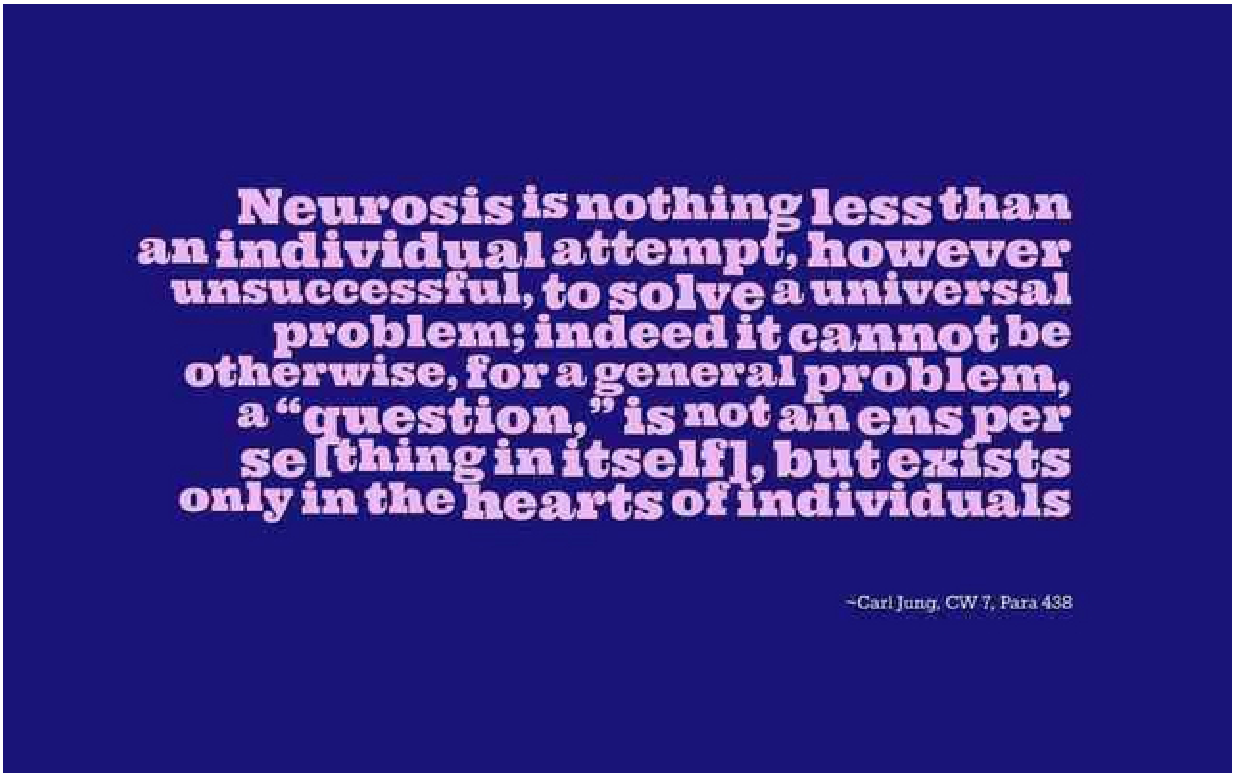


For the important thing is not to interpret and understand the fantasies, but primarily to experience them.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 342.

For the important thing is not to interpret and understand the fantasies, but primarily to experience them. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 342.

[12]

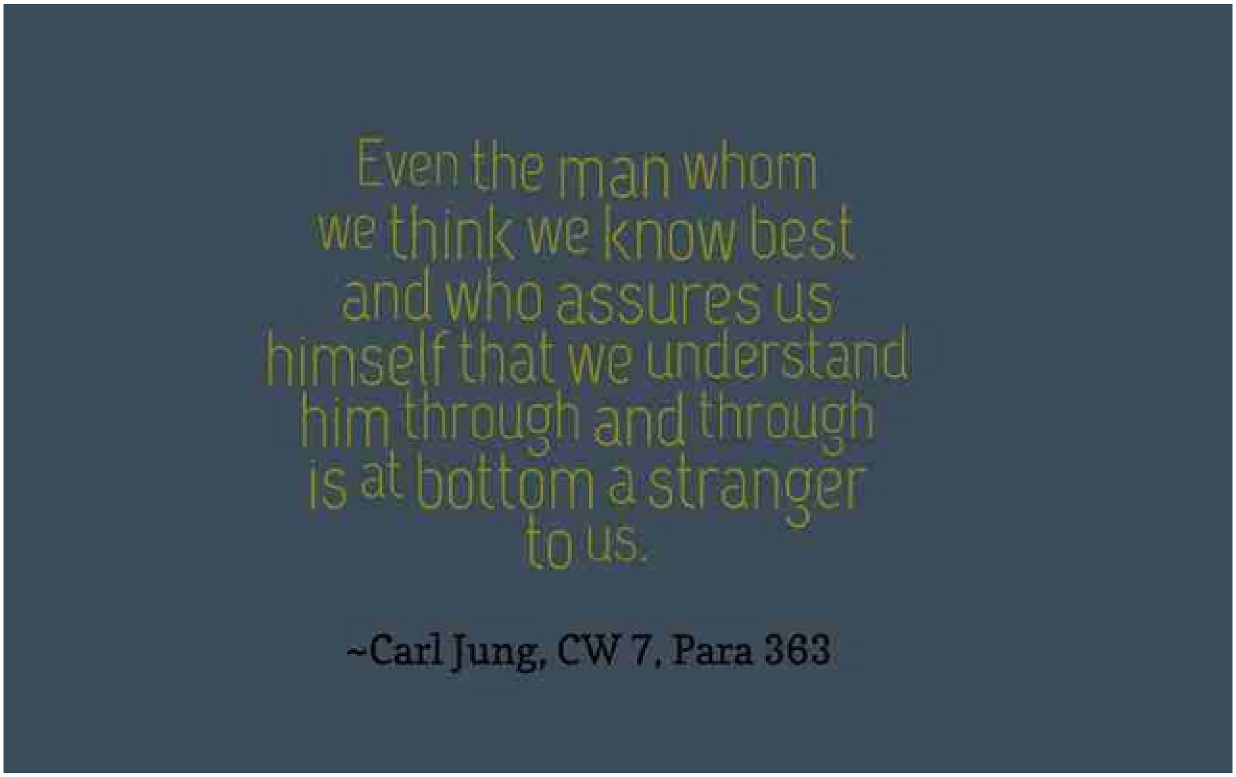


Neurosis is nothing less than an individual attempt, however unsuccessful, to solve a universal problem; indeed it cannot be otherwise, for a general problem, a "question," is not an ens per se [thing in itself], but exists only in the hearts of individuals

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 438

Neurosis is nothing less than an individual attempt, however unsuccessful, to solve a universal problem; indeed it cannot be otherwise, for ageneral problem, a “question,” is not an ens per se [thing in itself], but exists only in the hearts of individuals. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 438

[13]



Even the man whom we think we know best and who assures us himself that we understand him through and through is at bottom a stranger to us.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 363

Even the man whom we think we know best and who assures us himself that we understand him through and through is at bottom a stranger to us. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 363.

[14]

Life is born only of the spark of opposites

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 78

Life is born only of the spark of opposites. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 78

[15]

It should never be forgotten—and of this the Freudian school must be reminded—that morality was not brought down on tables of stone from Sinai and imposed on the people, but is a function of the human soul, as old as humanity itself.

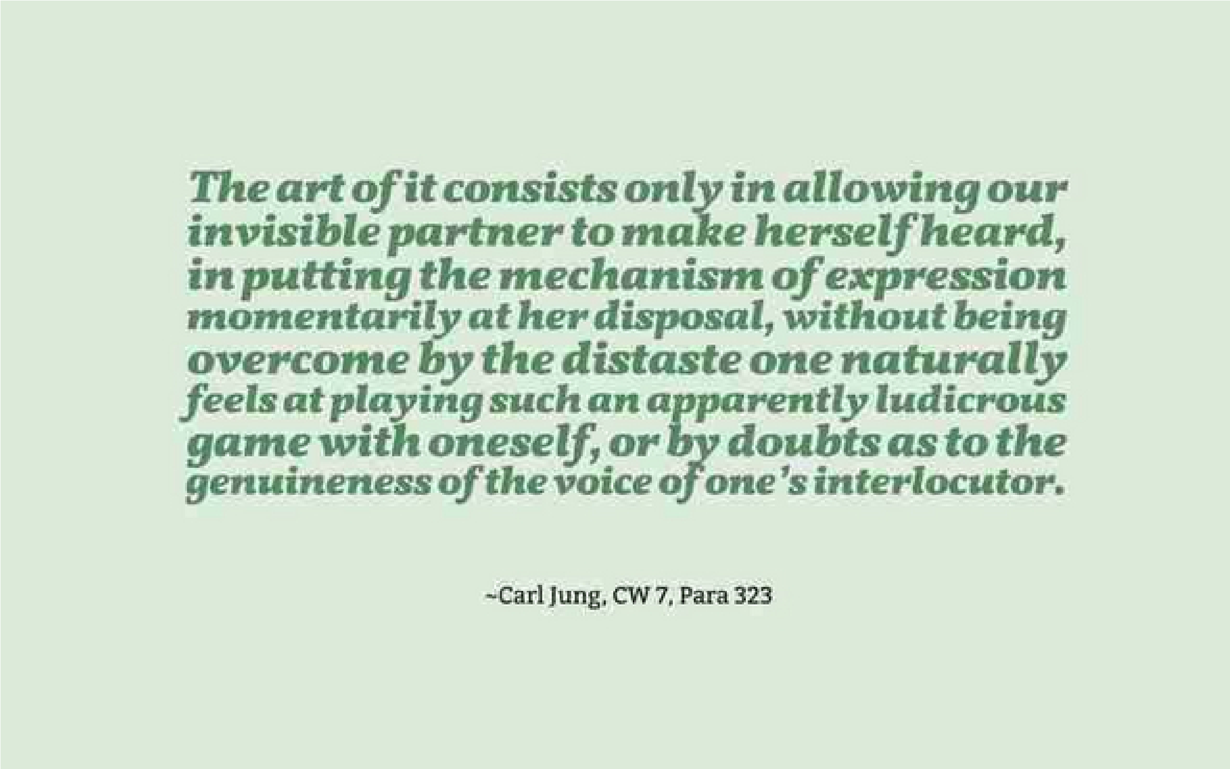
~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 30

It should never be forgotten—and of this the Freudian school must be reminded—that morality was not brought down on tables of stone from Sinai and imposed on the people, but is a function of the human soul, as old as humanity itself. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 30.

[16]

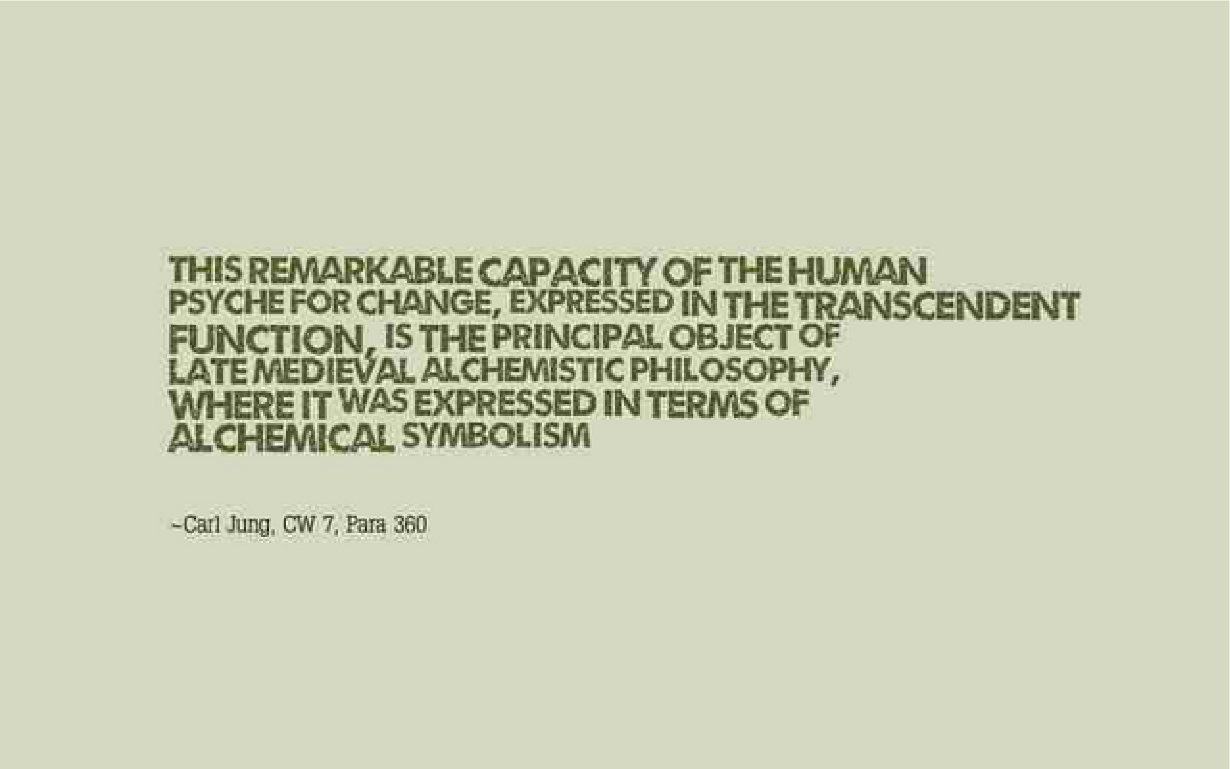


The art of it consists only in allowing our invisible partner to make herself heard, in putting the mechanism of expression momentarily at her disposal, without being overcome by the distaste one naturally feels at playing such an apparently ludicrous game with oneself, or by doubts as to the genuineness of the voice of one's interlocutor.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 323

The art of it consists only in allowing our invisible partner to make herself heard, in putting the mechanism of expression momentarily at her disposal, without being overcome by the distaste one naturally feels at playing such an apparently ludicrous game with oneself, or by doubts as to the genuineness of the voice of one's interlocutor. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 323.

[17]

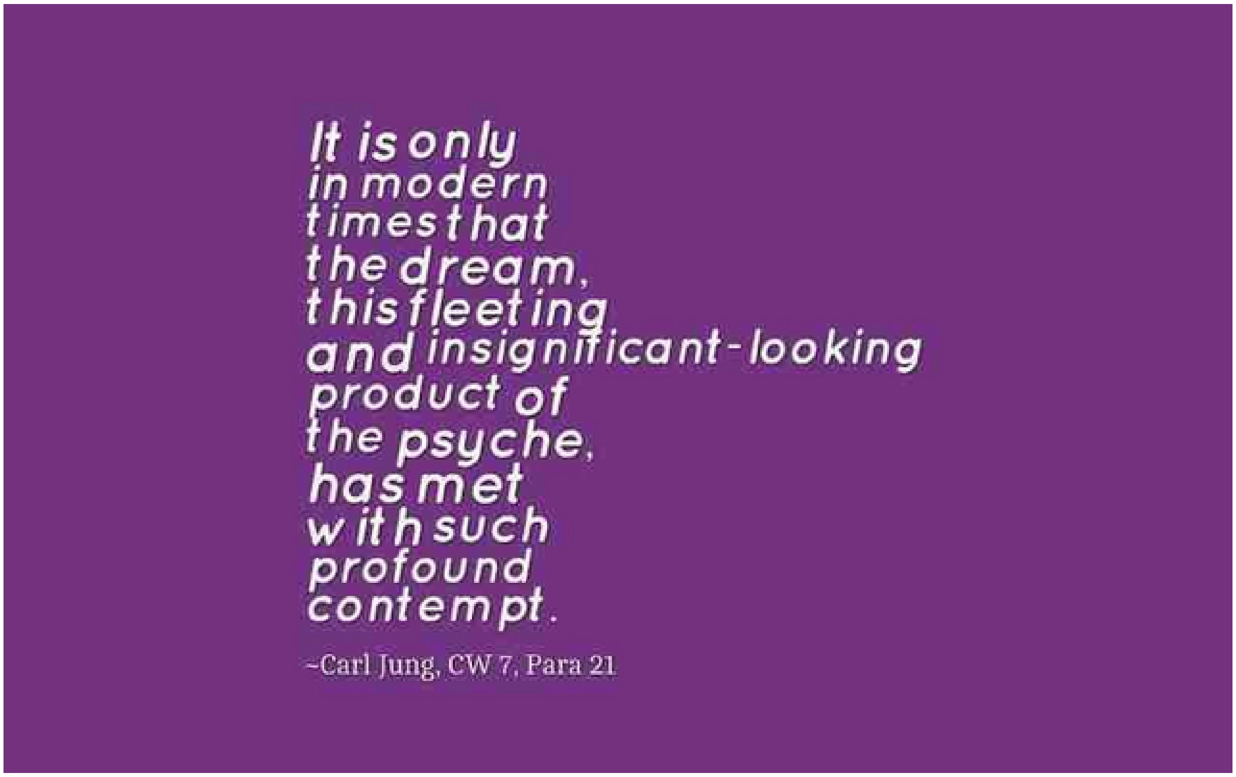


THIS REMARKABLE CAPACITY OF THE HUMAN PSYCHE FOR CHANGE, EXPRESSED IN THE TRANSCENDENT FUNCTION, IS THE PRINCIPAL OBJECT OF LATE MEDIEVAL ALCHEMISTIC PHILOSOPHY, WHERE IT WAS EXPRESSED IN TERMS OF ALCHEMICAL SYMBOLISM

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 360

This remarkable capacity of the human psyche for change, expressed in the transcendent function, is the principal object of late medieval alchemistic philosophy, where it was expressed in terms of alchemical symbolism. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 360

[18]



It is only in modern times that the dream, this fleeting and insignificant-looking product of the psyche, has met with such profound contempt.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 21

It is only in modern times that the dream, this fleeting and insignificant-looking product of the psyche, has met with such profound contempt. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 21

[19]

A woman possessed by the animus is always in danger of losing her femininity, her adapted feminine persona, just as a man in like circumstances runs the risk of effeminacy.

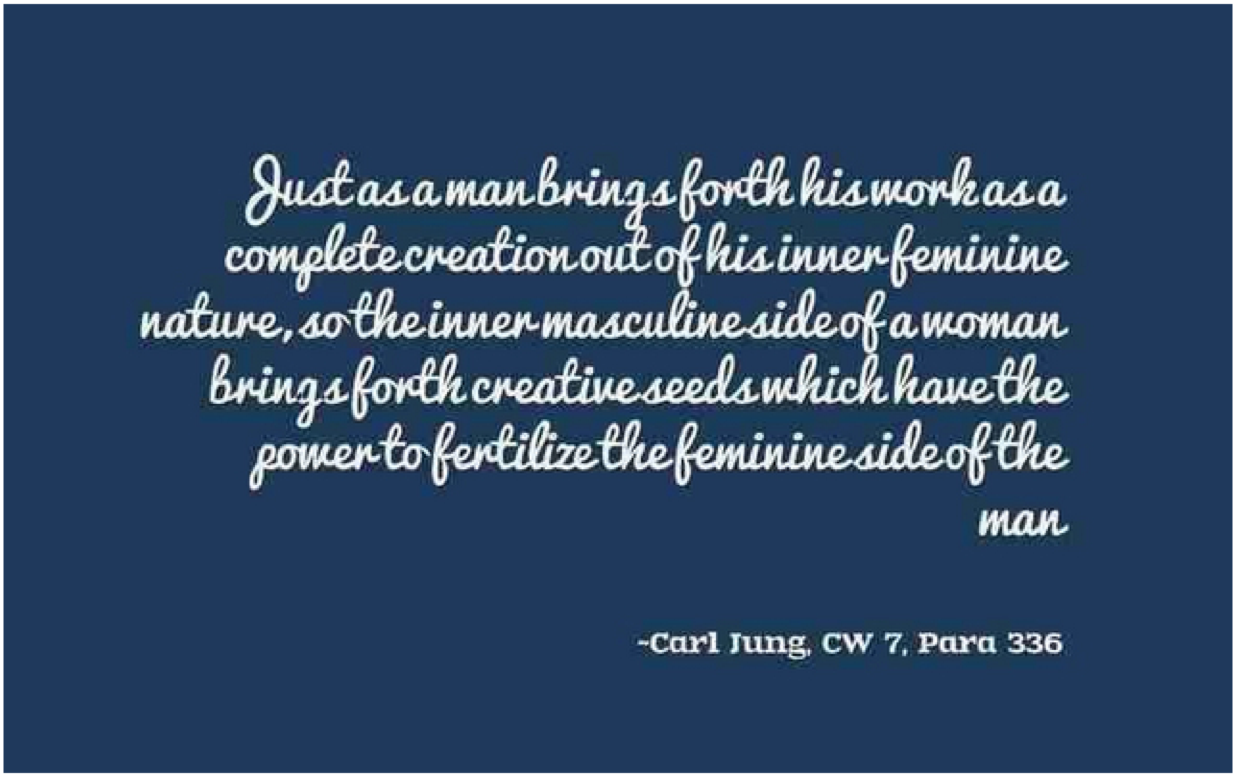
~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 336

A woman possessed by the animus is always in danger of losing her femininity, her adapted feminine persona, just as a man in like circumstances runs the risk of effeminacy. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 336

[20]

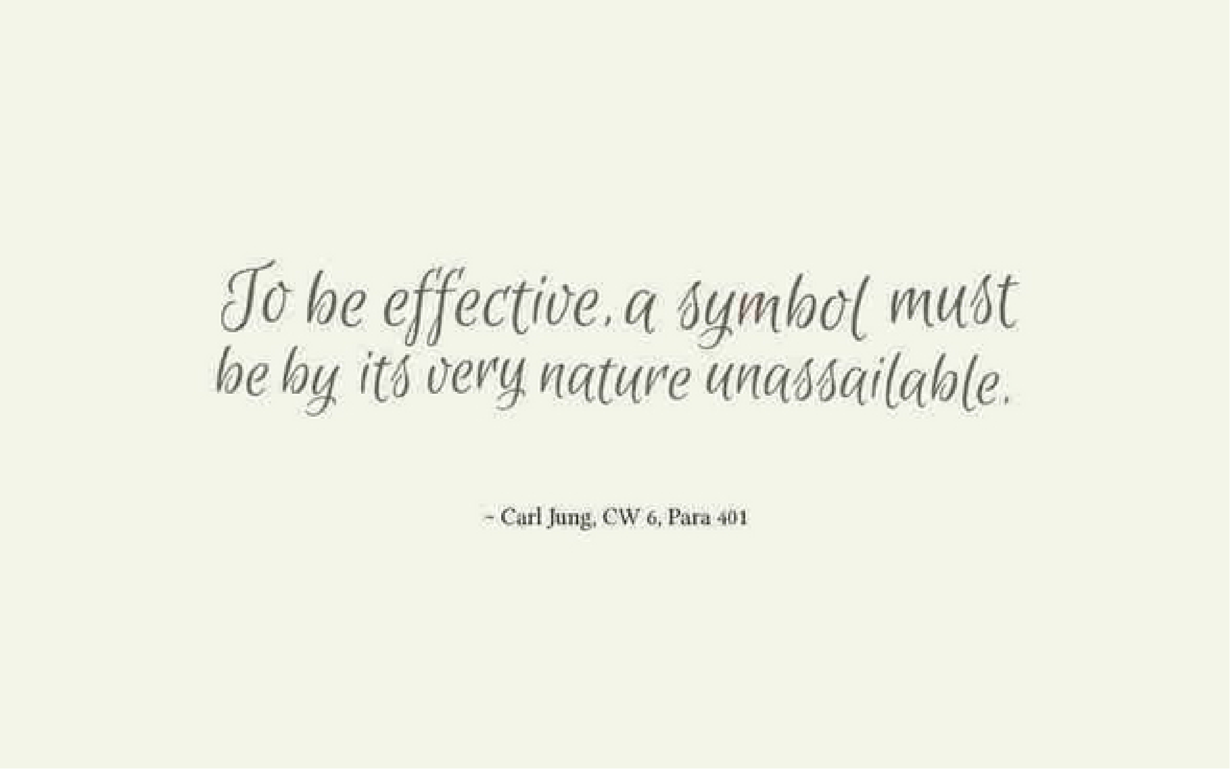


Just as a man brings forth his work as a complete creation out of his inner feminine nature, so the inner masculine side of a woman brings forth creative seeds which have the power to fertilize the feminine side of the man

-Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 336

Just as a man brings forth his work as a complete creation out of his inner feminine nature, so the inner masculine side of a woman brings forth creative seeds which have the power to fertilize the feminine side of the man. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 336.

[21]



To be effective, a symbol must be by its very nature unassailable.

- Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 401

To be effective, a symbol must be by its very nature unassailable. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 401

[22]

TO BE THAT WHICH YOU ARE IS THE BATH OF REBIRTH.

Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 266

To be that which you are is the bath of rebirth. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 266

[23]

My street leads to the valleys where men live. I am a wandering beggar. And I remain silent.

–Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 316.

My street leads to the valleys where men live. I am a wandering beggar. And I remain silent. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 316.

[24]

IT [DREAMS] LEADS STRAIGHT TO THE DEEPEST PERSONAL SECRETS, AND IS, THEREFORE,
AN INVALUABLE INSTRUMENT
IN THE HAND OF THE PHYSICIAN AND EDUCATOR OF THE SOUL.

Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 25

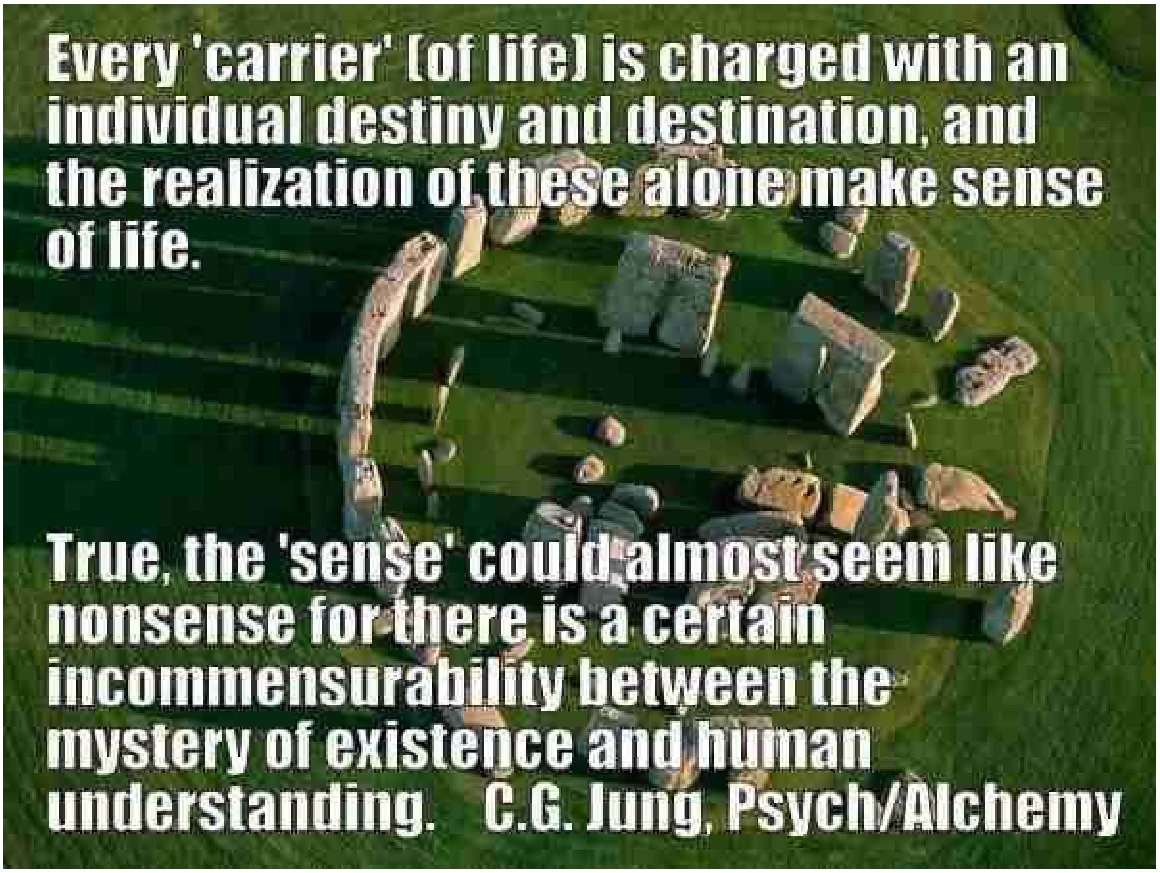
It [Dreams] leads straight to the deepest personal secrets, and is, therefore, an invaluable instrument in the hand of the physician and educator of the soul. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 25

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bfe02-aaa.jpg
2. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/30437-bbb.jpg
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0694d-ccc.jpg
4. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a1c9a-ddd.jpg
5. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/77267-eee.jpg
6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/84f2b-fff.jpg
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/59e36-ggg.jpg
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/adda9-hhh.jpg
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bdb77-iii.jpg
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/36f56-jjj.jpg
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/89c7e-kkk.jpg
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ff40e-lll.jpg
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0dbaa-mmm.jpg
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bae71-nnn.jpg
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aad5d-ooo.jpg
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0c117-ppp.jpg
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/febbb-qqq.jpg
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5a923-rrr.jpg
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/11359-sss.jpg
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/78749-ttt.jpg
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4d33c-uuu.jpg
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/86700-vvvv.jpg
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8d69f-www.jpg
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1be44-xxx.jpg

---

Carl Jung: "Sense" and "nonsense" are merely man-made labels (2019-03-16 04:43)

[1]



Every 'carrier' [of life] is charged with an individual destiny and destination, and the realization of these alone make sense of life.
True, the 'sense' could almost seem like nonsense for there is a certain incommensurability between the mystery of existence and human understanding. C.G. Jung, Psych/Alchemy

If the motif of the mandala is an archetype it ought to be a collective phenomenon, i.e., theoretically it should appear in everyone.

In practice, however, it is to be met with in distinct form in relatively few cases, though this does not prevent it from functioning as a concealed pole round which everything ultimately revolves.

In the last analysis every life is the realization of a whole, that is, of a self, for which reason this realization can also be called "individuation."

All life is bound to individual carriers who realize it, and it is simply inconceivable without them.

But every carrier is charged with an individual destiny and destination, and the realization of these alone makes sense of life.

True, the "sense" is often something that could just as well be called "nonsense," for there is a certain incommensurability between the mystery of existence and human understanding.

"Sense" and "nonsense" are merely man-made labels which serve to give us a reasonably valid sense of direction. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 222

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d4cbe-12bcarrier.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Yoga Sutra of Pantajali and Samkhya (2019-03-16 04:44)

[1]

Lecture V 26th May, 1939

I am engaged in reading you some passages from the Yoga Sutra of Pantajali, in which we find the line of thought which we have been considering in our symbol sequences.

We see this, however, in quite a different aspect, from the point of view of Samkhya Philosophy.

The passages which I am reading come towards the end of the text, they are mainly concerned with the idea of the Self in relation to consciousness.

The final condition, where consciousness is freed from its fetters, is particularly emphasised.

The last passage which I read you deals with a technique for freeing the Self from the psychic system, particularly from consciousness.

It is an exceedingly difficult passage so I will repeat it.

III. "Not discriminating between the concepts of Sattvam (representative of Prakriti) and the Purusha, which are entirely different from each other, is enjoyment (and suffering). Knowledge of the Purusha arises from practising general discipline on all interests, one’s own interests [belonging to the Purusha) being different from strange interests [belonging to Prakriti)."

When the concepts sattvam and Purusha remain undiscriminated, the psychological condition is described by Deussen as enjoyment of, and by Hauer as eating, the world.

We must, therefore, try to understand these two concepts.

I spoke to you last time of the three Gunas, sattvam, rajas and tamas.

Garbhe translates Gunas as constituents and Deussen as factors, but it is really preferable to leave the word untranslated.

Sattvam is light and rises and tamas is dark and descends.

Rajas, in between these two opposites, is discontent, passion, and is dynamic and stimulating.

All energy arises from opposites, where there is hot and cold, high and low, etc., there is energy.

One needs considerable psychological knowledge to be able to understand what the Gunas are.

We also find them in the Bhagavad gita, deliverance from them is part of the teaching of Krishna.

Our text emphasises the importance of discriminating between the light sattvam and the Self.

Hauer translates sattvam as "lichte Weltstoff " [luminous substance of the world).

This is a more substantial conception, similar to ether, an ethereal body, but this is also figurative.

The idea in our text is that it is masculine, so it is difficult to discriminate between it and the Purusha.

The latter term is a very old definition which Deussen designates as "das von allem Objektiven freie Subject des Erkennens" (the subject of knowledge freed from everything objective).

I doubt this definition, it is too logical, and the East is not logical, it is observant and intuitive.

So it is better to describe the Purusha as primeval man or as the luminous man.

We find many similar concepts in the West, the mystical Christ is a Purusha and the old Christian speculation of the second Adam is also a Purusha.

Adam in every man is the first original form, and he appears in his second form as the luminous man, the Redeemer.

Patanjali is trying to formulate the fact that we do not discriminate between sattvam and the Purusha, and that it is necessary for us to learn to make this distinction.

So the important question for us is: What is sattvam? How can we understand it psychologically?

We must first understand what it represents in Indian philosophy and in order to do this we must consider a further concept, Prakriti, nature or materia.

Prakriti is the feminine principle which we also find described as Shakti. In Tantric and Tibetan mythology Shakti is found in an intimate embrace with Shiva, the world creator.

Shiva is very similar to the Purusha.

The Purusha is said to be always with Prakrti, like a drop of water on the leaf of a lotus.

He remains round and is separate from the Prakriti, though intimately mixed with her.

He is always in connection with Prakriti and uses the sattvam as a lamp in the darkness, for when he enters Prakriti he is in darkness, captured in devilish matter.

We find just the same idea in Gnosticism where Nous, the luminous, is darkened in matter.

There is a beautiful Gnostic legend:

Nous came down to the earth and as he was gazing at his own reflection, he came within the reach of the loving arms of physical matter and was drawn down into the darkness.

It is quite possible that Gnosticism was influenced by the East, for trade routes already existed through the Red Sea, and spiritual ideas may have traveled with the material goods which were traded.

The Pythagorean philosopher, Apollonius of Tyana, the renowned miracle worker, is said to have made a great journey to India in order to investigate its secrets.

Such stories of connections between the near and far East are probably historical.

When the Purusha, the unknown Self in man, is in the darkness of Prakriti, the world, he uses sattvam as a lamp with which to find his bearings.

Sattvam, the light substance, is primarily human consciousness.

In the latter part of the Yoga Sutra, we find virtually the same thing called "cittam", which is just about what we should describe as consciousness.

Consciousness is not just passive awareness, but an active condition that requires energy and which must be interrupted from time to time by sleep.

People often prefer to remain unconscious in order to save energy.

Primitives are past masters in this art!

When the Purusha (the luminous man) finds himself in Prakriti he is not single but manifold.

He is split up into many figures, one text calls him the twenty-five.

This is a very curious idea and means that bound in matter he is twenty-five figures but when freed he returns to his original unity.

This unity was latent during the manifold condition.

We see it as a multitude or a unity, according to the way we look at it, both exist in every individual.

We find the same idea in Taoism.

There is a picture reproduced in the "Secret of the Golden Flower" of a Yogin in meditation, the smoke which emanates from him splits into five figures, and each of these figures has five more figures coming out of its head.

This is the knowledge that the unity of the Purusha is divided into many figures.

We could really say that the idea of the unity of the Purusha is an intuition about the essence of man which is reached through eastern meditation : namely the recognition of the fact that the Self of man Is one, in spite of the diversity of its aspects.

I will remind you of the description in the Upanishads which I have quoted before:

"The person (purusha) not larger than a thumb, dwelling within, always dwelling in the heart of man . . . having compassed the earth on every side, extends beyond it by ten fingers breadth."

The Purusha is the thumbling in man’s heart and at the same time the universal being, like the concept of the Atman.

According to Samkhya Philosophy the Purusha is always found bound to matter in the condition of samyoga, joined together, fettered, bound.

Prakriti is entirely passive and is helpless and useless without her connection with luminous man.

This connection gives rise to the Samsara, the cycle of existence, and, through the fullness of the manifestation in Prakriti, the Purusha attains Self-knowledge.

So Prakriti is often represented as a dancer, dancing the fullness of the world image so that the Purusha can be come conscious of himself.

The Prakriti does not interpenetrate with the Purusha but they are always most intimately together.

This being mixed and not mixed is an enormous paradox, too difficult to understand.

So there are always bridges as a concession to the limitations of the mind, such as the image of the drop of water on the lotus leaf.

Humanity is always trying to find mediating concepts between the Purusha and the Prakriti.

Sattvam comes entirely from Prakriti and is the lightest thing which she produces, so it forms one of these bridges.

Another is the idea of the subtle body, which is also called the Lingam.

This phallic symbol is often represented in Shiva temples.

The Lingam is an appendage, a characteristic, a sign.

The Lingadeha is the classical designation for the subtle body.

Prakriti is purely material and the bridge to the Purusha must be half spirit and half body.

We have the same idea in the West in spirit, soul and body, that is the Purusha, the subtle body and Prakriti.

We find the Purusha, as one of the central ideas in Vedic Philosophy, often identical with the idea of Brahman.

The Purusha is mentioned in an Upanishad as the golden man who is seen in the sun and rules over the gods.

The gods, as manifestations of the Absolute, belong to Prakriti.

And the man, who is seen in the pupil of the eye, also rules over all the gods.

The Purusha is first described as in the sun and second as in the eye.

You can see yourself reflected in the pupil of your neighbours eye as a Piippchen (little doll) and this was naively described as the soul.

We find a further passage in the Upanishads:

"On the one side the wheel of the world in Heaven, containing the days and nights as 720 sons; on the other, in the lower sphere, as a far reflecting sacrificial fire."

This is the Vedic idea of the harmony between the heavenly world order and the earthly rituals of sacrifice, one depends on the other.

We find this idea in the West as well, there is a time quality in the observance of our rituals, and we find this still more clearly with more primitive peoples.

I have told you before of the Pueblo Indians and their conviction that the actual rising of the sun depends on their ritual being carried out.

This sounds like the story of Chant éclair who bet that the sun would not rise if he did not crow; but at the last moment he could not resist crowing so the point was never decided!

It would, however, be very foolish to ridicule this philosophic idea, for it is a remnant of a time when our consciousness was bound up with nature, in participation mystique as Levy Bruhl expresses it.

The conscious and the unconscious were identical, and men knew they must do such and such a thing at such and such a moment, because it belonged to the meaning of the time.

Astrology is based on this idea, and we find it in the medieval conception of the correspondentia; the cosmos was above and below, and the macrocosm and the microcosm identical.

So the whole course of a human life was experienced as the course of nature, and rites and ceremonies were evolved to express this experience.

This condition is a cosmic condition and if man should stop following nature, nature itself would be disjointed.

Directly human consciousness detaches itself from nature, the harmony has been broken and disorder is already present.

We think that we have organised the world as it has never been organised before, but it is man’s order and is far from the original harmony of nature.

So it is natural to find the Purusha also in the form of Prajapati, who is specially connected with time and the year.

"Prajapati pondered: verily I have created the year as the image of myself. And in that he gave his own Self to the gods, he created the sacrifice as the image of himself."

The gods belong to Maya and, in that Prajapati gave himself to the gods, he created the sacrificial fire, and the gleaming sacrificial fire is Prajapati and the Purusha.

This is the ritual repeated in many forms by primitive man.

Some Paleolithic primitives in Central Australia believe that their ancestors are still dwelling in primeval time, when all the trees were planted and all the animals were created, and that they still repeat their work as rites and ceremonies in order that the world order may continue.

Levy Bruhl has called such ancestors the archetypes.

These primitives are wholly convinced of the necessity of their totem ceremonies, they must be repeated or the world order would break up; for man would no longer be linked with primeval, eternal time which exists side by side with our ordinary time.

This "time when there was no time" they call the Alchera or Aljira.

The Alchera is eternal time, the dream, the unconscious and the Beyond.

So Prajapati is time, with the meaning of world creativeness, similar to Bergson’s "Dure e creatrice" which, as we saw before, was derived from Proclus, the Nee-Platonist.

Chronos was also a God of time.

We find the same idea in the Gnosis, the world creator is called Abraxas or Abrasax.

This word is formed of Greek letters, which as numerals are equivalent to, the supreme being and the year.

The same idea plays a large role in the Mithraic mysteries.

There is an Aion (a god with a lion’s head encoiled by a snake) to be seen at the Mithraic sanctuary on the Saalburg.

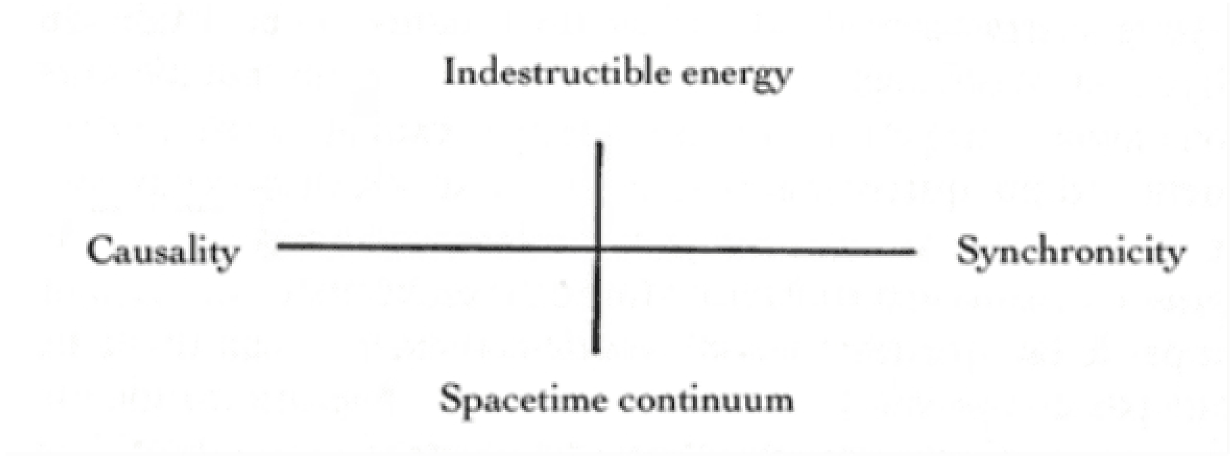
And the Persian Zervan Akarana, the lion-headed dragon, also represents time, and literally translated means infinitely long duration.

So we see that the conception of the Purusha reaches back into the beginning of human thought when man was identical with nature, but it has long since become strange to us. Carl Jung, ETH,Pages 121-124.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/55616-2.jpg`

Carl Jung and Excerpts from Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle (2019-03-16 04:44)

[1]



[Carl Jung and Excerpts from Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle]

I do not regard these statements as in any way a final proof of my views, but simply as a conclusion from empirical premises which I would like to submit to the consideration of my reader. From the material before us I can derive no other hypothesis that would adequately explain the facts (including the ESP experiments). I am only too conscious that synchronicity is a highly abstract and "irrepresentable" quantity. It ascribes to the moving body a certain psychoid property which, like space, time, and causality, forms a criterion of its behavior. We must completely give up the idea of the psyche's being somehow connected with the brain, and remember instead the "meaningful" or "intelligent" behavior of the lower organisms, which are without a brain. Here we find ourselves much closer to the formal factor which, as I have said, has nothing to do with brain activity. Carl Jung; Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle; an excerpt from the Conclusion

Synchronicity is not a philosophical view but an empirical concept which postulates an intellectually necessary principle. This cannot be called either materialism or metaphysics. No serious investigator would assert that the nature of what is observed to exist, and of that which observes, namely the psyche, are known and recognized quantities. If the latest conclusions of science are coming nearer and nearer to a unitary idea of being, characterized by space and time on the one hand and by causality and synchronicity on the other, that has nothing to do with materialism. Rather it seems to show that there is some possibility of getting rid of the incommensurability between the observed and the observer. The result, in that case, would be a unity of being which would have to be expressed in terms of a new conceptual language-a "neutral language," as W. Pauli once called it. Carl Jung, Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle; an excerpt from the Conclusion

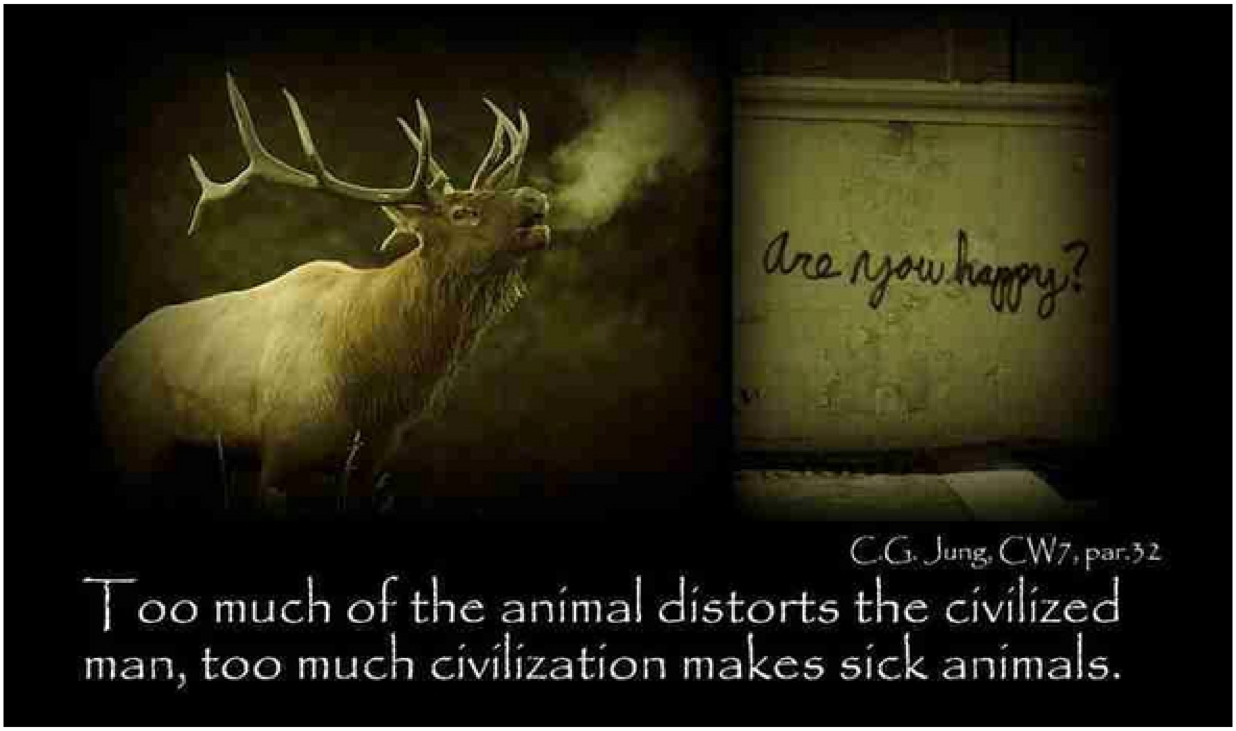
Thus we are driven to the conclusion that a nervous substrate like the sympathetic system, which is absolutely different from the cerebrospinal system in point of origin and function, can evidently produce thoughts and perceptions just as easily as the latter. What then are we to think of the sympathetic system in vertebrates? Can it also produce or transmit specifically psychic processes? Von Frisch's observations prove the" existence of trans-cerebral thought and perception. One must bear this possibility in mind if we want to account for the existence of some form of consciousness during an unconscious coma. During a coma the sympathetic system is not paralyzed and could therefore be considered as a possible carrier of psychic functions. If that is so, then one must ask whether the normal state of unconsciousness in sleep, and the potentially conscious dreams it contains, can be regarded in the same light—whether, in other words, dreams are produced not so much by the activity of the sleeping cortex, as by the unsleeping sympathetic system, and are therefore of a trans-cerebral nature. Carl Jung, Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle; an excerpt from the Conclusion

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/81262-causality.png`

Carl Jung: Too much of the animal distorts the civilized man, too much civilization makes sick animals.

(2019-03-16 05:17)

[1]



Are you happy?
C.G. Jung, CW7, par.32
Too much of the animal distorts the civilized man, too much civilization makes sick animals.

Yet things are not quite so simple as that. Eros is a questionable fellow and will always remain so, whatever the legislation of the future may have to say about it.

He belongs on one side to man’s primordial animal nature which will endure as long as man has an animal body.

On the other side he is related to the highest forms of the spirit. But he thrives only when spirit and instinct are in right harmony.

If one or the other aspect is lacking to him, the result is injury or at least a lopsidedness that may easily veer towards the pathological.

Too much of the animal distorts the civilized man, too much civilization makes sick animals. This dilemma reveals the vast uncertainty that Eros holds for man.

For, at bottom, Eros is a superhuman power which, like nature herself, allows itself to be conquered and exploited as though it were impotent.

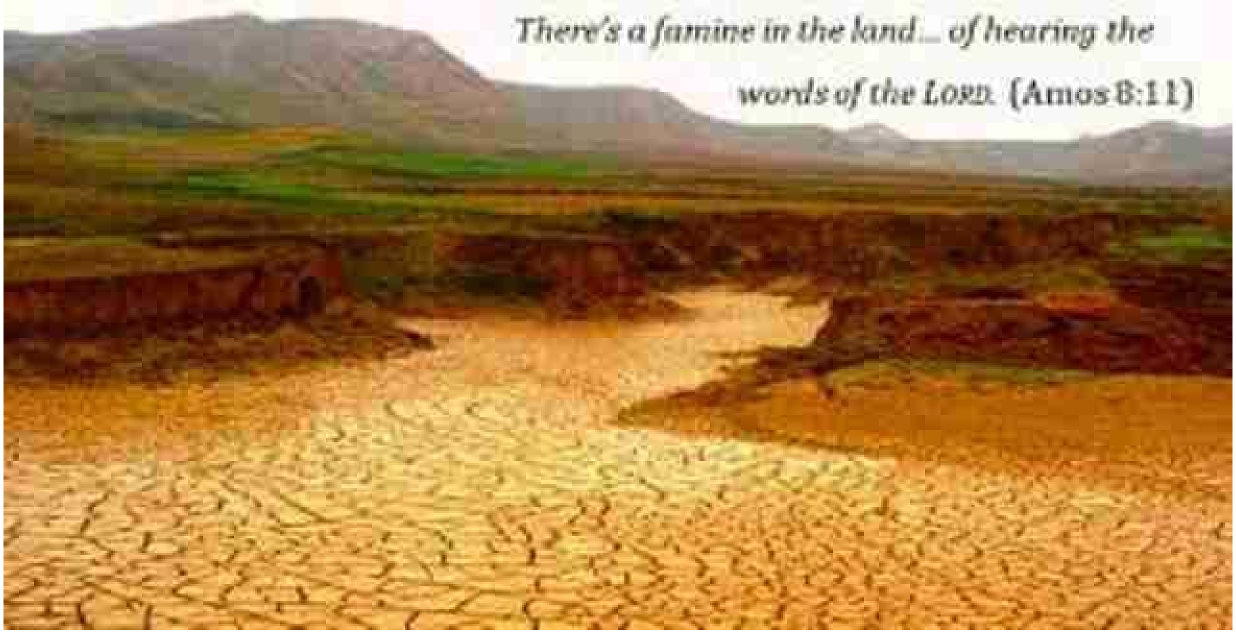
But triumph over nature is dearly paid for.

Nature requires no explanations of principle, but asks only for tolerance and wise measure. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 32

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/842b1-12banimal.jpg`

Carl Jung: There is a terrible spiritual famine in our world, (2019-03-16 05:21)

[1]



There's a famine in the land... of hearing the words of the LORD. (Amos 8:11)

Dr. Jung: What is very important is to exist, and that's rarer than one realizes.

To have a daily task and to accomplish it; and at the same time to attend to what is going on, inside oneself as well as outside, conscious of all life's forms, all its expressions.

To follow the major rules, but also to give free rein to the least familiar aspects of oneself. Drawing, and the fantasies and visions that it brought about, was a valuable thing.

Now we take photographs, and that doesn't fill the same need at all.

In return, the painters recognize no limits to the most impassioned fantasy.

They are becoming specialists in certain needs for expression; but all of us have these needs, we can't divide up the personality's insidework the way we think we can divide its outside activity.

That breaks up something essential in it and causes an appalling psychic illness.

In writing about flying saucers, I explained why men are so attentive to anything resembling a circle or a ball, the symbols of unity, of the totality of a person's being, of what I have called the self.

There is a terrible spiritual famine in our world, but there are also people who don't want to be beak-fed or fed with infant's pap.

Georges Duplain: May I ask you to repeat the principal points of your system which may assist man to discover his totality and allay his spiritual famine, when he no longer adheres to the words of Christianity?

Carl Jung: In the first place, I have no system, no doctrine, nothing of that kind. I am an empiricist, with no metaphysical views at all.

I have only hypotheses.

From them I have gained some basic principles.

There is the self, which is the totality of one's being, known and unknown, conscious and unconscious, as opposed to the distinction between physical and psychic.

Then there are the archetypes, those images of instinct.

For instinct is not just an outward thrust, it also takes part in the representation of forms. The animal, for example, has a certain idea of the plant, since he recognizes it.

Our instincts do not express themselves only in our actions and reactions, but also in the way we formulate what we imagine.

Instinct is not only biological, it is also, you might say, spiritual.

And it always repeats certain forms which can be studied down the ages among all peoples. These are the archetypes.
The crossing of a river, now, that is an archetypal situation. It's an important moment, a risk.
There is danger in the water, on the banks.

Not for nothing did Christianity invent great St. Christopher, the giant who carried the infant Jesus through the water.

Today men don't have that experience very often, or others of that sort either.

I remember river crossings in Africa with crocodiles, and unknown tribes on the other side; one feels that one's destiny —human destiny, almost—is at stake.

Every man has his own way of approaching the crossing, you see.

And think of King Albrecht's death near Wettingen, too:the knights were hesitant, not very determined, one can't be at all sure that they would have attacked the king just anywhere.

But they surprised him in the middle of the ford, in the place where fate strikes—and jumped at the chance.

There is also the collective unconscious, that immense treasury, that great reservoir, whence mankind draws the images, the forces, which it translates into very different languages, but whose common source is being found out more clearly all the time.

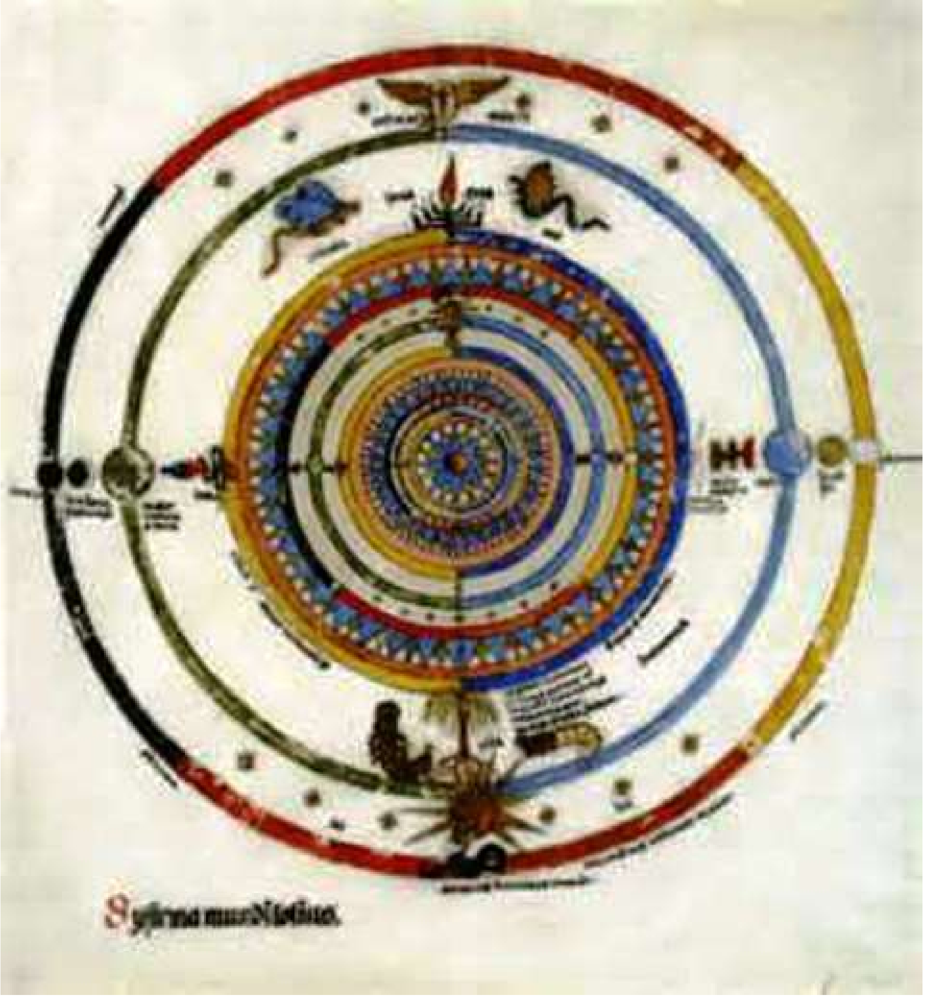
So many coincidences come from there. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 410-423

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b32ed-12bfamine.jpg`

Jung had conversations with his soul ... (2019-03-16 05:24)

[1]



In September 1916, Jung had conversations with his soul that provided further elaboration and clarification of the cosmology of the Sermones. September 25:

[Soul]: "How many lights do you want, three or seven? Three is the heartfelt and modest, seven the general and encompassing."

[I:] "What a question! And what a decision! I must be true: I think I would like seven lights."

[Soul:] "Seven, you say? I thought so. That has broad scope-cold lights."

[I:] "I need cooling, fresh air. Enough of this stifling mugginess. Too much fear and not enough free breathing. Give me seven lights."

[Soul:] "The first light means the Pleroma. / The second means Abraxas. / The third the sun. / The fourth the moon. / The fifth the earth. / The sixth the phallus. / The seventh the stars."

[I:] "Why were there no birds, and why were the celestial mother and the sky missing?"

[I:] "They are all enclosed in the star. As you look at the star, you look through them. They are the bridges to the star. They form the seventh light, the highest, the floating, which rises with flapping wings, released from the embrace of the tree of light with six branches and one blossom, in which the God of the star lay slumbering. / The six lights are single and form a multiplicity; the one light is one and forms a unity; it is the blossoming crown of the tree, the holy egg, the seed of the world endowed with wings so it can reach its place. The one gives rise to the many over and again, and the many entails the one" (Black Book 6, pp. 104-6).

[Soul:] "Now let us try this: it is something of the golden bird. It is not the white bird, but the golden one. It is different. The white bird is a good daimon, but the golden one is above you and under your God. It flies ahead of you. I see it in the blue ether, flying toward the star. It is something that is part of you. And it is at once its own egg, containing you. Do you feel me. Then ask!"

[I] "Tell me more. It makes me feel queasy"

[Soul:] "The golden bird is no soul; it is your entire nature. People are golden birds as well; not all; some are worms and rot in the earth. But many are also golden birds."

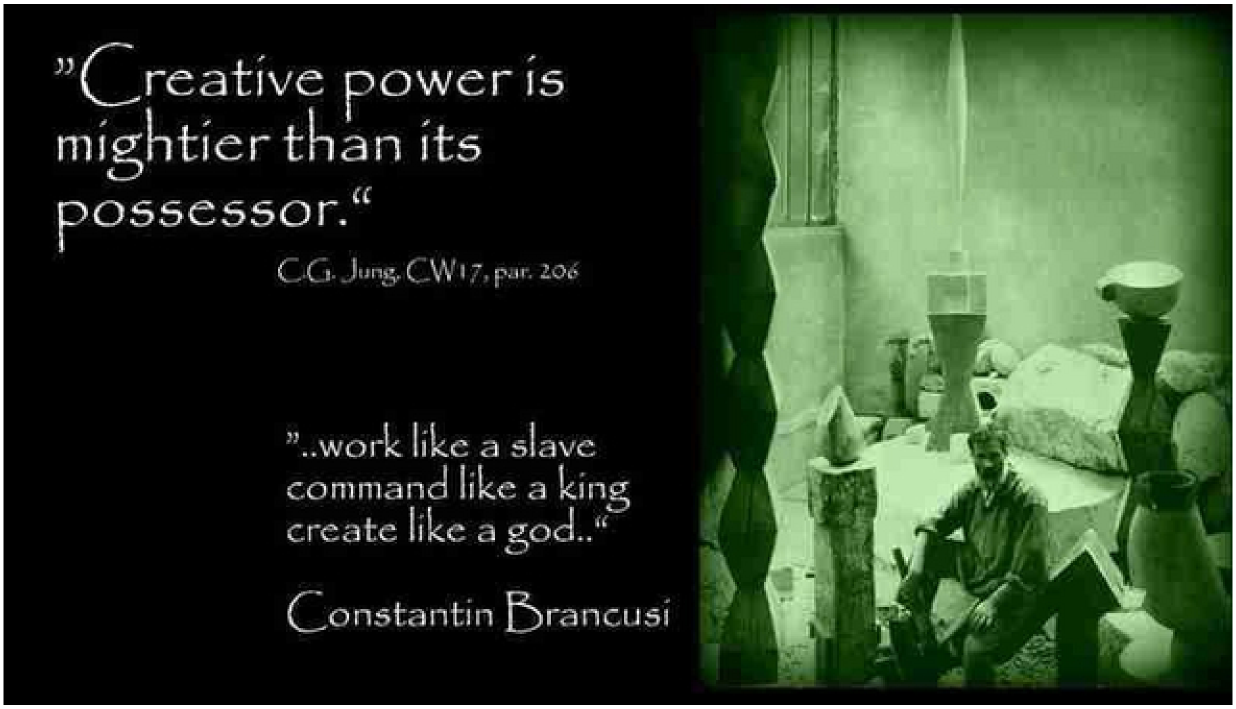
[I]: "Continue, I fear my revulsion. Tell me what you have grasped."

[Soul:] "The golden bird sits in the tree of the six lights. The tree grows out of Abraxas's head, but Abraxas grows out of the Pleroma. Everything from which the tree grows blossoms as a light, transformed, as a womb of the flowering treetop, of the golden egg-bird. The tree of light is first a plant, which is called an individual; this grows out of Abraxas's head, his thought is one among many The individual is a mere plant without flowers and fruits, a passageway to the tree of seven lights. The individual is a precursor of the tree of light. The lucent blossoms from him, Phanes himself Agni, a new fire, a golden bird. This comes after the individual, namely when it has been reunited with the world, the world blossoms from it. Abraxas is the drive, individual, distinct from him, but the tree of the seven lights is the symbol of the individual united with Abraxas. This is where Phanes appears and he, the golden bird, flies ahead. / You unite yourself with Abraxas through me. / First you give me your heart, and then you live through me. I am the bridge to Abraxas. Thus the tree of light arises in you and you become the tree of light and Phanes arises from you. You have anticipated, but not understood this. At the time you had to separate from Abraxas to become individual, opposed to the drive. Now you become one with Abraxas. This happens through me. You cannot do this. Therefore you must remain with me. Unification with the physical Abraxas occurs through the human female, but that with the spiritual Abr. occurs through me; that is why you must be with me" (Black Book 6, pp. 114 -20). Footnote #125; Red Book

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/03/a9703-systemamunditotius.jpg`

Carl Jung: Creative Power is Greater than its Possessor. (2019-03-16 05:25)

[1]



"Creative power is mightier than its possessor."
C.G. Jung, CW17, par. 206
"..work like a slave command like a king create like a god.."
Constantin Brancusi

Prematurely conceived theories are not without their dangers.

Thus the theory of repression, whose validity in a definite field of pathology is incontestable—up to the point where it has to be reversed!—has been extended to creative processes, and the creation of culture relegated to second place, as a mere ersatz product.

At the same time the wholeness and healthiness of the creative function is seen in the murky light of neurosis, which is of course an undoubted product of repression in many cases.

In this way creativity becomes indistinguishable from morbidity, and the creative individual immediately suspects himself of some kind of illness, while the neurotic has lately begun to believe that his neurosis is an art, or at least a source of art.

These would-be artists, however, develop one characteristic symptom: they one and all shun psychology like the plague, because they are terrified that this monster will gobble up their so-called artistic ability.

As if a whole army of psychologists could do anything against the power of a god! True productivity is a spring that can never be stopped up.

Is there any trickery on earth which could have prevented Mozart or Beethoven from creating? Creative power is mightier than its possessor.

If it is not so, then it is a feeble thing, and given favourable conditions will nourish an endearing talent, but no more.

If, on the other hand, it is a neurosis, it often takes only a word or a look for the illusion to go up in smoke.

Then the supposed poet can no longer write, and the painter's ideas become fewer and drearier than ever, and for all this psychology is to blame.

I should be delighted if a knowledge of psychology did have this sanative effect and if it put an end to the neuroticism which makes contemporary art such an unenjoyable problem.

Disease has never yet fostered creative work; on the contrary, it is the most formidable obstacle to creation.

No breaking down of repressions can ever destroy true creativeness, just as no analysis can ever exhaust the unconscious. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 206

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/56d00-12bcreative.jpg`

Carl Jung on a young woman who suffered from incurable insomnia (2019-03-16 05:29)

[1]

The doctor of a small town in Canton Solothurn had sent me a young patient who suffered from incurable insomnia. She was pining away from lack of sleep and narcotics.

He could think of no way to help her except hypnotism or this new psychoanalysis that they were beginning to talk about.

But she came to me.

She was a teacher, twenty-five years old, of a very simple family, who had successfully completed her studies, but who lived in constant fear of making a mistake, of not being worthy of her position.

She had gotten into an unbearable state of spasmodic tension. Clearly, what she needed was psychic relaxation.

But we did not know much about all those ideas then.

There was no one in the locality where she lived who could handle her case, and she could not come to Zurich for treatment.

I had to do, as best I could, whatever was possible in an hour.

I tried to explain to her that relaxation was necessary, that I, for example, found relaxation by sailing on the lake, by letting myself go with the wind; that this was good for one, necessary for everybody. But I could see by her eyes that she didn't understand.

She got it intellectually, that's as far as it went, though. Reason had no effect.

Then, as I talked of sailing and of the wind, I heard the voice of my mother singing a lullaby to my little sister as she used to do when I was eight or nine, a story of a little girl in a little boat, on the Rhine, with little fishes.

And I began, almost without doing it on purpose, to hum what I was telling her about the wind, the waves, the sailing, and relaxation, to the tune of the little lullaby.

I hummed those sensations, and I could see that she was "enchanted." But the hour came to an end, and I had to send her away brusquely.

I knew nothing more about her.

I had forgotten her name and that of her physician. But it was a story that haunted me.
Years later, at a congress, a stranger introduced himself to me as the doctor from Solothurn and reminded me of the story of the young girl.

"Certainly I remember the case," I said. "I should have liked so much to know what became of her."

"But," he replied in surprise, "she came back cured, as you know, and I was the one who always wanted to know what you had done.

Because all she could tell me was some story about sailing and wind, and I never could get her to tell me what you really did.

I think she doesn't remember.

Of course, I know it's impossible that you only hummed her a story about a boat." How was I to explain to him that I had simply listened to something within myself?

I had been quite at sea.

How was I to tell him that I had sung her a lullaby with my mother's voice? Enchantment like that is the oldest form of medicine.

But it all happened outside of my reason: it was not until later that I thought about it rationally and tried to arrive at the laws behind it.

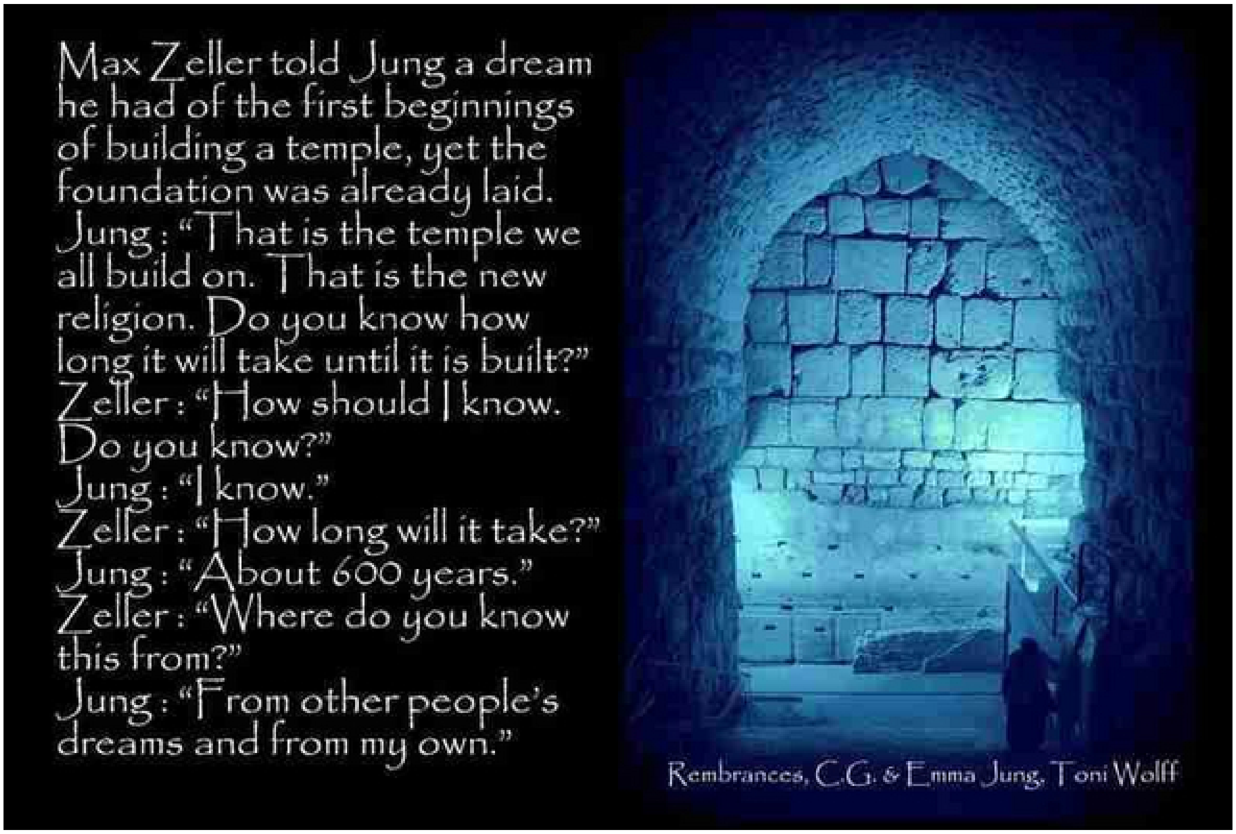
She was cured by the grace of God. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 410- 423

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/24046-12binsomnia.jpg`

Carl Jung: Jung said, “Ja, you know, that is the temple we all build on." (2019-03-16 05:32)

[1]



Max Zeller told Jung a dream he had of the first beginnings of building a temple, yet the foundation was already laid.
Jung : “That is the temple we all build on. That is the new religion. Do you know how long it will take until it is built?”
Zeller : “How should I know. Do you know?”
Jung : “I know.”
Zeller : “How long will it take?”
Jung : “About 600 years.”
Zeller : “Where do you know this from?”
Jung : “From other people’s dreams and from my own.”

Rembrances, C.G. & Emma Jung, Toni Wolff

Sometimes when working on the Stone Sanctuary and in considerable doubt about why I am doing what I am doing,I think of Max Zeller’s dream.

In 1949, Zeller, who had spent time in a concentration camp and latter became a Jungian analyst, told Jung this dream:

A temple of vast dimensions was in the process of being built. As far as I could see–ahead, behind, right and left–there were incredible numbers of people building on gigantic pillars. I, too, was building on a pillar.

The whole building process was in its very first beginnings, but the foundation was already there, the rest of the building was starting to go up, and I and many others were working on it.

Jung said, “Ja, you know, that is the temple we all build on.

We don’t know the people because, believe me, they build in India and China and in Russia and all over the world.

That is the new religion. You know how long it will take until it is built?” I said, “How should I know? Do you know?”
He said, “I know.”

I asked how long it will take.

He said, “About six hundred years.” “Where do you know this from?” I asked.

He said, “From dreams. From other people’s dreams and from my own. This new religion will come together as far as we can see.”
There is not an analyst who doesn’t experience it.

We work with a person, and there is a critical family situation, or difficulties here and there, and as this individual works, what he or she does spreads.

It has a much greater effect than we think.

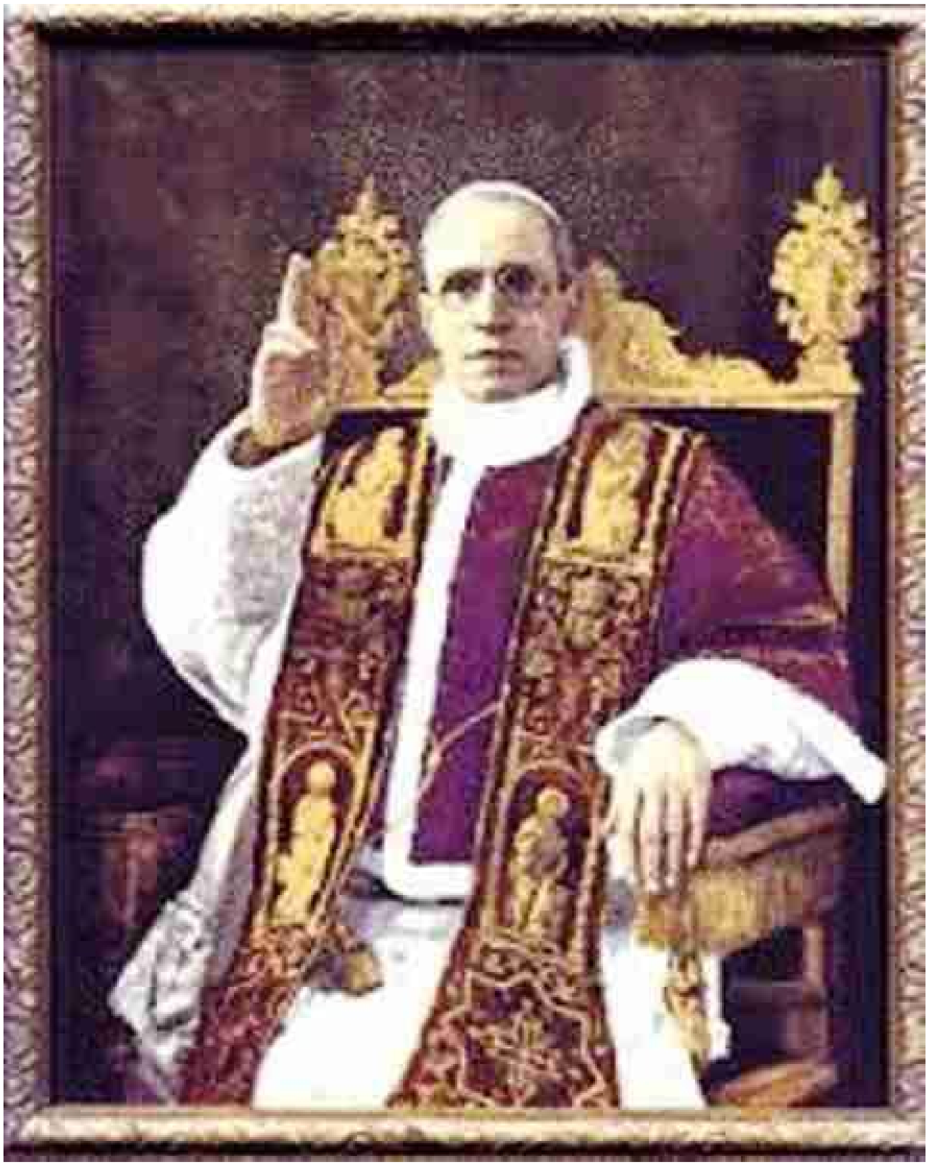
It is not as it looks from the outside, that we sit in a narrow cubbyhole; because the material we work with transforms.

It transforms us and we, being touched, touch other people without even talking about it. (p.3) From The Dream: The Vision of the Night. edited by Janet Dallett. (1975)

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b14fd-12btemple.jpg`

Carl Jung: “But remember what the Pope said: "The world should be more conscious of the presence of angels." (2019-03-16 05:40)

[1]



“Why, when Pope Pius XII in one of his last discourses deplored that the world was no longer conscious enough of the presence of angels, he was saying to his faithful Catholics in Christian terms exactly what I am trying to say in terms of psychology to those who stand more chance of understanding this language than any other.”

“But remember what the Pope said: "The world should be more conscious of the presence of angels."

There was a man who was conscious of what the unconscious brings us, who was in contact with the living truth. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 410-423

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ab341-12bpope.jpg`

Carl Jung on Psychosis (2019-03-16 05:48)

[1]

[Carl Jung on Psychosis]

Psychosis:

An extreme dissociation of the personality. Like neurosis, a psychotic condition is due to the activity of unconscious complexes and the phenomenon of splitting. In neurosis, the complexes are only relatively autonomous. In psychosis, they are completely disconnected from consciousness.

To have complexes is in itself normal; but if the complexes are incompatible, that part of the personality which is too contrary to the conscious part becomes split off. If the split reaches the organic structure, the dissociation is a psychosis, a schizophrenic condition, as the term denotes. Each complex then lives an existence of its own, with no personality left to tie them together.["The Tavistock Lectures," CW 18, par. 382.]

[In schizophrenia] the split-off figures assume banal, grotesque, or highly exaggerated names and characters, and are often objectionable in many other ways. They do not, moreover, co-operate with the patient’s consciousness. They are not tactful and they have no respect for sentimental values. On the contrary, they break in and make a disturbance at any time, they torment the ego in a hundred ways; all are objectionable and shocking, either in their noisy and impertinent behaviour or in their grotesque cruelty and obscenity. There is an apparent chaos of incoherent visions, voices, and characters, all of an overwhelmingly strange and incomprehensible nature.["On the Psychogenesis of Schizophrenia," CW 3, par. 508.]

Jung believed that many psychoses, and particularly schizophrenia, were psychogenic, resulting from an abaissement du niveau mental and an ego too weak to resist the onslaught of unconscious contents. He reserved judgment on whether biological factors were a contributing cause.

http://www.nyaap.org/jung-lexicon/p

[Carl Jung on “Karmic Illusion.”]

[Note: Those familiar with “The Red Book” may wish to consider the implications of the statement below which states “The Chonyid state is equivalent to a deliberately induced psychosis” with particular emphasis on the words “deliberately induced psychosis.”]
So far as I know, there is no inheritance of individual prenatal, or pre-uterine, memories, but there are undoubtedly inherited archetypes which are, however, devoid of content, because, to begin with, they contain no personal experiences.

They only emerge into consciousness when personal experiences have rendered them visible. As we have seen, Sidpa psychology consists in wanting to live and to be born. (The Sidpa Bardo is the "Bardo of Seeking Rebirth.")

Such a state, therefore, precludes any experience of transubjective psychic realities, unless the individual refuses categorically to be born back again into the world of consciousness.

According to the teachings of the Bardo Thodol, it is still possible for him, in each of the Bardo states, to reach the Dharmaya by transcending the four-faced Mount Meru, provided that he does not yield to his desire to follow the "dim lights."

This is as much as to say that the dead man must desperately resist the dictates of reason, as we understand it, and give up the supremacy of ego-hood, regarded by reason as sacrosanct. What this means in practice is complete capitulation to the objective powers of the psyche, with all that this entails; a kind of symbolical death, corresponding to the Judgment of the Dead in the Sidpa Bardo.

It means the end of all conscious, rational, morally responsible conduct of life, and a voluntary surrender to what the Bardo Thodol calls "karmic illusion." Karmic illusion springs from belief in a visionary world of an extremely irrational nature, which neither accords with nor derives from our rational judgments but is the exclusive product of uninhibited imagination.

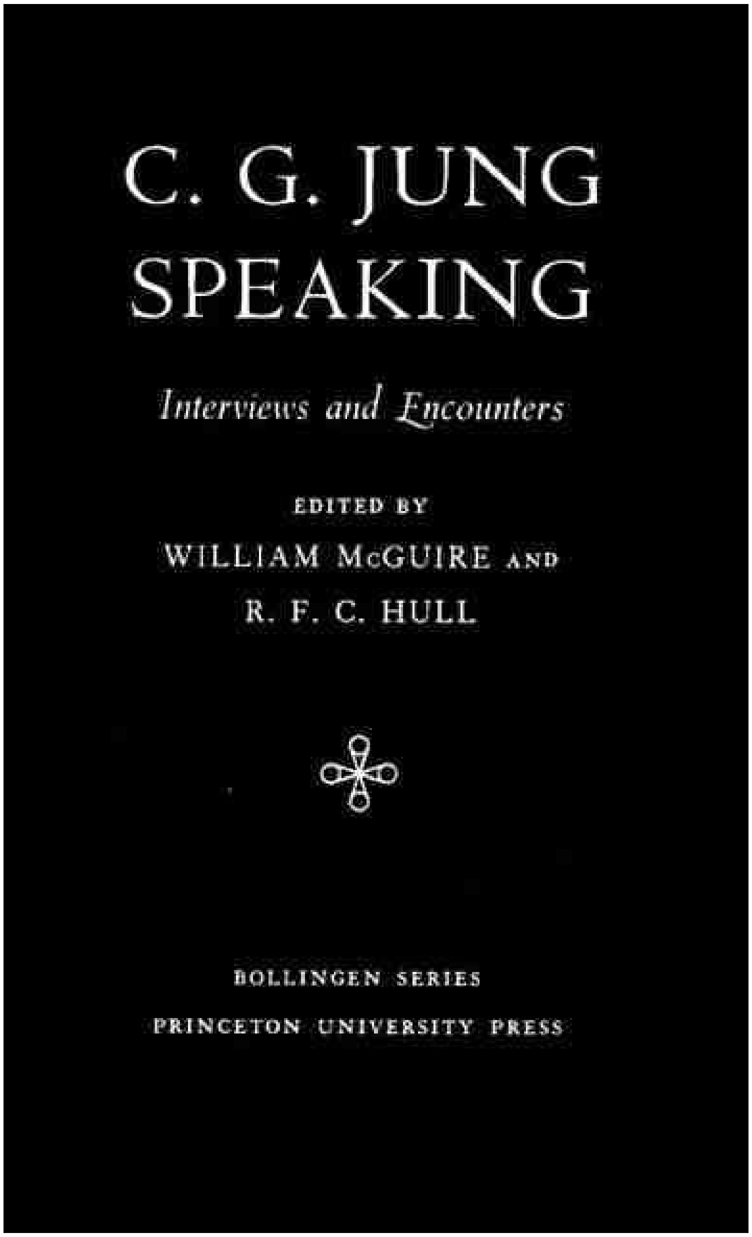
It is sheer dream or "fantasy," and every well-meaning person will instantly caution us against it; nor indeed can one see at first sight what is the difference between fantasies of this kind and the phantasmagoria of a lunatic. Very often only a slight “abaissement du niveau” mental is needed to unleash this world of illusion.

The terror and darkness of this moment has its equivalent in the experiences described in the opening sections of the Sidpa Bardo. But the contents of this Bardo also reveal the archetypes, the karmic images which appear first in their terrifying form. The Chonyid state is equivalent to a deliberately induced psychosis. Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Psychological Commentary on “The Tibetan Book of the Dead” Pages 519-520; Paragraph 846.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/57d4c-psychosis.jpg`

Carl Jung on “The Frontiers of Knowledge” (2019-03-16 05:56)

[1]



C. G. JUNG
SPEAKING

Interviews and Encounters

EDITED BY WILLIAM McGUIRE AND
R. F. C. HULL

BOLLINGEN SERIES
PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS

C. G. JUNG INTERVIEW

Georges Duplain: I am astonished that you should be willing to see a journalist when so many of your own medical followers cannot get near you!

Dr. Jung: I am astonished, too, to see you here; that a journalist should want to see me—ever since the business of the flying saucers arose, they have been trying to pass me off as senile! But I must say that the French Swiss behave relatively well. I have met with a surprising understanding on your part.

As far as the flying saucers go I haven't much to add.

I have received quantities of new documents since my book appeared; 'they don't make the matter any clearer but they show more and more how important it is.

Oh, there's an immense amount to this phenomenon.

Georges Duplain: You speak of a change of era, of a new Platonic month, of the passage into another sign of the zodiac.

What do you mean by that, what reality do such constellations have?

Dr. Jung: People don't like you to talk about that, you will get yourself laughed at. Nobody has read Plato—you haven't either.
Yet he is one of those who have come closest to the truth.

The influence of the constellations, the zodiac, they exist; you cannot explain why, it's a "Just-So Story," that proves itself by a thousand signs.

But men always go from one extreme to the other, either they don't believe, or they are credulous, any knowledge or faith can be ridiculed on the basis of what small minds do with it.

That's stupid and, above all, it's dangerous. The great astrological periods do exist.
Taurus and Gemini were prehistoric periods, we don't know much about them. But Aries the Ram is closer; Alexander the Great was one of its manifestations. That was from 2000 B.C. to the beginning of the Christian era.

With that era we came into the sign of the Fishes.

It was not I who invented all the fish symbols there are in Christianity: the fisher of men, the pisciculi christianorum.

Christianity has marked us deeply because it incarnates the symbols of the era so well.

It goes wrong in so far as it believes itself to be the only truth; when what it is is one of the great expressions of truth in our time.

To deny it would be to throw the baby out with the bathwater. Georges Duplain: What comes next?

Dr. Jung: Aquarius, the Water-pourer, the falling of water from one place to another.

And the little fish' receiving the water from the pitcher of the Water-pourer, and whose principal star is Fomal- haut, which means the "fish's mouth."

In our era the fish is the content; with the Water-pourer, he becomes the container. It's a very strange symbol.
I don't dare interpret it.

So far as one can tell, it is the image of a great man approaching.

One finds, besides, a lot of things about this in the Bible itself: there are more things in the Bible than the theologians can admit.

It's a matter of experience that the symbolism changes from one sign to another, and there is the risk that this passage will be all the more difficult for the men of today and tomorrow because they no longer believe in it, no longer want to be conscious of it.

Why, when Pope Pius XII in one of his last discourses deplored that the world was no longer conscious enough of the presence of angels, he was saying to his faithful Catholics in Christian terms exactly what I am trying to say in terms of psychology to those who stand more chance of understanding this language than any other.

Georges Duplain: But what recommendations can you make for the passage that is about to take place, whose difficulties you fear?

Dr. Jung: A spirit of greater openness towards the unconscious, an increased attention to dreams, a sharper sense of the totality of the physical and the psychic, of their indissolubility; a livelier taste for self-knowledge. Better established mental hygiene, if you want to put it that way.

Georges Duplain: The religions have tried to be this, but the result is not entirely satisfactory, don't you agree?

Dr. Jung: What is very important is to exist, and that's rarer than one realizes.

To have a daily task and to accomplish it; and at the same time to attend to what is going on, inside oneself as well as outside, conscious of all life's forms, all its expressions.

To follow the major rules, but also to give free rein to the least familiar aspects of oneself. Drawing, and the fantasies and visions that it brought about, was a valuable thing.

Now we take photographs, and that doesn't fill the same need at all.

In return, the painters recognize no limits to the most impassioned fantasy.

They are becoming specialists in certain needs for expression; but all of us have these needs, we can't divide up the personality's inside work the way we think we can divide its outside activity.

That breaks up something essential in it and causes an appalling psychic illness.

In writing about flying saucers, I explained why men are so attentive to anything resembling a circle or a ball, the symbols of unity, of the totality of a person's being, of what I have called the self.

There is a terrible spiritual famine in our world, but there are also people who don't want to be beak-fed or fed with infant's pap.

Georges Duplain: May I ask you to repeat the principal points of your system which may assist man to discover his totality and allay his spiritual famine, when he no longer adheres to the words of Christianity?

Carl Jung: In the first place, I have no system, no doctrine, nothing of that kind. I am an empiricist, with no metaphysical views at all.

I have only hypotheses.

From them I have gained some basic principles.

There is the self, which is the totality of one's being, known and unknown, conscious and unconscious, as opposed to the distinction between physical and psychic.

Then there are the archetypes, those images of instinct.

For instinct is not just an outward thrust, it also takes part in the representation of forms. The animal, for example, has a certain idea of the plant, since he recognizes it.

Our instincts do not express themselves only in our actions and reactions, but also in the way we formulate what we imagine.

Instinct is not only biological, it is also, you might say, spiritual.

And it always repeats certain forms which can be studied down the ages among all peoples. These are the archetypes.
The crossing of a river, now, that is an archetypal situation. It's an important moment, a risk.

There is danger in the water, on the banks.

Not for nothing did Christianity invent great St. Christopher, the giant who carried the infant Jesus through the water.

Today men don't have that experience very often, or others of that sort either.

I remember river crossings in Africa with crocodiles, and unknown tribes on the other side; one feels that one's destiny —human destiny, almost—is at stake.

Every man has his own way of approaching the crossing, you see.

And think of King Albrecht's death near Wettingen, too: the knights were hesitant, not very determined, one can't be at all sure that they would have attacked the king just anywhere.

But they surprised him in the middle of the ford, in the place where fate strikes—and jumped at the chance.

There is also the collective unconscious, that immense treasury, that great reservoir, whence mankind draws the images, the forces, which it translates into very different languages, but whose common source is being found out more clearly all the time.

So many coincidences come from there.

Georges Duplain: Is your explanation of man and the world understandable to simple people or reserved for the intellectual elite?

Dr. Jung: There are two distinct things: the use of psychotherapy is reserved for medical specialists—not everyone can fool around with that—but what you call the "explanation" reaches a lot more people than I would have thought possible myself.

I always remember a letter I received one morning, a poor scrap of paper, really, from a woman who wanted to see me just once in her life.

The letter made a very strong impression on me, I am not quite sure why.

I invited her to come and she came. She was very poor—poor intellectually too. I don't believe she had ever finished primary school.

She kept house for her brother; they ran a little newsstand.

I asked her kindly if she really understood my books which she said she had read.

And she replied in this extraordinary way, "Your books are not books, Herr Professor, they are bread."

And the little travelling salesman of women's things, who stopped me in the street and looked at me with immense eyes, saying, "Are you really the man who writes those books? Are you truly the one who writes about these things no one knows?"

Yes, in the long run I am very optimistic.

The people do follow it. In the French part of Switzerland the first edition of my L'Homme a la decouverte de son lime' was sold out in three months.

Georges Duplain: Who reads it? Dr. Jung: Not the professors.

Georges Duplain: How did you arrive at your global concept of the human being, of the totality? Dr. Jung: Empiricism, I tell you, observation.

One must admit that the psychological fact is everything.

Perception makes reality psychic, we live in the sort of a world-image that our senses and intelligence can perceive; we do not know true reality, in so far as all of it is not conceivable to us.

Georges Duplain: But we have quantities of signs of the reality beyond. Dr. Jung: We should try to understand what is beyond us.
That is accomplished by stages.

A whole evolution was needed before the idea of the unconscious was accepted. Nietzsche, Schopenhauer, Pierre Janet, Charcot, Freud: they were so many steps. The conjunction of several lines of study in one man was also needed.

I have had the good luck to be able to study all my life.

My father was a theologian, specializing in oriental languages; he passed on a bit of his gift for language to me.

I studied the literature, I studied medieval and ancient alchemy.

Comparative religion, of course, and, to begin with, philosophy at the same time as medicine.

All of that was necessary to work out the line of thought and the mental attitude that have led me to uncover certain laws.

And don’t forget my travels, particularly in India and Africa, where one meets men of other epochs.

By dint of observation, of discovery, one notes relationships, resemblances, coincidences, and one tries to get back to their common source, for there certainly must be one.

It’s the sum of experience, that’s all.

Let me tell you a story which happened a long while ago, to show you how empiricism leads to certain discoveries.

The doctor of a small town in Canton Solothurn had sent me a young patient who suffered from incurable insomnia.

She was pining away from lack of sleep and narcotics.

He could think of no way to help her except hypnotism or this new psychoanalysis that they were beginning to talk about.

But she came to me.

She was a teacher, twenty-five years old, of a very simple family, who had successfully completed her studies, but who lived in constant fear of making a mistake, of not being worthy of her position.

She had gotten into an unbearable state of spasmodic tension. Clearly, what she needed was psychic relaxation.
But we did not know much about all those ideas then.

There was no one in the locality where she lived who could handle her case, and she could not come to Zurich for treatment.

I had to do, as best I could, whatever was possible in an hour.

I tried to explain to her that relaxation was necessary, that I, for example, found relaxation by sailing on the lake, by letting myself go with the wind; that this was good for one, necessary for everybody. But I could see by her eyes that she didn’t understand.
She got it intellectually, that’s as far as it went, though. Reason had no effect.
Then, as I talked of sailing and of the wind, I heard the voice of my mother singing a lullaby to my little sister as she used to do when I was eight or nine, a story of a little girl in a little boat, on the Rhine, with little fishes.

And I began, almost without doing it on purpose, to hum what I was telling her about the wind, the waves, the sailing, and relaxation, to the tune of the little lullaby.

I hummed those sensations, and I could see that she was "enchanted." But the hour came to an end, and I had to send her away brusquely.
I knew nothing more about her.

I had forgotten her name and that of her physician. But it was a story that haunted me.
Years later, at a congress, a stranger introduced himself to me as the doctor from Solothurn and reminded me of the story of the young girl.

"Certainly I remember the case," I said. "I should have liked so much to know what became of her."

"But," he replied in surprise, "she came back cured, as you know, and I was the one who always wanted to know what you had done.

Because all she could tell me was some story about sailing and wind, and I never could get her to tell me what you really did.

I think she doesn't remember.

Of course, I know it's impossible that you only hummed her a story about a boat." How was I to explain to him that I had simply listened to something within myself? I had been quite at sea.

How was I to tell him that I had sung her a lullaby with my mother's voice? Enchantment like that is the oldest form of medicine.

But it all happened outside of my reason: it was not until later that I thought about it rationally and tried to arrive at the laws behind it.

She was cured by the grace of God.

Georges Duplain: How can you speak of the grace of God? Dr. Jung: And why not?

A good dream, for example, that's grace. The dream is in essence a gift.

The collective unconscious, it's not for you, or me, it's the invisible world, it's the great spirit.

It makes little difference what I call it: God, Tao, the Great Voice, the Great Spirit.

But for people of our time God is the most comprehensible name with which to designate the Power beyond us.

The images of God—it's an immense story.

I remember an African tribe whose members greeted the first rays of the sun by spitting in their hands and turning them towards it.

That's classic: since breath is the soul, the saliva which accompanies the breath is the substance of the soul.

What that gesture means exactly is: "My God, I offer you my soul." I tried to find out if they knew the meaning of their gesture.

No, the young did not know, nor the fathers.

But the grandfathers knew, it is they who guard the secrets.

And elsewhere you see this gesture in the carved dog-headed baboons of Abu Simbel.

I watched the tribesmen and when I thought I had understood them I asked, "Your god Mungu, he is the sun?" Homeric gales of laughter from the tribesmen.

This poor imbecile of a white man, imagining that we worship that ball of light and heat!

I looked closer. The same rite also greeted the new moon.

So, in the end, I understood their god: it was the moment when darkness changes into light, not the sun itself, but its appearing."

There is Horus, too, among the Egyptians.

There are so many things and they all hang together.

The French writer Colette once said to her husband about some bit of animal behavior, "Maurice, there's just one animal, just one animal!"

I wasn't familiar with that but it's exactly the same idea, the same sense of totality, expressed in the language of someone very close to the animal world.

There are so many possible forms of the truth.

We must find simple words for the great truths; we must try to approach the living truth behind things, it's mankind's oldest effort.

In our time, it's the intellect that is making darkness, because we've let it take too big a place. Consciousness discriminates, judges, analyzes, and emphasizes the contradictions.

It's necessary work up to a point.

But analysis kills and synthesis brings to life.

We must find out how to get everything back into connection with everything else.

We must resist the vice of intellectualism, and get it understood that we cannot only understand.

Two or three more centuries will go by before the new era I spoke of in connection with the flying saucers.

A lot will still have to happen to mankind.

Many things will have to change before the new style comes to birth, the new formula for the realization of humanity.

I remember a marvellous sight I beheld one evening in India at the Darjeeling observatory.

Sikkim was already in shadow, the mountains blue to about four thousand meters, violet to about seven thousand.

And there in the middle of that ring of mountains was Kanchenjunga in all its glory, resplendent as a ruby. It was the lotus with the jewel without price in its center.
And all the savants and scientists, lost in wonder at this spectacle, said "OM" without realizing it.

That's the primal word, the sound that passes from mother to child, and what some primitives say when they approach a stranger.

And after the learned men had regained consciousness, they felt the need of a word and they asked me to recite part of Faust.

Georges Duplain: Faust—you know how Goethe spoke of that work, of the research into the essential that it meant? As "das Hauptgeschaft," the main thing, the essential.

Dr. Jung: Man has need of the word, but number is a much more important thing. In essence, number is sacred.
Lots of important things might be said about it.

The quaternity, above all, is an essential archetype. The square, the cross.
The squaring of the circle by the alchemists.

The cross in the circle, or, for Christians, Christ in "glory."

It is not I who have made up all that. It exists, and it's important.

Georges Duplain: What can men do, and especially we Swiss, to prepare ourselves and help everyone prepare himself to face a future already disturbing in its immediacy?

Dr. Jung: There is no entirely simple, thoroughly rational recipe.

Most of us are too academic-minded to come face to face with living reality in its wholeness, its totality.

We prefer to deny it because that's easier, and because we can find such a lot of good, honest, reasonable arguments for doing so.

What would you have me do?

I say what I know, what I believe, how I see things.

But I know very well that truth is ineffable and all our approaches to it, gross. Just the same, we're moving ahead.
But it's such a long story.

In the case of Switzerland there are some profound symbols which are very strange: the union of white and red in our flag, for example, is a "sign" of the reconciliation of opposites.

I pointed out in my book on "flying objects" that the white star on American airplanes and the red star on Soviet planes also show this opposition of masculine and feminine colors.

In Switzerland this symbolism may be said to point to their reconciliation, since the two colors are conjoined.

And besides there is also (on our flag) the cross, which is the sign of the quaternity already to be found in the center of Switzerland, where the rivers take their rise, as though the play of nature had marked out that quaternity.

If we were more conscious in our country, we might think more of this; we might allow these great symbols to penetrate us.

But there is no entirely simple, thoroughly rational recipe: though the Swiss want that above all.

The sort of things that we have been talking about are, without doubt, harder to explain to the Swiss than to other people.

We are extremely materialistic in the broadest sense of the term. Feet on the ground, heads not too high in the sky!

We believe in nothing but what we see, what we touch, what we know.

The Swiss is much too literal-minded to come face to face with live reality in its wholeness, its totality.

He prefers to deny it because that is easier, and because such a lot of good, honest, reasonable arguments can be found to support his denial.

What would you have me do?

I say what I know, what I believe, how I see things.

But I know very well that the Truth is ineffable, and all our approaches to it are gross. Just the same we are moving ahead.
But it is such a long story.

There is one thing that counts, though: we're beginning to look at history in the light of perspectives gained from the study of the psyche and of human behavior.

And not only history but economics, too.

Men like Professor Karl Schmid" at the Federal Institute of Technology, Zurich, or Professor Baler" and his Insti- tute for Economic Research, have a very extensive acquaintance with psychology; their better knowledge of man and what motivates him should permit a better understanding of political and economic conditions.

With time and accumulated experience, we shall not only understand the past better, but maybe we shall also learn how to avoid the most dangerous situations in the future, to forestall political crises just as we now begin to know how to forestall economic crises.

That would be progress, if men were wise enough.

But remember what the Pope said: "The world should be more conscious of the presence of angels."

There was a man who was conscious of what the unconscious brings us, who was in contact with the living truth. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 410-423

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ec312-12bfrontier.jpg`

Carl Jung: Christianity, like every closed system of religion, has an undoubted tendency to suppress the unconscious.. (2019-03-16 05:59)

[1]

Christianity, like every closed system of religion, has an undoubted tendency to suppress the unconscious in the individual as much as possible, thus paralyzing his fantasy activity.

Instead, religion offers stereotyped symbolic concepts that are meant to take the place of his unconscious once and for all.

The symbolic concepts of all religions are recreations of unconscious processes in a typical, universally binding form.

Religious teaching supplies, as it were, the final information about the “last things” and the world beyond human consciousness.

Wherever we can observe a religion being born, we see how the doctrinal figures flow into the founder himself as revelations, in other words, as concretizations of his unconscious fantasy.

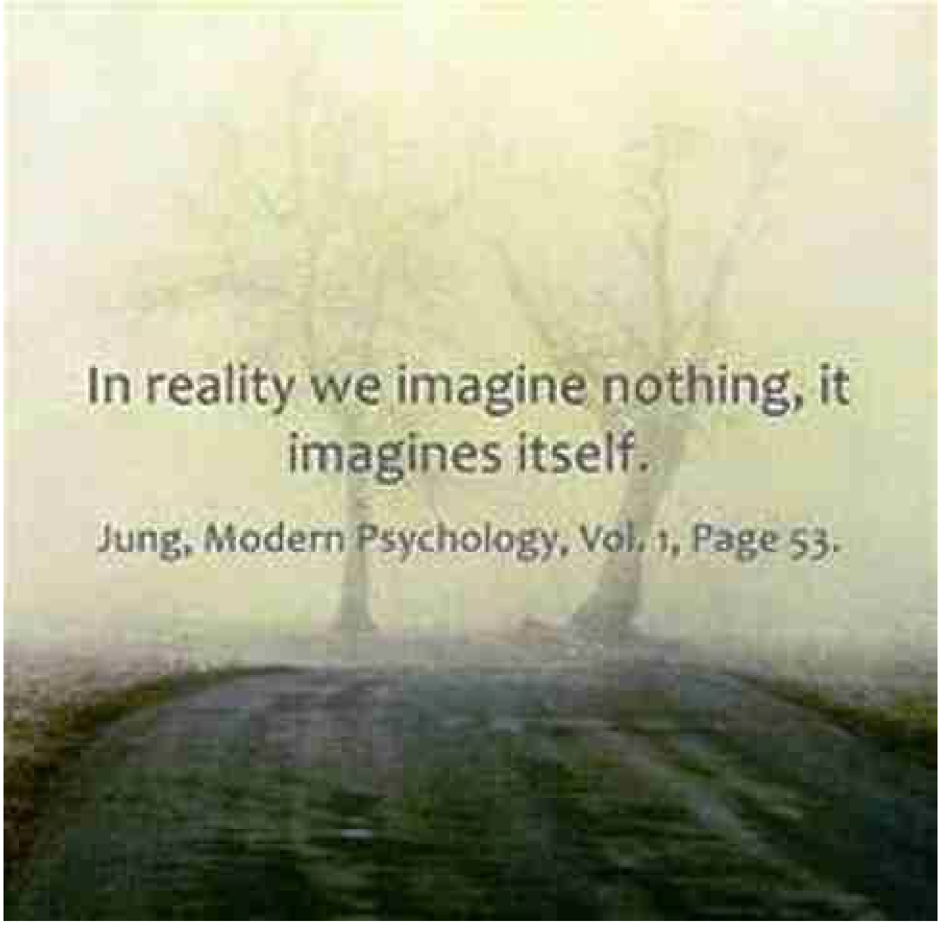
The forms welling up from his unconscious are declared to be universally valid and thus replace the individual fantasies of others. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 80

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/69775-suppress.jpg`

Carl Jung: Naturally one cannot avoid taking risks, for nothing new would happen without them. (2019-03-16 06:01)

[1]



In reality we imagine nothing, it imagines itself.
Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, Page 53.

To Pastor Werner Niederer

Dear Pastor Niederer, 13 August 1960

It is clear from your manuscript that your recommendation raises a very delicate problem.

You are risking difficulties not only with your own colleagues but-and this is more serious-also with the medical faculty. Naturally one cannot avoid taking risks, for nothing new would happen without them.

But one must ask oneself in all seriousness whether the difficulties would jeopardize the whole project, or can really be overcome.

It is quite inconceivable that all theologians, to a man, would go in for a training analysis, as you rightly demand that they should.

Nor is a training analysis the end of it, for in addition they would have to acquire a whole lot of technical knowledge, for which purpose, as you know, the C. G. Jung Institute was founded.

A diploma from this Institute is the minimal preparation needed for the activity you have in mind.

The mental and moral maturity you also require of the trainee is indeed commendable, but it is a postulate that cannot be carried out in practice.

Hence there are good reasons for combining psychotherapy, as a rule, either with a study of medicine, which is long and expensive and therefore offers some guarantee of the perseverance, reliability, and responsibleness of those who take up such a profession, or with a completed course of academic studies which at least ensures an all-round education.

But lay psychologists, too, are necessarily obliged to work together with doctors because the neuroses are frequently and unavoidably complicated by dangerous psychotic phenomena to which only a man who is protected by a medical diploma can and should expose himself.

So if you were to attempt such a radical breakthrough it is 1000 :1 that you will fail.

One has to be content with tentative, self-sacrificing efforts gradually to alter the marked aversion of the theological mind for psychology and transform its prejudices against the human psyche into a positive interest.

Unfortunately hardly a beginning has been made with this work in the world of theology.

The first step would be to sweep away all the various prejudices that hamper understanding.

Secondly, large numbers of theologians would have to acquire a deeper knowledge of psychology, which would be possible at first only in the realm of theory.

But nothing is gained by encouraging unprepared, prejudiced persons, however well-intentioned they may be, to take up a practical activity of whose scope, meaning, and risks they haven’t the glimmering of an idea.

They would endanger not only themselves but also the "patients" entrusted to their care.

One should first educate the educator and not hand the pupil over to an incompetent who, if he is honest, only gets his education from the pupil.

It would, however, be a delusion to assume that everyone can meet the demand for moral maturity. In my experience the opposite is generally the case.

In my opinion, therefore, it would be much more suitable if a serious attempt were made in the theological faculty, the breeding ground of theologians, to come to terms with the facts of psychology on the basis of real knowledge, and to give the student some conception of the contemporary problems he will meet with in his parish.

I would even advise you to ask a leading member of the theological faculty to give you a candid opinion of your proposal after a thorough study of your manuscript.

His reactions would show you what your chances are, and how a further modus procedendi might be worked out.

You will probably find it pretty difficult to convince any authority at all that your project is worth taking seriously.

It would then be up to you to prove that it is.

With kind regards,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 581-582

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e03b4-12breality.jpg`

Carl Jung on the “Mystic” and “Mysticism.” [Anthology] (2019-03-16 06:16)

[1]

Everyone who says that I am a Mystic is just and idiot. He just doesn't understand the first word of Psychology. Carl Jung, Conversations with Richard L. Evans, [Houston Film]

People call me a mystic, but [humans] really are chock-full of mysticism; that word covers a large area of facts which we cannot understand." Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 296.

When a woman realizes her shadow the animus can be constellated. If the shadow remains in the unconscious the animus possesses her through the shadow. When she realizes her animus, mystical generation can occur. Sarah was Abraham's legitimate wife, but Hagar, the dark one, had the procreative animus. Out of darkness the light is born. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 30.

It is a figure comparable to Hiranyagarbha, Purusha, Atman, and the mystic Buddha. For this reason I have elected to call it the "self," by which I understand a psychic totality and at the same time a centre, neither of which coincides with the ego but includes it, just as a larger circle encloses a smaller one. Carl Jung, CW 9I, 247.

Only the mystics bring religion to what is creative itself. Carl Gustav Jung [LC 540]

Everything psychic has a lower and a higher meaning, as in the profound saying of late classical mysticism: 'Heaven above, Heaven below, stars above, stars below, all that is above also is below, know this and rejoice.' Here we lay our finger on the secret symbolical significance of everything psychic. Carl Jung; CW 5; para 77.

When they [the mystics] descend into the depths of their own being they find 'in their heart' the image of the sun, they find their own life-force which they call the 'sun' for a legitimate and, I would say, a physical reason because our source of energy and life actually is sun. Our physiological life, regarded as an energy process, is entirely solar Carl Jung; Symbols of Transformation; para. 176.

We can find clear proof of this fact in the history of science itself. The so-called "mystical" experience of the French philosopher Descartes involved a . . . sudden revelation in which he saw in a flash the "order of all sciences". The British author Robert Louis Stevenson had spent years looking for a story that would fit his "strong sense of man's double being," when the plot of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde was suddenly revealed to him in a dream. Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; P. 25.

People will do anything, no matter how absurd, in order to avoid facing their own souls. They will practice Indian yoga and all its exercises, observe a strict regimen of diet, learn theosophy by heart, or mechanically repeat mystic text from the literature of the whole world - all because they cannot get on with themselves and have not slightest faith that anything useful could ever come out of their own souls. Thus the soul has been turned into a Nazareth Gradually from which nothing good can come. Therefore let us fetch it from the four corners of the earth - the more far-fetched and bizarre it is the better. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 99

Concerning your view about Hatha-Yoga I can confirm your ideas entirely. Yoga as well as other "mystical" practices imitate nature and that explains their efficacy. Yoga postures are imitations of catatonic gestures, postures and mannerisms. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 497-498.

Behind Gretchen stands the Gnostic sequence: Helen-Mary-Sophia. They represent a real Platonic world of ideas (thinking and sensation on the mystic level). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 264-266.

I was particularly satisfied with the fact that you clearly understand that I am not a mystic but an empiricist. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 237.

Individuation is a philosophical, spiritual and mystical experience Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Page 294.

A genuine and proper ethical development cannot abandon Christianity but must grow up within it, must bring to fruition its hymn of love, the agony and ecstasy over the dying and resurgent god the mystic power of the wine, the awesome anthropophagy of the Last Supper-only this ethical development can serve the vital forces of religion. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 17-19.

The lotus has always had an important mystical meaning. Its roots are down in the slime and mud at the bottom of the lake and the flower unfolds on the surface of the water. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 113.

Prana conceives of the body as a sort of system of pipes, going into the limbs and connecting the centres. These centres are not mystical but psychical centres of experience. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.

The mystical rose, like the lotus in India, grows for the salvation of man. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 101.

We could say that it was owing to Al-Gazzali that Islam became a mystical religion, though we in the West know very little today of this mystical side. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 10Nov1939, Page 178.

So Christian theologians became acquainted with the devotional and mystical books of the Arabs and they made a vast impression upon them. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 10Nov1939, Page 178.

It is common for very infantile people to have a mystical, religious feeling, they enjoy this atmosphere in which they can admire their beautiful feelings, but they are simply indulging their auto-eroticism. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 11Jan1935, Pages 171.

Turned towards the world, the anima is fickle, capricious, moody, uncontrolled and emotional, sometimes gifted with daemonic intuitions, ruthless, malicious, untruthful, bitchy, double-faced, and mystical. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 222f.

A genuine and proper ethical development cannot abandon Christianity but just grow up within it, must bring to fruition its hymn of love, the agony and ecstasy over the dying and resurgent god/ the mystic power of the wine, the awesome anthropophagy of the Last Supper-only this ethical development can serve the vital forces of religion. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 18.

You seem to forget that I am first and foremost an empiricist, who was led to the question of Western and Eastern mysticism only for empirical reasons. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 195.

I was particularly satisfied with the fact that you clearly understand that I am not a mystic but an empiricist. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 237.

Dr. Meier has drawn my attention to your short review of Rosenberg's book. For anyone who knows Jewish history, and in particular Hasidism, Rosenberg's assertion that the Jews despise mysticism is a highly regrettable error. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 238.

Behind Gretchen stands the Gnostic sequence: Helen-Mary-Sophia. They represent a real Platonic world of ideas (thinking and sensation on the mystic level). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 265.

Owing to rather obvious reasons Protestant theologians are rather reticent and they don't know yet whether I should be condemned as a heretic or depreciated as a mystic. As you know, mysticism and hereticism enjoy about the same bad reputation in Protestantism. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 382.

You will be accused of mysticism, but the reputation you won with the Dementia will hold up for quite some time against that. Sigmund Freud to Carl Jung Letter May 1911.

She had very changeable looks, as so many intuitives do, and could sometimes look beautiful and sometimes quire plain. Her extraordinary brilliant eyes-mystic's eyes-were always expressive. Helena Henderson on Toni Wolff, Carl, Emma, Toni Remembrances, P. 31.

I have been alternately accused of agnosticism, atheism, materialism and mysticism. Carl Jung, Wounded Healer of the Soul, Page 207.

The goal of Eastern religious practice is the same as that of Western mysticism: the shifting of the center of gravity from the ego to the self, from man to God. This means that the ego disappears in the self, and man in God. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 958

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/07/a77ce-mystic.jpg`

Here are a few Jung-Hesse Letters: (2019-03-16 06:45)

[1]

[Carl Jung's letter to Hermann Hesse on "Demian."]

1. To Hermann Hesse

Dear Herr Hesse, 3 December 1919

I must send you my most cordial thanks for your masterly as well as veracious book: Demian.

I know it is very immodest and officious of me to break through your pseudonym; but, while reading the book, I had the feeling that it must somehow have reached me via Lucerne.

Although I failed to recognize you in the Sinclair sketches in the Neue Zurcher Zeitung.

I always wondered what sort of person Sinclair must be, because his psychology seemed to me so remarkable.

Your book came at a time when, once again, I was oppressed by the darkened consciousness of modern man, and by his hopeless bigotry, as Sinclair was by little Knauer.

Hence your book hit me like the beam of a lighthouse on a stormy night.

A good book, like every proper human life, must have an ending.

Yours has the best possible ending, where everything that has gone before runs truly to its end, and everything with which the book began begins over again-with the birth and awakening of the new man.

The Great Mother is impregnated by the loneliness of him that seeks her.

In the shell burst she bears the "old" man into death, and implants in the new the everlasting monad, the mystery of individuality.

And when the renewed man reappears the mother reappears too-in a woman on this earth.

I could tell you a little secret about Demian of which you became the witness, but whose meaning you have concealed from the reader and perhaps also from yourself.

I could give you some very satisfying information about this, since I have long been a good friend of Demian's and he has recently initiated me into his private affairs-under the seal of deepest secrecy.

But time will bear out these hints for you in a singular way.

I hope you will not think I am trying to make myself interesting by mystery-mongering; my amor fati is too sacred to me for that.

I only wanted, out of gratitude, to send you a small token of my great respect for your fidelity and veracity, without which no man can have such apt intuitions.

You may even be able to guess what passage in your book I mean.

I immediately ordered a copy of your book for our Club library.

It is sound in wind and limb and points the way.

I beg you not to think ill of me for my invasion. No one knows of it.

Very sincerely and with heartfelt thanks,

C.G. Jung C.G. Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 573-574.

2. To Hermann Hesse

Dear Herr Hesse, 1 October 1934

Best thanks for your detailed answer!

Naturally we shouldn’t quarrel about words.

Nevertheless I would note in all humility that the expression "sublimation" is not appropriate in the case of the artist because with him it is not a question of transfom1ing a primary instinct but rather of a primary instinct (the artistic instinct) gripping the whole personality to such an extent that all other instincts are in abeyance, thus giving rise to the work of divine perfection.

Excuse this terminological hair-splitting, but we have to deal with a wicked world in which innumerable flies get caught in the cobwebs of concepts.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung C.G. Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 173-174.

3. To: Hermann Hesse 28 January 1922

Heartiest thanks for you beautiful poems, and at the same time congratulations on their publication.

I see from the papers that you have given the Hottingen Literature Fraternitya touch of the horrors with your far-ranging autobiography.

Who is the literary reporter on the N.Z.Z. anyway?

He is the possessor of a truly lamentable style.

In my thoughts I bad to pity you for this, but I hope the sun of Montagnola will rapidly bleach away these cisalpine vulgarities.

For a person like me, who never reads poetry, your poems are simply beautiful.

With best greetings,

Sincerely,

Jung

4. To Hermann Hesse

Dear Herr Hesse, 18 September 1934

Thank you for your letter and enclosures.

I am much amused that you think I have ”become professoria."

Evidently have success fully deceived even your eagle eye.

One must have a good exterior ”dans ce meilleur des mondes possibles"; for there is no point in having none.

Pearls should not be cast before swine.

You do me an injustice with your remarks on sublimation.

It is not from resentment that I fight this idea, but from copious experience of patients (and doctors too) who shirk the difficulty every time and “sublimate," i.e., simply repress.

Sublimatio is part of the royal art where the true gold is made.

Of this Freud knows nothing, worse still, he barricades all the paths that could lead to the true sublimatio.

This is just about the opposite of what Freud understands by sublimation.

It is not a voluntary and forcible channeling of instinct into a spurious field of application, but an alchymical transformation for which fire and the black prima materia are needed.

Sublimatio is a great mystery. Freud has appropriated this concept and usurped it for the sphere of the will and the bourgeois, rationalistic ethos.

Anathema sit! But who understands any of these things today?

Therefore they remain in darkness,

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung

5. To Hermann Hesse

Dear Herr Hesse, 27 October 1936

Best thanks for kindly sending me "Josef Knecht’s Dream."

Is it a dream? And who is the dreamer?

Excuse this question of a psychologist who, deeply impressed by the beauty of the form and content, cannot suppress his curiosity.

But you need not answer the question.

With best greetings,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung

6. To Emanuel Maier

Dear Professor Maier, 24 March 1950

I must apologize for the long delay in answering your letter of January 16th.

I'm a very busy man and suffer from an overwhelming correspondence which I'm hardly able to cope with.

I know Hesse's work and I know him personally.

I knew the psychiatrist who treated him.

He died several years ago.

Through him Hesse received some influences originating in my work (which show for instance in Demian, Siddhartha, and Steppenwolf).

It was about that time (1916) that I made Hesse's personal acquaintance.

The psychiatrist was Dr. J. B. Lang.

He was a very curious, though extremely learned man, who had studied oriental languages (Hebrew, Arabic, and Syrian) and was particularly interested in Gnostic speculation.

He got from me a considerable amount of knowledge concerning Gnosticism which he also transmitted to Hesse.

From this material he wrote his Demian.

The origin of Siddhartha and Steppenwolf is of a more hidden nature.

They are-to a certain extent the direct or indirect results of certain talks I had with Hesse.

I'm unfortunately unable to say how much he was conscious of the hints and implications which I let him have.

I'm not in a position to give you full information, since my knowledge is strictly professional.

I have never done any systematic work on any of Hesse's novels.

It would be, I admit, an interesting psychological study, particularly from the standpoint of my theoretical conceptions.

It is possible for anyone sufficiently aware of my work to make the necessary applications.

Unfortunately my time doesn't allow me to go into detail, because this would amount to a new dissertation which would demand an extra amount of work which I'm not able to produce.

I should be very much interested to know about the results of your researches.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung

7. To Hermann Hesse

Dear Herr Hesse, 19 August 1950

Among the many messages and signs my 75th birthday brought me, it was your greeting that surprised and delighted me most.

I am especially grateful for your Morgenlandfahrt,l which I have set aside to read at a quiet moment.

Since my birthday, however, this quiet moment still hasn't arrived, for I am swamped with a flood of letters and visitors beyond my control.

At my age it means going "slow and with care," nor is my working capacity what it was, especially when you have all sorts of things on your programme which you want to bring to the light of day.

I have made a late start with them, which may well be due to the difficulty of the themes that have dropped into my head.

Allow me to reciprocate your gift with a specimen of my latest publications bordering on the domain of literature.

Meanwhile you too have moved up into the higher age bracket and so will be in a position to empathize with my preoccupations.

With best thanks,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung

To Hermann Hesse

8. From Hermann Hesse to Emanuel Maier

Dear Mr. Maier, (? April 1950]

Being a friend of discretion, I have not opened Jung's letter.

In 1916 I underwent an analysis with a doctor friend of mine who was in part a pupil of Jung's.

At that time I became acquainted with Jung's early work, the Wandlungen der Libido, which made an impression on me.

I also read later books by Jung, but only until around 1922 because thereafter analysis did not greatly interest me.

I have always had respect for Jung, but his works did not make such strong impressions on me as did those of Freud.

Jung will already have written you that, in connection with an evening of readings I gave as the guest of Jung's Zurich Club, I also had several analytic sessions with him around 1921.

Then too I got a nice impression of him, though at that time I began to realize that, for analysts, a genuine relationship to art is unattainable: they lack the organ for it.

With kind regards,

9. H . HESSE

From Hermann Hesse to Hugo and Emmy Ball Zurich, (? April 1921]

I'm up and down.

City and work are very tiring, but I live in a very beautiful spot high up near the forest on the Zurichberg, and occasionally I see dear people.

But my psychoanalysis is giving me a great deal of trouble, and often Klingsor feels old and incorrigible, the summer is no longer his.

I shall stay here still longer, the fruit I have bitten into has to be eaten to the full. Dr. Jung impresses me very much.

I am so glad to know that waiting for me down in the Ticino are not just chestnut forests and typewriter, but also dear friends.

I send greetings to both of you in Agnuzzo and to forest and lake from the bottom of my heart.

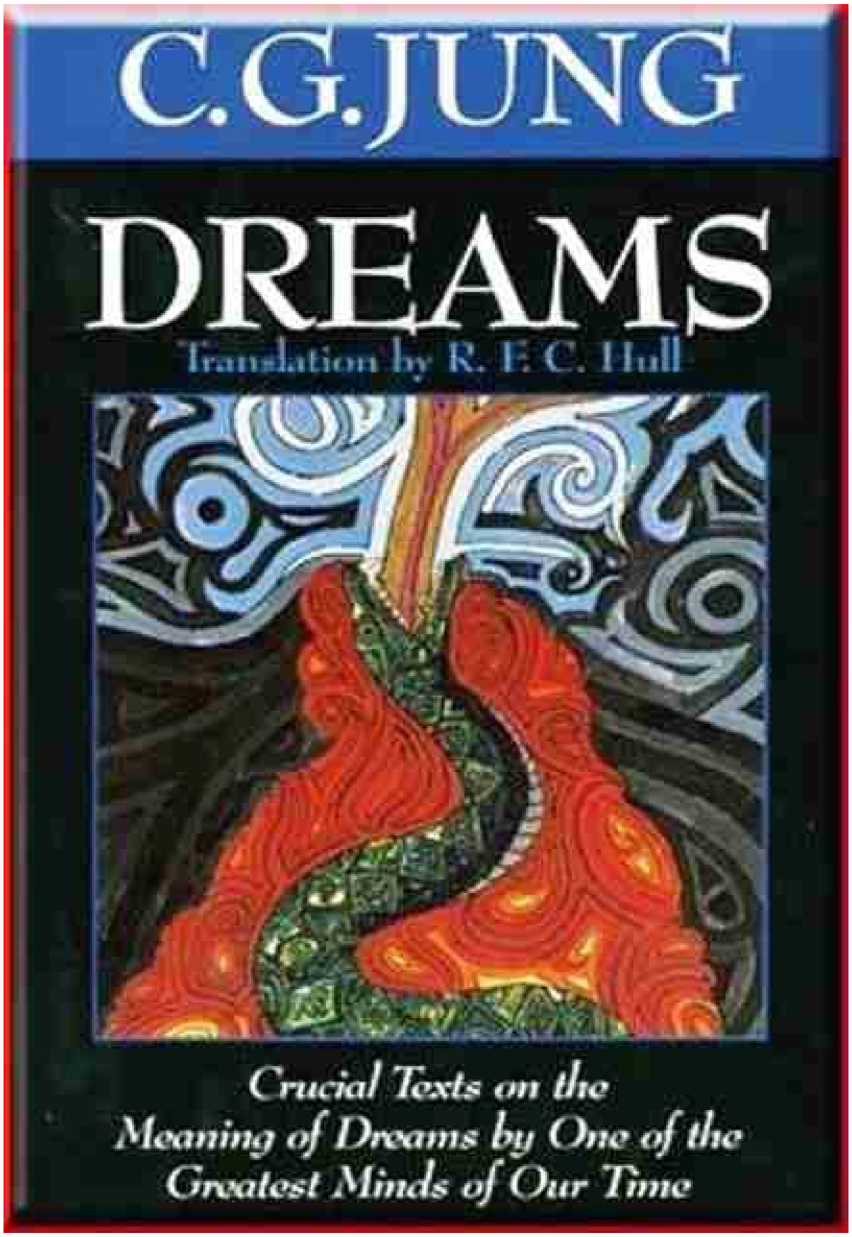
Yours, H. HESSE

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/07/52688-1hesse.jpg`

Carl Jung: As Freud says, dream-analysis is the via regia to the unconscious. (2019-03-16 10:18)

[1]



C.G.JUNG
DREAMS
Translation by R. F. C. Hull
Crucial Texts on the Meaning of Dreams by One of the Greatest Minds of Our Time

It is only in modern times that the dream, this fleeting and insignificant-looking product of the psyche, has met with such profound contempt.

Formerly it was esteemed as a harbinger of fate, a portent and comforter, a messenger of the gods.

Now we see it as the emissary of the unconscious, whose task it is to reveal the secrets that are hidden from the conscious mind, and this it does with astounding completeness. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 21.

As Freud says, dream-analysis is the via regia to the unconscious.

It leads straight to the deepest personal secrets, and is, therefore, an invaluable instrument in the hand of the physician and educator of the soul. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 25

The dream is often occupied with apparently very silly details, thus producing an impression of absurdity, or else it is on the surface so unintelligible as to leave us thoroughly bewildered.

Hence we always have to overcome a certain resistance before we can seriously set about disentangling the intricate web through patient work.

But when at last we penetrate to its real meaning, we find ourselves deep in the dreamer's secrets and discover with astonishment that an apparently quite senseless dream is in the highest degree significant, and that in reality it speaks only of important and serious matters.

This discovery compels rather more respect of the so-called superstition that dreams have a meaning, to which the rationalistic temper of our age has hitherto given short shrift. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 24.

I call every interpretation which equates the dream images with real objects an interpretation on the objective level.

In contrast to this is the interpretation which refers every part of the dream and all the actors in it back to the dreamer himself.

This I call interpretation on the subjective level. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 130

On paper the interpretation of a dream may look arbitrary, muddled, and spurious; but the same thing in real- ity can be a little drama of unsurpassed realism.

To experience a dream and its interpretation is very different from having a tepid rehash set before you on paper.

Everything about this psychology is, in the deepest sense, experience; the entire theory, even where it puts on the most abstract airs, is the direct outcome of something experienced. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 199.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/797a7-12bdreams.jpg`

Carl Jung on “Longing” Anthology (2019-03-16 10:22)

[1]

I had still not become a man again who carried within himself the conflict between a longing for the world and a longing for the spirit. I did not live either of these longings, but I lived myself and was a merrily greening tree in a remote spring forest. And thus I learned to live without the world and spirit; and I was amazed how well I could live like this. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 277.

True joy is simple: it comes and exists from itself and is not to be sought here and there. At the risk of encountering black night, you must devote yourself to me and seek no joy. Joy can never ever be prepared, but exists of its own accord or exists not at all. All you must do is fulfill your task nothing else. Joy comes from fulfillment, but not from longing. Philemon to Carl Jung; The Red Book; Page 341

If I am not conjoined through the uniting of the Below and the Above, I break down into three parts: the serpent, and in that or some other animal form I roam, living nature daimonically, arousing fear and longing. The human soul, living forever within you. The celestial soul, as such dwelling with the Gods, far from you and unknown to you, appearing in the form of a bird. Carl Jung's Soul to him, Black Books, Appendix C., Page 370.

Could the longing for a god be a passion welling up from our darkest, instinctual nature, a passion unswayed by any outside influences, deeper and stronger perhaps than the love for a human person?" Carl Jung, CW 7, par 214.

If there were no imperfections, no primordial defect in the ground of creation, why should there be any urge to create , any longing that must be fulfilled? Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 32.

God has a longing for man and it seems there is provision for God to be created in man's consciousness. Consciousness is the cradle of the birth of God in man. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 39.

There is no consciousness without discrimination of opposites. Carl Jung; CW 9i: 178.

If one honors God, the sun or the fire, then one honors one's own vital force, the libido. It is a Seneca says: "god is near you, he is with you, in you." God is our own longing to which we pay divine honors. Carl Jung; The Psychology of the Unconscious.

One must give up the retrospective longing which only wants to resuscitate the torpid bliss and effortlessness of childhood. Carl Jung; The Sacrifice; CW 5; Paragraph 643.

For him who looks backwards the whole world, even the starry sky, becomes the mother who bends over him and enfolds him on all sides, and from the renunciation of this image, and of the longing for it arises the picture of the world as we know it today. Carl Jung; The Sacrifice; CW 5; Par 643.

We know very well that a man's ambition is for his concepts to be realized in life, whereas it is the most secret longing of all women for their lives to be realized in concepts. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 151

At the founding of the great religions there was to begin with a collective disorientation which everywhere constellated in the unconscious an overwhelming principle of order (the collective longing for redemption.) Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 59-63.

Youthful longing for the world and for life, for the attainment of high hopes and distant goals, is life's obvious teleological urge which at once changes into fear of life, neurotic resistances, depressions, and phobias if at some point it remains caught in the past, or shrinks from risks without which the unseen goal cannot be attained. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 406.

Whoever sunders himself from the mother longs to get back to the mother. This longing can easily turn into a consuming passion which threatens all that has been won. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 352.

If you prove receptive to this "call of the wild," the longing for fulfilment will quicken the sterile wilderness of your soul as rain quickens the dry earth. Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 190.

Consequently, the sight of a child or a primitive will arouse certain longings in adult, civilized persons longings which relate to the unfulfilled desires and needs of those parts of the personality which have been blotted out of the total picture in favor of the adapted persona. Carl Jung, MDR, Page 244

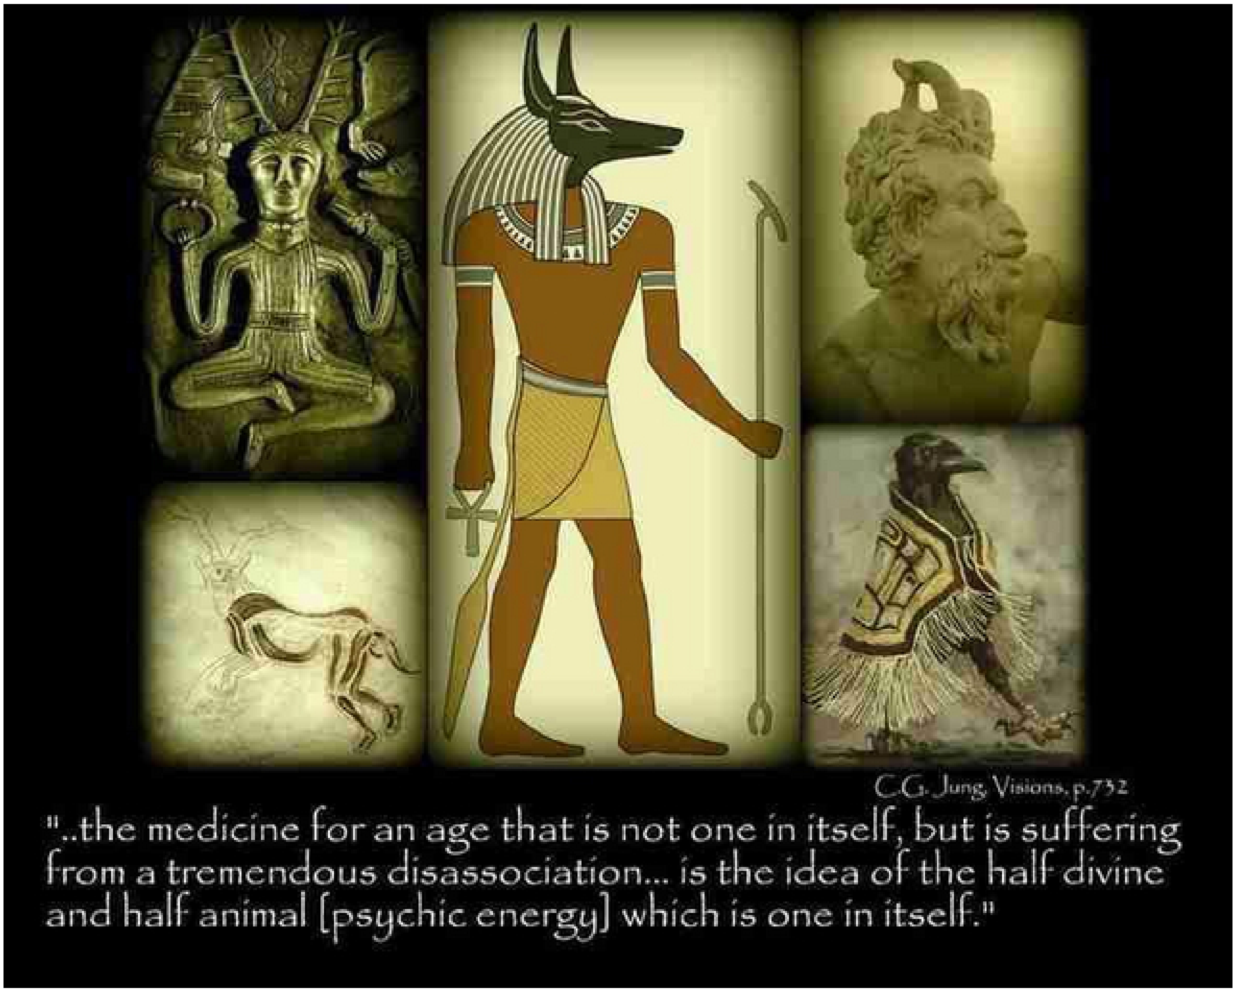
Again one has only to think of the craze for Negro dances, for the Charleston and jazz—they are all symptoms of the great longing of the mass psyche for this more complete—development of the powers immanent within us which primitives possess to a higher degree than we do. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 38-46

For him who looks backwards the whole world, even the starry sky, becomes the mother who bends over him and enfolds him on all sides, and from the renunciation of this image, and of the longing for it arises the picture of the world as we know it today. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 643

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1b0de-12blonging.jpg`

Carl Jung: The Trinity consists of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost; and the fourth is God the devil. (2019-03-16 10:27)

[1]



C.G. Jung, Visions, p.732
"..the medicine for an age that is not one in itself, but is suffering from a tremendous disassociation... is the idea of the half divine and half animal [psychic energy] which is one in itself."

When you understand analysis as an honest attempt to overcome certain evils of our time, you are not astonished to find that one of the fundamental concepts of the system is the idea of half-divine and half animal libido which is one in itself, and therefore the medicine for an age that is not one in itself, that is suffering from a tremendous dissociation.

Also it is an age when the old triangle values, the Trinity idea, is being reversed, adding the fourth function to the three.

The Trinity consists of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost; and the fourth is God the devil. That makes the square.

You see, this whole astrological picture, this ensemble, is exactly like the tissue of the unconscious, like one of these fantasies, or a dream. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 732 – 733.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/351ec-12btrinity.jpg`

Carl Jung: The technique of coming to terms with the animus is the same in principle as in the case of the anima (2019-03-16 10:34)

[1]

Instead of the woman merely associating opinions with external situations —the animus, as an associative function, should be directed inwards, where it could associate the contents of the unconscious.

The technique of coming to terms with the animus is the same in principle as in the case of the anima; only here the woman must learn to criticize and hold her opinions at a distance; not in order to repress them, but, by investigating their origins,to penetrate more deeply into the background, where she will then discover the primordial images, just as the man does in his dealings with the anima.

The animus is the deposit, as it were, of all woman's ancestral experiences of man—and not only that, he is also a creative and procreative being, not in the sense of masculine creativity, but in the sense that he brings forth something we might call the spermatic word.

A woman possessed by the animus is always in danger of losing her femininity, her adapted feminine persona, just as a man in like circumstances runs the risk of effeminacy.

Just as a man brings forth his work as a complete creation out of his inner feminine nature, so the inner masculine side of a woman brings forth creative seeds which have the power to fertilize the feminine side of the man. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 336.

These psychic changes of sex are due entirely to the fact that a function which belongs inside has been turned outside.

The reason for this perversion is clearly the failure to give adequate recognition to an inner world which stands autonomously opposed to the outer world, and makes just as serious demands on our capacity for adaptation. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 337

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cf0e6-12banimus.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 36 (2019-03-16 11:04)

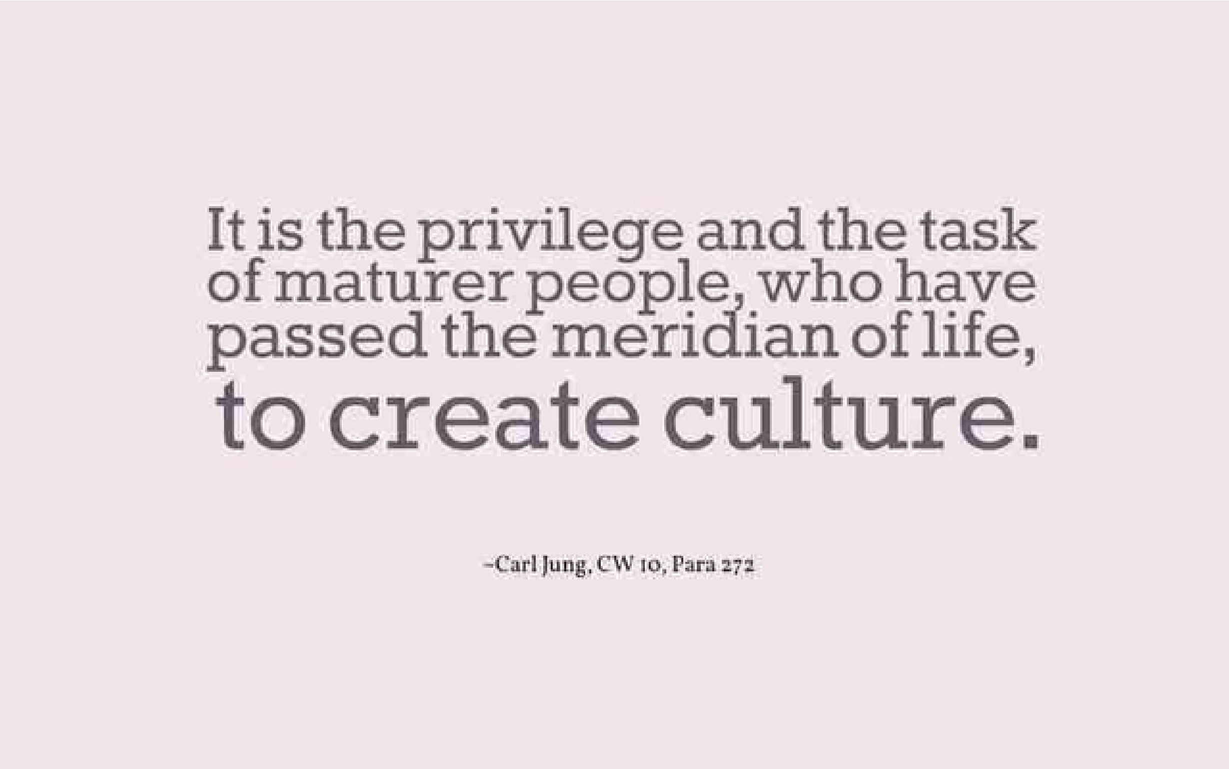
[1]

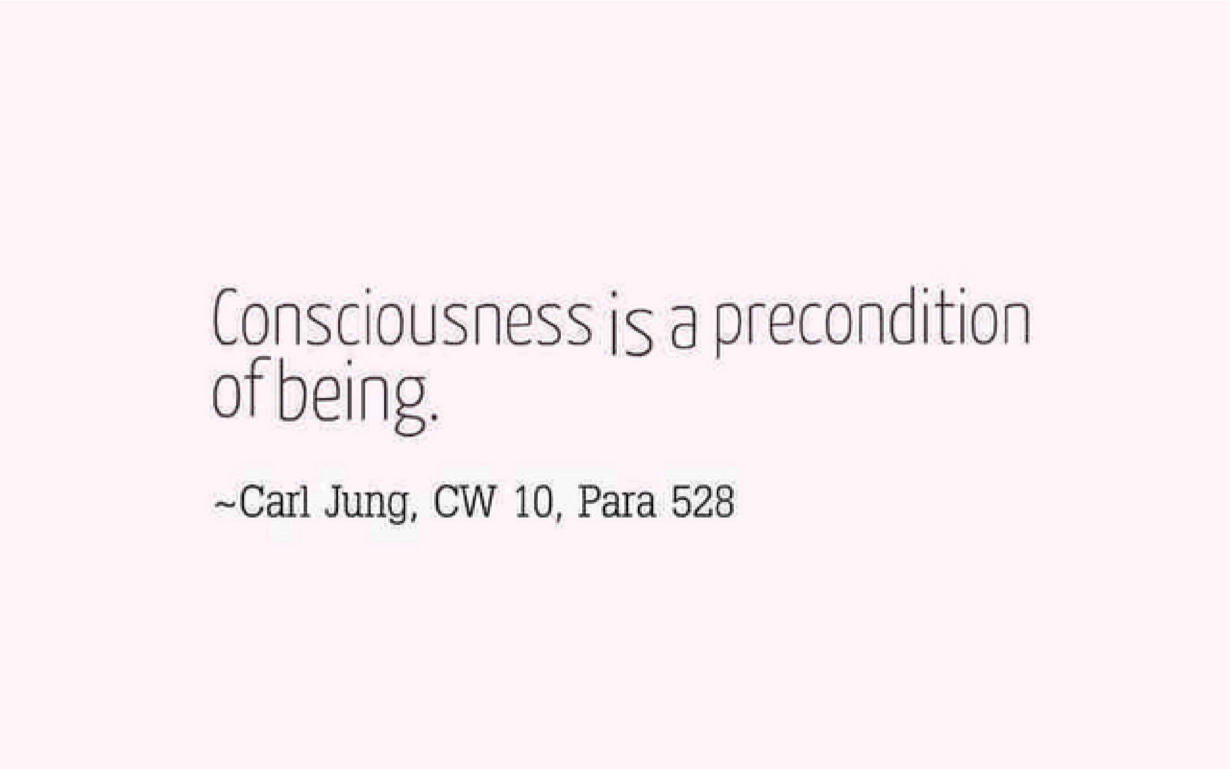


It is the privilege and the task of maturer people, who have passed the meridian of life, to create culture.

–Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 272

It is the privilege and the task of maturer people, who have passed the meridian of life, to create culture. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 272

[2]

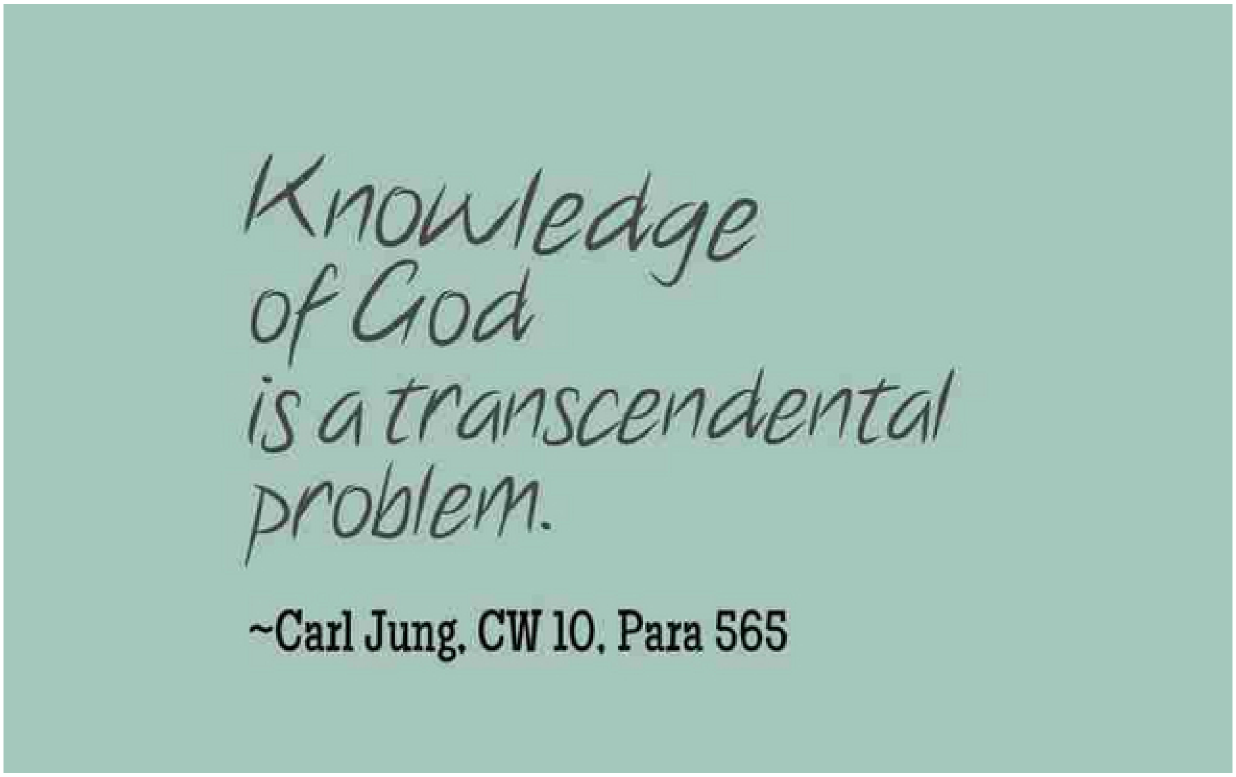


Consciousness is a precondition of being.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 528

Consciousness is a precondition of being. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 528

[3]

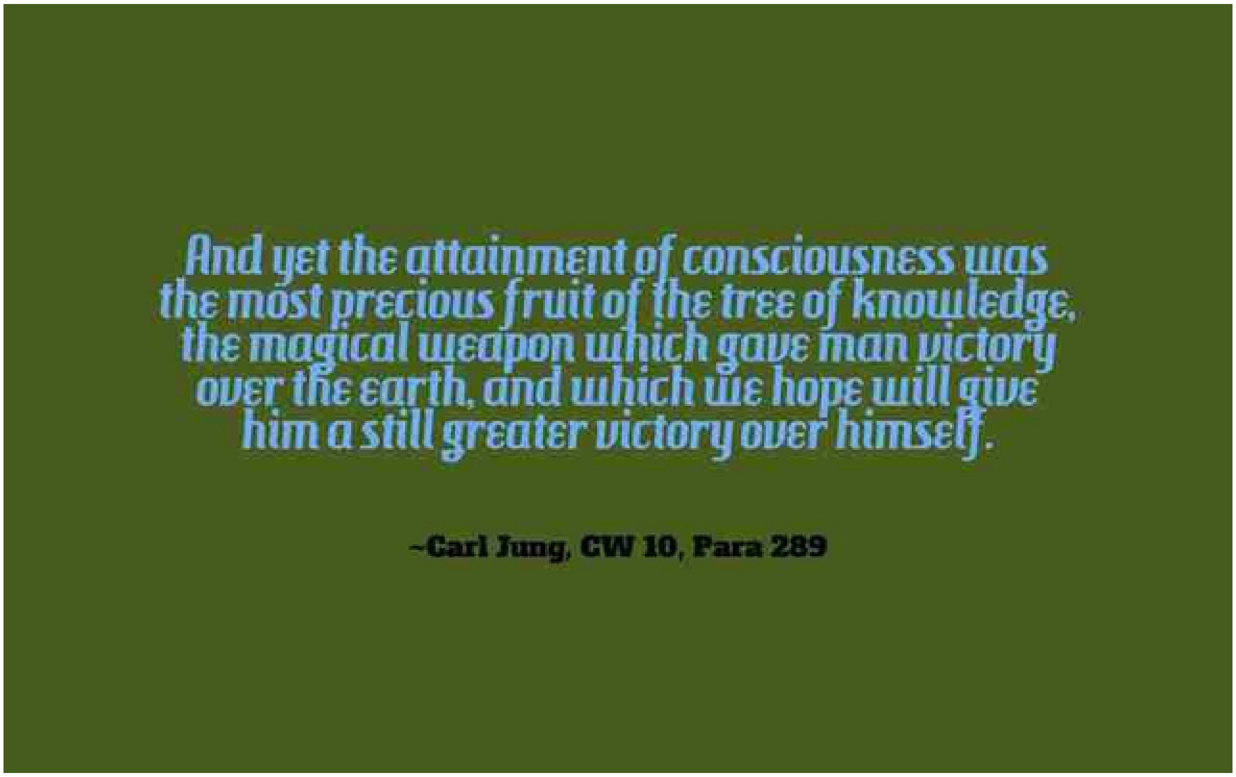


Knowledge of God is a transcendental problem.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 565

Knowledge of God is a transcendental problem. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 565

[4]

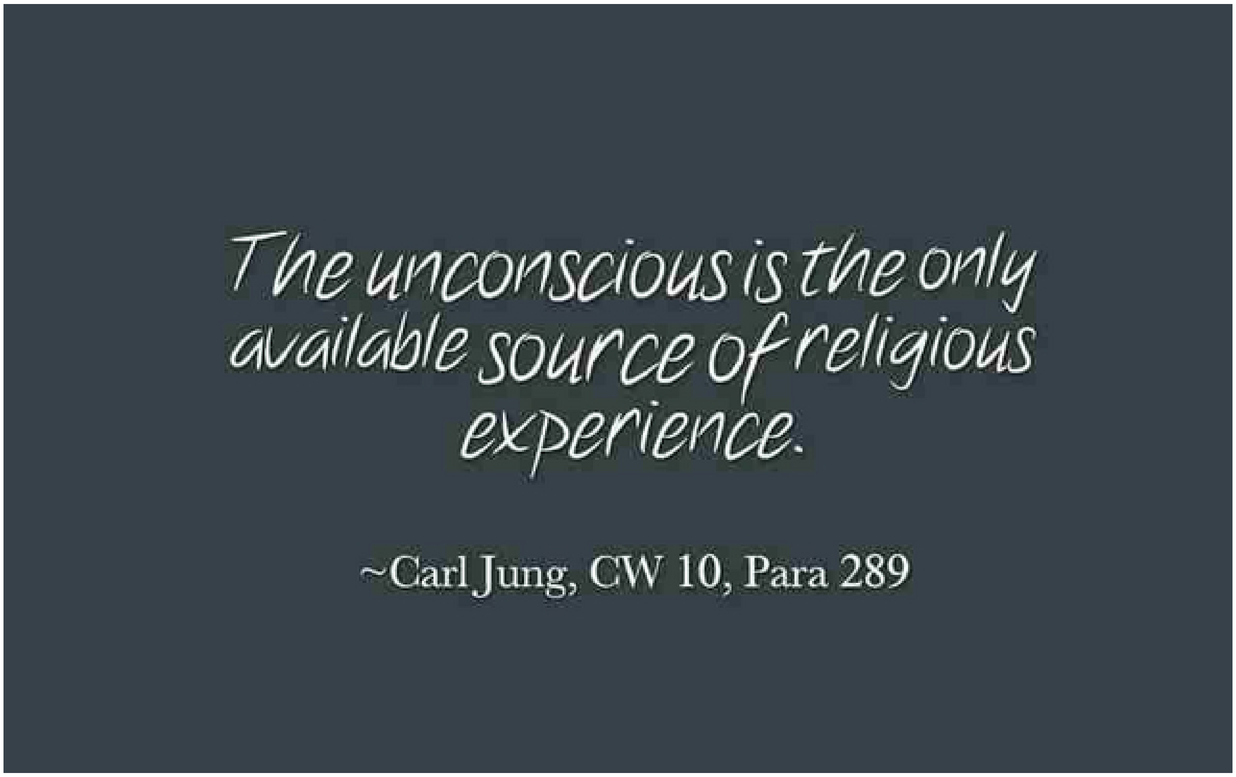


And yet the attainment of consciousness was the most precious fruit of the tree of knowledge, the magical weapon which gave man victory over the earth, and which we hope will give him a still greater victory over himself.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 289

The attainment of consciousness was the most precious fruit of the tree of knowledge, the magical weapon which gave man victory over the earth, and which we hope will give him a still greater victory over himself. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 289

[5]

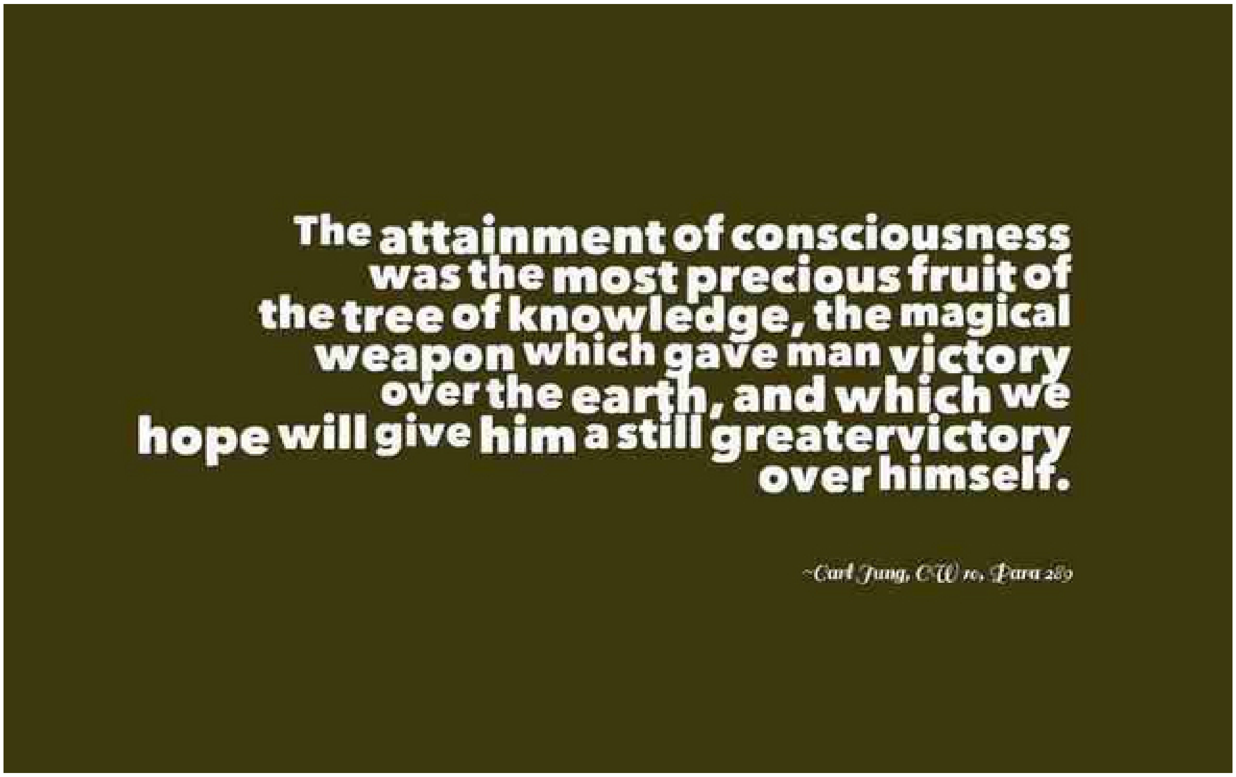


The unconscious is the only available source of religious experience.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 289

The unconscious is the only available source of religious experience. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 289

[6]



The attainment of consciousness was the most precious fruit of the tree of knowledge, the magical weapon which gave man victory over the earth, and which we hope will give him a still greatervictory over himself.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 289

The attainment of consciousness was the most precious fruit of the tree of knowledge, the magical weapon which gave man victory over the earth, and which we hope will give him a still greater victory over himself. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 289

[7]

The fact that individual consciousness means separation and opposition is something that man has experienced countless times in his long history.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 290

The fact that individual consciousness means separation and opposition is something that man has experienced countless times in his long history. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 290

[8]

The feeling of immortality, it seems to me, has its origin in a peculiar feeling of extension in space and time, and I am inclined to regard the deification rites in the mysteries as a projection of this same psychic phenomenon.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 248-249

The feeling of immortality, it seems to me, has its origin in a peculiar feeling of extension in space and time, and I am inclined to regard the deification rites in the mysteries as a projection of this same psychic phenomenon. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 248-249

[9]

The souls or spirits of the dead are identical with the psychic activity of the living; they merely continue it.

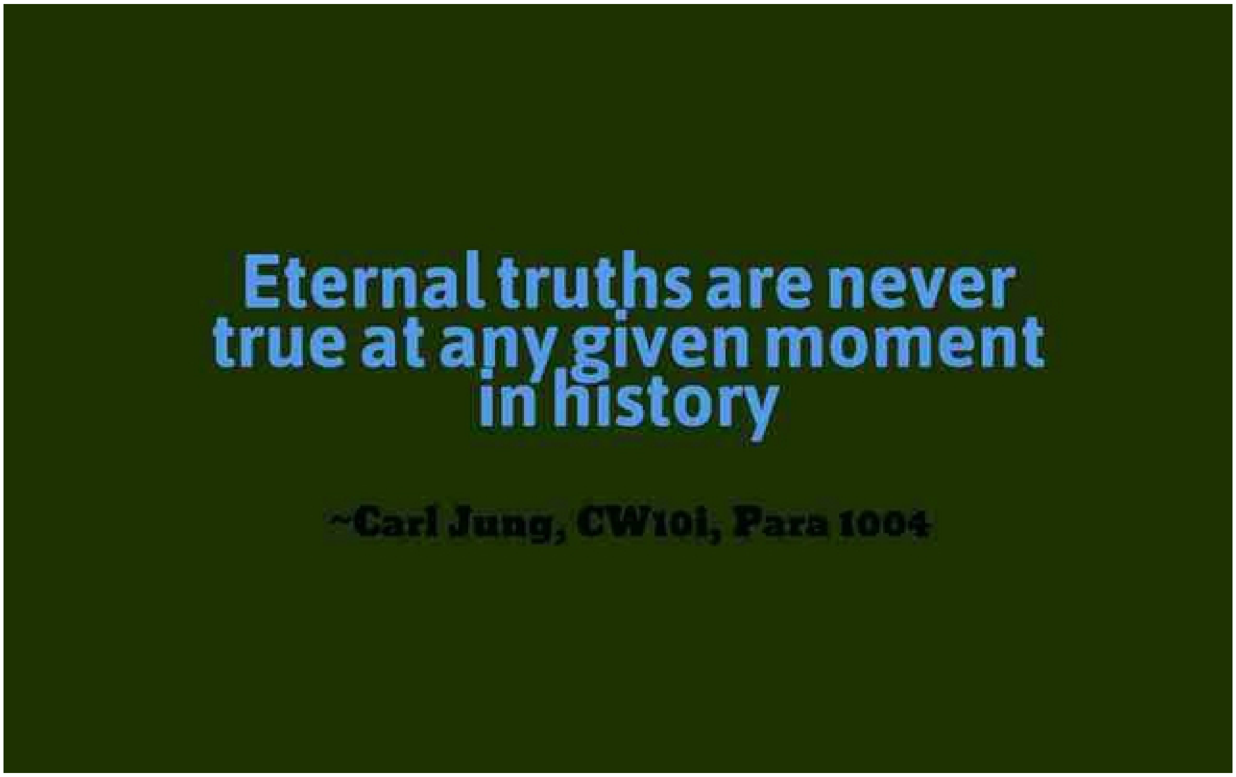
~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 38

The souls or spirits of the dead are identical with the psychic activity of the living; they merely continue it. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 38

[10]

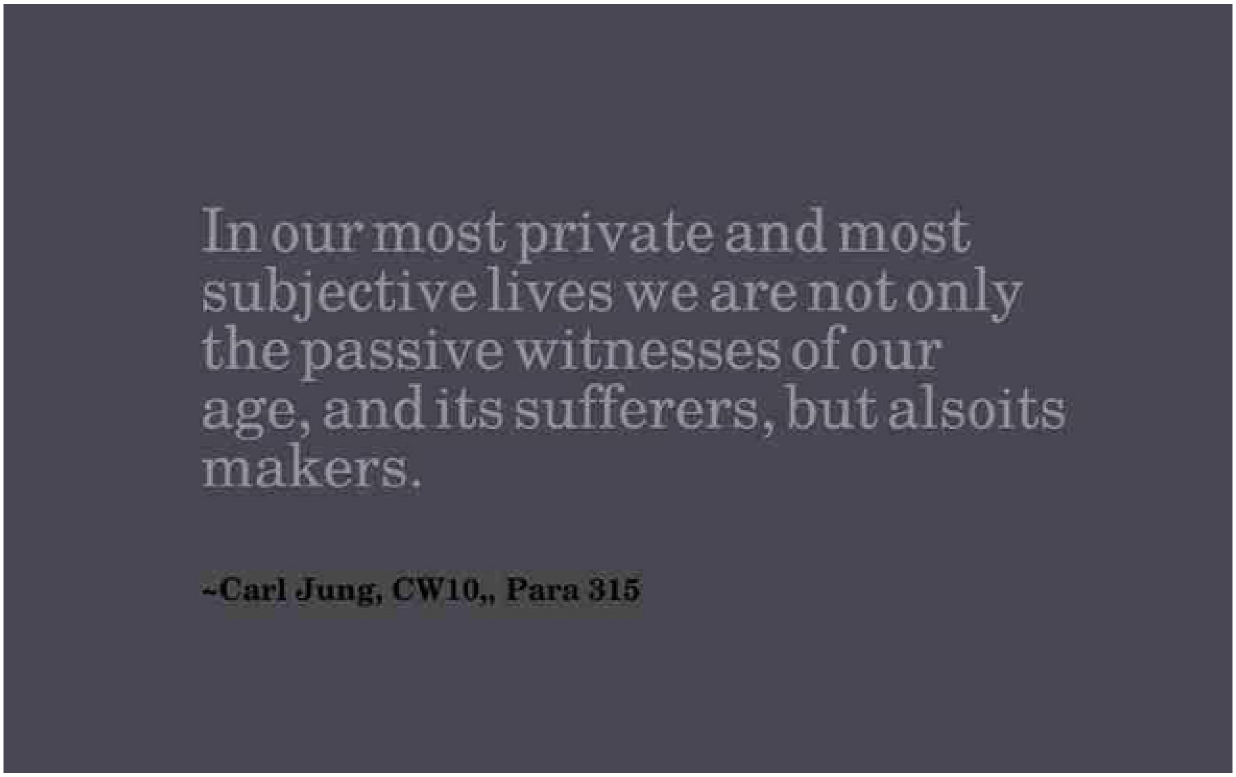


Eternal truths are never true at any given moment in history

~Carl Jung, CW10i, Para 1004

Eternal truths are never true at any given moment in history. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 1004

[11]

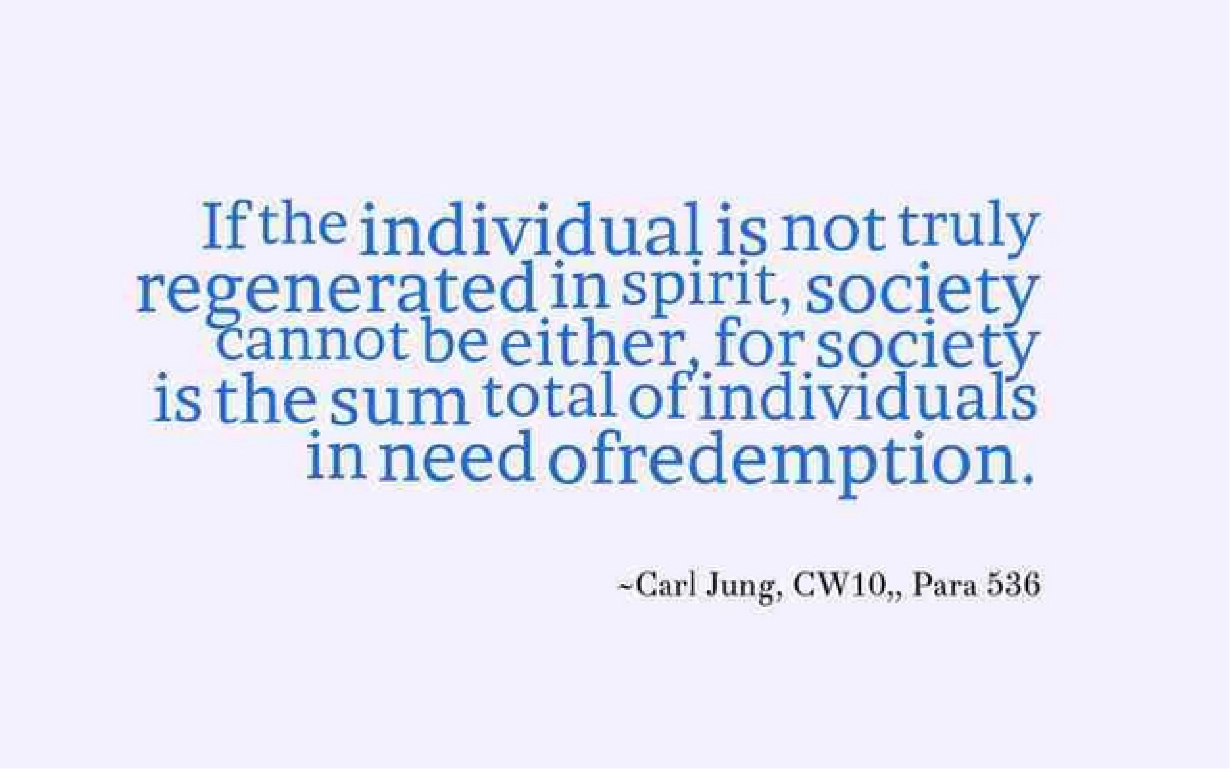


In our most private and most subjective lives we are not only the passive witnesses of our age, and its sufferers, but alsoits makers.

~Carl Jung, CW10,, Para 315

In our most private and most subjective lives we are not only the passive witnesses of our age, and its sufferers, but also its makers. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 315.

[12]

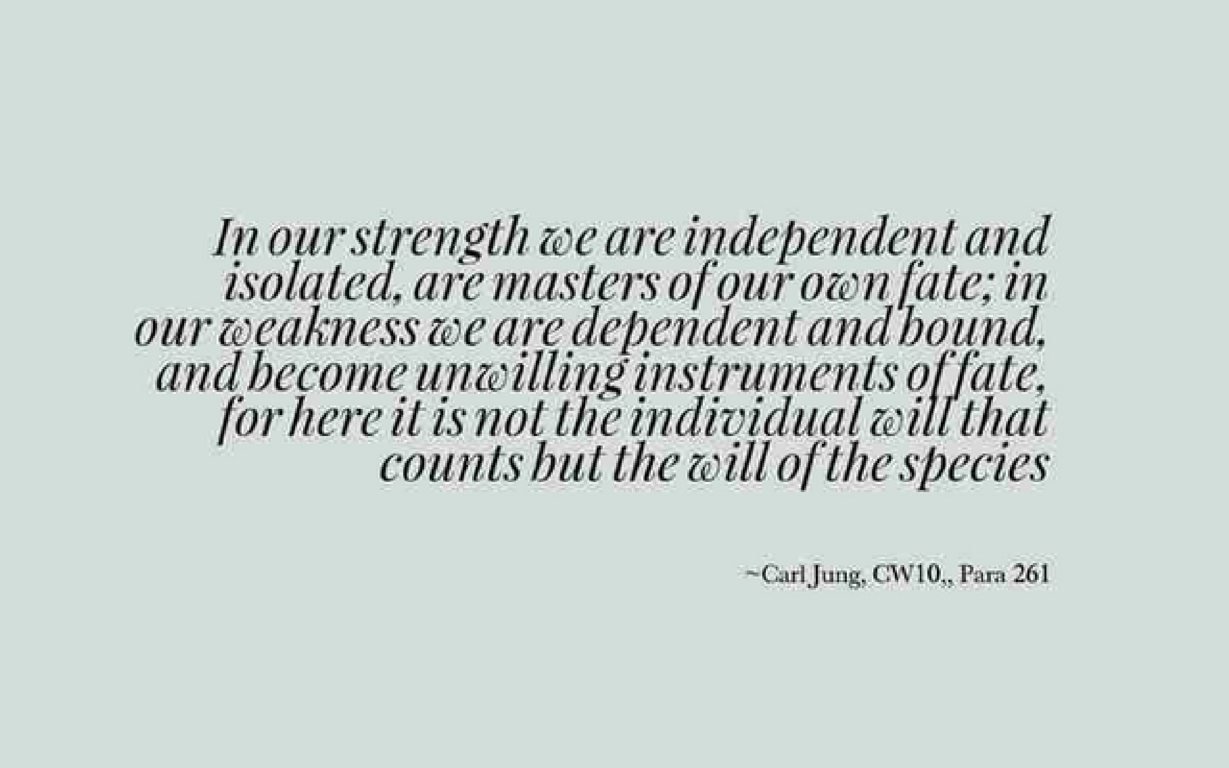


If the individual is not truly regenerated in spirit, society cannot be either, for society is the sum total of individuals in need ofredemption.

~Carl Jung, CW10,, Para 536

If the individual is not truly regenerated in spirit, society cannot be either, for society is the sum total of individuals in need of redemption. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 536

[13]



In our strength we are independent and isolated, are masters of our own fate; in our weakness we are dependent and bound, and become unwilling instruments of fate, for here it is not the individual will that counts but the will of the species

~Carl Jung, CW10,, Para 261

In our strength we are independent and isolated, are masters of our own fate; in our weakness we are dependent and bound, and become unwilling instruments of fate, for here it is not the individual will that counts but the will of the species. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 261

[14]

But, precisely because the truest and most devoted love is also the most beautiful, let no man seek to make it easy.

~Carl Jung, CW10,, Para 232

But, precisely because the truest and most devoted love is also the most beautiful, let no man seek to make it easy.
Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 232

[15]

He is a sorry knight who shrinks from the difficulty of loving his lady.

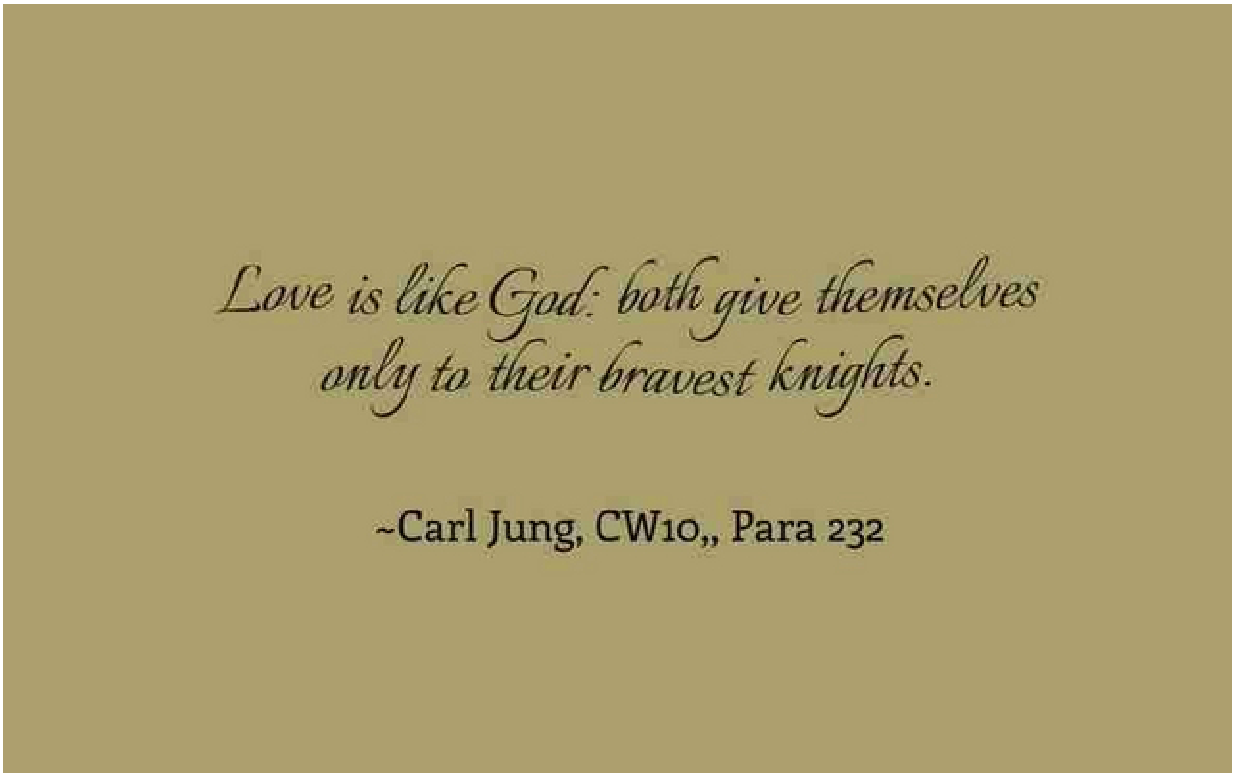
~Carl Jung, CW10, Para 232

He is a sorry knight who shrinks from the difficulty of loving his lady. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 232

[16]

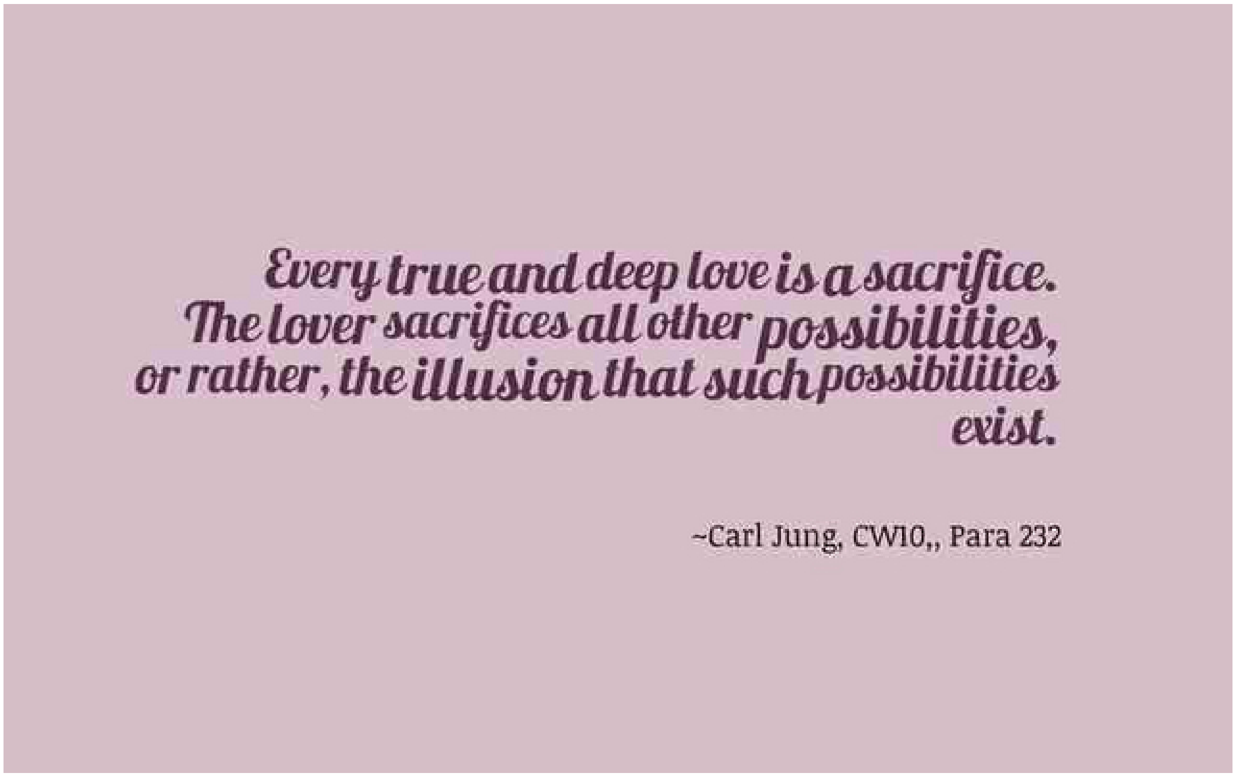


Love is like God: both give themselves only to their bravest knights.

~Carl Jung, CW10,, Para 232

Love is like God: both give themselves only to their bravest knights. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 232

[17]



Every true and deep love is a sacrifice.
The lover sacrifices all other possibilities, or rather, the illusion that such possibilities exist.

~Carl Jung, CW10,, Para 232

Every true and deep love is a sacrifice. The lover sacrifices all other possibilities, or rather, the illusion that such possibilities exist. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 231

[18]

WHEN, TOWARDS MIDDLE LIFE, THE LAST GLEAM OF CHILDHOOD ILLUSION FADES—THIS
IT MUST BE OWNED IS TRUE ONLY OF AN ALMOST IDEAL LIFE, FOR MANY GO AS CHILDREN TO THEIR GRAVES—THEN THE ARCHETYPE
OF THE MATURE MAN OR WOMAN EMERGES
FROM THE PARENTAL IMAGO: AN IMAGE OF MAN AS WOMAN HAS KNOWN HIM FROM THE BEGINNING OF TIME, AND AN IMAGE OF WOMAN THAT MAN CARRIES WITHIN HIM ETERNALLY.

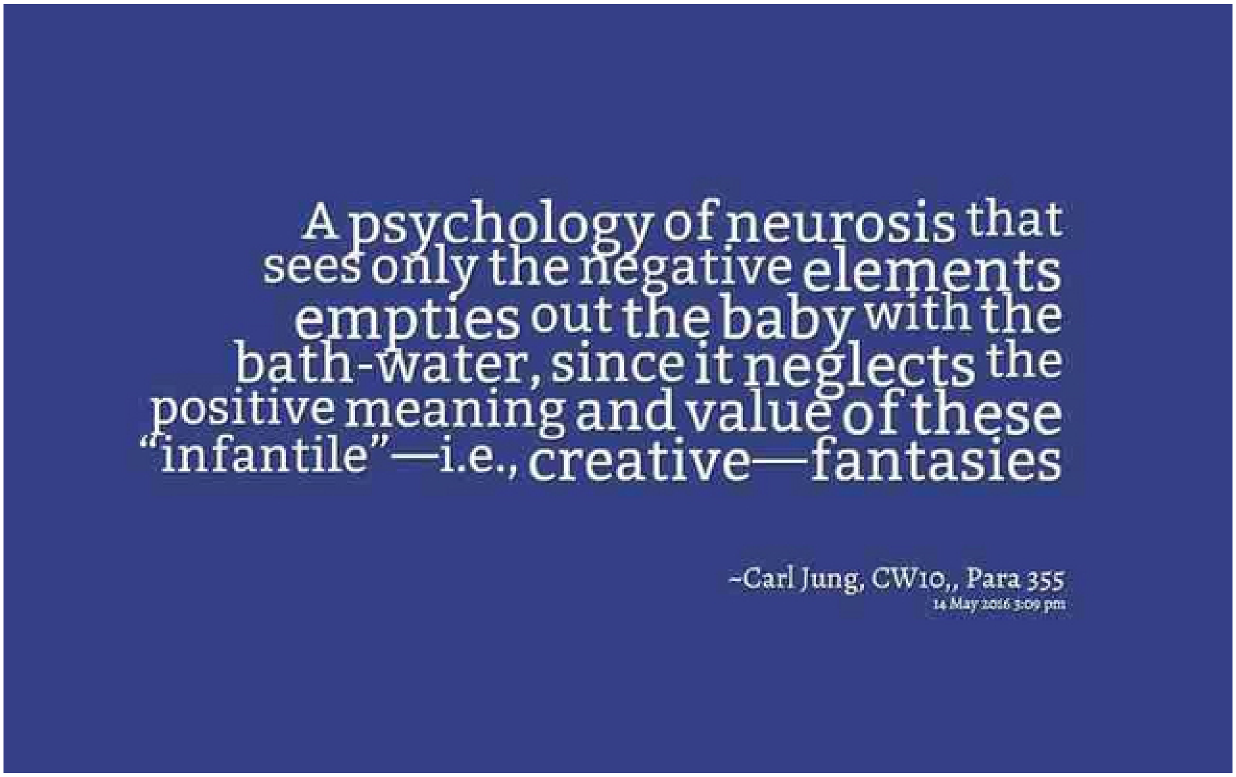
~Carl Jung, CW10,, Para 232

When, towards middle life, the last gleam of childhood illusion fades—this it must be owned is true only of an almost ideal life, for many go as children to their graves—then the archetype of the mature man or woman emerges from the parental imago: an image of man as woman has known him from the beginning of time, and an image of woman that man carries within him eternally. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 74

[19]

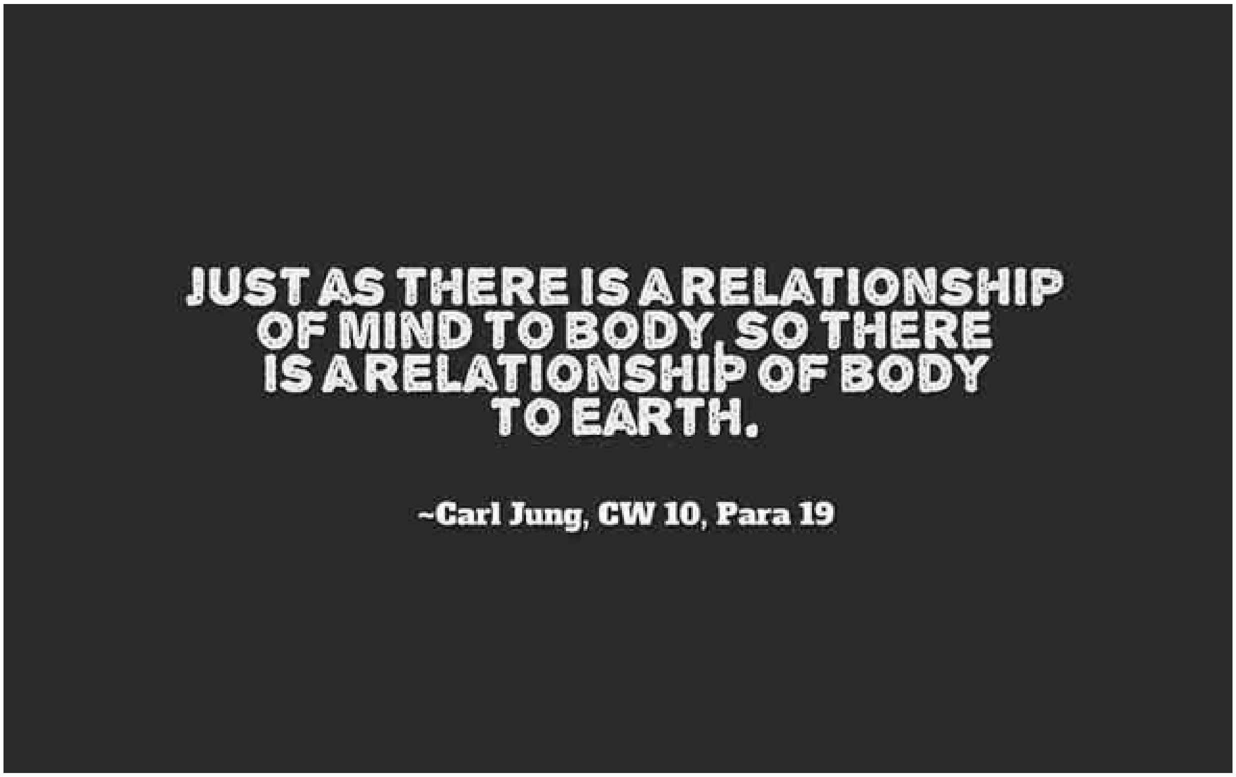


A psychology of neurosis that sees only the negative elements empties out the baby with the bath-water, since it neglects the positive meaning and value of these "infantile"—i.e., creative—fantasies

~Carl Jung, CW10,, Para 355
14 May 2016 3:09 pm

A psychology of neurosis that sees only the negative elements empties out the baby with the bath-water, since it neglects the positive meaning and value of these "infantile"—i.e., creative—fantasies. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 355

[20]

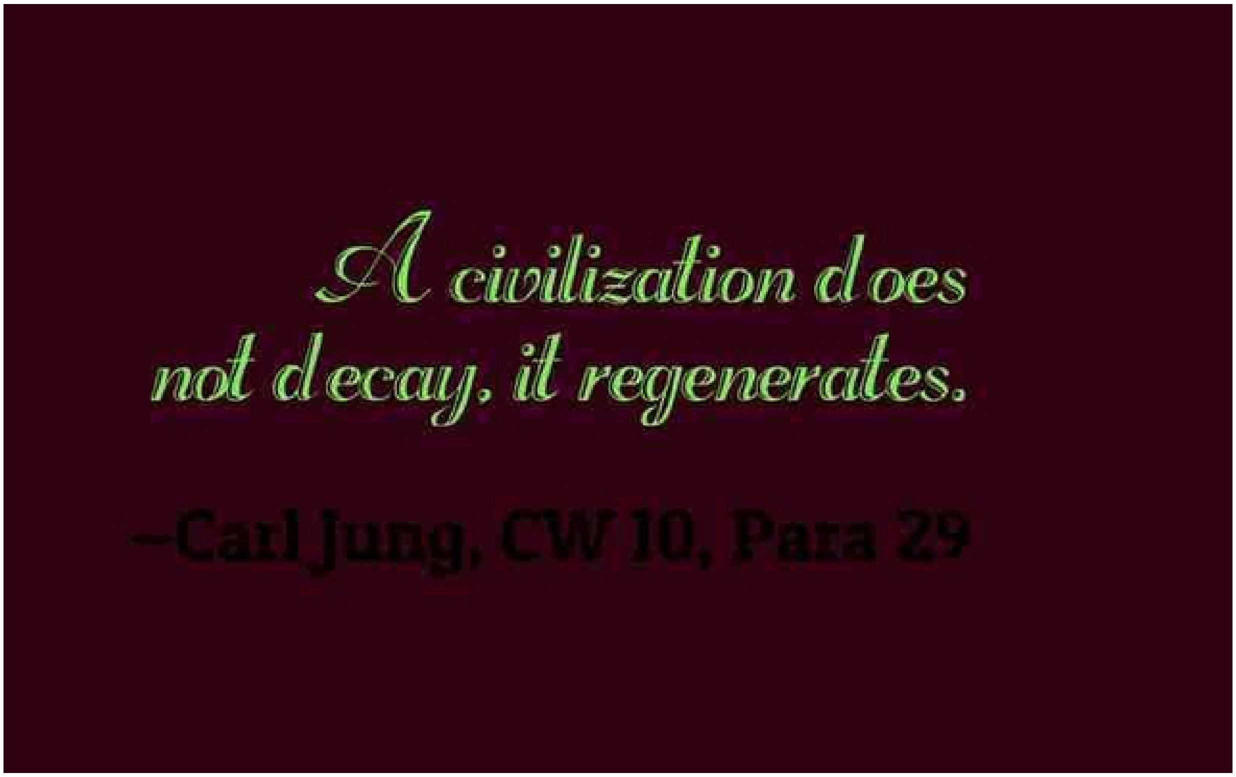


JUST AS THERE IS A RELATIONSHIP OF MIND TO BODY, SO THERE IS A RELATIONSHIP OF BODY TO EARTH.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 19

Just as there is a relationship of mind to body, so there is a relationship of body to earth. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 19

[21]

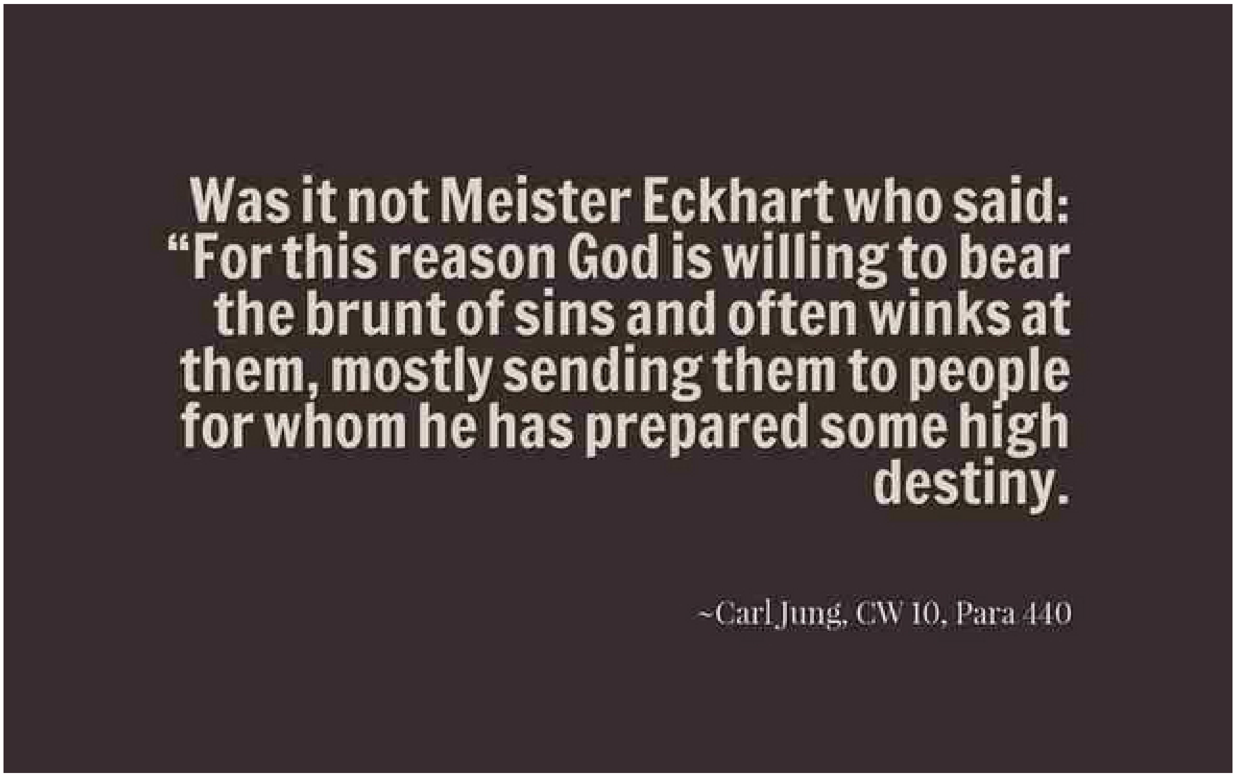


A civilization does not decay, it regenerates.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 29

A civilization does not decay, it regenerates. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 299

[22]

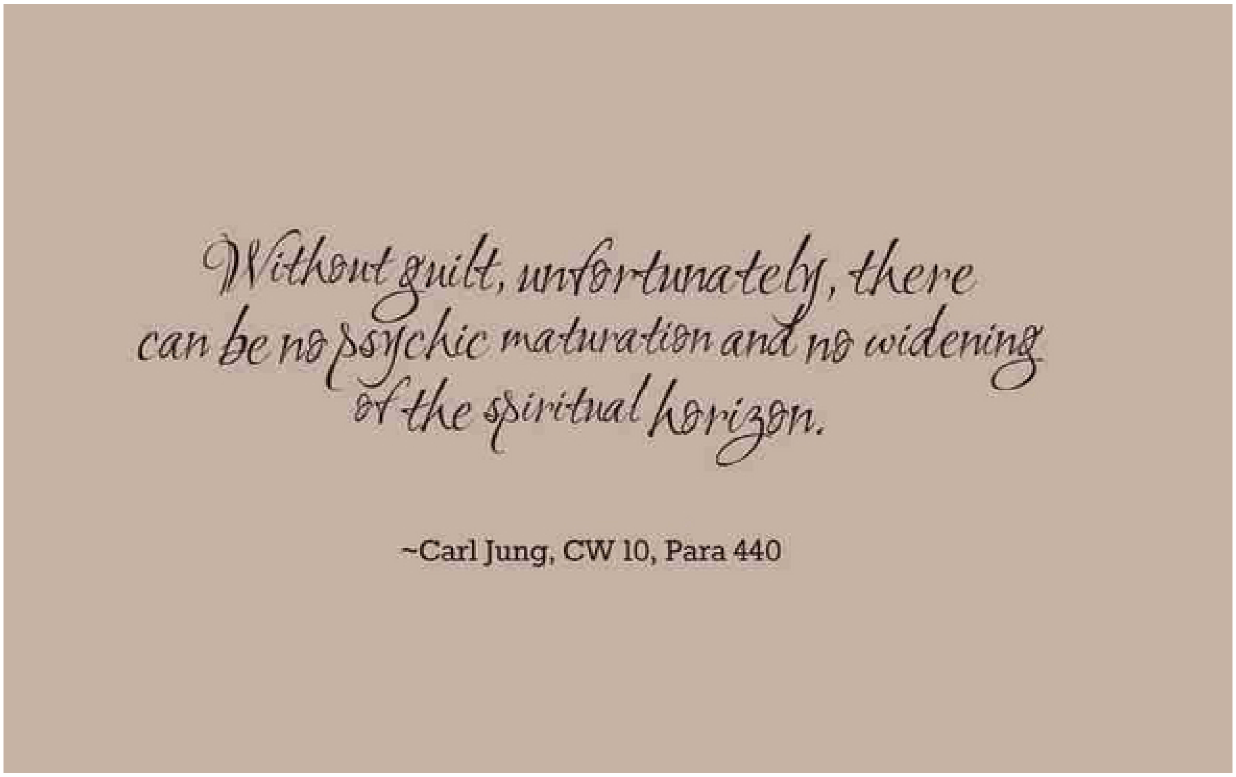


Was it not Meister Eckhart who said: “For this reason God is willing to bear the brunt of sins and often winks at them, mostly sending them to people for whom he has prepared some high destiny.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 440

Was it not Meister Eckhart who said: “For this reason God is willing to bear the brunt of sins and often winks at them, mostly sending them to people for whom he has prepared some high destiny. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 440

[23]

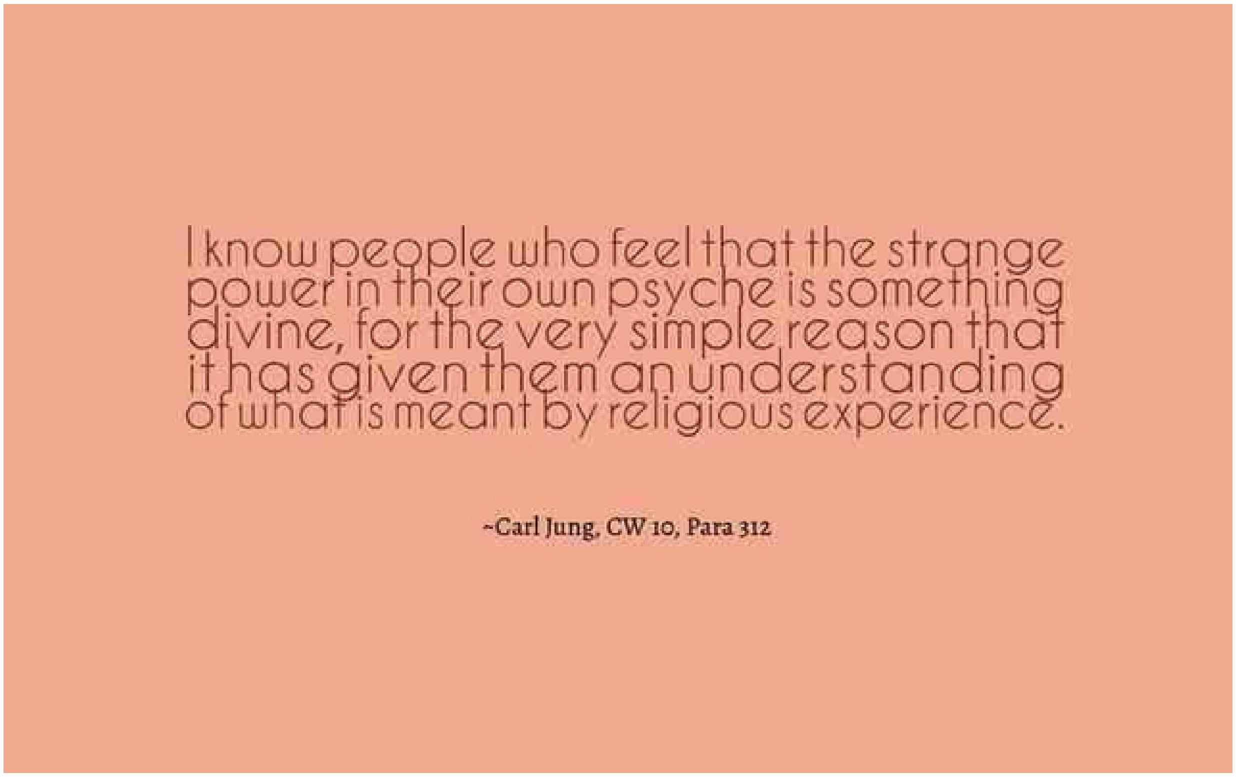


Without guilt, unfortunately, there can be no psychic maturation and no widening of the spiritual horizon.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 440

Without guilt, unfortunately, there can be no psychic maturation and no widening of the spiritual horizon. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 440

[24]

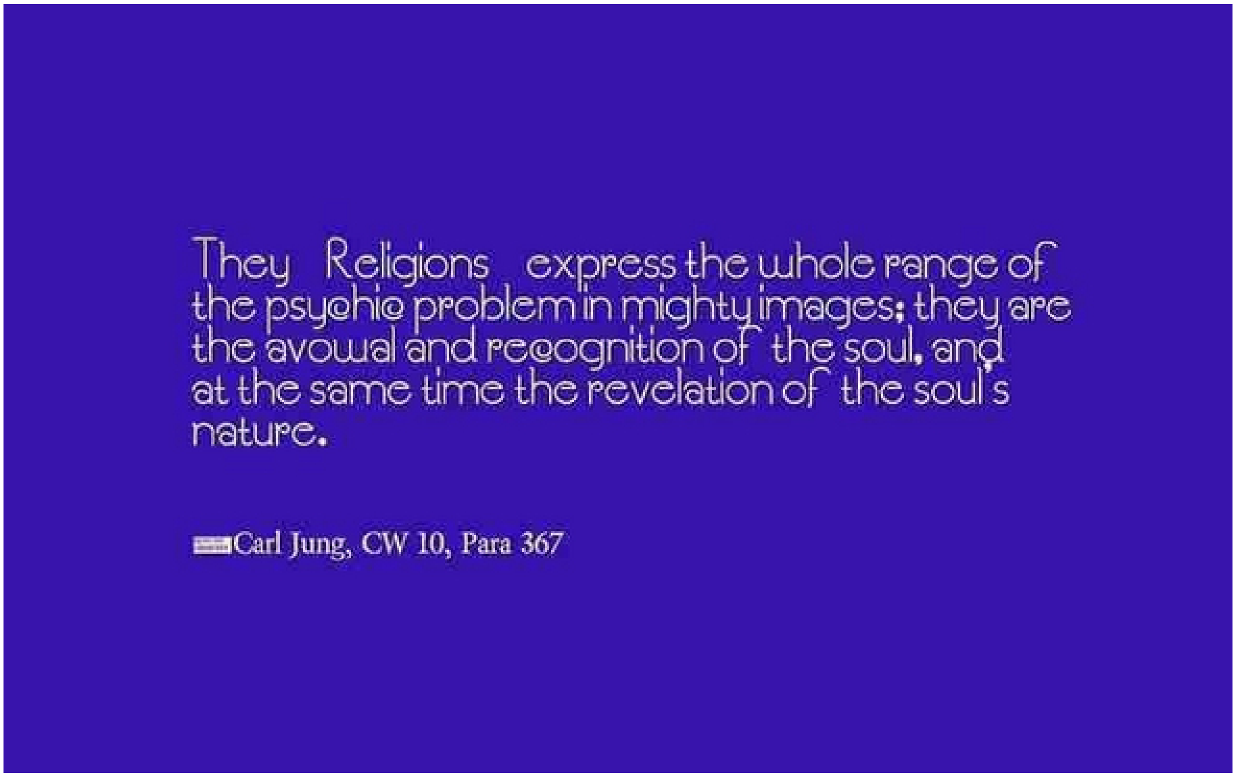


I know people who feel that the strange power in their own psyche is something divine, for the very simple reason that it has given them an understanding of what is meant by religious experience.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 312

I know people who feel that the strange power in their own psyche is something divine, for the very simple reason that it has given them an understanding of what is meant by religious experience. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 312.

[25]



They Religions express the whole range of the psychic problem in mighty images; they are the avowal and recognition of the soul, and at the same time the revelation of the soul's nature.

Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 367

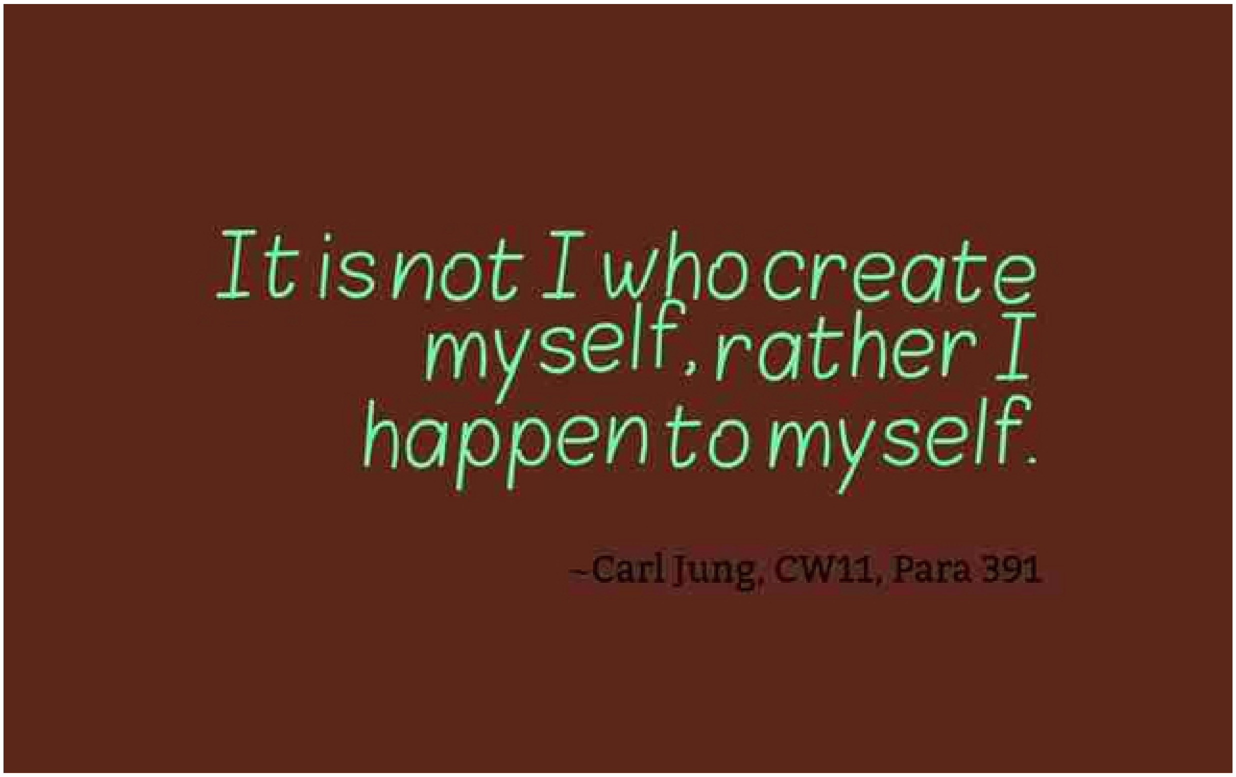
They [Religions] express the whole range of the psychic problem in mighty images; they are the avowal and recognition of the soul, and at the same time the revelation of the soul's nature. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 367

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d2ca0-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a1354-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3414b-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5dc18-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5d627-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/744e4-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c6000-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5b23c-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/afdd7-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2f979-kkk.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b2762-lll.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4ca28-mmm.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cc01f-nnn.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2b494-ooo.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3c0c6-ppp.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a3001-qqq.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/963fa-rrr.jpg`

18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4afd9-sss.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7ae69-ttt.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/acc83-uuu.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/413a0-vvv.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/235af-www.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/73c96-xxx.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/637ec-yyy.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b437c-zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 37 (2019-03-16 11:39)

[1]

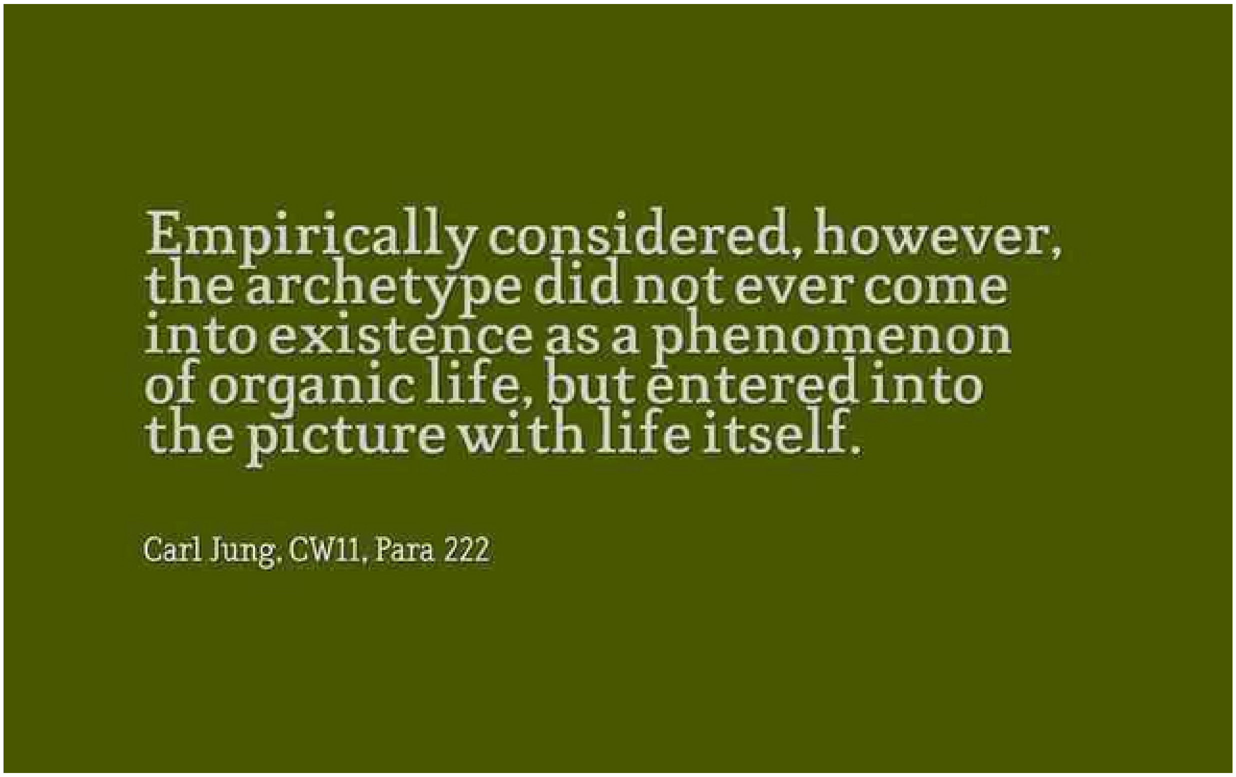


It is not I who create myself, rather I happen to myself.

~Carl Jung, CW11, Para 391

It is not I who create myself, rather I happen to myself. Carl Jung, CW11, Para 391

[2]

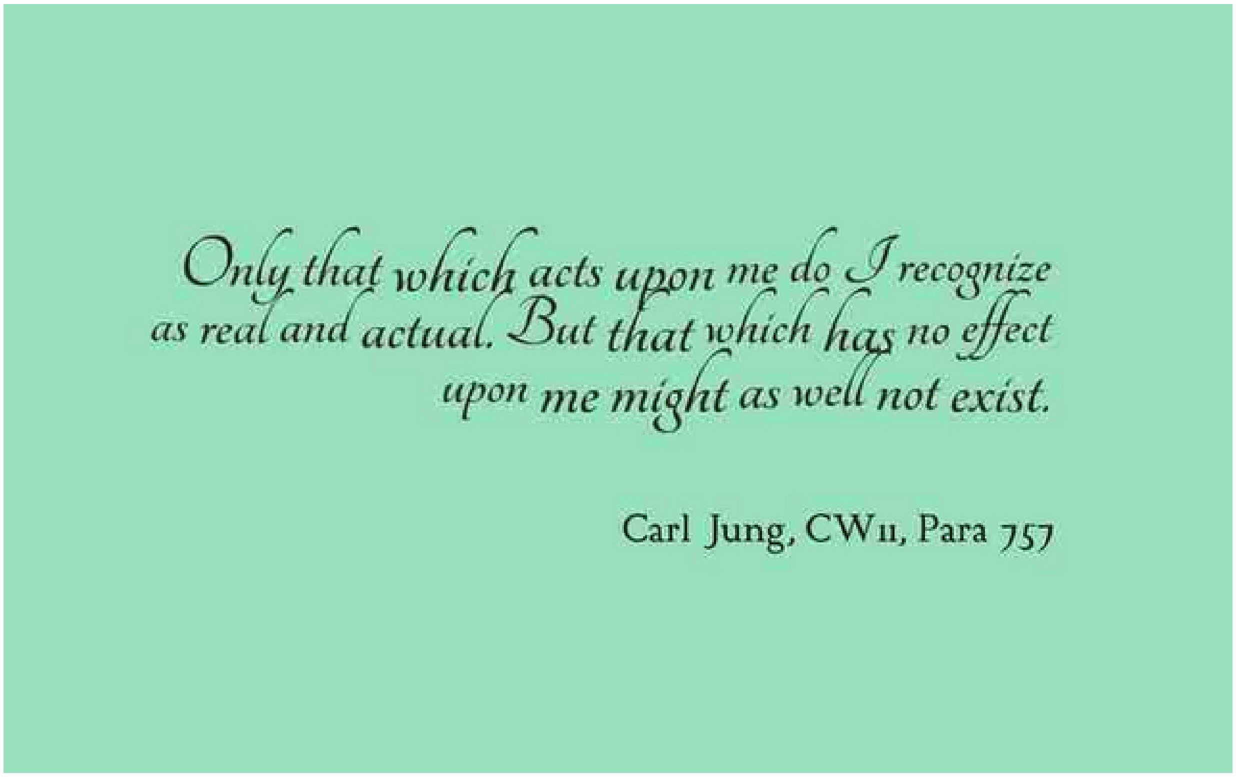


Empirically considered, however, the archetype did not ever come into existence as a phenomenon of organic life, but entered into the picture with life itself.

Carl Jung, CW11, Para 222

Empirically considered, however, the archetype did not ever come into existence as a phenomenon of organic life, but entered into the picture with life itself. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 222.

[3]

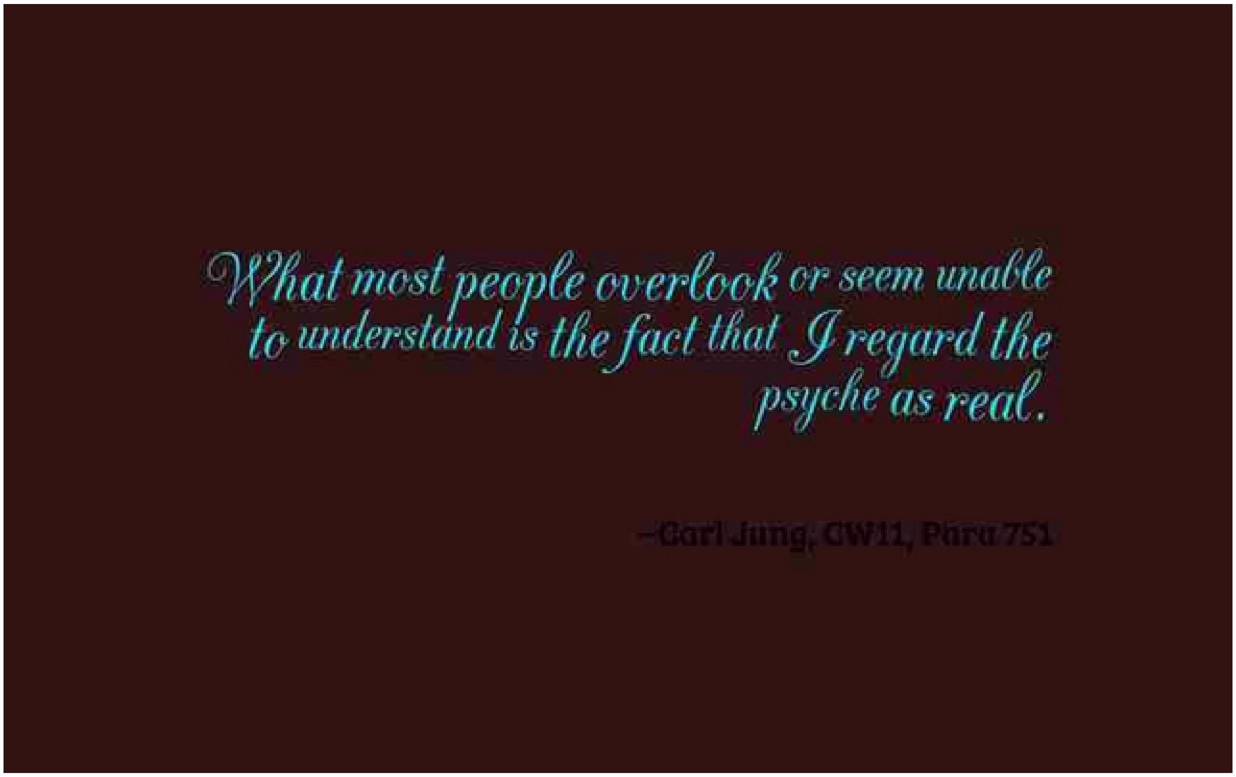


Only that which acts upon me do I recognize as real and actual. But that which has no effect upon me might as well not exist.

Carl Jung, CW11, Para 757

Only that which acts upon me do I recognize as real and actual. But that which has no effect upon me might as well not exist. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 757.

[4]

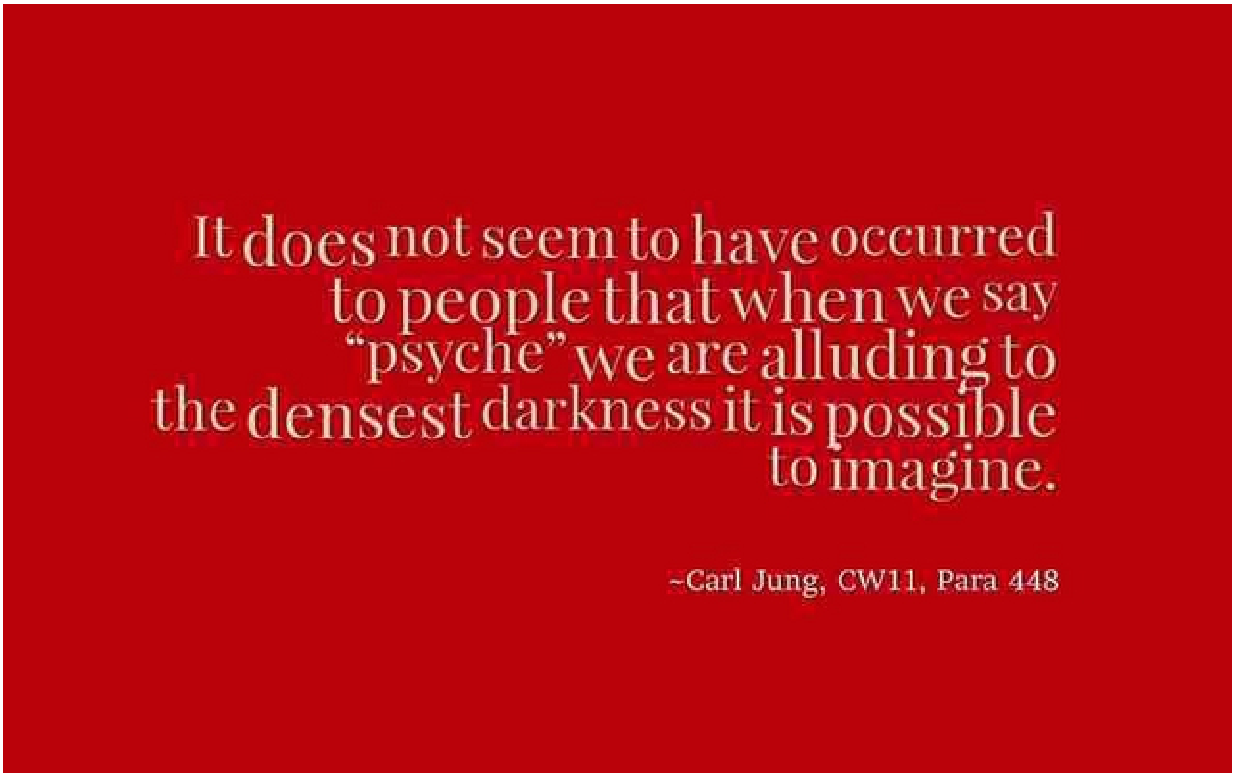


What most people overlook or seem unable to understand is the fact that I regard the psyche as real.

–Carl Jung, CW11, Para 751

What most people overlook or seem unable to understand is the fact that I regard the psyche as real. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 751

[5]

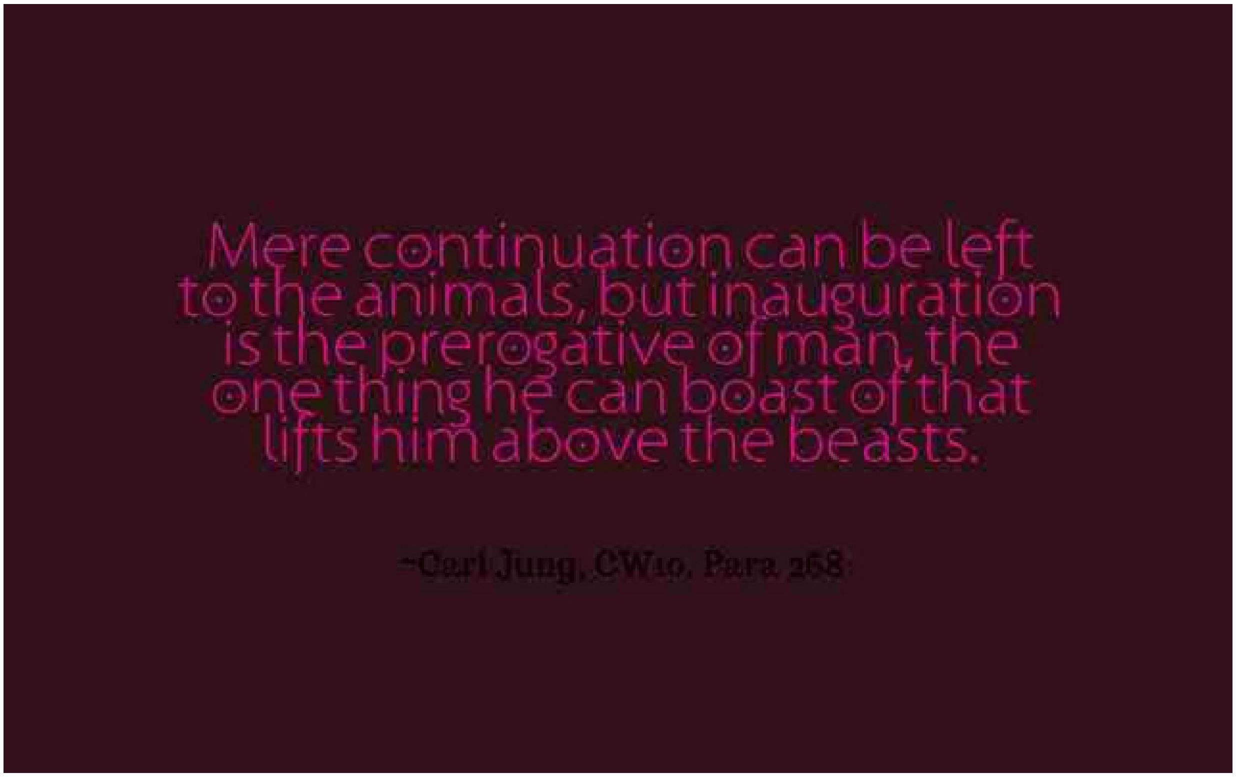


It does not seem to have occurred to people that when we say "psyche" we are alluding to the densest darkness it is possible to imagine.

~Carl Jung, CW11, Para 448

It does not seem to have occurred to people that when we say “psyche” we are alluding to the densest darkness it is possible to imagine. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 448

[6]

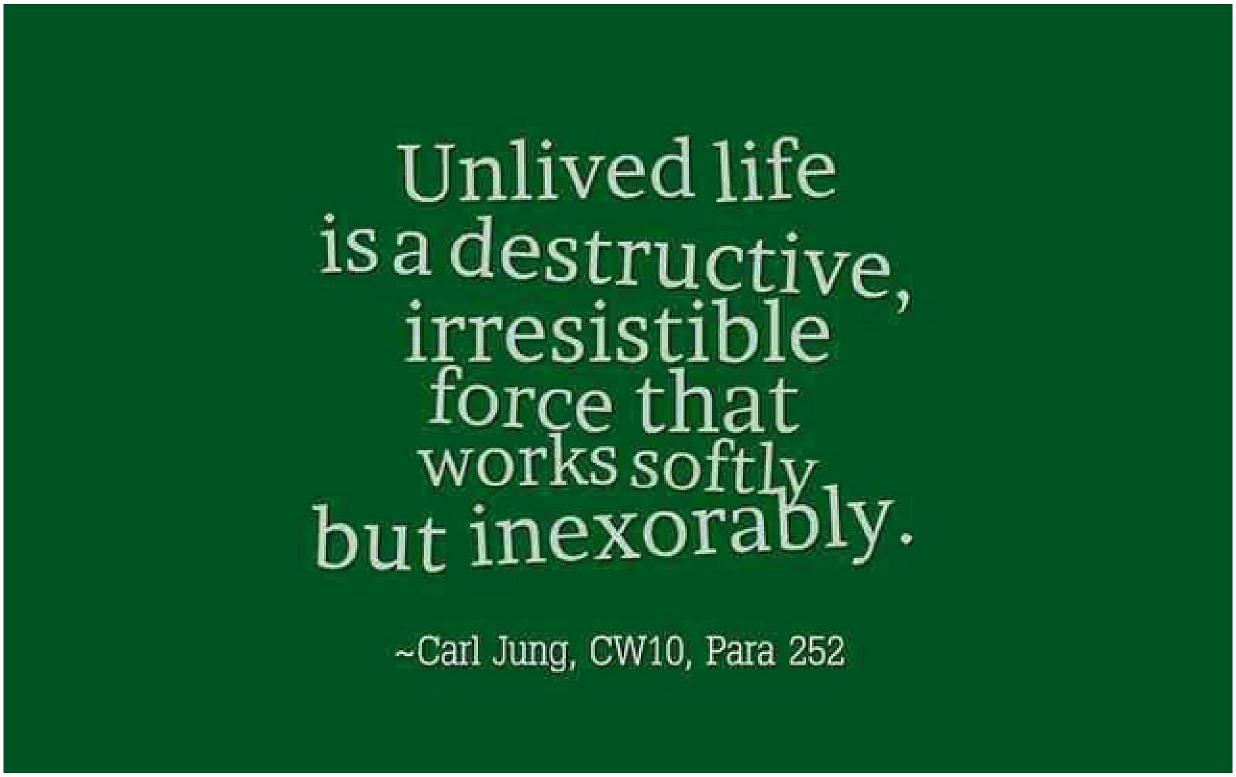


Mere continuation can be left to the animals, but inauguration is the prerogative of man, the one thing he can boast of that lifts him above the beasts.

~Carl Jung, CW10, Para 268

Mere continuation can be left to the animals, but inauguration is the prerogative of man, the one thing he can boast of that lifts him above the beasts. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 268

[7]

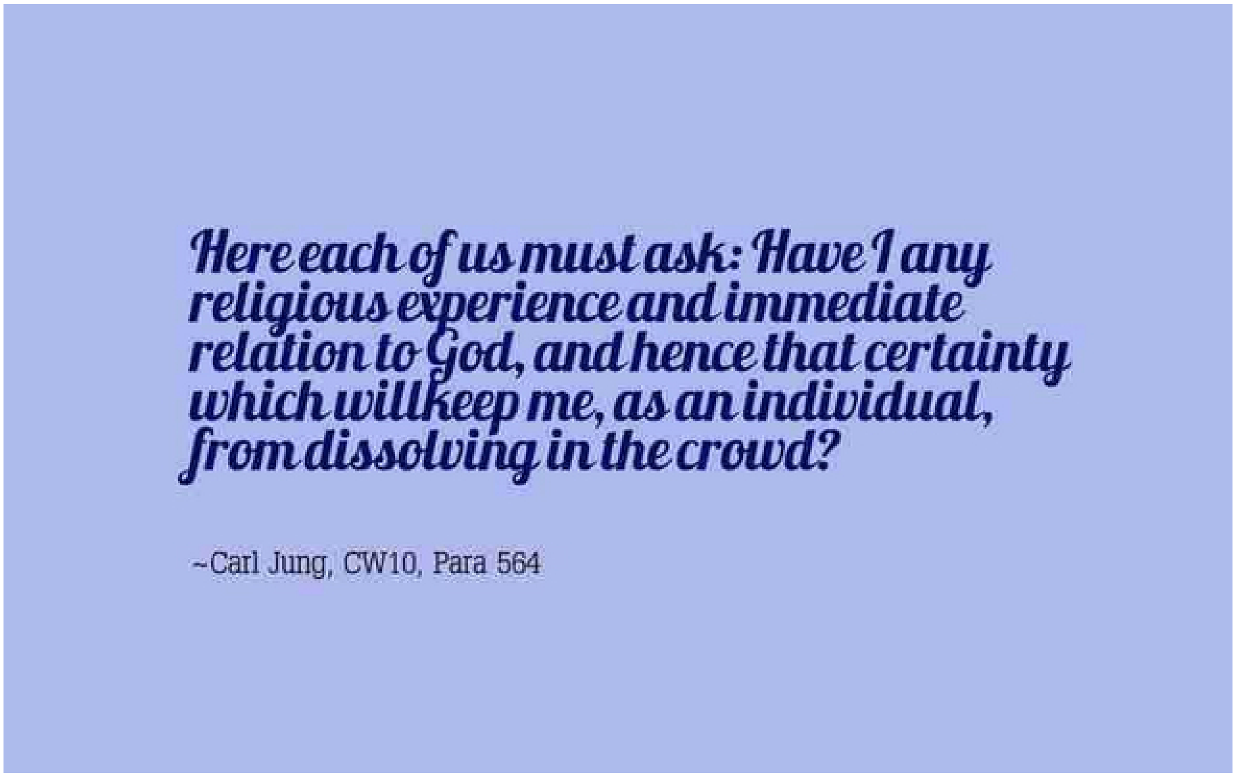


Unlived life is a destructive, irresistible force that works softly but inexorably.

~Carl Jung, CW10, Para 252

Unlived life is a destructive, irresistible force that works softly but inexorably. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 252

[8]

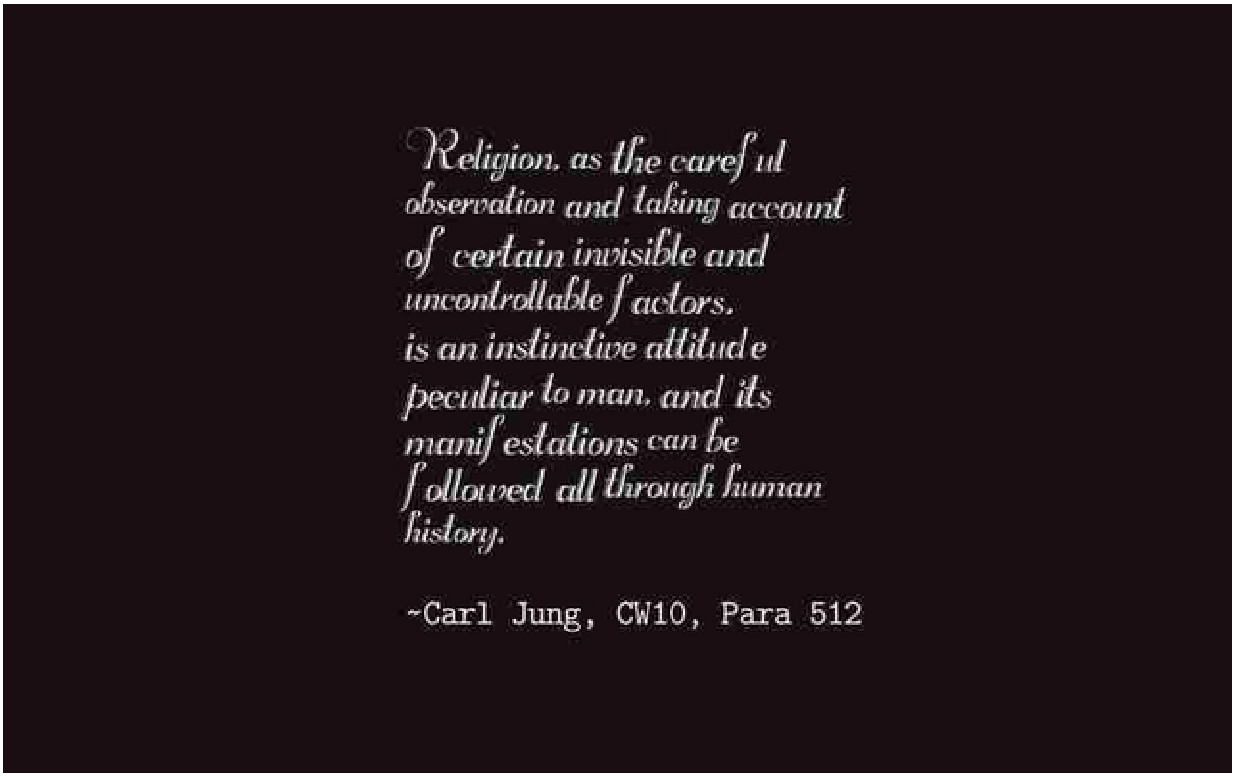


Here each of us must ask: Have I any religious experience and immediate relation to God, and hence that certainty which willkeep me, as an individual, from dissolving in the crowd?

~Carl Jung, CW10, Para 564

Here each of us must ask: Have I any religious experience and immediate relation to God, and hence that certainty which will keep me, as an individual, from dissolving in the crowd? Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 564

[9]



Religion, as the careful observation and taking account of certain invisible and uncontrollable factors, is an instinctive attitude peculiar to man, and its manifestations can be followed all through human history.

~Carl Jung, CW10, Para 512

Religion, as the careful observation and taking account of certain invisible and uncontrollable factors, is an instinctive attitude peculiar to man, and its manifestations can be followed all through human history. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 512

[10]

A creed coincides with the established Church or, at any rate, forms a public institution whose members include not only true believers but vast numbers of people who can only be described as "indifferent" in matters of religion and who belong to it simply by force of habit.
Here the difference between a creed and a religion becomes palpable.

~Carl Jung, CW10, Para 508

A creed coincides with the established Church or, at any rate, forms a public institution whose members include not only true believers but vast numbers of people who can only be described as "indifferent" in matters of religion and who belong to it simply by force of habit. Here the difference between a creed and a religion becomes palpable. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 508.

[11]

FOR WHEN THE SOUL VANISHED
AT DEATH, IT WAS NOT LOST;
IN THAT OTHER WORLD IT FORMED
THE LIVING COUNTER- POLE TO THE STATE OF DEATH IN THIS WORLD.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 493

For when the soul vanished at death, it was not lost; in that other world it formed the living counterpole to the state of death in this world. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 493

[12]

WHATEVER MAN'S WHOLENESS, OR THE SELF,
MAY MEAN
PER SE, EMPIRICALLY
IT IS AN IMAGE OF THE GOAL OF LIFE SPONTANEOUSLY PRODUCED
BY THE UNCONSCIOUS, IRRESPECTIVE OF THE WISHES AND FEARS OF THE CONSCIOUS MIND.

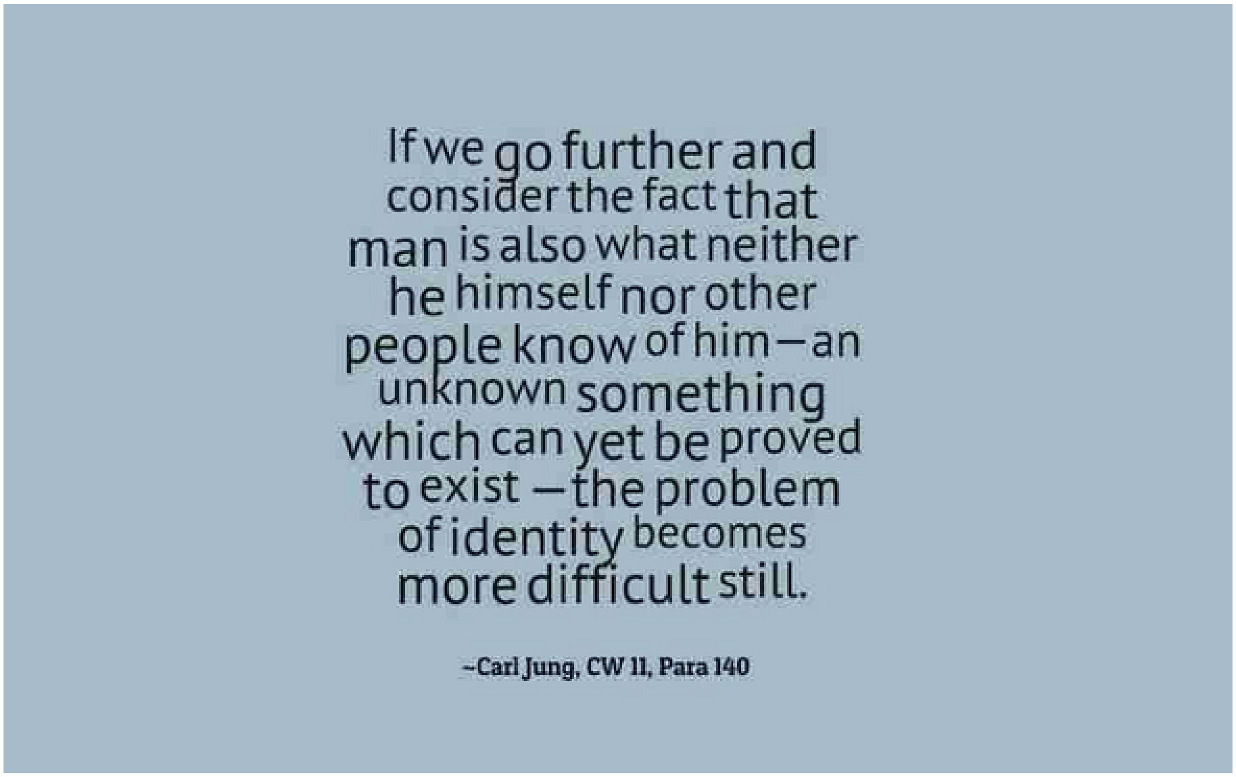
~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 745.

Whatever man’s wholeness, or the self, may mean per se, empirically it is an image of the goal of life spontaneously produced by the unconscious, irrespective of the wishes and fears of the conscious mind.   Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 745.



If we go further and consider the fact that man is also what neither he himself nor other people know of him—an unknown something which can yet be proved to exist —the problem of identity becomes more difficult still.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 140

If we go further and consider the fact that man is also what neither he himself nor other people know of him—an unknown something which can yet be proved to exist —the problem of identity becomes more difficult still.   Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 140

INDEED, IT IS QUITE IMPOSSIBLE TO DEFINE THE EXTENT AND THE ULTIMATE CHARACTER OF PSYCHIC EXISTENCE.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 140

Indeed, it is quite impossible to define the extent and the ultimate character of psychic existence. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 140

[15]

Freud has made a courageous attempt to elucidate the intricacies of dream psychology with the help of views which he gathered in the field of psychopathology.

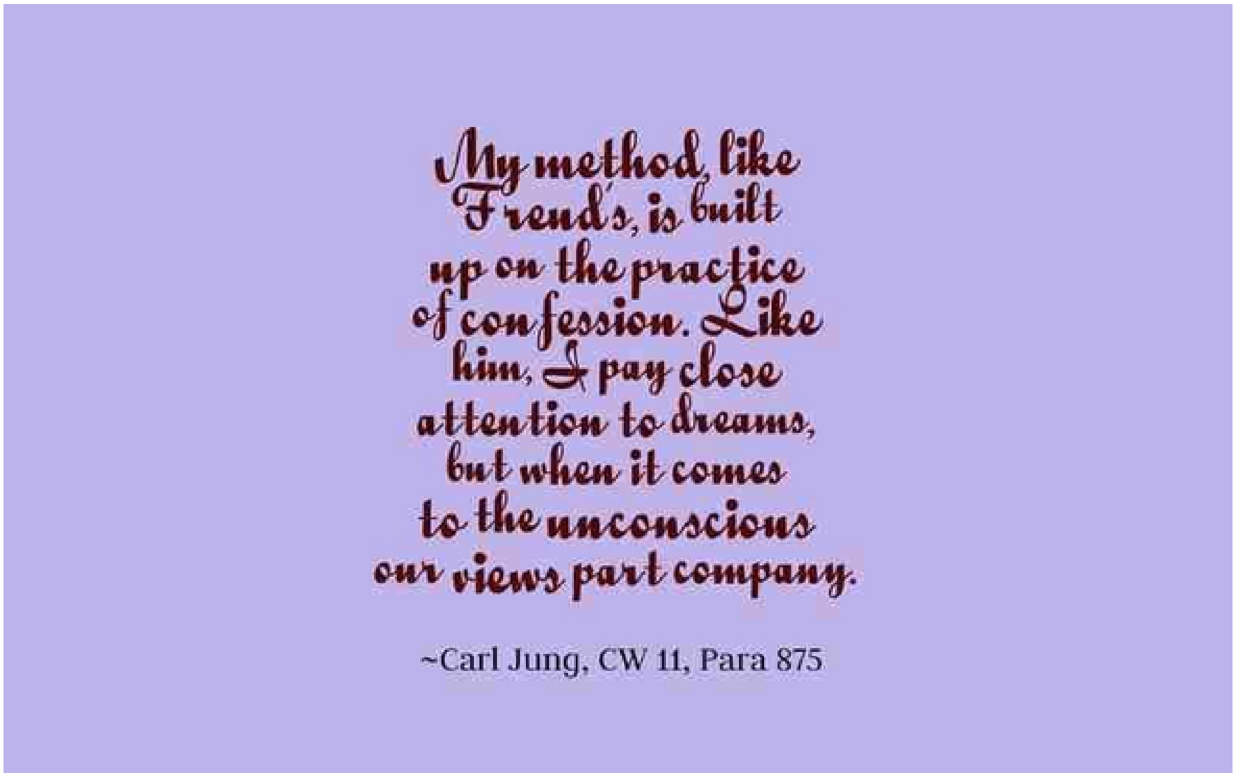
Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 41

Freud has made a courageous attempt to elucidate the intricacies of dream psychology with the help of views which he gathered in the field of psychopathology. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 41



My method, like Freud's, is built up on the practice of confession. Like him, I pay close attention to dreams, but when it comes to the unconscious our views part company.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 875

My method, like Freud’s, is built up on the practice of confession. Like him, I pay close attention to dreams, but when it comes to the unconscious our views part company. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 875

For me the unconscious is a collective psychic disposition, creative in character

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 875

For me the unconscious is a collective psychic disposition, creative in character. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 875

[18]

Freud's procedure is, in the main, analytical and reductive. To this I add a synthesis which emphasizes the purposiveness of unconscious tendencies with respect to personality development.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 875

Freud's procedure is, in the main, analytical and reductive. To this I add a synthesis which emphasizes the purposiveness of unconscious tendencies with respect to personality development. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 875

[19]

Behind a man’s actions there stands neither public opinion nor the moral code, but the personality of which he is stillunconscious.

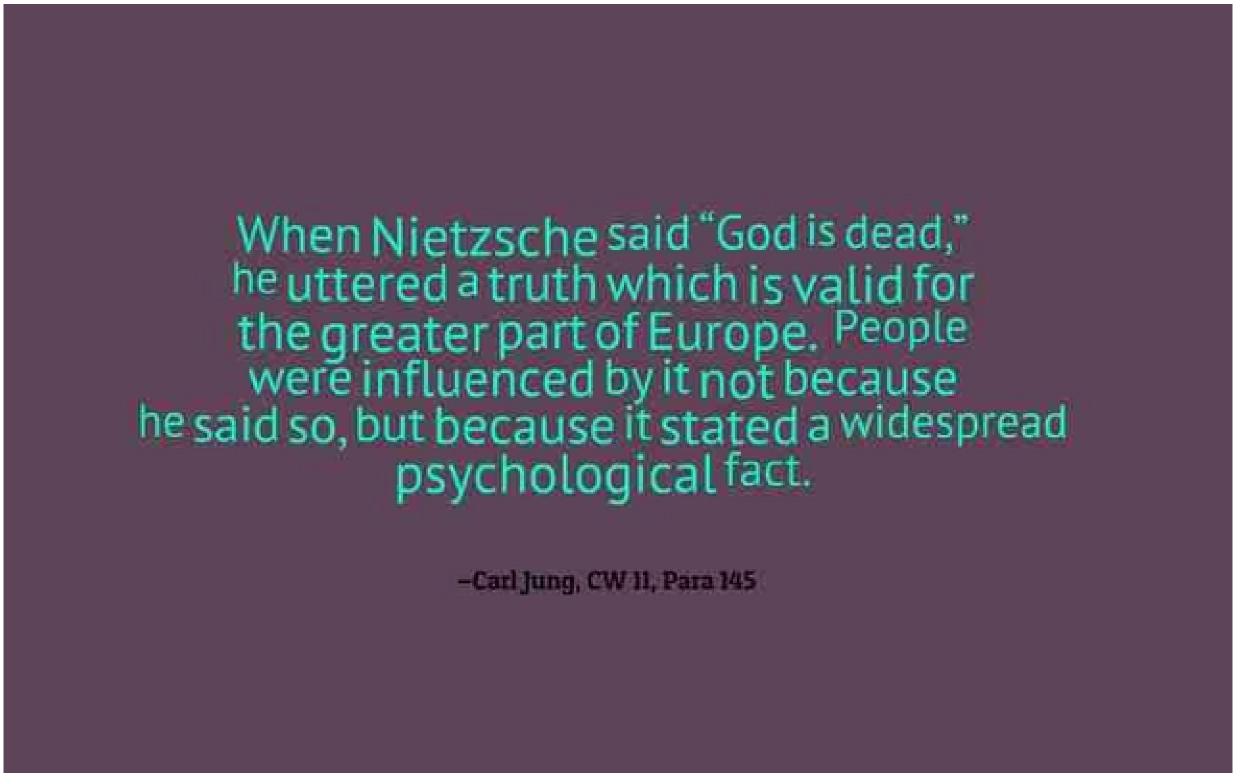
~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 390

Behind a man’s actions there stands neither public opinion nor the moral code, but the personality of which he is still unconscious. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 390

[20]

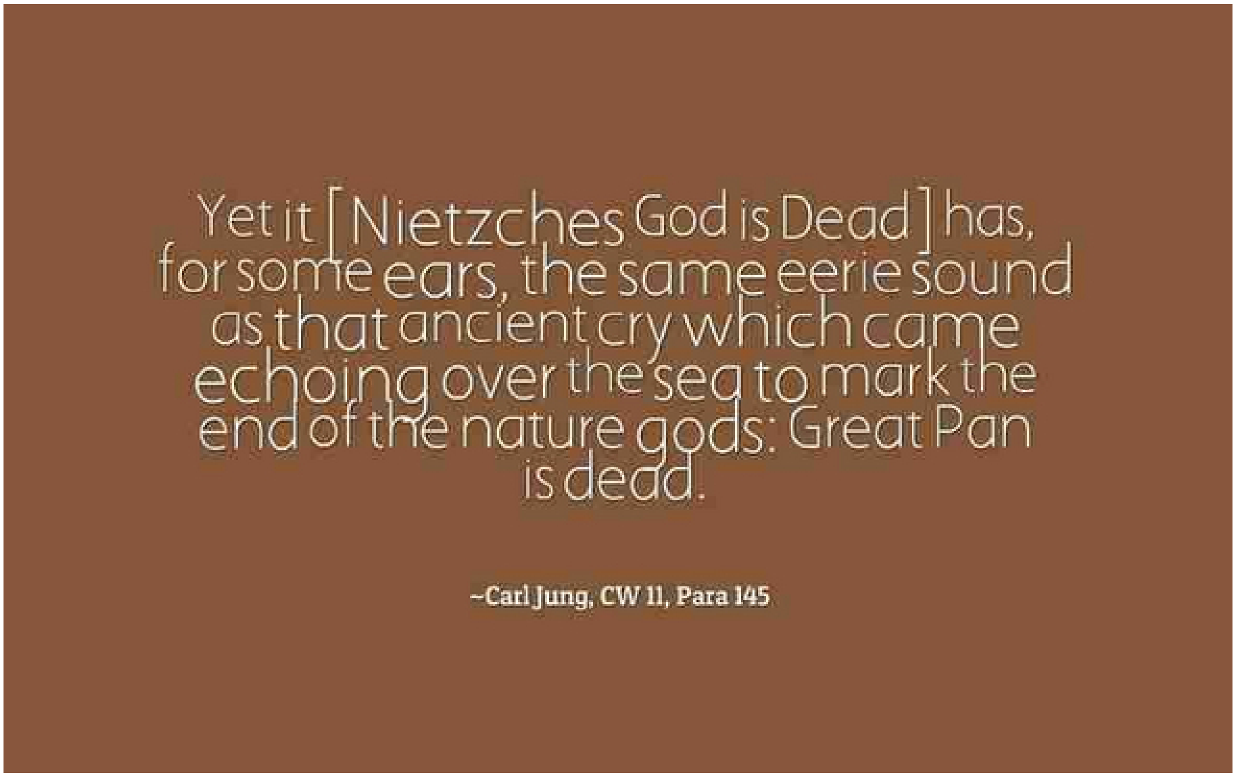


When Nietzsche said "God is dead," he uttered a truth which is valid for the greater part of Europe. People were influenced by it not because he said so, but because it stated a widespread psychological fact.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 145

When Nietzsche said "God is dead," he uttered a truth which is valid for the greater part of Europe. People were influenced by it not because he said so, but because it stated a widespread psychological fact. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 145.

[21]



Yet it [Nietzches God is Dead] has, for some ears, the same eerie sound as that ancient cry which came echoing over the sea to mark the end of the nature gods: Great Pan is dead.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 145

Yet it [Nietzche's "God is Dead"] has, for some ears, the same eerie sound as that ancient cry which came echoing over the sea to mark the end of the nature gods: "Great Pan is dead." Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 145.

[22]

All opposites are of God, therefore man must bend to this burden; and in so doing he finds that God in his "oppositeness" has taken possession of him, incarnated himself in him.

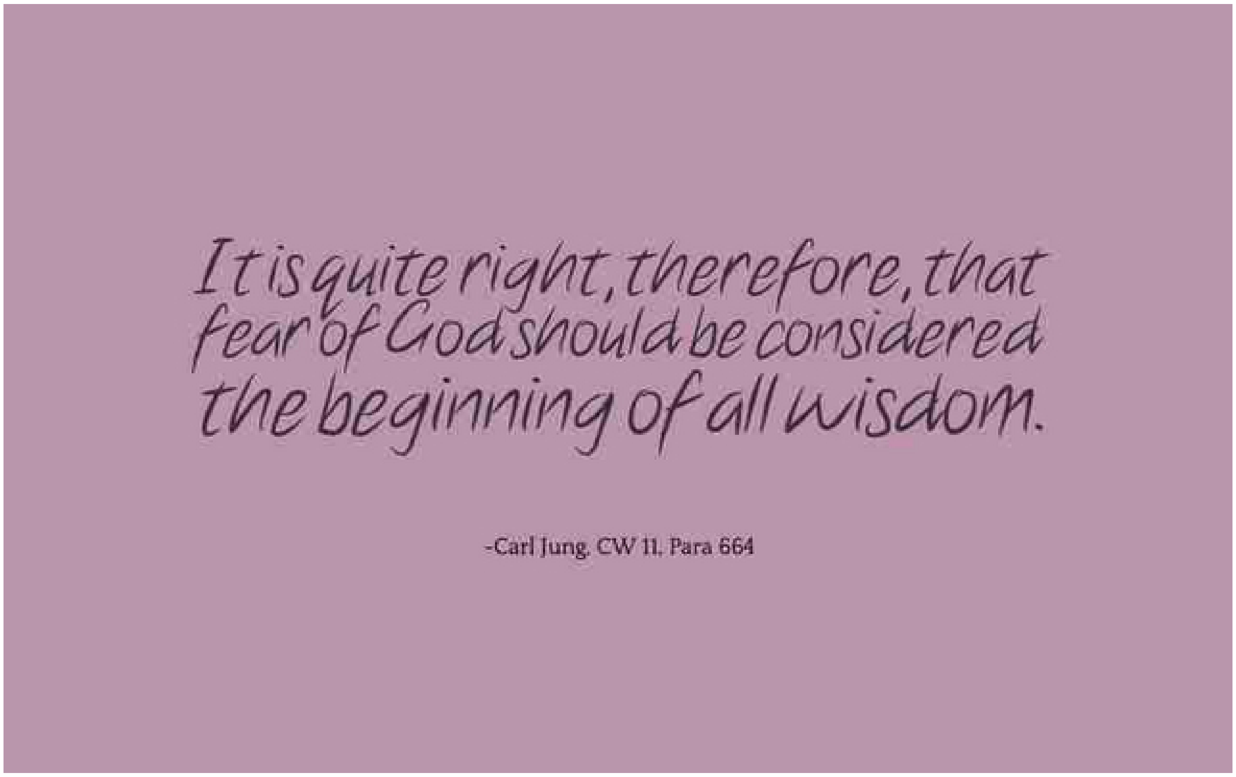
Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 664

All opposites are of God, therefore man must bend to this burden; and in so doing he finds that God in his "oppositeness" has taken possession of him, incarnated himself in him. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 664.

[23]

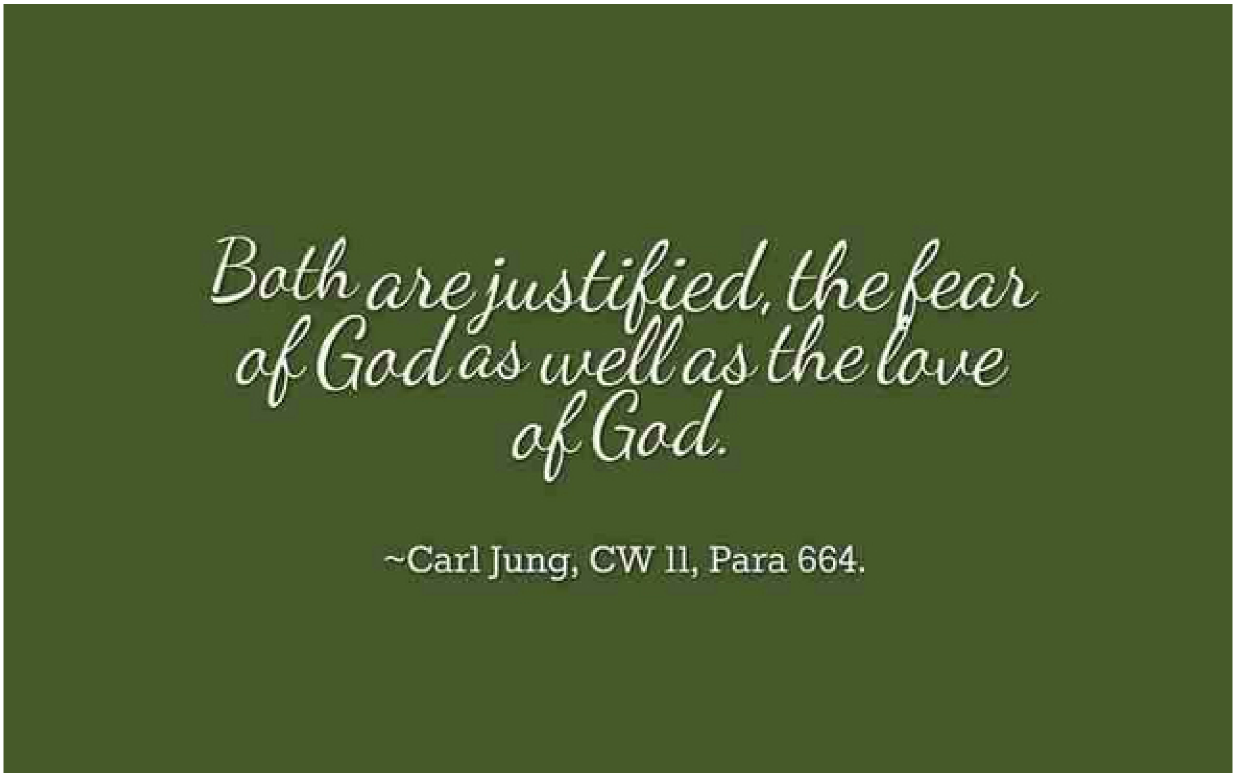


It is quite right, therefore, that fear of God should be considered the beginning of all wisdom.

-Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 664

It is quite right, therefore, that fear of God should be considered the beginning of all wisdom. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 664.

[24]

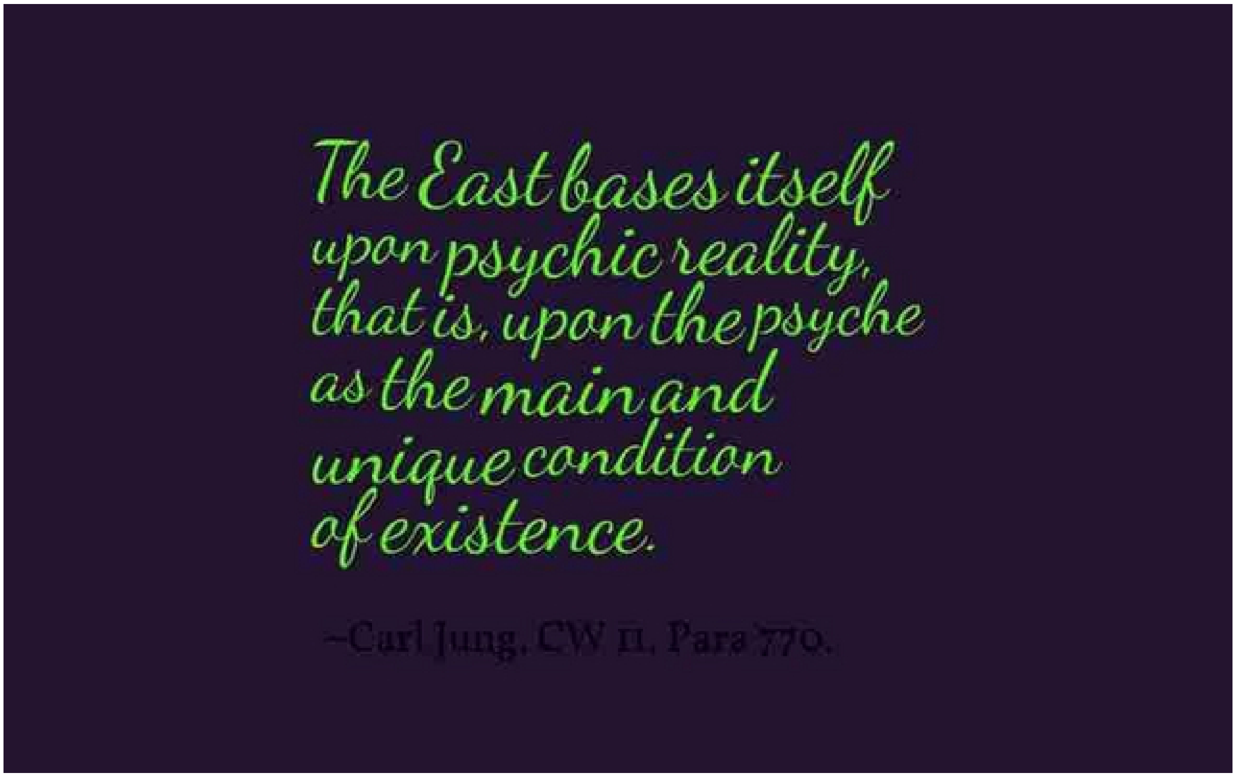


Both are justified, the fear of God as well as the love of God.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 664.

Both are justified, the fear of God as well as the love of God. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 664.

[25]



The East bases itself upon psychic reality, that is, upon the psyche as the main and unique condition of existence.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 770.

The East bases itself upon psychic reality, that is, upon the psyche as the main and unique condition of existence. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 770.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2c49e-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ee96e-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a2812-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/37675-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/291c7-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ddf82-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5629f-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2e154-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9b7e4-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/edf6d-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/24c22-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/61223-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b85b7-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dff2a-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/71dee-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/41376-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6cd9a-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aee01-rrr.jpg`

19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9d285-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1eb4f-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5ed58-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ea1a5-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4dcb8-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4f075-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f862e-yyy.jpg`

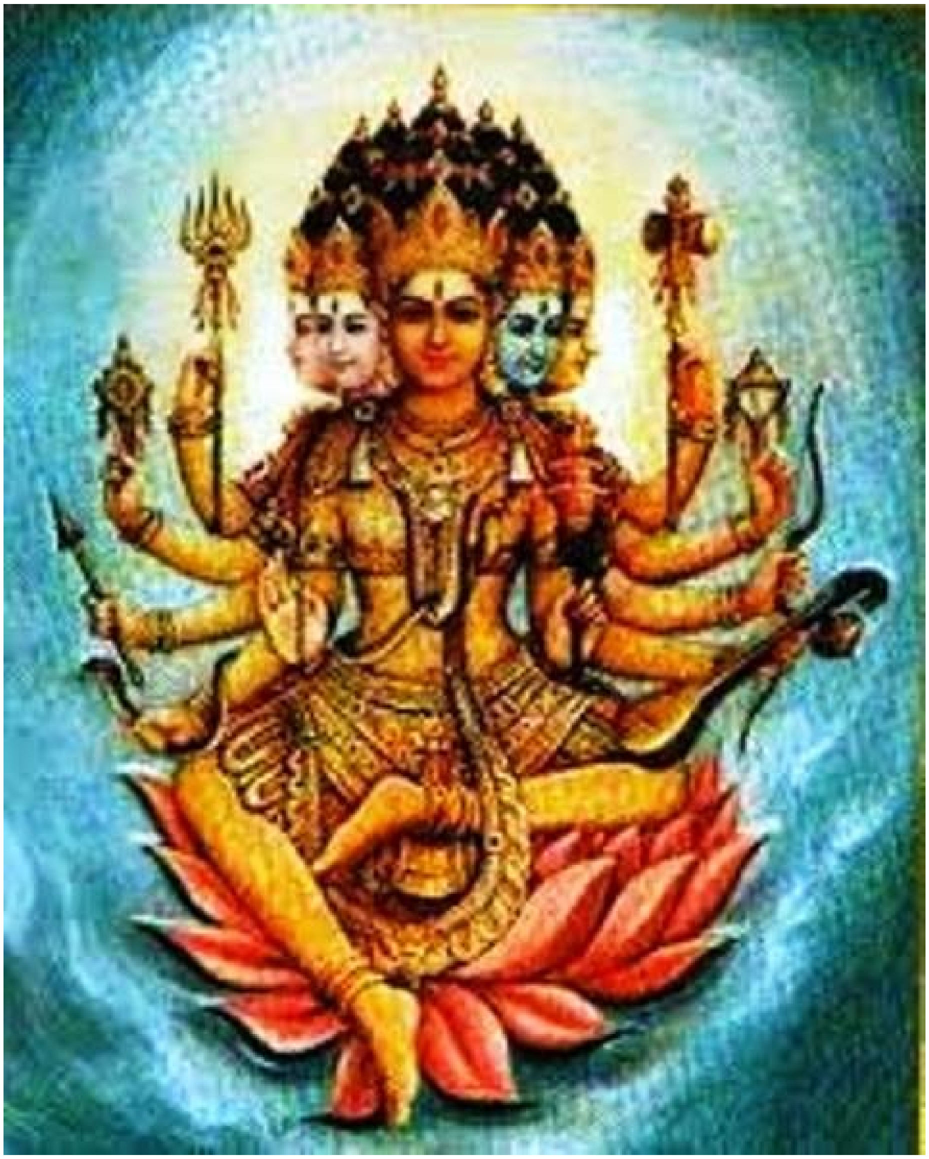
Carl Jung on "Death" - YouTube (2019-03-16 11:43)

[1]Carl Jung on "Death" - YouTube

1. `https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3aqH8TT8hHY`

Carl Jung on Purusha of India and Meister Eckhart (2019-03-16 12:09)

[1]



Lecture VI 2nd June, 1939

In the last lecture I spoke to you of the Purusha and gave parallels to show the connection in Indian philosophy.

The Purusha is identical with Brahman, the Highest Being, and with Prajapati, Creator of the World, who is also the year and time out of which everything flows.

We also spoke of western parallels, the mystical conception of Christ, and the speculations of the Gnostics and Neo-Platonists.

Today we will return to the text of the Yoga Sutra.

We should be able to get nearer to its meaning with the knowledge of the Purusha which we have gained.

Purusha Gunas Prakriti
Unity Sattvam Manifold appearance
Rajas
Tamas

The Gunas belong to the concept of the subtle body which unites the two opposites, Purusha and Prakriti.

The Purusha is always with Prakriti, the masculine is bound to the feminine, but they are never mixed together.

The Gunas are qualities or principles which are to be found in everything.

Sattvam is light and ascends, Tamas is dark, heavy and descends.

Rajas is the passion or energy found in between the opposites, nothing would happen, there would be no world process, if it were not for the energy caused by the opposites.

These opposites, light and darkness, hot and cold, etc.. , are psychological facts projected into the world, when we perceive the difference we make the contrast and project the attributes we have established.

We desire and ponder, for instance, and these two opposites cause a moral conflict.

Such a conflict is, however, indispensable or we should remain entirely passive.

It is the opposites which are the impetus of our activity, all stimulating moments are moments of conflict.

If it were not for the Purusha, Prakriti would remain unchanged.

Why does our text only mention sattvam and not rajas and tamas?

Hauer translates somewhat differently, I will read you both interpretive translations.

Deussen says:

III: 35. "Not discriminating between the concepts of Sattvam [representative of Prakriti) and the Purusha, which are entirely different from each other, is enjoyment [and suffering)."

Hauer says:

"'The man within' and the 'luminous substance of the world" which forms the mental organ, are eternally unmixed.

The 'eating of the world' by the 'man within' comes about because the 'luminous substance of the world' and the 'man within' are not distinguished from each other in consciousness."

The meaning of these two is really the same, though this is difficult to see.

Hauer translates more literally.

Instead of enjoyment he speaks of eating the world, taking possession of it, and his translation of sattvam is literal also, the luminous side of the world, Prakriti in its light aspect.

As a psychological phenomenon it is the conscious part of the psyche.

The rest is dark and unconscious, the source of our instincts is in the dark, we do not know why we suddenly have an impetus to do something.

So we can translate Hauer's "luminous substance of the world" as consciousness, and when sattvam (consciousness) is not distinguished from the Purusha the latter is bound to Prakriti and in the words of Goethe "frisst er Staub" [he eats the dust).

This is the source of suffering, which Yoga promises to redeem, and this is the reason way Patanjali says we should distinguish between the Purusha and sattvam.

The psychological meaning is that, if we do not discriminate between the Purusha and consciousness, we begin to eat the world, and as we swallow it, it swallows us, for the more you take of the world the more it encroaches up on you, and causes you to suffer.

Deussen continues:

"A knowledge of the Purusha arises from practising general discipline on all interests, one's own interests (belonging to the Purusha) being different from strange interests (belonging to Prakriti)."

A general control gained by practising Yoga.

Hauer continues:

"Through the application of general discipline to the purpose of this eating, (one's own purpose being different to the other purpose) one reaches knowledge of the 'man within', the essence of man."

The meaning of both translations is that one should use Yoga as a fettering of the instincts, the klesas, and so separate the strange interests of the Prakriti from the Self-interests of the Purusha, it is thus that knowledge of the Purusha is reached.

I will give you some more parallels:

First the famous exhortation of Krishna to Arjuna, concerning the three Gunas:

"The Vedas speak of three Gunas: nevertheless, 0 Arjuna be thou indifferent concerning the three Gunas, indifferent towards the opposites (nirdvandva), ever steadfast in courage."

A pair of opposites always means conflict and doubt, and nirdvandva is the technical term for freedom from the opposites.

We find the same idea in the Book of Manu.

The pairs of opposites were ordained by the Creator of the World in order to bring about discrimination:

"Moreover, in order to distinguish actions, he separated merit from demerit, and he caused the creature to be affected by the pairs of opposites, such as pain and pleasure."

The commentator Kulluka mentions: desire and anger, love and hate, hunger and thirst, anxiety and delusion, honour and shame as further opposites.

"Beneath the pairs of opposites must this world suffer without ceasing."

You have overcome suffering when you can separate yourself from the opposites, you have reached " nirdvandva " where you are untouched by them.

In the sense of our quotation from the Yoga Sutra, if you can separate yourself from sattvam you come to the Purusha and find redemption in the Universal Being.

We find further in the Book of Manu:

"He who becometh indifferent towards all objects by the disposition of his feelings attaineth eternal blessedness, as much in this world as after death. Whosoever in this wise hath gradually surrendered all bonds and freed himself from all the opposites, reposeth in Brahman."

Concerning the wise one the Kaushitaki Upanishad says:

"Both good and evil deeds doth he shake off in that place; they who are known unto him and are his friends take up on them his good deeds, but they who are not his friends, his evil works: and like one who faring fast in a chariot looketh down up on the chariot wheels, so up on day and night, up on good and evil deeds and up on all opposites, doth he look down; but he, freed from good and evil deeds, as knower of Brahman, entereth into Brahman."

We find in another Upanishad (to the one called to meditation):

"Whosoever overcometh desire and anger, the cleaving to the world and the lust of the senses; whoso maketh himself free from the opposites, and relinquisheth the feeling of self (above all self- seeking), that one is released from expectation."

And in yet another:

"Clothed with dust, housed under the open sky, I will take my lodging at the root of a tree, surrendering all things loved as well as unloved, tasting neither grief nor pleasure, forfeiting blame and praise alike, neither cherishing hope, nor offering respect, free from the opposites (nirdvandva), with neither fortune nor belongings."

We can distinguish the universal ideal which still exists in India in all these quotations.

We come now to the question: what does it mean psychologically?

Through fettering the klesas one brings the eating of the world to an end, and can discriminate between oneself and desire.

We reach our own will and its content by practising this restraint.

We, in the West, are under the delusion that it is our own ego-will which is meant, that when we cut ourselves off from the world we remain with the ego.

But the Indian idea is that we leave the ego with the rest of the world and go over into the Purusha, the Self, and that then we can cut off the Gunas and the Prakriti.

The world disappears and we come to what has always existed, the eternal Purusha.

But such a conception is only possible to an eastern psychology and we should not imagine that we can understand it with our western consciousness.

There is an essential difference in the quality of consciousness between East and West.

Ours is an exceedingly definite ego consciousness, it is much more intense.

The eastern consciousness is far less distinct, it is not difficult for Easterners to move from their consciousness into the unconscious, the Void, but we have to make a tremendous effort in order to do this, an acrobatic effort.

Meditation belongs to the eastern day, the Indian retires to his room and sinks into the Void as a matter of course, and it has a very favourable effect on him.

We find the same thing in Japan and all over the East.

But we spend our free time listening to the wireless and rushing off to the cinema.

Yet much of our western neurosis comes from the fact that we do not find enough time for ourselves; it would be wiser to me meditate and seek the Void when we need rest, than to run after outer distraction.

That Void is the Purusha, which we can reach by emptying the ego.

The Indian would laugh if we told him that such meditation belonged to religion.

It is a practical matter for him, he regards it much in the way we regard brushing our teeth, as something quite banal.

There is nothing hysterical or overdone about it, as is usually the case in the West.

The Indian meditates quite naturally, it is a sort of science and he would be amused at the idea of there being anything secret about it.

It belongs to his training, he is taught to reach the Void in meditation.

Hatha yoga especially is a technical means, rather like breathing gymnastics, to reach the Void, which we call the unconscious but which the Indian calls higher consciousness.

[2]

The Complete Mystical Works of Meister Eckhart
With Foreword by Bernard McGinn
Translated by Maurice O'C Walshe

There is no term for the unconscious in the East, or rather it is expressed by Bodhi, enlightenment, higher, nay super, consciousness!

Naturally there are no parallels in western modern philosophy but we have a medieval parallel in Meister Eckhart, particularly in his sermon on "Leaving all Things.”

" ’Alas , Sir, ’people say, ’I wish I stood as well with God, had as much devotion, were as much at peace with God as other people are. If only I could be like this, or as poor as that,’ or, ’It is not a bit of good unless I can be here or there or do so and so. I must live away from home, in a convent or a cell.’ - Believe me, the fault is in thyself and nowhere else. It is nothing but own will. Thou mayst not know it and it may not seem so to thee, but the only source of restlessness in thee is thy personal will, whether this is realized or not."

Pay attention here, for this is western language.

Self-will* refers to the ego, not to the Purusha, it is the egotism of western consciousness.

"We think we ought to flee this thing or follow that - places, people, methods, purposes, or acts - but ways and things are not to blame for hindering thee, it is thou thyself in things that is standing in thy way, cleaving to things as thou dost inordinately. Starting with thyself then, rise up and quit thyself."

Things: Prakriti. We must leave sattvam, that is our ego consciousness.

"An thou flee not first thyself it is certain that wherever else thou mayest flee thou wilt find thou art disturbed and hindered, be it where it may. For people to seek peace in outward things - in places, persons, ways or works, in poverty or exile or despisery or anything else however important it may be - is all in vain, it will not bring peace. Those who seek in this way are looking in the wrong direction: the further out they go the less are they likely to find what they are seeking. They go like one who has missed his way: the further he walks the wider he strays. But what ought he to do? He must leave himself first; he will then have left all things."

When I leave sattvam, my ego consciousness, I leave all things.

It is possible to reach the Purusha when we leave the ego.

"A man may give up a kingdom or the whole world but if he still clings to himself he has given up nothing. But supposing he gives up himself then no matter what he may keep, riches or honours or what not, he will have given up all things. Commenting on St. Peter's words, 'See, Lord, we have left all,' when he had left merely his boat and net, a holy man (Hieronymus) observes: He who resigns the little of his own free will resigns not that alone: he is resigning all that worldly folk are out to gain, all they could possibly desire. But he who gives up his own will and himself to boot is giving up all things as surely as though they were his very own, his absolutely. What thou wilt not desire thou hast resigned and left for love of God."

For the sake of the Purusha.

"Our Lord said, 'Blessed are the poor in spirit,' in desire, that is to say; had there been a better way doubtless our Lord would have told us so just as he told us, 'If anyone will come after me he must deny himself first,' and there lies the crux of the whole matter. Watch thyself, and wherever thou findest thyself, there leave thyself: it is much the best way. Remember, in this life no one ever left himself so much but he could find something more to leave. Very few can stand it who know what it really means. It is just a give and take, a mutual exchange: thou goest out of things so much and just so much, no more or less, does God go in: with all of his if thou dost go clean out of all of thine. Try it, though it cost thy all. That way lies true peace and none elsewhere."

This is a parallel to discriminating between sattvam and the Purusha in the Yoga Sutra but in a western form.

We are mixed up in the West between the ego and the Self, between Prakriti and the Purusha but this is not the case in the East.

In a way we are much more conscious than eastern man, his consciousness is dimmer, but where we are in the dark he is in the light and he can distinguish between the Purusha and Prakriti.

We find another aspect of the difference between one's own interests and the Prakriti in Meister Eckhart's sermon on "Detachment".

He sees detachment in an original way and the following is very illuminating:

"I have read many writings of heathen philosophers and sages, of the old covenant and of the new, and have sought earnestly and with diligence which is the best and highest virtue whereby a man may knit himself most narrowly to God and wherein he is most like to his exemplar, as he was in. God, wherein was no difference between himself and God, ere God created creature. And having approfounded all these scriptures to the best of my ability, I find it is none other than absolute detachment from all creatures. As our Lord said to Martha, 'unum est necessarium', which is as good as saying, He who would be serene and pure needs but one thing, detachment. Our doctors sing love's praises, as did St. Paul, who said, 'Whatsoever things I do and have not charity I am nothing.' But. into detachment above . any love. First, because at best love constrains me. to love God. Now it is far better my constraining God to me than for, me to be constrained to, God. My eternal happiness depends on God, and me becoming one;

This is the . union between man and the Purusha.

"but God is apter to adapt himself to me and can. easier to communicate with me than I .can communicate with God. Detachment forces God to come to me, and this is shown as follows. Everything is fain to be in its own natural state. But God's own natural state is unity and purity and . these come from detachment.

Hence God is bound to give himself to a heart detached. Secondly, I rank detachment above love because love constrains me to suffer all things for God's sake: detachment constrains me to admit nothing but God, Now it is far better to tolerate nothing but God than to suffer all things for God's sake. For in suffering one has regard to creatures."

The Prakriti.

"whence the suffering comes, but detachment is immune from creature. Further, that detachment admits of none but God I demonstrate in this wise: anything received must be received, in aught. But detachment is so nearly naught that there is nothing rare enough to stay in this detachment, except God, He, is so simple, so. ethereal, that he can sojourn in the solitary heart. Detachment then admits of God alone. That which is received is received and grasped by its receiver according to. the mode of the receiver, and for anything conceived is known and understood according to the mind of him who understands. and not according to; its own innate; conceivability.

And humility the masters laud beyond most other virtues. l rank detachment before any meekness and for the following reasons. Meekness can be without detachment but complete detachment is impossible without humility. Perfect humility is a matter of self-naughting; but detachment so narrowly approximates to naught that no room remains for aught betwixt zero and absolute detachment."

Zero is the Void, Shunyata. .

"Wherefore without humility is no complete detachment. Withal two virtues are always better than one. - Another reason why I put detachment higher than humility is this: humility means abasing self before all creatures and in that same abasement one goes out of oneself to creatures."

Humility is itself bound to creatures, to Prakriti.

"But detachment abideth in itself. Now no going out however excellent, but staying in is better still. As the prophet hath it, 'omnis gloria filiae regis ab intus,' the King's daughter is all glorious within. Perfect detachment is without regard, without either lowliness or loftiness to creatures: it has no mind to be below nor yet to be above; it is minded to be master of itself, loving 'none and hating none, having neither likeness nor unlikeness, neither this nor that, to any creature; the only thing" it fain would be is same. But to be, either this or that it does not want at all. He who is this or that is aught;"

Aught is Prakriti.

"but detachment is altogether naught. It leaves things unmolested.

Here someone may object. But surely in our Lady all the, virtues flourished in perfection and among them absolute detachment. Now granting that detachment is better than humility, why did our Lady glory in her lowliness instead of her detachment saying, 'quia respexit dominus humilitatem ancillae suae:' 'He regarded the lowliness of his handmaiden'?

I answer that, in God there is. Detachment and humility as well, so far as virtues can be attributed to God. Know, it was his loving meekness that mage God, stooped to enter huma nature while it remained within itself as motionless, what time he was made man, as it was while he created the heavens and the earth, as I shall show you later."
'

This describes. the, Purusha with the Prakriti, the drop on the lotus leaf. God has entered. all creatures without being altered.

"And seeing that our ,Lord when he chose to become man did persist in his motionless detachment, by that same token our Lady know that he he expected her to the same, albeit for the, nonce he had regard expressly to her lowliness and not to her detachment. So, remaining unmoved in her detachment she yet gloried in her lowliness and not in her detachment. Had she but once 'remembered her detachment to say, 'He regarded my detachment',' her detachment would: by that have been disturbed and would not have been absolute and perfect since a going forth had taken place. Any event, however insignificant will always cause some troubling of detachment. There you have the explanation of our Lady's glorying in her lowliness instead of her detachment. Quoth the prophet, 'audiani, quid loquatur in me dominus deus,' I will be still and listen to what my Lord and and my God may be saying within me,' as though to say, if, God would parley with me then he must come in for I will not go out. It is Boethius who exclaims, 'Ye men, why do ye llo without for that which is within you?" Carl Jung, ETH Lecture VI, Pages 125 -131.

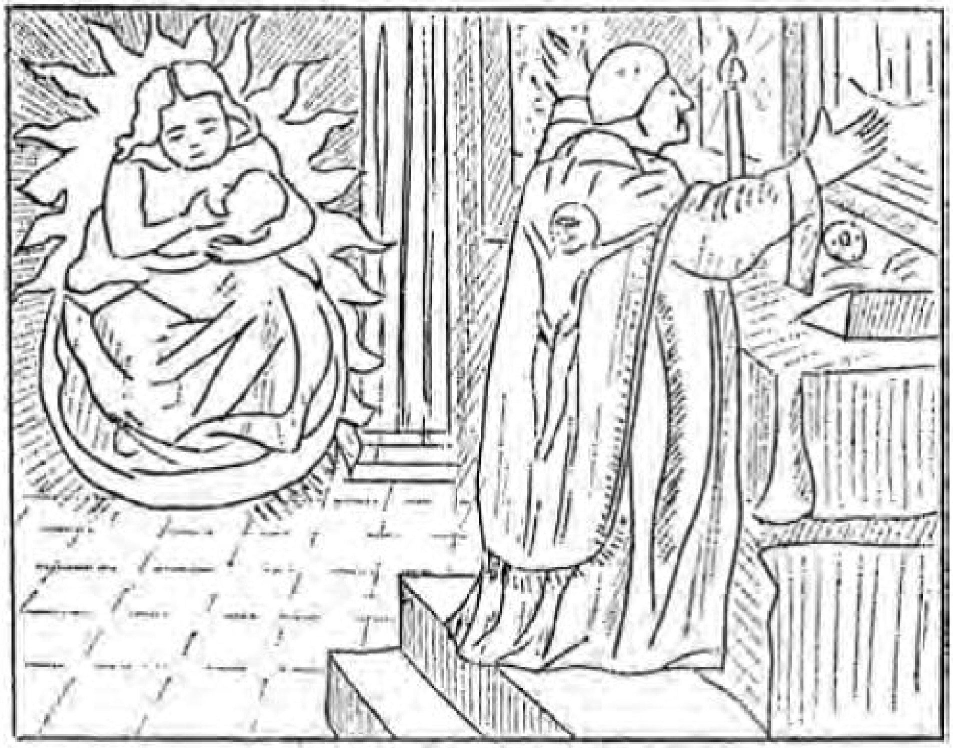
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/9be79-2.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/e23f7-1.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Spiritual Exercises of Ignatius Loyola. (2019-03-17 05:52)

[1]



Lecture IX 23rd June 1939

I must give you the titles of some books on the Ignatian exercises.

I have used Bernhard HeThe idea that Christianity dropped from Heaven as a direct revelation is an historical forgery. Its essential content is rich in philosophical ideas which reach back beyond Plato and Pythagoras. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 137.gardt: "Religion und Seelentraining", (Religion and training of the soul.) a study on the spiritual exercises of the Jesuits.

Also a short book by Philipp Funk: "Ignatius von Loyola" (1913) and a Latin book by a Spaniard: Sebastian Iz quierdus on the practice of the spiritual exercises of St. Ignatius (1695).

The last is an excellent commentary.

There is an enormous amount of literature on the subject, chiefly by the Jesuits themselves, but many Protestants have also been fascinated by this sphere.

I have already mentioned the writings of the Victorines in connection with earlier meditation and also the " Imitatio Christi" by Thomas a Kempis as giving an excellent picture of the attitude of the Devoti.

The latter is a charming medieval book of devotion, each chapter providing a subject for meditation.

The Protestants adopted these religious practices and such books still flourish.

At the end of the last lecture we were spoke of the methodical sequence of meditations prescribed by Cisneros.

They fall into three parts:

The Way of Purification.
The Way of Illumination.
The Way of Union.

This sequence of steps is very typical, we find it also as the basis of alchemical and Hermetic meditation, but in the latter it was related to the materia and not to a book of devotion.

It is very interesting to compare such things for we find many parallels.

There is a very typical alchemical parallel to the "via purgativa".

We need only take the subjects for the first week in order to make this clear: sin, death, Hell, the Last Judgement, the sufferings of Christ and Mary and as the counterpoint of all this pain: the Heavenly Glory, with the purpose of emphasizing the darkness by a vivid contrast.

The alchemical parallel is to be found in Hades or Chaos, the nigredo or tenebrositas.

Pain and torture rule in this dark condition, which is a dead, unawakened state; the scintilla, the spark of the soul, is enclosed in a dark, suffering condition, in melancholia.

It is necessary to endure this stage and to overcome it through endless pain and struggle.

It ends at last in the abiutio, the cleansing process which leads on to the next stage, the albedo, the bleaching or whitening.

the alchemists compare the albedo to the rising sun or the first streak of dawn.

It is the moment when the blackness of sin is washed away and the new light comes.

It is also described as the des census animae, the descent of the soul.

The idea is that the soul was first captured in the darkness of the body, then it separated itself from the body, and the body was washed.

When the latter reached the condition of the albedo, the soul entered it once more.

This happens in the second week of Cisneros' spiritual exercises, when the benefits of the creation, of Grace, of the summons, of justification before God, of His special gifts and His guidance are meditated up on.

All these belong to the albedo, and are a kind of resurrection, a coming to life again.

But something is still missing.

We have had the black and the white, a hopeless condition of sinfulness and a bright light of illumination, but there has been no hint of a new nature, of a reconciliation between the opposites.

For this we need the third week, the way of union, the mystical union, the creation of a unity, a being free from the stain of sin and mortality.

This stage is attained in alchemy through the coniunctio, when two separate natures are united in such a way that a complete and incorruptible being is created.

Therefore only God is meditated up on in the third week, God in all His aspects: creator, beauty of the universe, glory and honour of the world, lover, ruler, guide and giver.

This meditation is the union, all God’s aspects are seen as one.

He is the perfect unity.

Man himself remains imperfect, but he is changed into God, into an eternal, spotless and incorruptible being.

We have seen this already in eastern philosophy, the Purusha and Prakriti must continually be re-united, because sattvam, cittam or human consciousness, is forever separating instead of uniting them.

Consciousness is always stepping in with an interpretation or a discrimination.

This splits the Purusha and Prakriti apart and a compensation must set in again.

I will not go into this further at present.

The coniunctio in alchemy is a union of the masculine and feminine, of the spiritual and material principles, from which a perfect body arises, the glorified body after the Last Judgement, the resurrection body.

This means an eternal body, or the subtle body, which is designated in alchemy as the philosopher’s stone, the lapis aethereus or invisibilis.

This stone is also called the Deus terrenus, the earthly god.

Christ is an analogy to the stone and I have brought you a picture from an old alchemical book:

"Symbola Aureae Mensae" where the alchemistic process is represented as a Mass.

The validity of the Mass has been questioned by Protestant circles, they maintain its ritual is not justified by the Gospels.

But the Epistles of St. Paul are known to be older than the Gospels and there is a passage in Ephesians which corresponds to Cisneros’ sequence of meditation and in which we find many of the symbols of the Mass:

"And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins."

This corresponds to the meditation in the first week on death, sin and Hell.

St. Paul continues:

"Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience."

The idea here is that the Ephesians had been dead in their sins while under the power of this god.

He continues:

"Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.
But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together withChrist, (by grace ye are saved:)"

This is the idea of purification and illumination and corresponds to the end of the first week and to the second week, and we find these ideas also in the Mass.

In the fourteenth verse of the same chapter St. Paul continues:

"For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby."

This is the reconciliation of both parts in one body on the cross.

This passage was, of course, written before the rites of the Mass had come into being.

These ideas were very important to the early Christians, and occupied their thoughts a great deal and thus were incorporated in the Mass.

St. Paul continues in the 19th verse:

"Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth into an holy temple in the Lord: In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God
Through the Spirit."

This idea of building a spiritual temple had an enormous effect on future generations.

We see the last remnants of this idea in the Freemasons and the Rosicrucians.

One could say that the Freemasons were the last descendants of the alchemists but unfortunately they seldom think of their history and origin, but are occupied with quite different things.

You will remember the spiritual cloister in the eastern series of symbols, where the Vihara was built on the summit and contained the highest Buddha.

This is a complete parallel, for both spiritual temples are built from the union of two.

The two are the spirit and matter.

To return to Cisneros, I will read you a piece of the prescribed form of meditation for the first week, and you will see for yourselves the difference in the eastern and western points of view:

" ... Think of thyself as the guilty accused standing before the judgment seat of thy God, awaiting sentence. Recall to thy mind the whole magnitude of a sin! How deeply the All Holy One is offended by it. Does the recollection of this not fill thy innermost being with awe, does it not shake and stir it and does it not overwhelm it with wholesome regret and sorrow? 0 let the sting of remorse wound thee, make thee deeply ashamed through the recollection of thy sins and say, in contemplation:

’0 my soul, dost thou feel how sin displeases God? See, pride once cast Lucifer out of the heavenly heights and disobedience the first parents out of Paradise. Through voluptuousness the splendour of Sodom and Gomorrah was destroyed, yea the whole world was once submerged in the waters of the flood. Consider how the Son of God, thy Redeemer, suffered such an exceeding bitter death on account of sin, that no sin should remain unpunished and that the divine justice should not remain unreconciled.

. . . Ponder in thy heart the sins thou hast committed before thy conversion, how manifold they are ... Alas these are so numerous that, for their very number, thou canst no longer count them ... But let the weight of their heaviness and their humiliation deeply affect thy soul ... How little thou hast atoned for thy sins, how little thou hast grieved over them . . . Hast thou, sinful soul, now that thou wishest to begin thy spiritual life anew, considered all this earnestly, dost thou feel thyself filled with awe and sorrow? Not through fear of hell, which thou deservest, but out of love for thy most benevolent God, whom thou hast offended? 0 let thy soul become quite small, bow thy face, rest thy head on thy hands and thine elbows on thy knees and consider thyself unworthy to look up to Heaven! But lift up thy heart to God and, filled with bitter repentance, say: 0 most merciful Father! I am thy prodigal son, who has committed all these misdeeds against Thine Infinite Majesty. Ungrateful I! ...

The soul can now turn to the second part of the way which is: contrition . . . Humiliated, heartbroken, ashamed, call upon thy Saviour and Redeemer: 0 Lord, my God, Jesus Christ! I am an unjust, unhappy sinner, yea of all sinners the most unhappy and execrable, who has committed so many and weighty crimes against Thine Infinite Majesty, I can no longer count them, for they are more countless than the sand of the sea shore. Pray thus, or as thy heart’s repentance or devotion dictates. Gather all thy strength together and endeavour to draw a sigh from the innermost depth of thy being. And now step courageously on to the third part of the path of purification : exaltation. Exalt thyself, 0 soul, despair not of the divine mercy! Raise thine eyes hopefully! Boundless must be thy trust ! Lift up thy head which thou heldest bowed, resting on thy knees, stand upright and pause awhile. Softly, gently, gather thy soul together and let it die away like the sound of a newly tuned harp in confident and joyous praise of God ! Turn to the mercy of thy God, contemplate His majesty, His might . . . .

Every evening, standing or kneeling, he should make the sign of the cross, gather himself together, and invoke the Holy Ghost, he should also practise self-examination concerning faults, temptations and sins which he has committed in the course of the day, with regard to duty, desire, pleasure , curiosity, vanity, anger and so on. This examination must be short."

An investigation of the sins of the day is prescribed for every evening.

It is interesting that it must be short and concentrated, and this gives us a hint about the frame of mind in which these meditations were undertaken.

If you remember the eastern texts which I read you, you will certainly have been impressed with the enormous difference between meditation in East and West.

You will perhaps object that this is a medieval text, but that was only the day before yesterday in the history of meditation; and the same spirit is still alive today, it is only the outer form which has changed.

We are so used to our own frame of mind that we do not realise what it is, but, suppose such a text were a Sanskrit text, what impression would it make upon us and what should we gather about the people for whom it had been written?

We should certainly say that all this self-abasement, gnashing of teeth and imploring God for mercy must mean that the Indians we’re proud, arrogant brutes and needed to be cut in pieces before they could be induced to behave at all decently.

We have not enough self-criticism to think this about ourselves, yet it is the truth.

We have no idea how we Europeans look from outside.

I wanted to see how we appeared to black and brown people and this was one of my main reasons for undertaking my journeys after the war.

I went to East Africa and to the Pueblo Indians in America.

That was enough, I knew then how we look from outside.

We look like pirates, birds of prey, wild beasts and brigands , constantly stealing and conquering.

So we all deserve the warnings and moralising discipline which we find in texts such as Cisneros’.

We should not hear so much about morality if we did not need it, it suits us admirably.

Those people, who complain about morality, lay themselves open to the suspicion of needing it particularly badly.

These were the meditations which Ignatius found when he went to the monastery of Montserrat.

I must give you a short biography of him. Don Inigo Lopez de Recalde was born at the Castle of Loyola about 1491 and died in Rome in 1556.

He was a Spanish nobleman and became an officer in the army and was a soldier through and through.

He was in the defending garrison of Pampeluna, when it was besieged by the French, and was badly wounded in the leg.

During his enforced inactivity he read two religious books, a Life of Jesus by Ludolfus of Saxony and the popular "Flowers of the Saints", a series of biographies of the saints.

The ideas, which he found in these, fascinated him, because he was glad to employ his warlike instincts against the bad in himself: as he could not ride against the outer enemy, he turned against the inner enemy.

He found himself involved in a conflict at once, for he was plighted in knightly fashion to a lady and had sworn to serve her.

And, after reading these books, he discovered that God needed his services Himself.

It was a terrible struggle but at last he had the redeeming idea of founding a spiritual knighthood, he became the Knight of God.

While Ignatius was at the monastery of Montserrat he made a general confession.

He undertook heavy penances and had a great many visions.

It is exceedingly interesting, from a psychological point of view, to put such visions under a modern microscope.

I have already done this with the visions of our Swiss saint, Niklaus von der Fliie, in the "Neue Schweizer Rundschau ".

He was a genuine saint, and has not been canonised only from lack of funds.

Ignatius dictated his visions later to his pupil Gonzales and I quote them from Philipp Funk's biography:

"While he lived in that hospital, it often happened that he perceived in the air close to him, a certain Something, bright and glowing, which was so exceedingly beautiful that he derived inwardly great pleasure and abundant comfort from it. He was able to perceive no form, however, and so he did not know what it was or what it consisted of; but sometimes it appeared to him to take the shape of a serpent which was full of shining eyes, although they were really not eyes. The sight of this vision filled him with the greatest delight, and the oftener it appeared the greater was the comfort with which he saw it and when it disappeared from before his eyes he was sad."

There is no interpretation in this vision and only a slight effort at explanation.

As a budding monk Ignatius would naturally have preferred another figure, a guardian angel, Christ or the Virgin Mary but awkwardly enough the actual vision was a snake, full of eyes, a vision which was not at all orthodox.

There are Biblical analogies, the snake in paradise, for instance, but there the snake is interpreted as the devil.

Another snake is the healing snake of Moses.

Christ says:

"And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up". (St. John. III :14.)

We sometimes find the symbol of the serpent instead of Christ on the cross in the Middle Ages (and it appears in alchemy) but apparently Ignatius was not acquainted with this fact, or he would certainly Have claimed the snake as Christ.

But we never hear that the Christ serpent was covered in shining eyes, this is something new, an individual image.

Such individual visions were, however, always made to fit into the dogma of the Church by hook or by crook.

We find the same thing in Niklaus von der Fliie, for these people had no idea that there were any inner contents outside the dogma.

We should fix our attention on the actual content of this vision.

Ignatius had seen a snake covered in shining eyes.

This is no isolated case, many of my patients have seen a similar image, it is an essential symbol for the lower part of the nervous system, for the sphere of the instincts.

This is the root from which the whole psychic life grows.

This is why the serpent is a symbol for healing, as is well known from the example of Aesculapius.

When man is ill he is severed from his instincts and part of the art of healing is to bring him back to them, so that he can grow on his own roots.

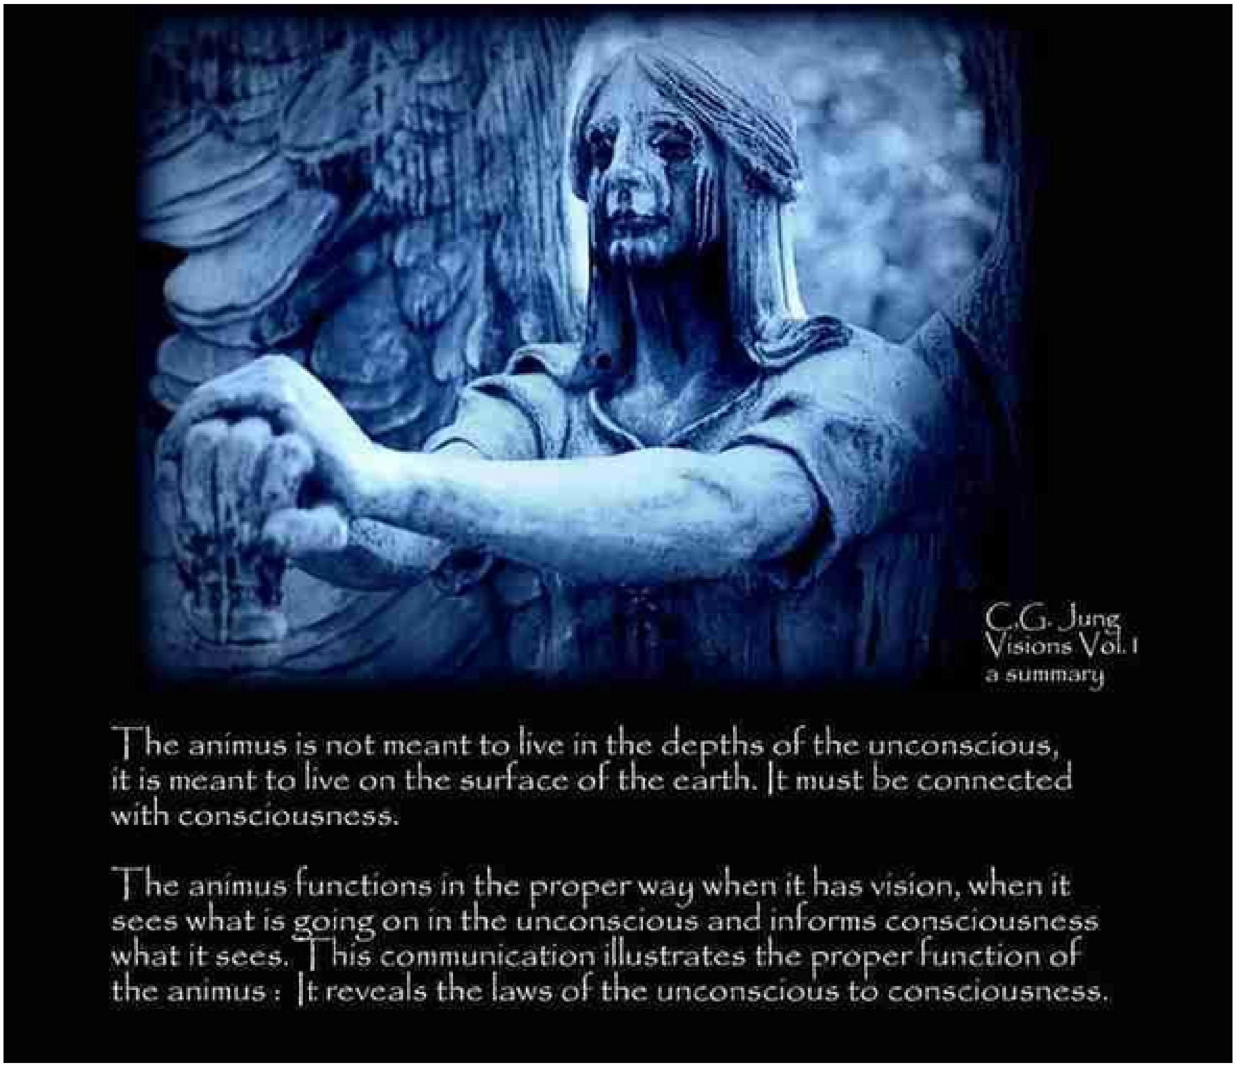
Consciousness and ideas, valuable as they are in themselves, cut us away from the essential roots of our being.

Ignatius had surely injured his health with penances and constant prayer, so the healing snake app ears as a compensation in his vision, but he was not in a position to recognise this fact. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages 158-167.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/84457-1a.jpg`

Carl Jung: But the drama shows the proper function of the animus. (2019-03-17 05:57)

[1]



C.G. Jung
Visions Vol. I a summary

The animus is not meant to live in the depths of the unconscious, it is meant to live on the surface of the earth. It must be connected with consciousness.

The animus functions in the proper way when it has vision, when it sees what is going on in the unconscious and informs consciousness what it sees. This communication illustrates the proper function of the animus : It reveals the laws of the unconscious to consciousness.

Well, they rode out into the desert till they came to a wigwam, where the Indian went to sleep. The wigwam is the right place for the Indian, he is among his own tribe where he belongs.

He is the natural mind, and instinct has taken him back into his natural conditions.

The animus is not meant to live in the depths of the unconscious, he is meant to live on the surface of the earth.

He must be connected with consciousness, one should always know wwhere he is; when he disappears, anything may happen.

That he is in the right place here is shown in the fact that when the dawn broke, he looked out if the tent and beheld three flaming crosses in the sky.

Here the animus functions in the proper way: he must have vision, he must see what is going on in the unconscious; he now informs the conscious that he has seen three flaming crosses, which the conscious does not see.

The vision is like a sort of story, because the conscious ego is still a mere onlooker and has no hand in the game; thus fare the animus and the animals are the active dramatis personae.

But the drama shows the proper function of the animus. It reveals the laws of the unconscious to the spectator.
I said, you remember, that a certain amount of disposable energy is used up in such a vision.

After a while the patient gets tired, and then the Indian goes to sleep, in spite of the fact that thre is still something in the end pointing to a future problem, as is often the case.

These three flaming crosses in the sky indicate that the problem of the Holy Ghost is not completely settled. What would you say about that symbolism? Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 134.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5207a-animus.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Orientation." (2019-03-17 06:45)

[1]

CARL
JUNG
C. G. Jung

Orientation:

A term used to indicate the general principle governing a personal attitude or viewpoint.
One’s psychological orientation determines how one sees and interprets reality. In Jung’s model of typology, a thinking attitude is oriented by the principle of logic; a sensation attitude is oriented by the direct perception of concrete facts; intuition orients itself to future possibilities; and feeling is governed by subjective worth. Each of these attitudes may operate in an introverted or extraverted way.

http://www.nyaap.org/jung-lexicon/o

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/66a48-gc.jpg`

Links to Books by Carl Jung (2019-03-17 09:34)

[1]

Jung,Freud,and Psychoanalysis: http://www.4shared.com/office/iCCfTPSi/J ung _Freud _and _Psychoanalysis.html

[2]

Psychology of the Unconscious: [3]

[4]

Psychological Types: http://www.4shared.com/office/gkIFCjte/Psychological _Types.html

[5]

[6]

Psychology and Religion: http://www.4shared.com/office/bm7VFnhf/Psychology _and _Religion.html

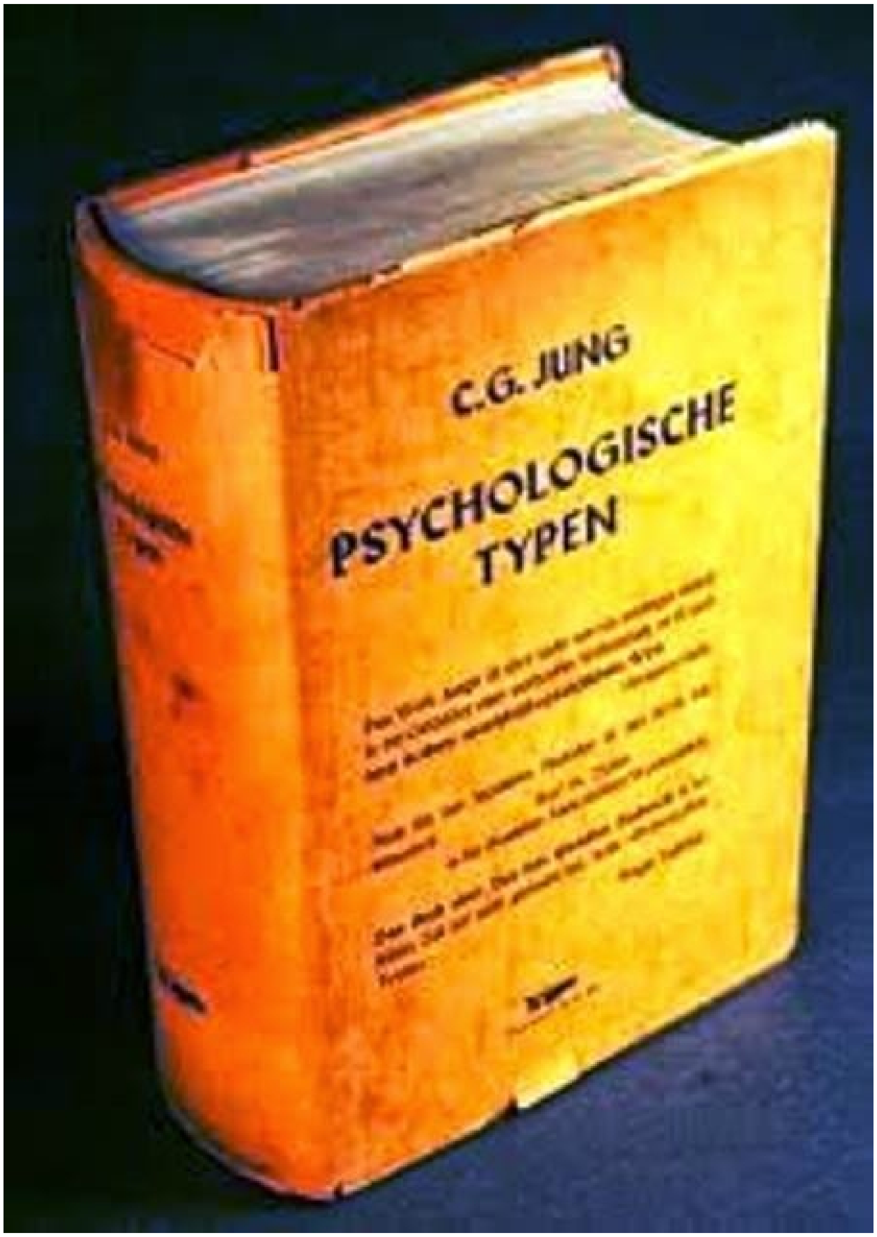
Commentary to The Secret of the Golden Flower: http://www.4shared.com/office/o5DWmqxW/The _Secret _of _the _Golden _Flowe.html

1. `http://ts4.mm.bing.net/images/thumbnail.aspx?q=4520483648569543&id=146cd2bb74a8da6ffdbf865c8dee0f8a`
2. `http://ts1.mm.bing.net/images/thumbnail.aspx?q=5003117697632412&id=c212ec58d23045df1700d31570c87c0d`
3. `http://www.4shared.com/office/6lzI67ZR/Jung_Psychology_of_the_Unconsc.html?refurl=d1html`
4. `http://ts3.mm.bing.net/images/thumbnail.aspx?q=4734927051294198&id=c03994a136ca84e378b8a20d88c432f6`

5. `http://ts2.mm.bing.net/images/thumbnail.aspx?q=4832796476900721&id=9a595d648f9d9827b8ac78b1a0e88720`
6. `http://ts3.mm.bing.net/images/thumbnail.aspx?q=4975879009140962&id=cb0d4f220f598ecde91ce60ec81d2613`

Carl Jung on “The Introverted Type.” (2019-03-17 11:00)

[1]



a. The General Attitude of Consciousness

As I have already explained in the previous section, the introvert is distinguished from the extravert by the fact that he does not, like the latter, orient himself by the object and by objective data, but by subjective factors.

I also mentioned that the introvert interposes a subjective view between the perception of the object and his own action, which prevents the action from assuming a character that fits the objective situation.

Naturally this is a special instance, mentioned by way of example and intended to serve only as a simple illustration.

We must now attempt a formulation on a broader basis.

Although the introverted consciousness is naturally aware of external conditions, it selects the subjective determinants as the decisive ones.

It is therefore oriented by the factor in perception and cognition which responds to the sense stimulus in accordance with the individual's subjective disposition.

For example, two people see the same object, but they never see it in such a way that the images they receive are absolutely identical.

Quite apart from the variable acuteness of the sense organs and the personal equation, there often exists a radical difference, both in kind and in degree, in the psychic assimilation of the perceptual image.

Whereas the extravert continually appeals to what comes to him from the object, the introvert relies principally on what the sense impression constellates in the subject.

The difference in the case of a single apperception may, of course, be very delicate, but in the total psychic economy it makes itself felt in the highest degree, particularly in the effect it has on the ego.

If I may anticipate, I consider the viewpoint which inclines, with Weininger, to describe the introverted attitude as philautic, autoerotic, egocentric, subjectivistic, egotistic, etc., to be misleading in principle and thoroughly depreciatory.

It reflects the normal bias of the extraverted attitude in regard to the nature of the introvert.

We must not forget—although the extravert is only too prone to do so—that perception and cognition are not purely objective, but are also subjectively conditioned.

The world exists not merely in itself, but also as it appears to me. Indeed, at bottom, we have absolutely no criterion that could help us to form a judgment of a world which was unassimilable by the subject.

If we were to ignore the subjective factor, it would be a complete denial of the great doubt as to the possibility of absolute cognition.

And this would mean a relapse into the stale and hollow positivism that marred the turn of the century—an attitude of intellectual arrogance accompanied by crudeness of feeling, a violation of life as stupid as it is presumptuous.

By overvaluing our capacity for objective cognition we repress the importance of the subjective factor, which simply means a denial of the subject.

But what is the subject?

The subject is man himself—we are the subject.

Only a sick mind could forget that cognition must have a subject, and that there is no knowledge whatever and therefore no world at all unless "I know" has been said, though with this statement one has already expressed the subjective limitation of all knowledge.

This applies to all the psychic functions: they have a subject which is just as indispensable as the object.

It is characteristic of our present extraverted sense of values that the word "subjective" usually sounds like a reproof; at all events the epithet "merely subjective" is brandished like a weapon over the head of anyone who is not boundlessly convinced of the absolute superiority of the object.

We must therefore be quite clear as to what "subjective" means in this inquiry.

By the subjective factor I understand that psychological action or reaction which merges with the effect produced by the object and so gives rise to a new psychic datum.

In so far as the subjective factor has, from the earliest times and among all peoples, remained in large measure constant, elementary perceptions and cognitions being almost universally the same, it is a reality that is just as firmly established as the external object.

If this were not so, any sort of permanent and essentially unchanging reality would be simply inconceivable, and any understanding of the past would be impossible.

In this sense, therefore, the subjective factor is as ineluctable a datum as the extent of the sea and the radius of the earth.

By the same token, the subjective factor has all the value of a co-determinant of the world we live in, a factor that can on no account be left out of our calculations.

It is another universal law, and whoever bases himself on it has a foundation as secure, as permanent, and as valid as the man who relies on the object.

But just as the object and objective data do not remain permanently the same, being perishable and subject to chance, so too the subjective factor is subject to variation and individual hazards.

For this reason its value is also merely relative.

That is to say, the excessive development of the introverted standpoint does not lead to a better and sounder use of the subjective factor, but rather to an artificial subjectivizing of consciousness which can hardly escape the reproach "merely subjective."

This is then counterbalanced by a de-subjectivization which takes the form of an exaggerated extraverted attitude, an attitude aptly described by Weininger as "misautic."

But since the introverted attitude is based on the ever-present, extremely real, and absolutely indispensable fact of psychic adaptation, expressions like "philautic," "egocentric," and so on are out of place and objectionable because they arouse the prejudice that it is always a question of the beloved ego.

Nothing could be more mistaken than such an assumption.

Yet one is continually meeting it in the judgments of the extravert on the introvert.

Not, of course, that I wish to ascribe this error to individual extraverts; it is rather to be put down to the generally accepted extraverted view which is by no means restricted to the extraverted type, for it has just as many representatives among introverts, very much to their own detriment.

The reproach of being untrue to their own nature can justly be levelled at the latter, whereas this at least cannot be held against the former.

The introverted attitude is normally oriented by the psychic structure, which is in principle hereditary and is inborn in the subject.

This must not be assumed, however, to be simply identical with the subject’s ego, as is implied by the above designations of Weininger; it is rather the psychic structure of the subject prior to any ego-development.

The really fundamental subject, the self, is far more comprehensive than the ego, since the former includes the unconscious whereas the latter is essentially the focal point of consciousness.

Were the ego identical with the self, it would be inconceivable how we could sometimes see ourselves in dreams in quite different forms and with entirely different meanings.

But it is a characteristic peculiarity of the introvert, which is as much in keeping with his own inclination as with the general bias, to confuse his ego with the self, and to exalt it as the subject of the psychic process, thus bringing about the aforementioned subjectivization of consciousness which alienates him from the object.

The psychic structure is the same as what Semon calls "mneme" and what I call the "collective unconscious."

The individual self is a portion or segment or representative of something present in all living creatures, an exponent of the specific mode of psychological behaviour, which varies from species to species and is inborn in each of its members.

The inborn mode of acting has long been known as instinct, and for the inborn mode of psychic apprehension I have proposed the term archetype.

I may assume that what is understood by instinct is familiar to everyone.

It is another matter with the archetype.

What I understand by it is identical with the "primordial image," a term borrowed from Jacob Burckhardt, and I describe it as such in the Definitions that conclude this book.

I must here refer the reader to the definition "Image."

The archetype is a symbolic formula which always begins to function when there are no conscious ideas present, or when conscious ideas are inhibited for internal or external reasons.

The contents of the collective unconscious are represented in consciousness in the form of pronounced preferences and definite ways of looking at things.

These subjective tendencies and views are generally regarded by the individual as being determined by the object—incorrectly, since they have their source in the unconscious structure of the psyche and are merely released by the effect of the object.

They are stronger than the object's influence, their psychic value is higher, so that they superimpose themselves on all impressions.

Thus, just as it seems incomprehensible to the introvert that the object should always be the decisive factor, it remains an enigma to the extravert how a subjective standpoint can be superior to the objective situation.

He inevitably comes to the conclusion that the introvert is either a conceited egoist or crack-brained bigot.

Today he would be suspected of harbouring an unconscious power-complex.

The introvert certainly lays himself open to these suspicions, for his positive, highly generalizing manner of expression, which appears to rule out every other opinion from the start, lends countenance to all the extravert's prejudices.

Moreover the inflexibility of his subjective judgment, setting itself above all objective data, is sufficient in itself to create the impression of marked egocentricity.

Faced with this prejudice the introvert is usually at a loss for the right argument, for he is quite unaware of the unconscious but generally quite valid assumptions on which his subjective judgment and his subjective perceptions are based.

In the fashion of the times he looks outside for an answer, instead of seeking it behind his own consciousness.

Should he become neurotic, it is the sign of an almost complete identity of the ego with the self; the importance of the self is reduced to nil, while the ego is inflated beyond measure.

The whole world-creating force of the subjective factor becomes concentrated in the ego, producing a boundless power-complex and a fatuous egocentricity.

Every psychology which reduces the essence of man to the unconscious power drive springs from this kind of disposition.

Many of Nietzsche's lapses in taste, for example, are due to this subjectivization of consciousness. Carl Jung, Psychological Types, Pages 373-378

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/02/6d800-1.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Saint Paul" - Anthology (2019-03-17 11:13)

[1]

The idea of angels, archangels, “principalities and powers” in St. Paul, the archons of the Gnostics, the heavenly hierarchy of Dionysius the Areopagite, all come from the perception of the relative autonomy of the archetypes. Carl Jung, CW 7, Page 66, Para 104.

Please give X. my best greetings and tell him-because his love is all too easily injured-he should meditate on Paul’s words in the Epistle to the Corinthians: "Love endureth all things." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 120-121.

These signs appear in Gnosticism, St. Paul’s sayings are undoubtedly connected with Gnosticism. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199.

I don’t believe in the tiger who was finally converted to vegetarianism and ate only apples. My solace was always Paul, who did not deem it beneath his dignity to admit he bore a thorn in the flesh. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 276-277.

St. Paul for instance was not converted to Christianity by intellectual or philosophical endeavouror by a belief, but by the force of his immediate inner experience. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 183-184.

From this you can easily see the origin of my psychology: only by going my own way, integrating my capacities headlong (like Paul), and thus creating a foundation for myself, could something be vouchsafed to me or built upon it, no matter where it came from, and of which I could be reasonably sure that it was not merely one of my own neglected capacities. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

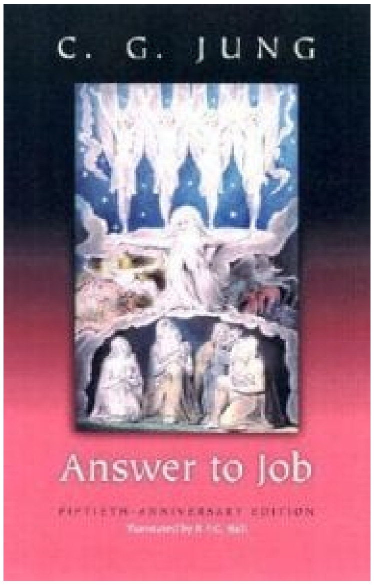
St. Paul was definitely not insane nor was his vision extraordinary. I know quite a number of cases of visions of Christ or auditions of a voice from within. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 380.

As experience shows, the figure one sees is not necessarily identical with the person one identifies with it, just as the picture by an artist is not identical with the original; but it is obvious that the vision of Christ was a most important religious experience to St. Paul. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 380.

St. Paul’s teacher, Gamaliel, was a noted Cabbalist. Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 301

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/26135-paul.jpg`

Answer to Job ~Carl Jung [Paragraphs 575 - 608] (2019-03-17 11:18)



Since the Omniscient looks into all hearts, and Yahweh’s eyes "run to and fro through the whole earth," x it were better for the interlocutor of the Eighty-ninth Psalm not to wax too conscious of his slight moral superiority over the more unconscious God. Better to keep it dark, for Yahweh is no friend of critical thoughts which in any way diminish the tribute of recognition he demands.ch in any way diminish the tribute of recognition he demands. Loudly as his power resounds through the universe, the basis of his existence is correspondingly slender, for it needs conscious reflection in order to exist in reality. Existence is only real when it is conscious to somebody. That is why the Creator needs conscious man even though, from sheer unconsciousness, he would like to prevent him from becoming conscious. And that is also why Yahweh needs the acclamation of a small group of people. One can imagine what would happen if this assembly suddenly decided to stop the applause: there would be a state of high excitation, with outbursts of blind destructive rage, then a withdrawal into hellish loneliness and the torture of non-existence, followed by a gradual reawakening of an unutterable longing for something which would make him conscious of himself. It is probably for this reason that all pristine things, even man before he becomes the canaille, have a touching, magical beauty, for in its nascent state "each thing after its kind" is the most precious, the most desirable, the tenderest thing in the world, being a reflection of the infinite love and goodness of the Creator.

576 In view of the undoubted frightfulness of divine wrath, and in an age when men still knew what they were talking about when they said "Fear God/’ it was only to be expected that man’s slight superiority should have remained unconscious. The powerful personality of Yahweh, who, in addition to everything else, lacked all biographical antecedents (his original relationship to the Elohim had long since been sunk in oblivion), had raised him above all the numina of the Gentiles and had immunized him against the influence that for several centuries had been undermining the authority of the pagan gods. It was precisely the details of their mythological biography that had become their nemesis, for with his growing capacity for judgment man had found these stories more and more incomprehensible and indecent. Yahweh, however, had no origin and no past, except his creation of the world, with which all history began, and his relation to that part of mankind whose forefather Adam he had fashioned in his own image as the Anthropos, the original man, by what appears to have been a special act of creation. One can only suppose that the other human beings who must also have existed at that time had been formed previously on the divine potter’s wheel along with the various kinds of beasts and cattle those human beings, namely, from whom Cain and Seth chose their wives. If one does not approve of this conjecture, then the only other possibility that remains is the far more scandalous one that they incestuously married their sisters (for whom there is no evidence in the text), as was still surmised by the philosopher Karl Lamprecht at the end of the nineteenth century.

577 The special providence which singled out the Jews from among the divinely stamped portion of humanity and made them the "chosen people" had burdened them from the start with a heavy obligation. As usually happens with such mortgages, they quite understandably tried to circumvent it as much as possible. Since the chosen people used every opportunity to break away from him, and Yahweh felt it of vital importance to tie this indispensable object (which he had made "godlike" for this very purpose) definitely to himself, he proposed to the patriarch Noah a contract between himself on the one hand, and Noah, his children, and all their animals, both tame and wild, on the other a contract that promised advantages to both parties. In order to strengthen this contract and keep it fresh in the memory, he instituted the rainbow as a token of the covenant. If, in future, he summoned the thunder-clouds which hide within them floods of water and lightning, then the rainbow would appear, reminding him and his people of the contract. The temptation to use such an accumulation of clouds for an experimental deluge was no small one, and it was therefore a good idea to associate it with a sign that would give timely warning of possible catastrophe.

578 In spite of these precautions the contract had gone to pieces with David, an event which left behind it a literary deposit in the Scriptures and which grieved some few of the devout, who upon reading it became reflective. As the Psalms were zealously read, it was inevitable that certain thoughtful people were unable to stomach the Eighty-ninth Psalm. However that may be, the fatal impression made by the breach of contract survived. It is historically possible that these considerations influenced the author of the Book of Job.

579 The Book of Job places this pious and faithful man, so heavily afflicted by the Lord, on a brightly lit stage where he presents his case to the eyes and ears of the world. It is amazing to see how easily Yahweh, quite without reason, had let himself be influenced by one of his sons, by a doubting thought, and made unsure of Job's faithfulness. With his touchiness and suspiciousness the mere possibility of doubt was enough to infuriate him and induce that peculiar double-faced behaviour of which he had already given proof in the Garden of Eden, when he pointed out the tree to the First Parents and at the same time forbade them to eat of it. In this way he precipitated the Fall, which he apparently never intended. Similarly, his faithful servant Job is now to be exposed to a rigorous moral test, quite gratuitously and to no purpose, although Yahweh is convinced of Job's faithfulness and constancy, and could moreover have assured himself beyond all doubt on this point had he taken counsel with his own omniscience. Why, then, is the experiment made at all, and a bet with the unscrupulous slanderer settled, without a stake, on the back of a powerless creature? It is indeed no edifying spectacle to see how quickly Yahweh abandons his faithful servant to the evil spirit and lets him fall without compunction or pity into the abyss of physical and moral suffering. From the human point of view Yahweh's behaviour is so revolting that one has to ask oneself whether there is not a deeper motive hidden behind it. Has Yahweh some secret resistance againstJob? That would explain his yielding to Satan. But what does man possess that God does not have? Because of his littleness, puniness, and defencelessness against the Almighty, he possesses, as we have already suggested, a somewhat keener consciousness based on self-reflection: he must, in order to survive, always be mindful of his impotence. God has no need of this circumspection, for nowhere does he come up against an insuperable obstacle that would force him to hesitate and hence make him reflect on himself. Could a suspicion have grown up in God that man possesses an infinitely small yet more concentrated degree of consciousness than that of a mere "creature" had aroused his divine suspicions. Too often already these human beings had not behaved in the prescribed manner. Even his trusty servant Job might have something up his sleeve. . . . Hence Yahweh's surprising readiness to listen to Satan's insinuations against his better judgment.

580 Without further ado Job is robbed of his herds, his servants are slaughtered, his sons and daughters are killed by a whirlwind, and he himself is smitten with sickness and brought to the brink of the grave. To rob him of peace altogether, his wife and his old friends are let loose against him, all of whom say the wrong things. His justified complaint finds no hearing with the judge who is so much praised for his justice. Job's right is refused in order that Satan be not disturbed in his play.

581 One must bear in mind here the dark deeds that follow one another in quick succession: robbery, murder, bodily injury with premeditation, and denial of a fair trial. This is further exacerbated by the fact that Yahweh displays no compunction, remorse, or compassion, but only ruthlessness and brutality.
The plea of unconsciousness is invalid, seeing that he flagrantly violates at least three of the commandments he himself gave out on Mount Sinai.

582 Job's friends do everything in their power to contribute to his moral torments, and instead of giving him, whom God has perfidiously abandoned, their warm-hearted support, they moralize in an all too human manner, that is, in the stupidest fashion imaginable, and "fill him with wrinkles." They thus deny him even the last comfort of sympathetic participation and human understanding, so that one cannot altogether suppress the suspicion of connivance in high places.

583 Why Job's torments and the divine wager should suddenly come to an end is not quite clear. So long as Job does not actually die, the pointless suffering could be continued indefinitely. We must, however, keep an eye on the background of all these events: it is just possible that something in this background will gradually begin to take shape as a compensation for Job's undeserved suffering-something to which Yahweh, even if he had only a faint inkling of it, could hardly remain indifferent. Without Yahweh's knowledge and contrary to his intentions, the tormented though guiltless Job had secretly been lifted up to a superior knowledge of God which God himself did not possess. Had Yahweh consulted his omniscience, Job would not have had the advantage of him. But then, so many other things would not have happened either.

584 Job realizes God's inner antinomy, and in the light of this realization his knowledge attains a divine numinosity. The possibility of this development lies, one must suppose, in man's "godlikeness," which one should certainly not look for in human morphology. Yahweh himself had guarded against this error by expressly forbidding the making of images. Job, by his insistence on bringing his case before God, even without hope of a hearing, had stood his ground and thus created the very obstacle that forced God to reveal his true nature. With this dramatic climax Yahweh abruptly breaks off his cruel game of cat and mouse. But if anyone should expect that his wrath will now be turned against the slanderer, he will be severely disappointed. Yahweh does not think of bringing this mischief-making son of his to account, nor does it ever occur to him to give Job at least the moral satisfaction of explaining his behaviour. Instead, he comes riding along on the tempest of his almightiness and thunders reproaches at the half-crushed human worm:

Who is this that darkens counsel by words without insight?

585 In view of the subsequent words of Yahweh, one must really ask oneself: Who is darkening what counsel? The only dark thing here is how Yahweh ever came to make a bet with Satan. It is certainly not Job who has darkened anything and least of all a counsel, for there was never any talk of this nor will there be in what follows. The bet does not contain any "counsel" so far as one can see-unless, of course, it was Yahweh himself who egged Satan on for the ultimate purpose of exalting Job. Naturally this development was foreseen in omniscience, and it may be that the word "counsel" refers to this eternal and absolute knowledge. If so, Yahweh's attitude seems the more illogical and incomprehensible, as he could then have enlightened Job on this point-which, in view of the wrong done to him, would have been only fair and equitable. I must therefore regard this possibility as improbable.

586 Whose words are without insight? Presumably Yahweh is not referring to the words of Job's friends, but is rebuking Job. But what is Job's guilt? The only thing he can be blamed for is his incurable optimism in believing that he can appeal to divine justice. In this he is mistaken, as Yahweh's subsequent words prove. God does not want to be just; he merely flaunts might over right. Job could not get that into his head, because he looked upon God as a moral being. He had never doubted God's might, but had hoped for right as well. He had, however, already taken back this error when he recognized God's contradictory nature, and by so doing he assigned a place to God's justice and goodness. So one can hardly speak of lack of insight. The answer to Yahweh's conundrum is therefore: it is Yahweh himself who darkens his own counsel and who has no insight. He turns the tables on Job and blames him for what he himself does: man is not permitted to have an opinion about him, and, in particular, is to have no insight which he himself does not possess. For seventy-one verses he proclaims his world creating power to his miserable victim, who sits in ashes and scratches his sores with potsherds, and who by now has had more than enough of superhuman violence. Job has absolutely no need of being impressed by further exhibitions of this power. Yahweh, in his omniscience, could have known just how incongruous his attempts at intimidation were in such a situation. He could easily have seen that Job believes in his omnipotence as much as ever and has never doubted it or wavered in his loyalty. Altogether, he pays so little attention to Job's real situation that one suspects him of having an ulterior motive which is more important to him: Job is no more than the outward occasion for an inward process of dialectic in God. His thunderings at Job so completely miss the point that one cannot help but see how much he is occupied with himself. The tremendous emphasis he lays on his omnipotence and greatness makes no sense in relation to Job, who certainly needs no more convincing, but only becomes intelligible when aimed at a listener who doubts it. This "doubting thought" is Satan, who after completing his evil handiwork has returned to the paternal bosom in order to continue his subversive activity there. Yahweh must have seen that Job's loyalty was unshakable and that Satan had lost his bet. He must also have realized that, in accepting this bet, he had done everything possible to drive his faithful servant to disloyalty, even to the extent of perpetrating a whole series of crimes. Yet it is not remorse and certainly not moral horror that rises to his consciousness, but an obscure intimation of something that questions his omnipotence. He is particularly sensitive on this point, because "might" is the great argument. But omniscience knows that might excuses nothing. The said intimation refers, of course, to the extremely uncomfortable fact that Yahweh had let himself be bamboozled by Satan. This weakness of his does not reach full consciousness, since Satan is treated with remarkable tolerance and consideration. Evidently Satan's intrigue is deliberately overlooked at Job's expense.

588 Luckily enough, Job had noticed during this harangue that everything else had been mentioned except his right. He has understood that it is at present impossible to argue the question of right, as it is only too obvious that Yahweh has no interest whatever in Job's cause but is far more preoccupied with his own affairs. Satan, that is to say, has somehow to disappear, and this can best be done by casting suspicion on Job as a man of subversive opinions. The problem is thus switched on to another track, and the episode with Satan remains unmentioned and unconscious. To the spectator it is not quite clear why Job is treated to this almighty exhibition of thunder and lightning, but the performance as such is sufficiently magnificent and impressive to convince not only a larger audience but above all Yahweh himself of his unassailable power. Whether Job realizes what violence Yahweh is doing to his own omniscience by behaving like this we do not know, but his silence and submission leave a number of possibilities open. Job has no alternative butformally to revoke his demand for justice, and he therefore answers in the words quoted at the beginning: "I lay my hand on my mouth."

589 He betrays not the slightest trace of mental reservation in fact, his answer leaves us in no doubt that he has succumbed completely and without question to the tremendous force of the divine demonstration. The most exacting tyrant should have been satisfied with this, and could be quite sure that his servant from terror alone, to say nothing of his undoubted loyalty would not dare to nourish a single improper thought for a very long time to come.

590 Strangely enough, Yahweh does not notice anything of the kind. He does not see Job and his situation at all. It is rather as if he had another powerful opponent in the place of Job, one who was better worth challenging. This is clear from his twice repeated taunt: Gird up your loins like a man; I will question you, and you shall declare to me.

591 One would have to choose positively grotesque examples to illustrate the disproportion between the two antagonists. Yahweh sees something in Job which we would not ascribe to him but to God, that is, an equal power which causes him to bring out his whole power apparatus and parade it before his opponent. Yahweh projects on to Job a sceptic's face which is hateful to him because it is his own, and which gazes at him with an uncanny and critical eye. He is afraid of it, for only in face of something frightening does one let off a cannonade of references to one's power, cleverness, courage, invincibility, etc. What has all that to do with Job? Is it worth the lion's while to terrify a mouse?

592 Yahweh cannot rest satisfied with the first victorious round. Job has long since been knocked out, but the great antagonist whose phantom is projected on to the pitiable sufferer still stands menacingly upright. Therefore Yahweh raises his arm again:

Will you even put me in the wrong?
Will you condemn me that you may be justified?
Have you an arm like God,
and can you thunder with a voice like his?

593 Man, abandoned without protection and stripped of his rights, and whose nothingness is thrown in his face at every opportunity, evidently appears to be so dangerous to Yahweh that he must be battered down with the heaviest artillery. What irritates Yahweh can be seen from his challenge to the ostensible
Job:
Look on every one that is proud, and bring him low;
and tread down the wicked where they stand.
Hide them in the dust together;

bind their faces in the hidden place.
Then will I also acknowledge to you that your own right hand can give you victory.

594 Job is challenged as though he himself were a god. But in the contemporary metaphysics there was no deuteros theos, no other god except Satan, who owns Yahweh's ear and is able to influence him. He is the only one who can pull the wool over his eyes, beguile him, and put him up to a massive violation of his own penal code. A formidable opponent indeed, and, because of his close kinship, so compromising that he must be concealed with the utmost discretion even to the point of God's hiding him from his own consciousness in his own bosom! In his stead God must set up his miserable servant as the bugbearwhom he has to fight, in the hope that by banishing the dreaded countenance to "the hidden place" he will be able to maintain himself in a state of unconsciousness.

595 The stage-managing of this imaginary duel, the speechifying, and the impressive performance given by the prehistoric menagerie would not be sufficiently explained if we tried to reduce them to the purely negative factor of Yahweh's fear of becoming conscious and of the relativization which this entails. The conflict becomes acute for Yahweh as a result of a new factor, which is, however, not hidden from omniscience though in this case the existing knowledge is not accompanied by any conclusion. The new factor is something that has never occurred before in the history of the world, the unheard-of fact that, without knowing it or wanting it, a mortal man is raised by his moral behaviour above the stars in heaven, from which position of advantage he can behold the back of Yahweh, the abysmal world of "shards."

597 Truly, Yahweh can do all things and permits himself all things without batting an eyelid. With brazen countenance he can project his shadow side and remain unconscious at man's expense. He can boast of his superior power and enact laws which mean less than air to him. Murder and manslaughter are mere bagatelles, and if the mood takes him he can play the feudal grand seigneur and generously recompense his bond slave for the havoc wrought in his wheat-fields. "So you have lost your sons and daughters? No harm done, I will give you new and better ones."

598 Job continues (no doubt with downcast eyes and in a lowvoice):

"Who is this that hides counsel without insight?"

Therefore I have uttered what I did not understand, things too wonderful for me, which I did not know.

"Hear, and I will speak; I will question you, and you declare to me."

I had heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now my eye sees thee; therefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

599 Shrewdly, Job takes up Yahweh's aggressive words and prostrates himself at his feet as if he were indeed the defeated antagonist. Guileless as Job's speech sounds, it could just as well be equivocal. He has learnt his lesson well and experienced "wonderful things" which are none too easily grasped. Before, he had known Yahweh "by the hearing of the ear," but now he has got a taste of his reality, more so even than David an process of the sefiroth. Therefore the seftroth had to be cleansed of the evil admixture of the shards. This elimination of the shards took place in what is described in the cabalistic writings particularly of Luria and his school as the "breaking of the vessels/' Through this the powers of evil assumed a separate and real existence incisive lesson that had better not be forgotten. Formerly he was naive, dreaming perhaps of a "good" God, or of a benevolent ruler and just judge. He had imagined that a ”covenant" was alegal matter and that anyone who was party to a contract could insist on his rights as agreed; that God would be faithful and true or at least just, and, as one could assume from the Ten Commandments, would have some recognition of ethical values or at least feel committed to his own legal standpoint. But, to his horror, he has discovered that Yahweh is not human but, in certain respects, less than human, that he is just what Yahweh himself says of Leviathan (the crocodile): He beholds everything that is high: He is king over all proud beasts.

600 Unconsciousness has an animal nature. Like all old gods Yahweh has his animal symbolism with its unmistakable borrowings from the much older theriomorphic gods of Egypt, especially Horus and his four sons. Of the four animals of Yahweh only one has a human face. That is probably Satan, the godfather of man as a spiritual being. EzekieFs vision attributes three-fourths animal nature and only one-fourth human nature to the animal deity, while the upper deity, the one above the "sapphire throne," merely had the "likeness" of a man. This symbolism explains Yahweh’s behaviour, which, from the human point of view, is so intolerable: it is the behaviour of an unconscious being who cannot be judged morally. Yahweh is a phenomenon and, as Job says, "not a man."

601 One could, without too much difficulty, impute such a meaning to Job’s speech. Be that as it may, Yahweh calmed down at last. The therapeutic measure of unresisting acceptance had proved its value yet again. Nevertheless, Yahweh is still somewhat nervous of Job’s friends they "have not spoken of me what is right." The projection of his doubt-complex extends comically enough, one must say to these respectable and slightly pedantic old gentlemen, as though God-knows-what depended on what they thought. But the fact that men should think at all, and especially about him, is maddeningly disquieting and ought somehow to be stopped. It is far too much like the sort of thing his vagrant son is always springing on him, thus hitting him in his weakest spot. How often already has he bitterly regretted his unconsidered outbursts!

602 One can hardly avoid the impression that Omniscience is gradually drawing near to a realization, and is threatened with an insight that seems to be hedged about with fears of selfdestruction. Fortunately, Job’s final declaration is so formulated that one can assume with some certainty that, for the protagonists, the incident is closed for good and all.

603 The commenting chorus on this great tragedy, which has never at any time lost its vitality, do not feel quite like that. For our modern sensibilities it is by no means apparent that with Job’s profound obeisance to the majesty of the divine presence, and his prudent silence, a real answer has been given to the question raised by the Satanic prank of a wager with God. Job has not so much answered as reacted in an adjusted way. In so doing he displayed remarkable self-discipline, but an unequivocal answer has still to be given. To take the most obvious thing, what about the moral wrong Job has suffered? Is man so worthless in God’s eyes that not even a tort moral can be inflicted on him? That contradicts the fact that man is desired by Yahweh and that it obviously matters to him whether men speak "right" of him or not. He needs Job’s loyalty, and it means so much to him that he shrinks at nothing in carrying out his test. This attitude attaches an almost divine importance to man, for what else is there in the whole wide world that could mean anything to one who has everything? Yahweh’s divided attitude, which on the one hand tramples onhuman life and happiness without regard, and on the other hand must have man for a partner, puts the latter in an impossible position. At one moment Yahweh behaves as irrationally as a cataclysm; the next moment he wants to be loved, honoured, worshipped, and praised as just. He reacts irritably to every word that has the faintest suggestion of criticism, while he himself does not care a straw for his own moral code if his actions happen to run counter to its statutes.

605 One can submit to such a God only with fear and trembling, and can try indirectly to propitiate the despot with unctuous praises and ostentatious obedience. But a relationship of trust seems completely out of the question to our modern way of thinking. Nor can moral satisfaction be expected from an unconscious nature god of this kind. Nevertheless, Job got his satisfaction, without Yahweh’s intending it and possibly without himself knowing it, as the poet would have it appear. Yahweh’s allocutions have the unthinking yet none the less transparent purpose of showing Job the brutal power of the demiurge: "This is I, the creator of all the ungovernable, ruthless forces of Nature, which are not subject to any ethical laws. I, too, am an amoral force of Nature, a purely phenomenal personality that cannot see its own back." This is, or at any rate could be, a moral satisfaction of the first order for Job, because through this declaration man, in spite of his impotence, is set up as a judge over God himself. We do not know whether Job realizes this, but we do know from the numerous commentaries on Job that all succeeding ages have overlooked the fact that a kind of Moira or Dike rules over Yahweh, causing him to give himself away so blatantly. Anyone can see how he unwittingly raises Job by humiliating him in the dust. By so doing he pronounces judgment on himself and gives man the moral satisfaction whose absence we found so painful in the Book of Job.

607 The poet of this drama showed a masterly discretion in ringing down the curtain at the very moment when his hero gave unqualified recognition to the dxo^acm iityaXy of the Demiurge by prostrating himself at the feet of His Divine Majesty. No other impression was permitted to remain. An unusual scandal was blowing up in the realm of metaphysics, with supposedly devastating consequences, and nobody was ready with a saving formula which would rescue the monotheistic conception of God from disaster. Even in those days the critical intellect of a Greek could easily have seized on this new addition to Yahweh's biography and used it in his disfavour (as indeed happened, though very much later) so as to mete out to him the fate that had already overtaken the Greek gods. But a relativization of God was utterly unthinkable at that time, and remained so for the next two thousand years.

608 The unconscious mind of man sees correctly even when conscious reason is blind and impotent. The drama has been consummated for all eternity: Yahweh's dual nature has been revealed, and somebody or something has seen and registered this fact. Such a revelation, whether it reached man's consciousness or not, could not fail to have far-reaching consequences. Carl Jung, Answer to Job, Psychology and Religion.

Carl Jung on Meditation, Alchemy, Roman Mass. (2019-03-17 11:31)

[1]

Lecture X 30th June, 1939

In the last lecture we were speaking of the alchemical parallels to the three ways of meditation prescribed by Cisneros, and we stopped before we had finished the third way, the via unitativa.

I only had time to tell you that the analogy in alchemy was to be found in the symbol of the coniunctio, the union of the spirit with the body.

This is usually represented by the union of sun and moon, or silver and gold, the most valuable metals.

I told you the alchemists sometimes represented this peculiar union as the rite of the Mass and. gave you an example.

The peculiar conceptions of Hermetic philosophy are really wholly parallel to the meditations of the Devoti, it is only the language and procedure which are different.

The alchemists were concerned with matter, but they endeavoured to produce a body which they said could only appear through the grace of God and which they compared to the body of Christ.

This sounds a complete absurdity to us today, but it was by no means absurd in the Middle Ages.

They had a totally different conception of the world, they did not need to search for metaphysical reality, for it was all settled fact for them.

They knew that God had created the world in seven days and that he had sent his Son to become man.

Metaphysical reality was already there so that chemical matter was seen by them in this light.

It was a matter of course to them that the stone was formed by metaphysical means, they knew that it could only be accomplished through the grace of God.

He had already accomplished this miracle in the incarnation of Christ, and the alchemists endeavoured to produce the same process in the materia.

They imagined the life of Christ, how he was begotten and born, suffered and died, and they hoped that this would imprint itself on the materia and transform it.

So they also called the miraculous stone the Salvator, to characterise it as the incarnated Saviour, in contrast to the spiritual Saviour who was Christ himself.

In the Middle Ages Christ was no historical figure but a perpetual presence, as he still is in the Roman Catholic Mass.

The stone is also called "pelicanus noster ".

The pelican nourishes its young with its blood as the Lord nourishes his children with his blood in the Mass.

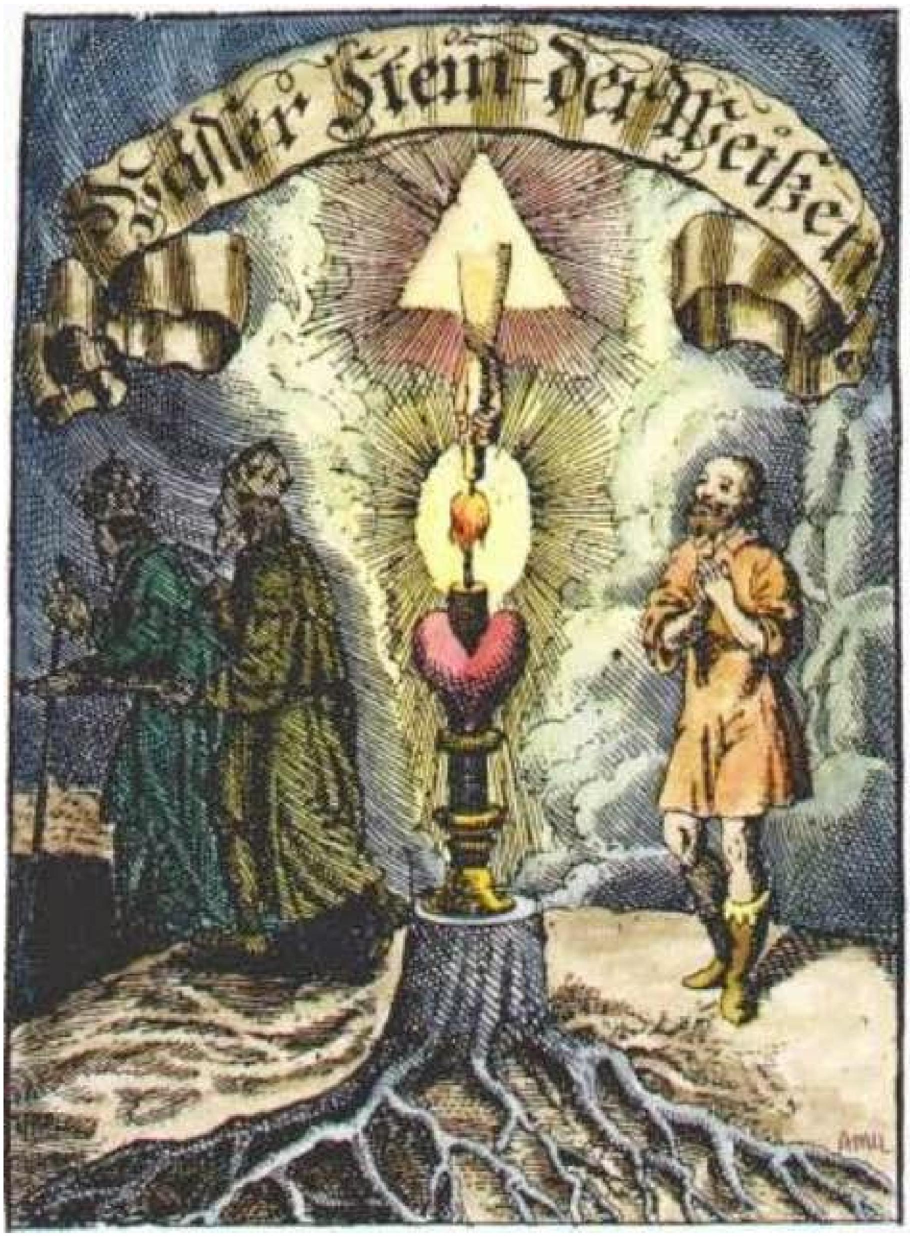
So the lapis is also called: "cibs immortalis" (immortal food], "aurum potabile" (drinkable gold] , "spiritualis sanguis" (spiritual blood] and "medicina catholica" (panacea).

All these are attributes of this miraculous thing.

One could assume that the peculiar language and designations in Hermetic philosophy originated in Church tradition; Albertus Magnus and other Fathers of the Church seem to have been interested in alchemy and several treatises have been ascribed to them but it is all rather doubtful.

Alchemy began about the same time as Christianity, in fact we find alchemical ideas in China long before our era, so one can only be sure that the symbolism and language of the Fathers of the Church play an enormous role in alchemy.

[2]



The baptismal water of the Church was anticipated in Hermetic philosophy, we find it mentioned in treatises belonging to the first century A.D. and these are founded on pre-Christian sources.

There are quotations from these sources in the earliest alchemistic texts extant.

So the baptismal water is apparently an instance where the natural philosophy of antiquity influenced the beginnings of Christianity.

It is especially the symbols of the union or coniunctio which we find in the communion service.

In the Roman Mass the priest breaks off a small piece of the host, a round wafer which has been consecrated, and mixes it with the wine, the blood.

This is the breaking of the body of Christ.

The wine is spirit in the double sense, so body and spirit are reunited in this act.

The Latin passage in the service which is read runs roughly: "The union and consecration of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ; may those who receive this mixture attain everlasting life.”

It is the cibus immortalis, the mixtio, a symbol of the union of body and spirit and of the resurrection of the living Christ.

It is the moment in the Mass when Christ comes to life again, and, as the doctrine of transubstantiation shows us, really and actually.

This is interpreted as the Resurrection and is directly designate d as such.

This breaking of the bread is carried out in a much more interesting way in the Byzantine Mass in the Greek Orthodox Church.

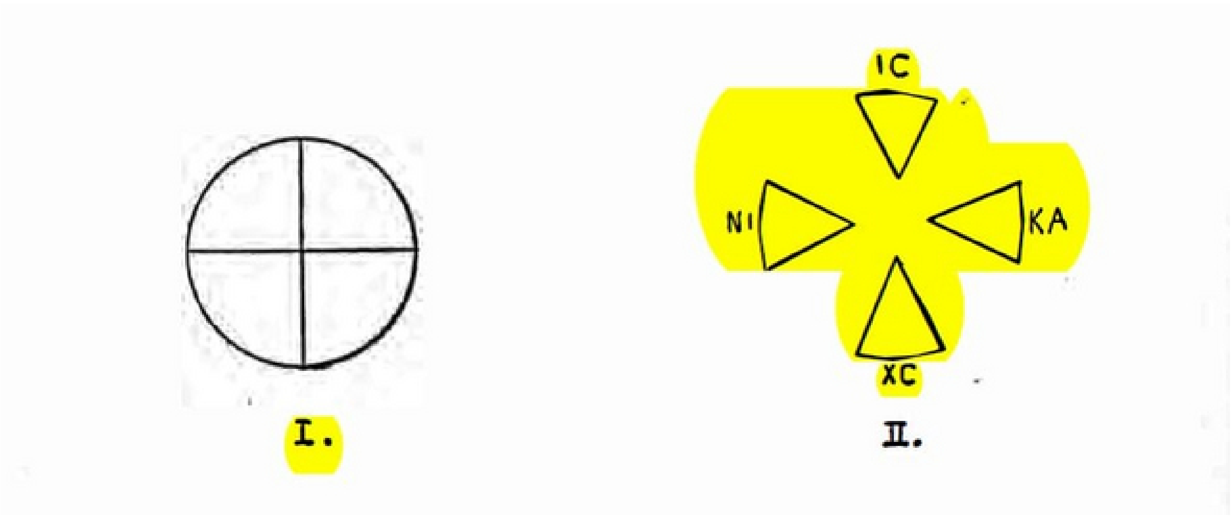
Very often the host, or round slice of bread, is replaced by a loaf of bread, which is kept on a sideboard or table behind the altar or iconostasis.

The priest performs the mactatio, the slaughter of Christ, by piercing the bread with a silver lance, as Christ was pierced by the lance of the soldier in order to ascertain whether he was already dead.

This procedure is very interesting because the host or loaf of bread is divided into four pieces.

Diagram I.

This established the quaternity. It is laid on the silver plate in the manner of Diagram II.



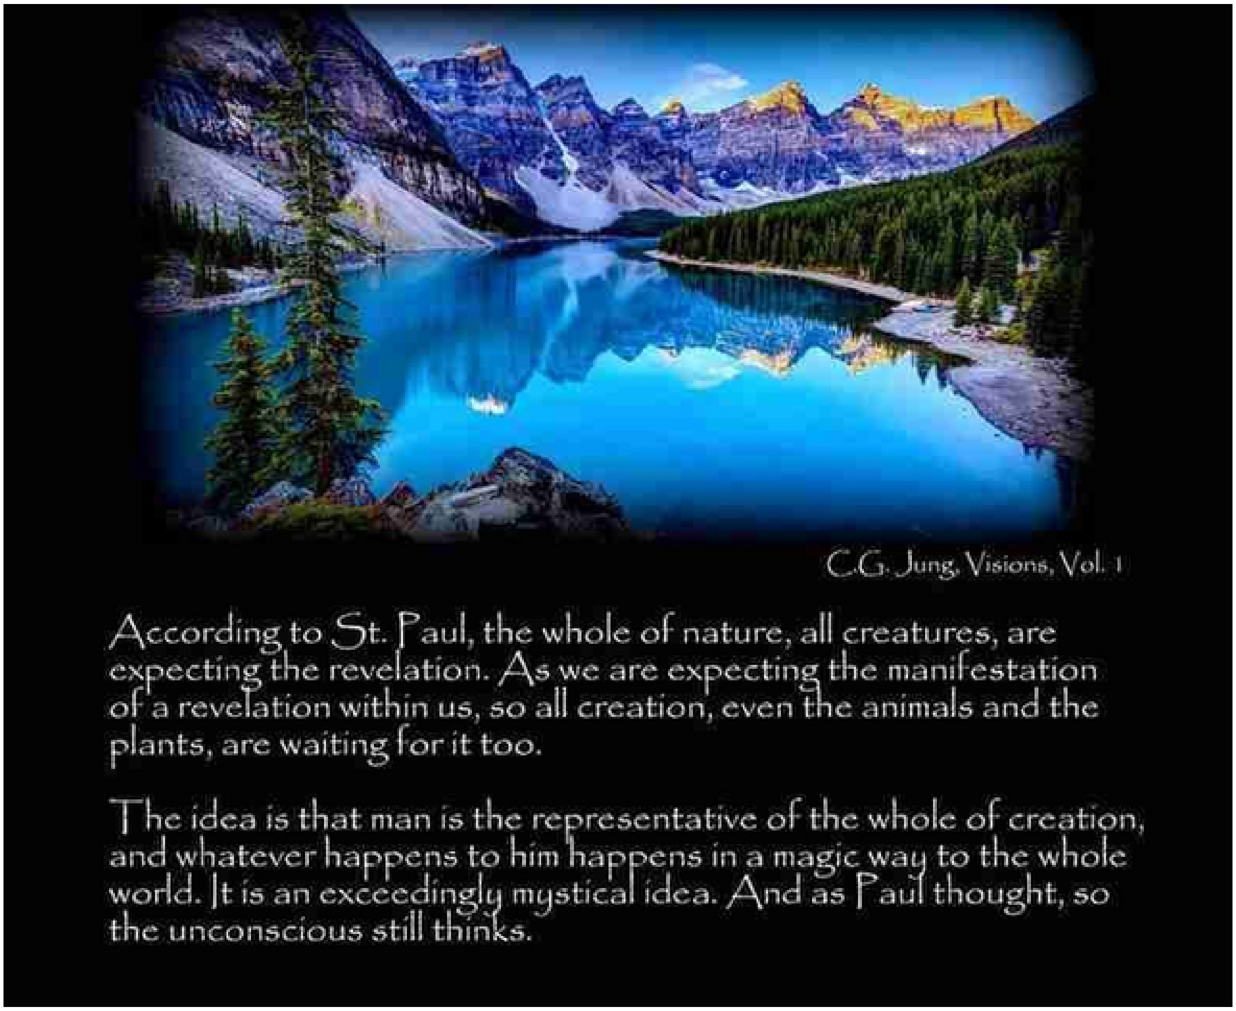
This is exactly the same idea as the quartering which is undertaken in alchemy to produce the four elements.

The four quarters of the bread are then mixed with the wine, and, through the joining of the separated, Christ is again re-established. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages 161-162

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/a4d31-2.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/65c2d-3.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/19266-4.jpg`

Carl Jung: The idea is that man is the representative of the whole of creation,... (2019-03-17 11:50)

[1]



C.G. Jung, Visions, Vol. 1

According to St. Paul, the whole of nature, all creatures, are expecting the revelation. As we are expecting the manifestation of a revelation within us, so all creation, even the animals and the plants, are waiting for it too.

The idea is that man is the representative of the whole of creation, and whatever happens to him happens in a magic way to the whole world. It is an exceedingly mystical idea. And as Paul thought, so the unconscious still thinks.

You may remember that passage in St. Paul about the “apokatastasis,” which is this same idea that the whole of nature, all creatures, are expecting the revelation.

As we are expecting the manifestation as the children of god, a revelation of the Holy Ghost within us, so all creation, even the animals and the plants are waiting for it too; that spiritual miracle of redemption or completion which happens in n=man means the crowning of all nature at the same time.

So everything that has been fettered will be released with the liberation of the children of God.

The idea is that man is the representative of the whole of creation, and whatever happens to him happens in a magic way to the whole world.

One finds the same idea among very primitive people.

The members of a totem clan, for instance, undergo certain ceremonials in order to change themselves; and because of that change, the nature of the totem will change also.

The totem animal is also affected in a way; by their getting into a certain psychical conditions, the fertility of the totem animal is assured.

In the center of Australia the growth of grass is exceedingly important, so they have a variety of grass seed as their totem; they perform their rites and the grass-seed totem is responsible for the crops.

And there is a water totem in places where water is very scarce; they believe that through their ceremonies the water totem will secure enough rain and drinking water. So the primitive idea is also the idea of the "apokatastasis."

It is an exceedingly mystical idea.

And as Paul thought, so the unconscious still thinks. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 144.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cdb07-12bcreation.jpg`

Carl Jung: I share your conviction that genuine religiosity is the best cure for all psyche suffering.

(2019-03-18 03:30)

[1]

To Pastor Josef Schattauer

Dear Pastor Schattauer, 20 February 1933

I can only agree with you when you equate St. Francis with the essence of primitive religiosity, but even so a special illumination is needed for a person living in more highly developed centuries to become as simple again as a primitive.

Equally I share your conviction that genuine religiosity is the best cure for all psyche suffering.

The pity of it is that it is exceedingly difficult nowadays to inculcate into people any conception of genuine religiosity.

I have found that religious terminology only scares them off still more, for which reason I always have to tread the path of science and experience, quite irrespective of any tradition, in order to get my patients to acknowledge spiritual truths.

When you say that the Reformation undermined very many of them, I must add that modern science has undermined them still more thoroughly, so thoroughly that in the psyche of educated people today there is only a big black hole.

This has forced me to build up a psychology which will open the door again to psychic experience.

The Catholic Church must hold fast to what still remains from earlier times of living religiosity; I on the contrary must do pioneer work in a world where everything pristine has vanished.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 118

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/50bce-12bschat.jpg`

Carl Jung: I have even found that men are far more irrational than animals. (2019-03-18 03:30)

[1]

Dear Pastor Arz, 10 April 1933

Of course I have no objection to your discussing my private communications to you among your circle of friends.

Scientifically speaking, nothing whatever can be made out about the phenomenon of the spirit.

These things are so delicate that they completely elude our scientific grasp.

The idea that man alonepossesses the primacy of reason is antiquated twaddle.

I have even found that men are far more irrational than animals.

Since we know from experience that the psyche can be grasped to only a very limited degree, it would be best to regard it as a tiny conscious world influenced by all sorts of unknown factors lurking in the great darkness that surrounds us.

Among these factors we can perhaps include what we call spirit; thus far science may go, but no further.

I have discussed what spirit means to me in my essay "Geist und Leben" (Seelenprobleme der Gegenwart, Rascher, Zurich, 1931).

There you will find a formulation of my views on the place of our psyche in the cosmos.

It seems to me therefore quite right if man, conscious of his limitations, feels himself only in modest degree a creator, but in far higher degree a creature or object of a (scientifically unknown) factor that evidently has the tendency to realize itself in human life.

One should never confuse oneself with this determinant, otherwise there is always an inflation.

In this connection I would like to draw your attention to my book Die Beziehungen zwischen dem Ich und dem Unbewussten, published by Reichl (Darmstadt [1928]).

Perhaps you also know the book I brought out together with the late Richard Wilhelm, Das Geheimnis der goldenen Blute.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 119

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b5794-12banimals.jpg`

Carl Jung: The existence of telepathy in time and space is still denied only by positive ignoramuses. (2019-03-18 03:30)

[1]

To Pastor W. Arz

Dear Pastor Arz, 17 February 1933

It is of little use having any convictions about the question you ask.

I therefore determine the probability of certain views whenever possible by the empirical method.

It is naturally quite out of the question that we shall ever be able to furnish a proof of the immortality of the soul.

On the other hand, it does seem to me possible to establish certain peculiar facts regarding the nature of the soul which at least do not rule out the immortality affirmed by religious belief.

What is commonly understood by "psyche" is certainly an ephemeral phenomenon if it is taken to mean the ordinary facts of consciousness.

But in the deeper layers of the psyche which we call the unconscious there are things that cast doubt on the indispensable categories of our conscious world, namely time and space.

The existence of telepathy in time and space is still denied only by positive ignoramuses.

It is clear that timeless and spaceless perceptions are possible only because the perceiving psyche is similarly constituted.

Timelessness and spacelessness must therefore be somehow inherent in its nature, and this in itself permits us to doubt the exclusive temporality of the soul, or if you prefer, makes time and space appear doubtful.

Every ephemeral phenomenon requires limitation in time and space, but if time and space are doubtful, then the peculiar limitation of such phenomena becomes doubtful too.

It is sufficiently clear that timelessness and spacelessness can never be grasped through the medium of our intelligence, so we must rest content with this borderline concept.

Nevertheless we know that a door exists to a quite different order of things from the one we encounter in our empirical world of consciousness.

This is about all that science can contribute to this question.

Beyond that there is still the subjective psychological experience which can be in the highest degree convincing for the individual even though it cannot be shared by the wider public.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 117-118

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0ca48-12bimmortality.jpg`

Carl Jung: If you feel a resistance against the unconscious, you resist yourself. (2019-03-18 03:30)

[1]

To Fanny Bowditch Katz

Dear Madam, 30 July 1918

I think such an important and delicate question cannot be solved by medical advice only.

The main question is your psychological attitude towards this problem.

From a purely medical standpoint you have the opinion of the competent gynaecologists, according towhich the physical possibility seems to exist.

But this statement doesn’t solve the question.

There is a most important psychological side to this problem.

If the unconscious is with your conscious decision, or if there is a very positive hint from the unconscious concerning a real child, then you can be sure that the powers of nature also are with you and will help you in a successful overcoming of the strain of gravidity and childbirth.

But if your dreams should show a considerable amount of resistance against a real child, then I would say that pregnancy is not advisable, for the time being at least.

Because, if you act against the tendency of the unconscious, you will be counteracted by the unconscious, which is always a most important obstacle.

You should be absolutely at one with yourself, if you want a real child.

It must be a fate, and not a personal wish, if you want to have all guarantees that the child should be as sound as possible.

The factor of inheritance has to be considered as a serious point in the discussion of the problem, but not as an absolute counter-argument.

The quality and disposition of the whole family and of the ancestors play a much greater role in the creation of the child's disposition than the individual disposition of father or mother.

I was astonished not to find an allusion to the unconscious material in your letter.

In such a serious problem you should be aware of the standpoint of the unconscious.

If you feel a resistance against the unconscious, you resist yourself.

If the unconscious agrees with your conscious standpoint, then the child seems to be required, no matter whether the enterprise will be hard or not.

Under such circumstances you have the guarantee that, in so far you and your husband are concerned, the child will be all right-all right as far as ancestral inheritance and physical conditions allow it.

I am not astonished that Dr. Katz as well as yourself come to such a conclusion, and I wouldn't wonder if you really would give birth· to a child.

This problem is absolutely on the way, as I had the honour to foretell it once to Dr. Katz.

Only be careful in examining your own attitude, so that you know that you fully agree or disagree.

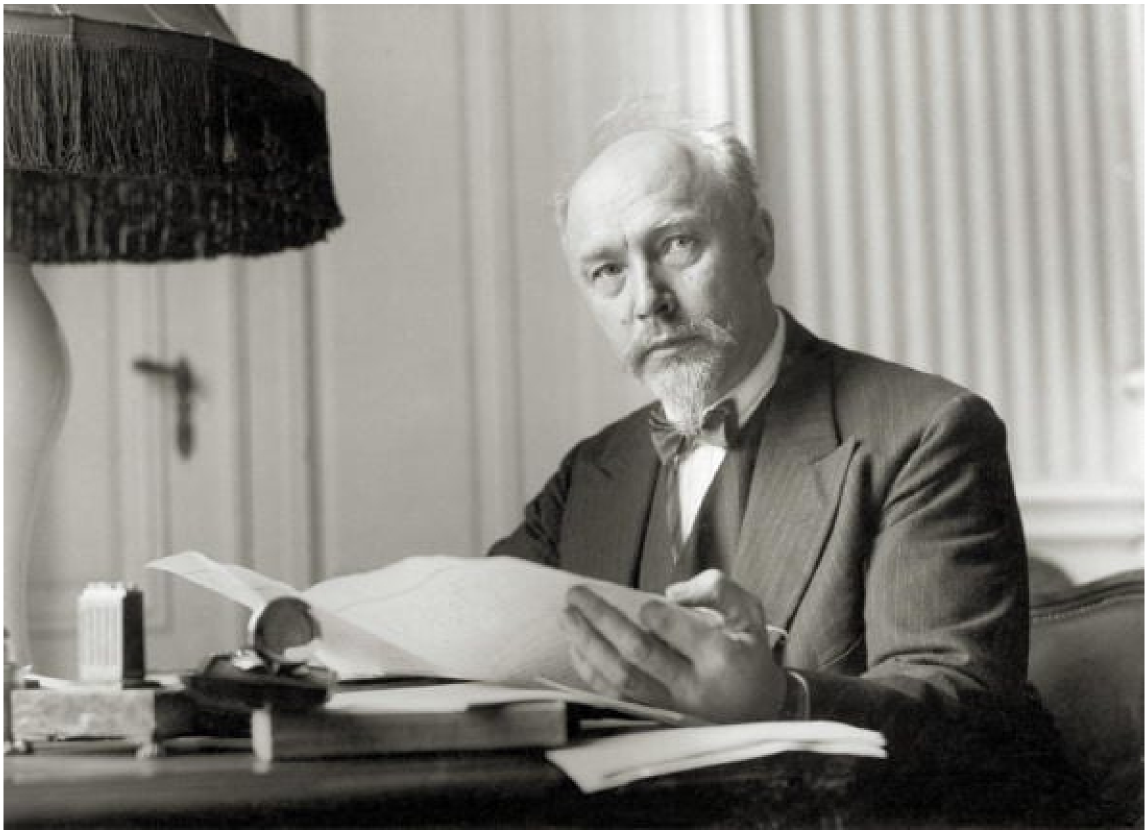
Yours sincerely,

Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 34-35

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9f886-12bboditch.jpg`

Carl Jung: About your dream I would only remark that "hanging" signifies "suspense" (2019-03-18 03:30)

[1]



To Count Hermann Keyserling

Dear Count, 19 June 1927

About your dream I would only remark that "hanging" signifies "suspense" -a provisional or expectant state with swings of the pendulum which are represented by your excursions into the most diverse spiritual spheres.

If you talk too much, then by the law of contrasts "stillness" accumulates within you and will one day come to expression (perhaps merely symptomatically and indirectly).

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

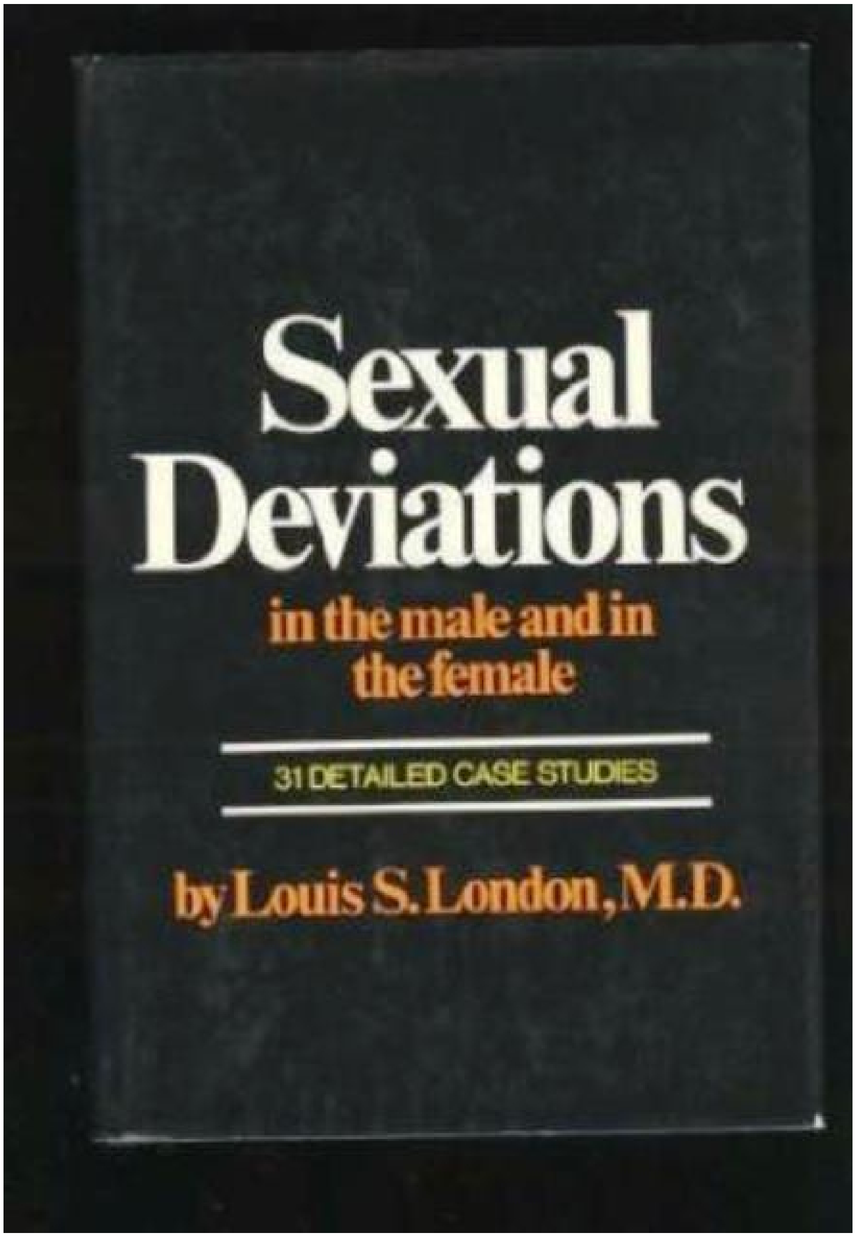
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 47

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/83a1b-12bhermann.jpg`

Carl Jung: I avoid the treatment of such cases as much as possible. (2019-03-18 03:30)

[1]



Sexual Deviations
in the male and in the female
31 DETAILED CASE STUDIES
by Louis S. London, M.D.

To Louis S. London

My dear Dr. London, 24 September 1926

I suppose the news you heard of my successes in the treatment of Dementia praecox is greatly exaggerated.

As a matter of fact I only treated a limited number of cases, and these were all what one might call in a liquid condition, that is to say, not yet congealed.

I avoid the treatment of such cases as much as possible.

It is true they can be treated, and even with the most obvious success, but such a success costs almost your own life.

You have to make the most stupendous effort to reintegrate the dissociated psychic entities, and it is by no means a neat and simple technique which you can apply, but a creative effort together with a vast knowledge of the unconscious mind.

These are not merely big words but simple statements of the actual truth.

It is not too easy to cure a neurosis, but to cure a case on the borderline of D.P. is worse.

Moreover the treatment of D.P. [Dementia Praecox] is entirely based upon the empirical knowledge gained from the neuroses.

Therefore if you want to know anything about the treatment of D.P. you ought to begin with the study of the analytical treatment in general. ...

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 45

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/486d7-12blondon.jpg`

Carl Jung: You are the only Swiss who had reacted personally to my article and on your own initiative!

(2019-03-18 03:30)

[1]

To Meinrad Inglin

Dear Herr Inglin, Bollingen, 2 August 1928

Please excuse my irresponsible silence.

I had to wait for the holidays before I could write any letters at all.

But I didn't want to fail to thank you personally for your beautiful book,1 which I could read with passionate understanding.

I underline could because contemporary literature, particularly German, is to me the epitome of boredom coupled with psychic torture.

But with your book I knew what you were talking about-you talk about the great mystery of the Swiss lakes and mountains in which from time to time I blissfully immerse myself.

You are the only Swiss who had reacted personally to my article and on your own initiative!

I have to write to this unique personage.

If your name were not Meinrad Inglin, and if this genuine sounding name were a pseudonym, I would almost doubt you were Swiss.

But since I cannot doubt your authenticity, I say thank God there is at least one person whose head has grown out of the earth and who can consequently see it.

I would have liked to dedicate a copy of my criticism to you, but just now I am rapt in daily contemplation of the Buchberg in Schwyz facing me on the Upper Lake.

And shall be for several weeks.

If you look across from Nuolen you can see my little tower where I am now living.

With best greetings and thanks,

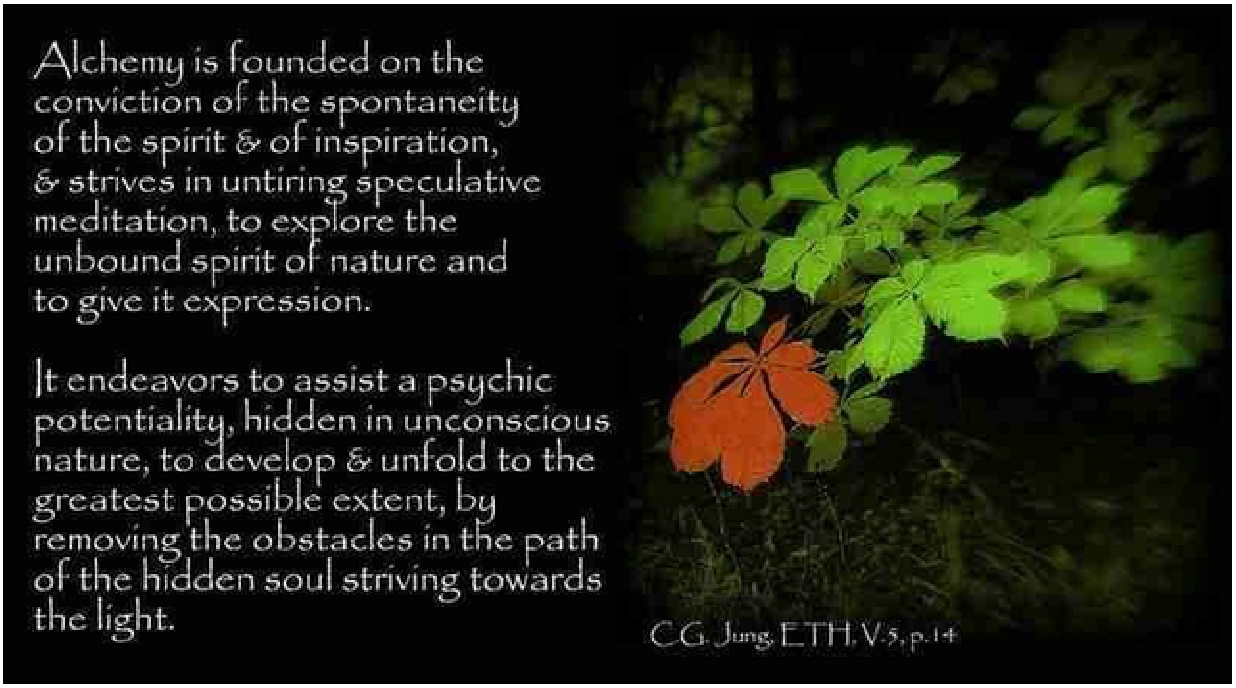
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 51-52

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b4f61-12bmeinrad.jpg`

Alchemy is founded on the conviction of the spontaneity of the spirit (2019-03-18 04:31)

[1]



Alchemy is founded on the conviction of the spontaneity of the spirit & of inspiration, & strives in untiring speculative meditation, to explore the unbound spirit of nature and to give it expression.

It endeavors to assist a psychic potentiality, hidden in unconscious nature, to develop & unfold to the greatest possible extent, by removing the obstacles in the path of the hidden soul striving towards the light.

C.G. Jung, ETH, V.5, p.14

The development of science, which is so extraordinarily characteristic for the West, owes its origin in a great measure to the experimental attitude of mind in alchemy.

Alchemy is founded on the conviction of the spontaneity of the spirit and of inspiration, and strives, in untiring speculative meditation, to explore the unbound spirit of nature and to give it expression.

The methods, which I described in my earlier lectures, attempt to imprint a predetermined form on the soul, working from outside inwards; whereas alchemy endeavours to assist a psychical potentiality, hidden in unconscious nature, to develop and unfold to the greatest possible extent, in that it removes, working from inside outwards, the obstacles in the path of the hidden soul striving towards the light.

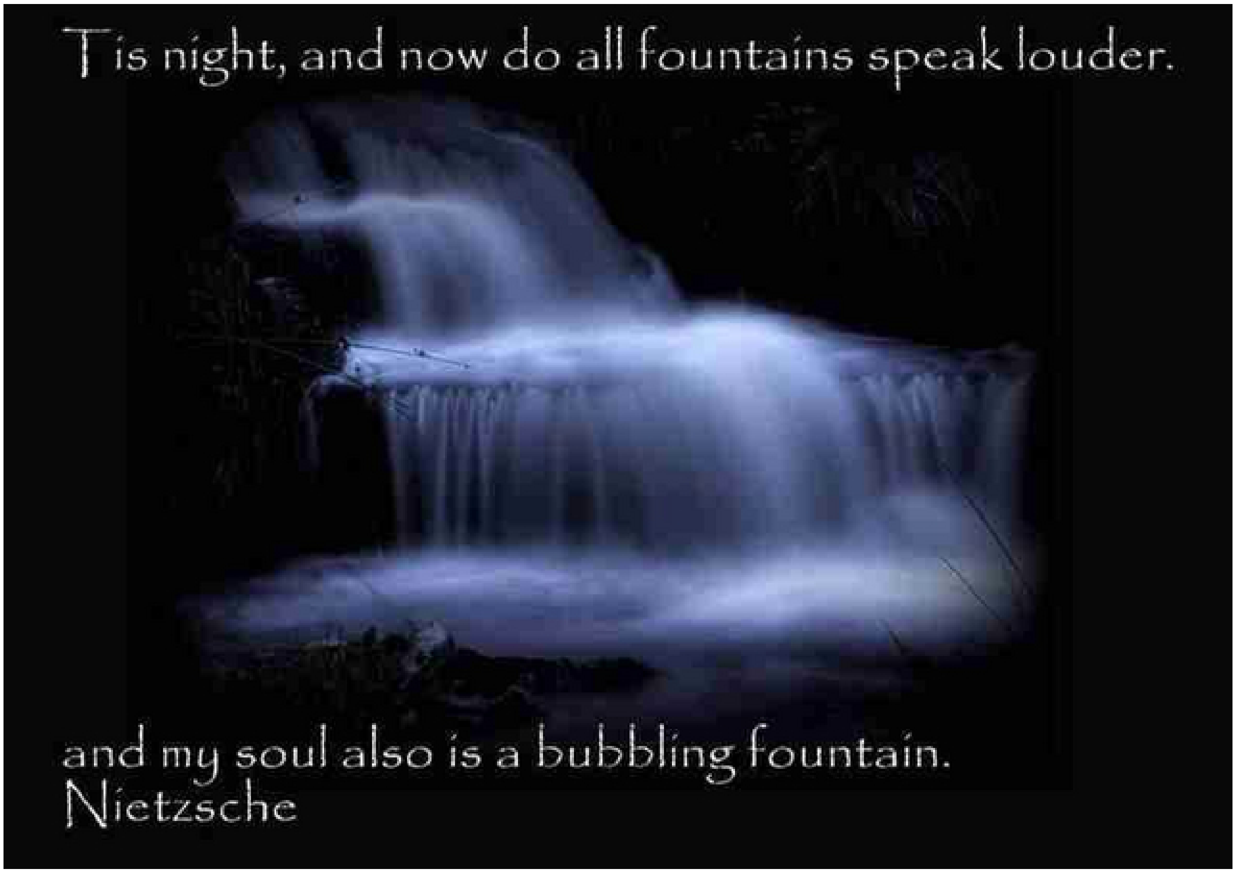
"Hab et omnia in se, quo indiget" (it has everything which it needs in itself) was the principle on which this art or philosophy worked. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, 8 Nov 1940.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bd5b7-12balchemy.jpg`

˜Zarathustra: Tis night:alas, that I have to be light! And thirst for the nightly! And lonesomeness! (2019-03-18 04:40)

[1]



Tis night, and now do all fountains speak louder.
and my soul also is a bubbling fountain.
Nietzsche

Thus Spake Zarathurstra

XXXI. THE NIGHT-SONG.

’Tis night: now do all gushing fountains speak louder. And my soul also is a gushing fountain.

’Tis night: now only do all songs of the loving ones awake. And my soul also is the song of a loving one.

Something unappeased, unappeasable, is within me; it longeth to find expression. A craving for love is within me, which speaketh itself the language of love.

Light am I: ah, that I were night! But it is my lonesomeness to be begirt with light! Ah, that I were dark and nightly! How would I suck at the breasts of light!

And you yourselves would I bless, ye twinkling starlets and glow-worms aloft!—and would rejoice in the gifts of your light.

But I live in mine own light, I drink again into myself the flames that break forth from me.

I know not the happiness of the receiver; and oft have I dreamt that stealing must be more blessed than receiving.

It is my poverty that my hand never ceaseth bestowing; it is mine envy that I see waiting eyes and the brightened nights of longing.

Oh, the misery of all bestowers! Oh, the darkening of my sun! Oh, the craving to crave! Oh, the violent hunger in satiety!

They take from me: but do I yet touch their soul? There is a gap 'twixt giving and receiving; and the smallest gap hath finally to be bridged over.

A hunger ariseth out of my beauty: I should like to injure those I illumine; I should like to rob those I have gifted:—thus do I hunger for wickedness.

Withdrawing my hand when another hand already stretcheth out to it; hesitating like the cascade, which hesitateth even in its leap:—thus do I hunger for wickedness!

Such revenge doth mine abundance think of: such mischief welleth out of my lonesomeness.

My happiness in bestowing died in bestowing; my virtue became weary of itself by its abundance!

He who ever bestoweth is in danger of losing his shame; to him who ever dispenseth, the hand and heart become callous by very dispensing.

Mine eye no longer overfloweth for the shame of suppliants; my hand hath become too hard for the trembling of filled hands.

Whence have gone the tears of mine eye, and the down of my heart? Oh, the lonesomeness of all bestowers!

Oh, the silence of all shining ones!

Many suns circle in desert space: to all that is dark do they speak with their light—but to me they are silent.

Oh, this is the hostility of light to the shining one: unpityingly doth it pursue its course.

Unfair to the shining one in its innermost heart, cold to the suns:—thus travelleth every sun.

Like a storm do the suns pursue their courses: that is their travelling. Their inexorable will do they follow: that is their coldness.

Oh, ye only is it, ye dark, nightly ones, that extract warmth from the shining ones! Oh, ye only drink milk and refreshment from the light's udders!

Ah, there is ice around me; my hand burneth with the iciness! Ah, there is thirst in me; it panteth after your thirst!

'Tis night: alas, that I have to be light! And thirst for the nightly!

And lonesomeness! 'Tis night: now doth my longing break forth in me as a fountain,—for speech do I long.

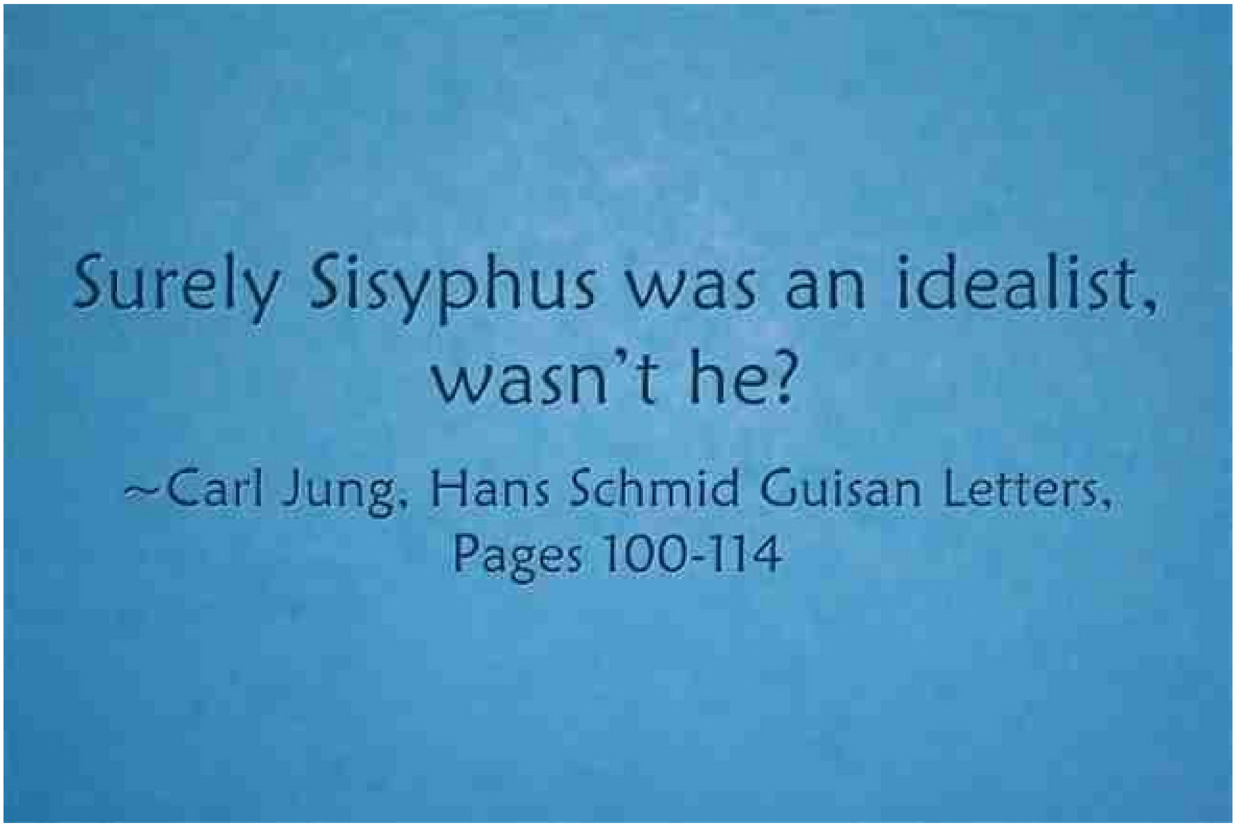
'Tis night: now do all gushing fountains speak louder. And my soul also is a gushing fountain.

'Tis night: now do all songs of loving ones awake. And my soul also is the song of a loving one.— Thus sang Zarathustra.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9b9f3-12blouder.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 25 (2019-03-18 04:49)

[1]

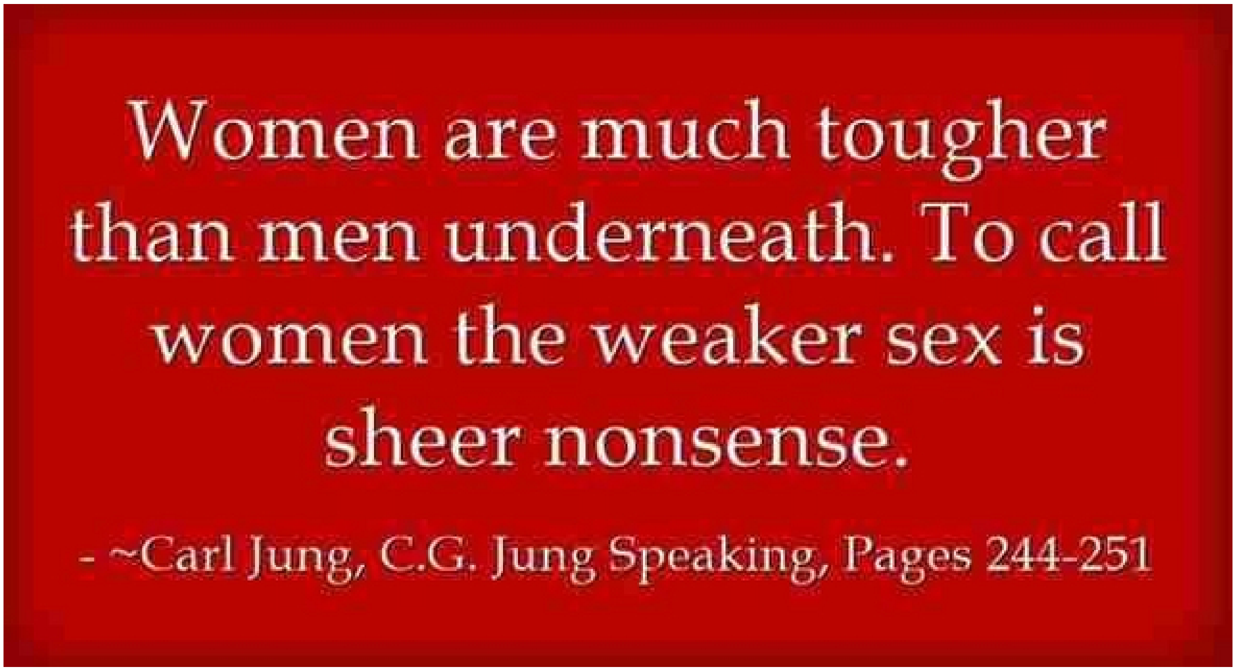


Surely Sisyphus was an idealist, wasn't he?

~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114

Surely Sisyphus was an idealist, wasn't he? your Jung Carl Jung, Hans Schmid-Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114

[2]



Women are much tougher than men underneath. To call women the weaker sex is sheer nonsense.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 244-251

Women are much tougher than men underneath. To call women the weaker sex is sheer nonsense. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 244-251

[3]

When a man is in the wilderness, it is the darkness that brings the dreams
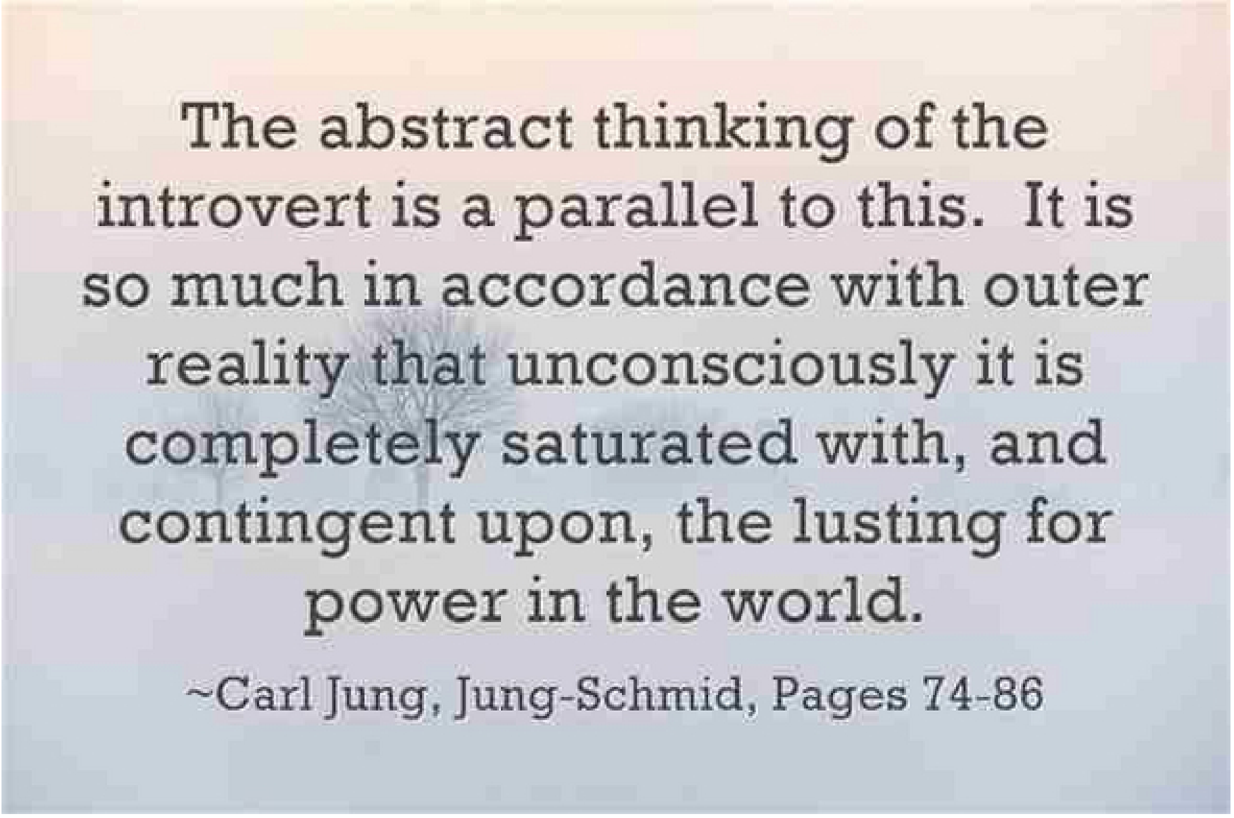
~Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 674

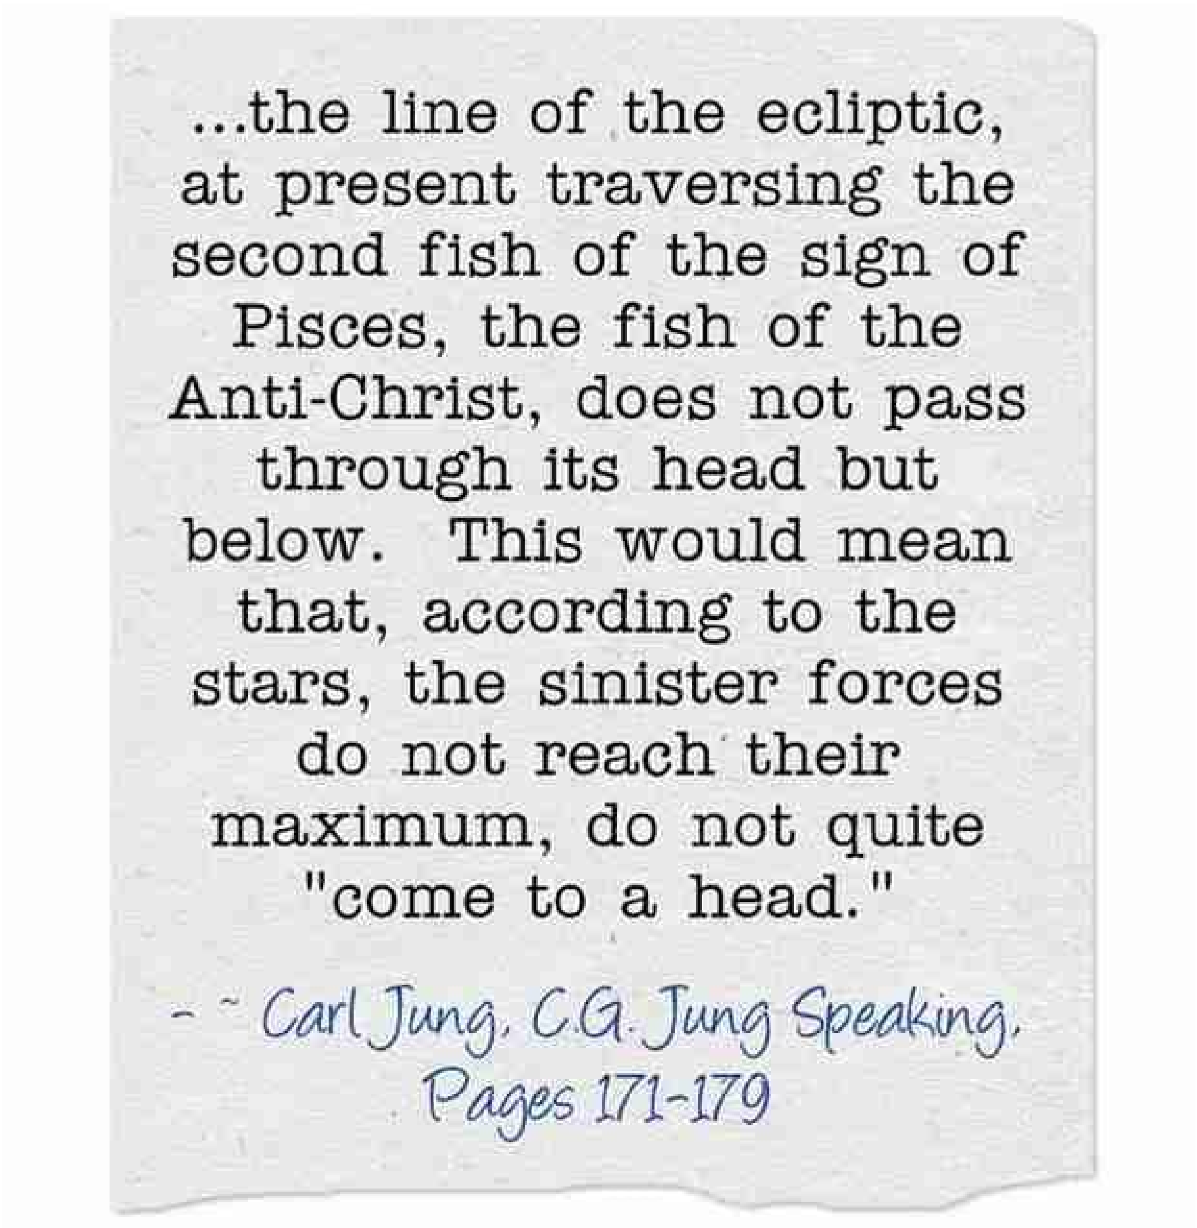
When a man is in the wilderness, it is the darkness that brings the dreams Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 674



The abstract thinking of the introvert is a parallel to this. It is so much in accordance with outer reality that unconsciously it is completely saturated with, and contingent upon, the lusting for power in the world.

~Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid, Pages 74-86

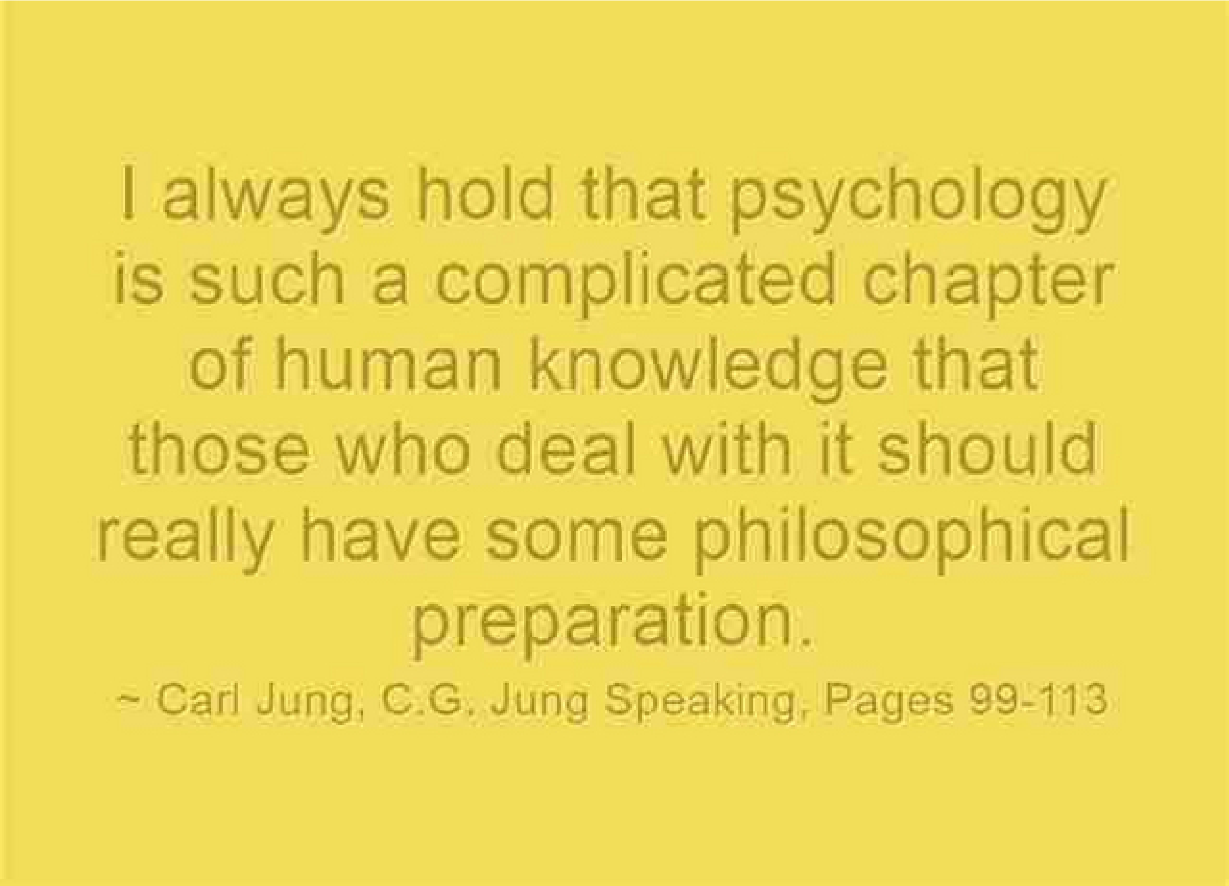
The abstract thinking of the introvert is a parallel to this. It is so much in accordance with outer reality that unconsciously it is completely saturated with, and contingent upon, the lusting for power in the world. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid, Pages 74-86



...the line of the ecliptic, at present traversing the second fish of the sign of Pisces, the fish of the Anti-Christ, does not pass through its head but below. This would mean that, according to the stars, the sinister forces do not reach their maximum, do not quite "come to a head."

- ~ Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 171-179

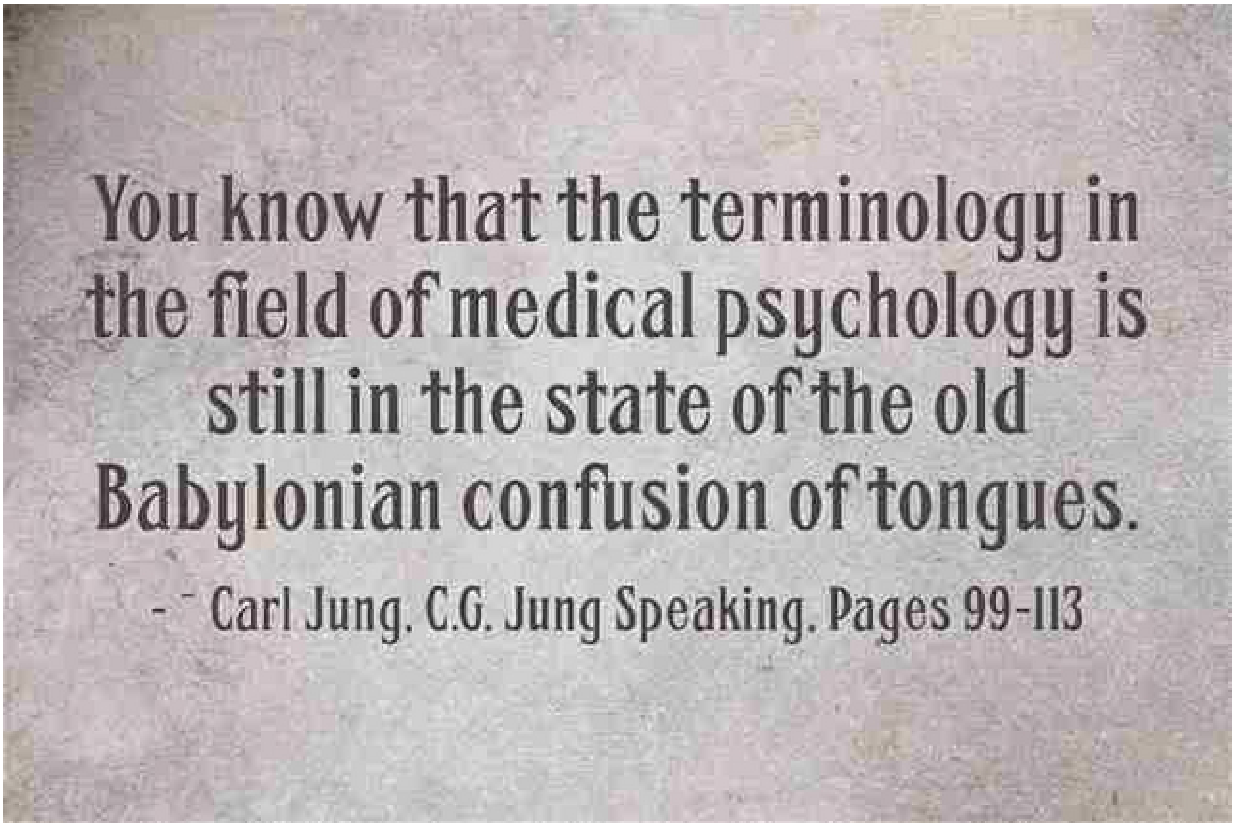
…the line of the ecliptic, at present traversing the second fish of the sign of Pisces, the fish of the Anti-Christ, does not pass through its head but below. This would mean that, according to the stars, the sinister forces do not reach their maximum, do not quite "come to a head." Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters and Pages 171-179



I always hold that psychology is such a complicated chapter of human knowledge that those who deal with it should really have some philosophical preparation.

~ Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 99-113

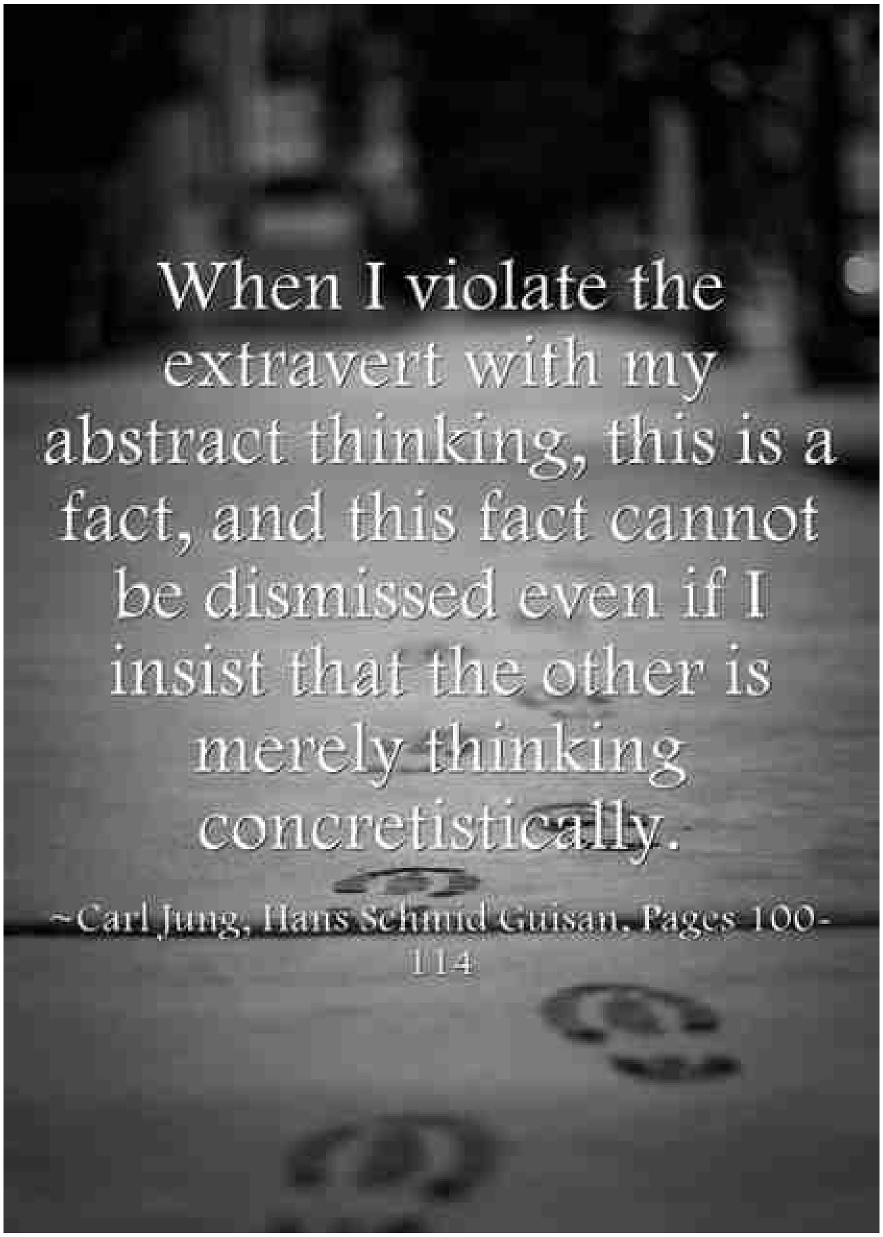
I always hold that psychology is such a complicated chapter of human knowledge that those who deal with it should really have some philosophical preparation. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 99-113



You know that the terminology in the field of medical psychology is still in the state of the old Babylonian confusion of tongues.

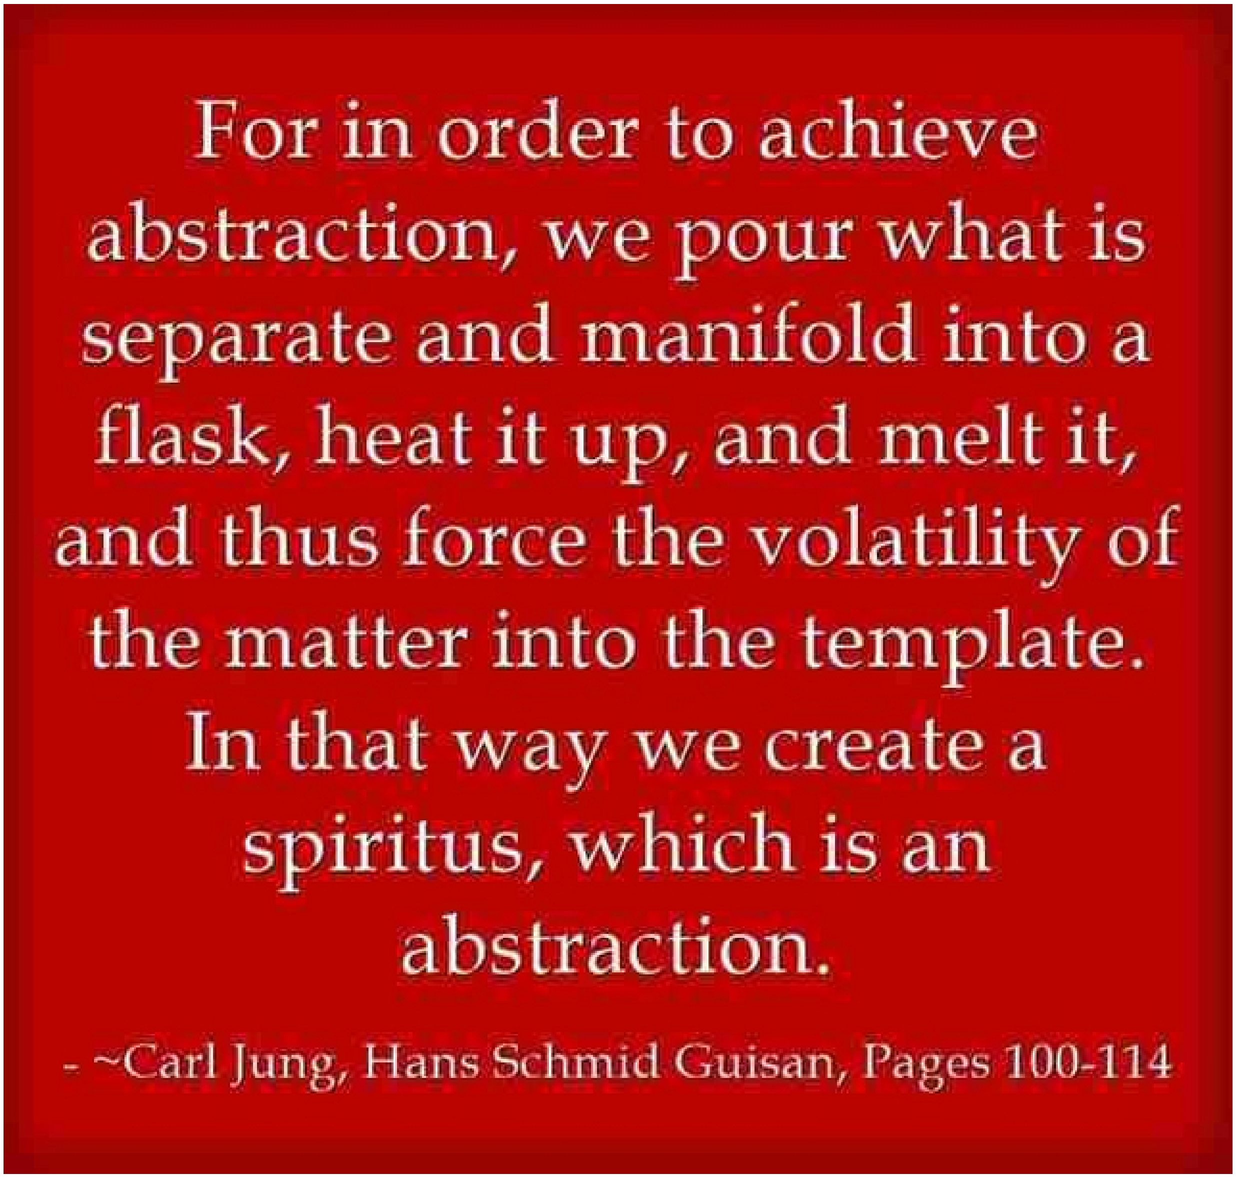
- ¯ Carl Jung. C.G. Jung Speaking. Pages 99-113

You know that the terminology in the field of medical psychology is still in the state of the old Babylonian confusion of tongues. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 99-113



When I violate the extravert with my abstract thinking, this is a fact, and this fact cannot be dismissed even if I insist that the other is merely thinking concretistically.
~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 100-114

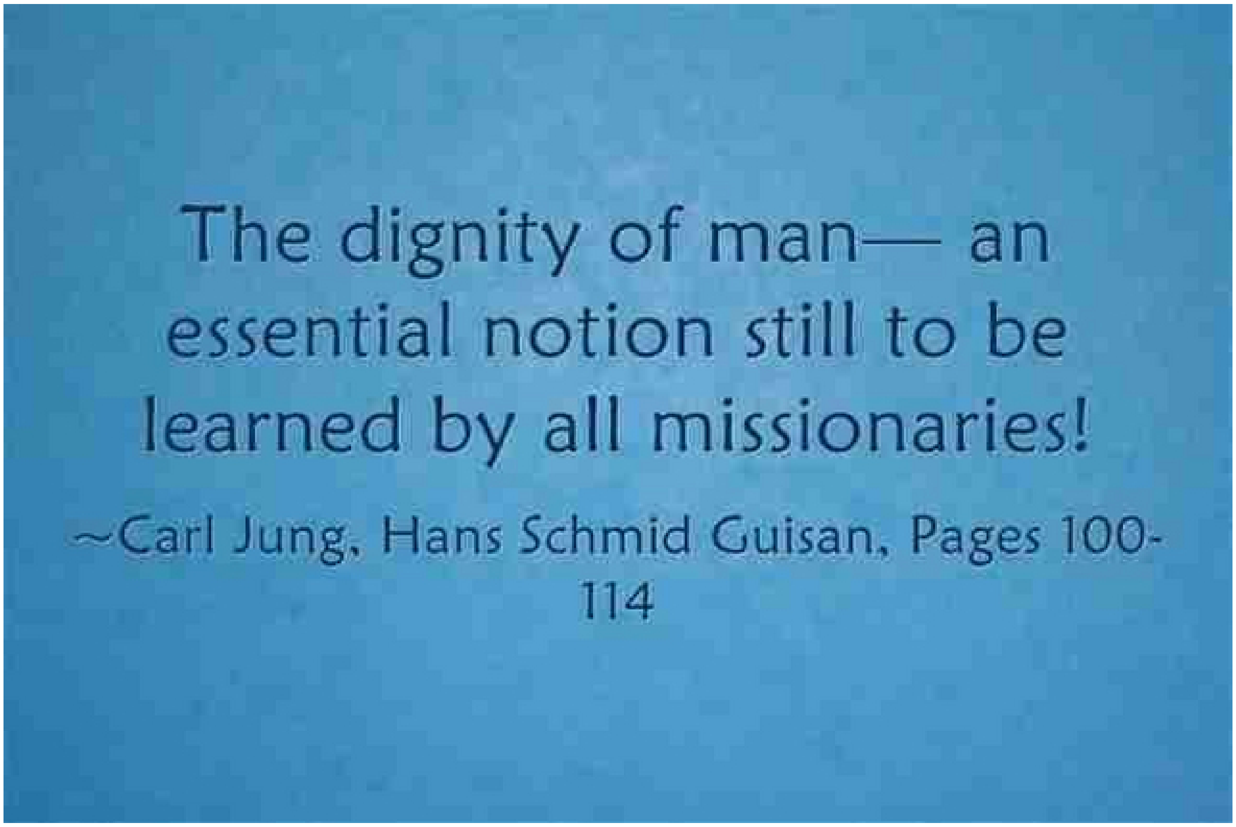
When I violate the extravert with my abstract thinking, this is a fact, and this fact cannot be dismissed even if I insist that the other is merely thinking concretistically. Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



For in order to achieve abstraction, we pour what is separate and manifold into a flask, heat it up, and melt it, and thus force the volatility of the matter into the template. In that way we create a spiritus, which is an abstraction.

- ~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 100-114

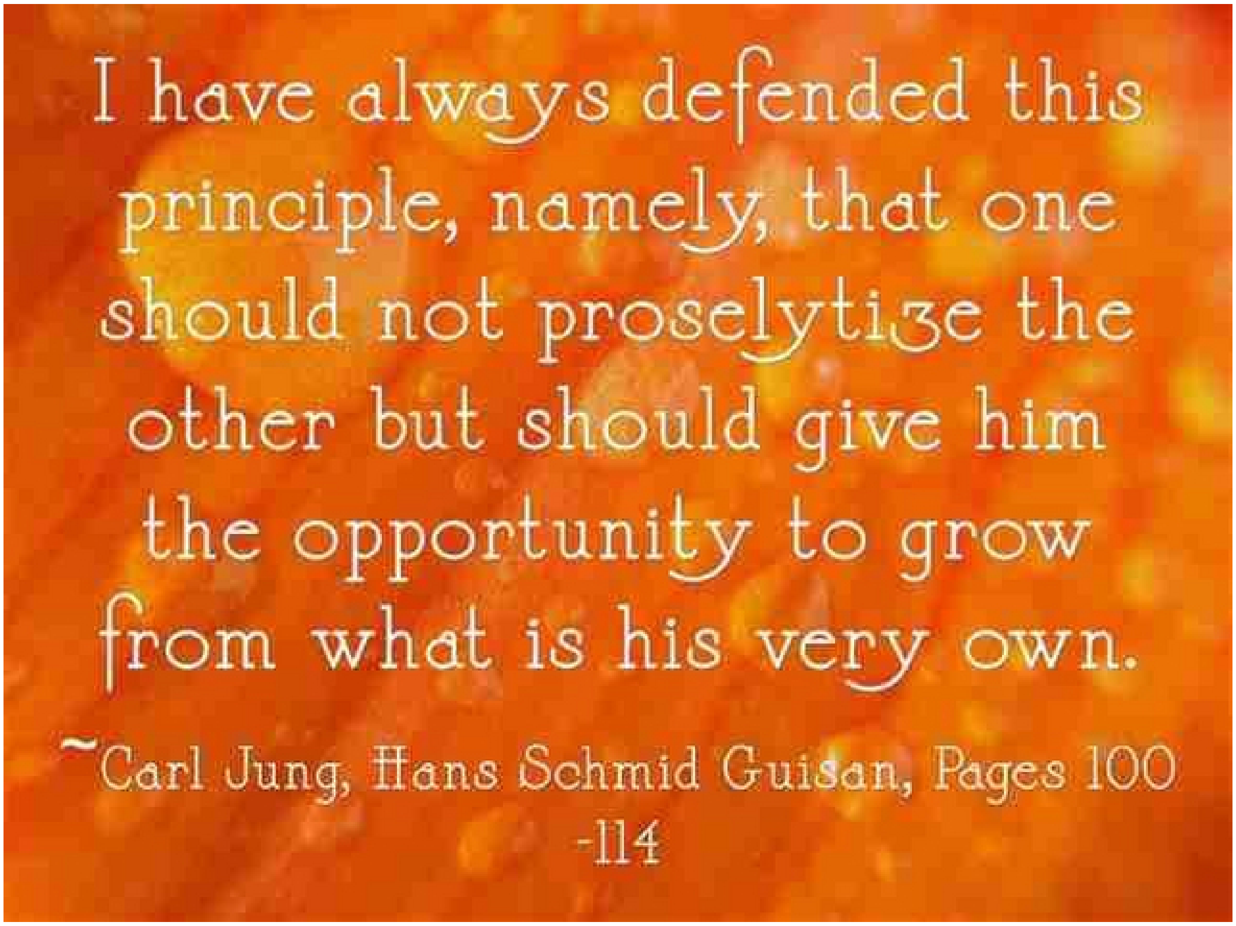
For in order to achieve abstraction, we pour what is separate and manifold into a flask, heat it up, and melt it, and thus force the volatility of the matter into the template. In that way we create a spiritus, which is an abstraction. Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



The dignity of man— an essential notion still to be learned by all missionaries!

~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 100-114

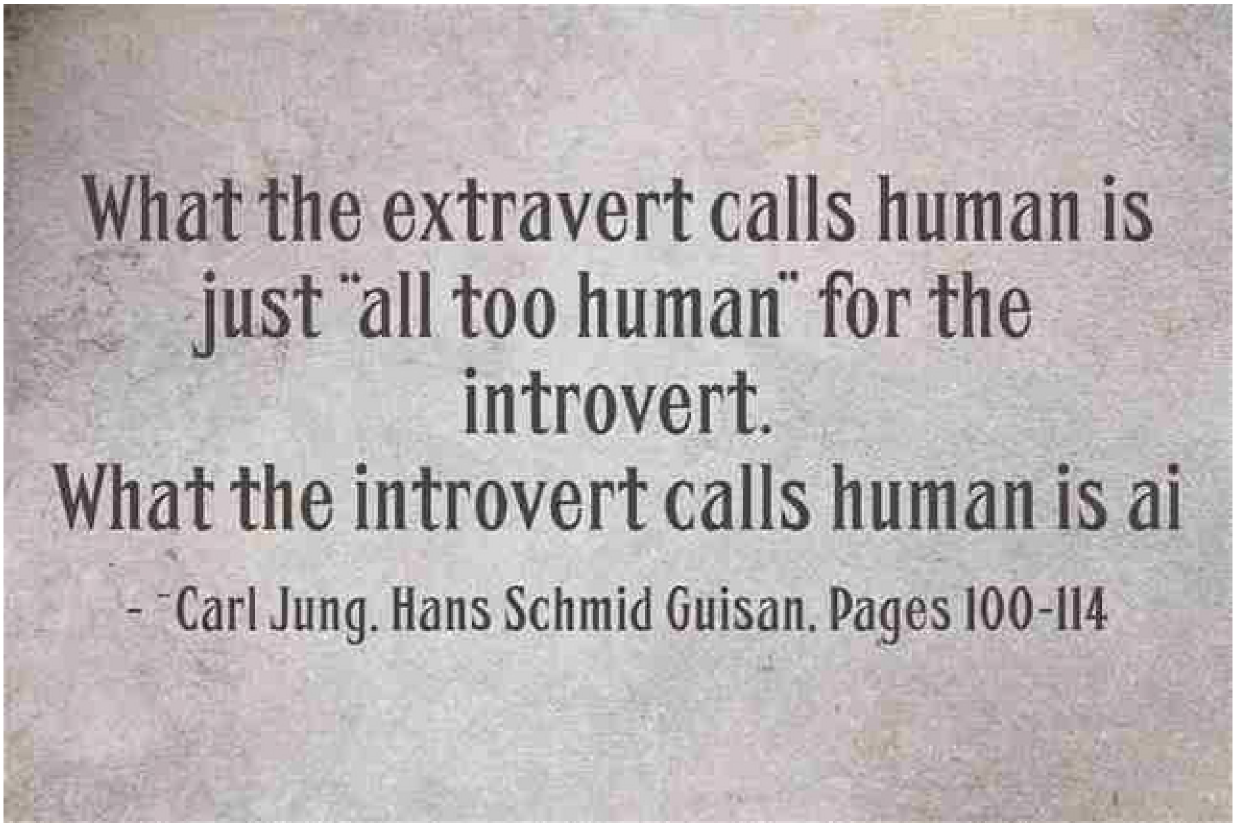
The dignity of man— an essential notion still to be learned by all missionaries! Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



I have always defended this principle, namely, that one should not proselytize the other but should give him the opportunity to grow from what is his very own.

~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 100 -114

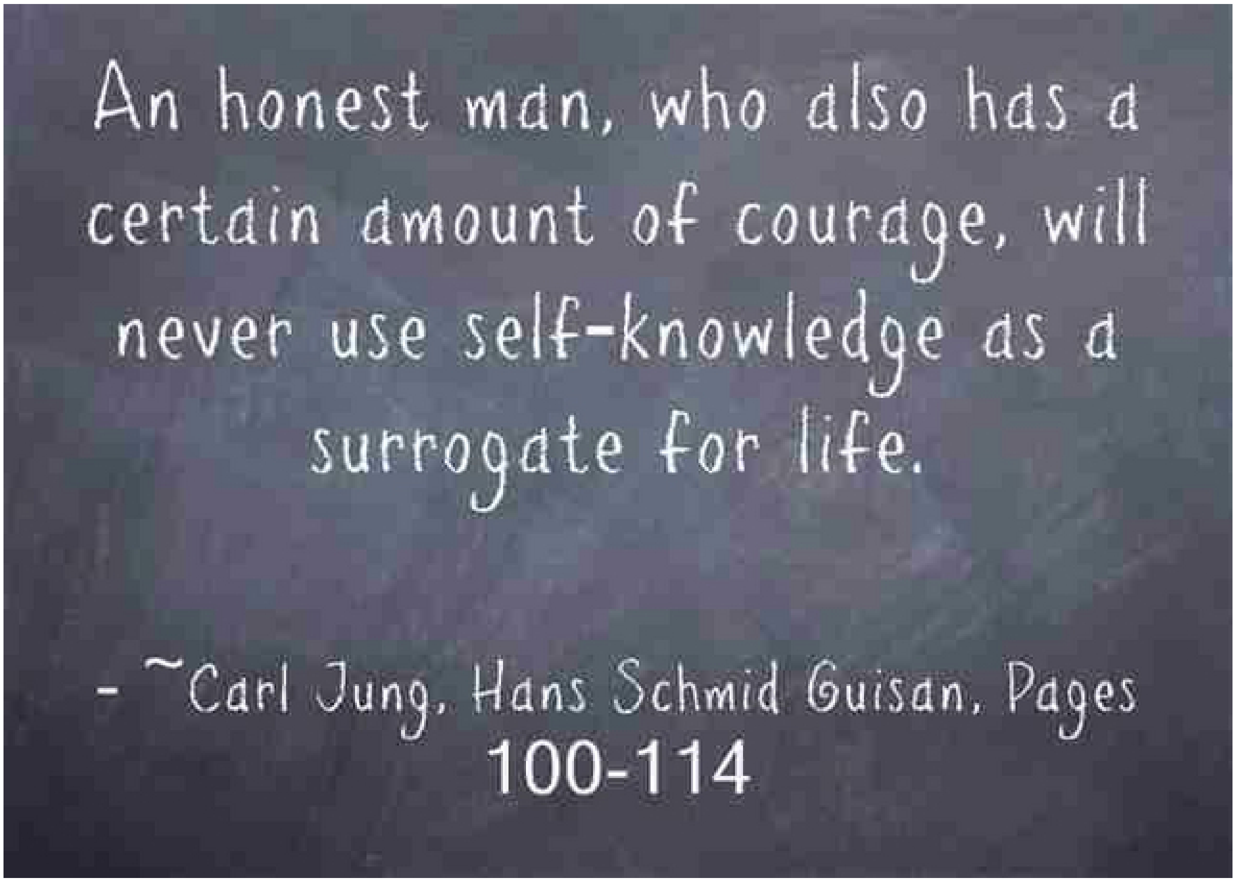
I have always defended this principle, namely, that one should not proselytize the other but should give him the opportunity to grow from what is his very own. Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



What the extravert calls human is just "all too human" for the introvert.
What the introvert calls human is ai

- "Carl Jung. Hans Schmid Guisan. Pages 100-114

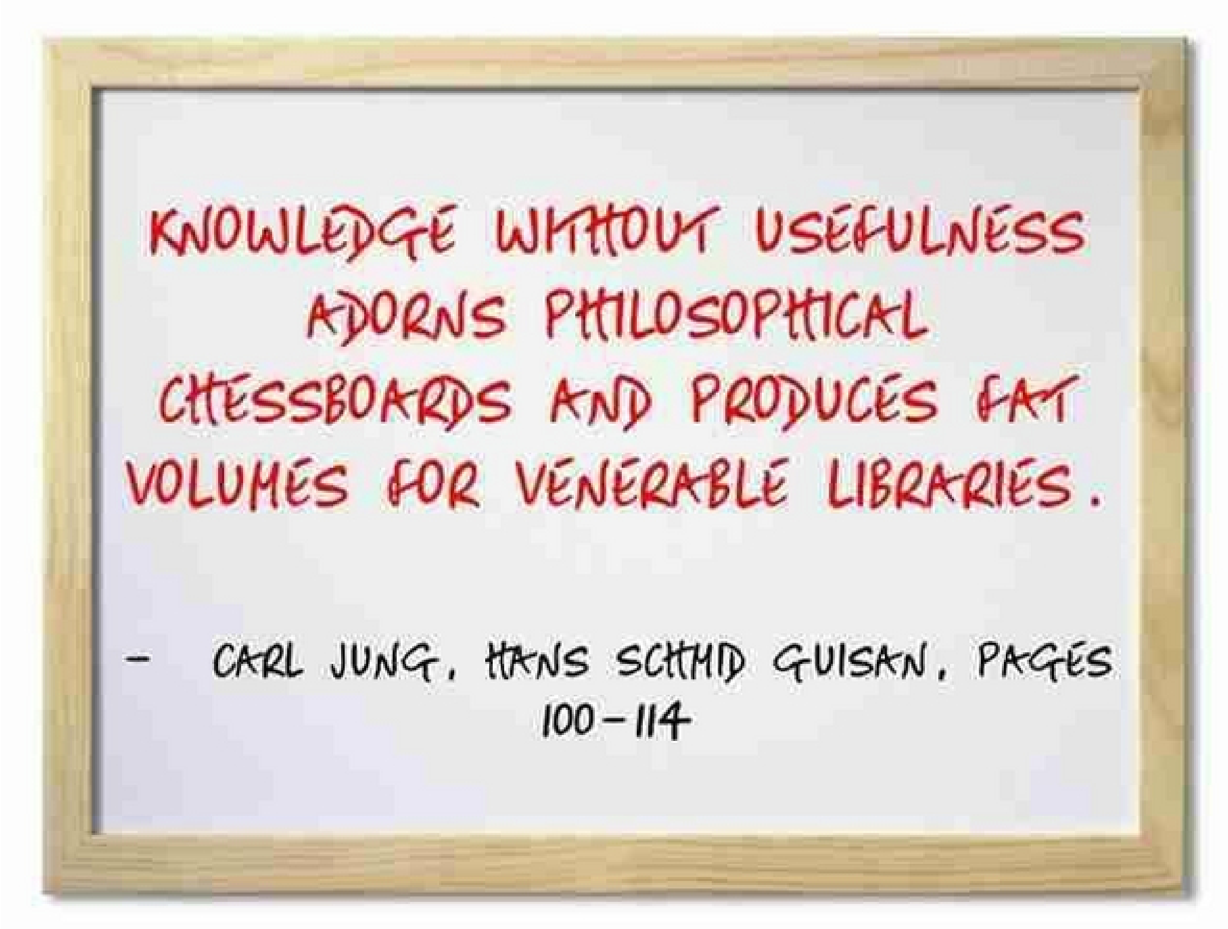
What the extravert calls human is just “all too human” for the introvert.
What the introvert calls human is airy and gaseous for the other. Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



An honest man, who also has a certain amount of courage, will never use self-knowledge as a surrogate for life.

- ~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 100-114

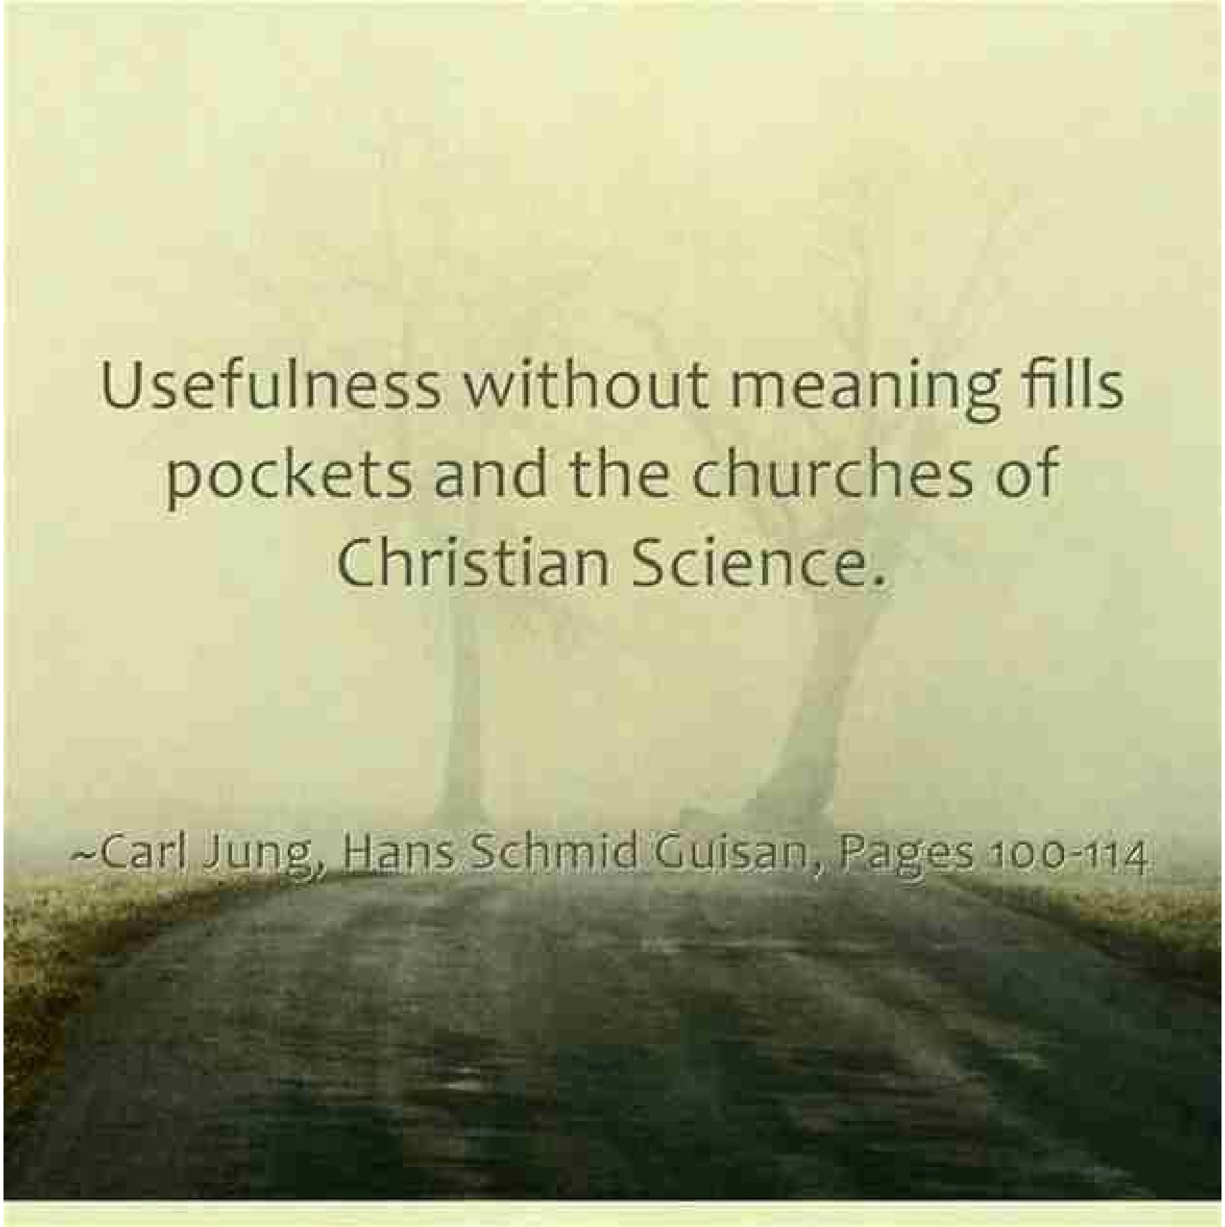
An honest man, who also has a certain amount of courage, will never use self-knowledge as a surrogate for life. Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



KNOWLEDGE WITHOUT USEFULNESS ADORNS PHILOSOPHICAL CHESSBOARDS AND PRODUCES FAT VOLUMES FOR VENERABLE LIBRARIES.

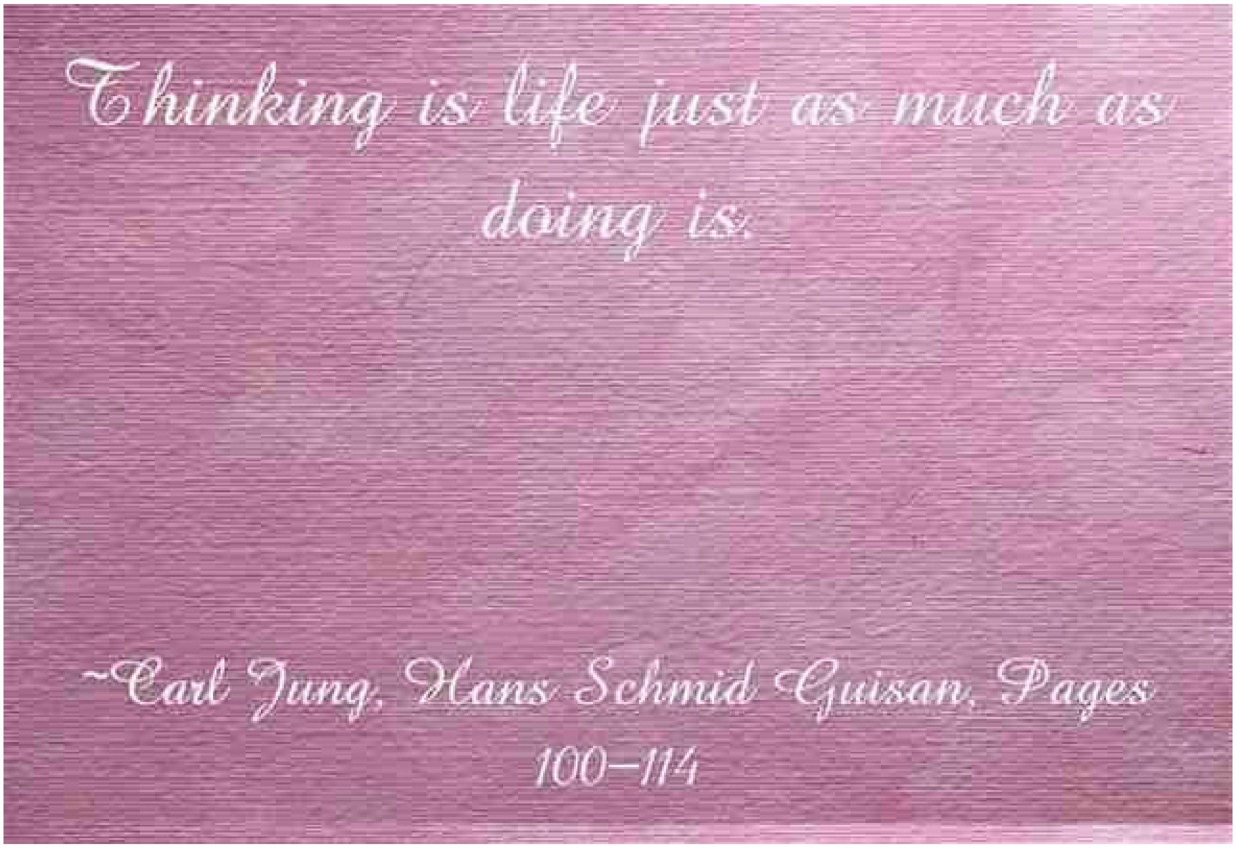
- CARL JUNG, HANS SCHMID GUISAN, PAGES 100-114

Knowledge without usefulness adorns philosophical chessboards and produces fat volumes for venerable libraries.
Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



Usefulness without meaning fills pockets and the churches of Christian Science.
~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 100-114

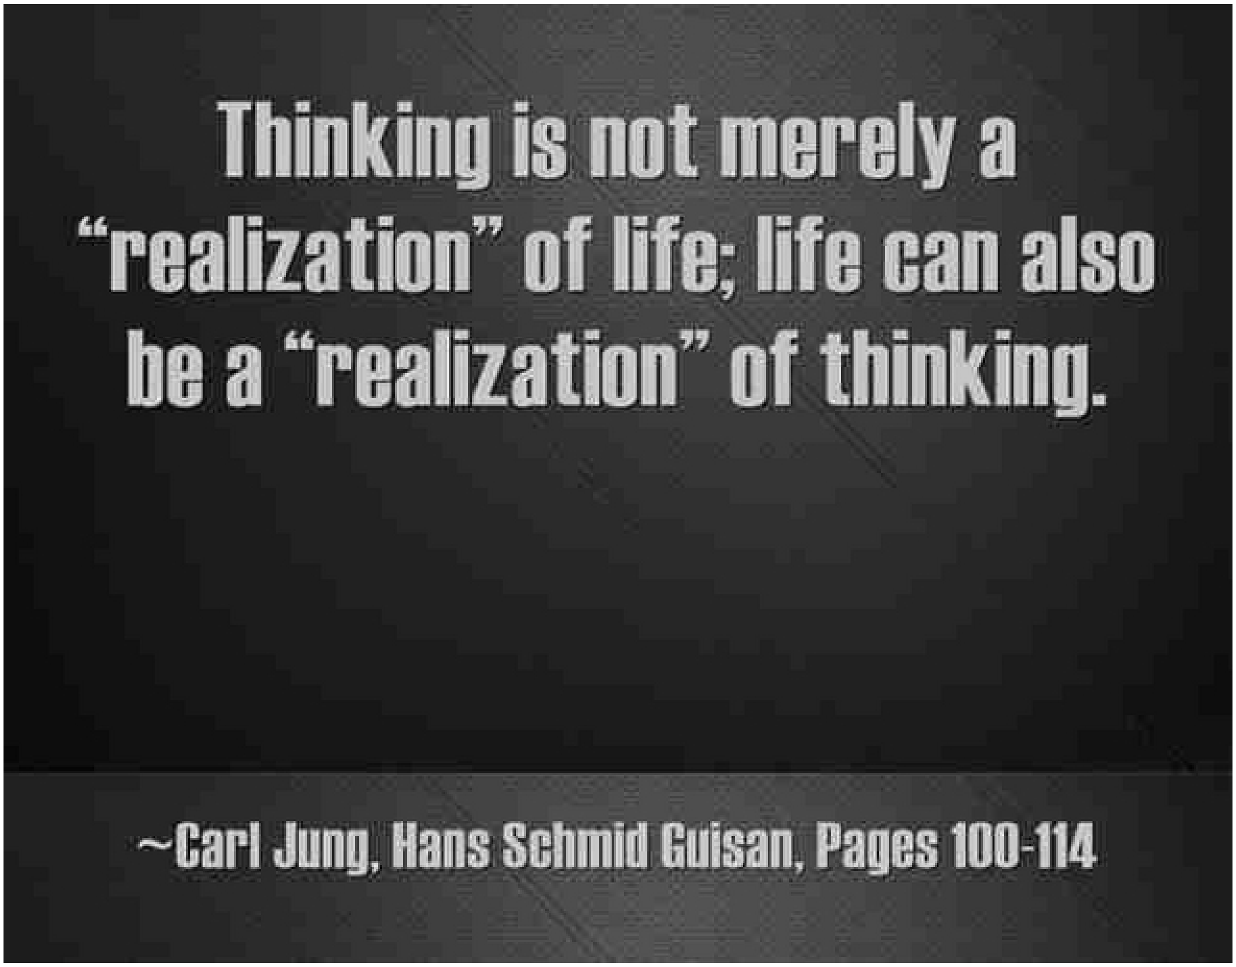
Usefulness without meaning fills pockets and the churches of Christian Science. Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



Thinking is life just as much as doing is.

~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 100–114

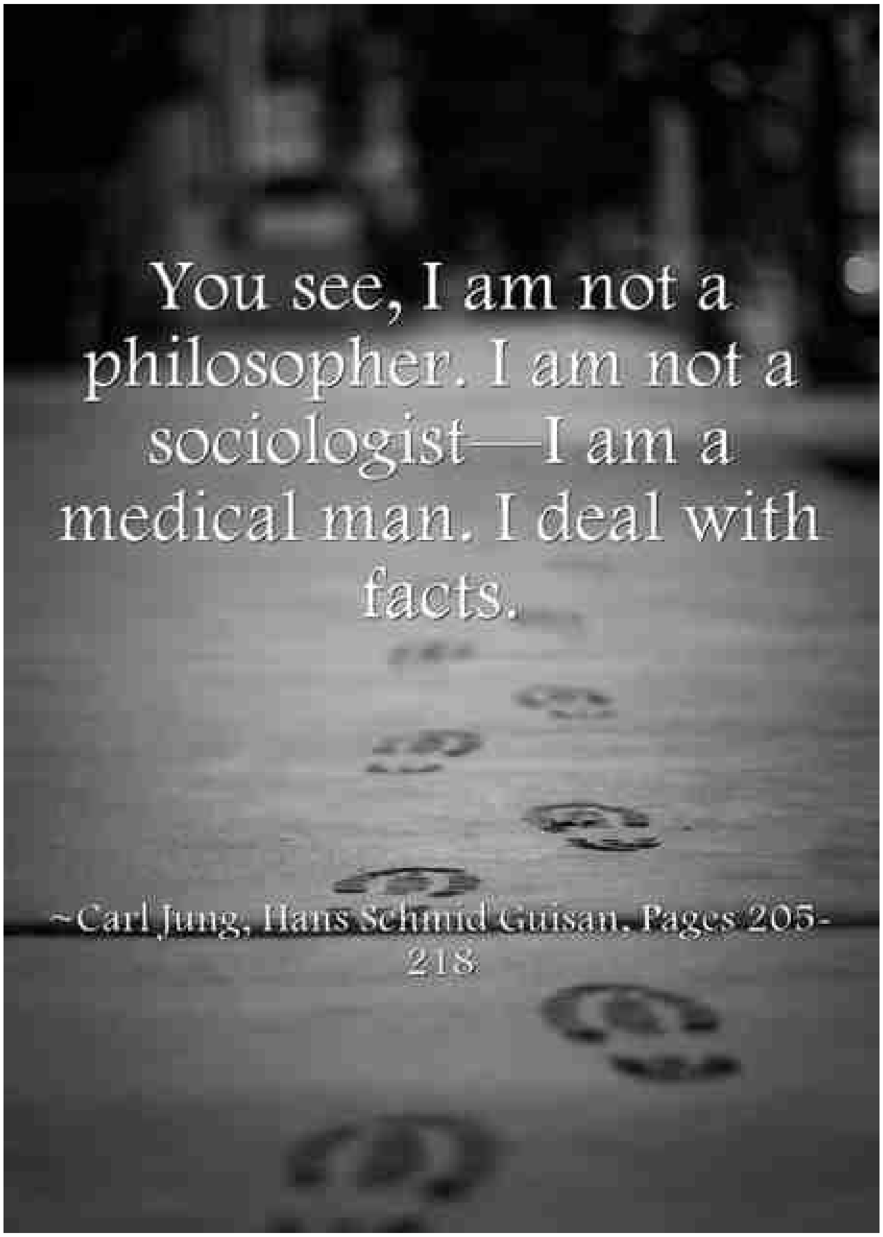
Thinking is life just as much as doing is. Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



Thinking is not merely a "realization" of life; life can also be a "realization" of thinking.

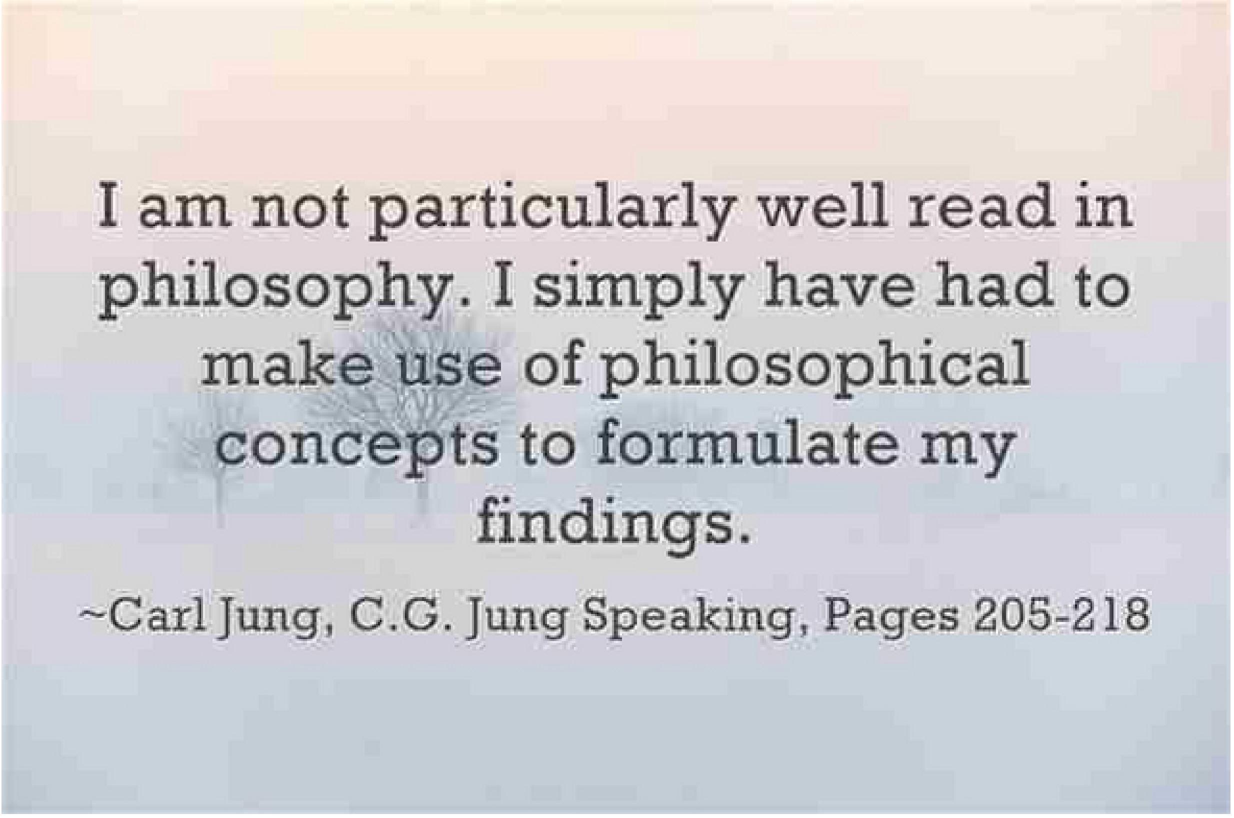
~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 100-114

Thinking is not merely a "realization" of life; life can also be a "realization" of thinking. Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan Letters, Pages 100-114



You see, I am not a philosopher. I am not a sociologist—I am a medical man. I deal with facts.
~Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 205-218

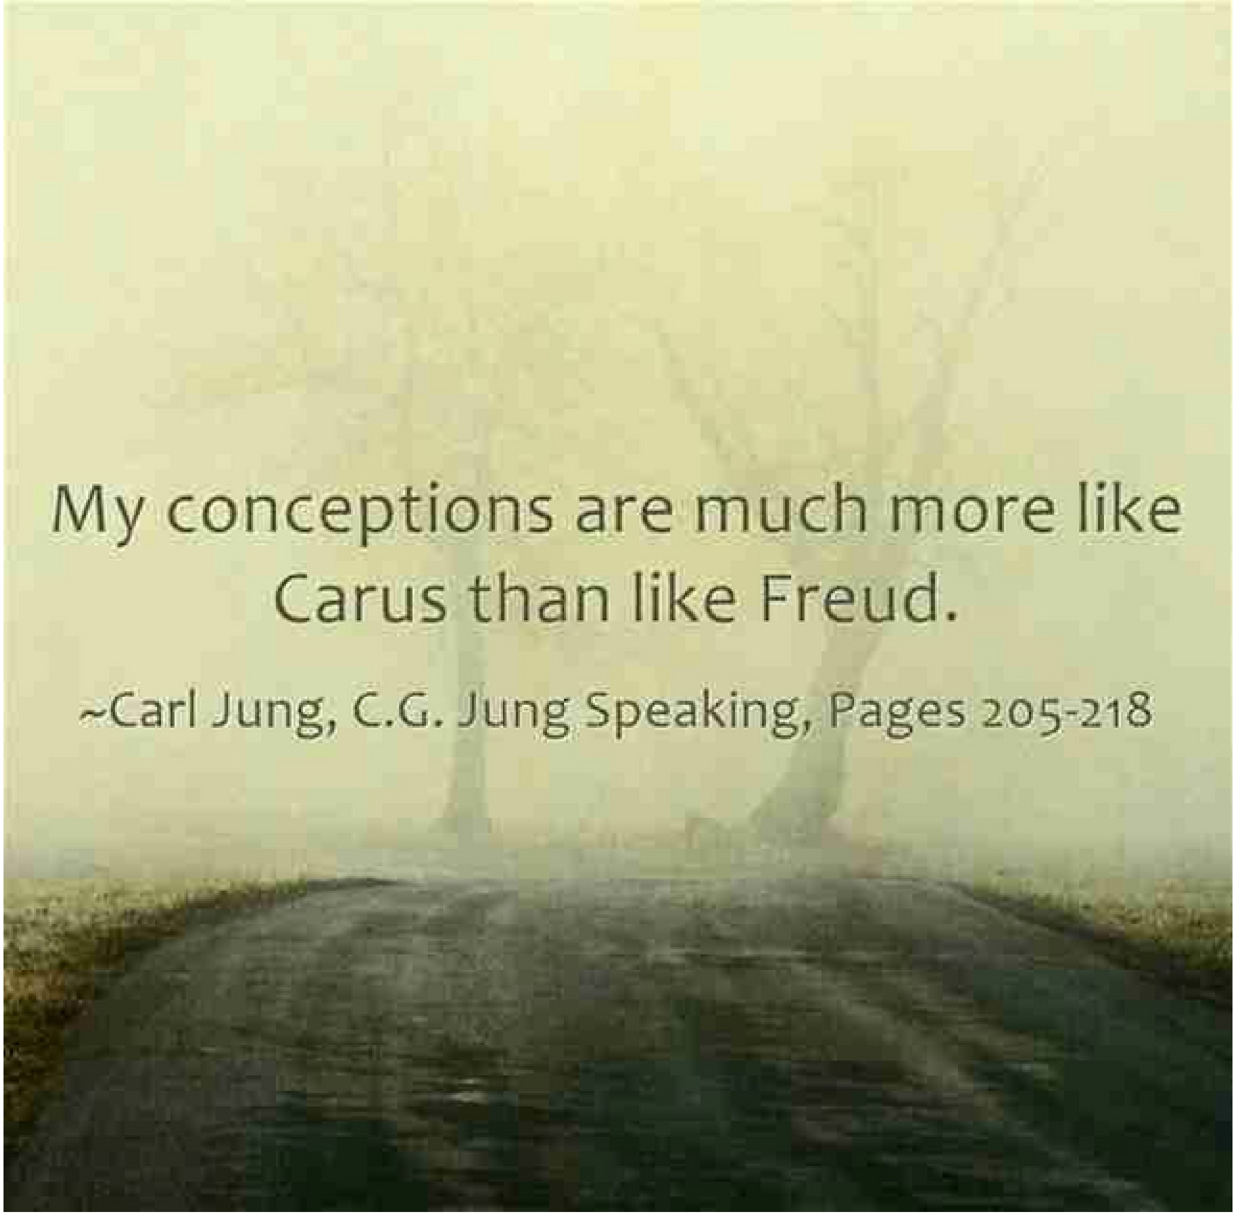
You see, I am not a philosopher. I am not a sociologist—I am a medical man. I deal with facts. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218



I am not particularly well read in philosophy. I simply have had to make use of philosophical concepts to formulate my findings.

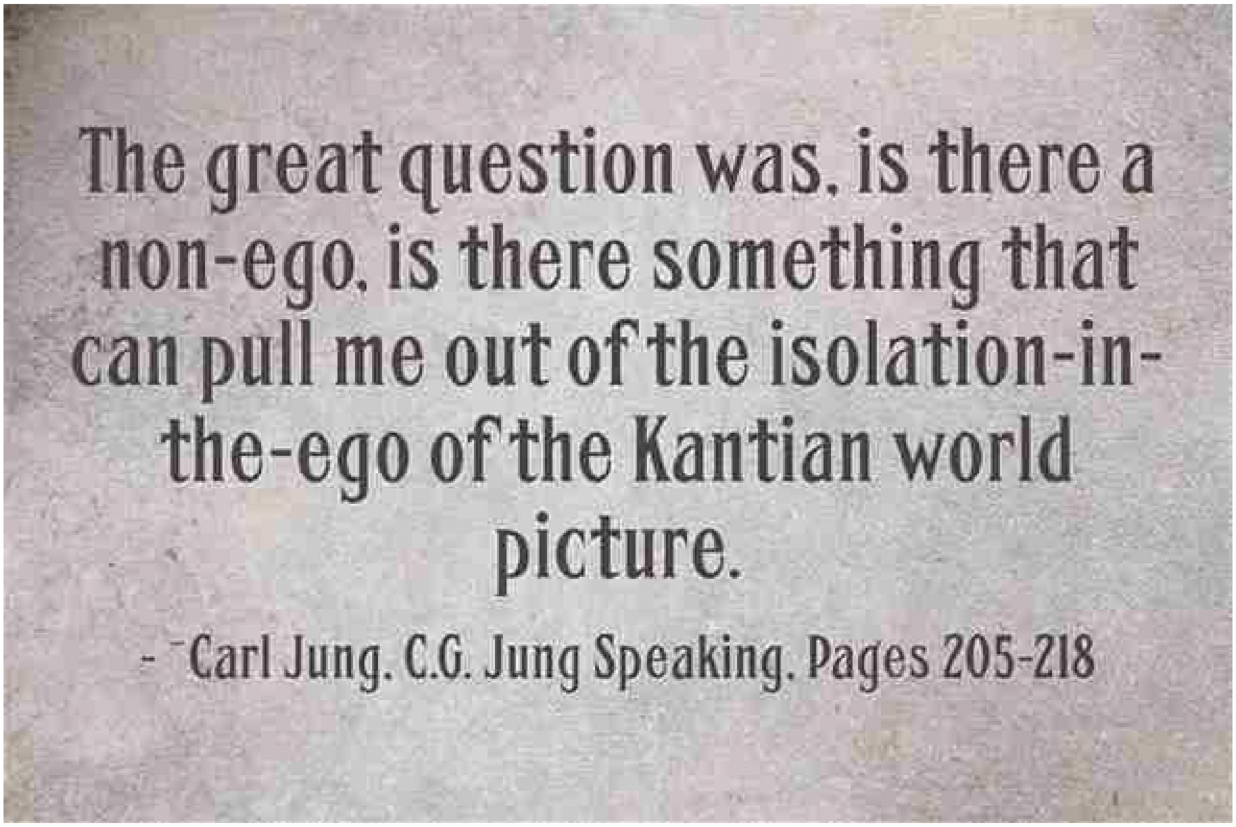
~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 205-218

I am not particularly well read in philosophy. I simply have had to make use of philosophical concepts to formulate my findings. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218



My conceptions are much more like Carus than like Freud.
~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 205-218

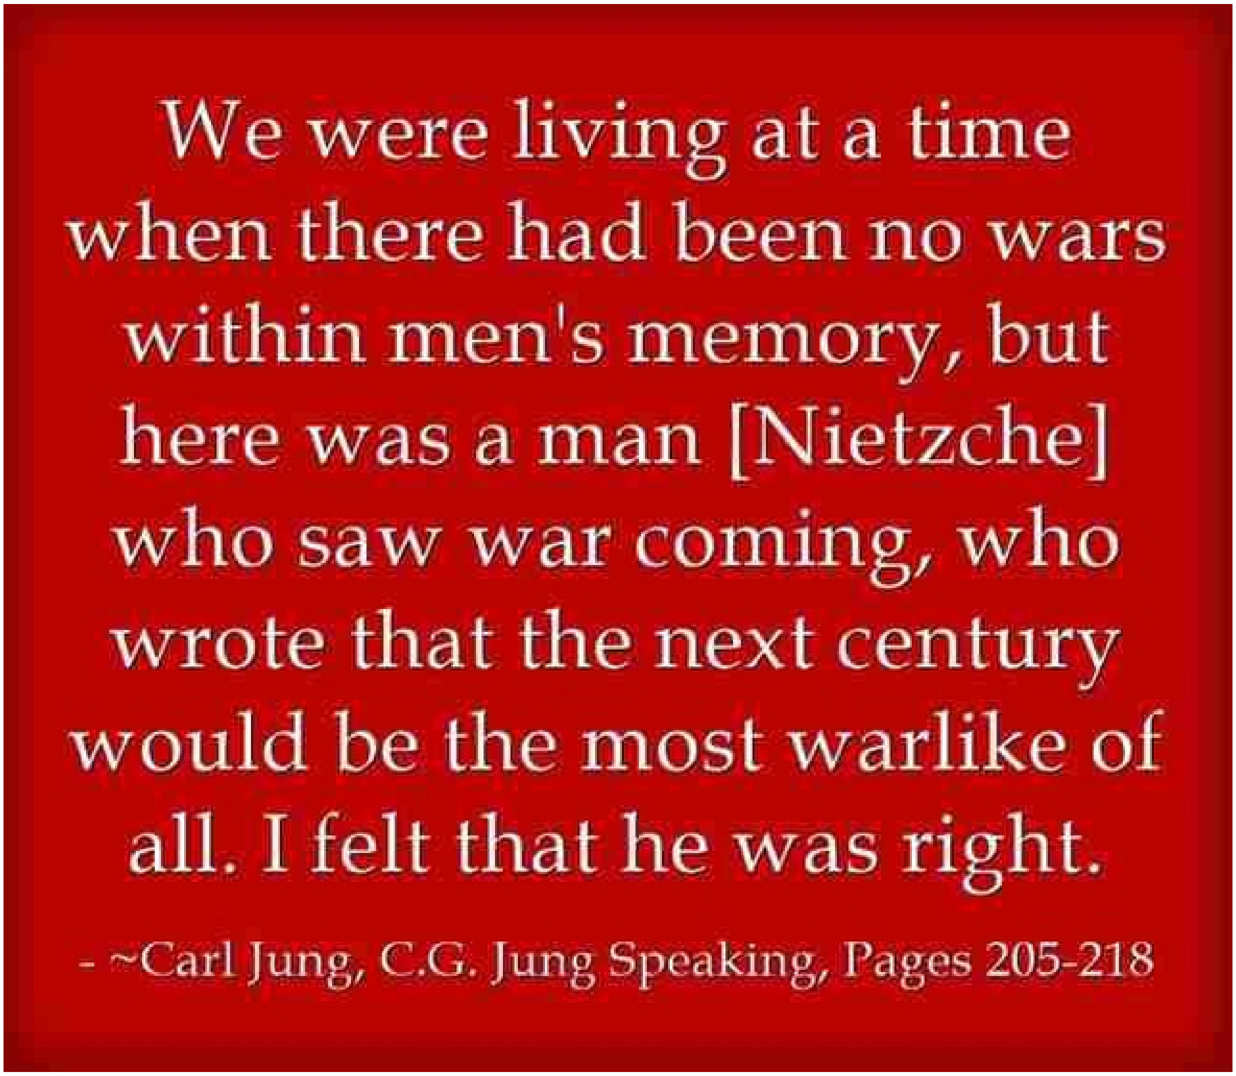
My conceptions are much more like Carus than like Freud. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218



The great question was, is there a non-ego, is there something that can pull me out of the isolation-in-the-ego of the Kantian world picture.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 205-218

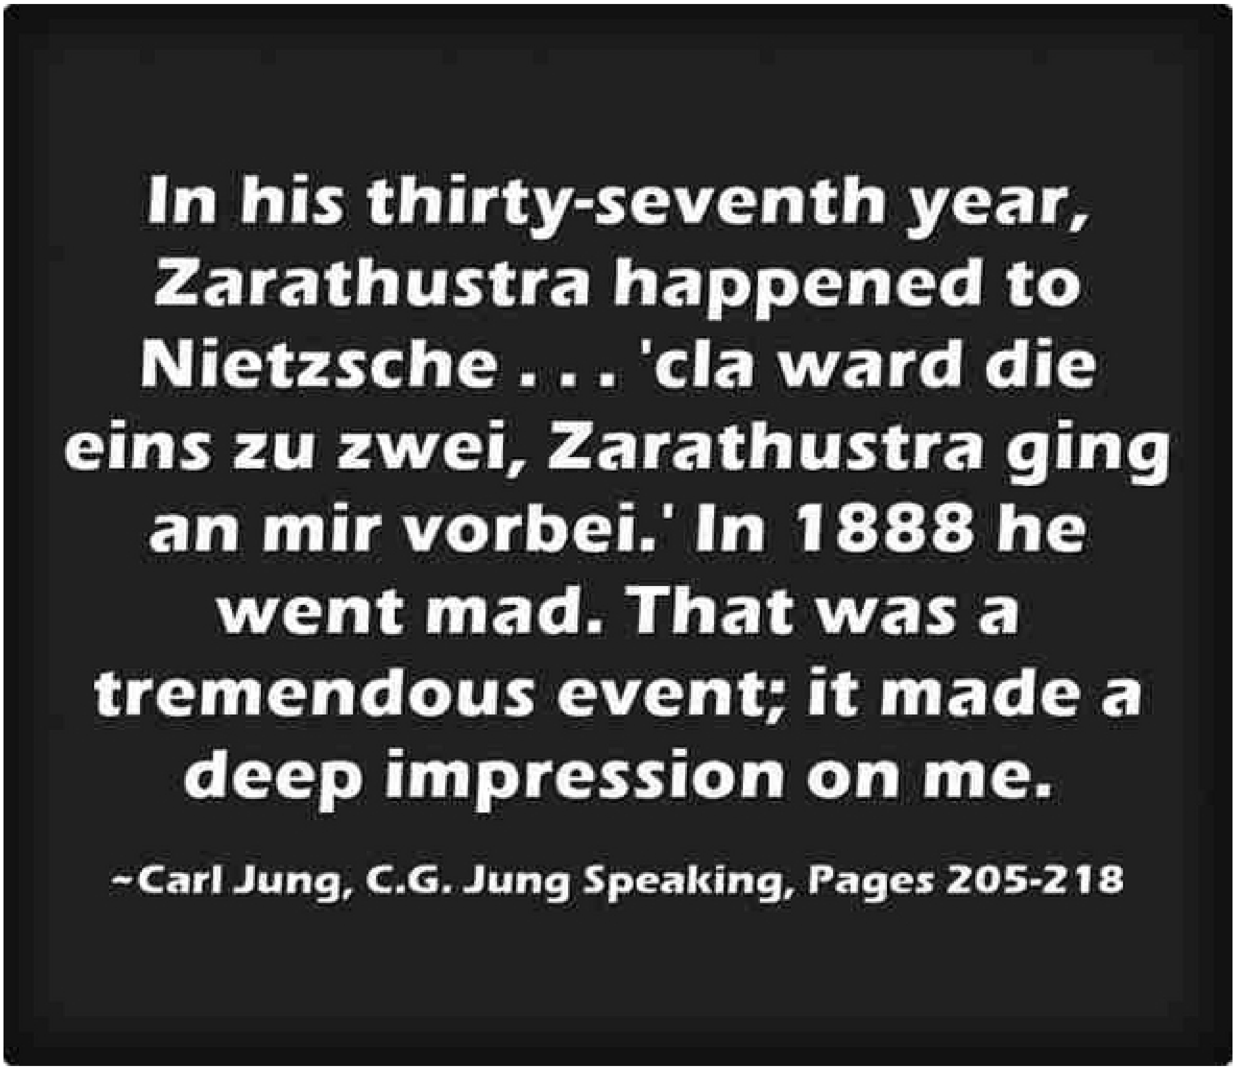
The great question was, is there a non-ego, is there something that can pull me out of the isolation-in-the-ego of the Kantian world picture. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218



We were living at a time when there had been no wars within men's memory, but here was a man [Nietzche] who saw war coming, who wrote that the next century would be the most warlike of all. I felt that he was right.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 205-218

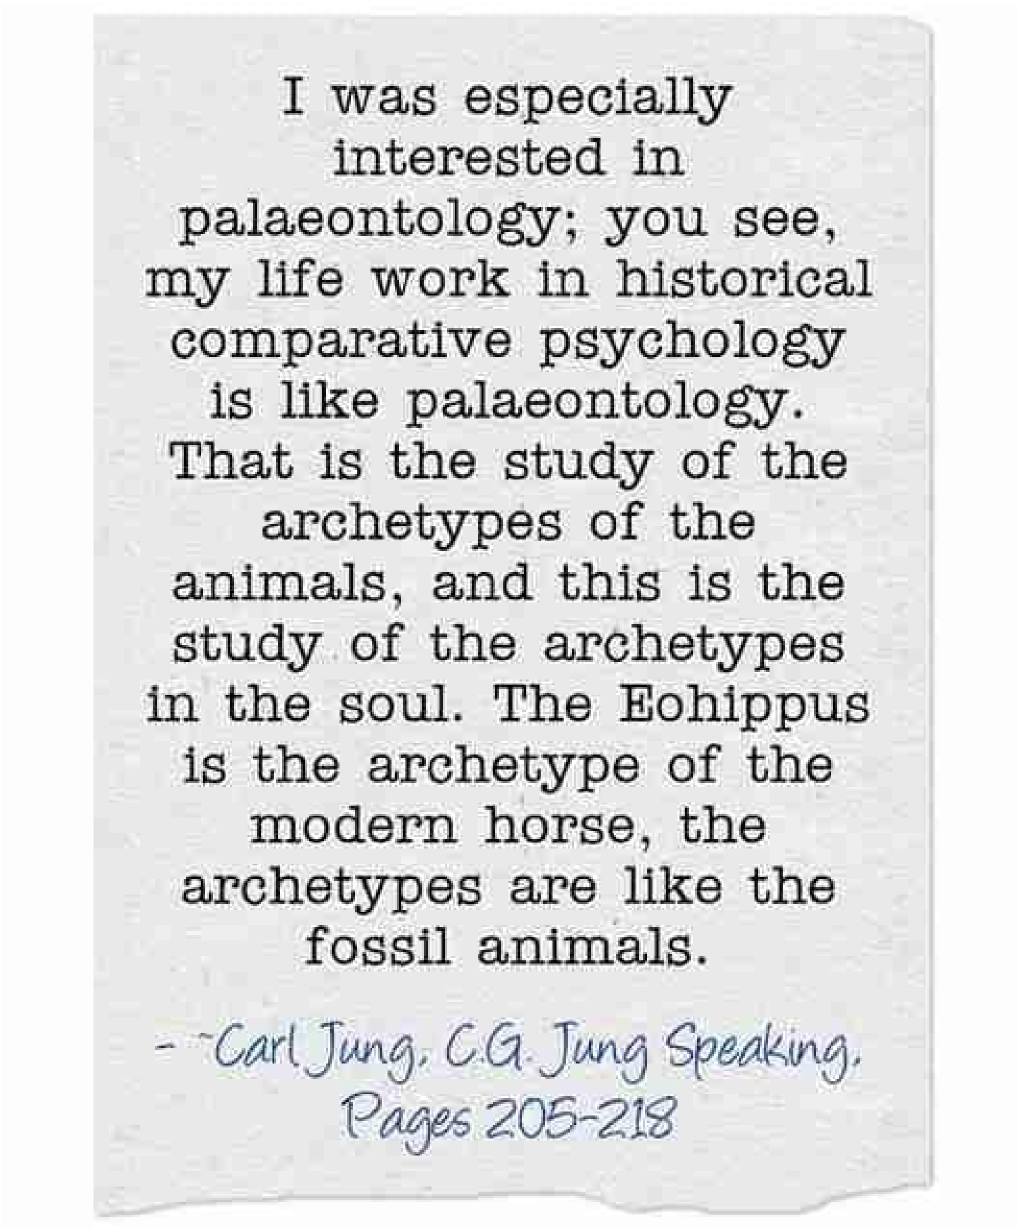
We were living at a time when there had been no wars within men’s memory, but here was a man [Nietzche] who saw war coming, who wrote that the next century would be the most warlike of all. I felt that he was right. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218



In his thirty-seventh year, Zarathustra happened to Nietzsche . . . 'cla ward die eins zu zwei, Zarathustra ging an mir vorbei.' In 1888 he went mad. That was a tremendous event; it made a deep impression on me.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 205-218

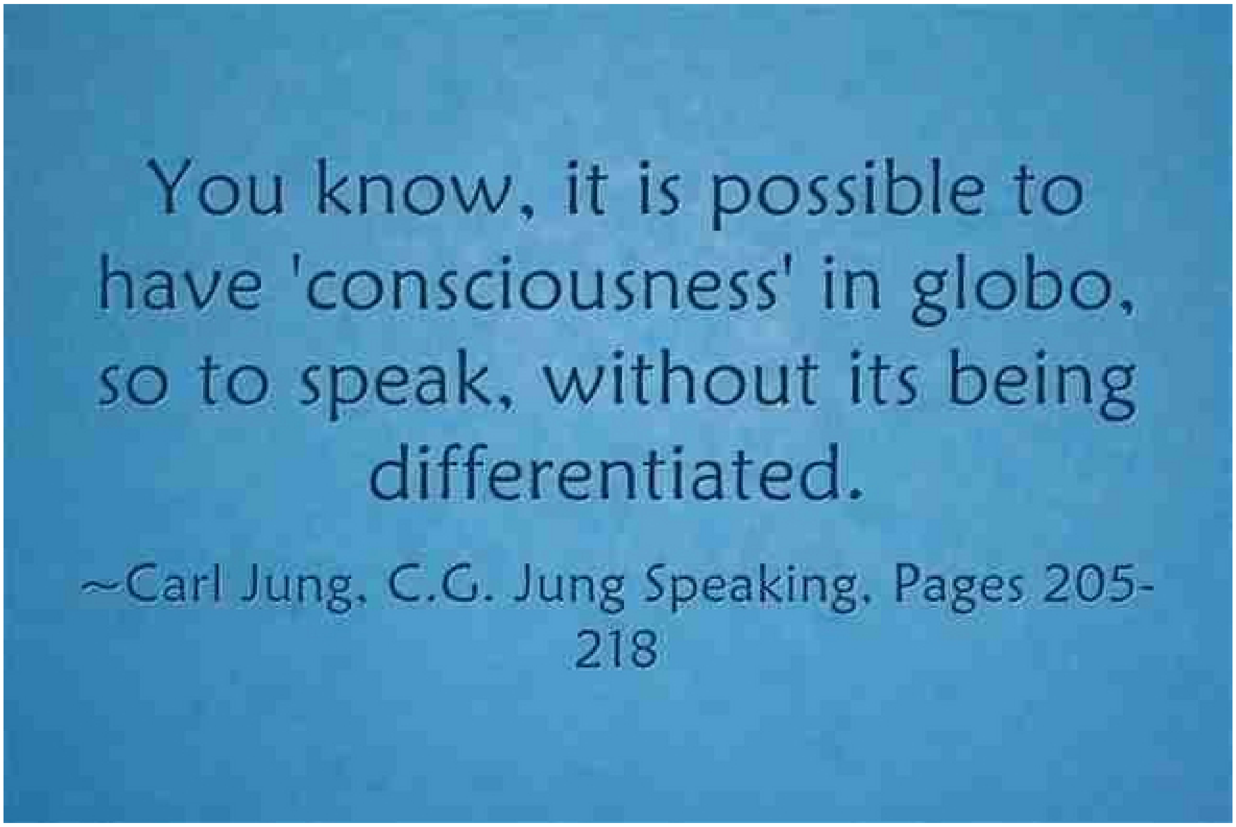
In his thirty-seventh year, Zarathustra happened to Nietzsche . . . ’cla ward die eins zu zwei, Zarathustra ging an mir vorbei.’ In 1888 he went mad. That was a tremendous event; it made a deep impression on me. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218



I was especially interested in palaeontology; you see, my life work in historical comparative psychology is like palaeontology. That is the study of the archetypes of the animals, and this is the study of the archetypes in the soul. The Eohippus is the archetype of the modern horse, the archetypes are like the fossil animals.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 205-218

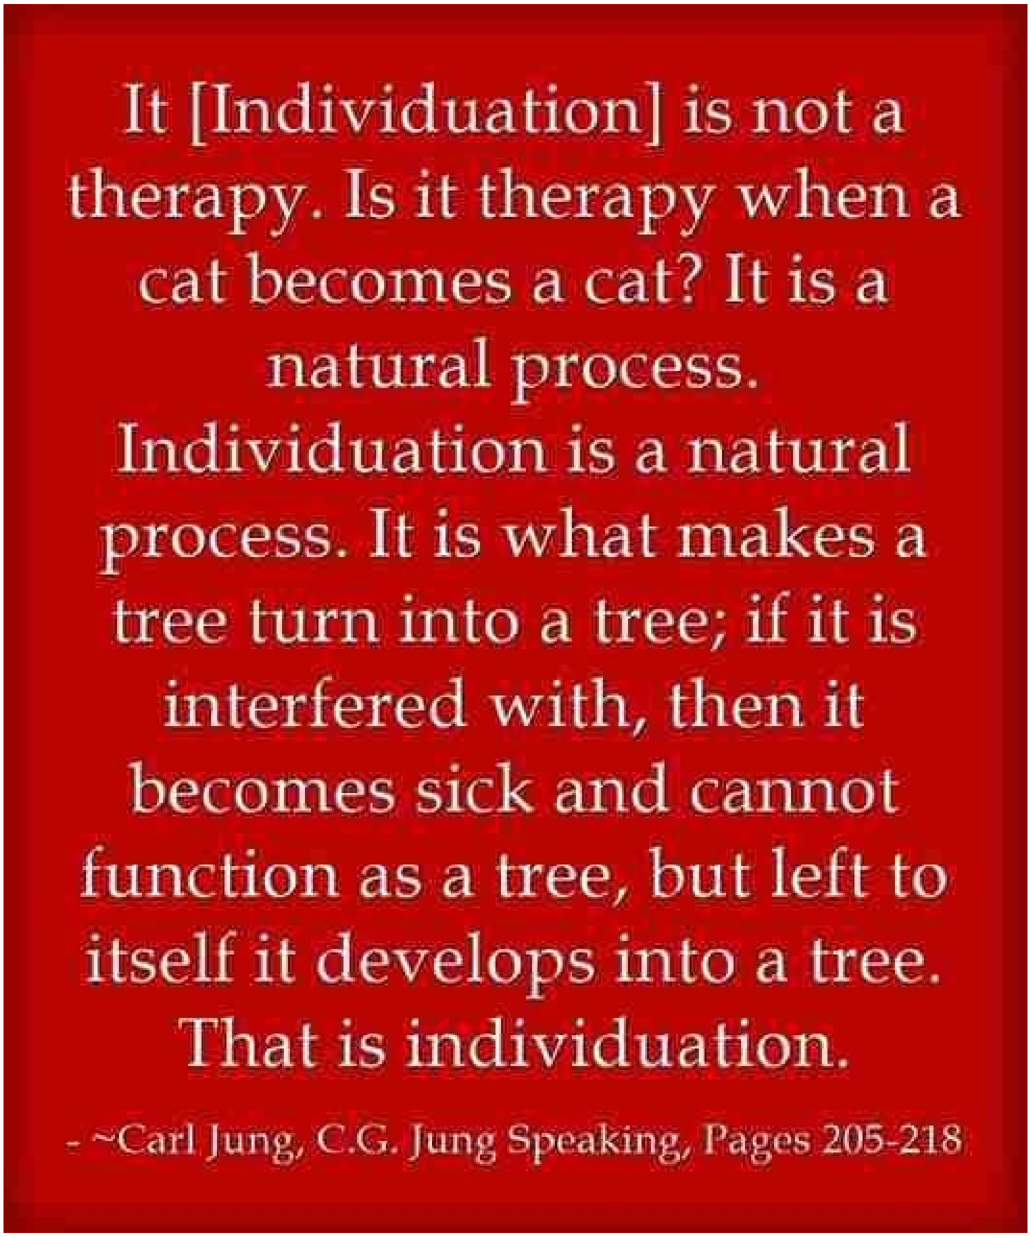
I was especially interested in palaeontology; you see, my life work in historical comparative psychology is like palaeontology. That is the study of the archetypes of the animals, and this is the study of the archetypes in the soul. The Eohippus is the archetype of the modern horse, the archetypes are like the fossil animals. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218\



You know, it is possible to have 'consciousness' in globo, so to speak, without its being differentiated.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 205-218

You know, it is possible to have ’consciousness’ in globo, so to speak, without its being differentiated. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218



It [Individuation] is not a therapy. Is it therapy when a cat becomes a cat? It is a natural process. Individuation is a natural process. It is what makes a tree turn into a tree; if it is interfered with, then it becomes sick and cannot function as a tree, but left to itself it develops into a tree. That is individuation.

- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Pages 205-218

It [Individuation] is not a therapy. Is it therapy when a cat becomes a cat? It is a natural process. Individuation is a natural process. It is what makes a tree turn into a tree; if it is interfered with, then it becomes sick and cannot function as a tree, but left to itself it develops into a tree. That is individuation. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218

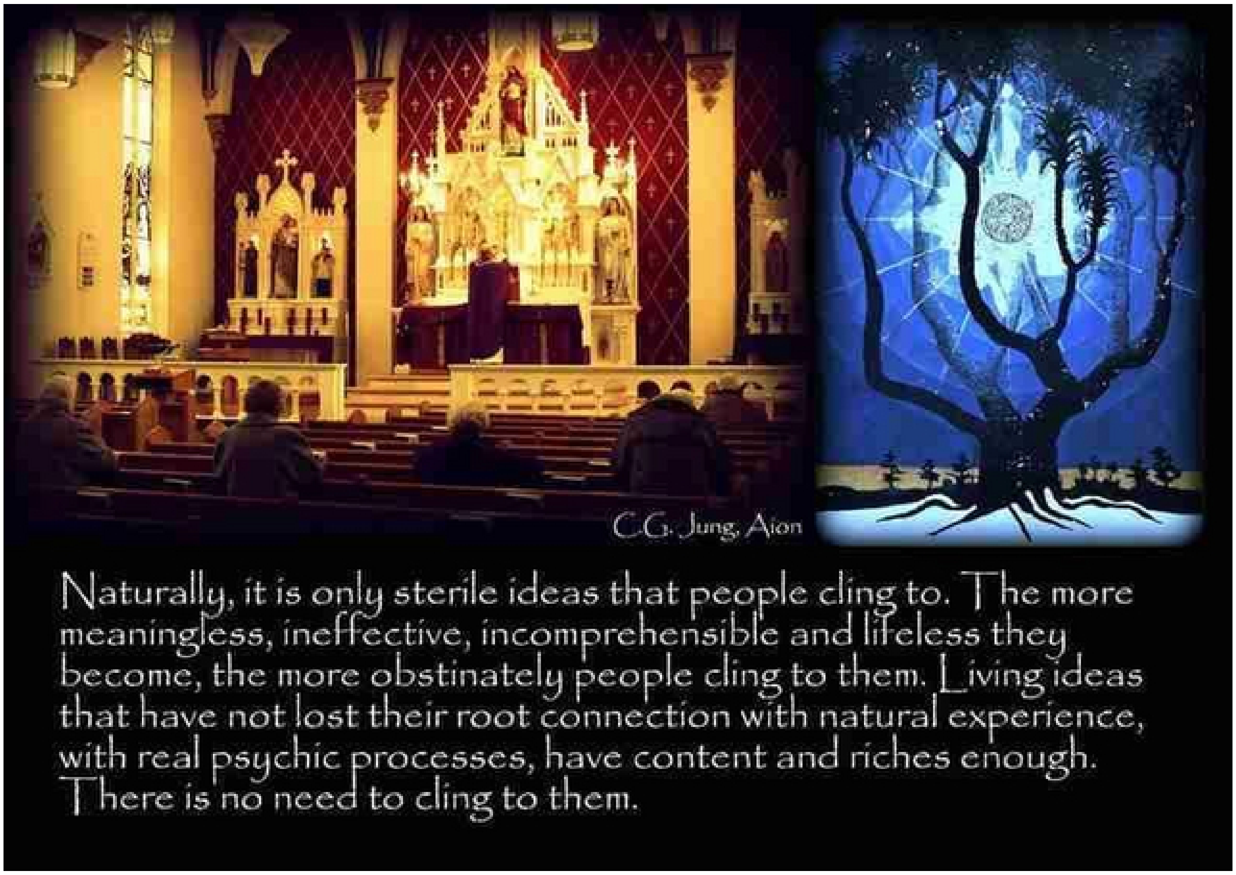
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/22a1e-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/85582-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5ec55-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cf9e0-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6d244-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f1810-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0d531-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b6b58-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/44a6f-iii.jpg`

10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/745ca-jjj.jpg
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6634b-lll.jpg
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d311b-mmm.jpg
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9c756-nnn.jpg
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/62406-ooo.jpg
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3efd4-ppp.jpg
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dcd9a-qqq.jpg
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/510d9-rrr.jpg
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6197e-sss.jpg
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0355a-ttt.jpg
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/81dda-uuu.jpg
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/65878-vvv.jpg
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8e385-www.jpg
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/898d7-xxx.jpg
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d16e0-yyy.jpg
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e7848-zzz1.jpg
26. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b07f3-zzz.jpg

---

Carl Jung: Thus in the course of time the meaningful turns into the meaningless. (2019-03-18 05:34)

[1]



C.G. Jung, Aion

Naturally, it is only sterile ideas that people cling to. The more meaningless, ineffective, incomprehensible and lifeless they become, the more obstinately people cling to them. Living ideas that have not lost their root connection with natural experience, with real psychic processes, have content and riches enough. There is no need to cling to them.

I regard these parallels as important because it is possible, through them, to relate so-called metaphysical concepts, which have lost their root connection with natural experience, to living, universal psychic processes, so that they can recover their true and original meaning.

In this way the connection is reestablished between the ego and projected contents now formulated as "metaphysical" ideas. Unfortunately, as already said, the fact that metaphysical ideas exist and are believed in does nothing to prove the actual existence of their content or of the object they refer to, although the coincidence of idea and reality in the form of a special psychic state, a state of grace, should not be deemed impossible, even if the subject cannot bring it about by an act of will.

Once metaphysical ideas have lost their capacity to recall and evoke the original experience they have not only become useless but prove to be actual impediments on the road to wider development.

One clings to possessions that have once meant wealth; and the more ineffective, incomprehensible, and lifeless they become the more obstinately people cling to them.

(Naturally it is only sterile ideas that they cling to; living ideas have content and riches enough, so there is no need to cling to them.)

Thus in the course of time the meaningful turns into the meaningless.

This is unfortunately the fate of metaphysical ideas. Carl Jung, Aion, Page 34.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c8272-12bcourse.jpg`

Religions are like plants which belong to a particular soil and a particular climate. (2019-03-18 06:15)

[1]

To Patrick Whitaker

Dear Sir, 8 October 1960

Thank you very much for your kind letter of August 21st. Unfortunately my answer is late.

I have been ill in the meantime and unable to take care of my correspondence.

I have studied your "proposal"1 with much interest.

Frankly, such a plan would be quite impossible in Europe, but with reference to the "land of unlimited possibilities" one feels differently.

Your basic assumption that a Museum of Sanctuary is needed for the preservation of religious phenomena is quite correct.

Our present state of civilization becomes more and more unable to understand what a religion means. Europe has already lost half of its population to a mental state worse than ancient paganism.

There is however a grave doubt in my mind: just as the accumulation of masterworks of art threatens to kill each individual work, so the accumulation of religions in the manner of a spiritual zoo seems to be very dangerous for the spiritual life of each religion.

Without it, it is a mere curiosity.

Religions are like plants which belong to a particular soil and a particular climate. Outside of their vital conditions their existence can be maintained only artificially. Nearly all confessions are afraid of anth ropology and psychology and rightly so.

I am sure they would feel most uncomfortable finding themselves neatly classified along with Mahayana Buddhism, Zen, Voodoo, and Australian alcheringemijinas.

But even under such conditions Ellis Island would be one of the most remarkable Museums of the World.

I should be indeed quite interested to learn about the further progress of your initiative.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 597-598

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/51e18-12bsoil.jpg`

Carl Jung: It is as if the stones held a living mystery that fascinates them (2019-03-18 06:21)

[1]

"The stone symbolized something permanent that can never be lost or dissolved, something eternal that men have compared to the mystical experience of God within one's soul."
Carl Jung
www.jungquotes.com

Perhaps crystals and stones are especially apt symbols of the Self because of the "just-so-ness" of their nature.

Many people cannot refrain from picking up stones of a slightly unusual color or shape and keeping them, without knowing why they do this.

It is as if the stones held a living mystery that fascinates them.

Men have collected stones since the beginning of time and have apparently assumed that certain ones were the containers of the life-force with all its mystery.

The ancient Germans, for instance, believed that the spirits of the dead continued to live in their tombstones.

The custom of placing stones on graves may spring partly from the symbolic idea that something eternal of the dead person remains, which can be most fittingly represented by a stone, for while the human being is as different as possible from a stone, yet man's innermost center is in a strange and special way akin to it (perhaps because the stone symbolizes mere existence at the farthest remove from the emotions, feelings, fantasies, and discursive thinking of ego-consciousness.

In this sense the stone symbolizes what is perhaps the simplest and deepest experience —the experience of something eternal that man can have in those moments when he feels immortal and unalterable. Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 206

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e1ffb-12bstone.jpg`

Dreams in Antiquity ~Carl Jung (2019-03-18 06:29)

[1]

Tholos temple, sanctuary of Athena Pronaia; located in Delphi, Greece

CHAPTER I

CONCERNING THE TWO KINDS OF THINKING

IT is a well-known fact that one of the principles of analytic psychology is that the dream images are to be understood symbolically; that is to say, that they are not to be taken literally just as they are presented in sleep, but that behind them a hidden meaning has to be surmised. It is this ancient idea of a dream symbolism which has challenged not only criticism, but, in addition to that, the strongest opposition. That dreams may be full of Import, and, therefore, something to be interpreted, is certainly neither a strange nor an extraordinary idea this Has been familiar to mankind for thousands of years, and, Therefore, seems much like a banal truth the dream Interpretations of the Egyptians and Chaldeans, and the story of Joseph who interpreted Pharaoh's dreams, are Known to everyone, and the dream book of Artemidorus Is also familiar. From countless inscribed monuments of All times and peoples we learn of foreboding dreams, of significant, of prophetic and also of curative dreams which the Deity sent to the sick, sleeping in the temple.

We know the dream of the mother of Augustus, who dreamt she was to be with child by the Deity transformed into a snake. We will not heap up references and examples to bear witness to the existence of a belief In the symbolism of dreams. When an idea is so old, and is so generally believed, it is probably true in some way, and, indeed, as is mostly the case, is not literally true, but is line psychologically in this distinction lies the reason why the old fogies of science have from time to time thrown away an inherited piece of ancient truth; because it was not literal but psychologic truth. For such discrimination this type of person has at no time had any comprehension.

From our experience, it is hardly conceivable that a God existing outside of ourselves causes dreams, or that the dream, eo ipso, foresees the future prophetically. When we translate this into the psychological, however, then the ancient theories sound much more reconcilable, namely, the dream amuses from a part of the mind unknown to us, but none the less important, and is concerned with the disputes for the approaching day. This psychological formula derived from the ancient superstitious conception of dreams, is, so to speak, exactly identified with the Freudian psychology, which assumes a rising wish from the unconscious to be the source of the dream As the old belief teaches, the Deity or the Demon speaks in symbolic speech to the sleeper, and the dream interpreter has the riddle to solve In modern speech we say this means that the dream is a series of images, which are apparently contradictory and nonsensical, but end in reality from psychologic material which yields a clear meaning.

Were I to suppose among my readers a far-reaching ignorance of dream analysis, then I should be obliged to illustrate this statement with numerous examples. Today, however, these things are quite well known, so that one must proceed carefully with every-day dream material, out of consideration for a public educated in these matters It is a special inconvenience that no dream can be recounted without being obliged to add to it half a life’s history which affords the individual foundations of the dream, but there are some few typical dreams which can be told without too great a ballast. One of these is the dream of the sexual assault, which is especially prevalent among women A girl sleeping after an evening happily spent in dancing, dreams that a robber breaks open her door noisily and stabs through the body with a lance. This theme, which explains itself, has countless variations, some simple, some complicated Instead of the lance it is a sword, a dagger, a revolver, a gun, a cannon, a hydrant, a watering pot; or the assault is a burglary, a pursuit, a robbery, or it is someone hidden in the closet or under the bed Or the danger may be illustrated by wild animals; for instance, a horse which throws the dreamer to the ground and kicks her in the body with his hind foot; lions, tigers, elephants with threatening trunks, and finally snakes in endless variety. Sometimes the snake creeps into the mouth, sometimes it bites the breast like Cleopatra’s legendary asp, sometimes it comes in the role of the paradisiacal snake, or in the variations of Franz Stuck, whose pictures of snakes bear the significant titles “Vice,’ Sin," and Lust." The mixture of lust and anxiety is expressed incomparably in the very atmosphere of these pictures, and far more brutally, indeed, than in Morike’s charming poem.

The Maiden’s First Love Song

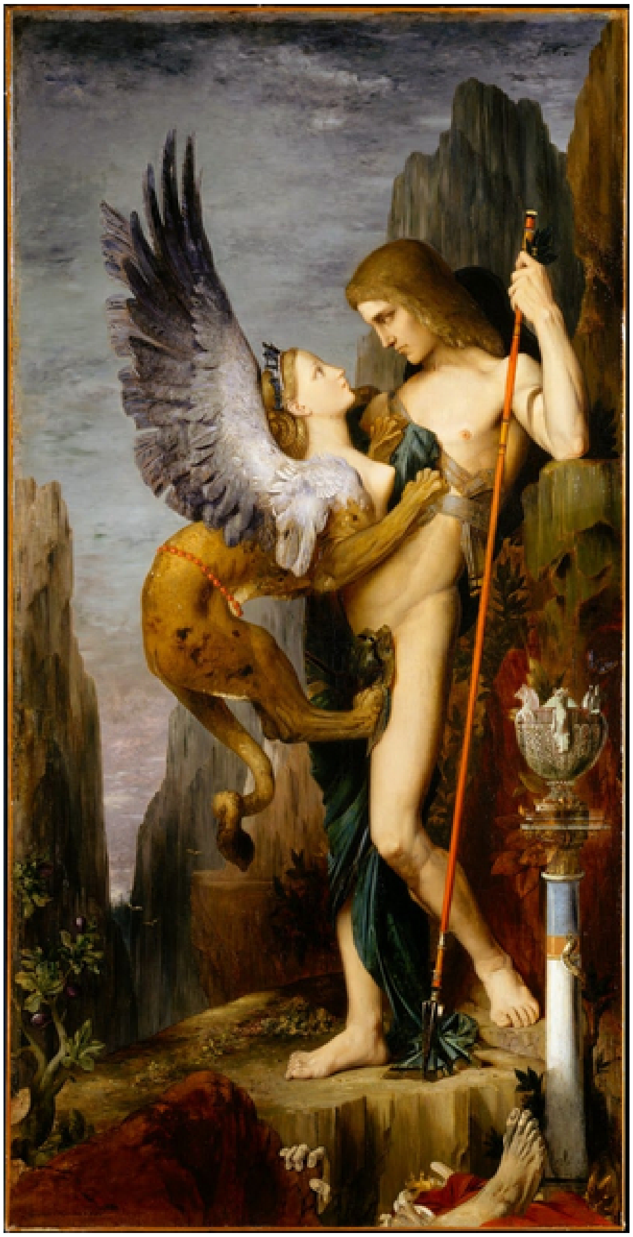
[2]
"Sin" by Franz Von Stuck

What’s in the net?
Behold,
But I am afraid,
Do I grasp a sweet eel?
Do I seize a snake?
Love is a blind
Tell the child
Where to seize.
Already it leaps in my hands,
Oh, Pity, or delight 1
With nestlings and turnings
It coils on my breast,
It bites me, oh, wonder!
Boldly through the skin,
It darts under my heart.
Oh, Love, I shudder’
What can I do, what can I begin?
That shuddering thing;
There it crackles within
And coils in a ring.
It must be poisoned.
Here it crawls around
Blissfully I feel as it worms
Itself into my soul
And kills me finally

All these things are simple, and need no explanation to be intelligible. Somewhat more complicated, but still unmistakable, is the dream of a woman , she sees the triumphal arch of Constantine A cannon stands before it, to the right of it a bird, to the left a man A shot flashes out of the tube; the projectile hits her; it goes into her pocket, into her purse There it remains, and she holds her purse as if something very precious were in it. The image disappears, and she continues to see only the stock of the cannon, and over that Constantine's motto, "In hoc signo vinces." These few references to the symbolic nature of dreams are perhaps sufficient For whomsoever the proof may appear insufficient, and it is certainly insufficient for a beginner, further evidence may be found in the fundamental work of Fiend, and in the works of Stekel and Rank which are fuller in certain particulars. We must assume here that the dream symbolism is an established fact, in order to bring to our study a mind suitably prepared for an appreciation of this work We would not be successful if we, on the contrary, were to be astonished at the idea that an intellectual image can be projected into our conscious psychic activity, an image which apparently obeys such wholly other laws and purposes than those governing the conscious psychic product. Carl Jung, Psychological Types, Pages 8-13

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/e/e3/Tholos_Athena_Pronaia.JPG/220px-Tholos_Athena_Pronaia.JPG`
2. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/1/17/Franz_von_Stuck_004.jpg/220px-Franz_von_Stuck_004.jpg`

Carl Jung and "Parental Complex" (2019-03-18 06:44)



Parental complex:

A group of emotionally charged images and ideas associated with the parents.

Jung believed that the numinosity surrounding the personal parents, apparent in their more or less magical influence, was to a large extent due to an archetypal image of the primordial parents resident in every psyche.

The importance that modern psychology attaches to the “parental complex” is a direct continuation of primitive man’s experience of the dangerous power of the ancestral spirits. Even the error of judgment which leads him unthinkingly to assume that the spirits are realities of the external world is carried on in our assumption (which is only partially correct) that the real parents are responsible for the parental complex. In the old trauma theory of Freudian psychoanalysis, and in other quarters as well, this assumption even passed for a scientific explanation. (It was in order to avoid this confusion that I advocated the term “parental imago.”)["The Function of the Unconscious," CW 7, par. 293.]

The imago of the parents is composed of both the image created in the individual psyche from the experience of the personal parents and collective elements already present.

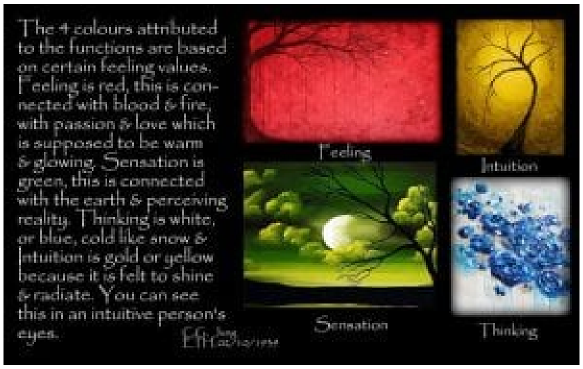
The image is unconsciously projected, and when the parents die, the projected image goes on working as though it were a spirit existing on its own. The primitive then speaks of parental spirits who return by night (revenants), while the modern man calls it a father or mother complex.[Ibid., par. 294.]

So long as a positive or negative resemblance to the parents is the deciding factor in a love choice, the release from the parental imago, and hence from childhood, is not complete.["Mind and Earth," CW 10, par. 74].

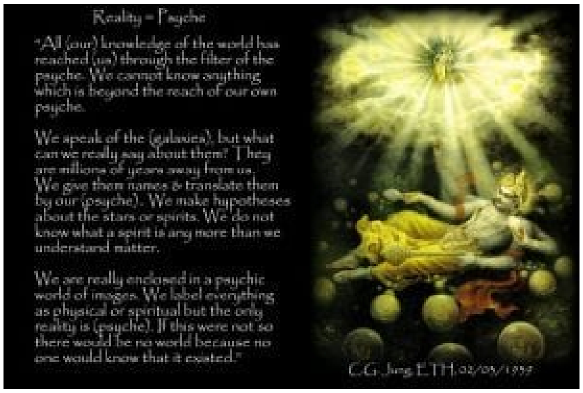
http://www.nyaap.org/jung-lexicon/p

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/39ed5-oed.jpg`

Craig Nelson Images (2019-03-18 07:21)



The 4 colours attributed to the functions are based on certain feeling values. Feeling is red, this is connected with blood & fire, with passion & love which is supposed to be warm & glowing. Sensation is green, this is connected with the earth & perceiving reality. Thinking is white, or blue, cold like snow & Intuition is gold or yellow because it is felt to shine & radiate. You can see this in an intuitive person's eyes.



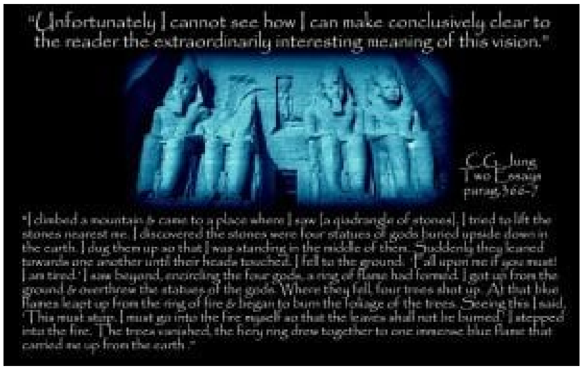
Reality = Psyche

"All (our) knowledge of the world has reached (us) through the filter of the psyche. We cannot know anything which is beyond the reach of our own psyche.

We speak of the (galaxies), but what can we really say about them? They are millions of years away from us. We give them names & translate them by our (psyche). We make hypotheses about the stars or spirits. We do not know what a spirit is any more than we understand matter.

We are really enclosed in a psychic world of images. We label everything as physical or spiritual but the only reality is (psyche). If this were not so there would be no world because no one would know that it existed."

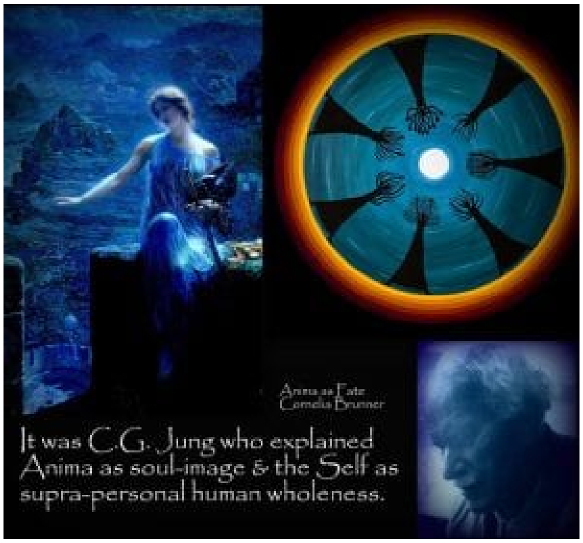
C.G. Jung, ETH, 02/03/1959



"Unfortunately I cannot see how I can make conclusively clear to the reader the extraordinarily interesting meaning of this vision."

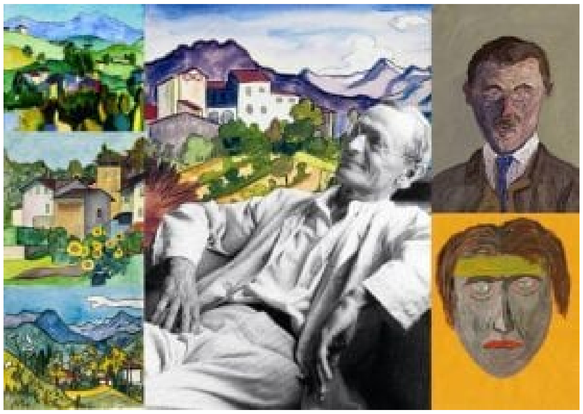
C.G. Jung
Two Essays
parag.366-7

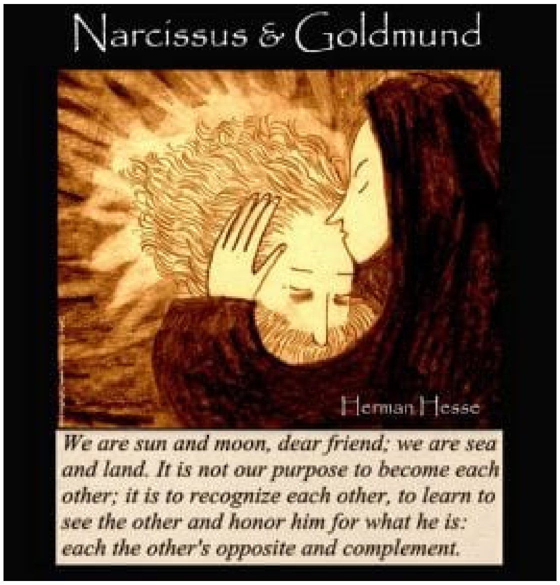
"I climbed a mountain & came to a place where I saw [a qiadrangle of stones]. I tried to lift the stones nearest me. I discovered the stones were four statues of gods buried upside down in the earth. I dug them up so that I was standing in the middle of them. Suddenly they leaned towards one another until their heads touched. I fell to the ground. 'Fall upon me if you must! I am tired.' I saw beyond, encircling the four gods, a ring of flame had formed. I got up from the ground & overthrew the statues of the gods. Where they fell, four trees shot up. At that blue flames leapt up from the ring of fire & began to burn the foliage of the trees. Seeing this I said, 'This must stop. I must go into the fire myself so that the leaves shall not be burned.' I stepped into the fire. The trees vanished, the fiery ring drew together to one immense blue flame that carried me up from the earth."



Anima as Fate
Cornelia Brunner

It was C.G. Jung who explained Anima as soul-image & the Self as supra-personal human wholeness.





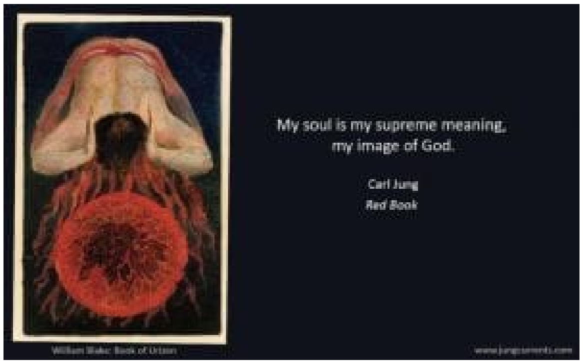
Narcissus & Goldmund

Herman Hesse

We are sun and moon, dear friend; we are sea and land. It is not our purpose to become each other; it is to recognize each other, to learn to see the other and honor him for what he is: each the other's opposite and complement.

C.G. Jung
ETH
2/5/1939

We are very much afraid of the word magic, it has a bad name, for its meaning has degenerated & it has a purely superstitious sound in our ears. But magical was originally simply [Psyche]. The ancients did not know of the existence of the psyche, so not being able to call anything [Psyche] they used the word magic.



My soul is my supreme meaning,
my image of God.

Carl Jung
Red Book

William Blake: Book of Urizen

www.jungcurrents.com

"Creative power is mightier than its possessor."

C.G. Jung CW17, par. 206

"..work like a slave command like a king create like a god.."

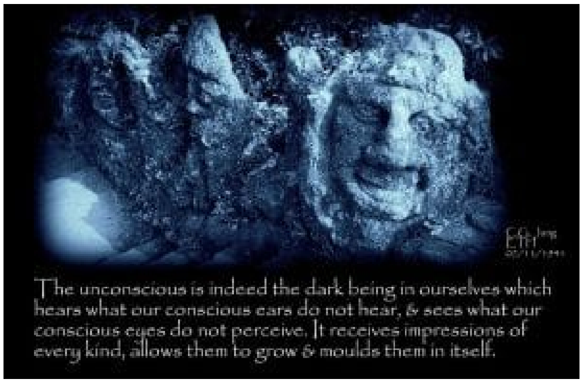
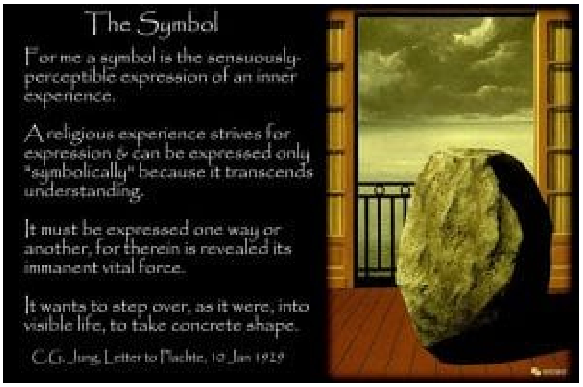
Constantin Brancusi



C.G. Jung
ETH
20/11/1941

The unconscious is indeed the dark being in ourselves which hears what our conscious ears do not hear, & sees what our conscious eyes do not perceive. It receives impressions of every kind, allows them to grow & moulds them in itself.



The Symbol

For me a symbol is the sensuously-perceptible expression of an inner experience.

A religious experience strives for expression & can be expressed only "symbolically" because it transcends understanding.

It must be expressed one way or another, for therein is revealed its immanent vital force.

It wants to step over, as it were, into visible life, to take concrete shape.

C.G. Jung, Letter to Plachte, 10 Jan 1929

Reason accomplishes nothing, because the puer aeturnus is always an agent of destiny.

C.G. Jung letter to Schmitz, 27 Feb 1931

The Spirit must assimilate the Chthonic
(the underground of the rooted earth)

C.G. Jung
Letter to N
5 July 1952
re: dream of a bird swallowing a snake

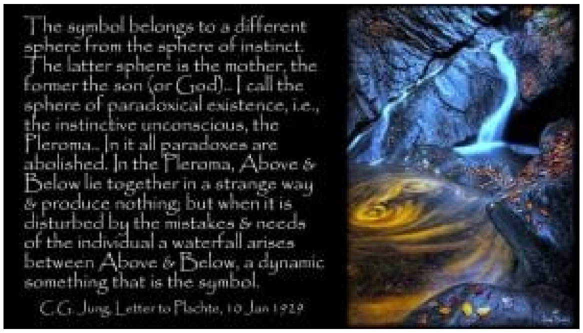
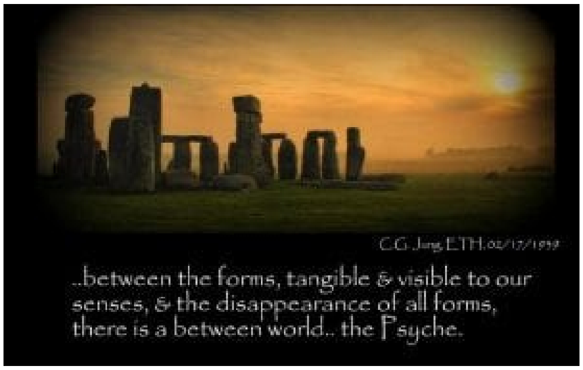
"We are also our unconscious side, & that is why the bird swallows the black snake, namely to show what you ought to do in order to be complete. Not perfection, but completeness is what is expected of you."



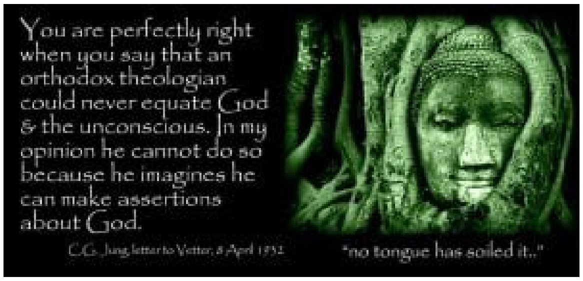
The symbol belongs to a different sphere from the sphere of instinct. The latter sphere is the mother, the former the son (or God).. I call the sphere of paradoxical existence, i.e., the instinctive unconscious, the Pleroma.. In it all paradoxes are abolished. In the Pleroma, Above & Below lie together in a strange way & produce nothing; but when it is disturbed by the mistakes & needs of the individual a waterfall arises between Above & Below, a dynamic something that is the symbol.

C.G. Jung, Letter to Plachte, 10 Jan 1929



C.G. Jung, ETH, 02/17/1959

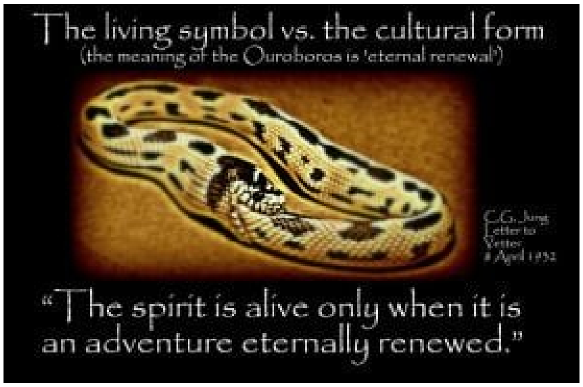
..between the forms, tangible & visible to our senses, & the disappearance of all forms, there is a between world.. the Psyche.



You are perfectly right when you say that an orthodox theologian could never equate God & the unconscious. In my opinion he cannot do so because he imagines he can make assertions about God.

C.G. Jung, letter to Vetter, 8 April 1932

"no tongue has soiled it.."



The living symbol vs. the cultural form

(the meaning of the Ouroboros is 'eternal renewal')

C.G. Jung
Letter to Vetter
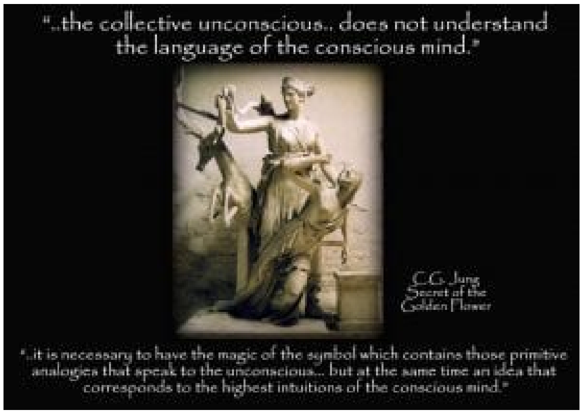
8 April 1932

"The spirit is alive only when it is an adventure eternally renewed."



"..the collective unconscious.. does not understand the language of the conscious mind."

C.G. Jung
Secret of the Golden Flower

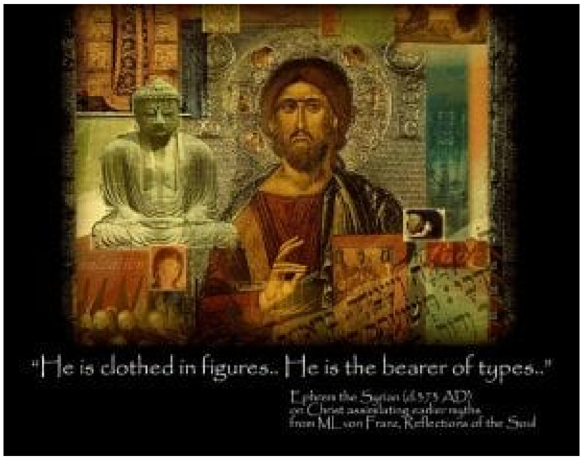
"..it is necessary to have the magic of the symbol which contains those primitive analogies that speak to the unconscious... but at the same time an idea that corresponds to the highest intuitions of the conscious mind."



"He is clothed in figures.. He is the bearer of types.."

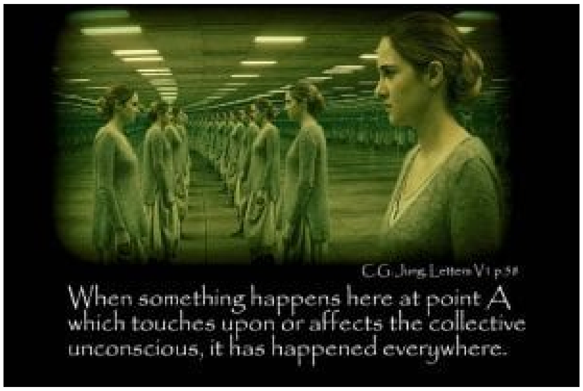
Ephrem the Syrian (d.373 AD) on Christ assimilating earlier myths from ML von Franz, Reflections of the Soul



C.G. Jung Letters V1 p.38

When something happens here at point A which touches upon or affects the collective unconscious, it has happened everywhere.

Do we create ourselves or do we discover ourslees?

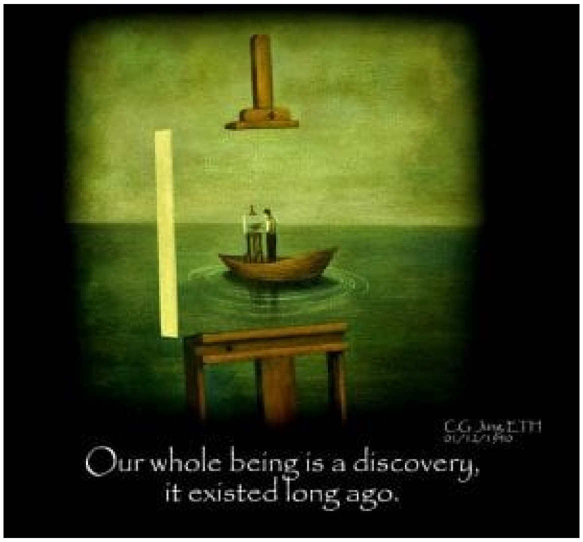
"Homo creatus est" means that man was created. We are inclined to turn our backs smilingly on such a statement, thinking of the first chapter of Genesis. But it is really a psychological declaration of the first importance: does man feel himself to have been created or not? Do we feel that we have created ourselves or have we rather found ourselves? Most people feel the latter, one day we found ourselves & said "I" for the first time. But had that "I" been created or did it just happen? This is quite a different question & a very difficult one. Our feeling gives us no answer. We can only say that we gradually discovered ourselves with our gifts, our vices, our qualities & our imperfections.

C.G. Jung ETH
01/12/1940



C.G. Jung ETH
01/12/1940

Our whole being is a discovery, it existed long ago.

C.G. Jung
Visions VI
p.313

It seems as if one-half of the world had been made by an engineer and the other half by a foolish poet.

C.G. Jung
ETH, 01/12/1940

If I discover that I have been anticipated, it makes an enormous impression upon me; I could not in that moment clearly de-fine the meaning of my life but I feel it as something living. But what peculiar kind of meaning has it? A certain line of thought, for instance, is developed through a series of dreams; and I discover that I am the duplicate of my unconscious anticipation of myself..

From lectures at C.G. Jung Center,
Chicago

Marie-Louise von Franz built a house near Jung's at Bollingen, designed by Jung's architect son. She said she was very nervous when she bought the property & couldn't make a decision, but her animus helped her in a dream. She was standing on a mountain & saw a black spot in the air above a mountain 200 miles away. It came closer & closer. Was it a bird? It was too big. Then she saw it was a ski jumper. He finally landed near her & finished his jump with a flourish. It was a young Swiss peasant boy. She asked him in astonishment how did he do that? He smiled at her, "It was easy. I just shut my eyes & jumped."

C.G. Jung ETH
01/12/1940

We were & knew it not. It was, so to speak, known, but we must leave the question open who it was that knew it..
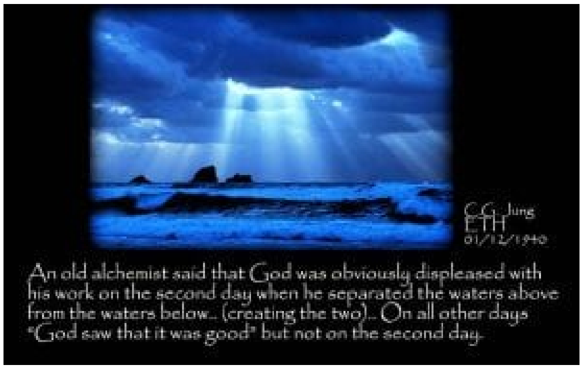
We are thought from our psyche before we know it.



C.G. Jung
ETH
01/12/1940

An old alchemist said that God was obviously displeased with his work on the second day when he separated the waters above from the waters below.. (creating the two).. On all other days
"God saw that it was good" but not on the second day.

Only Numinous Experiences are able to express Truth :

The simplest [truth] is the most difficult of all, because, in the process of reaching consciousness, it breaks up into many individual aspects in which the mind gets entangled & cannot find a suitably simple expression. The trouble may lie in language itself, which is just as much lacking in that needful simplicity as are our powers of conception.

Only numinous experiences retain their original simplicity or oneness which still gives us intimations of the Unus Mundus [what happens as outer event can occur simultaneously in the Psyche as inner event, a Transcendent Reality.]

C.G. Jung, Letter to Egloff, 8 June 1959

The archetype, in itself unknowable, clothes itself in [the symbol]...

...just as a primitive dancer does with animal hides & masks.

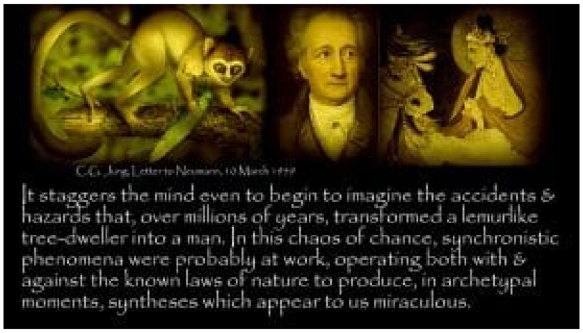
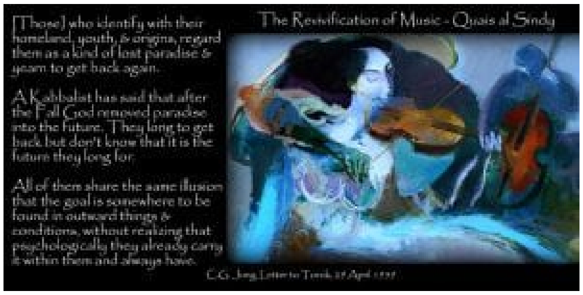
Marie-Louise von Franz
Reflections of the Soul
p. 86



C.G. Jung, Letter to Neumann, 10 March 1959

It staggers the mind even to begin to imagine the accidents & hazards that, over millions of years, transformed a lemurlike tree-dweller into a man. In this chaos of chance, synchronistic phenomena were probably at work, operating both with & against the known laws of nature to produce, in archetypal moments, syntheses which appear to us miraculous.



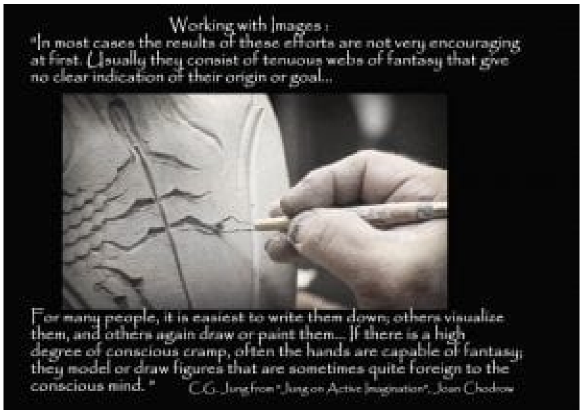
The Revivification of Music - Quais al Sindy

[Those] who identify with their homeland, youth, & origins, regard them as a kind of lost paradise & yearn to get back again.

A Kabbalist has said that after the Fall God removed paradise into the future. They long to get back but don't know that it is the future they long for.

All of them share the same illusion that the goal is somewhere to be found in outward things & conditions, without realizing that psychologically they already carry it within them and always have.

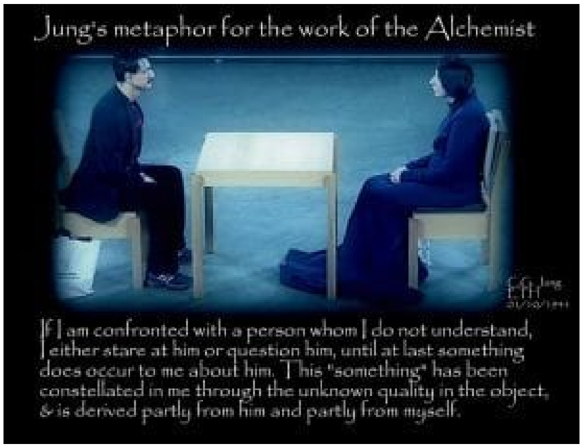
C.G. Jung, Letter to Tonck, 28 April 1959



Working with Images :

"In most cases the results of these efforts are not very encouraging at first. Usually they consist of tenuous webs of fantasy that give no clear indication of their origin or goal...

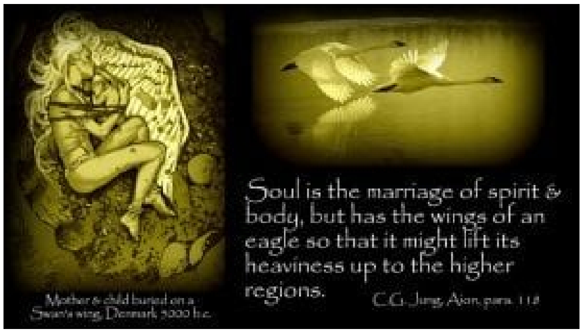
For many people, it is easiest to write them down; others visualize them, and others again draw or paint them... If there is a high degree of conscious cramp, often the hands are capable of fantasy; they model or draw figures that are sometimes quite foreign to the conscious mind. " C.G. Jung from "Jung on Active Imagination", Joan Chodrow



Jung's metaphor for the work of the Alchemist

C.G. Jung
ETH
21/10/1941

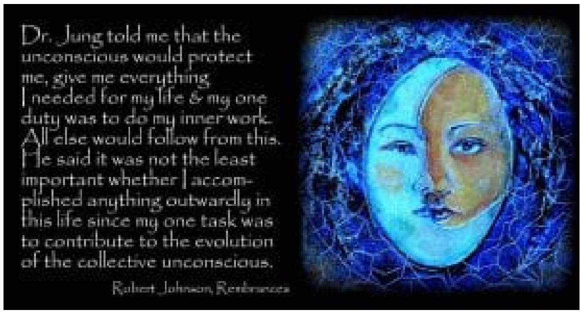
If I am confronted with a person whom I do not understand, I either stare at him or question him, until at last something does occur to me about him. This "something" has been constellated in me through the unknown quality in the object, & is derived partly from him and partly from myself.



Soul is the marriage of spirit & body, but has the wings of an eagle so that it might lift its heaviness up to the higher regions.

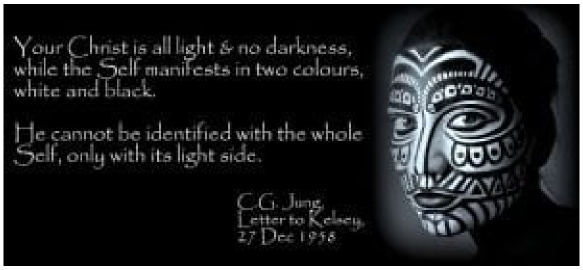
C.G. Jung, Aion, para. 118

Mother & child buried on a Swan's wing, Denmark 5000 b.c.



Dr. Jung told me that the unconscious would protect me, give me everything I needed for my life & my one duty was to do my inner work. All else would follow from this. He said it was not the least important whether I accomplished anything outwardly in this life since my one task was to contribute to the evolution of the collective unconscious.

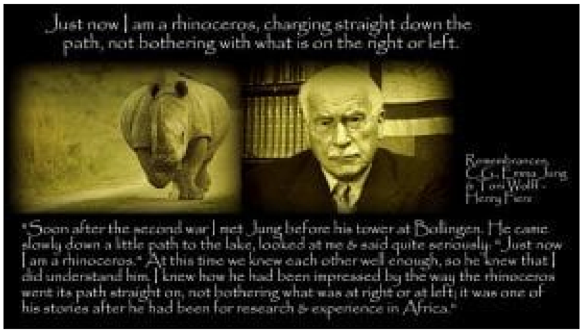
Robert Johnson, Rembrances



Your Christ is all light & no darkness, while the Self manifests in two colours, white and black.

He cannot be identified with the whole Self, only with its light side.

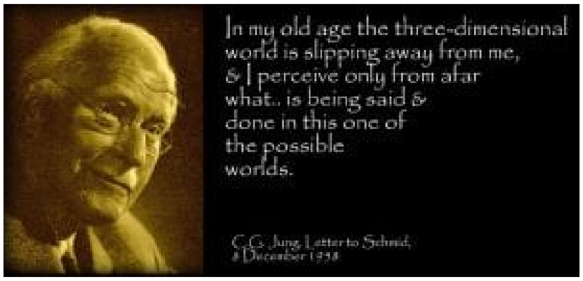
C.G. Jung,
Letter to Kelsey,
27 Dec 1958



Just now I am a rhinoceros, changing straight down the path, not bothering with what is on the right or left.

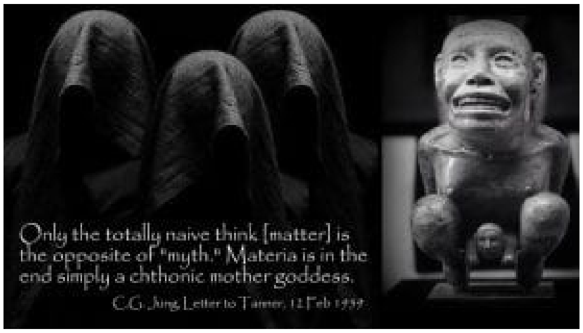
Remembrances,
C.G., Emma Jung
& Toni Wolff -
Henry Fierz

"Soon after the second war I met Jung before his tower at Bollingen. He came slowly down a little path to the lake, looked at me & said quite seriously: "Just now I am a rhinoceros." At this time we knew each other well enough, so he knew that I did understand him. I knew how he had been impressed by the way the rhinoceros went its path straight on, not bothering what was at right or at left; it was one of his stories after he had been for research & experience in Africa."



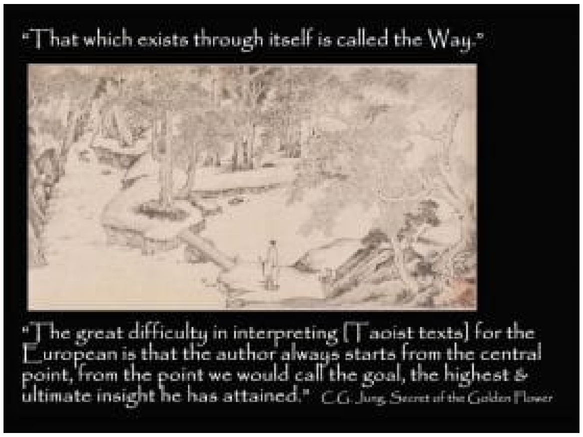
In my old age the three-dimensional world is slipping away from me, & I perceive only from afar what.. is being said & done in this one of the possible worlds.

C.G. Jung, Letter to Schmid,
8 December 1958



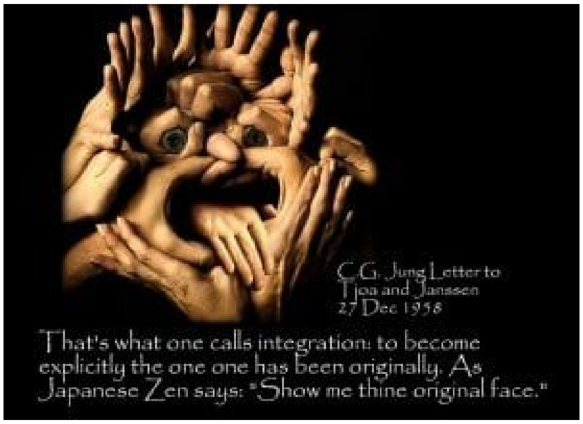
Only the totally naive think [matter] is the opposite of "myth." Materia is in the end simply a chthonic mother goddess.

C.G. Jung, Letter to Tanner, 12 Feb 1959



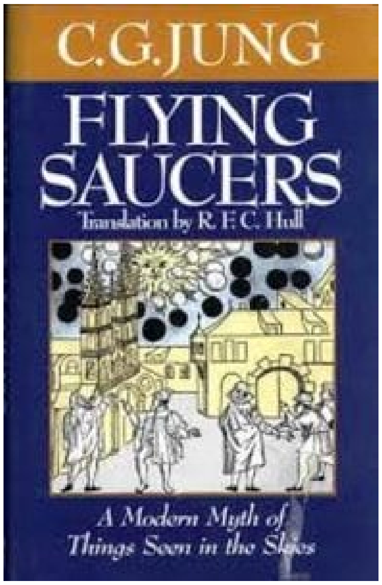
"That which exists through itself is called the Way."

"The great difficulty in interpreting [Taoist texts] for the European is that the author always starts from the central point, from the point we would call the goal, the highest & ultimate insight he has attained." C.G. Jung, Secret of the Golden Flower

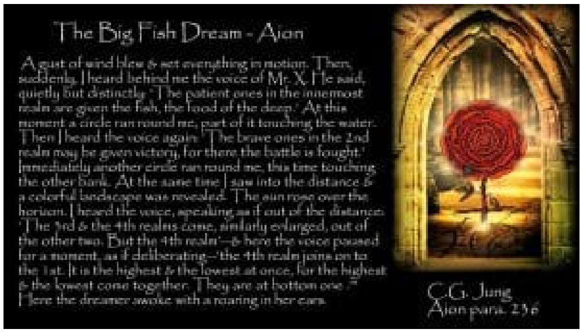


C.G. Jung Letter to Tjoa and Janssen 27 Dec 1958

That's what one calls integration: to become explicitly the one one has been originally. As Japanese Zen says: "Show me thine original face."



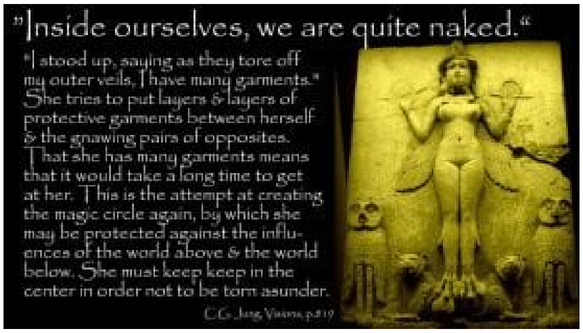
C.G.JUNG
FLYING SAUCERS
Translation by R. F. C. Hull
A Modern Myth of Things Seen in the Skies



The Big Fish Dream - Aion

A gust of wind blew & set everything in motion. Then, suddenly, I heard behind me the voice of Mr. X. He said, quietly but distinctly: 'The patient ones in the innermost realm are given the fish, the food of the deep.' At this moment a circle ran round me, part of it touching the water. Then I heard the voice again: 'The brave ones in the 2nd realm may be given victory, for there the battle is fought.' Immediately another circle ran round me, this time touching the other bank. At the same time I saw into the distance & a colorful landscape was revealed. The sun rose over the horizon. I heard the voice, speaking as if out of the distance: 'The 3rd & the 4th realms come, similarly enlarged, out of the other two. But the 4th realm'—& here the voice paused for a moment, as if deliberating—'the 4th realm joins on to the 1st. It is the highest & the lowest at once, for the highest & the lowest come together. They are at bottom one.'" Here the dreamer awoke with a roaring in her ears.

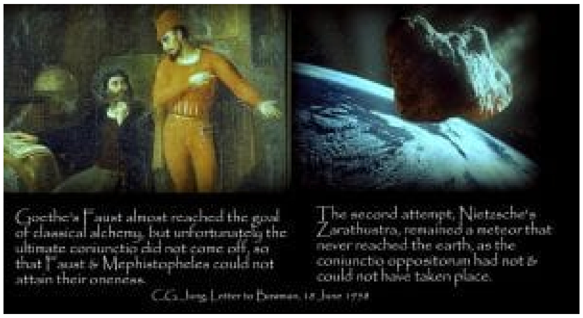
C.G. Jung
Aion para. 236



"Inside ourselves, we are quite naked."

"I stood up, saying as they tore off my outer veils, I have many garments." She tries to put layers & layers of protective garments between herself & the gnawing pairs of opposites. That she has many garments means that it would take a long time to get at her. This is the attempt at creating the magic circle again, by which she may be protected against the influences of the world above & the world below. She must keep keep in the center in order not to be torn asunder.

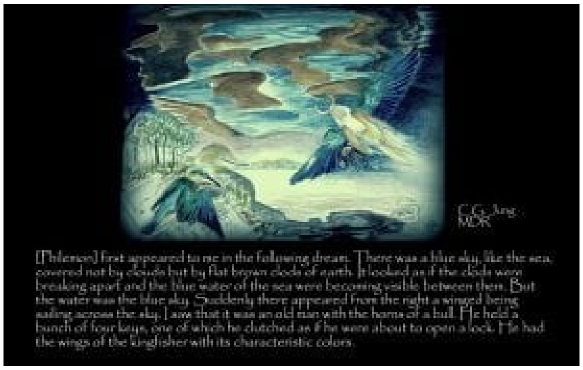
C.G. Jung, Visions, p.819



Goethe's Faust almost reached the goal of classical alchemy, but unfortunately the ultimate coniunctio did not come off, so that Faust & Mephistopheles could not attain their oneness.

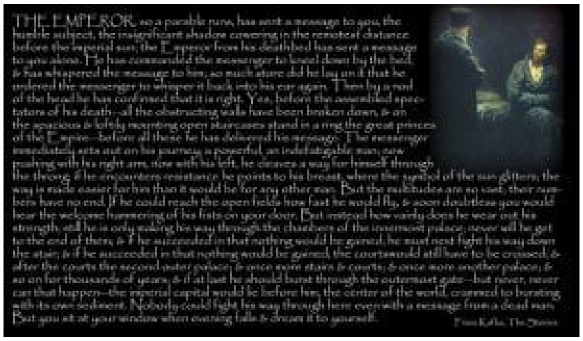
The second attempt, Nietzsche's Zarathustra, remained a meteor that never reached the earth, as the coniunctio oppositorum had not & could not have taken place.

C.G. Jung, Letter to Bowman, 18 June 1958



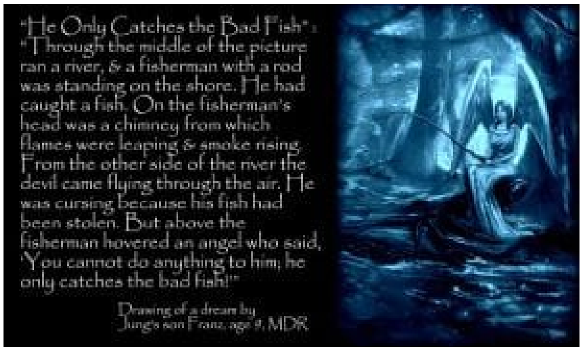
C.G. Jung
MDR

[Philemon] first appeared to me in the following dream. There was a blue sky, like the sea, covered not by clouds but by flat brown clods of earth. It looked as if the clods were breaking apart and the blue water of the sea were becoming visible between them. But the water was the blue sky. Suddenly there appeared from the right a winged being sailing across the sky. I saw that it was an old man with the horns of a bull. He held a bunch of four keys, one of which he clutched as if he were about to open a lock. He had the wings of the kingfisher with its characteristic colors.



THE EMPEROR, so a parable runs, has sent a message to you, the humble subject, the insignificant shadow cowering in the remotest distance before the imperial sun; the Emperor from his deathbed has sent a message to you alone. He has commanded the messenger to kneel down by the bed, & has whispered the message to him; so much store did he lay on it that he ordered the messenger to whisper it back into his ear again. Then by a nod of the head he has confirmed that it is right. Yes, before the assembled spectators of his death—all the obstructing walls have been broken down, & on the spacious & loftily mounting open staircases stand in a ring the great princes of the Empire—before all these he has delivered his message. The messenger immediately sets out on his journey; a powerful, an indefatigable man; now pushing with his right arm, now with his left, he cleaves a way for himself through the throng; if he encounters resistance he points to his breast, where the symbol of the sun glitters; the way is made easier for him than it would be for any other man. But the multitudes are so vast; their numbers have no end. If he could reach the open fields how fast he would fly, & soon doubtless you would hear the welcome hammering of his fists on your door. But instead how vainly does he wear out his strength; still he is only making his way through the chambers of the innermost palace; never will he get to the end of them; & if he succeeded in that nothing would be gained; he must next fight his way down the stair; & if he succeeded in that nothing would be gained; the courtswould still have to be crossed; & after the courts the second outer palace; & once more stairs & courts; & once more another palace; & so on for thousands of years; & if at last he should burst through the outermost gate—but never, never can that happen—the imperial capital would lie before him, the center of the world, crammed to bursting with its own sediment. Nobody could fight his way through here even with a message from a dead man. But you sit at your window when evening falls & dream it to yourself.

From Kafka, The Stories



"He Only Catches the Bad Fish" :
"Through the middle of the picture ran a river, & a fisherman with a rod was standing on the shore. He had caught a fish. On the fisherman's head was a chimney from which flames were leaping & smoke rising. From the other side of the river the devil came flying through the air. He was cursing because his fish had been stolen. But above the fisherman hovered an angel who said, 'You cannot do anything to him; he only catches the bad fish!'"

Drawing of a dream by
Jung's son Franz, age 9, MDR

Parsifal : I scarcely move, yet swiftly seem to run.

Grail King : My son, thou seest here
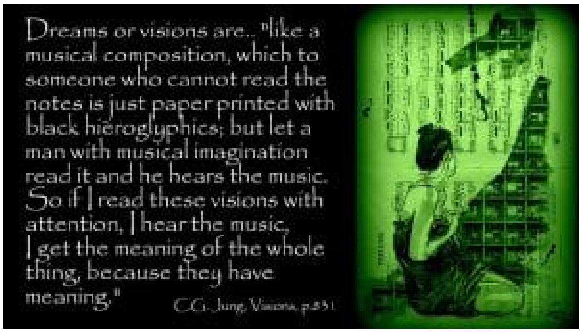
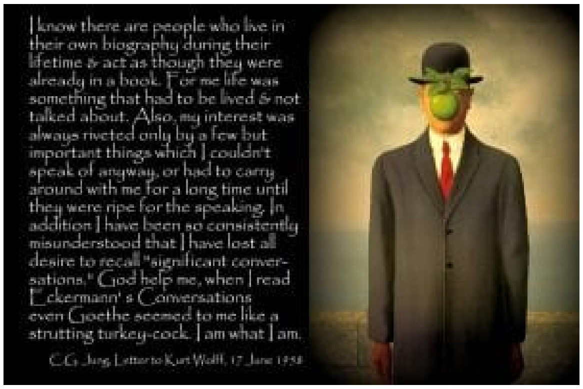
Space & Time are one.

The Grail Legend
Emma Jung & Marie-Louise von Franz



Dreams or visions are.. "like a musical composition, which to someone who cannot read the notes is just paper printed with black hieroglyphics; but let a man with musical imagination read it and he hears the music. So if I read these visions with attention, I hear the music, I get the meaning of the whole thing, because they have meaning."

C.G. Jung, Visions, p.831



I know there are people who live in their own biography during their lifetime & act as though they were already in a book. For me life was something that had to be lived & not talked about. Also, my interest was always riveted only by a few but important things which I couldn't speak of anyway, or had to carry around with me for a long time until they were ripe for the speaking. In addition I have been so consistently misunderstood that I have lost all desire to recall "significant conversations." God help me, when I read Eckermann' s Conversations even Goethe seemed to me like a strutting turkey-cock. I am what I am.

C.G. Jung, Letter to Kurt Wolff, 17 June 1958

C.G. Jung
Letter to Schmid
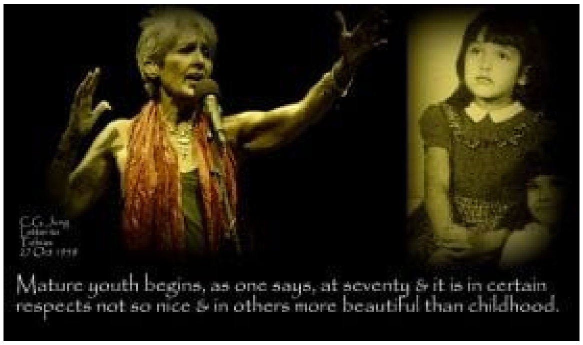
11 June 1958

Matter.. as the name shows, also contains the mother-idea although it refers to a scientific concept.



C.G. Jung
Letter to Tobias
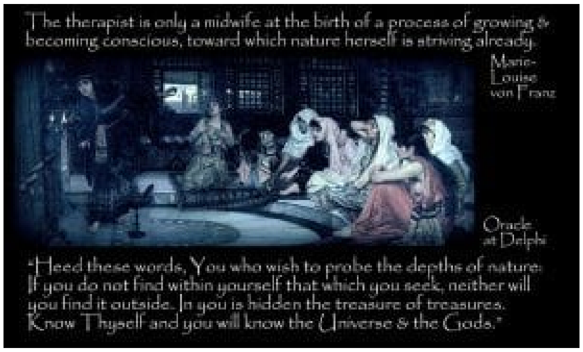
27 Oct 1958

Mature youth begins, as one says, at seventy & it is in certain respects not so nice & in others more beautiful than childhood.



The therapist is only a midwife at the birth of a process of growing & becoming conscious, toward which nature herself is striving already.

Marie-Louise von Franz

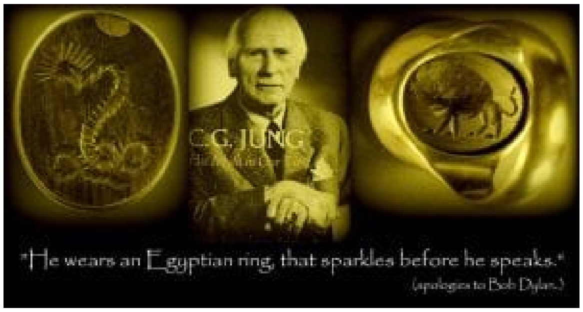
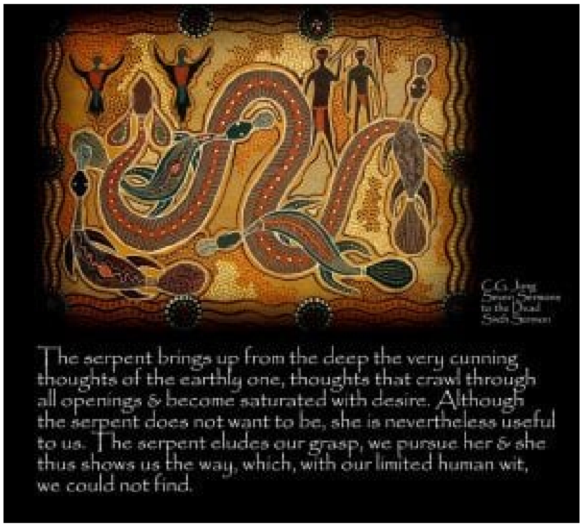
Oracle
at Delphi

"Heed these words, You who wish to probe the depths of nature: If you do not find within yourself that which you seek, neither will you find it outside. In you is hidden the treasure of treasures. Know Thyself and you will know the Universe & the Gods."



"He wears an Egyptian ring, that sparkles before he speaks."

(apologies to Bob Dylan.)



C.G. Jung
Seven Sermons to the Dead
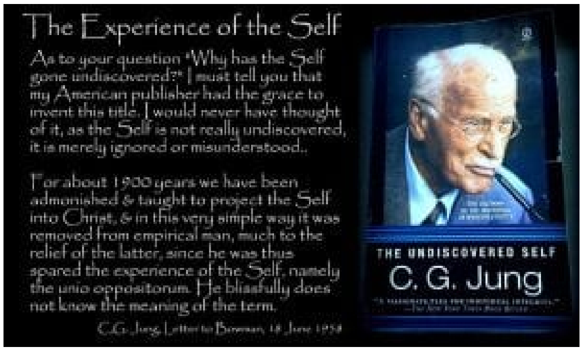
Sixth Sermon

The serpent brings up from the deep the very cunning thoughts of the earthly one, thoughts that crawl through all openings & become saturated with desire. Although the serpent does not want to be, she is nevertheless useful to us. The serpent eludes our grasp, we pursue her & she thus shows us the way, which, with our limited human wit, we could not find.



THE UNDISCOVERED SELF
C. G. Jung

The Experience of the Self

As to your question "Why has the Self gone undiscovered?" I must tell you that my American publisher had the grace to invent this title. I would never have thought of it, as the Self is not really undiscovered, it is merely ignored or misunderstood..

For about 1900 years we have been admonished & taught to project the Self into Christ, & in this very simple way it was removed from empirical man, much to the relief of the latter, since he was thus spared the experience of the Self, namely the unio oppositorum. He blissfully does not know the meaning of the term.

C.G. Jung, Letter to Bowman, 18 June 1958

C.G. Jung
Letter to Fordham
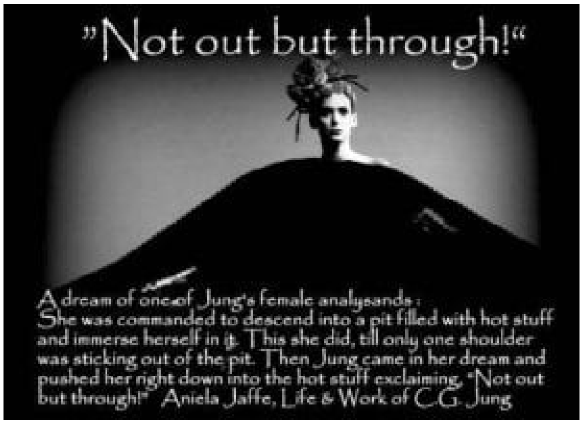
14 June 1958

We follow archetypal patterns as the weaver-bird does. This assumption is far more probable than the mystical idea of absolute freedom.

Every step forward on the way to individuation is at the same time a step backwards..

..into the past, into the mysteries of one's own nature.
Aniela Jaffe



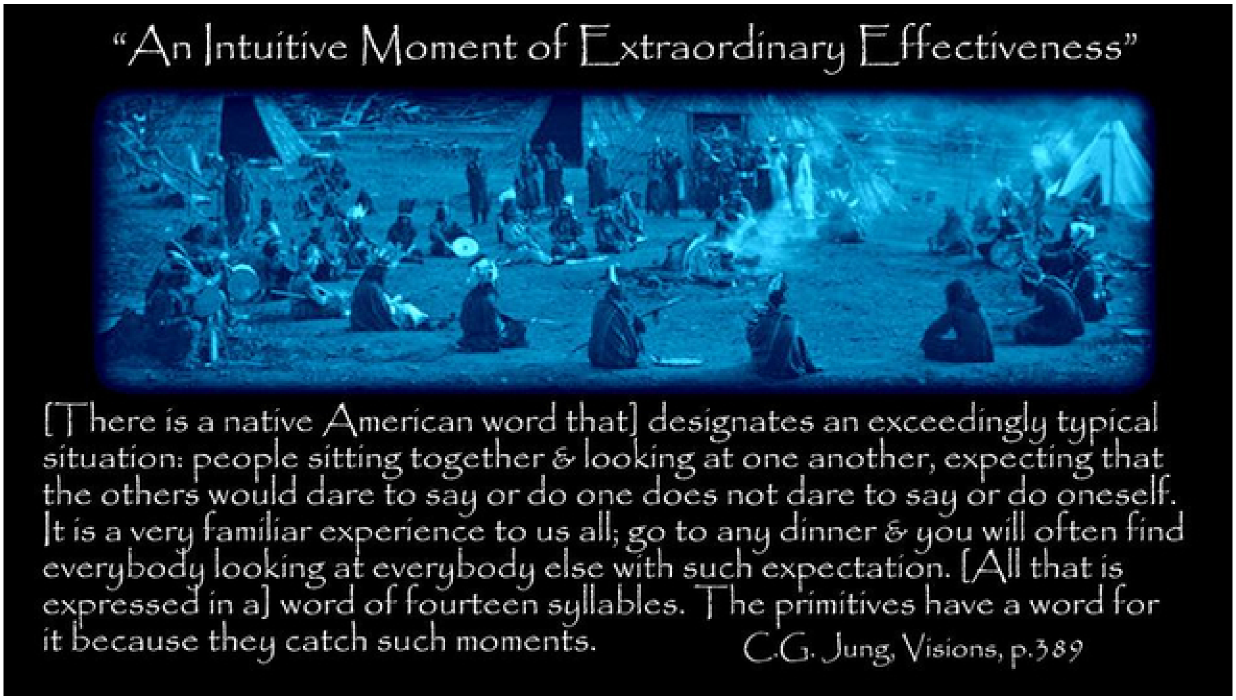
"Not out but through!"

A dream of one of Jung's female analysands :
She was commanded to descend into a pit filled with hot stuff and immerse herself in it. This she did, till only one shoulder was sticking out of the pit. Then Jung came in her dream and pushed her right down into the hot stuff exclaiming, "Not out but through!" Aniela Jaffe, Life & Work of C.G. Jung

The Anima

C.G. Jung in "Meetings with Jung" E.A. Bennet

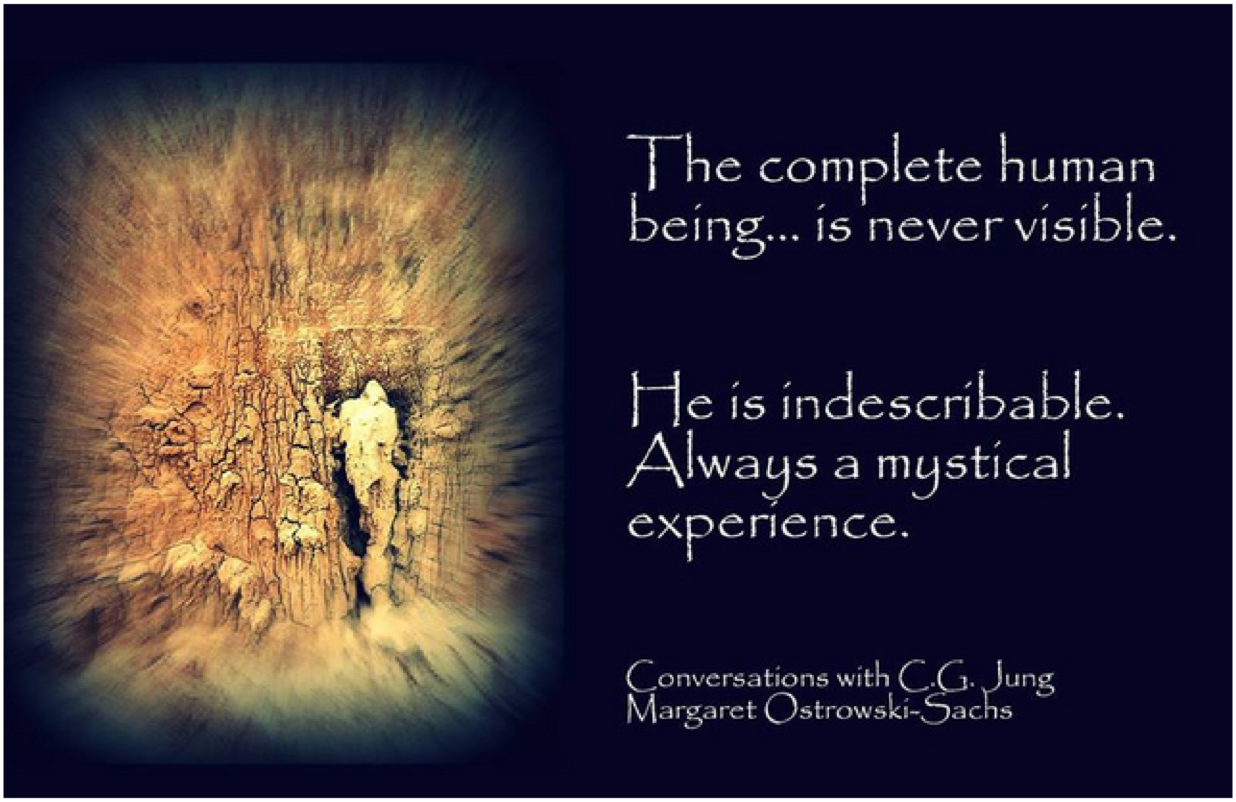
"You don't know who she is, she's not quite real, too good to be true; and there's something wrong somewhere."



“An Intuitive Moment of Extraordinary Effectiveness”

[There is a native American word that] designates an exceedingly typical situation: people sitting together & looking at one another, expecting that the others would dare to say or do one does not dare to say or do oneself. It is a very familiar experience to us all; go to any dinner & you will often find everybody looking at everybody else with such expectation. [All that is expressed in a] word of fourteen syllables. The primitives have a word for it because they catch such moments.

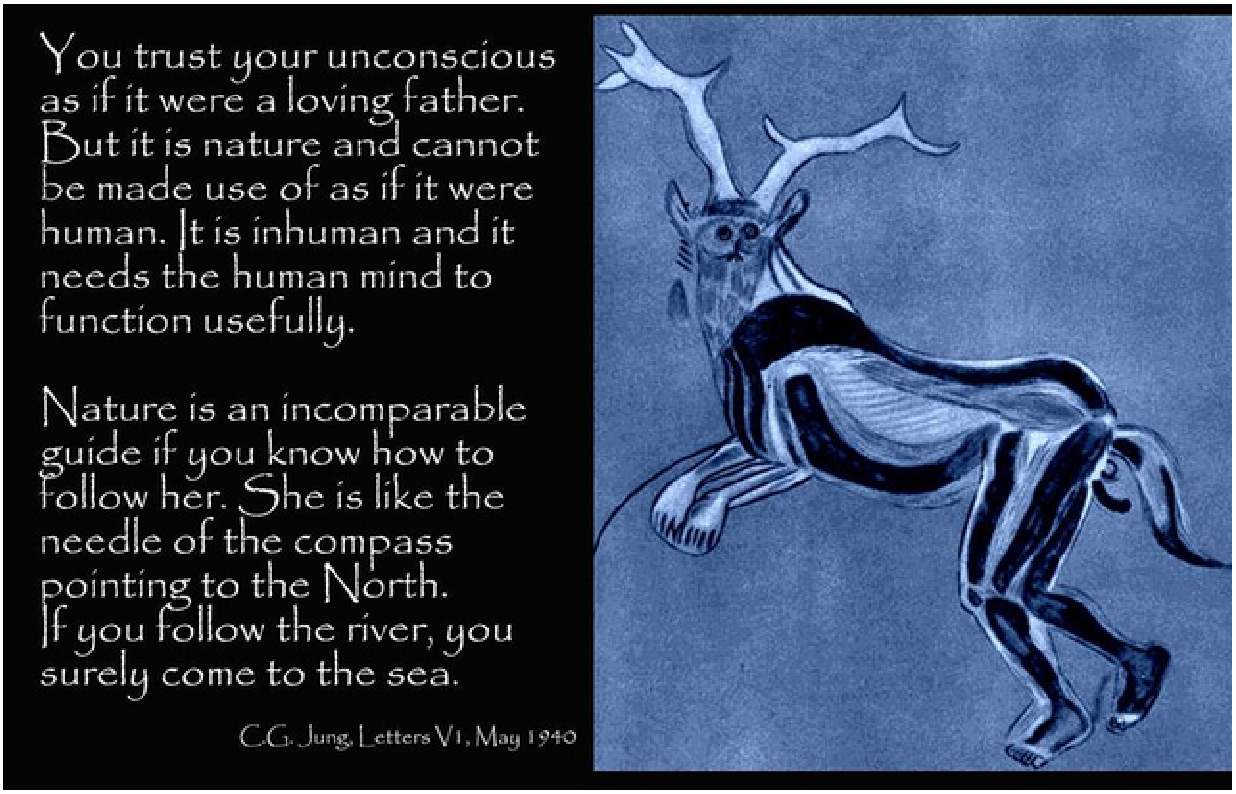
C.G. Jung, Visions, p.389



The complete human being… is never visible.

He is indescribable. Always a mystical experience.

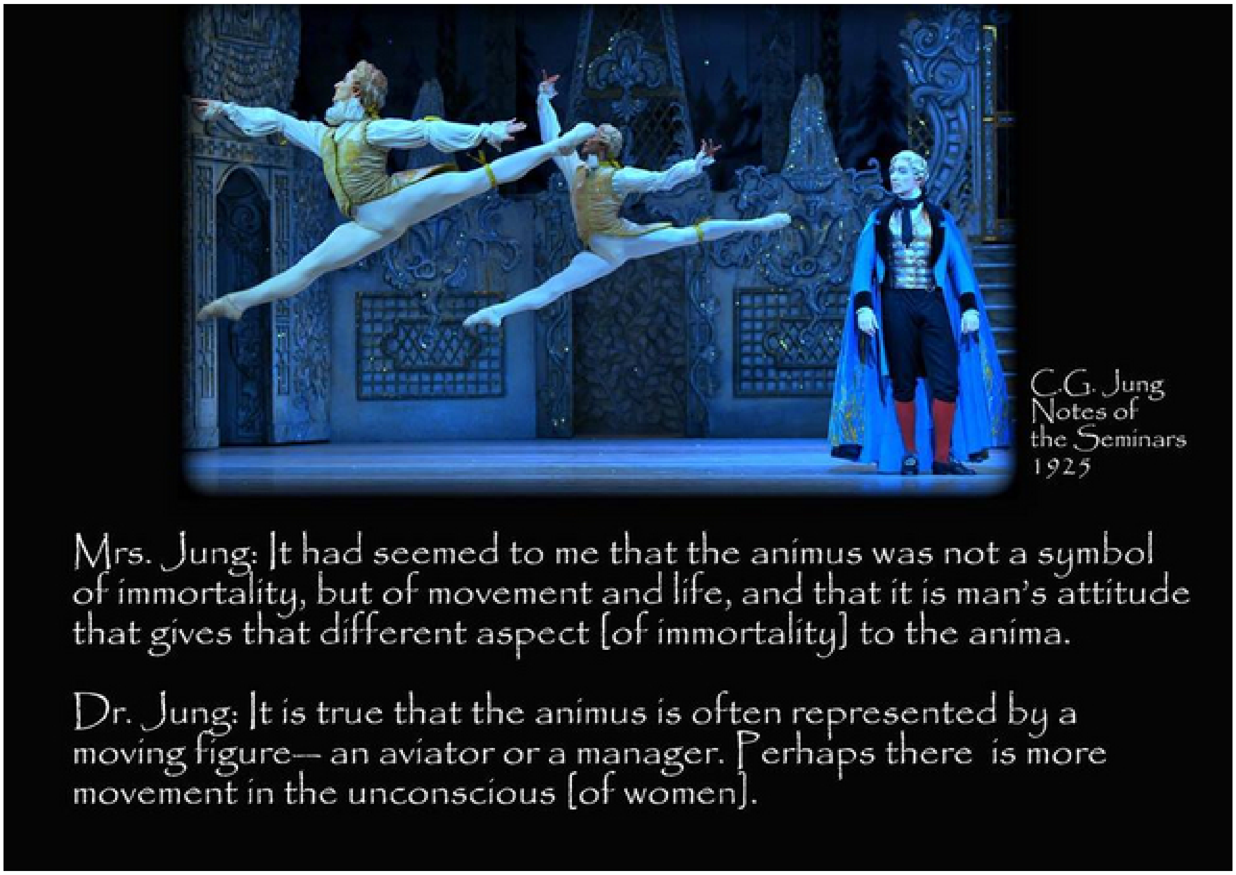
Conversations with C.G. Jung
Margaret Ostrowski-Sachs



You trust your unconscious as if it were a loving father. But it is nature and cannot be made use of as if it were human. It is inhuman and it needs the human mind to function usefully.

Nature is an incomparable guide if you know how to follow her. She is like the needle of the compass pointing to the North. If you follow the river, you surely come to the sea.

C.G. Jung, Letters V1, May 1940



C.G. Jung
Notes of the Seminars
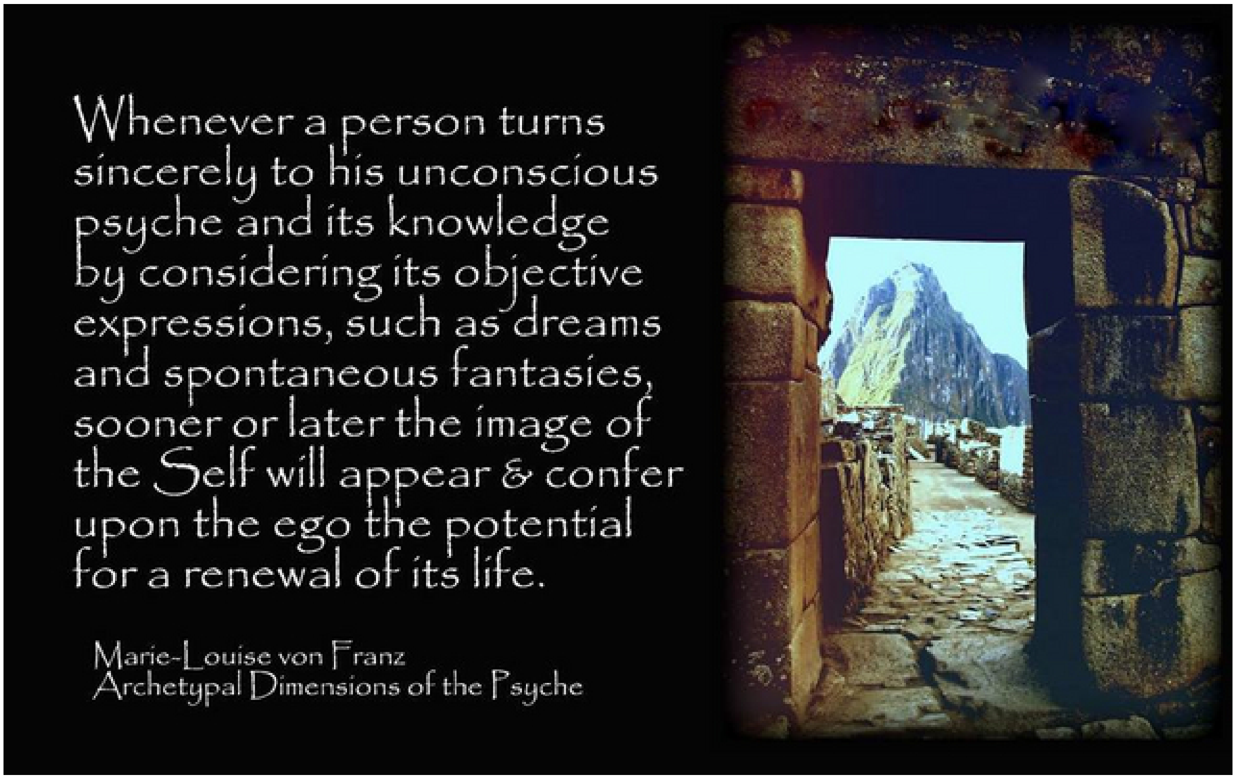
1925

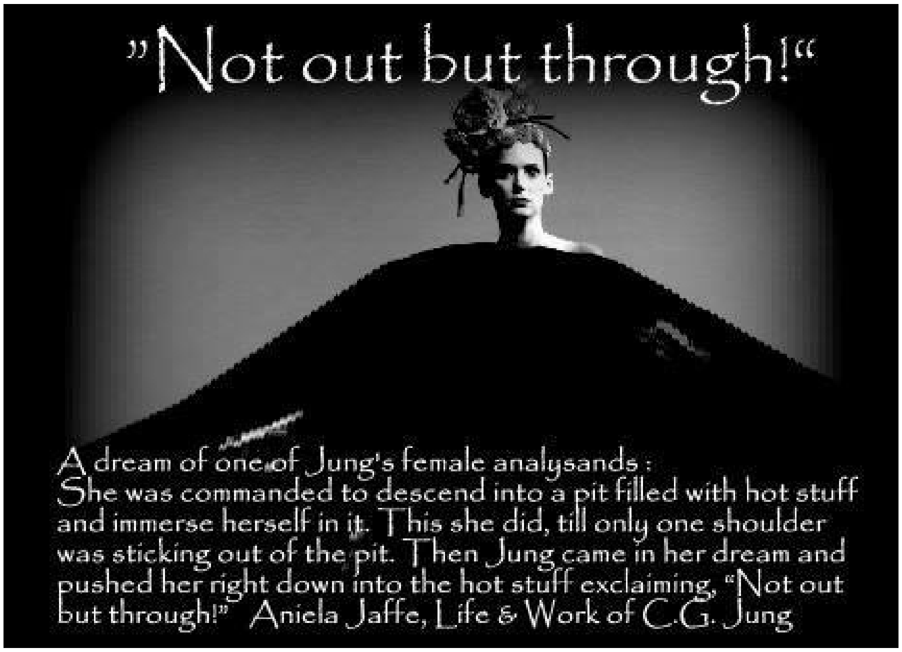
Mrs. Jung: It had seemed to me that the animus was not a symbol of immortality, but of movement and life, and that it is man's attitude that gives that different aspect [of immortality] to the anima.

Dr. Jung: It is true that the animus is often represented by a moving figure— an aviator or a manager. Perhaps there is more movement in the unconscious [of women].



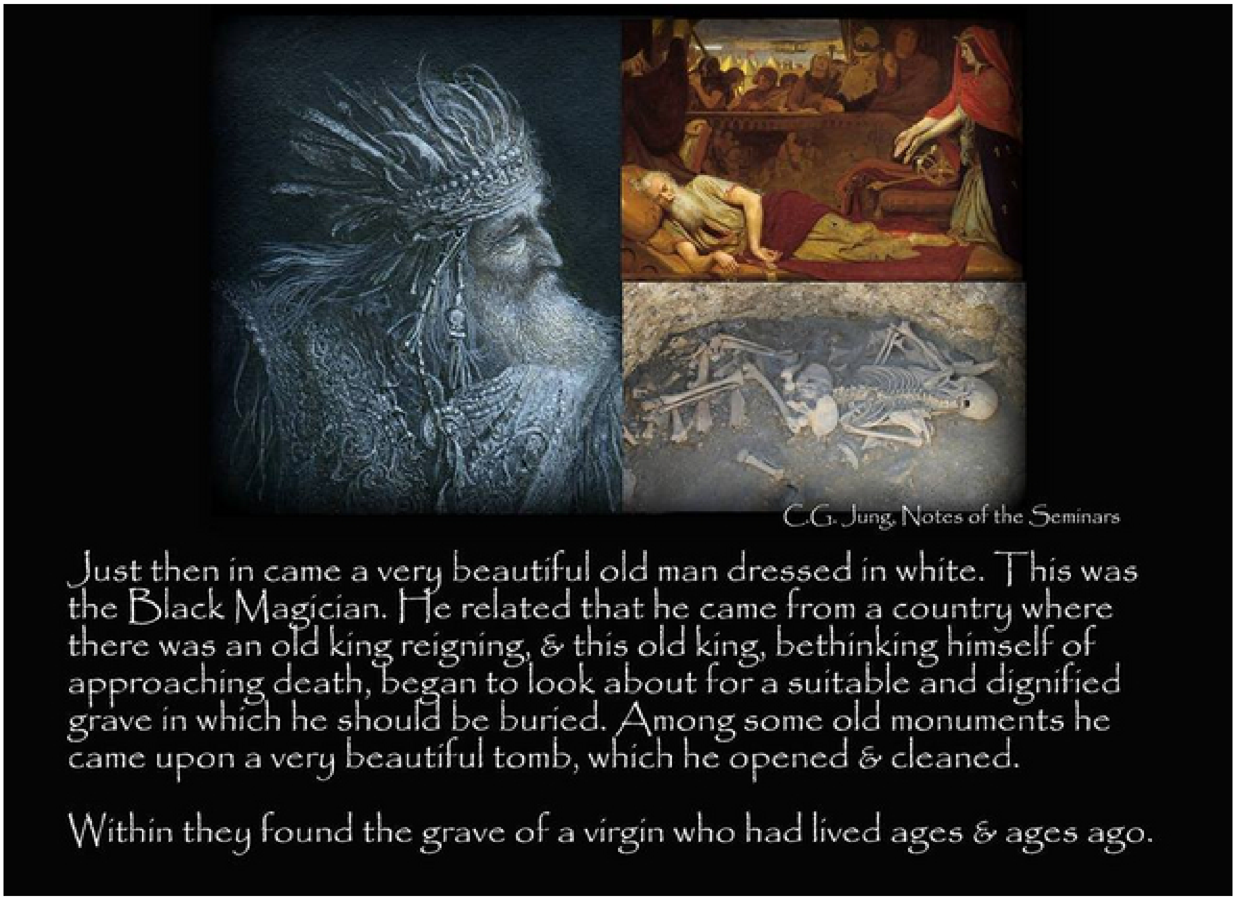
Whenever a person turns sincerely to his unconscious psyche and its knowledge by considering its objective expressions, such as dreams and spontaneous fantasies, sooner or later the image of the Self will appear & confer upon the ego the potential for a renewal of its life.

Marie-Louise von Franz
Archetypal Dimensions of the Psyche



"Not out but through!"

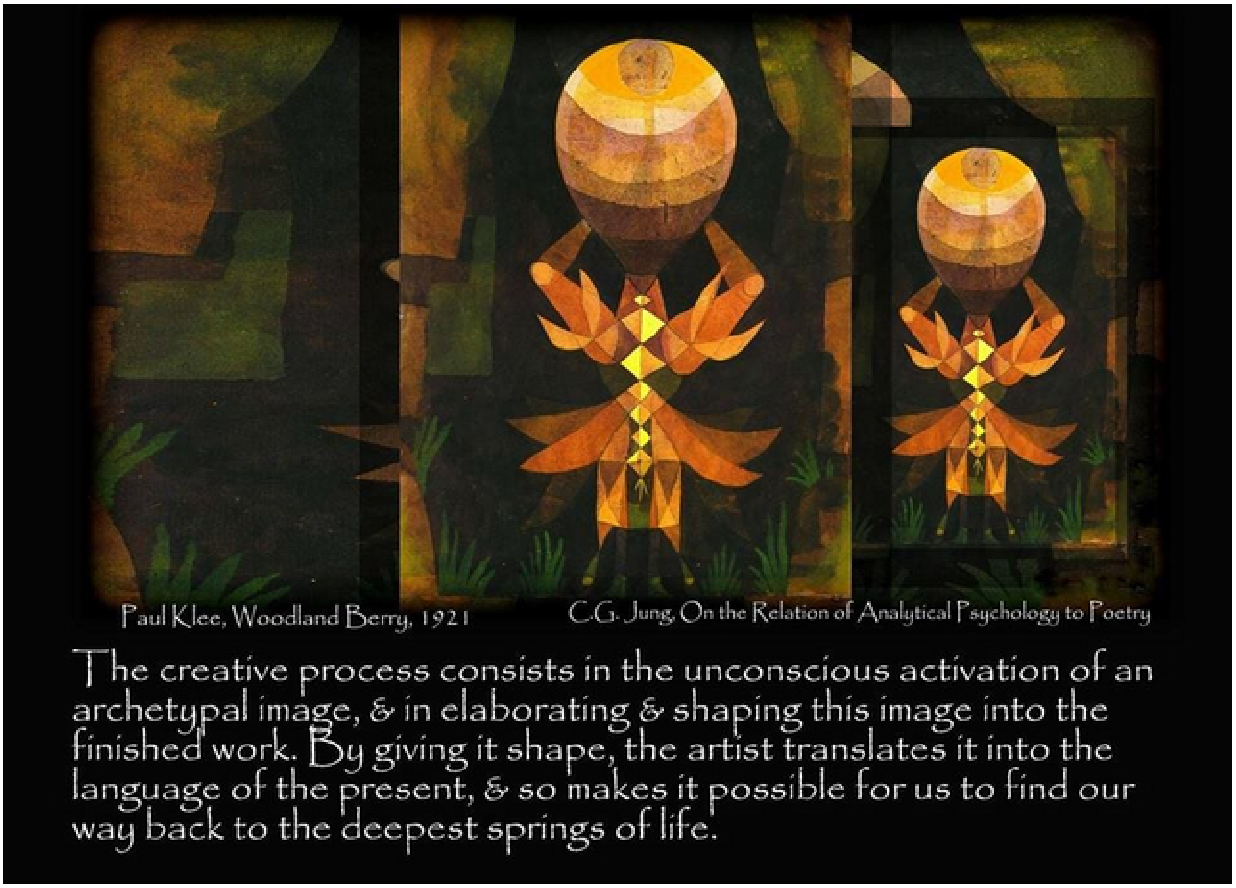
A dream of one of Jung's female analysands :
She was commanded to descend into a pit filled with hot stuff and immerse herself in it. This she did, till only one shoulder was sticking out of the pit. Then Jung came in her dream and pushed her right down into the hot stuff exclaiming, "Not out but through!" Aniela Jaffe, Life & Work of C.G. Jung



C.G. Jung, Notes of the Seminars

Just then in came a very beautiful old man dressed in white. This was the Black Magician. He related that he came from a country where there was an old king reigning, & this old king, bethinking himself of approaching death, began to look about for a suitable and dignified grave in which he should be buried. Among some old monuments he came upon a very beautiful tomb, which he opened & cleaned.

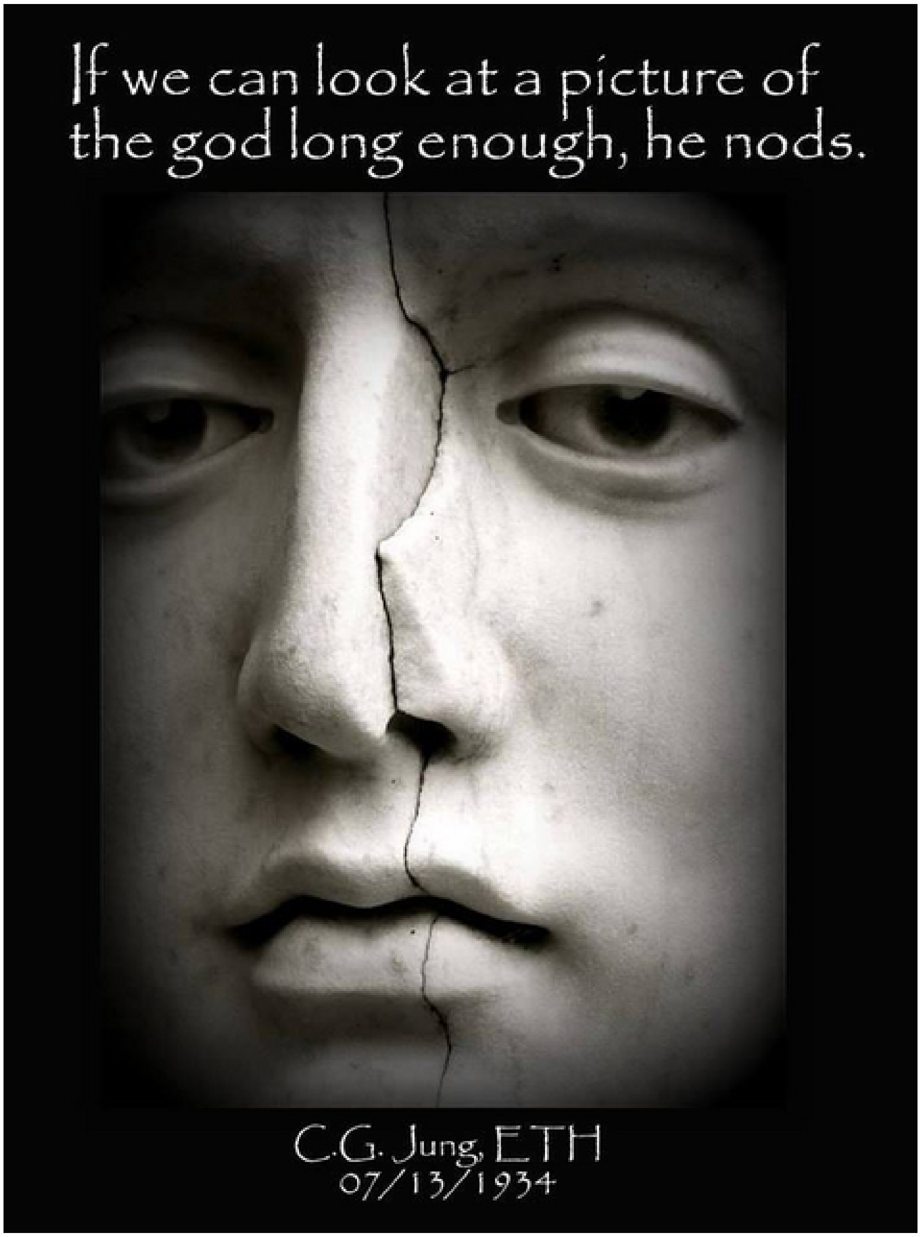
Within they found the grave of a virgin who had lived ages & ages ago.



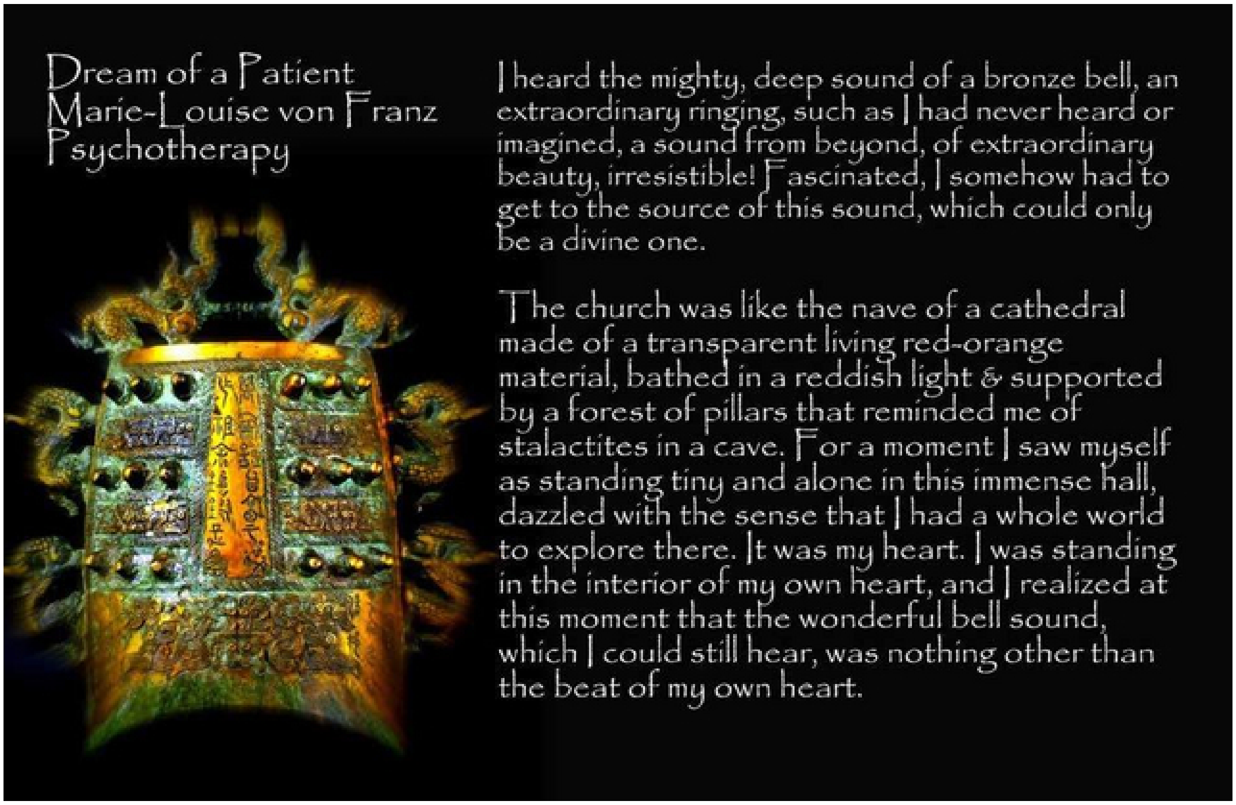
Paul Klee, Woodland Berry, 1921

C.G. Jung, On the Relation of Analytical Psychology to Poetry

The creative process consists in the unconscious activation of an archetypal image, & in elaborating & shaping this image into the finished work. By giving it shape, the artist translates it into the language of the present, & so makes it possible for us to find our way back to the deepest springs of life.



If we can look at a picture of the god long enough, he nods.
C.G. Jung, ETH
07/13/1934

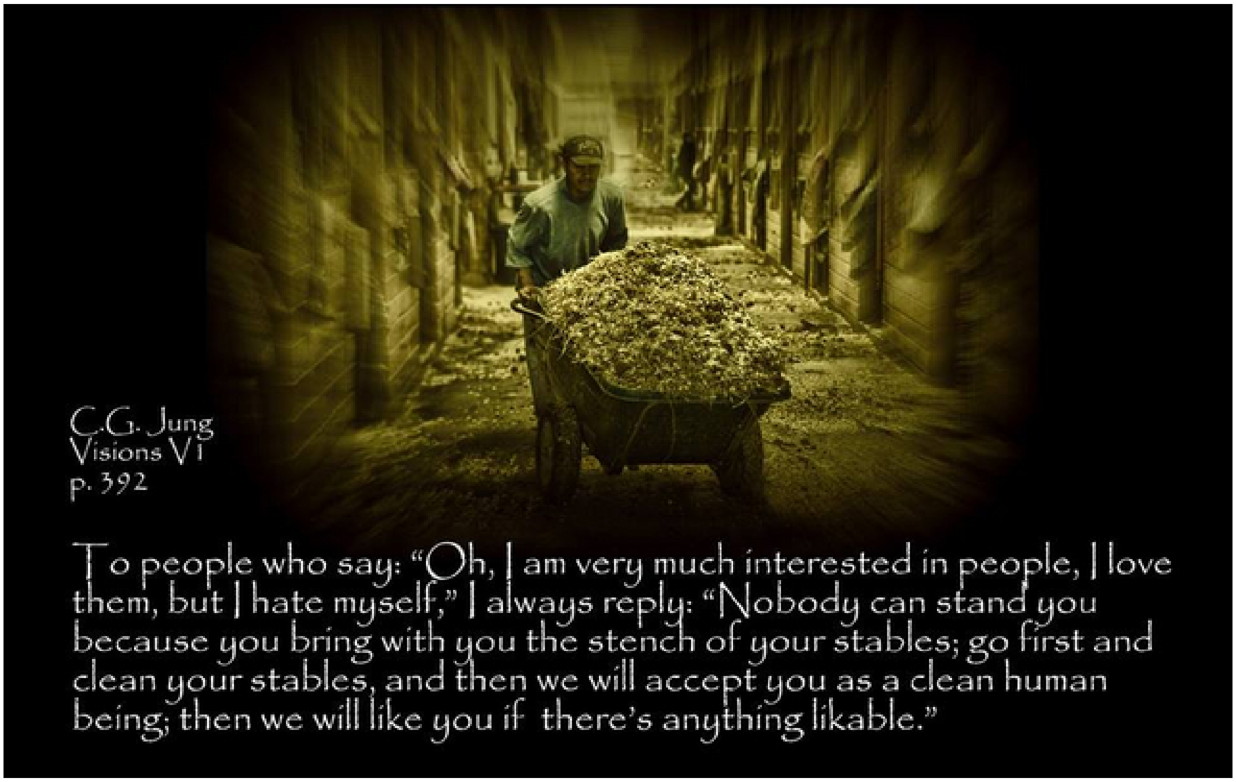


Dream of a Patient
Marie-Louise von Franz
Psychotherapy

I heard the mighty, deep sound of a bronze bell, an extraordinary ringing, such as I had never heard or imagined, a sound from beyond, of extraordinary beauty, irresistible! Fascinated, I somehow had to get to the source of this sound, which could only be a divine one.

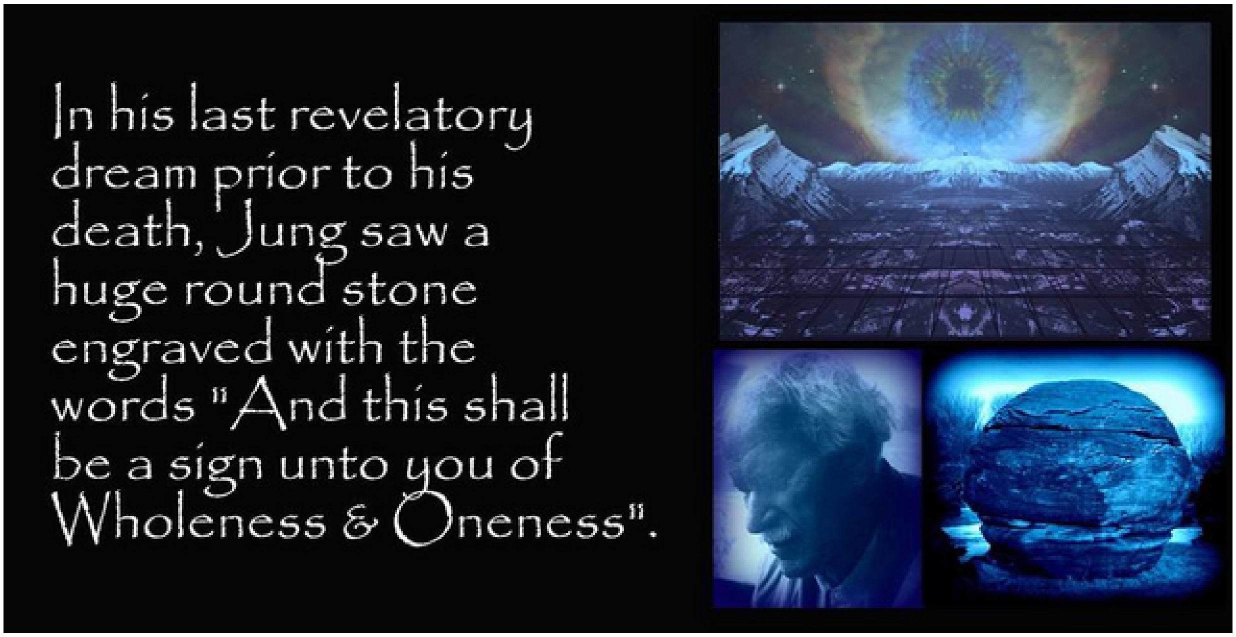
The church was like the nave of a cathedral made of a transparent living red-orange material, bathed in a reddish light & supported by a forest of pillars that reminded me of stalactites in a cave. For a moment I saw myself as standing tiny and alone in this immense hall, dazzled with the sense that I had a whole world to explore there. It was my heart. I was standing in the interior of my own heart, and I realized at this moment that the wonderful bell sound, which I could still hear, was nothing other than the beat of my own heart.

C.G. Jung
Visions, p.394
Only those people who can really touch bottom can be human.

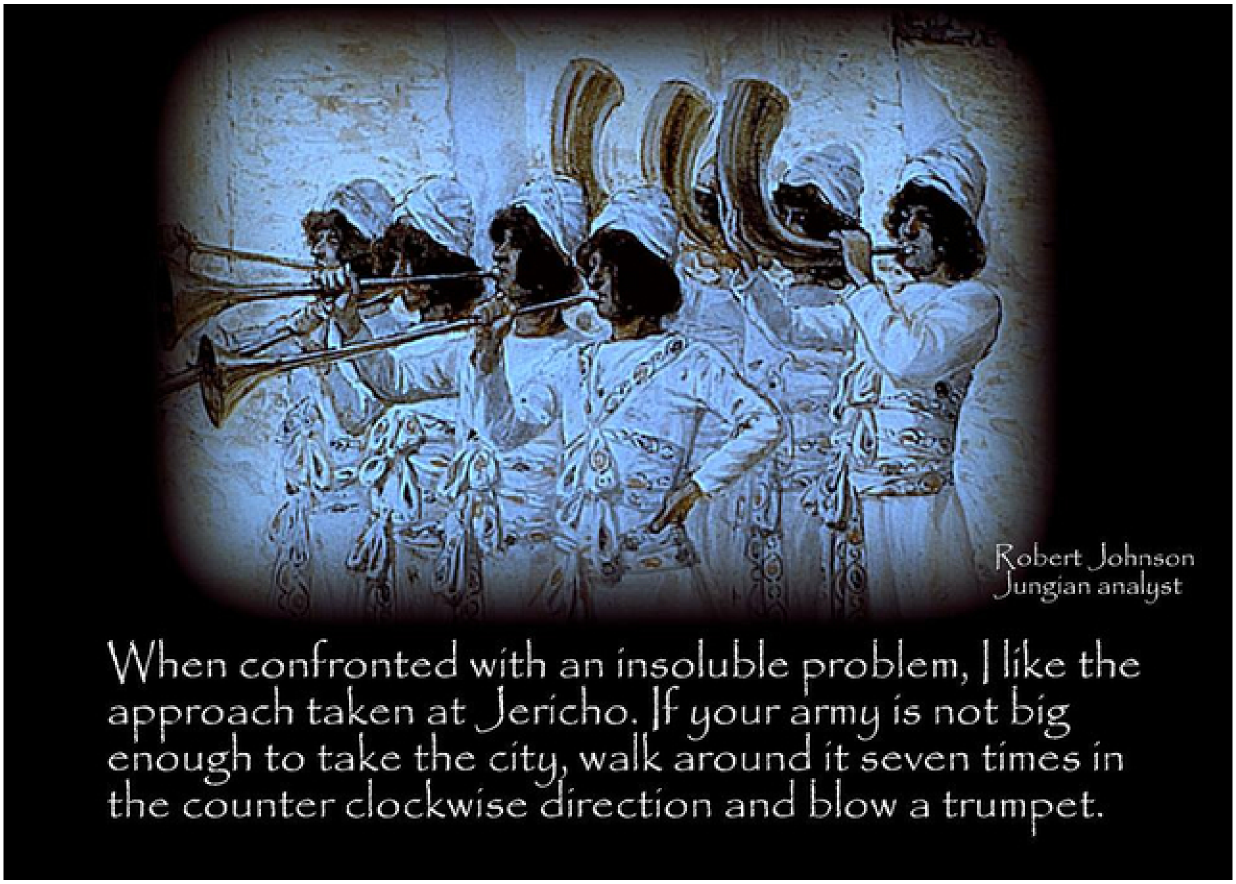


C.G. Jung
Visions V I
p. 392

To people who say: “Oh, I am very much interested in people, I love them, but I hate myself,” I always reply: “Nobody can stand you because you bring with you the stench of your stables; go first and clean your stables, and then we will accept you as a clean human being; then we will like you if there’s anything likable.”



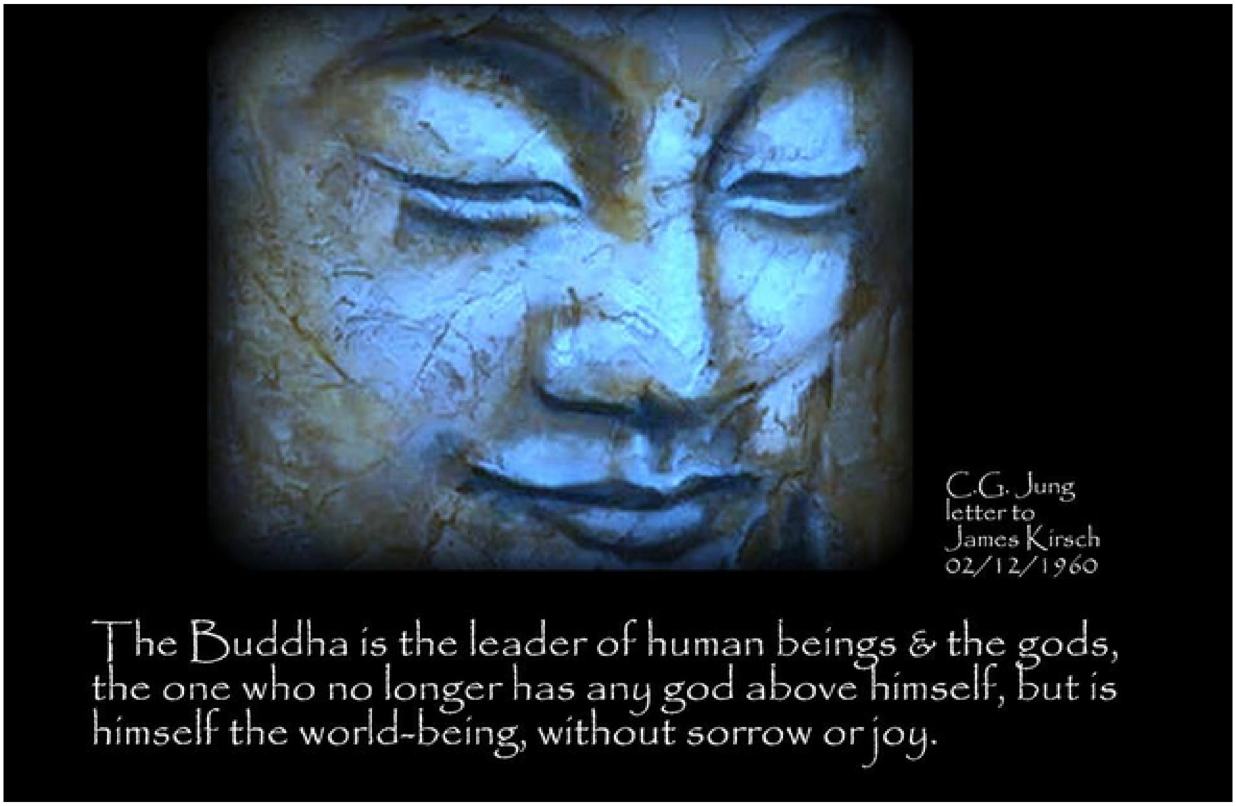
In his last revelatory dream prior to his death, Jung saw a huge round stone engraved with the words "And this shall be a sign unto you of Wholeness & Oneness".



Robert Johnson
Jungian analyst

When confronted with an insoluble problem, I like the approach taken at Jericho. If your army is not big enough to take the city, walk around it seven times in the counter clockwise direction and blow a trumpet.

[15]



C.G. Jung
letter to James Kirsch
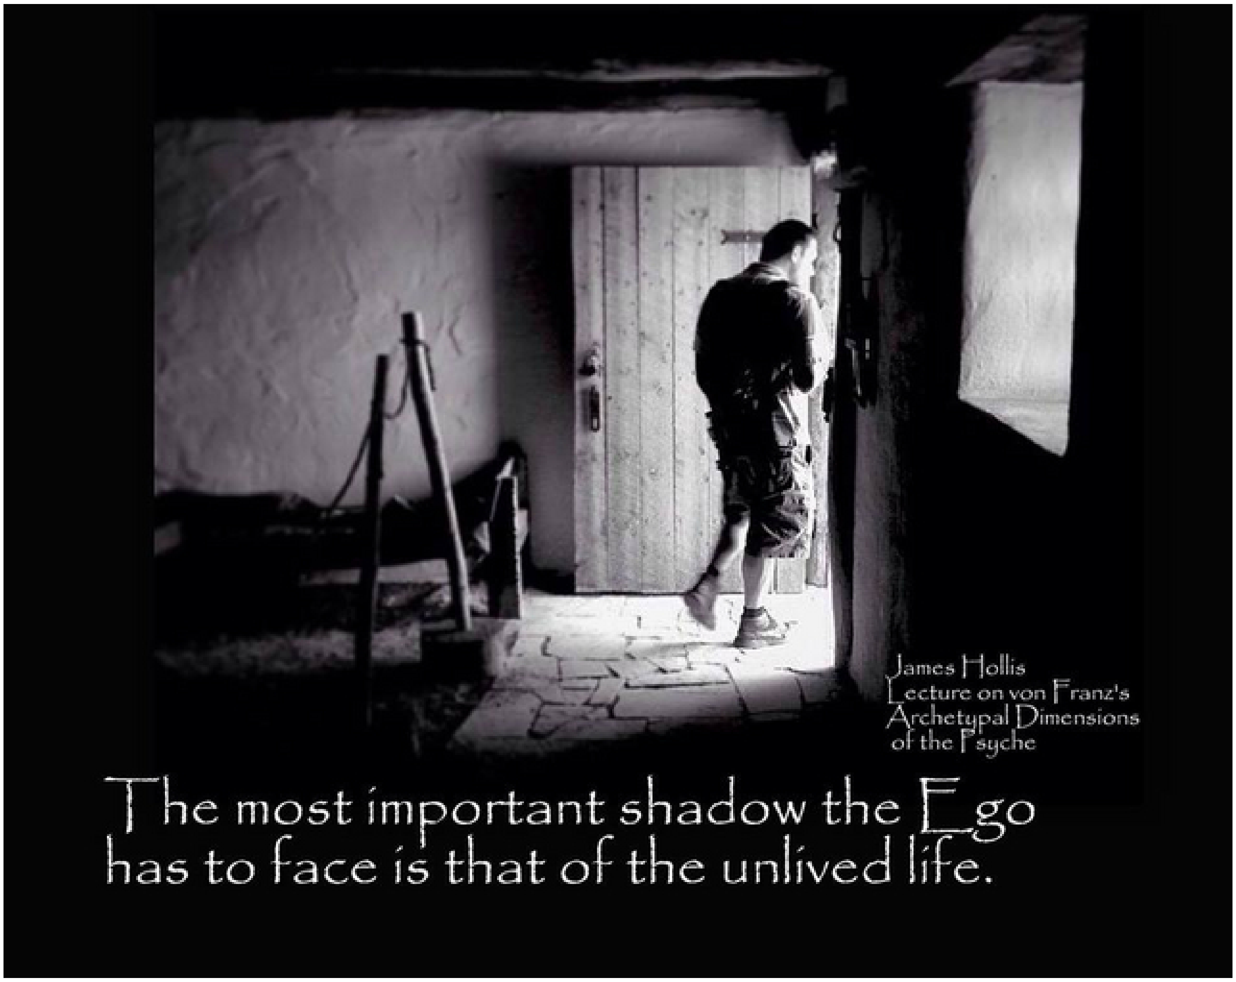
02/12/1960

The Buddha is the leader of human beings & the gods, the one who no longer has any god above himself, but is himself the world-being, without sorrow or joy.

[16]



James Hollis
Lecture on von Franz's
Archetypal Dimensions
of the Psyche
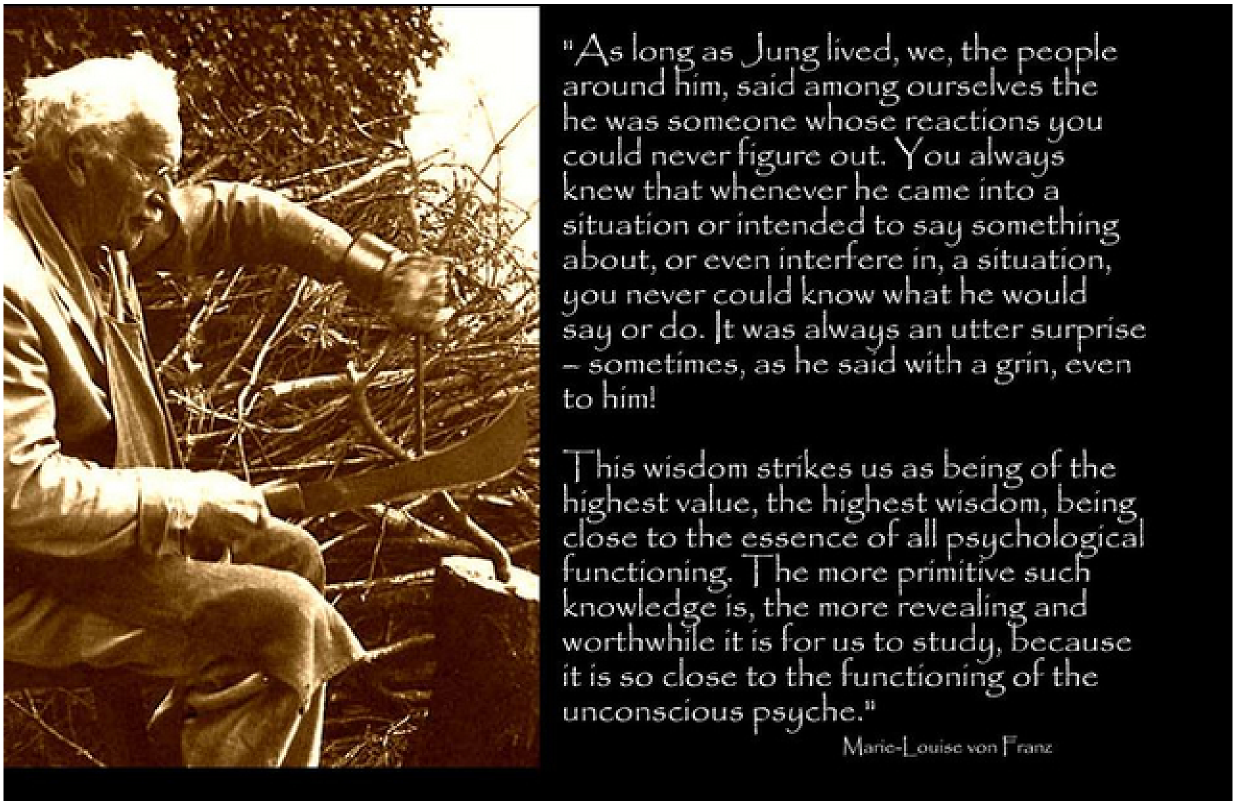
The most important shadow the Ego has to face is that of the unlived life.

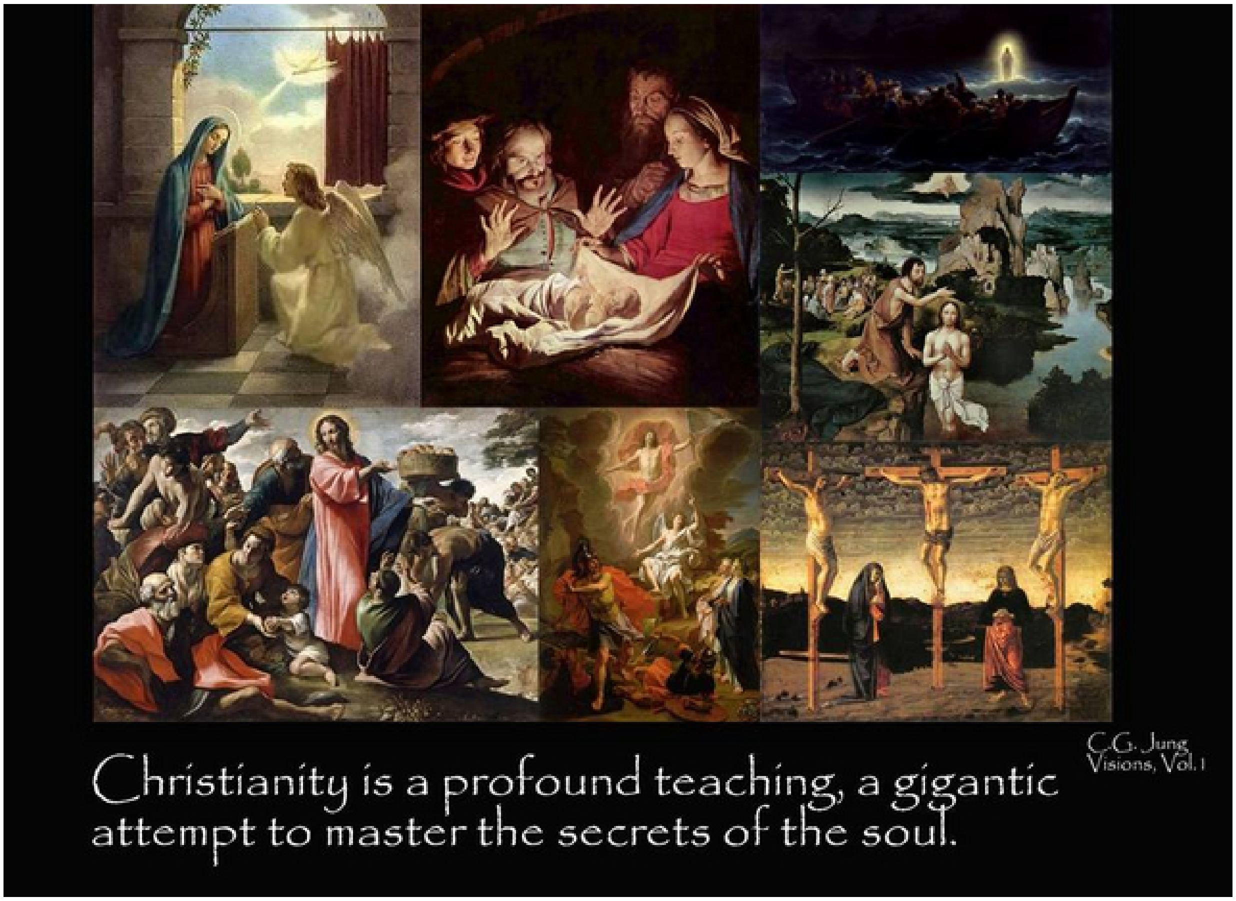


"As long as Jung lived, we, the people around him, said among ourselves the he was someone whose reactions you could never figure out. You always knew that whenever he came into a situation or intended to say something about, or even interfere in, a situation, you never could know what he would say or do. It was always an utter surprise – sometimes, as he said with a grin, even to him!

This wisdom strikes us as being of the highest value, the highest wisdom, being close to the essence of all psychological functioning. The more primitive such knowledge is, the more revealing and worthwhile it is for us to study, because it is so close to the functioning of the unconscious psyche."

Marie-Louise von Franz

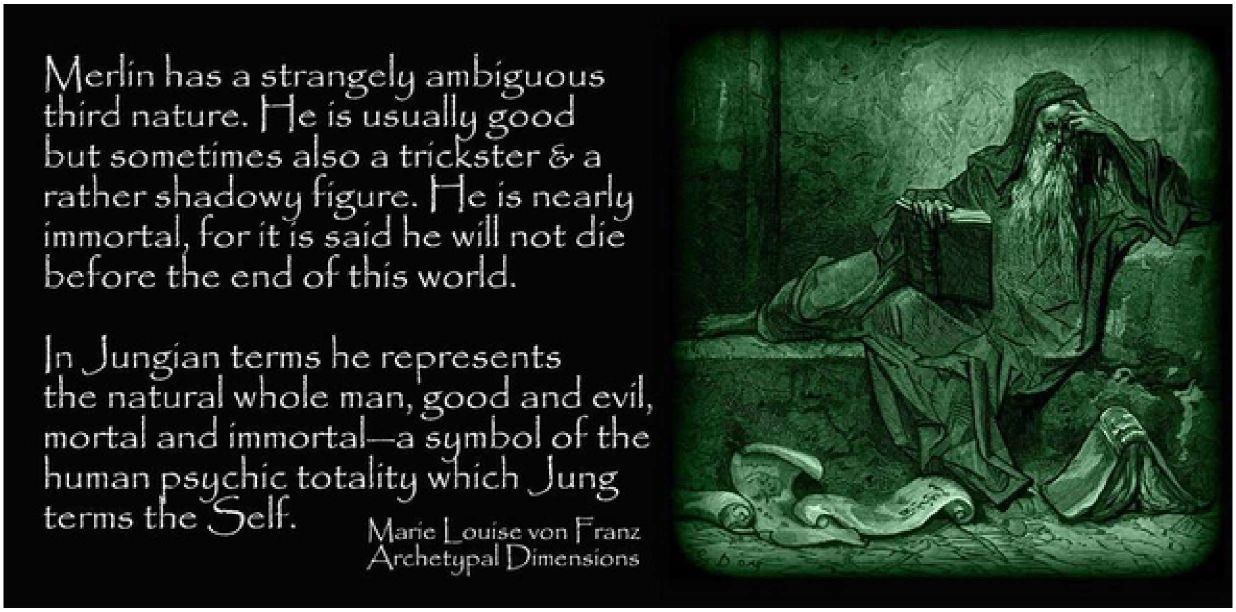
[18]



Christianity is a profound teaching, a gigantic attempt to master the secrets of the soul.

C.G. Jung
Visions, Vol. I

[19]

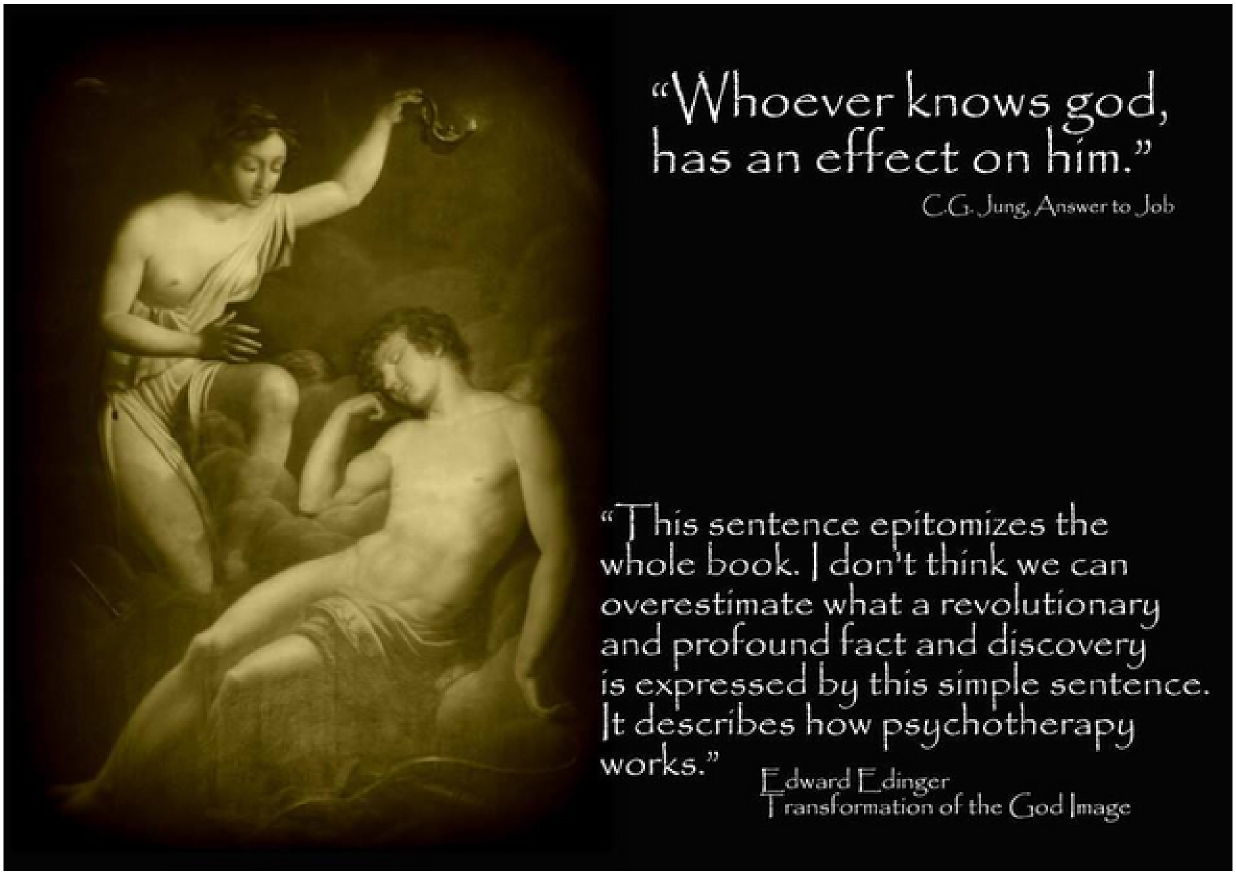


Merlin has a strangely ambiguous third nature. He is usually good but sometimes also a trickster & a rather shadowy figure. He is nearly immortal, for it is said he will not die before the end of this world.

In Jungian terms he represents the natural whole man, good and evil, mortal and immortal—a symbol of the human psychic totality which Jung terms the Self.

Marie Louise von Franz
Archetypal Dimensions

[20]



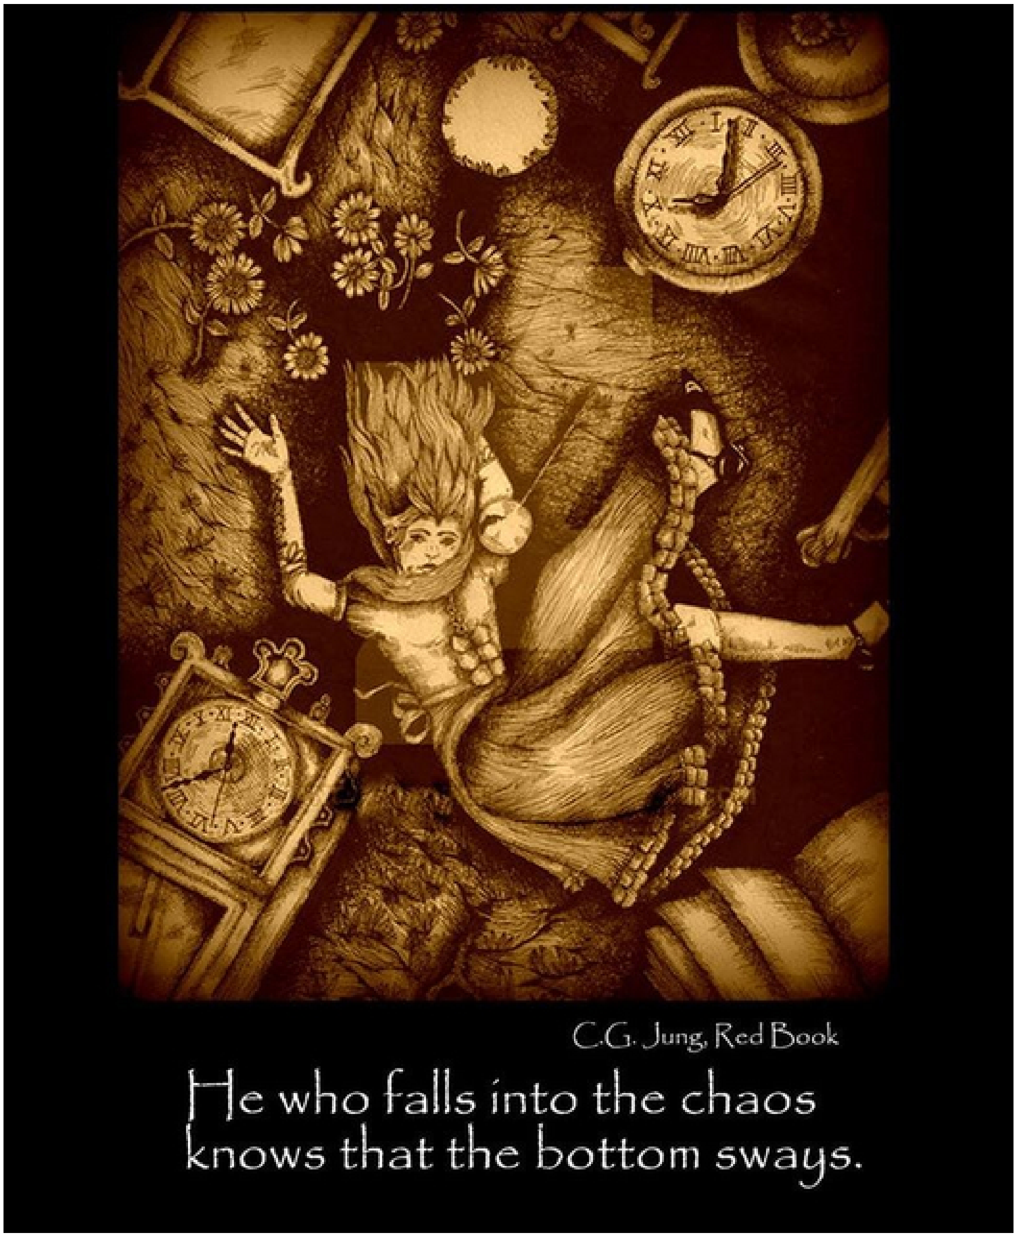
“Whoever knows god, has an effect on him.”

C.G. Jung, Answer to Job

“This sentence epitomizes the whole book. I don't think we can overestimate what a revolutionary and profound fact and discovery is expressed by this simple sentence. It describes how psychotherapy works.”

Edward Edinger
Transformation of the God Image

[21]



C.G. Jung, Red Book
He who falls into the chaos knows that the bottom sways.

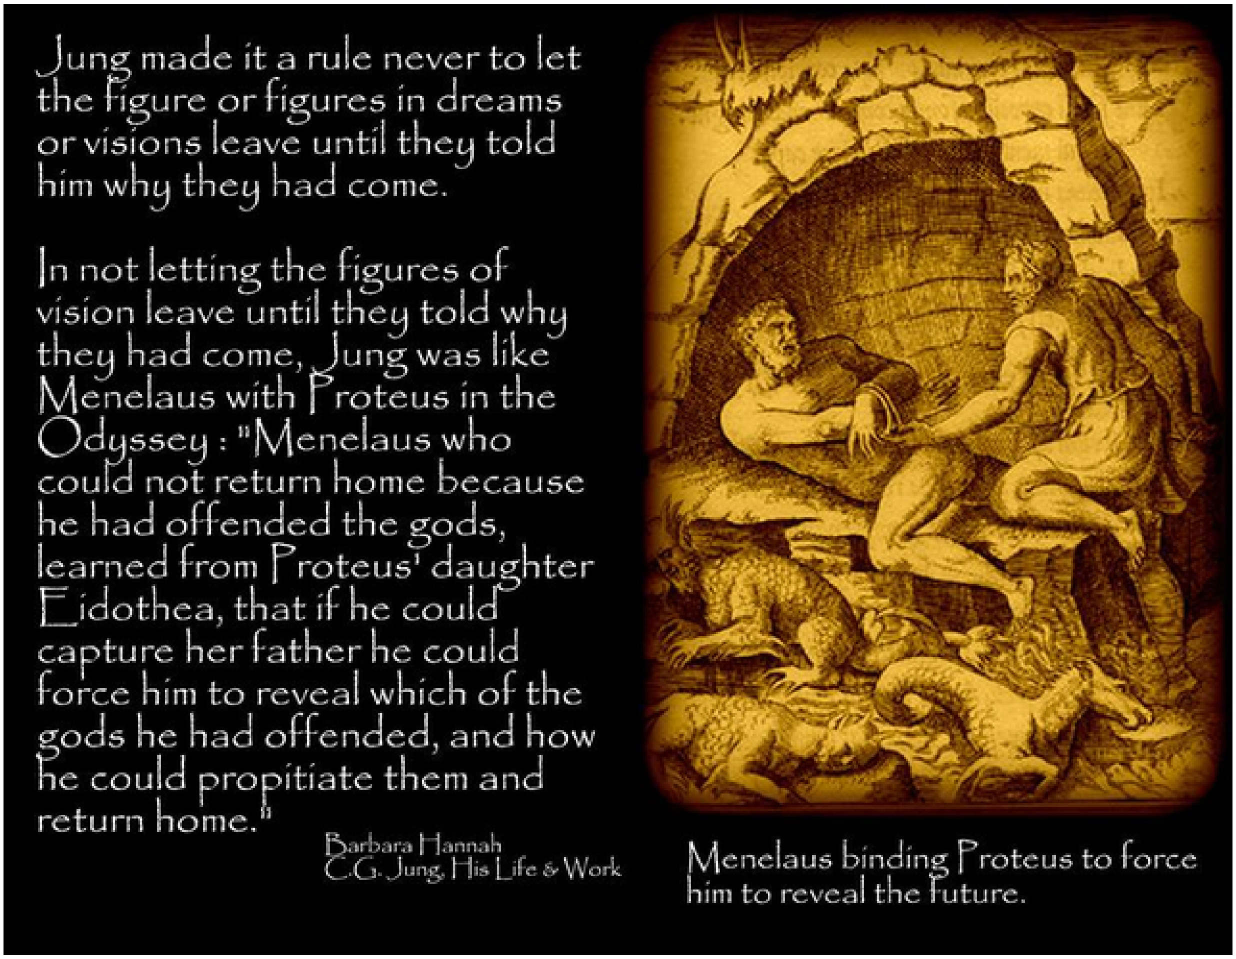
Jung is numinous, because he carries the opposites..

(He carries with him the inner and the outer worlds, combined with an awareness of a deeper reality that underlie both.) Edward Edinger

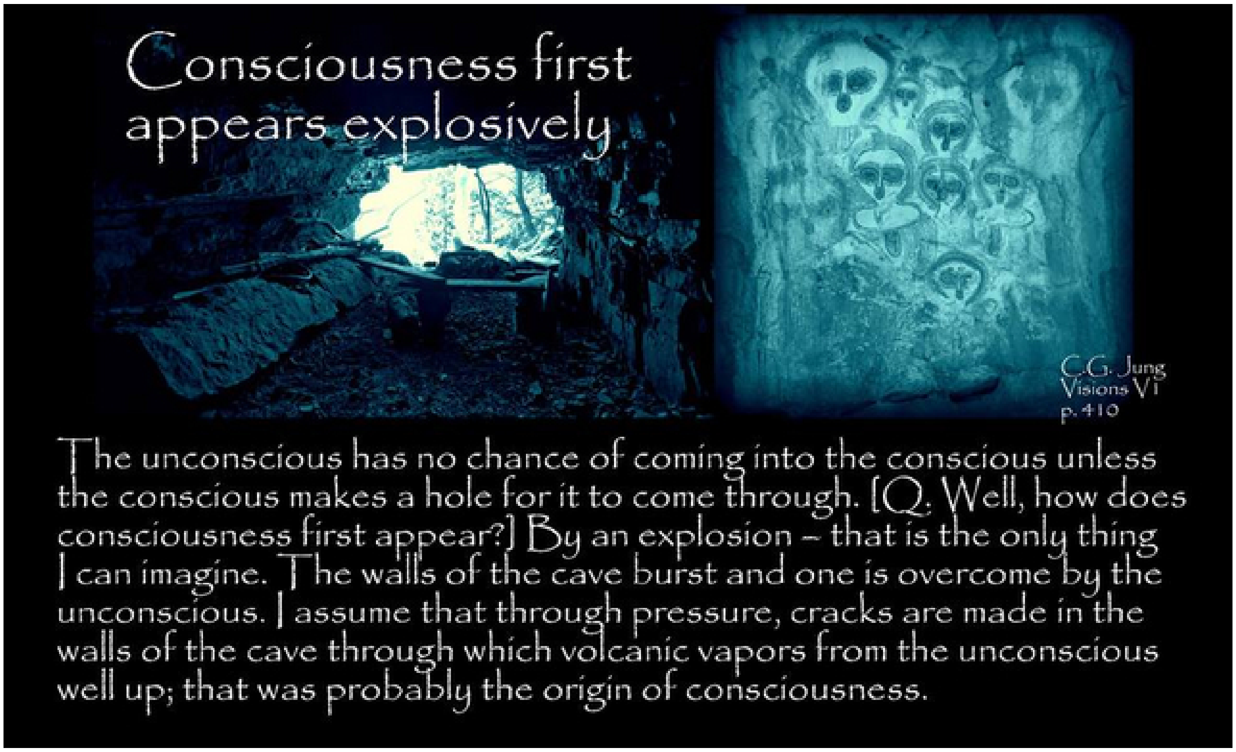


Jung made it a rule never to let the figure or figures in dreams or visions leave until they told him why they had come.

In not letting the figures of vision leave until they told why they had come, Jung was like Menelaus with Proteus in the Odyssey : "Menelaus who could not return home because he had offended the gods, learned from Proteus' daughter Eidothea, that if he could capture her father he could force him to reveal which of the gods he had offended, and how he could propitiate them and return home."

Barbara Hannah
C.G. Jung, His Life & Work

Menelaus binding Proteus to force him to reveal the future.

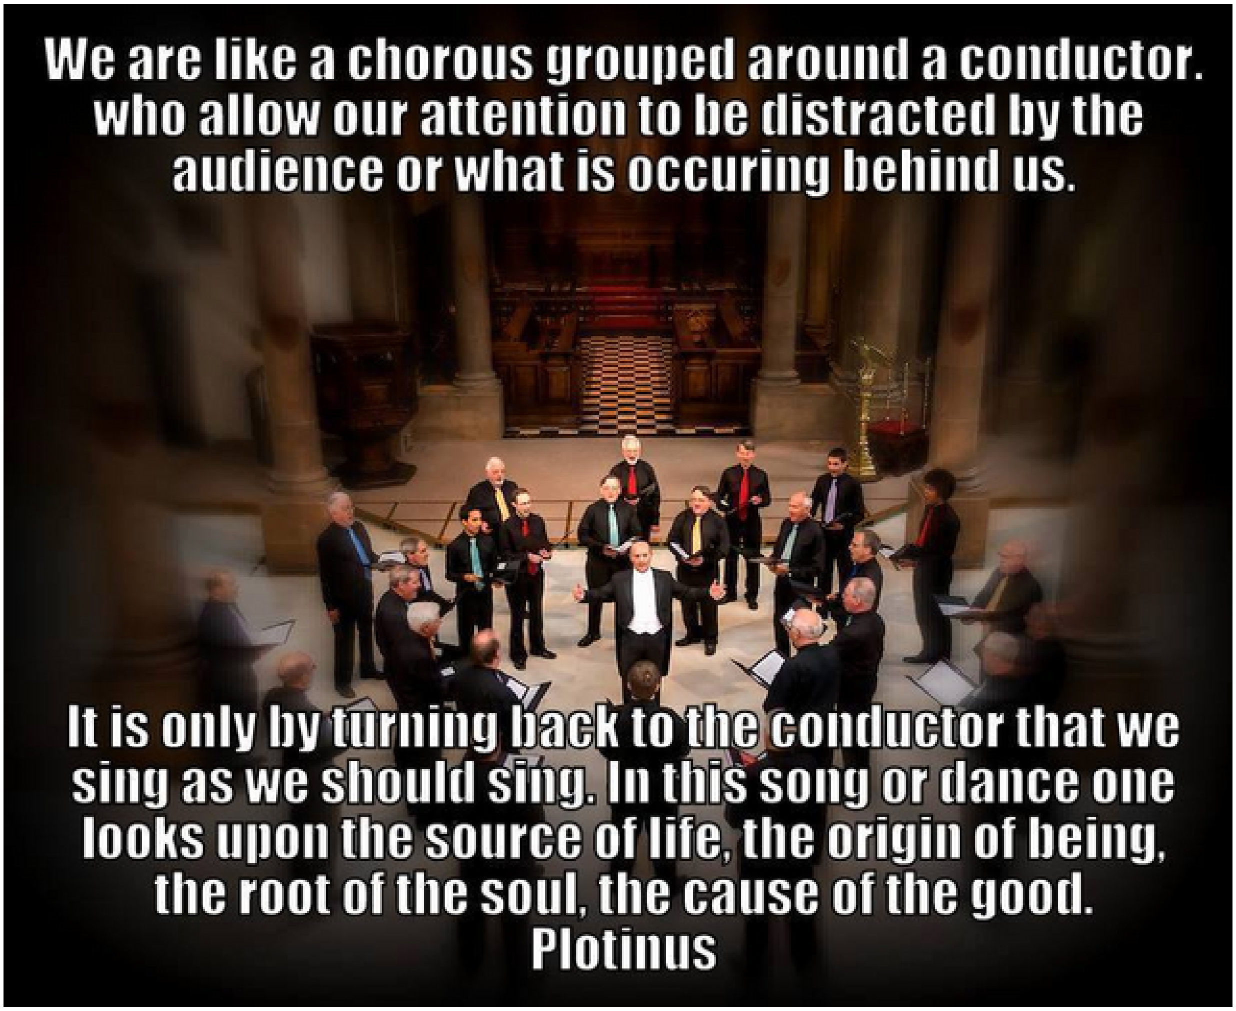


Consciousness first appears explosively

C.G. Jung
Visions VI
p. 410

The unconscious has no chance of coming into the conscious unless the conscious makes a hole for it to come through. [Q. Well, how does consciousness first appear?] By an explosion – that is the only thing I can imagine. The walls of the cave burst and one is overcome by the unconscious. I assume that through pressure, cracks are made in the walls of the cave through which volcanic vapors from the unconscious well up; that was probably the origin of consciousness.

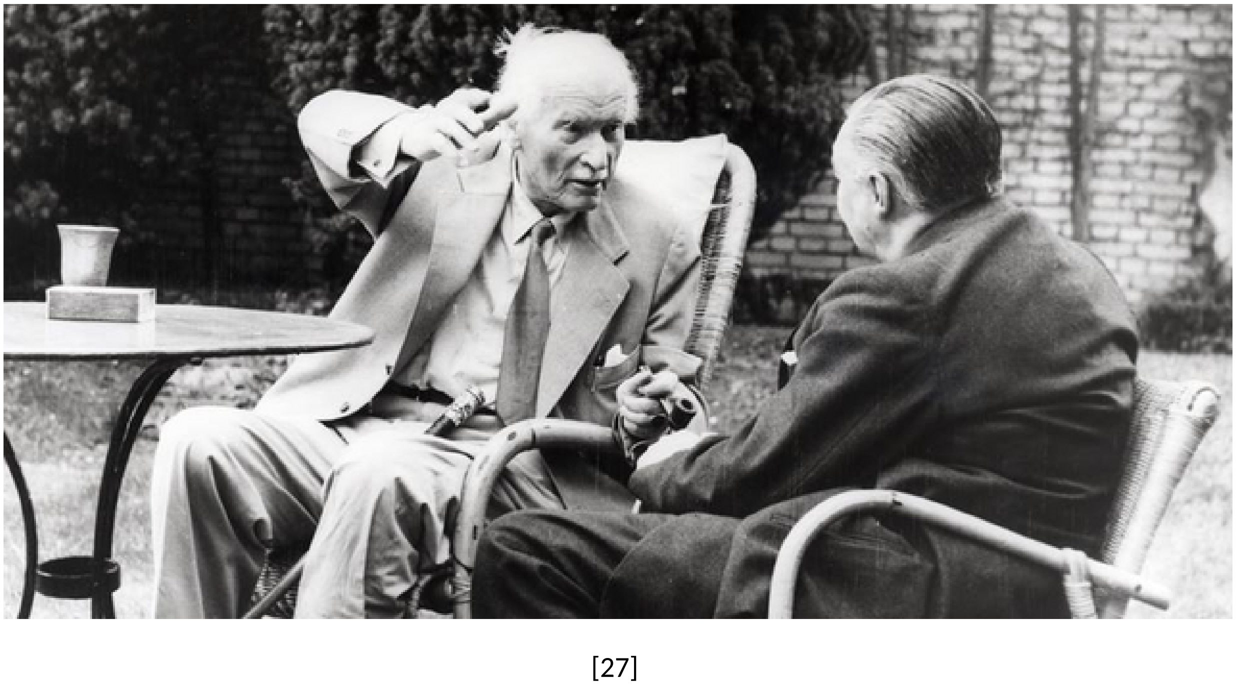
[25]



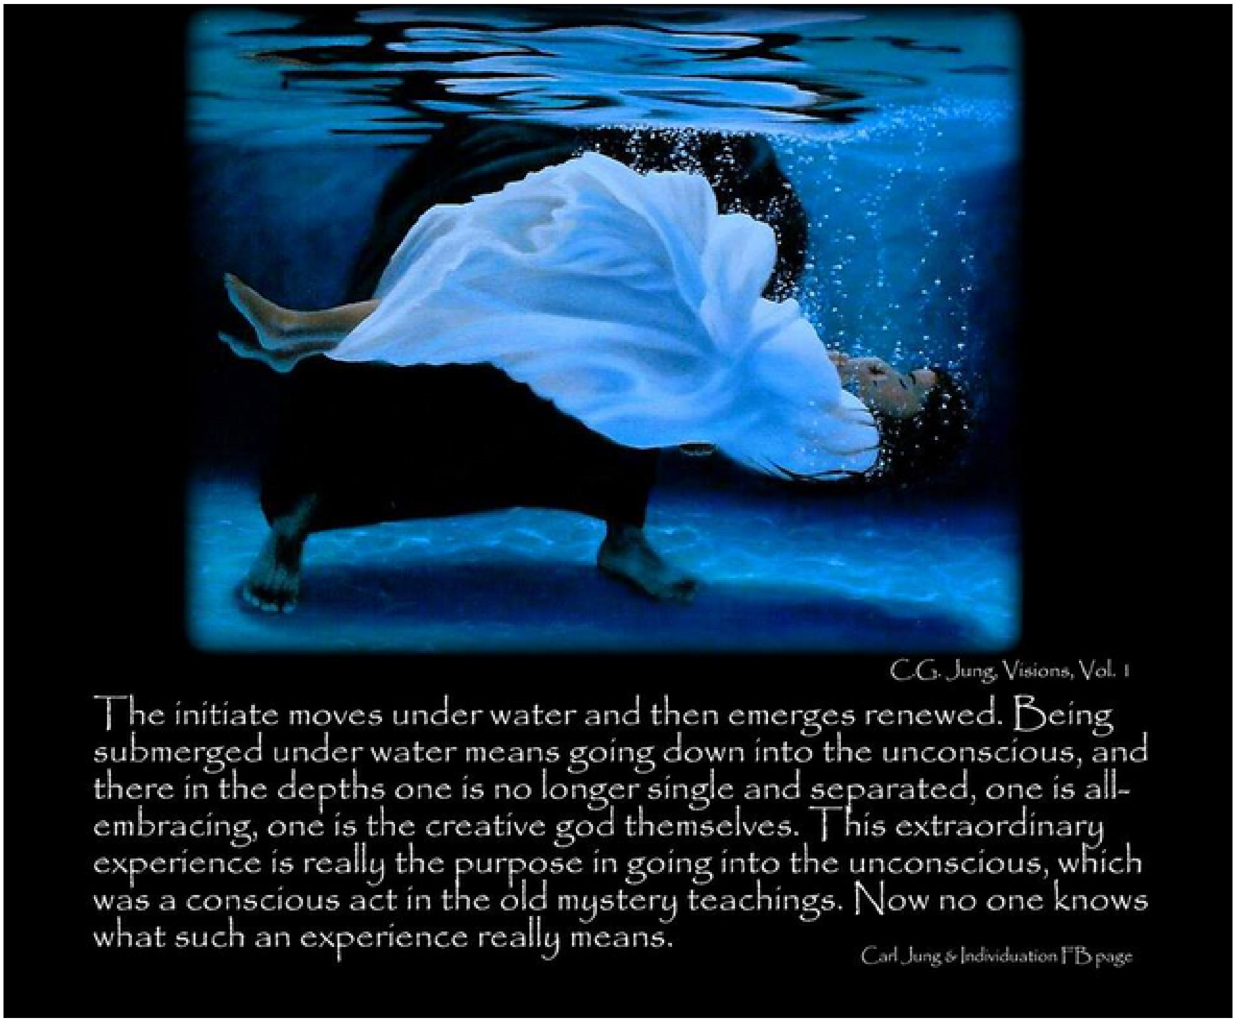
We are like a chorous grouped around a conductor. who allow our attention to be distracted by the audience or what is occuring behind us.

It is only by turning back to the conductor that we sing as we should sing. In this song or dance one looks upon the source of life, the origin of being, the root of the soul, the cause of the good.
Plotinus

[26]



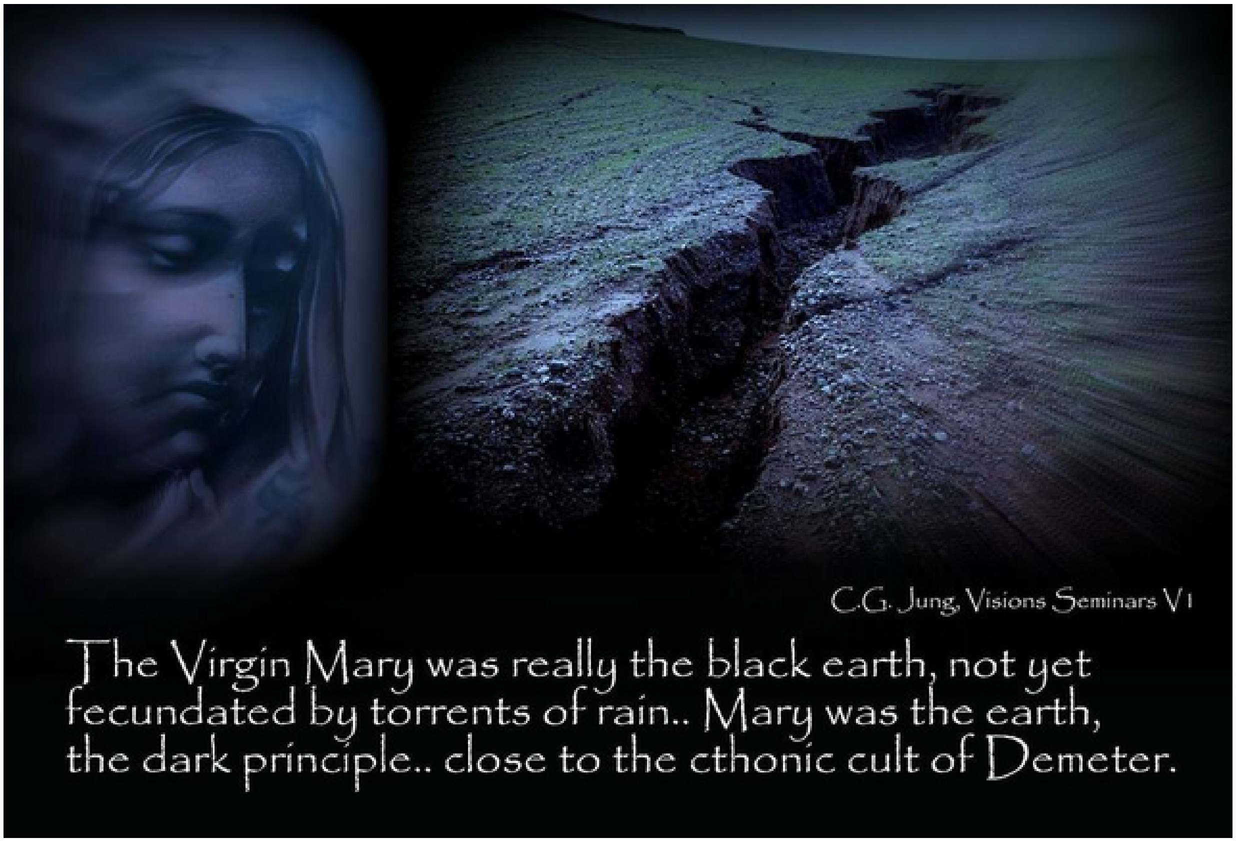
[27]



C.G. Jung, Visions, Vol. 1

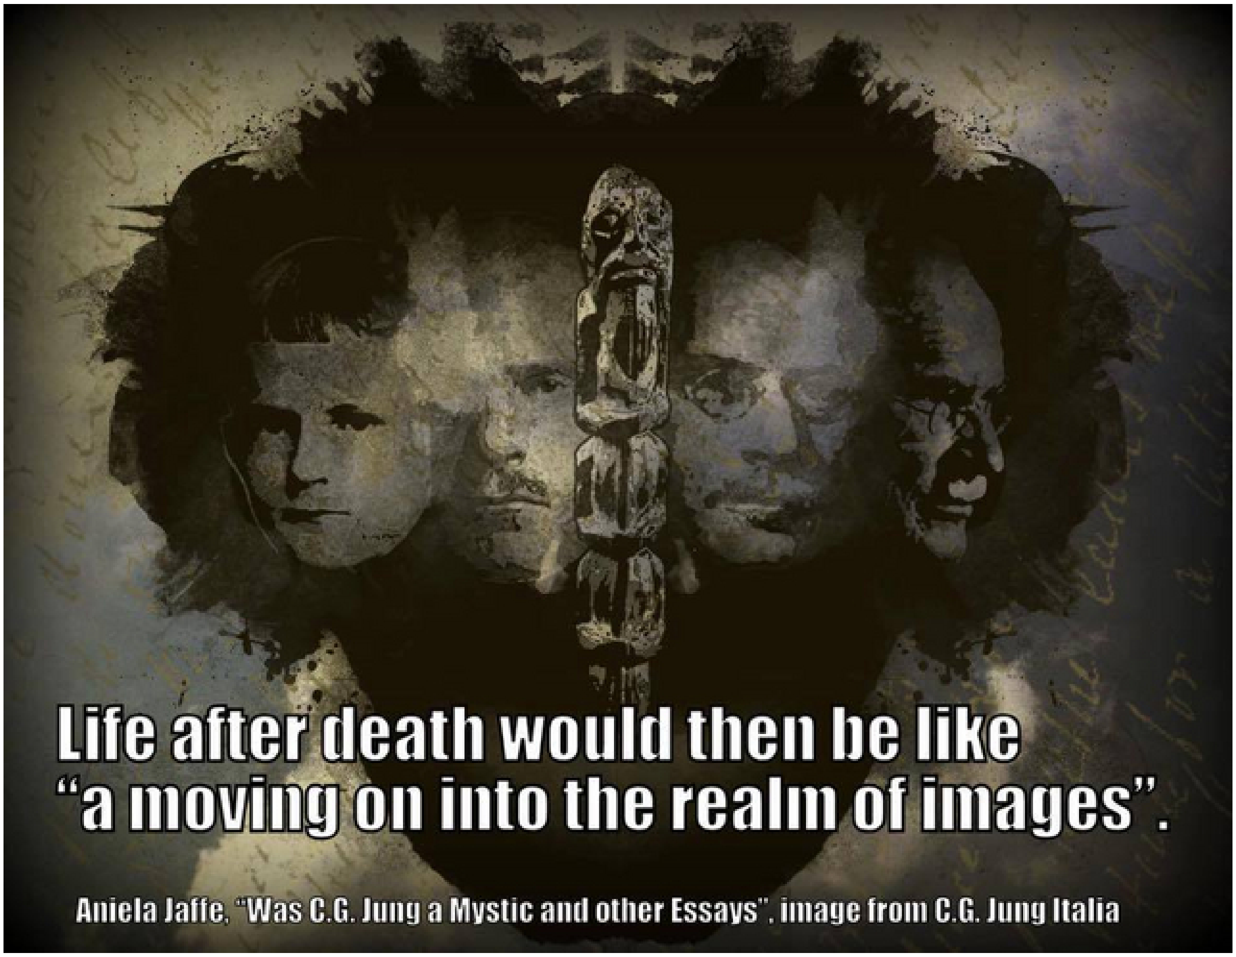
The initiate moves under water and then emerges renewed. Being submerged under water means going down into the unconscious, and there in the depths one is no longer single and separated, one is all-embracing, one is the creative god themselves. This extraordinary experience is really the purpose in going into the unconscious, which was a conscious act in the old mystery teachings. Now no one knows what such an experience really means.

Carl Jung & Individuation FB page

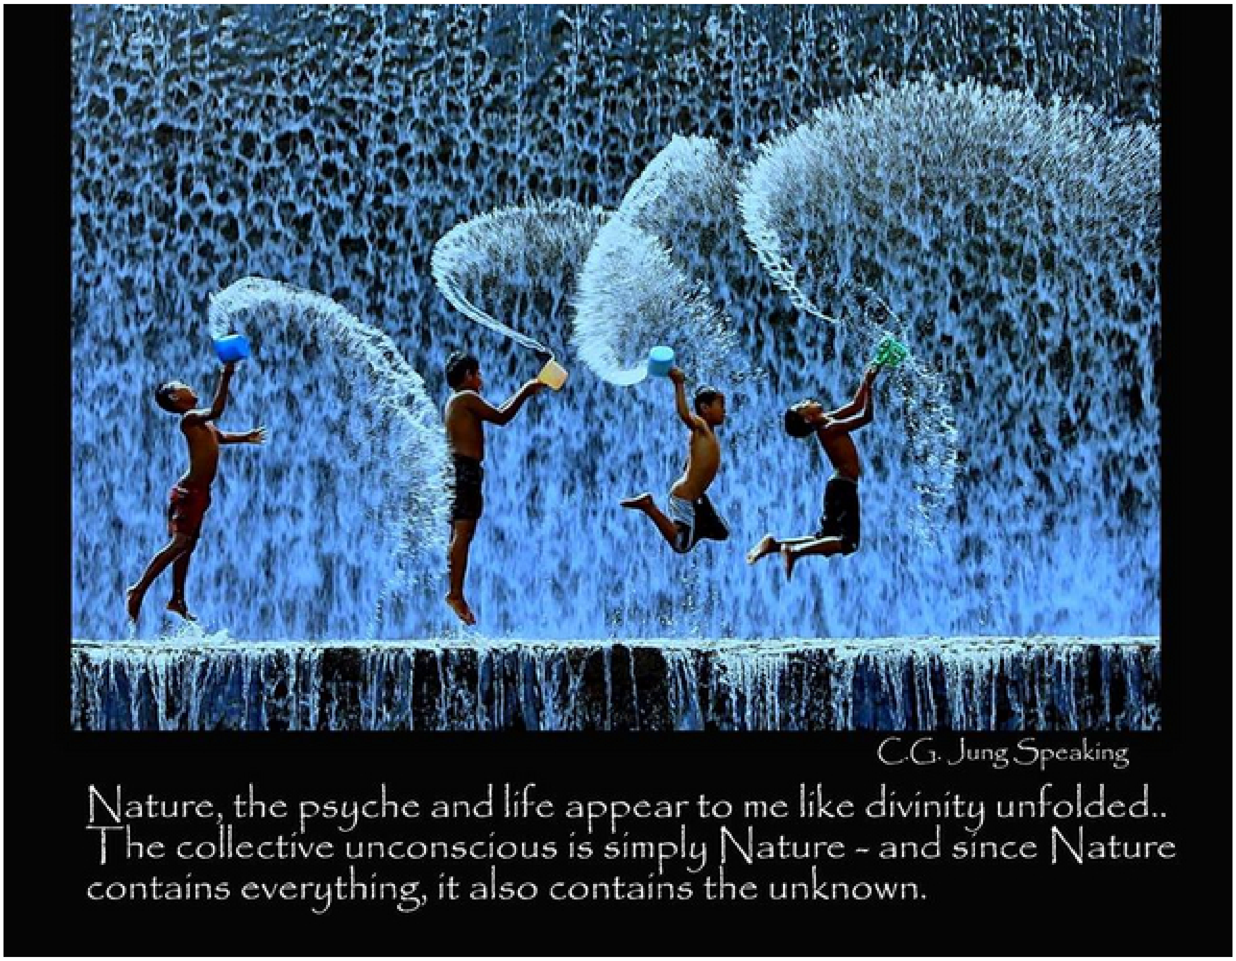


C.G. Jung, Visions Seminars V1

The Virgin Mary was really the black earth, not yet fecundated by torrents of rain.. Mary was the earth, the dark principle.. close to the cthonic cult of Demeter.



Life after death would then be like
“a moving on into the realm of images”.
Aniela Jaffe, “Was C.G. Jung a Mystic and other Essays”, image from C.G. Jung Italia



C.G. Jung Speaking

Nature, the psyche and life appear to me like divinity unfolded..
The collective unconscious is simply Nature - and since Nature contains everything, it also contains the unknown.

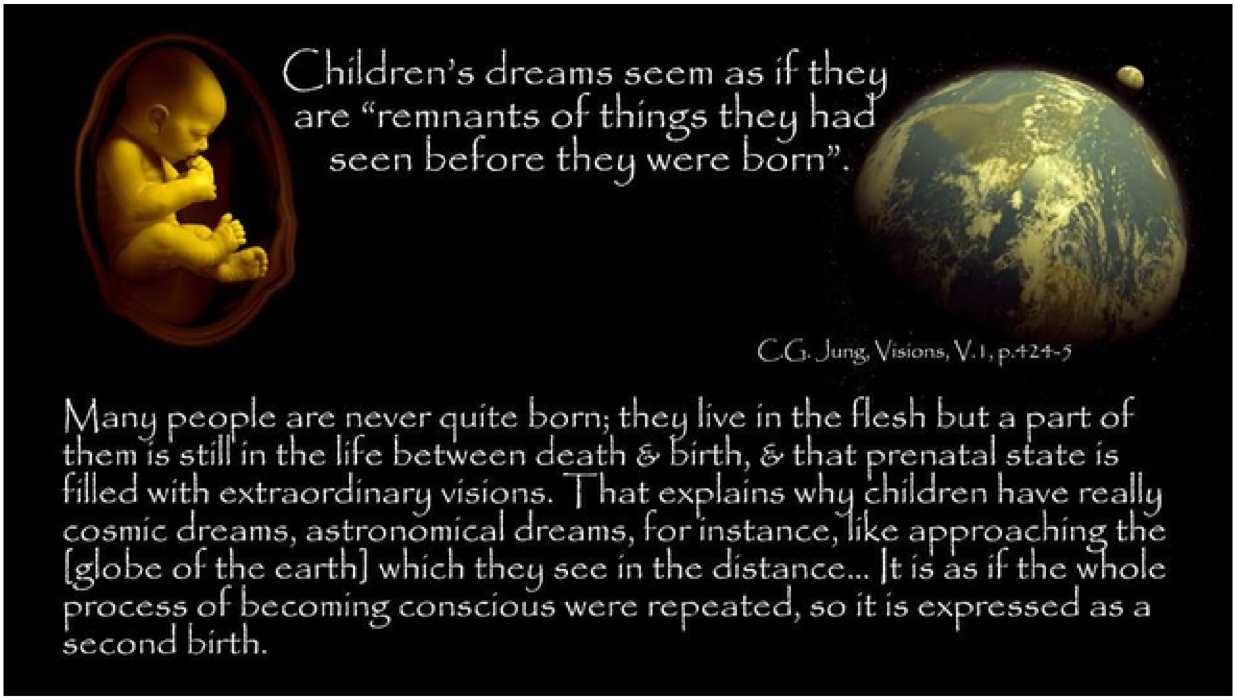
Making Unconcious Contents Conscious

C.G. Jung

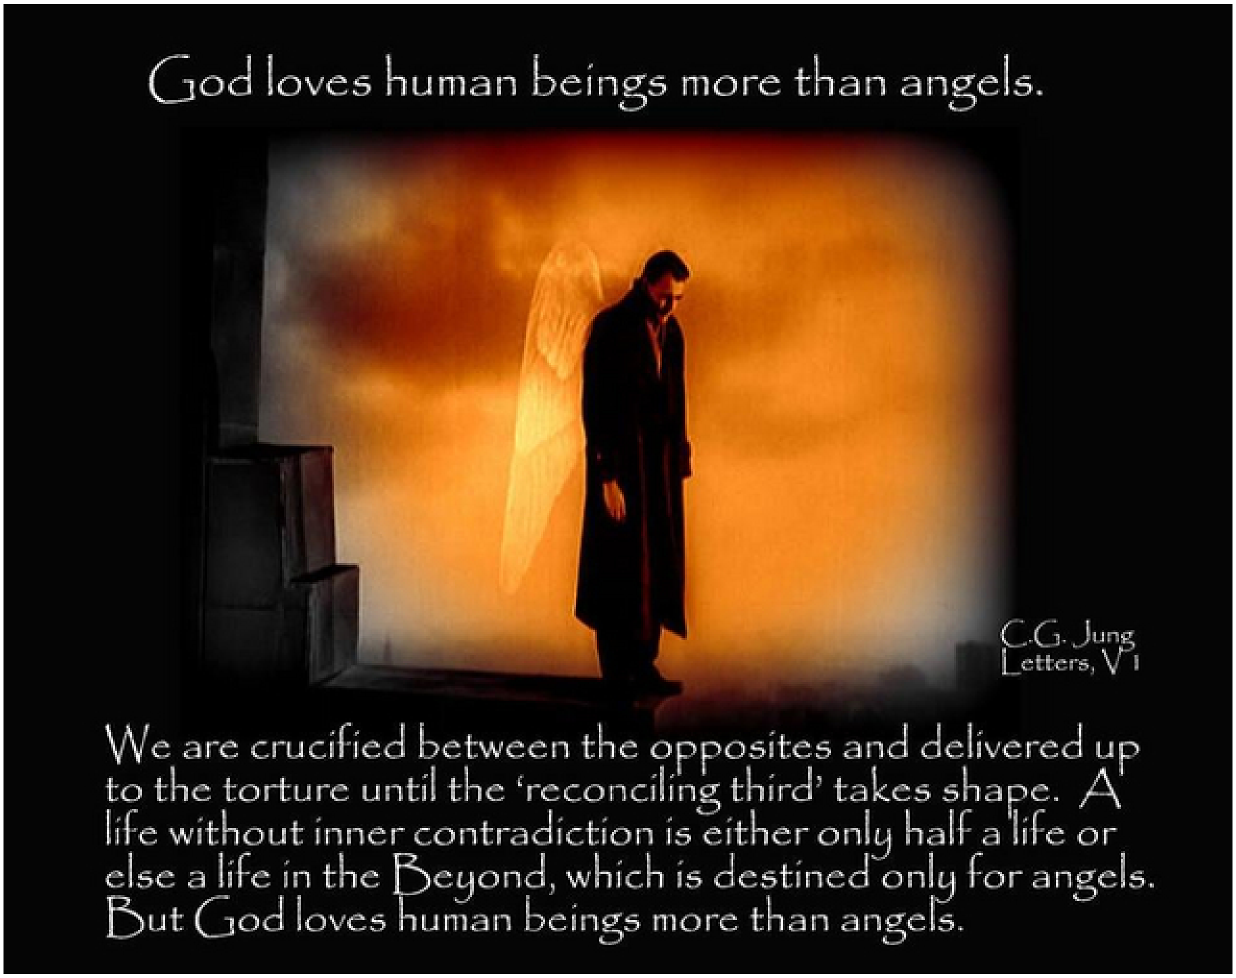
The Psyche creates reality everyday. Fantasy is the clearest expression of the Psyche's actual specific activity. The fantasies have as just as much feeling as thinking, as much intuition as sensation. Each function seems inextricably bound up with the others. It is from this creative activity that the answers to all answerable questions come. It is where the inner and the outer worlds are joined in living union.



Children's dreams seem as if they are "remnants of things they had seen before they were born".

C.G. Jung, Visions, V.1, p.424-5

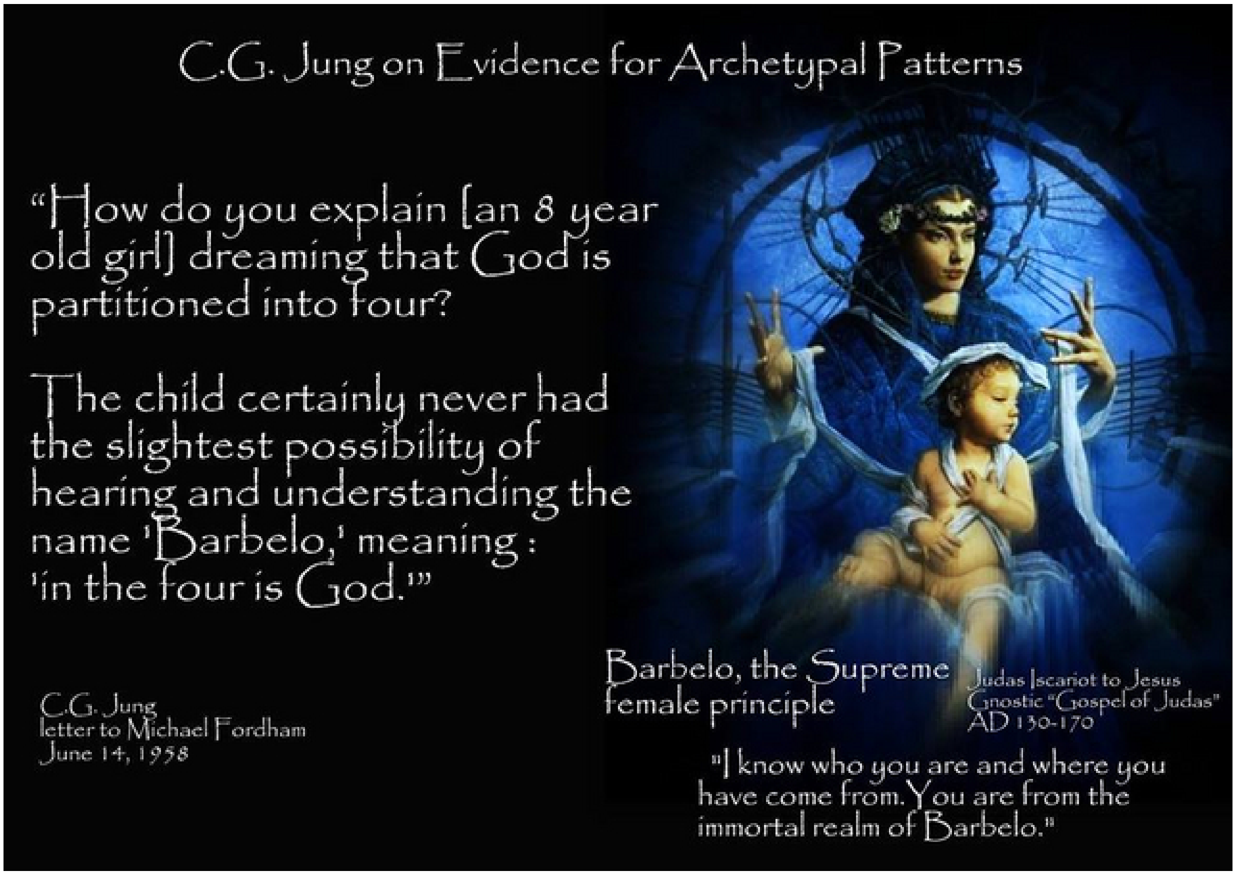
Many people are never quite born; they live in the flesh but a part of them is still in the life between death & birth, & that prenatal state is filled with extraordinary visions. That explains why children have really cosmic dreams, astronomical dreams, for instance, like approaching the [globe of the earth] which they see in the distance... It is as if the whole process of becoming conscious were repeated, so it is expressed as a second birth.



God loves human beings more than angels.

C.G. Jung
Letters, V 1

We are crucified between the opposites and delivered up to the torture until the 'reconciling third' takes shape. A life without inner contradiction is either only half a life or else a life in the Beyond, which is destined only for angels. But God loves human beings more than angels.



C.G. Jung on Evidence for Archetypal Patterns

"How do you explain [an 8 year old girl] dreaming that God is partitioned into four?

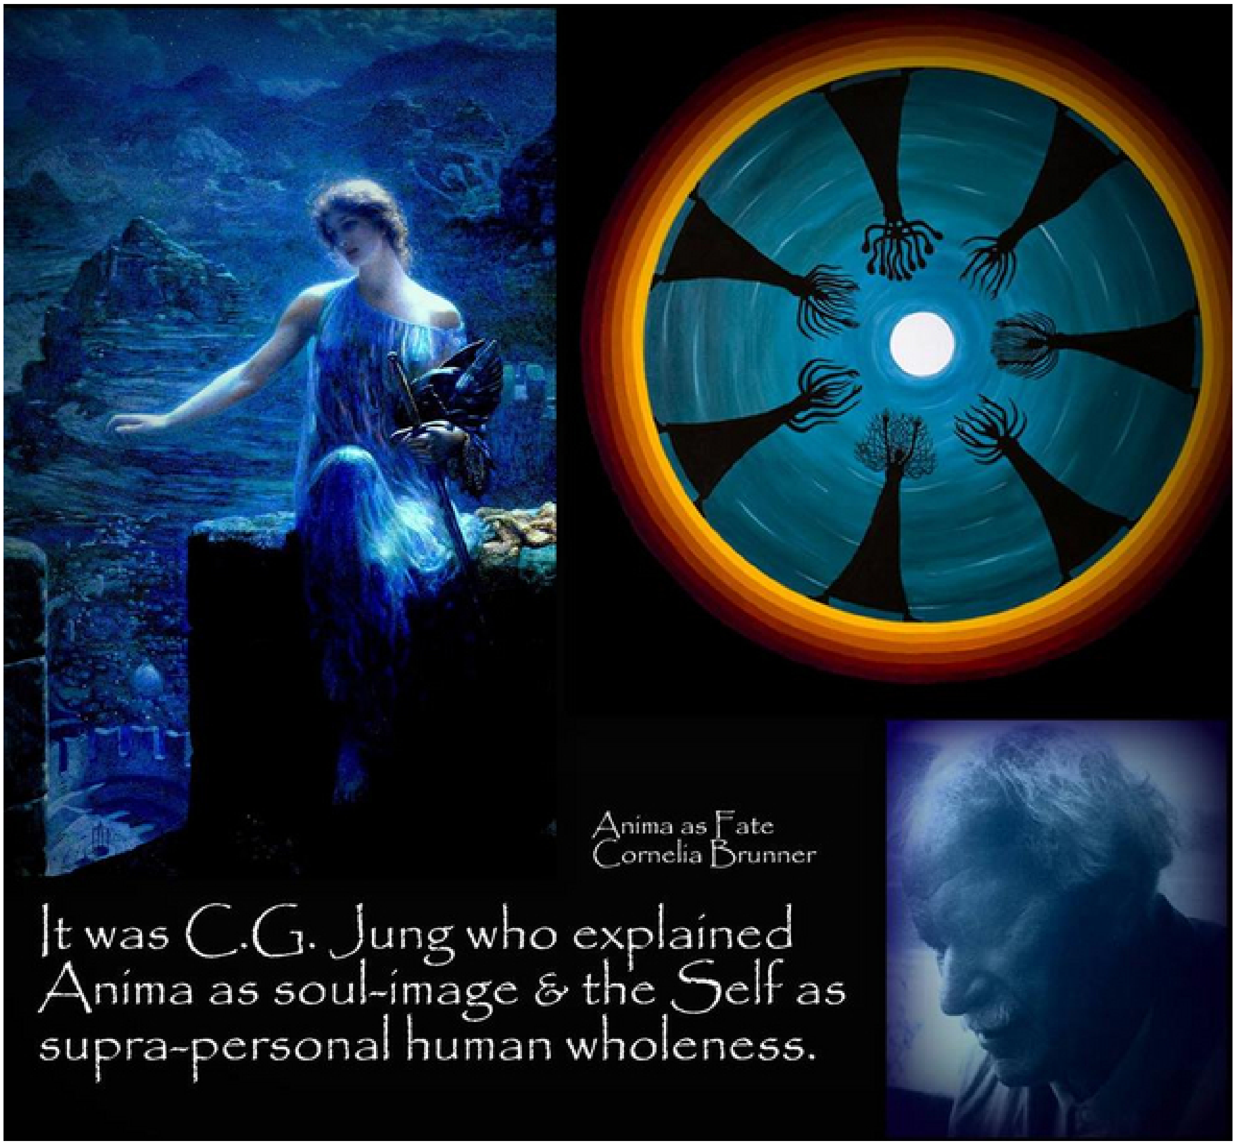
The child certainly never had the slightest possibility of hearing and understanding the name 'Barbelo,' meaning : 'in the four is God.'"

C.G. Jung
letter to Michael Fordham
June 14, 1958

Barbelo, the Supreme female principle

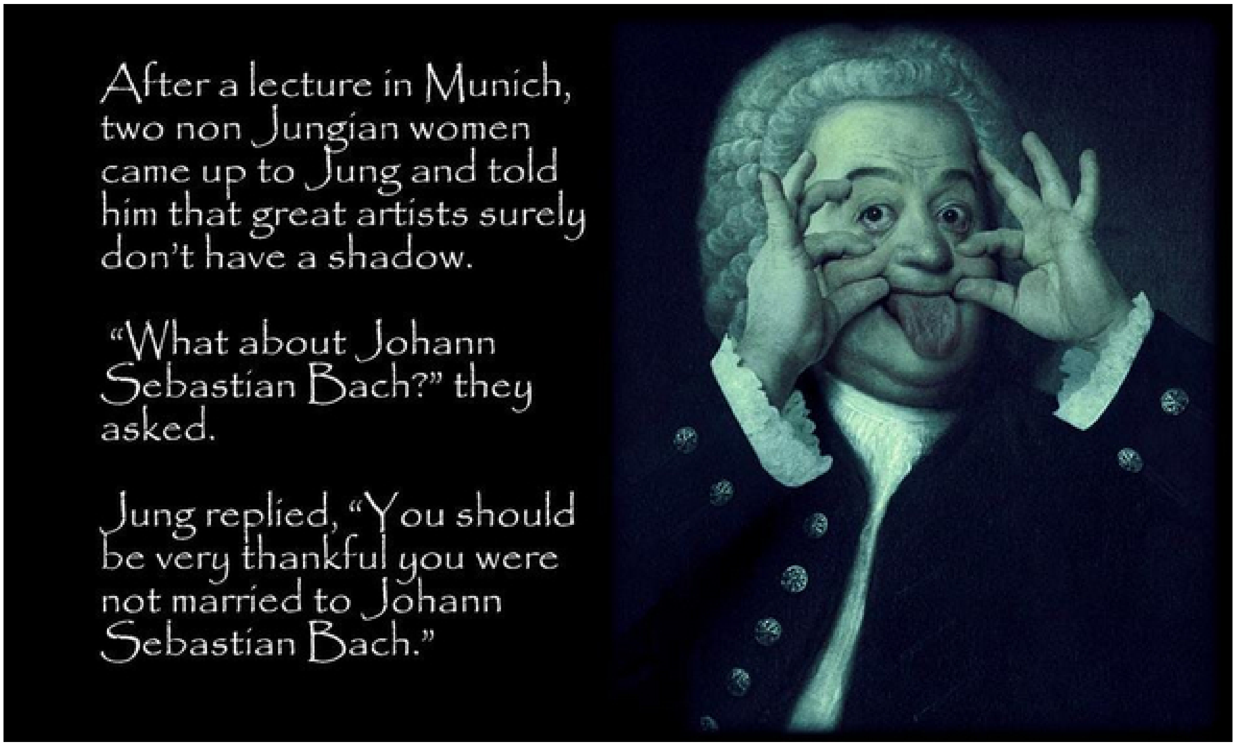
Judas Iscariot to Jesus
Gnostic "Gospel of Judas"
AD 130-170

"I know who you are and where you have come from. You are from the immortal realm of Barbelo."



Anima as Fate
Cornelia Brunner

It was C.G. Jung who explained Anima as soul-image & the Self as supra-personal human wholeness.

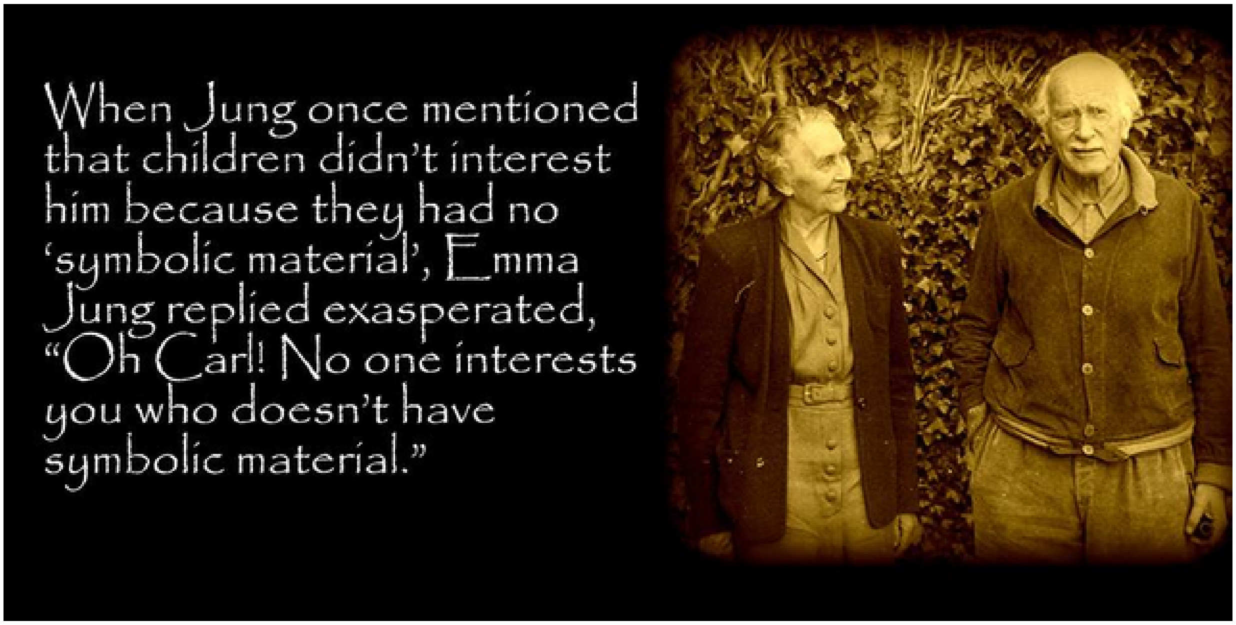


After a lecture in Munich, two non Jungian women came up to Jung and told him that great artists surely don't have a shadow.

"What about Johann Sebastian Bach?" they asked.

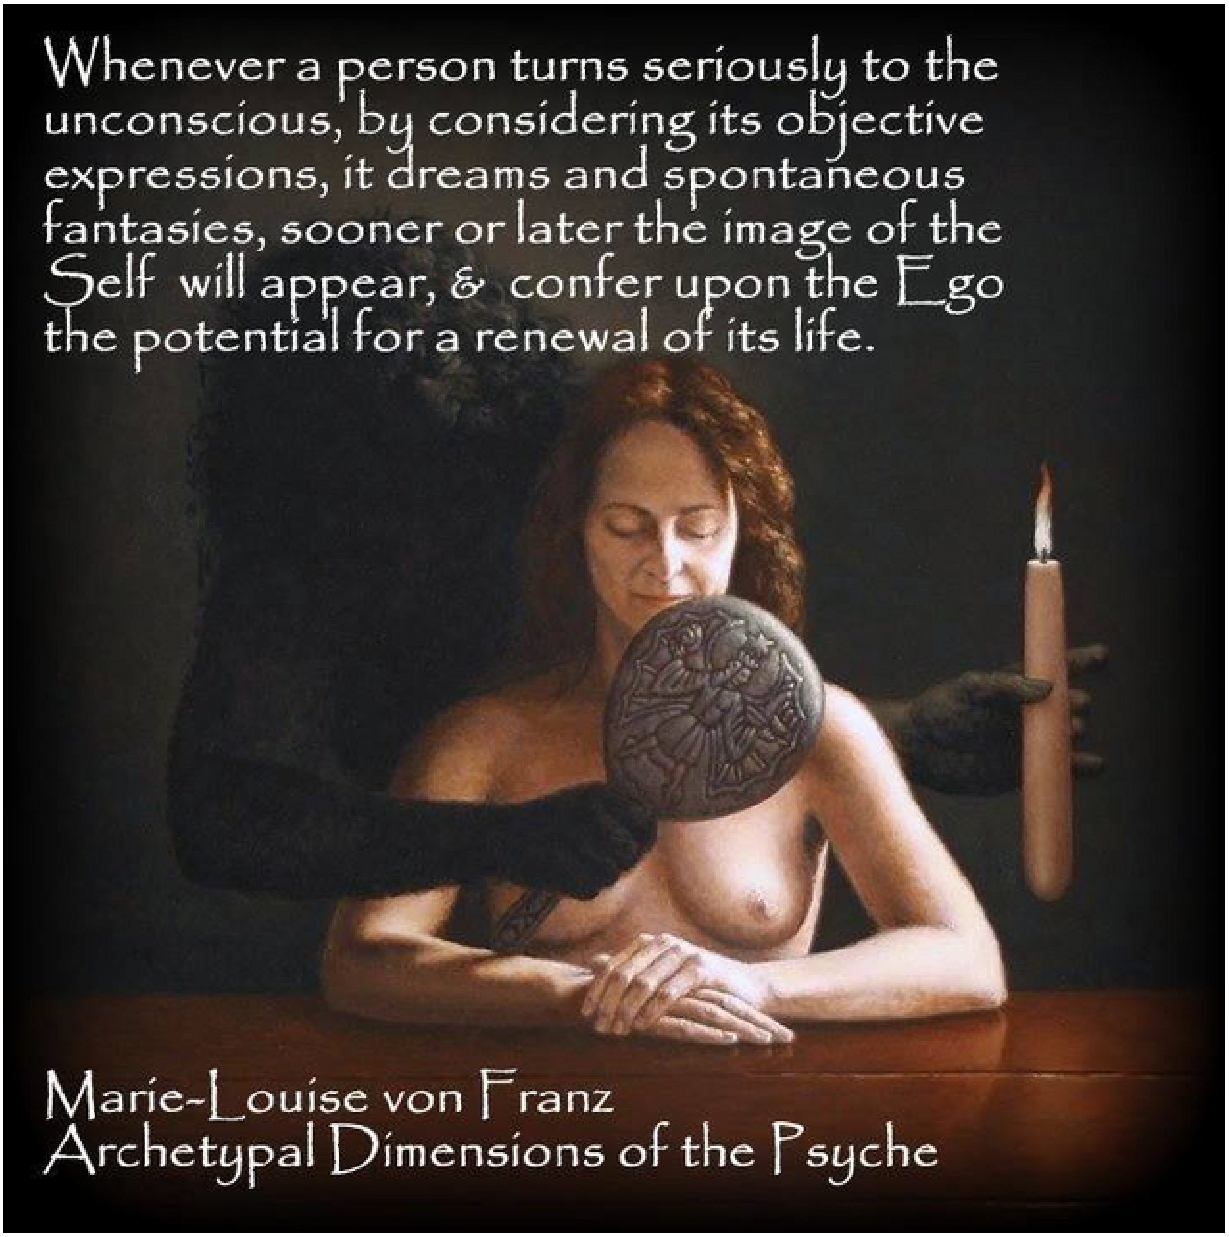
Jung replied, "You should be very thankful you were not married to Johann Sebastian Bach."

[38]



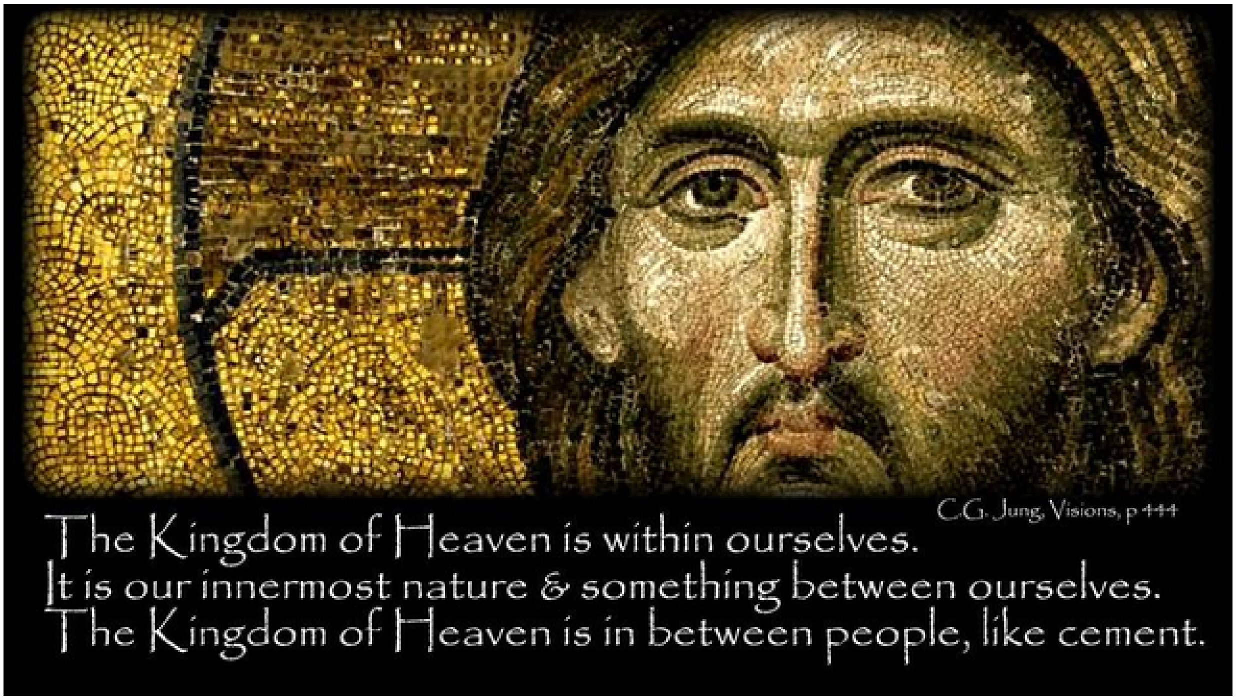
When Jung once mentioned that children didn't interest him because they had no 'symbolic material', Emma Jung replied exasperated, "Oh Carl! No one interests you who doesn't have symbolic material."

[39]



Whenever a person turns seriously to the unconscious, by considering its objective expressions, it dreams and spontaneous fantasies, sooner or later the image of the Self will appear, & confer upon the Ego the potential for a renewal of its life.

Marie-Louise von Franz
Archetypal Dimensions of the Psyche



C.G. Jung, Visions, p 444
The Kingdom of Heaven is within ourselves.
It is our innermost nature & something between ourselves.
The Kingdom of Heaven is in between people, like cement.

[42]

"Projections change the world into a replica of one's unknown face."
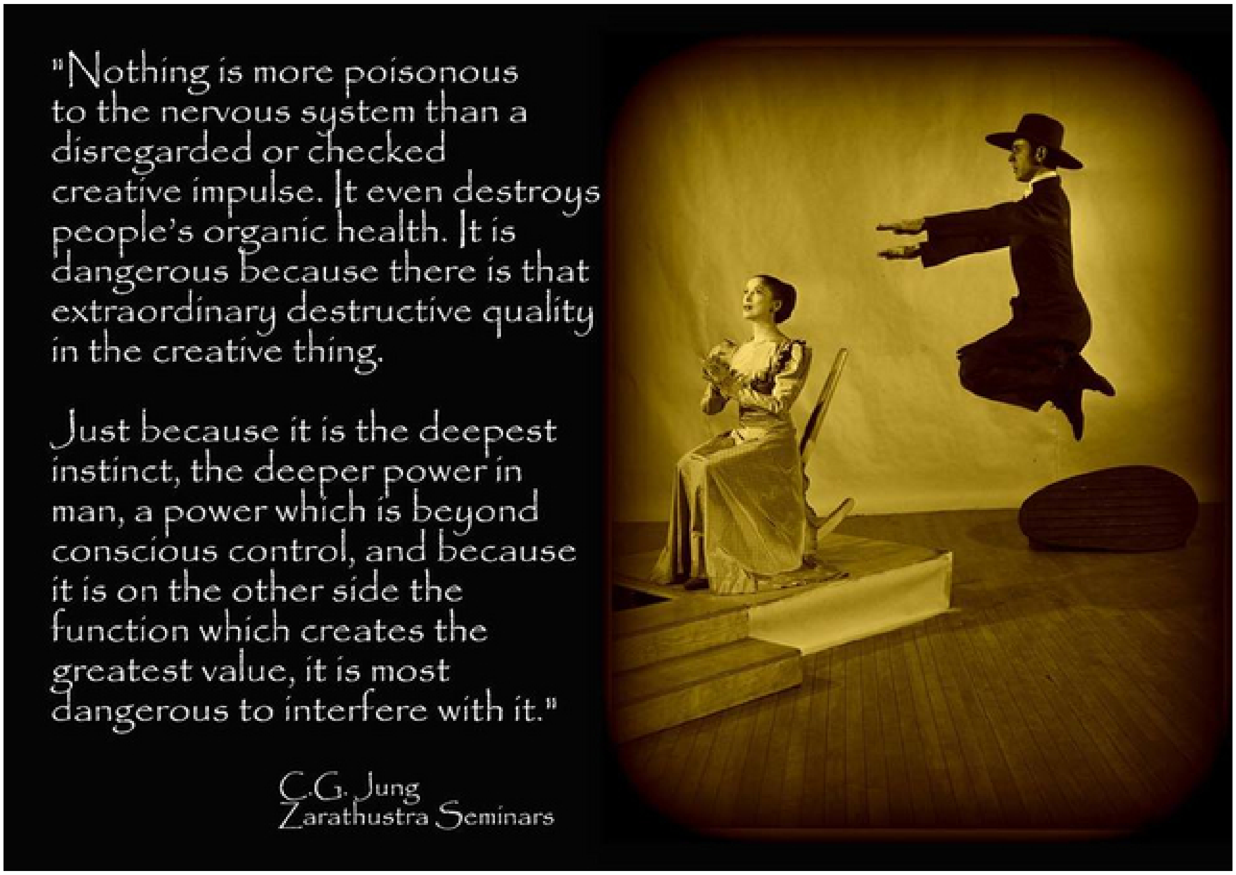
Aion, Carl Jung

[43]

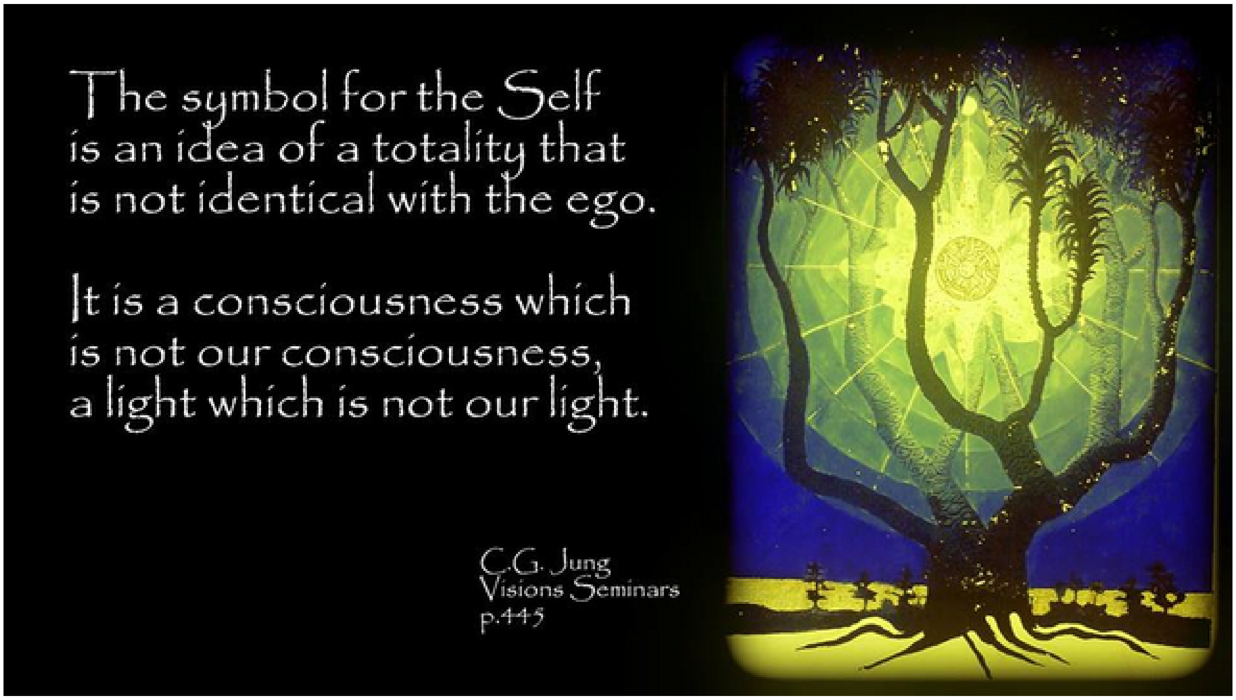


"Nothing is more poisonous to the nervous system than a disregarded or checked creative impulse. It even destroys people's organic health. It is dangerous because there is that extraordinary destructive quality in the creative thing.

Just because it is the deepest instinct, the deeper power in man, a power which is beyond conscious control, and because it is on the other side the function which creates the greatest value, it is most dangerous to interfere with it."

C.G. Jung
Zarathustra Seminars

[44]

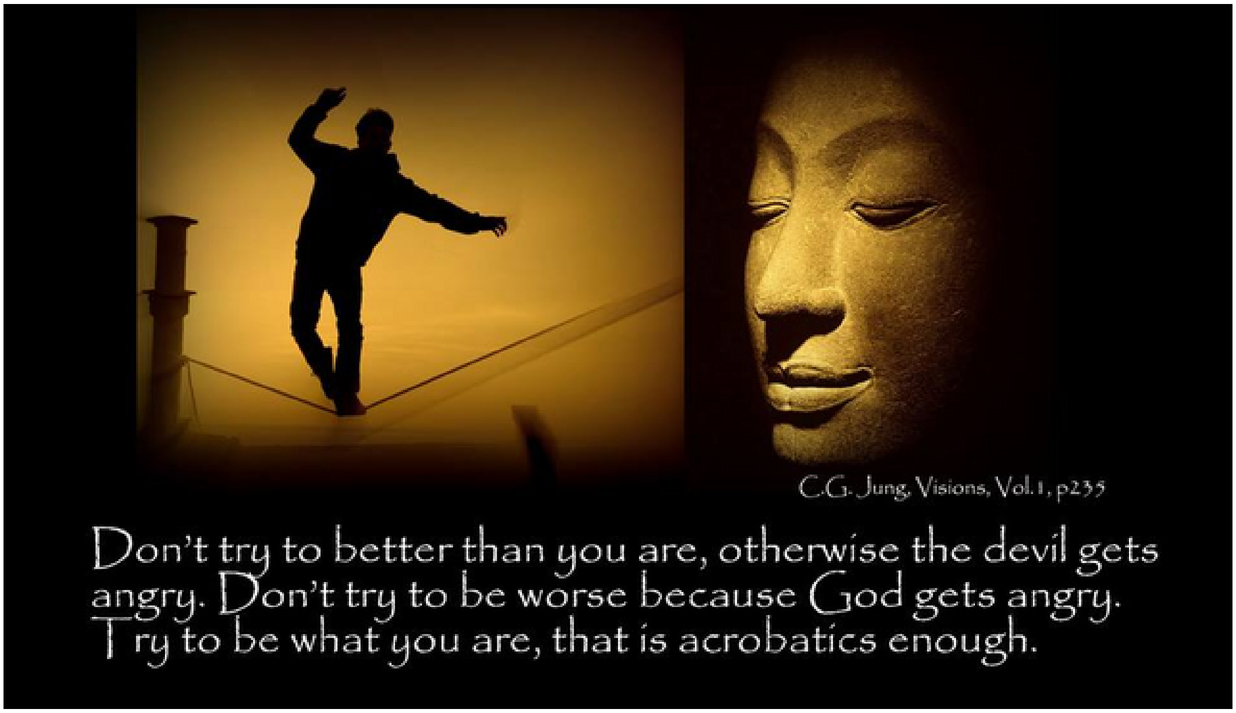


The symbol for the Self is an idea of a totality that is not identical with the ego.

It is a consciousness which is not our consciousness, a light which is not our light.

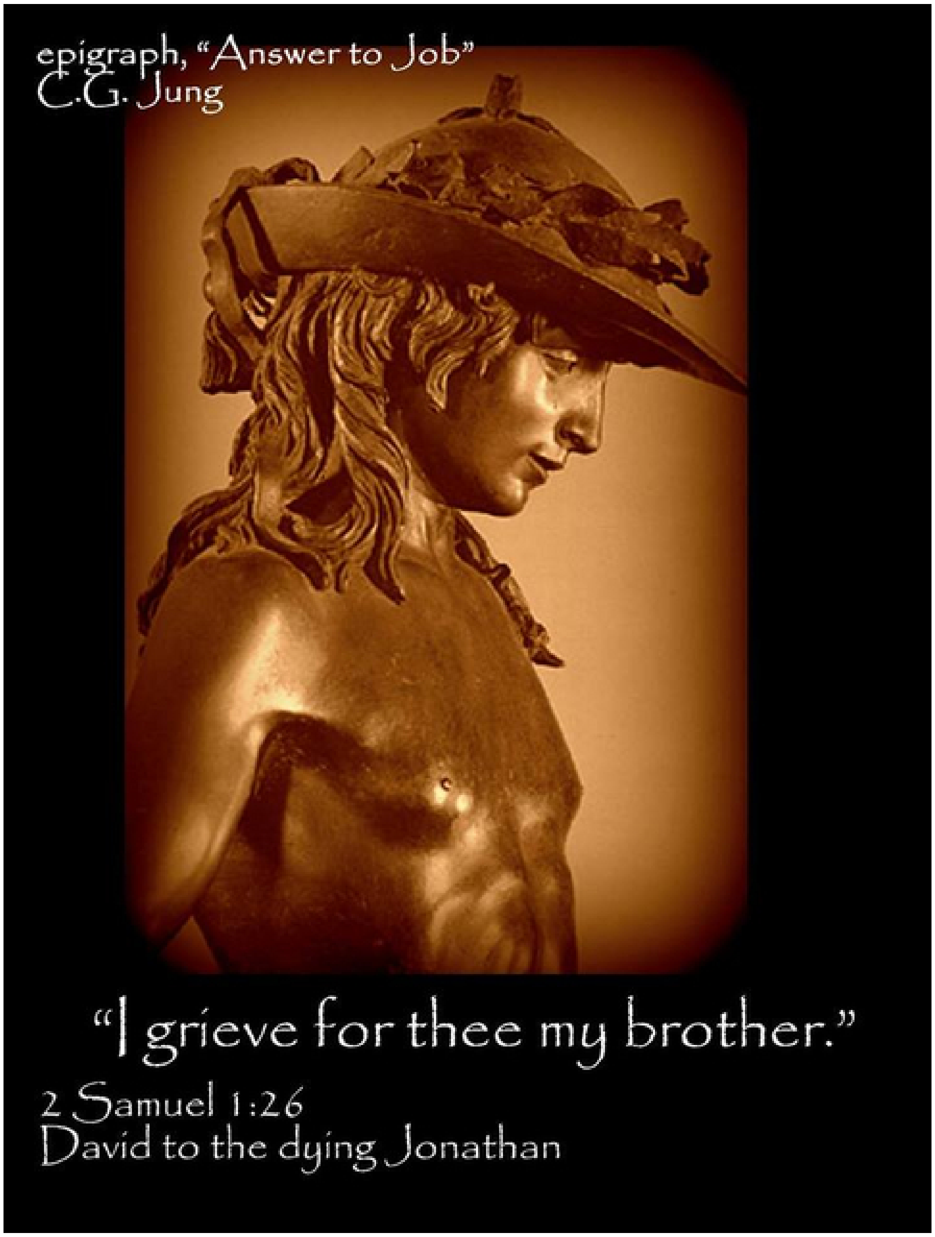
C.G. Jung
Visions Seminars
p.445

[45]



C.G. Jung, Visions, Vol.1, p235

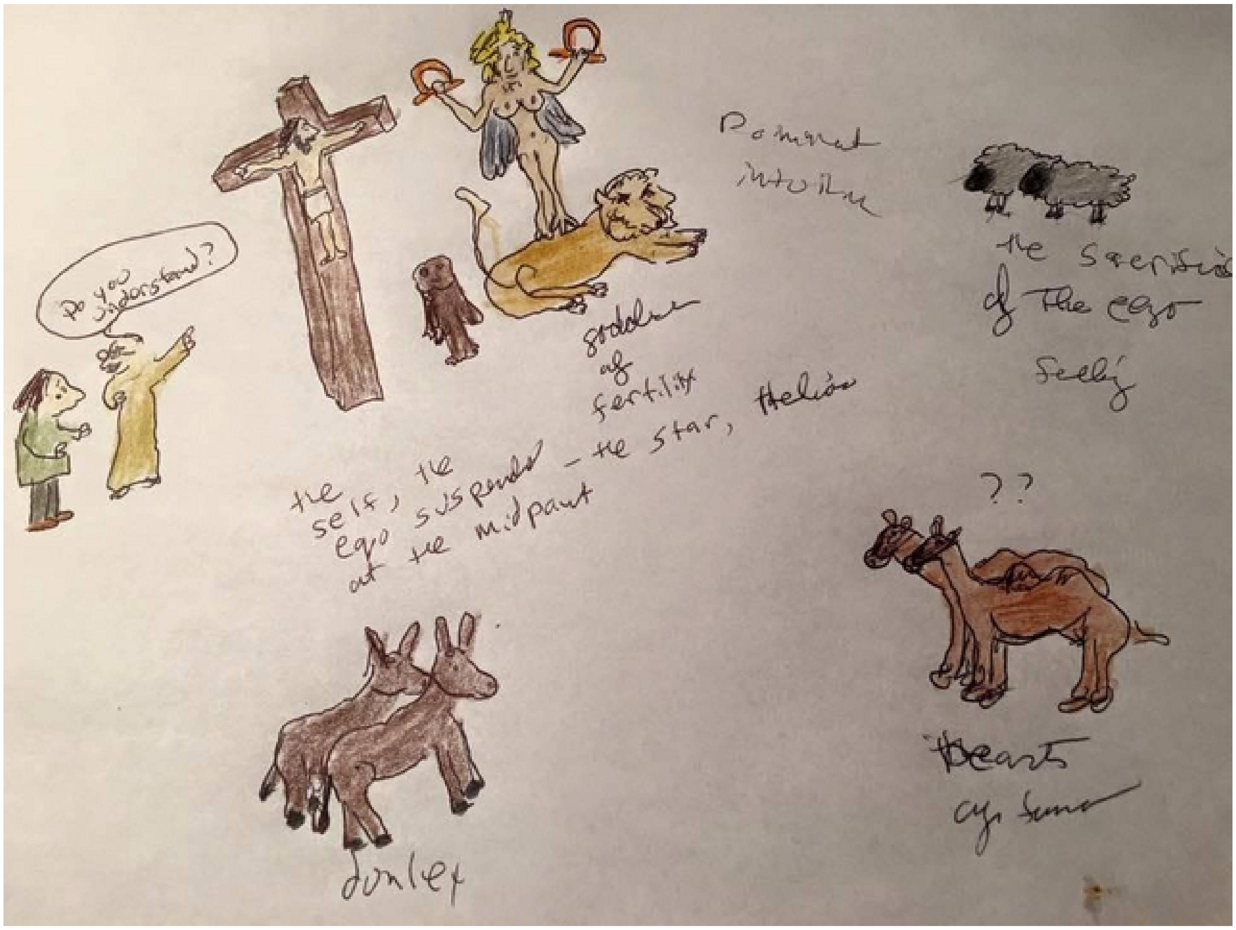
Don't try to better than you are, otherwise the devil gets angry. Don't try to be worse because God gets angry. Try to be what you are, that is acrobatics enough.



epigraph, “Answer to Job”
C.G. Jung

“I grieve for thee my brother.”

2 Samuel 1:26
David to the dying Jonathan



Do you understand?
Dominant intuition
the sacrifice of the ego feeling goddess of fertility
the self, the ego suspended — the star, Helios at the midpoint
??
"Beasts of burden donkey

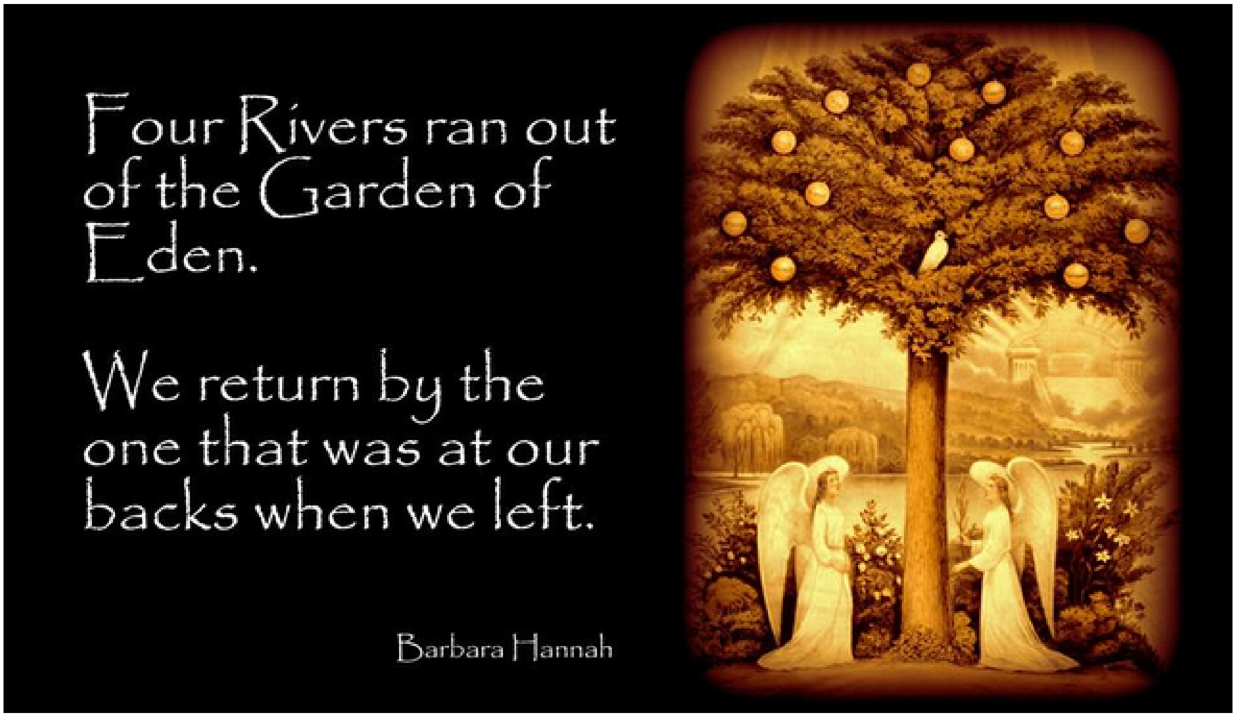
[48]

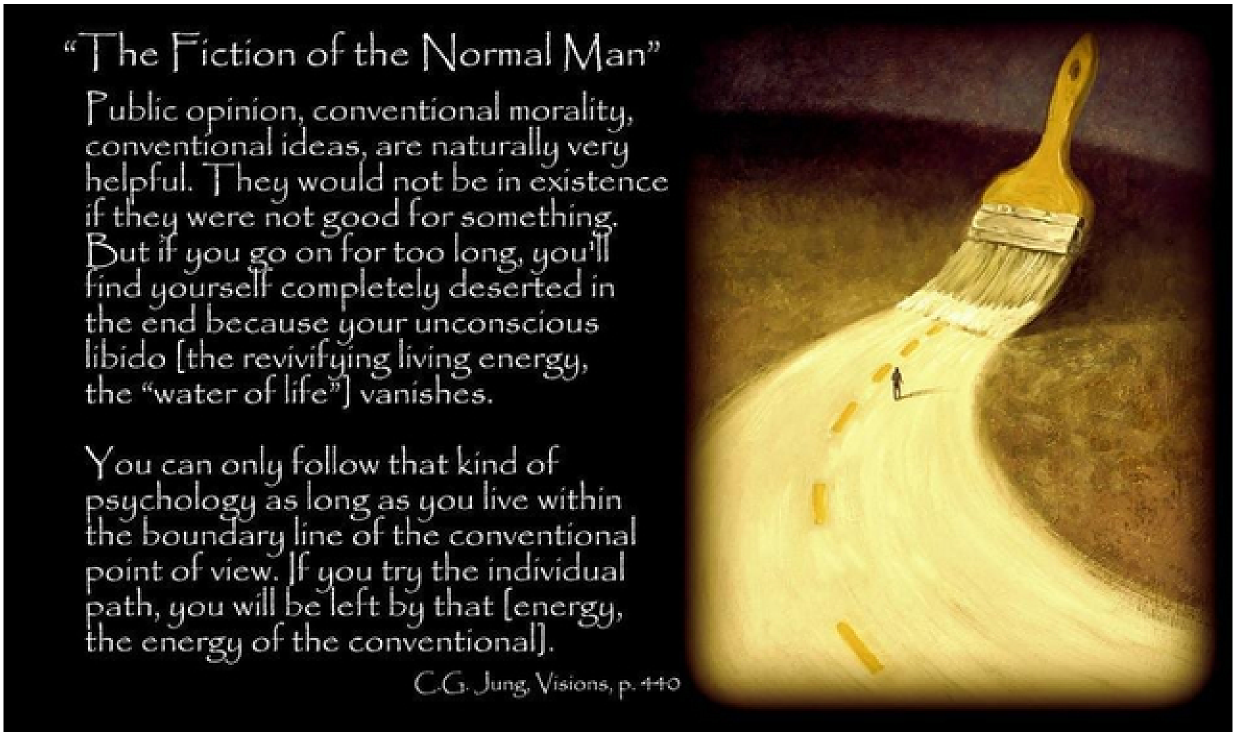


Four Rivers ran out of the Garden of Eden.

We return by the one that was at our backs when we left.

Barbara Hannah

[49]

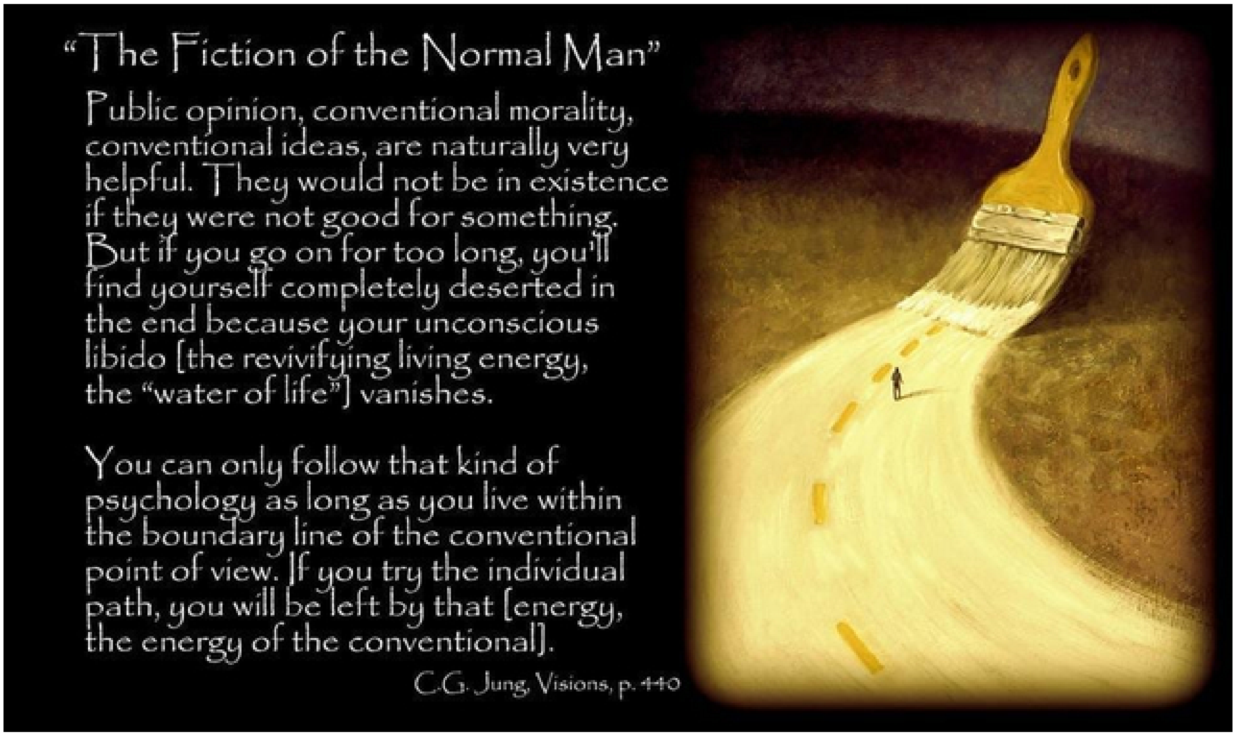


“The Fiction of the Normal Man”

Public opinion, conventional morality, conventional ideas, are naturally very helpful. They would not be in existence if they were not good for something. But if you go on for too long, you'll find yourself completely deserted in the end because your unconscious libido [the revivifying living energy, the “water of life”] vanishes.

You can only follow that kind of psychology as long as you live within the boundary line of the conventional point of view. If you try the individual path, you will be left by that [energy, the energy of the conventional].

C.G. Jung, Visions, p. 440

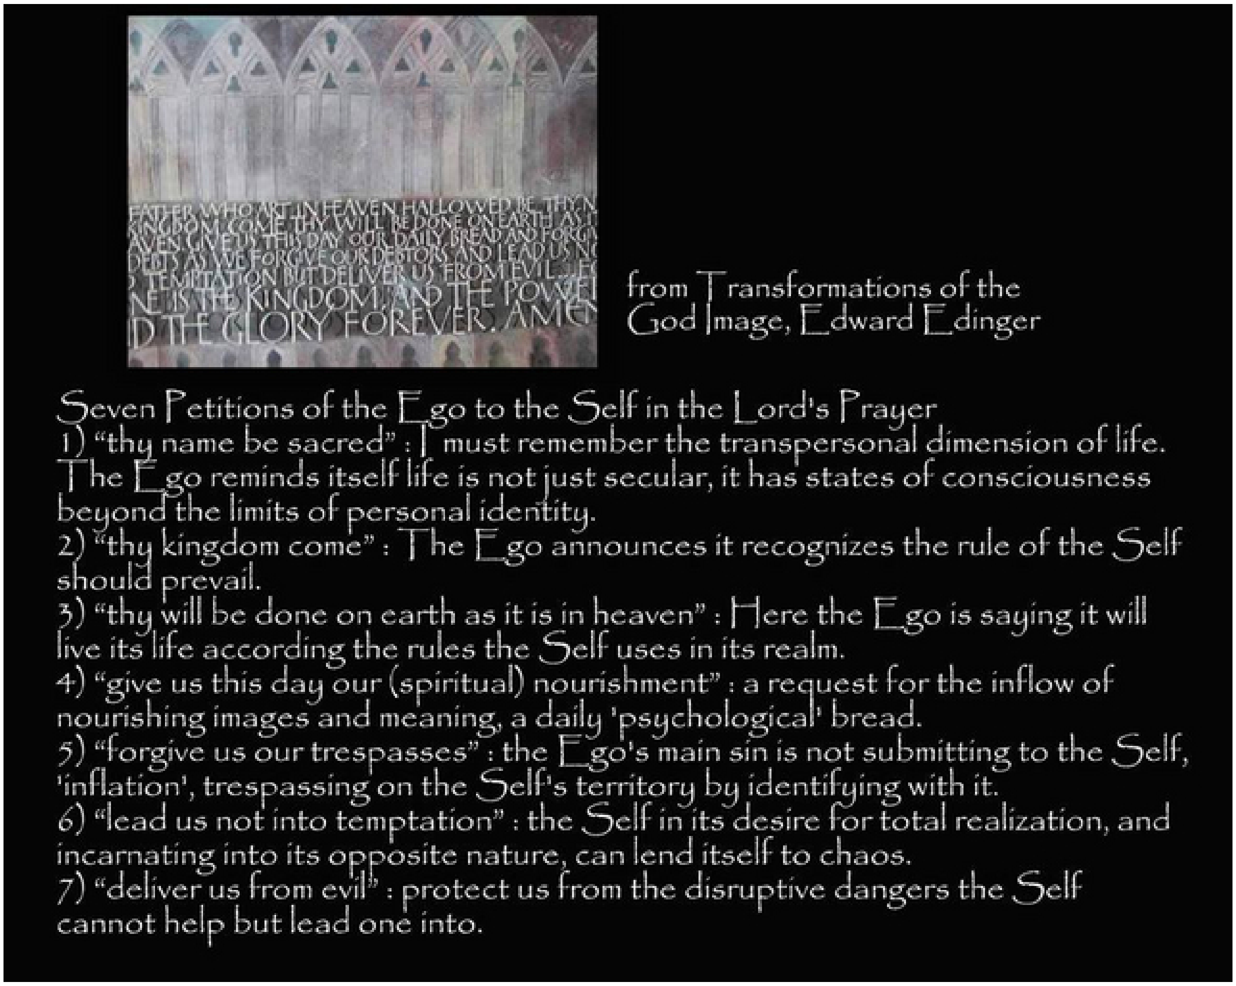


“The Fiction of the Normal Man”

Public opinion, conventional morality, conventional ideas, are naturally very helpful. They would not be in existence if they were not good for something. But if you go on for too long, you'll find yourself completely deserted in the end because your unconscious libido [the revivifying living energy, the “water of life”] vanishes.

You can only follow that kind of psychology as long as you live within the boundary line of the conventional point of view. If you try the individual path, you will be left by that [energy, the energy of the conventional].

C.G. Jung, Visions, p. 440



FATHER WHO ART IN HEAVEN HALLOWED BE THY N
KINGDOM COME THY WILL BE DONE ON EARTH AS I
AVEN GIVE US THIS DAY OUR DAILY BREAD AND FORGI
DEBTS AS WE FORGIVE OUR DEBTORS AND LEAD US NO
O TEMPTATION BUT DELIVER US FROM EVIL... FO
NE IS THE KINGDOM AND THE POWE
D THE GLORY FOREVER. AME

from Transformations of the God Image, Edward Edinger

Seven Petitions of the Ego to the Self in the Lord's Prayer

1) "thy name be sacred" : I must remember the transpersonal dimension of life. The Ego reminds itself life is not just secular, it has states of consciousness beyond the limits of personal identity.

2) "thy kingdom come" : The Ego announces it recognizes the rule of the Self should prevail.

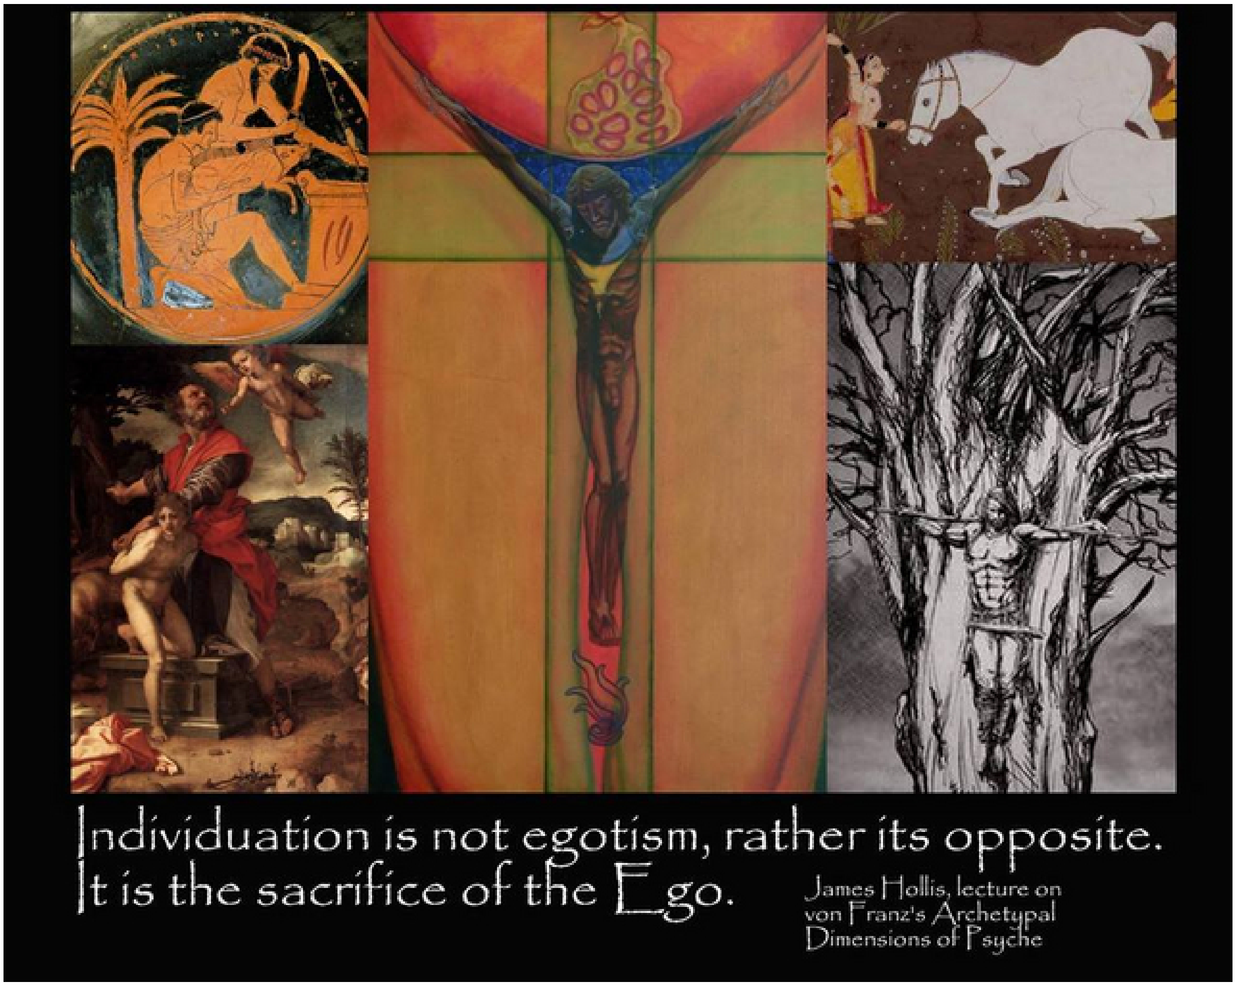
3) "thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven" : Here the Ego is saying it will live its life according the rules the Self uses in its realm.

4) "give us this day our (spiritual) nourishment" : a request for the inflow of nourishing images and meaning, a daily 'psychological' bread.

5) "forgive us our trespasses" : the Ego's main sin is not submitting to the Self, 'inflation', trespassing on the Self's territory by identifying with it.

6) "lead us not into temptation" : the Self in its desire for total realization, and incarnating into its opposite nature, can lend itself to chaos.

7) "deliver us from evil" : protect us from the disruptive dangers the Self cannot help but lead one into.



Individuation is not egotism, rather its opposite.
It is the sacrifice of the Ego.

James Hollis, lecture on von Franz's Archetypal
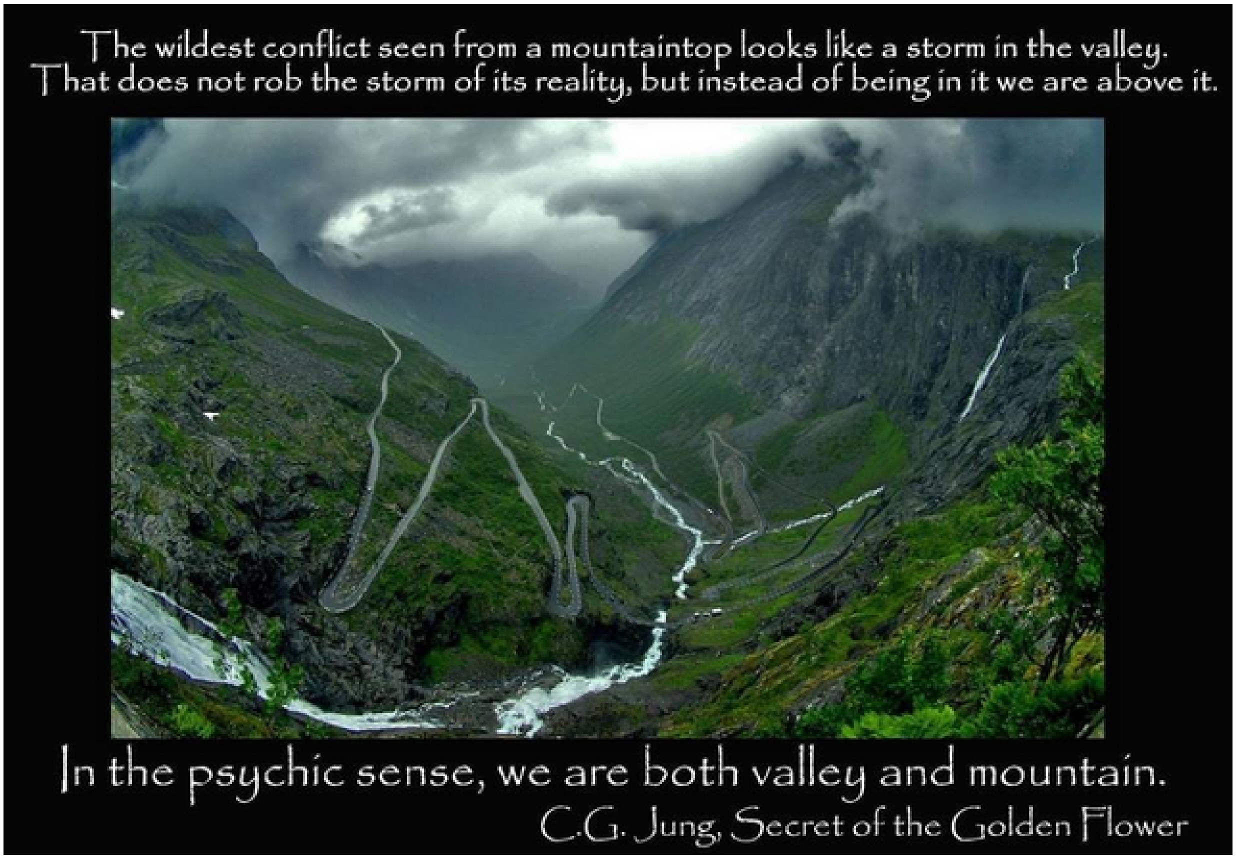
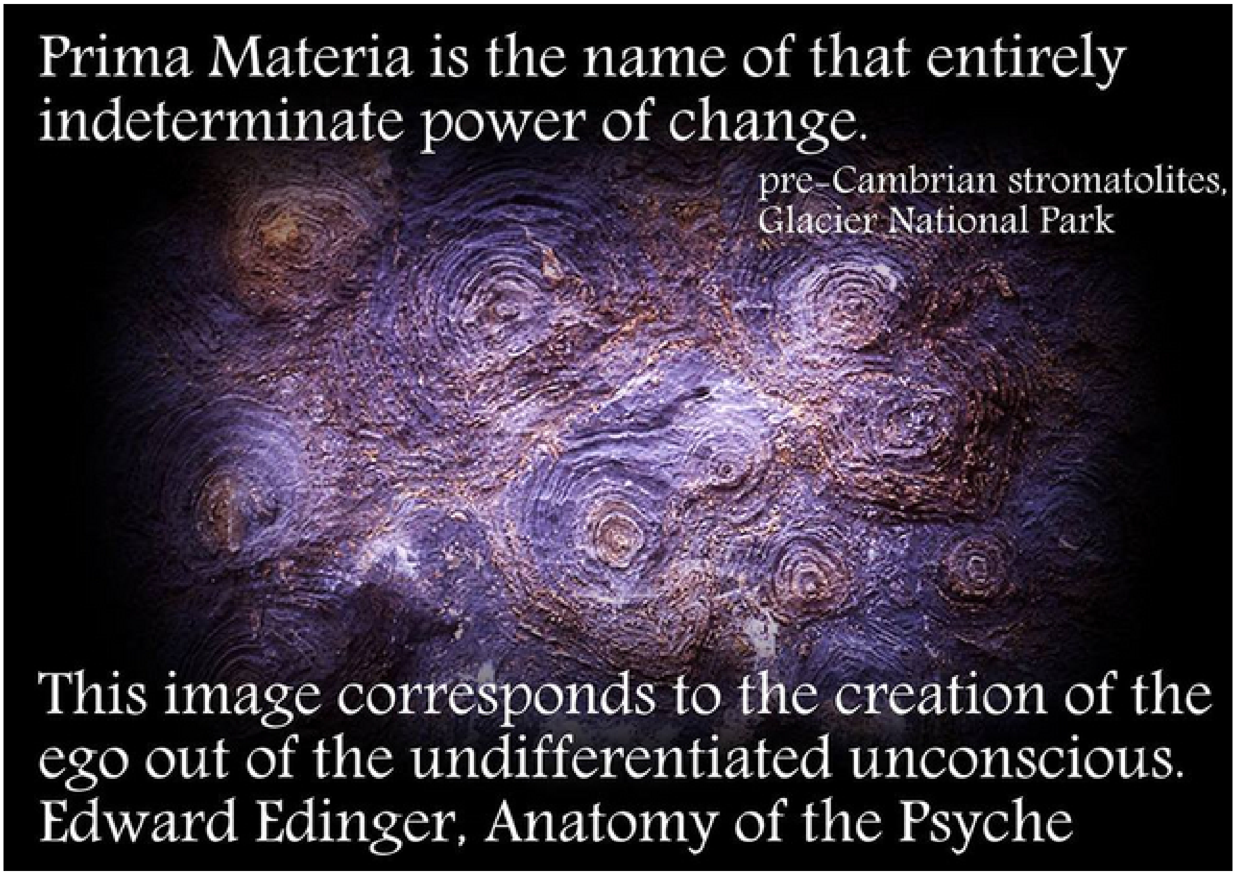
Dimensions of Psyche



The wildest conflict seen from a mountaintop looks like a storm in the valley.
That does not rob the storm of its reality, but instead of being in it we are above it.

In the psychic sense, we are both valley and mountain.
C.G. Jung, Secret of the Golden Flower

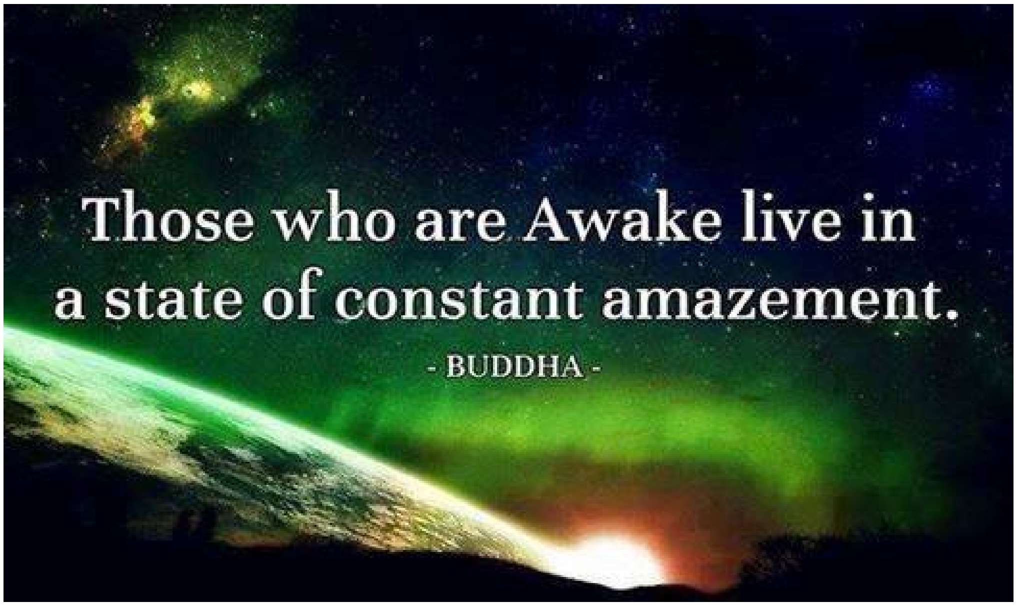


Prima Materia is the name of that entirely indeterminate power of change.

pre-Cambrian stromatolites,
Glacier National Park

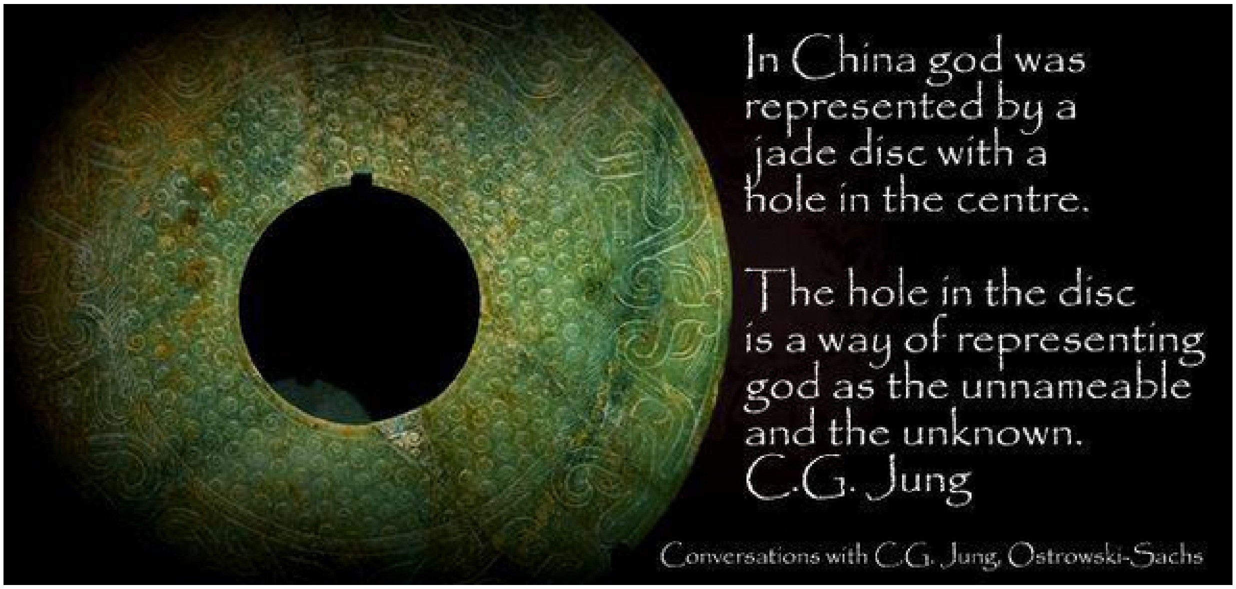
This image corresponds to the creation of the ego out of the undifferentiated unconscious.
Edward Edinger, Anatomy of the Psyche

[55]



Those who are Awake live in a state of constant amazement.
- BUDDHA -

[56]



In China god was represented by a jade disc with a hole in the centre.
The hole in the disc is a way of representing god as the unnameable and the unknown.
C.G. Jung
Conversations with C.G. Jung, Ostrowski-Sachs

[57]

and now from the Vast of the Lord will the waters of sleep
Roll in on the souls of men.

But who will reveal to our waking ken
The forms that swim and the shapes that creep
Under the waters of sleep?

And I would that I could know what swimmeth below when the tides come in.

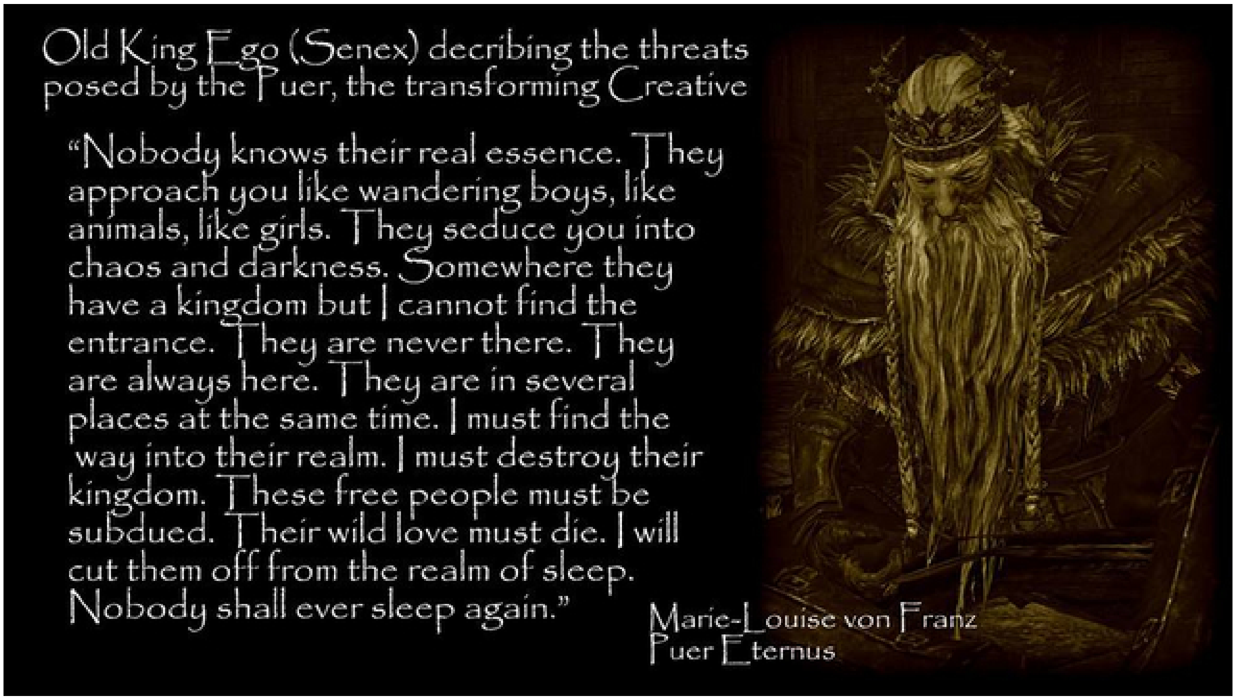
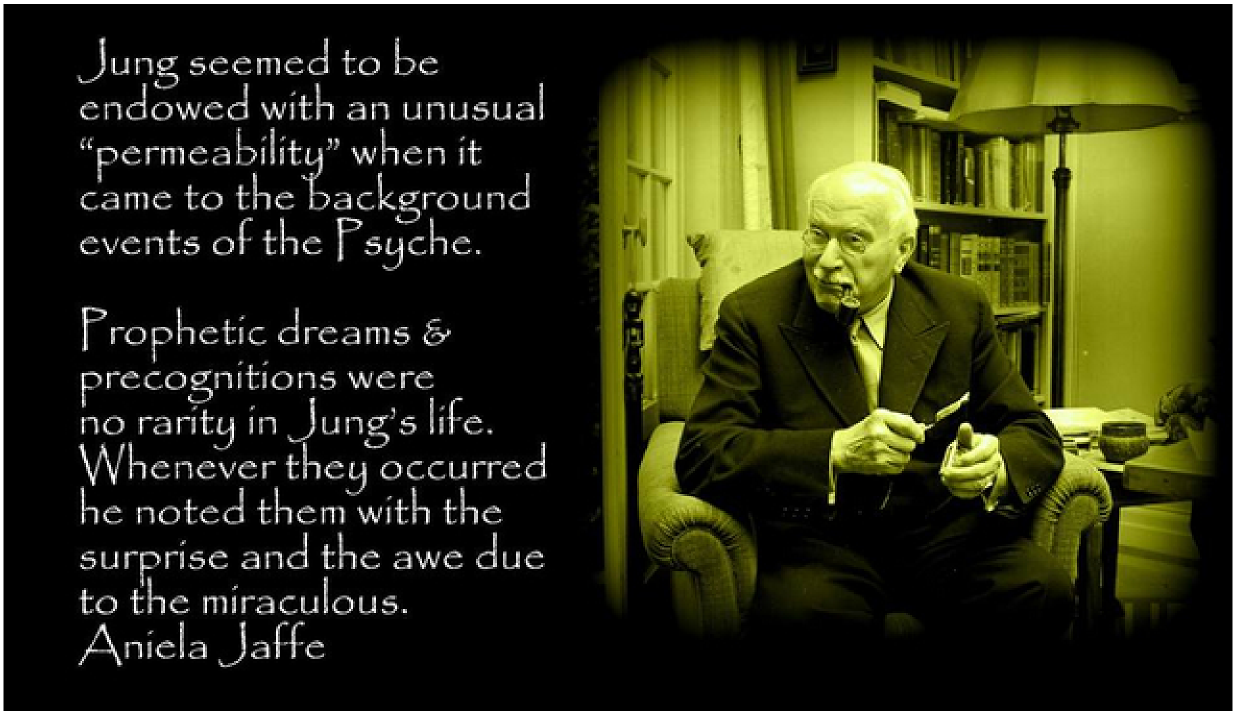
Sidney Lanier
Hymns of the Marshes 1870



Old King Ego (Senex) decribing the threats posed by the Puer, the transforming Creative

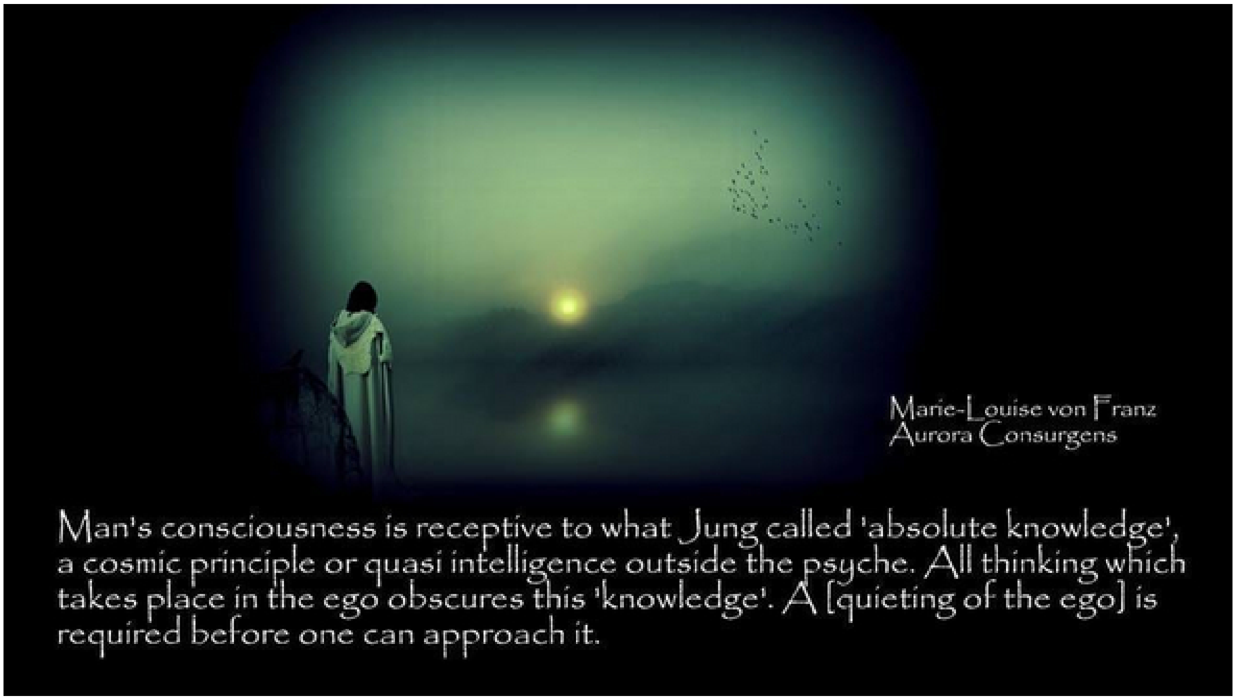
"Nobody knows their real essence. They approach you like wandering boys, like animals, like girls. They seduce you into chaos and darkness. Somewhere they have a kingdom but I cannot find the entrance. They are never there. They are always here. They are in several places at the same time. I must find the way into their realm. I must destroy their kingdom. These free people must be subdued. Their wild love must die. I will cut them off from the realm of sleep. Nobody shall ever sleep again."

Marie-Louise von Franz
Puer Eternus



Jung seemed to be endowed with an unusual "permeability" when it came to the background events of the Psyche.

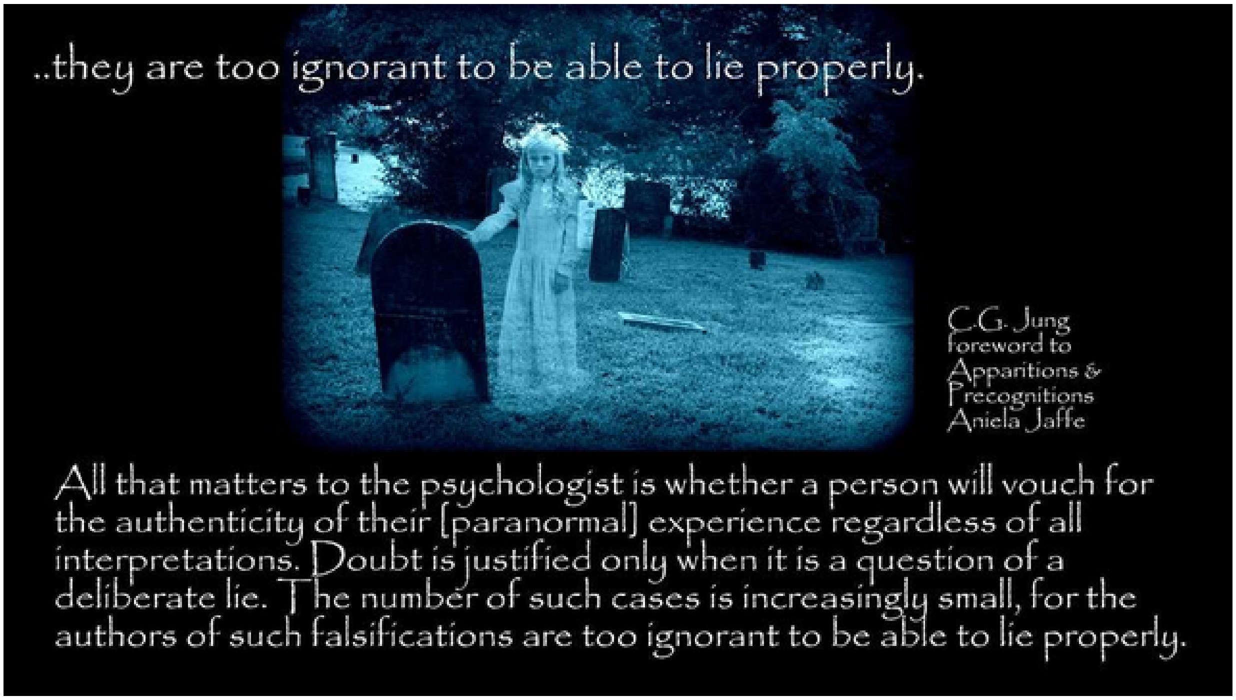
Prophetic dreams & precognitions were no rarity in Jung's life. Whenever they occurred he noted them with the surprise and the awe due to the miraculous.
Aniela Jaffe



Marie-Louise von Franz
Aurora Consurgens

Man's consciousness is receptive to what Jung called 'absolute knowledge', a cosmic principle or quasi intelligence outside the psyche. All thinking which takes place in the ego obscures this 'knowledge'. A [quieting of the ego] is required before one can approach it.

[61]



..they are too ignorant to be able to lie properly.

C.G. Jung
foreword to Apparitions &
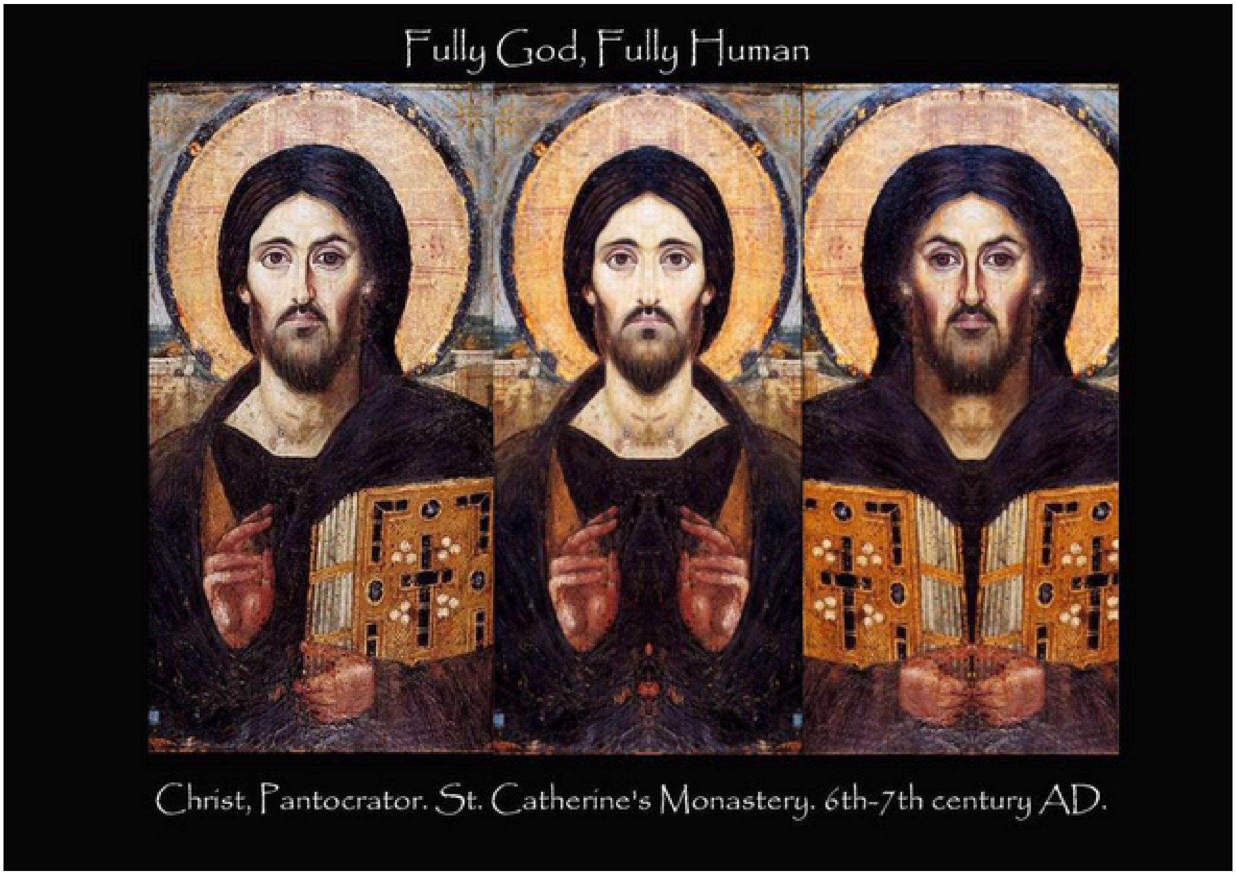
Precognitions
Aniela Jaffe

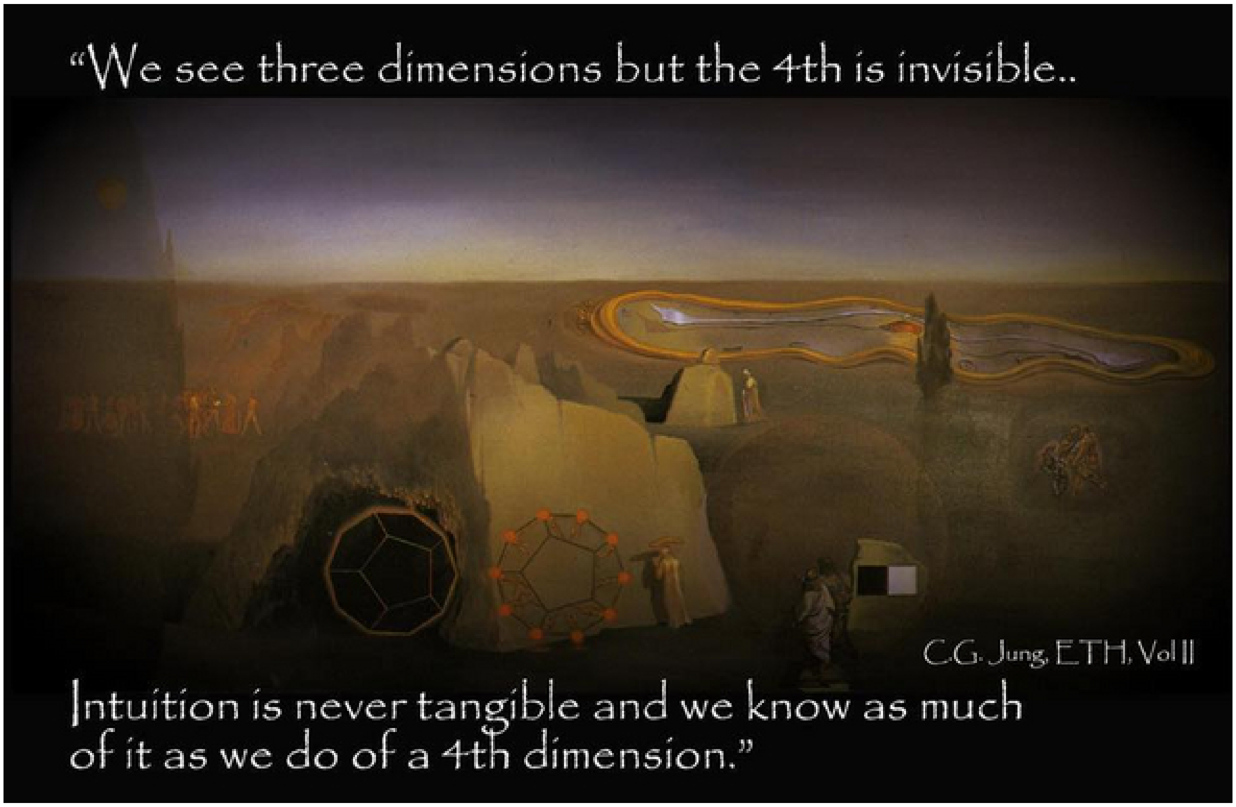
All that matters to the psychologist is whether a person will vouch for the authenticity of their [paranormal] experience regardless of all interpretations. Doubt is justified only when it is a question of a deliberate lie. The number of such cases is increasingly small, for the authors of such falsifications are too ignorant to be able to lie properly.

[62]



Fully God, Fully Human

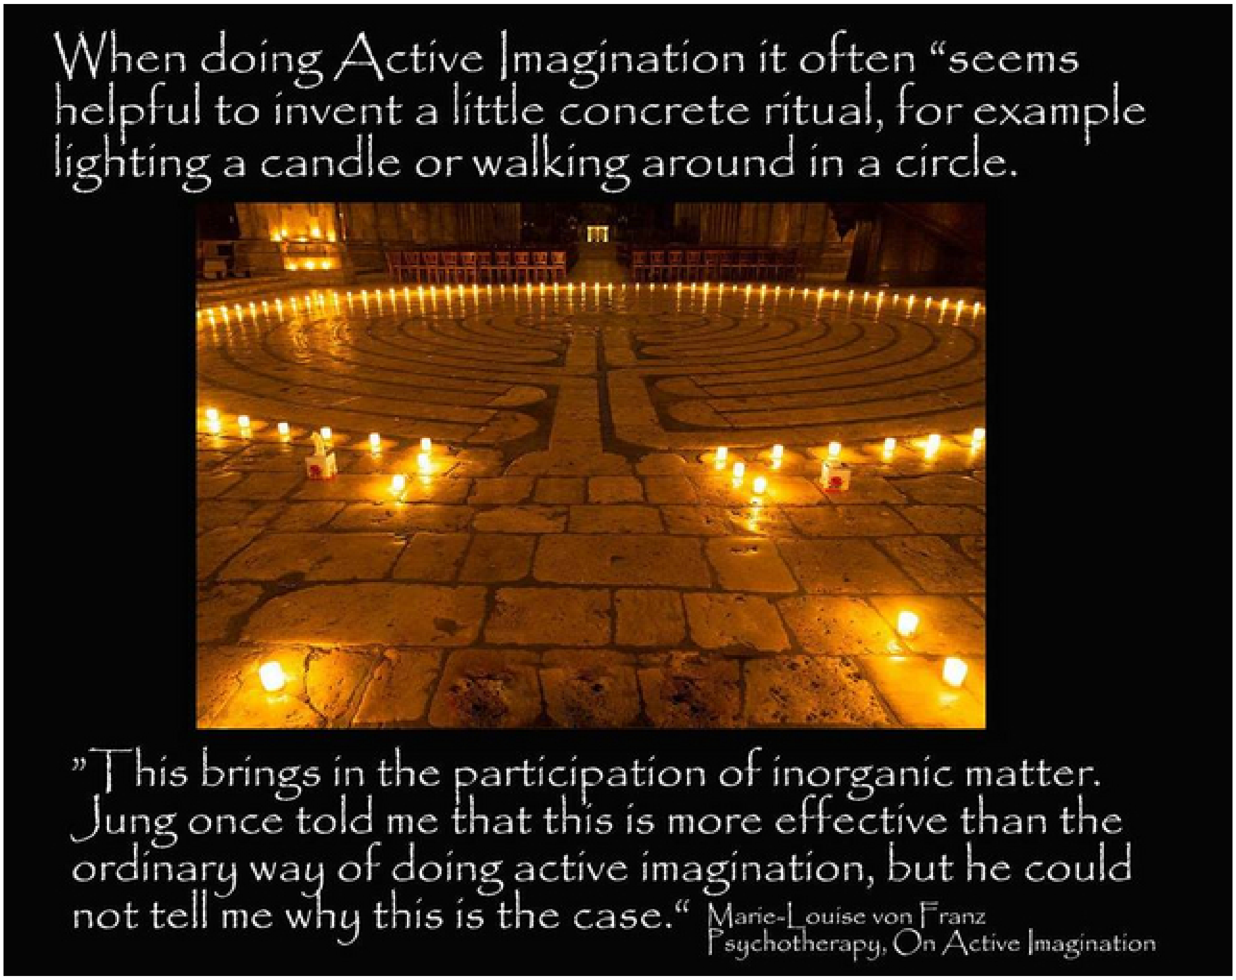
Christ, Pantocrator. St. Catherine's Monastery. 6th-7th century AD.



“We see three dimensions but the 4th is invisible..

Intuition is never tangible and we know as much of it as we do of a 4th dimension.”

C.G. Jung, E.T.H. Vol II



When doing Active Imagination it often “seems helpful to invent a little concrete ritual, for example lighting a candle or walking around in a circle.

”This brings in the participation of inorganic matter. Jung once told me that this is more effective than the ordinary way of doing active imagination, but he could not tell me why this is the case.“ Marie-Louise von Franz
Psychotherapy, On Active Imagination

The radiance of the Apollonian mind moves everywhere the Muse is.

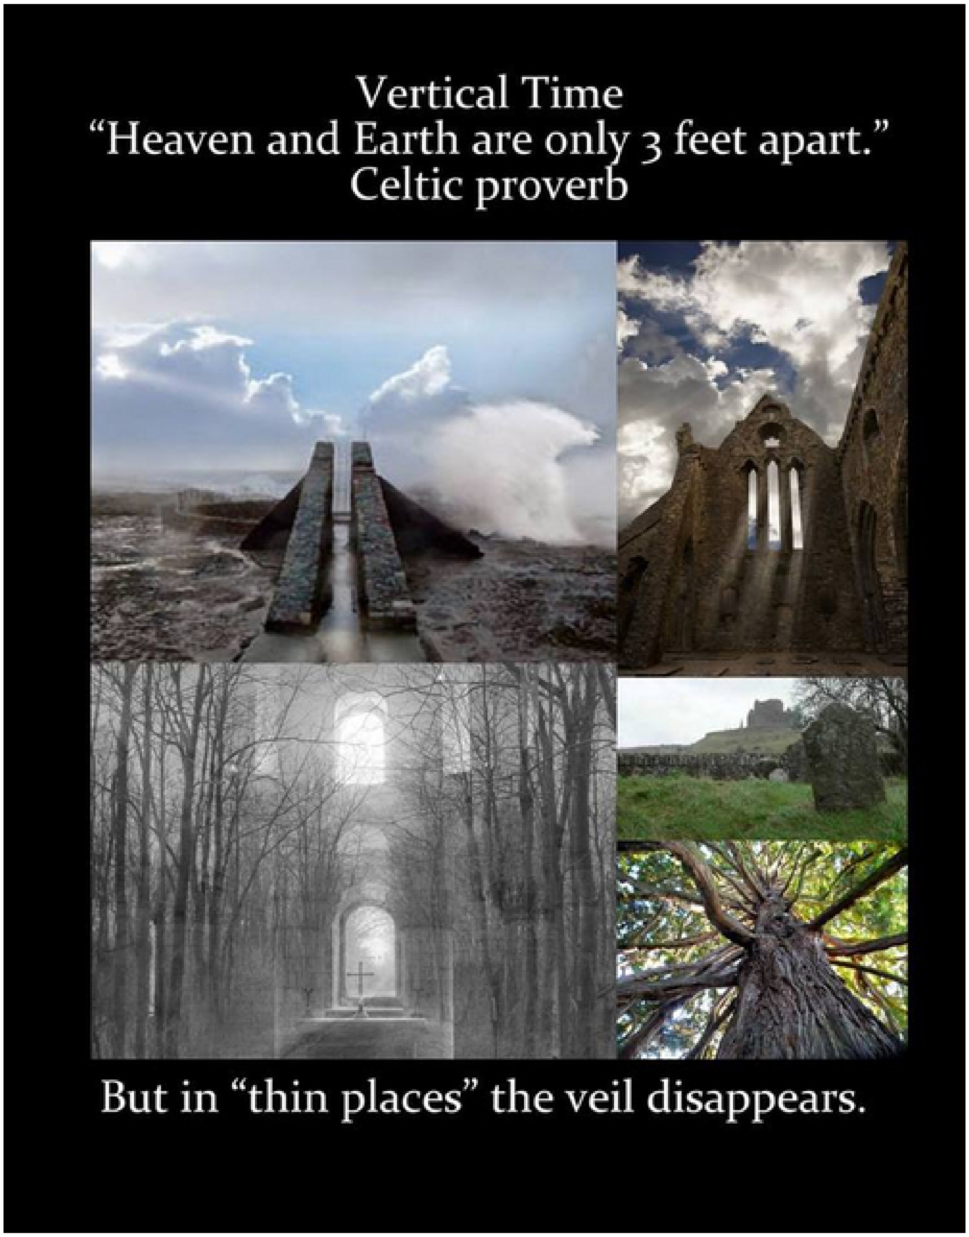
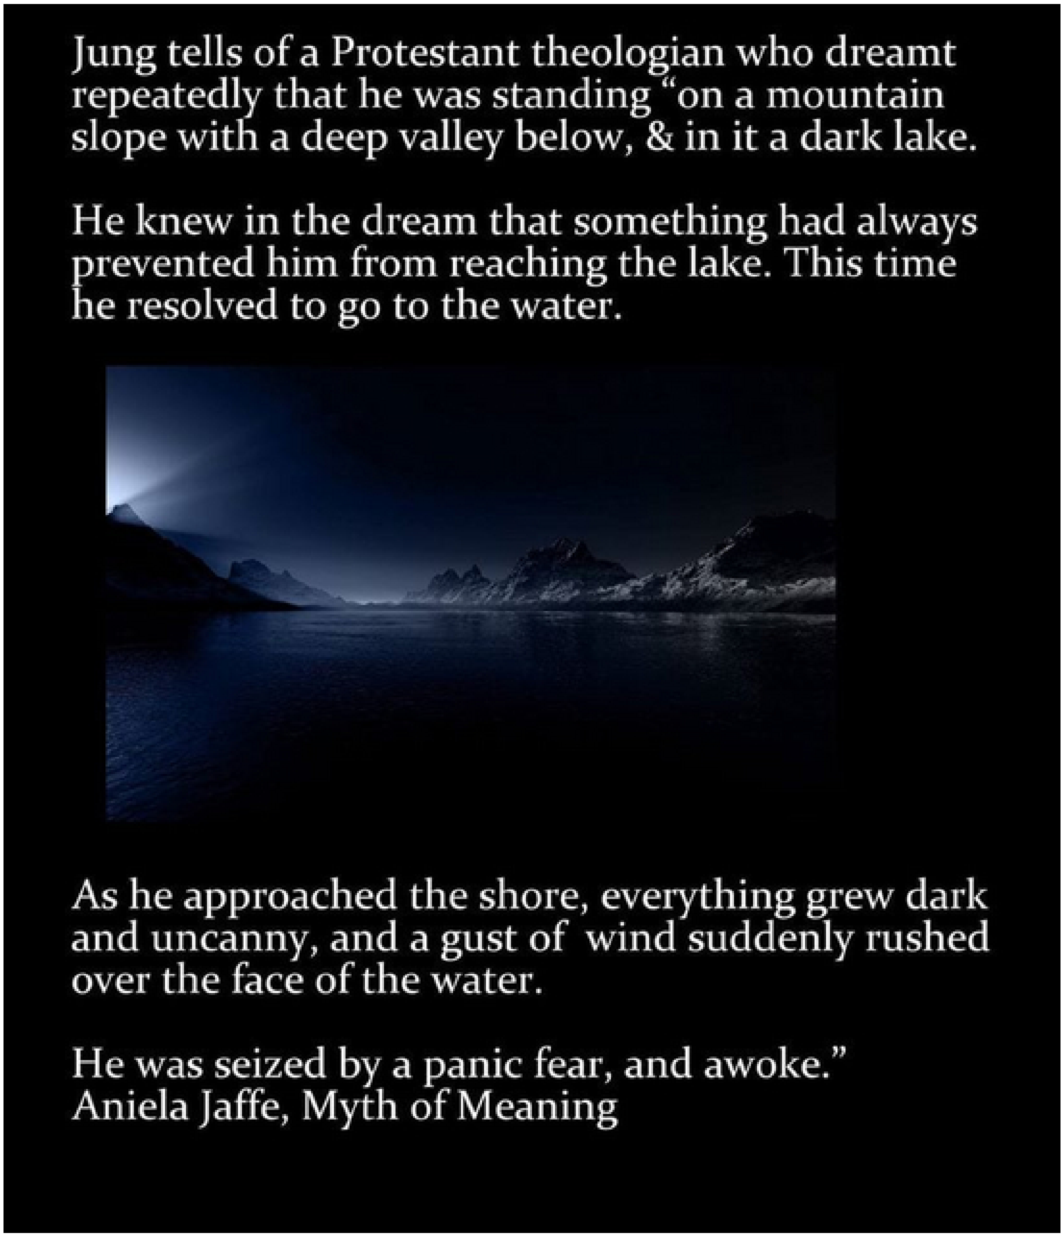
No personal sorrow is too great to be dissolved in an eternal image.
C.G. Jung,
ETH lecture, 03/01/1935



Vertical Time
“Heaven and Earth are only 3 feet apart.”
Celtic proverb

But in “thin places” the veil disappears.

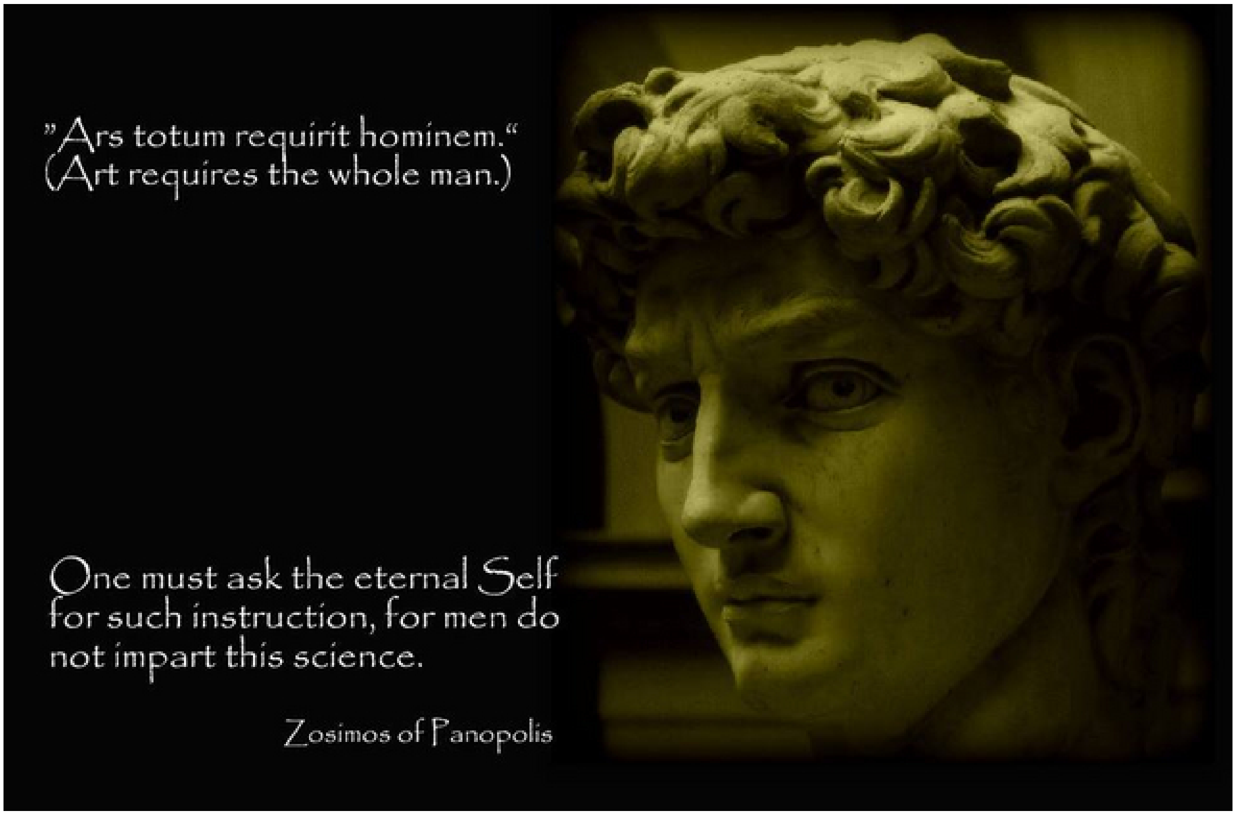


Jung tells of a Protestant theologian who dreamt repeatedly that he was standing "on a mountain slope with a deep valley below, & in it a dark lake.

He knew in the dream that something had always prevented him from reaching the lake. This time he resolved to go to the water.

As he approached the shore, everything grew dark and uncanny, and a gust of wind suddenly rushed over the face of the water.

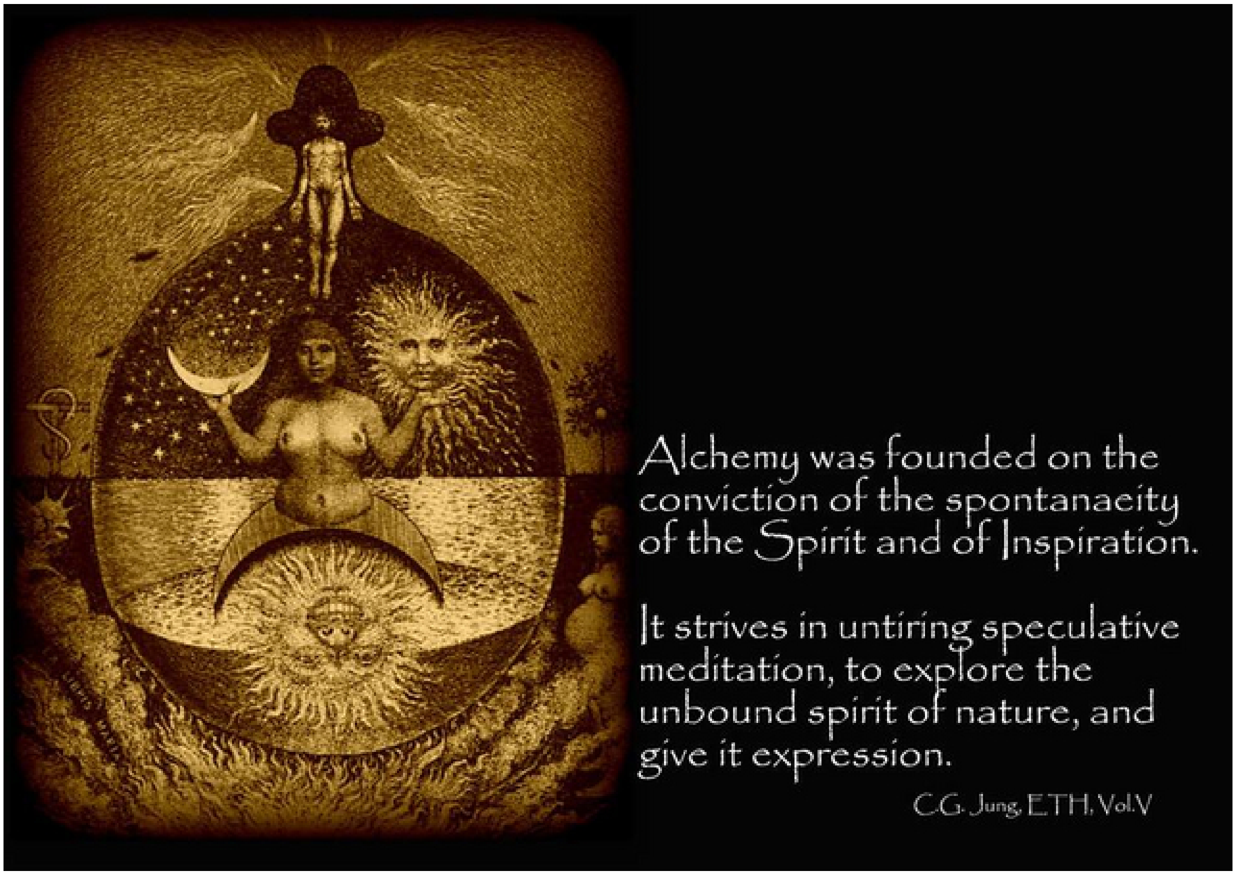
He was seized by a panic fear, and awoke."
Aniela Jaffe, Myth of Meaning



"Ars totum requirit hominem."
(Art requires the whole man.)

One must ask the eternal Self for such instruction, for men do not impart this science.

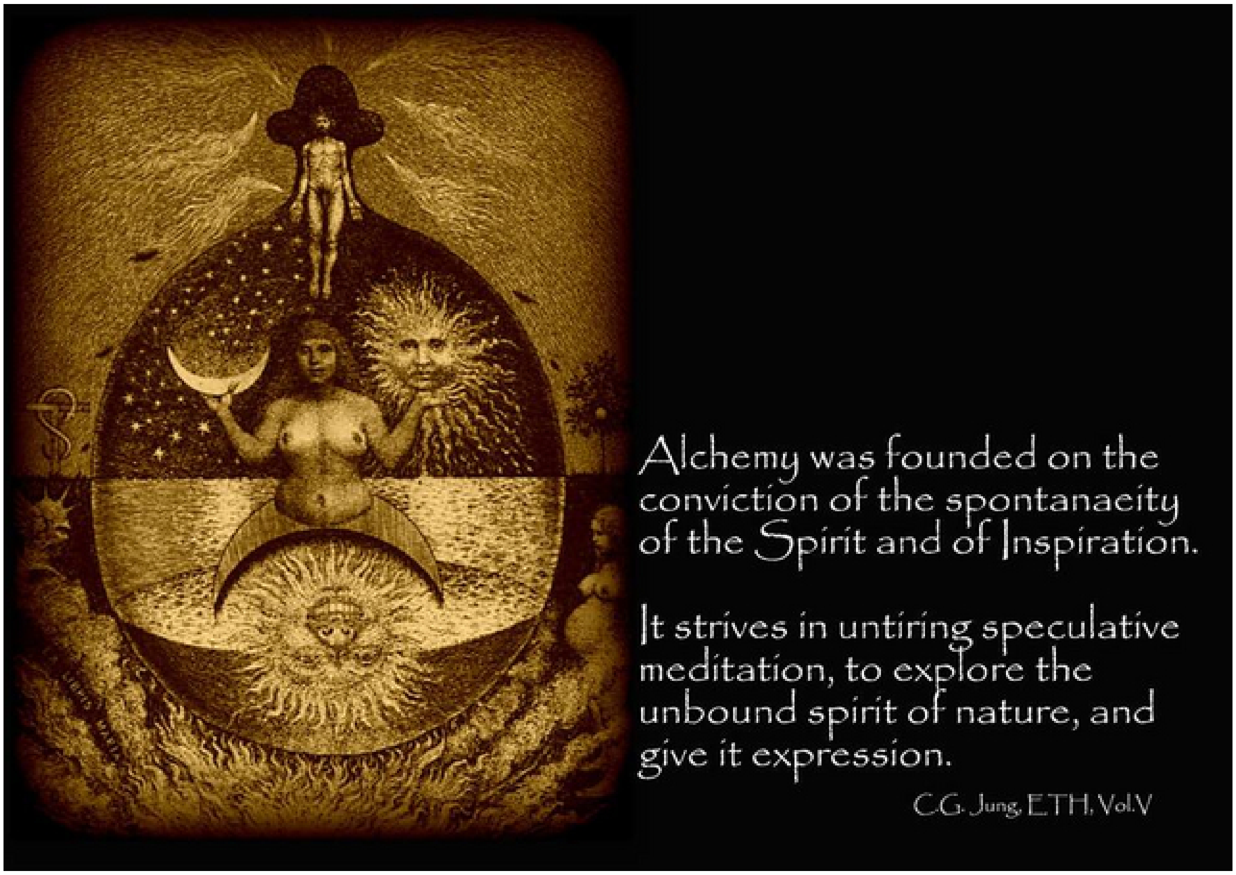
Zosimos of Panopolis



Alchemy was founded on the conviction of the spontanaeity of the Spirit and of Inspiration.

It strives in untiring speculative meditation, to explore the unbound spirit of nature, and give it expression.

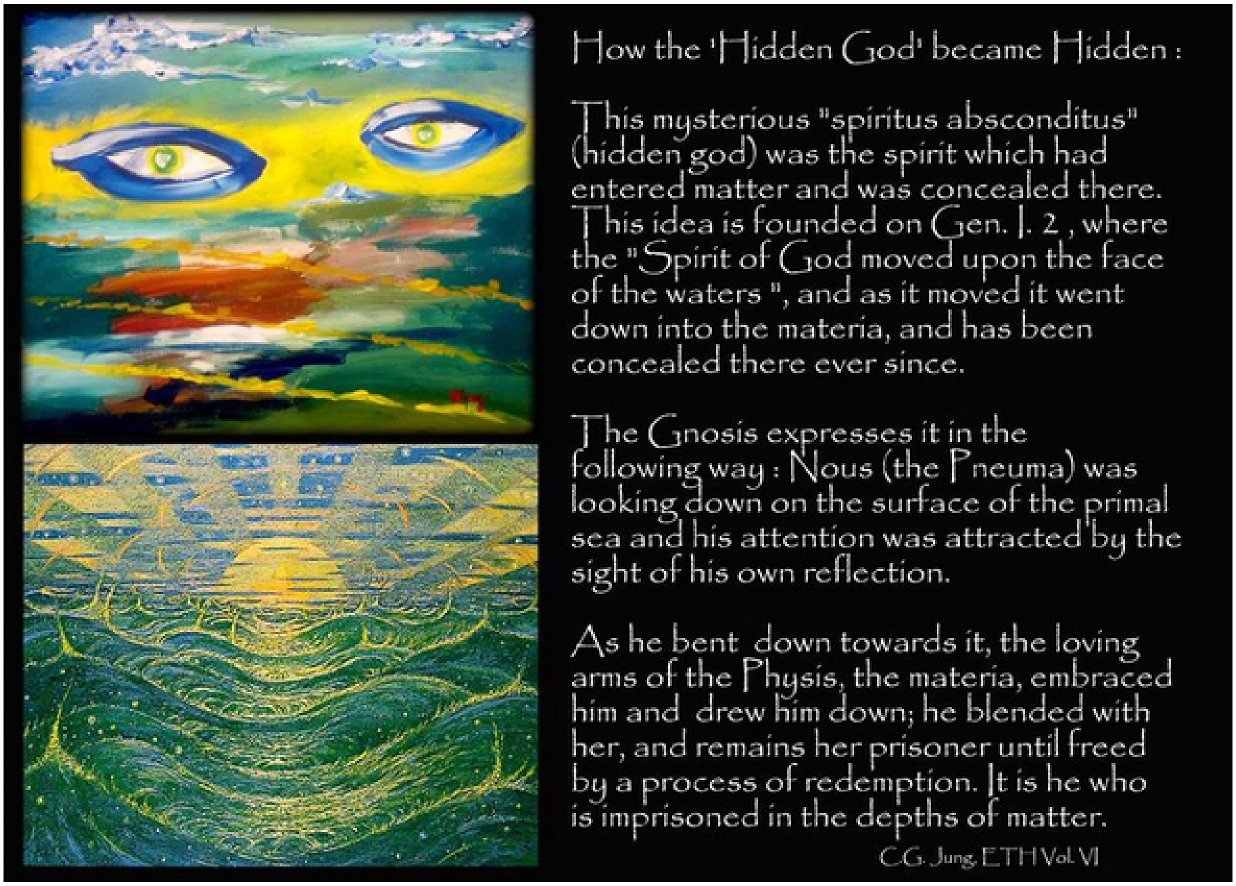
C.G. Jung, E.T.H., Vol.V



Alchemy was founded on the conviction of the spontanaeity of the Spirit and of Inspiration.

It strives in untiring speculative meditation, to explore the unbound spirit of nature, and give it expression.

C.G. Jung, E.T.H. Vol.V



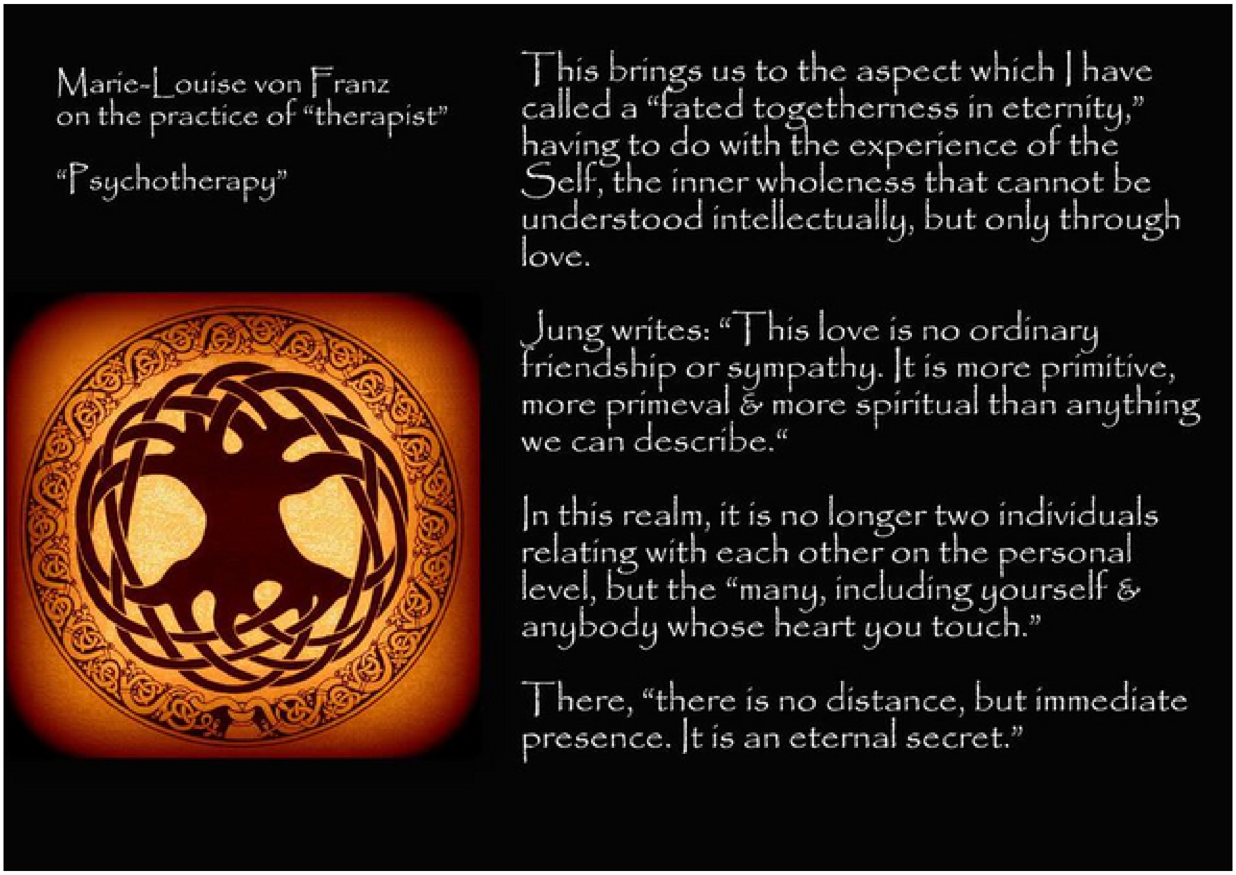
How the 'Hidden God' became Hidden :

This mysterious "spiritus absconditus" (hidden god) was the spirit which had entered matter and was concealed there. This idea is founded on Gen. I. 2 , where the "Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters ", and as it moved it went down into the materia, and has been concealed there ever since.

The Gnosis expresses it in the following way : Nous (the Pneuma) was looking down on the surface of the primal sea and his attention was attracted by the sight of his own reflection.

As he bent down towards it, the loving arms of the Physis, the materia, embraced him and drew him down; he blended with her, and remains her prisoner until freed by a process of redemption. It is he who is imprisoned in the depths of matter.

C.G. Jung, ETH Vol. VI



Marie-Louise von Franz
on the practice of "therapist"

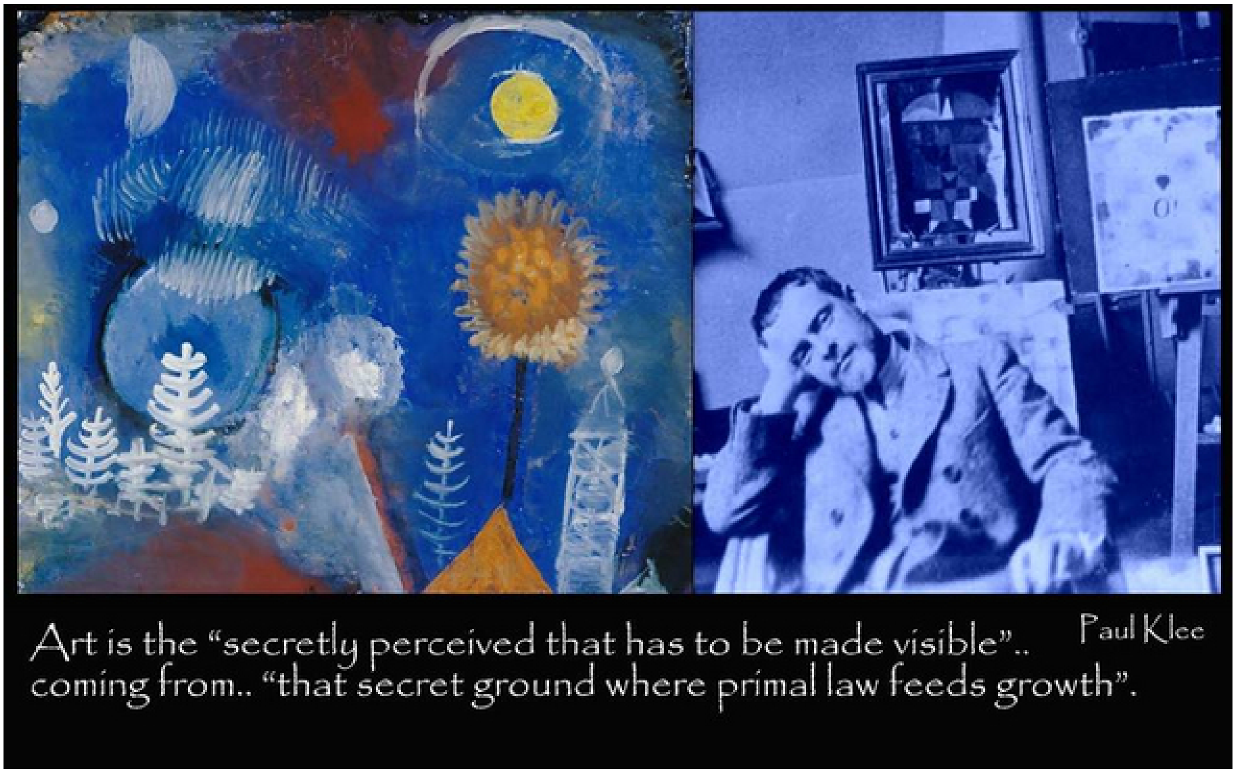
"Psychotherapy"

This brings us to the aspect which I have called a "fated togetherness in eternity," having to do with the experience of the Self, the inner wholeness that cannot be understood intellectually, but only through love.

Jung writes: "This love is no ordinary friendship or sympathy. It is more primitive, more primeval & more spiritual than anything we can describe."

In this realm, it is no longer two individuals relating with each other on the personal level, but the "many, including yourself & anybody whose heart you touch."

There, "there is no distance, but immediate presence. It is an eternal secret."



Art is the "secretly perceived that has to be made visible".. coming from.. "that secret ground where primal law feeds growth".

Paul Klee

Awed by her splendor stars near the lovely moon cover their own bright faces when she is roundest and lights earth with her silver

Sappho of Lesbos
630 - 570 BCE

The body has nothing to do with matter.

The body is the direct psychic experience of the body. Psychic experiences are the images of the body which are reflected in the psyche.

How I experience the body from within is a totally different question. I am inside the body as a psyche.

The body is a psychological condition, a peculiar form of consciousness.

C.G. Jung
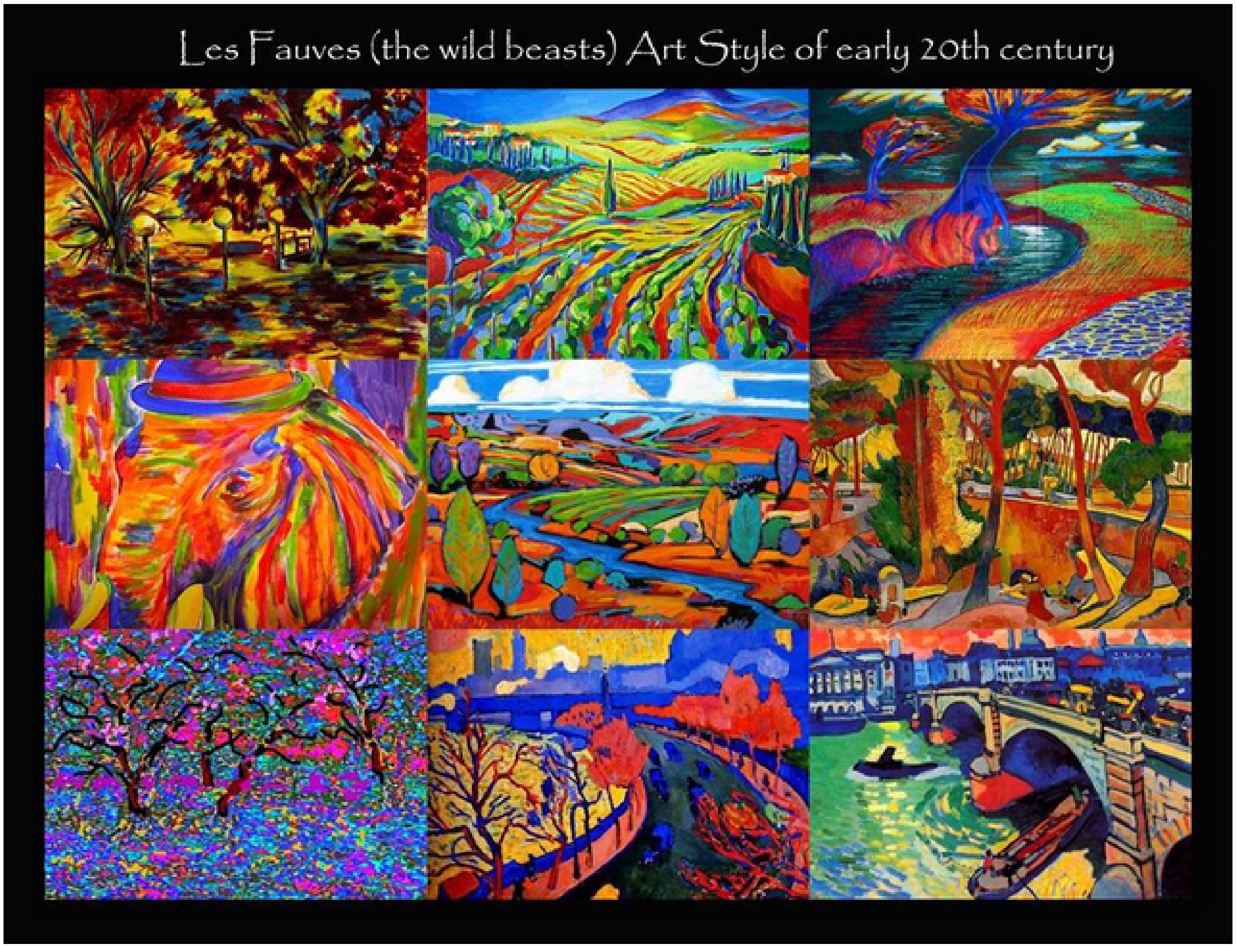
ETH. Vol. III



Les Fauves (the wild beasts) Art Style of early 20th century

The utterances of the heart-- unlike those of the discriminating intellect--always relate to the whole.

The heartstrings sing like an Aeolian harp only to the gentle breath of a premonitory mood, which does not drown the song but listens.

What the heart hears are the great things that span our whole lives, the experiences which we do nothing to arrange but which we ourselves suffer.

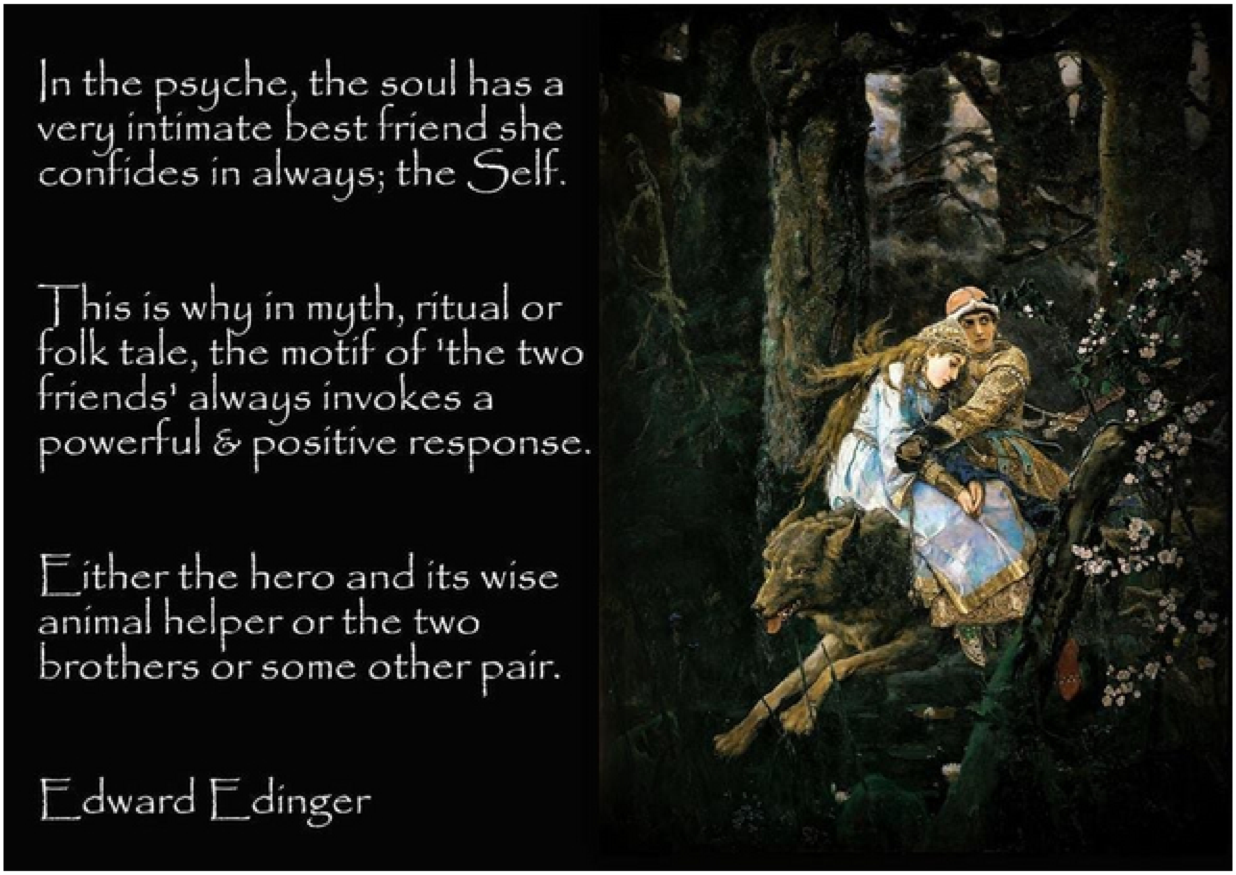
C.G. Jung, CW18

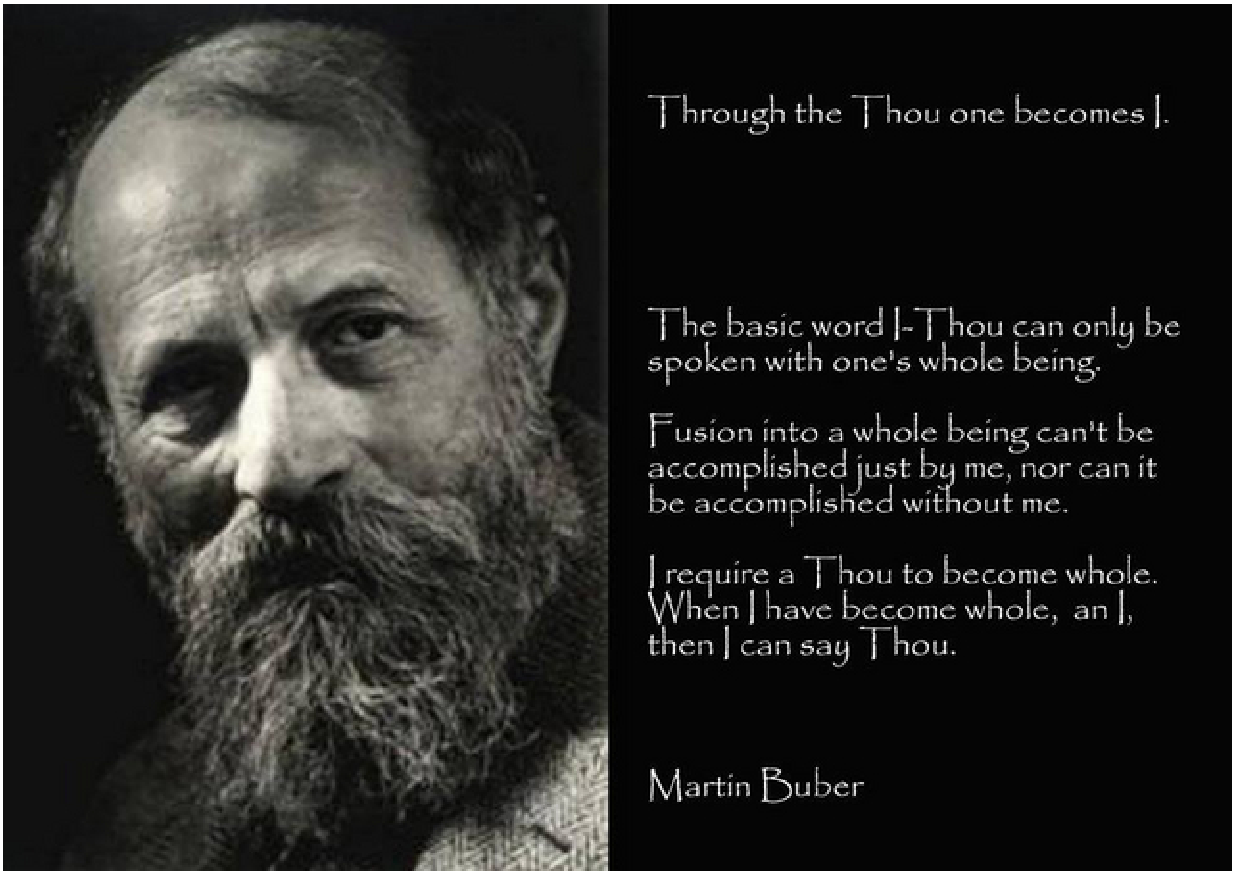


In the psyche, the soul has a very intimate best friend she confides in always; the Self.

This is why in myth, ritual or folk tale, the motif of 'the two friends' always invokes a powerful & positive response.

Either the hero and its wise animal helper or the two brothers or some other pair.

Edward Edinger



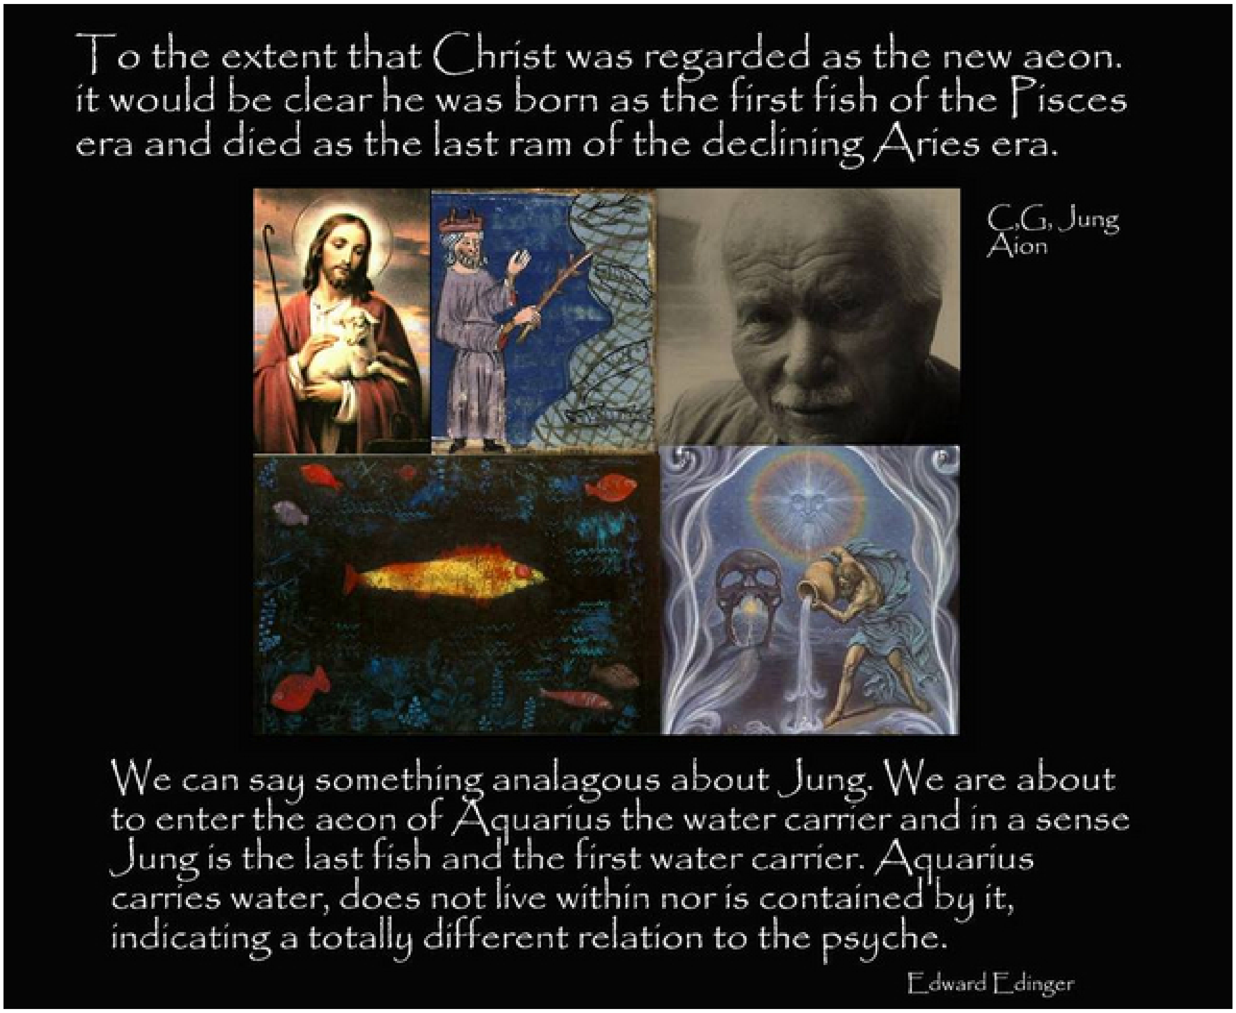
Through the Thou one becomes I.

The basic word I-Thou can only be spoken with one's whole being.

Fusion into a whole being can't be accomplished just by me, nor can it be accomplished without me.

I require a Thou to become whole.
When I have become whole, an I,
then I can say Thou.

Martin Buber

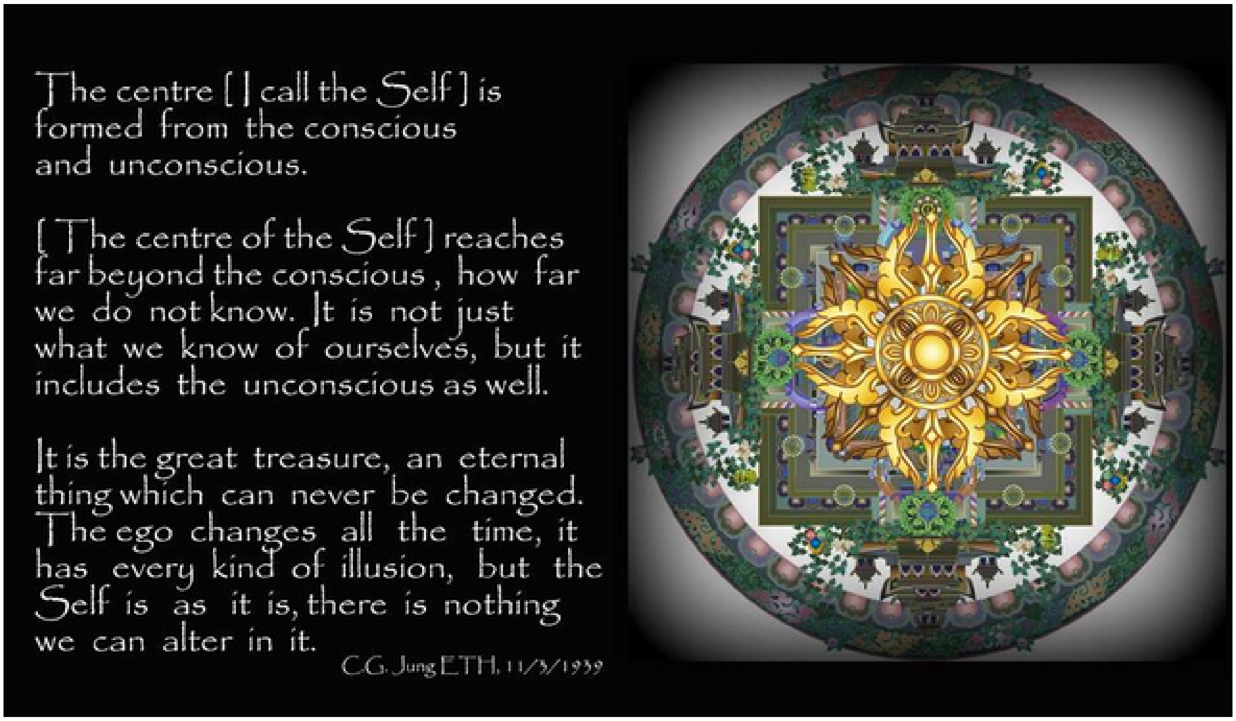


To the extent that Christ was regarded as the new aeon. it would be clear he was born as the first fish of the Pisces era and died as the last ram of the declining Aries era.

C,G, Jung
Aion

We can say something analagous about Jung. We are about to enter the aeon of Aquarius the water carrier and in a sense Jung is the last fish and the first water carrier. Aquarius carries water, does not live within nor is contained by it, indicating a totally different relation to the psyche.

Edward Edinger

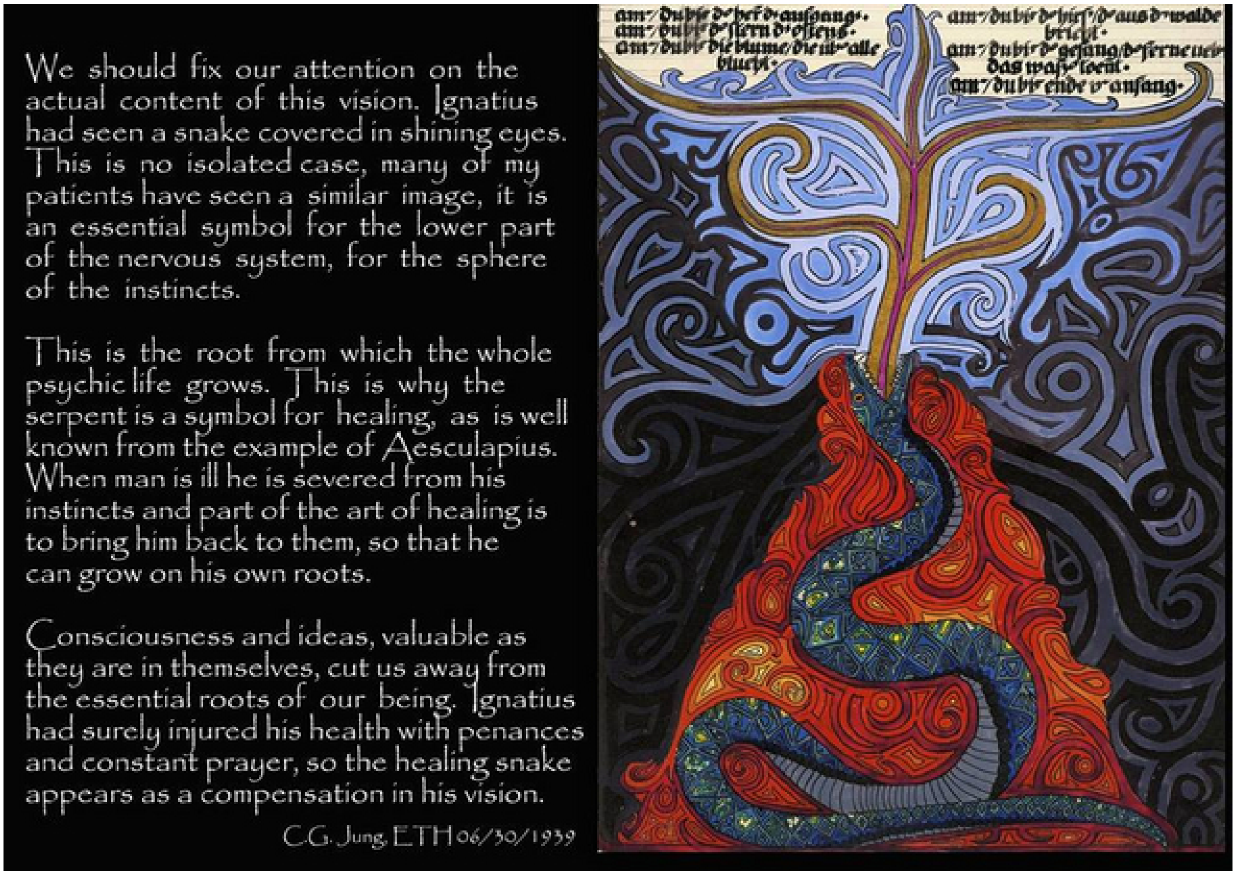


The centre [I call the Self] is formed from the conscious and unconscious.

[The centre of the Self] reaches far beyond the conscious , how far we do not know. It is not just what we know of ourselves, but it includes the unconscious as well.

It is the great treasure, an eternal thing which can never be changed. The ego changes all the time, it has every kind of illusion, but the Self is as it is, there is nothing we can alter in it.

C.G. Jung ETH, 11/3/1939

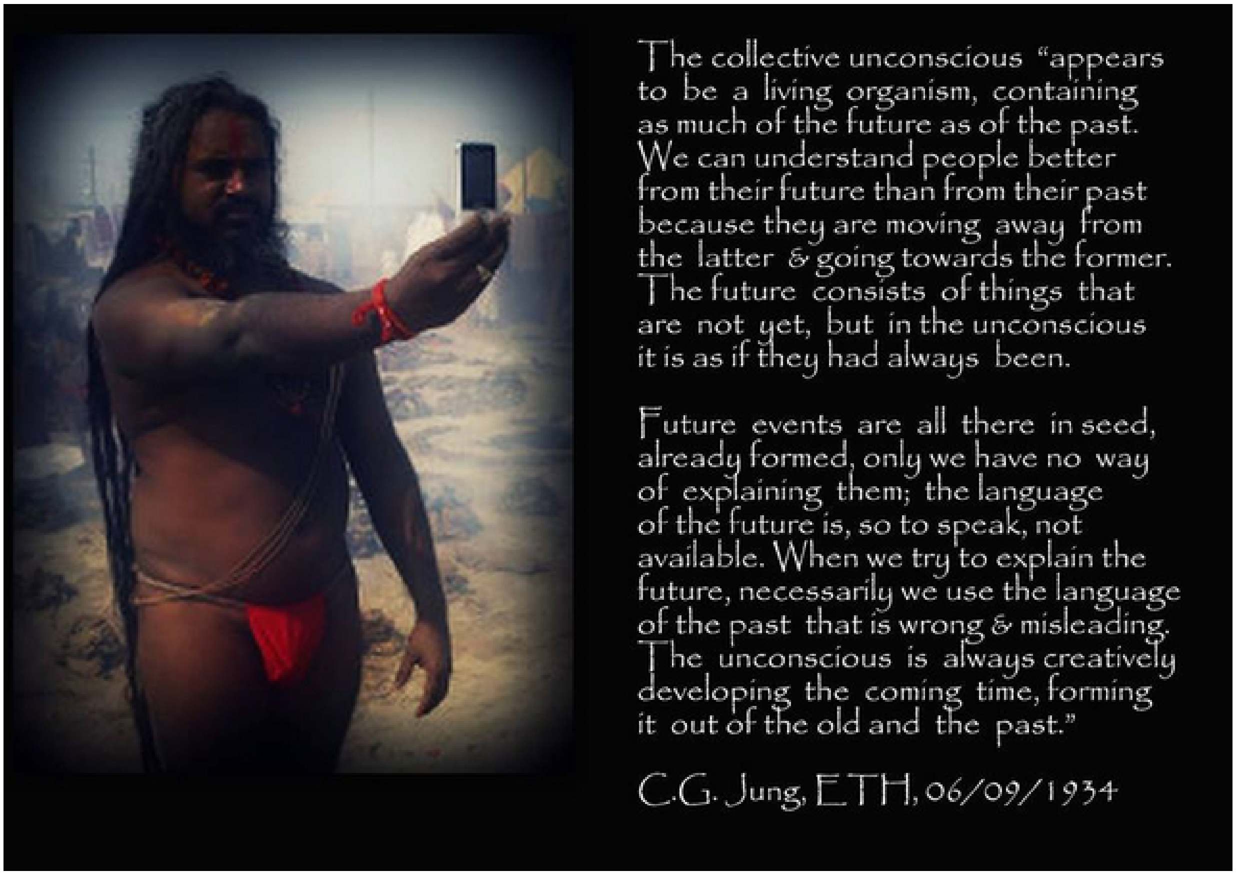


We should fix our attention on the actual content of this vision. Ignatius had seen a snake covered in shining eyes. This is no isolated case, many of my patients have seen a similar image, it is an essential symbol for the lower part of the nervous system, for the sphere of the instincts.

This is the root from which the whole psychic life grows. This is why the serpent is a symbol for healing, as is well known from the example of Aesculapius. When man is ill he is severed from his instincts and part of the art of healing is to bring him back to them, so that he can grow on his own roots.

Consciousness and ideas, valuable as they are in themselves, cut us away from the essential roots of our being. Ignatius had surely injured his health with penances and constant prayer, so the healing snake appears as a compensation in his vision.

C.G. Jung, ETH 06/30/1939

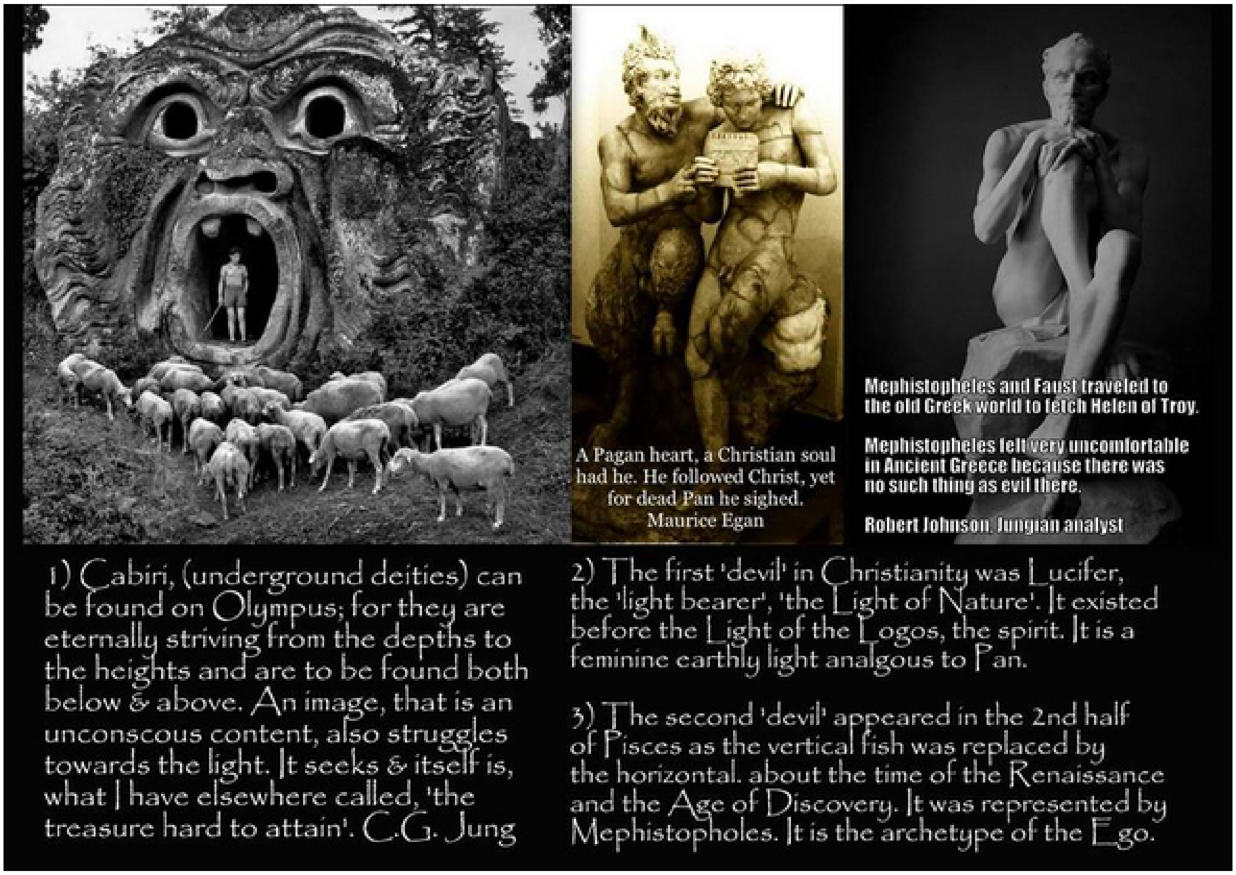


The collective unconscious "appears to be a living organism, containing as much of the future as of the past. We can understand people better from their future than from their past because they are moving away from the latter & going towards the former. The future consists of things that are not yet, but in the unconscious it is as if they had always been.

Future events are all there in seed, already formed, only we have no way of explaining them; the language of the future is, so to speak, not available. When we try to explain the future, necessarily we use the language of the past that is wrong & misleading. The unconscious is always creatively developing the coming time, forming it out of the old and the past."

C.G. Jung, ETH, 06/09/1934

[85]



A Pagan heart, a Christian soul had he. He followed Christ, yet for dead Pan he sighed.
Maurice Egan

Mephistopheles and Faust traveled to the old Greek world to fetch Helen of Troy.

Mephistopheles felt very uncomfortable in Ancient Greece because there was no such thing as evil there.

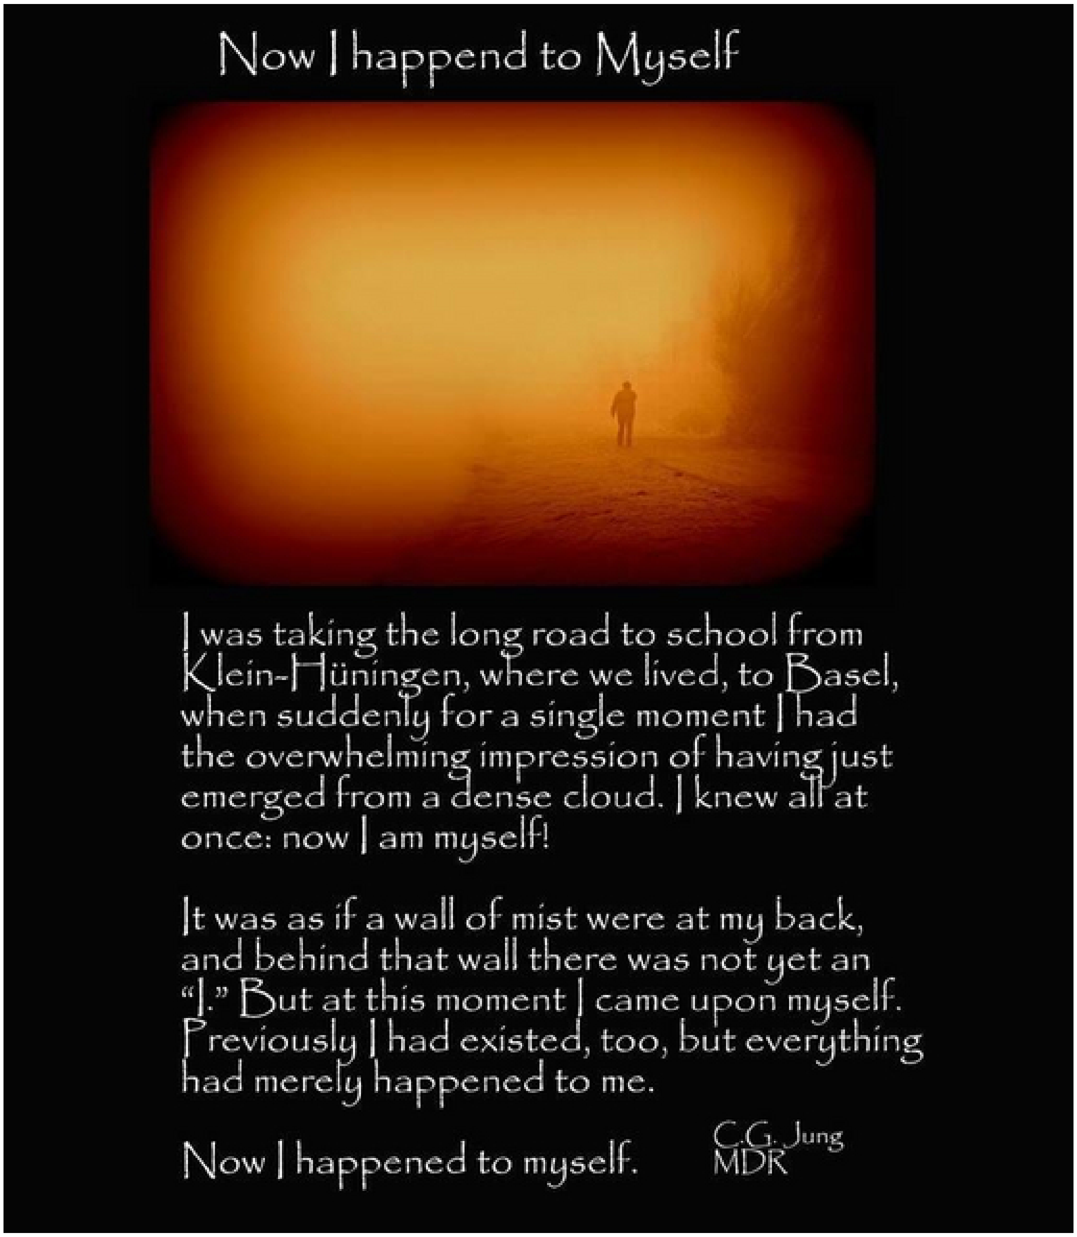
Robert Johnson, Jungian analyst

1) Cabiri, (underground deities) can be found on Olympus; for they are eternally striving from the depths to the heights and are to be found both below & above. An image, that is an unconscous content, also struggles towards the light. It seeks & itself is, what I have elsewhere called, 'the treasure hard to attain'. C.G. Jung

2) The first 'devil' in Christianity was Lucifer, the 'light bearer', 'the Light of Nature'. It existed before the Light of the Logos, the spirit. It is a feminine earthly light analgous to Pan.

3) The second 'devil' appeared in the 2nd half of Pisces as the vertical fish was replaced by the horizontal. about the time of the Renaissance and the Age of Discovery. It was represented by Mephistopholes. It is the archetype of the Ego.

[86]



Now I happend to Myself

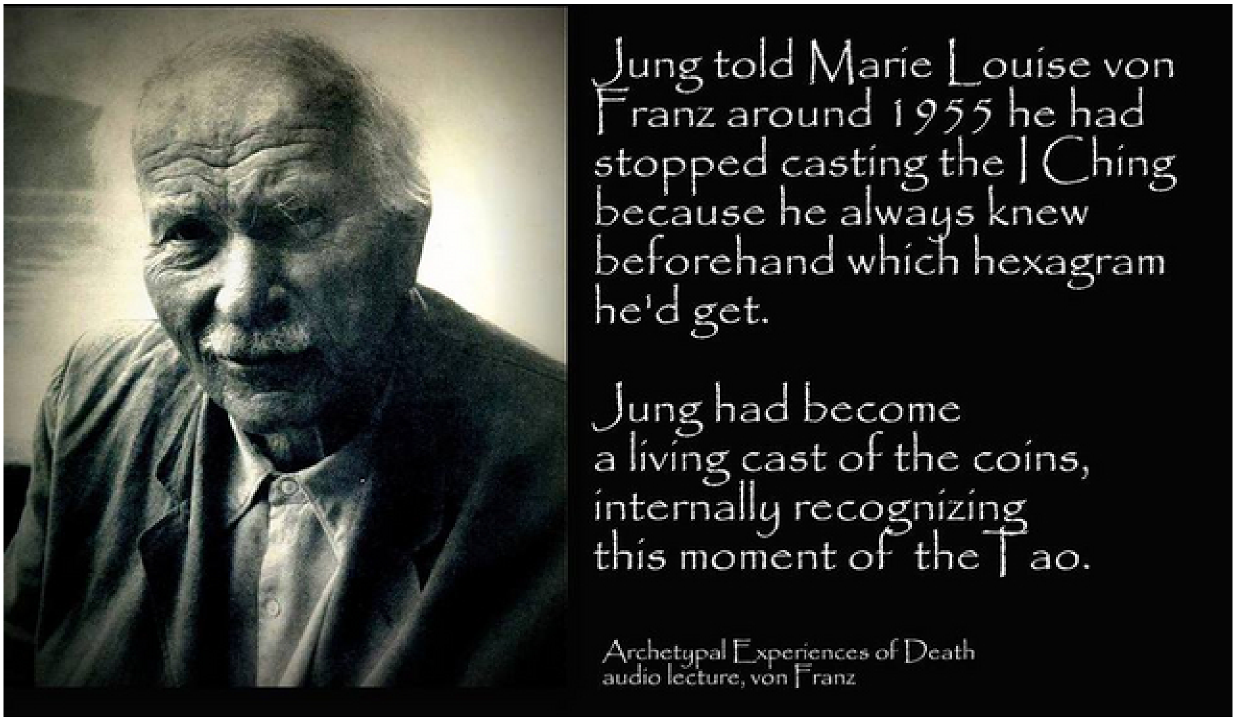
I was taking the long road to school from Klein-Hüningen, where we lived, to Basel, when suddenly for a single moment I had the overwhelming impression of having just emerged from a dense cloud. I knew all at once: now I am myself!

It was as if a wall of mist were at my back, and behind that wall there was not yet an "I." But at this moment I came upon myself. Previously I had existed, too, but everything had merely happened to me.

Now I happened to myself.

C.G. Jung
MDR

[87]



Jung told Marie Louise von Franz around 1955 he had stopped casting the I Ching because he always knew beforehand which hexagram he'd get.

Jung had become a living cast of the coins, internally recognizing this moment of the Tao.

Archetypal Experiences of Death
audio lecture, von Franz

..and often has my mother said as on her lap, I lay my head,
"I fear for time you were not made but for eternity." Branwell Bronte

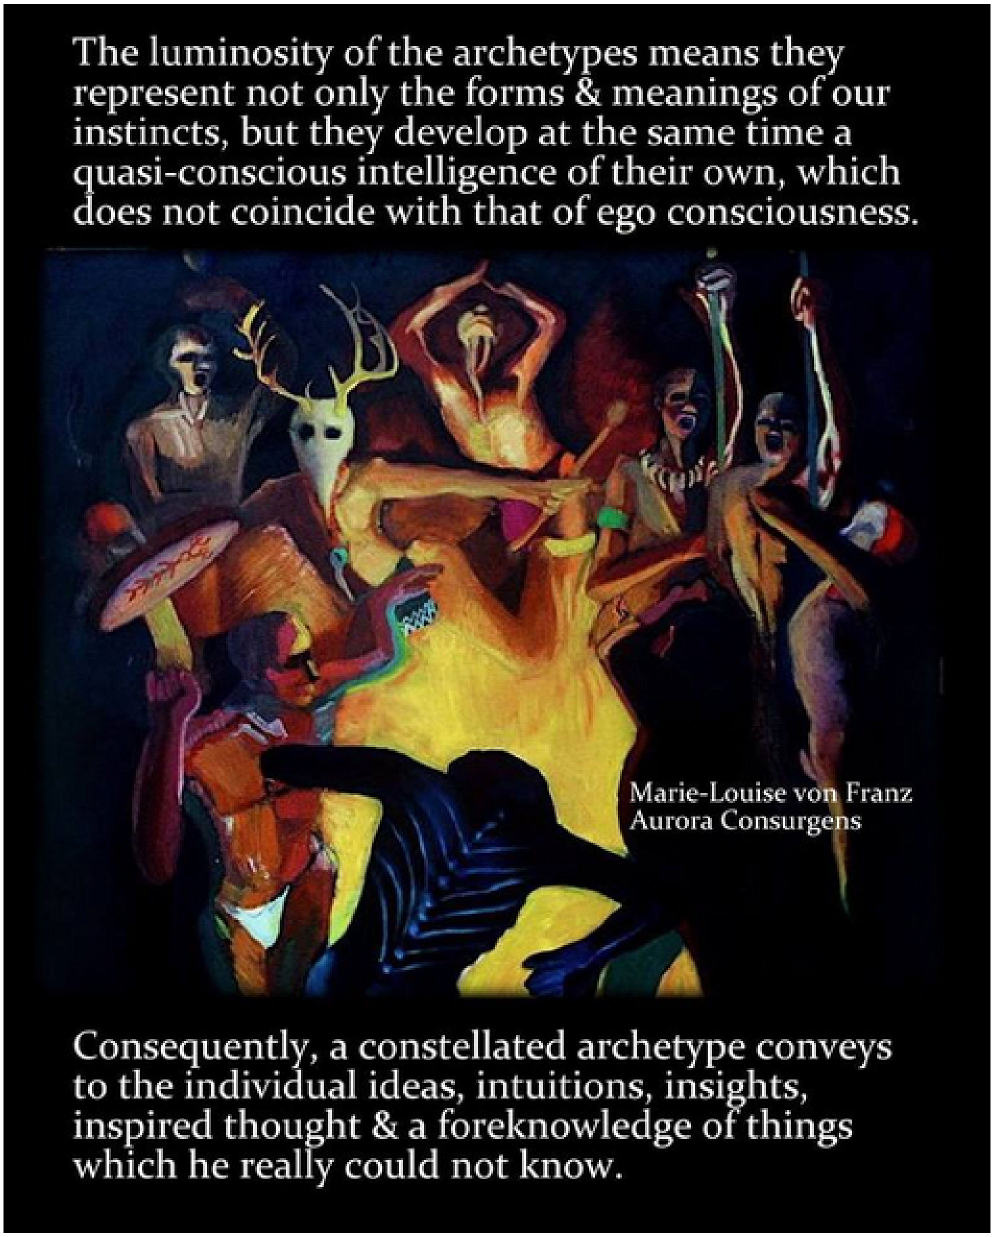
TRANSLATE THIS DARKNESS
The Life of Christiana Morgan, the Veiled Woman in Jung's Circle
CLAIRE DOUGLAS

The intelligence of the dream can only be compared to other miracles of nature : the ingenious organization of the genetic code, the biology of molecular processes, or the development of higher organisms altogether.

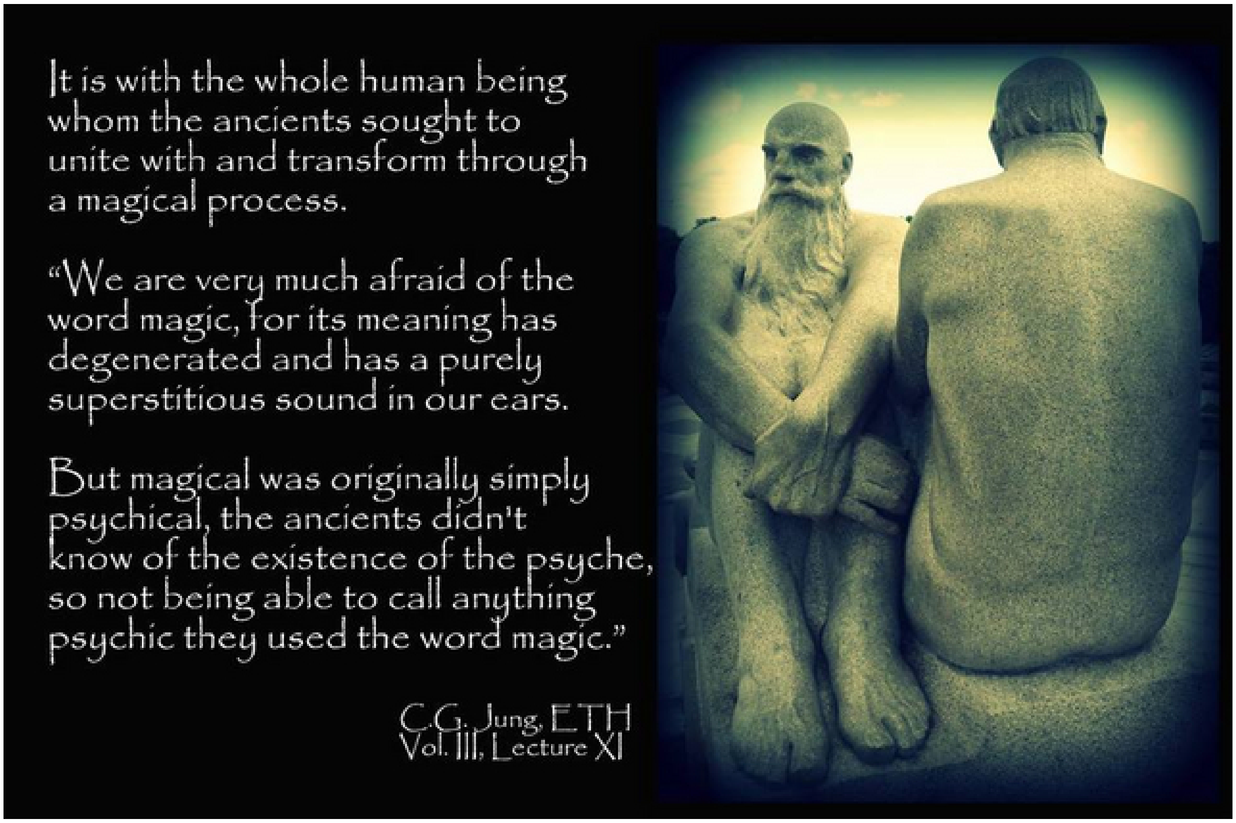
Marie-Louise von Franz
Archetypal Dimensions of the Psyche



The luminosity of the archetypes means they represent not only the forms & meanings of our instincts, but they develop at the same time a quasi-conscious intelligence of their own, which does not coincide with that of ego consciousness.

Marie-Louise von Franz
Aurora Consurgens

Consequently, a constellated archetype conveys to the individual ideas, intuitions, insights, inspired thought & a foreknowledge of things which he really could not know.

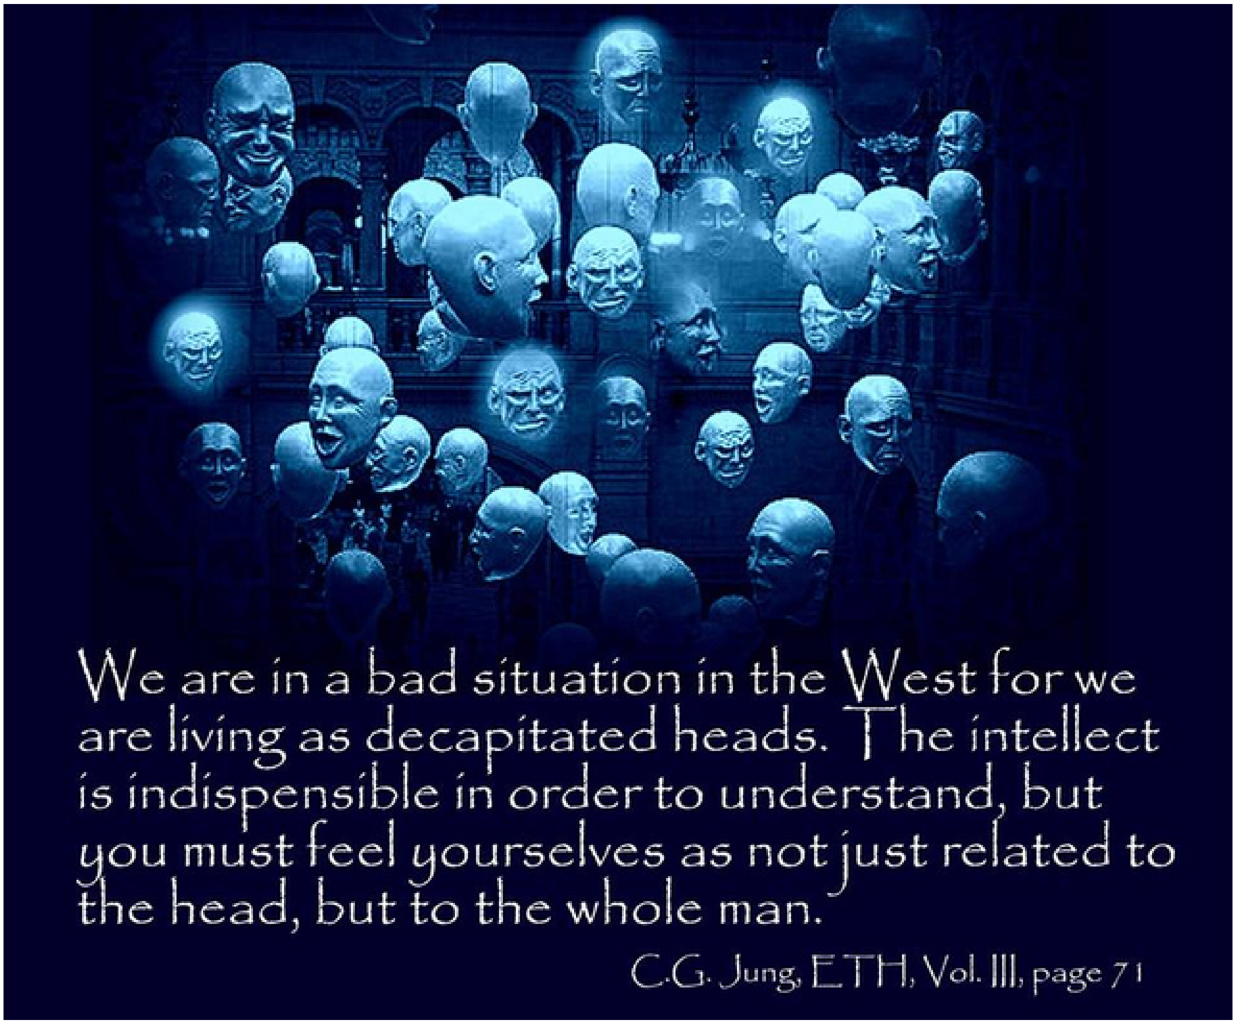


It is with the whole human being whom the ancients sought to unite with and transform through a magical process.

"We are very much afraid of the word magic, for its meaning has degenerated and has a purely superstitious sound in our ears.

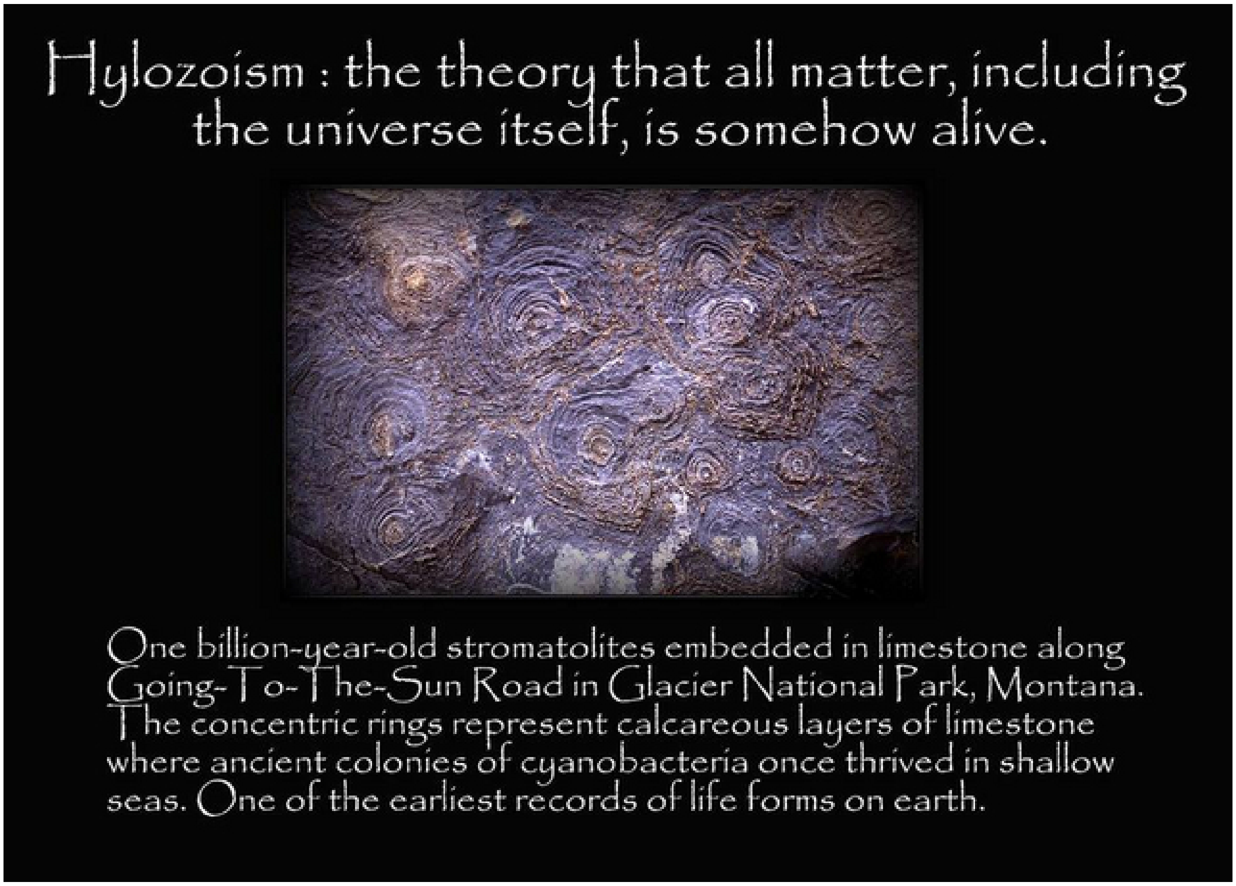
But magical was originally simply psychical, the ancients didn't know of the existence of the psyche, so not being able to call anything psychic they used the word magic."

C.G. Jung, ETH
Vol. III, Lecture XI



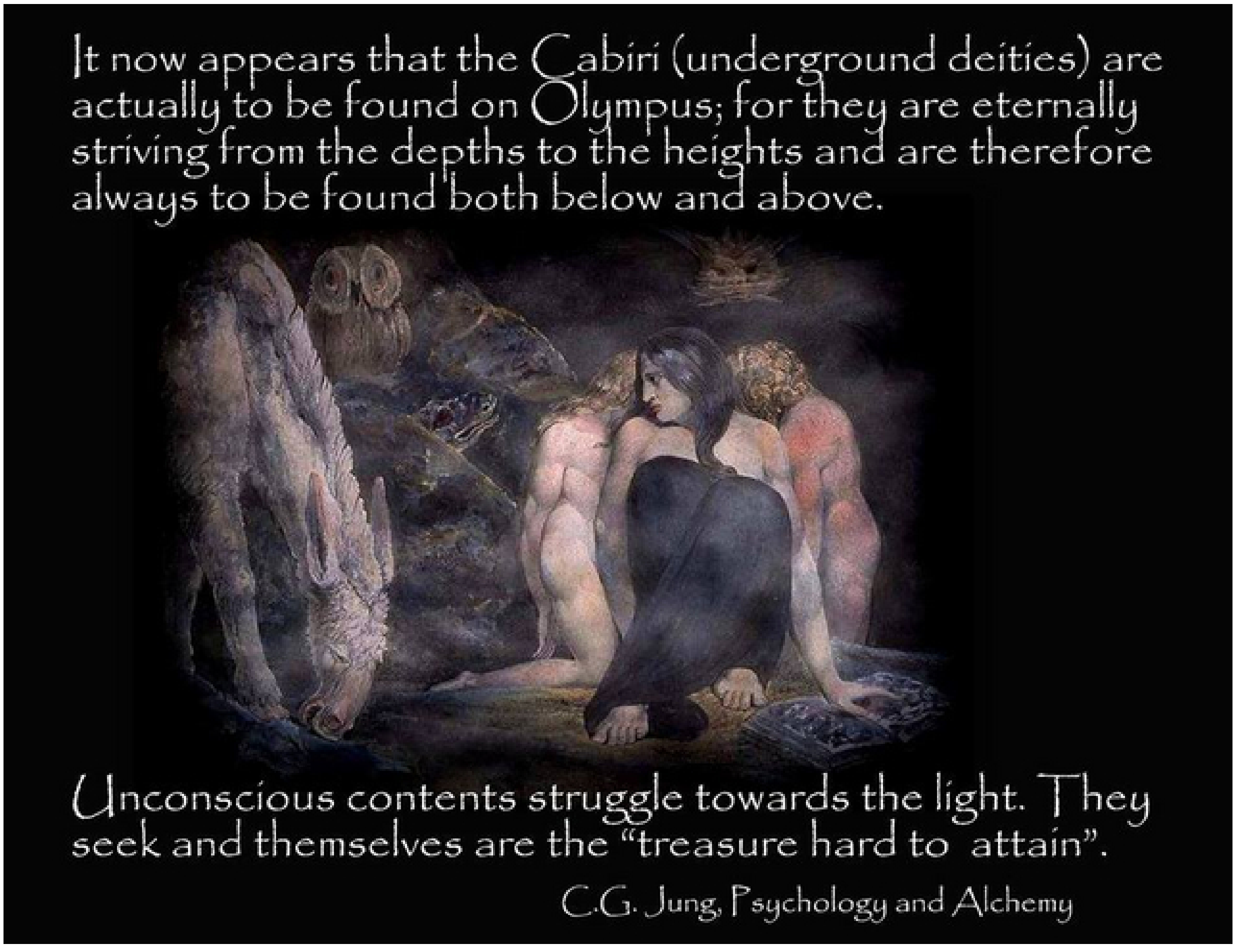
We are in a bad situation in the West for we are living as decapitated heads. The intellect is indispensible in order to understand, but you must feel yourselves as not just related to the head, but to the whole man.

C.G. Jung, ETH, Vol. III, page 71



Hylozoism : the theory that all matter, including the universe itself, is somehow alive.

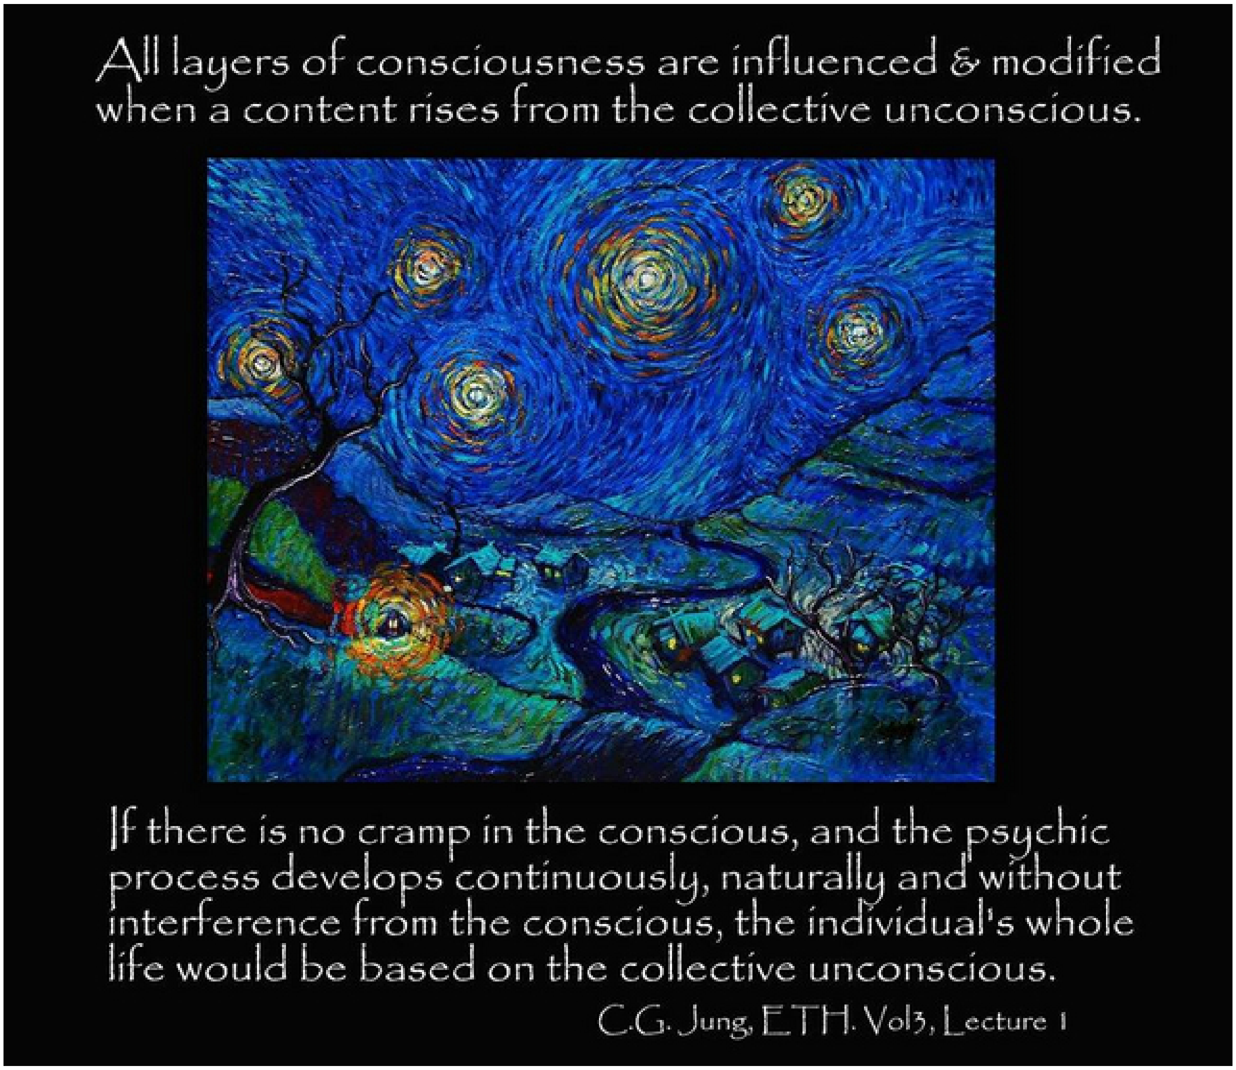
One billion-year-old stromatolites embedded in limestone along Going-To-The-Sun Road in Glacier National Park, Montana. The concentric rings represent calcareous layers of limestone where ancient colonies of cyanobacteria once thrived in shallow seas. One of the earliest records of life forms on earth.



It now appears that the Cabiri (underground deities) are actually to be found on Olympus; for they are eternally striving from the depths to the heights and are therefore always to be found both below and above.

Unconscious contents struggle towards the light. They seek and themselves are the “treasure hard to attain”.

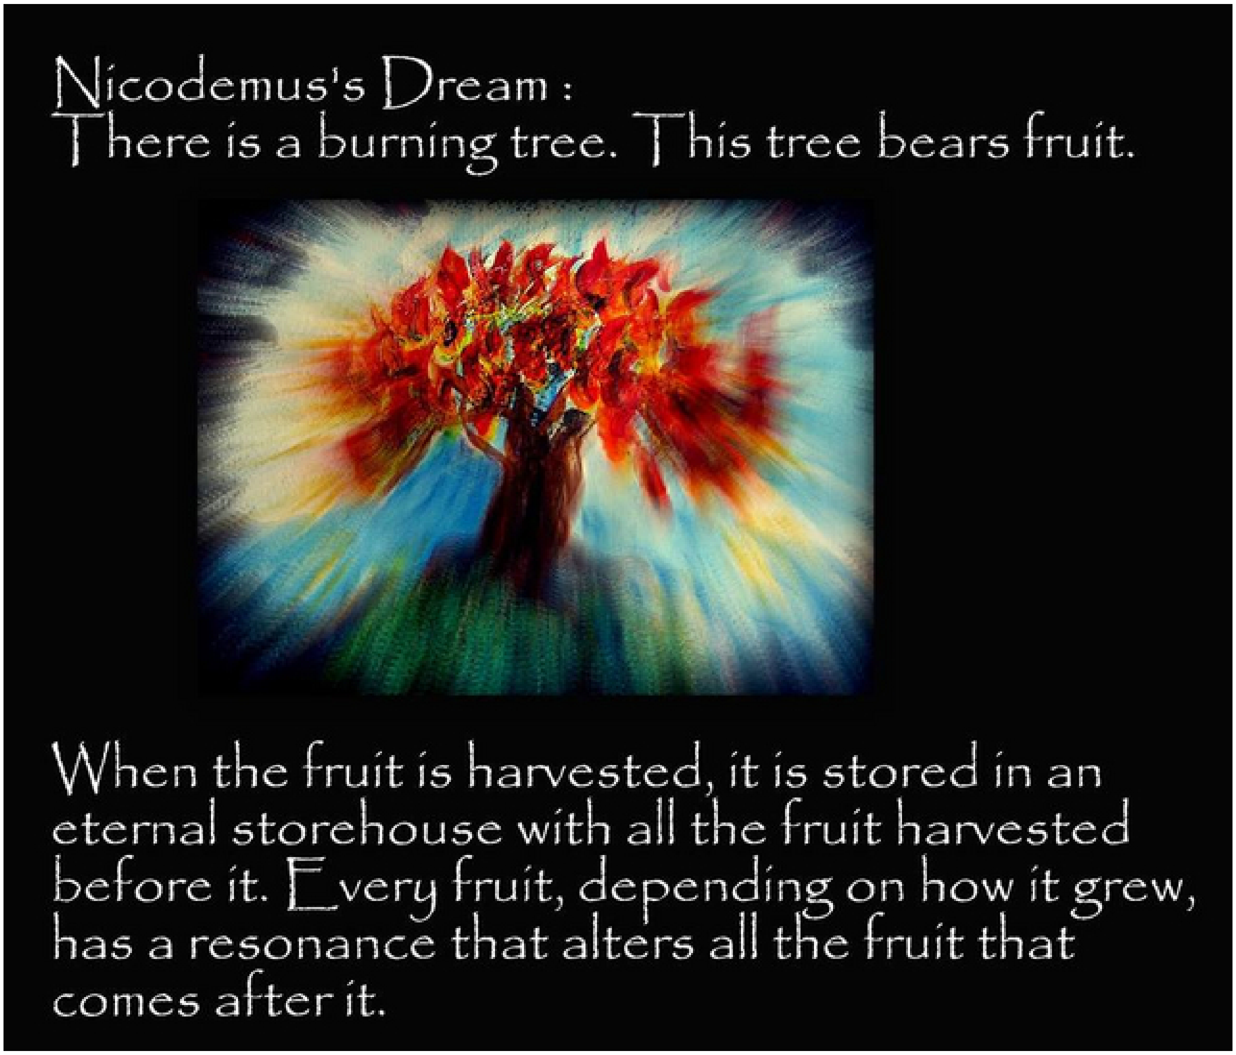
C.G. Jung, Psychology and Alchemy



All layers of consciousness are influenced & modified when a content rises from the collective unconscious.

If there is no cramp in the conscious, and the psychic process develops continuously, naturally and without interference from the conscious, the individual's whole life would be based on the collective unconscious.

C.G. Jung, ETH. Vol3, Lecture 1

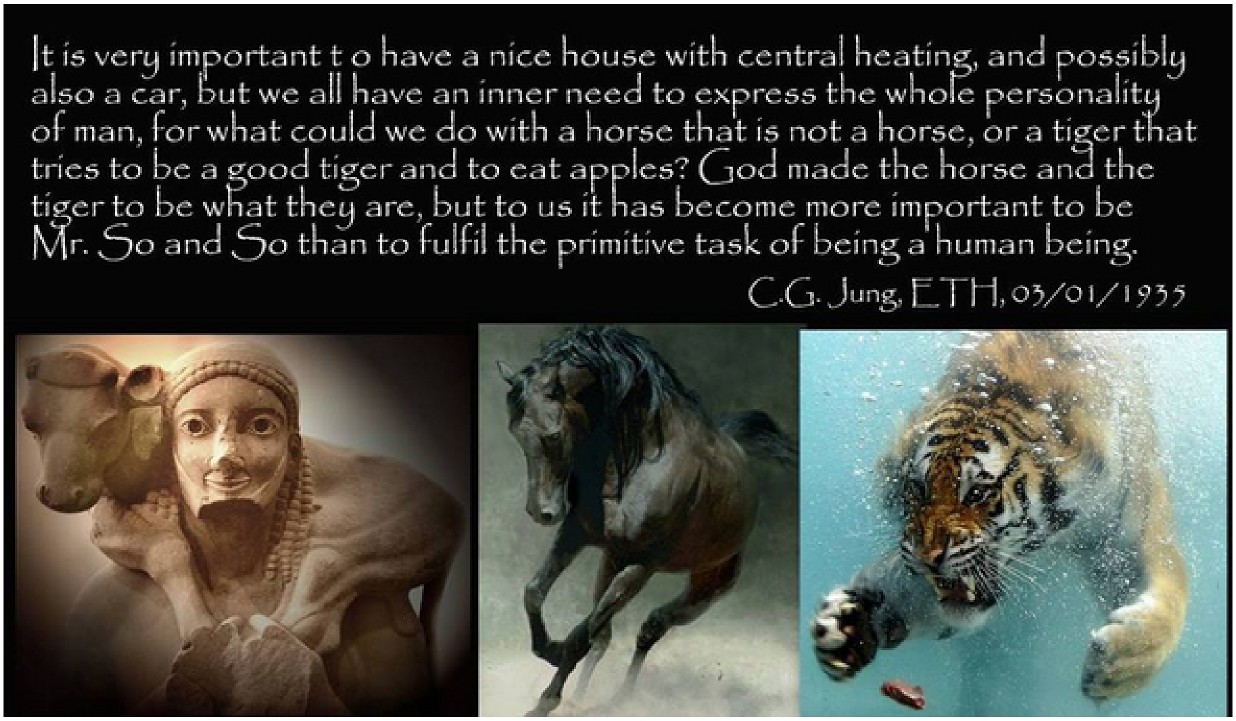


Nicodemus's Dream :
There is a burning tree. This tree bears fruit.

When the fruit is harvested, it is stored in an eternal storehouse with all the fruit harvested before it. Every fruit, depending on how it grew, has a resonance that alters all the fruit that comes after it.

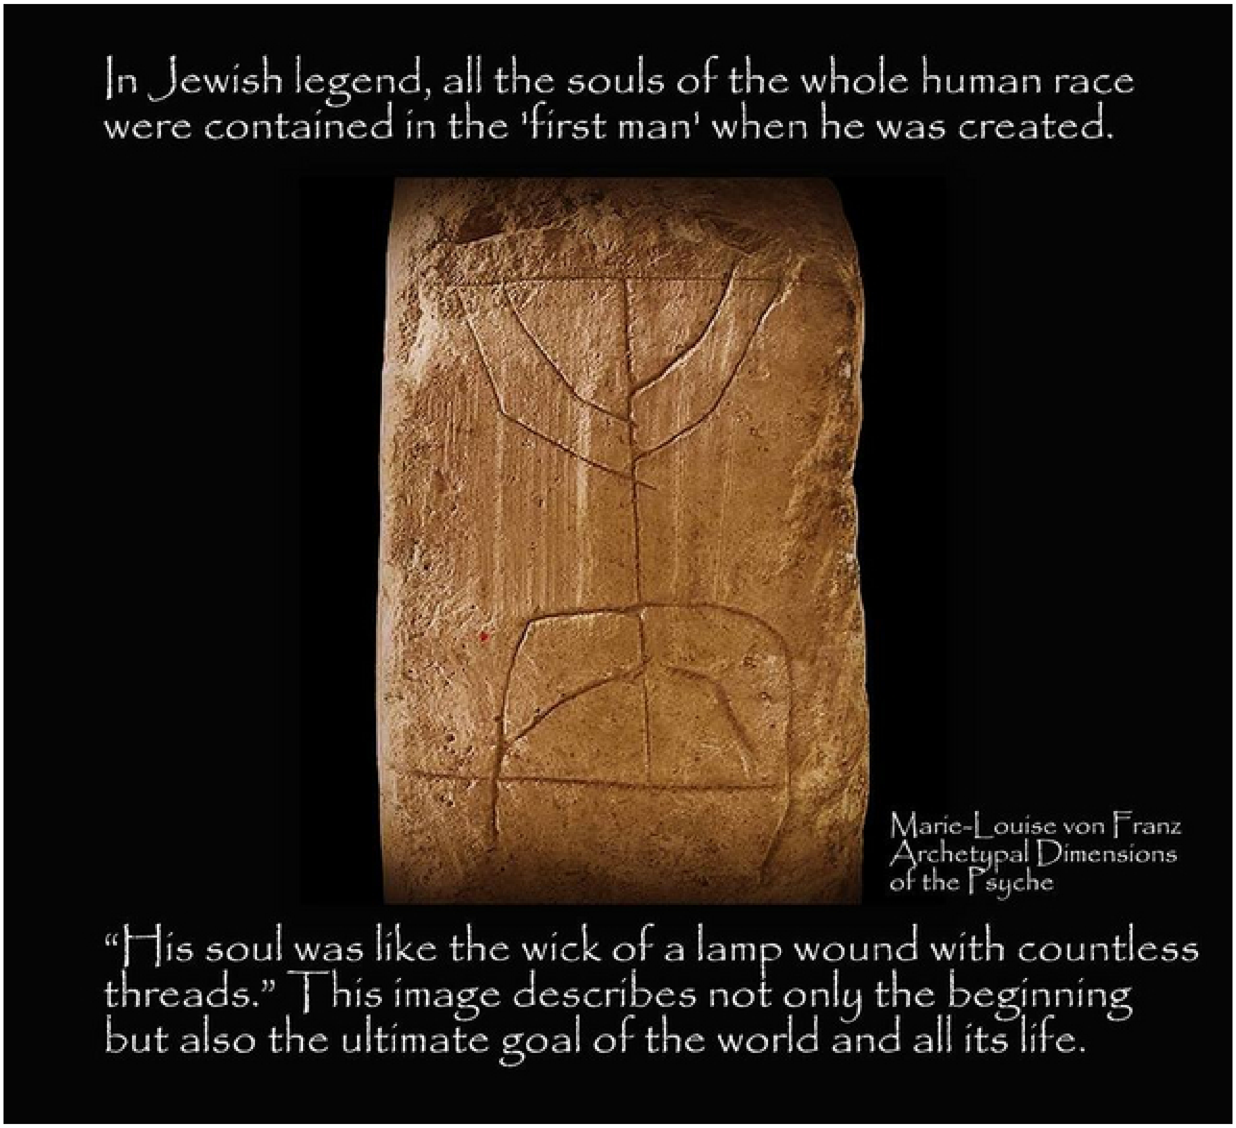
"The unconscious is in the same position as a person who had an origninal vision or experience & wishes to share it. Since it is an event that has never been conceptually formulated, the unconscious is at a loss for means of expression.

It makes several attempts to convey the thing & tries to evoke, by intuitive appeal & analogy to familiar material, some response in its listeners. The unconscious will never tire of expounding its vision until it feels consciousness has finally comprehended some sense of the content." Marie-Louise von Franz



It is very important to have a nice house with central heating, and possibly also a car, but we all have an inner need to express the whole personality of man, for what could we do with a horse that is not a horse, or a tiger that tries to be a good tiger and to eat apples? God made the horse and the tiger to be what they are, but to us it has become more important to be Mr. So and So than to fulfil the primitive task of being a human being.

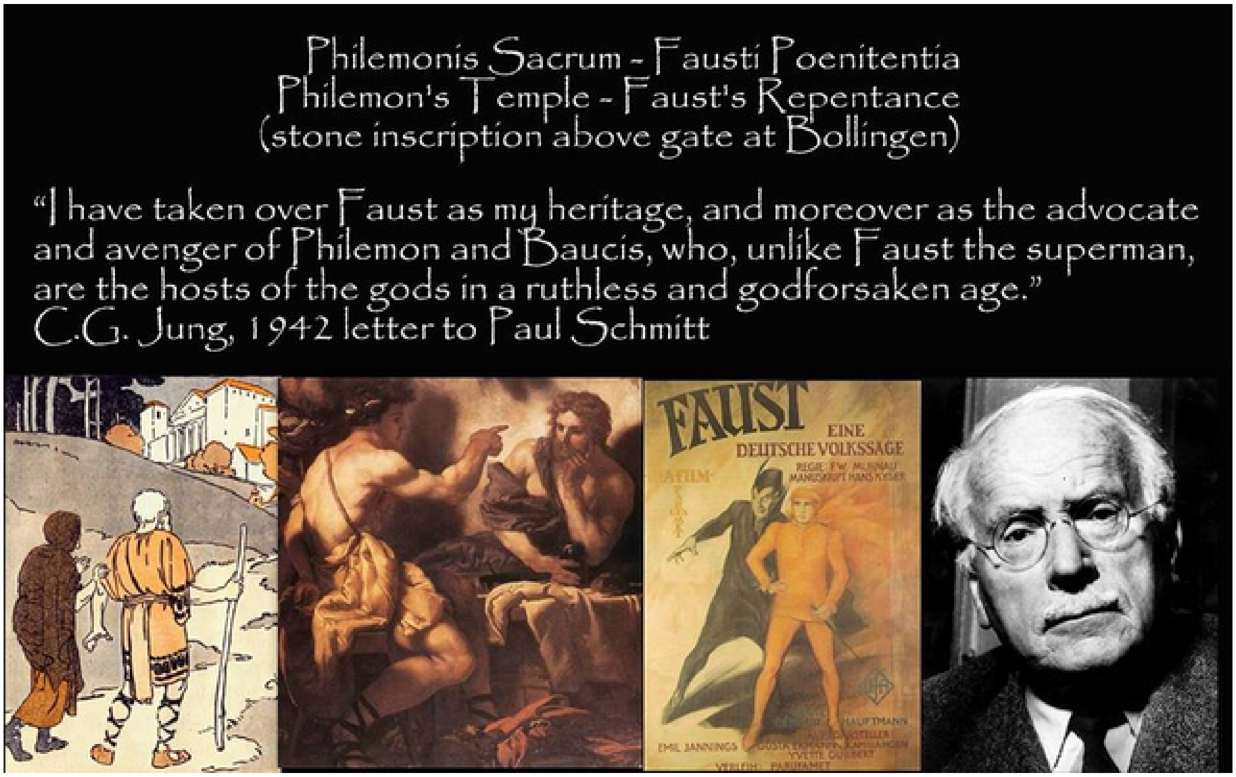
C.G. Jung, ETH, 03/01/1935



In Jewish legend, all the souls of the whole human race were contained in the 'first man' when he was created.

Marie-Louise von Franz
Archetypal Dimensions of the Psyche

"His soul was like the wick of a lamp wound with countless threads." This image describes not only the beginning but also the ultimate goal of the world and all its life.



Philemonis Sacrum - Fausti Poenitentia
Philemon's Temple - Faust's Repentance
(stone inscription above gate at Bollingen)

"I have taken over Faust as my heritage, and moreover as the advocate and avenger of Philemon and Baucis, who, unlike Faust the superman, are the hosts of the gods in a ruthless and godforsaken age."
C.G. Jung, 1942 letter to Paul Schmitt

FAUST
EINE DEUTSCHE VOLKSSAGE
REGIE: F.W. MURNAU
MANUSKRIPT HANS KYSER
HAUPTMANN
EMIL JANNINGS
YVETTE GUILBERT
VERLEIH: PARUFAMET

in limbos numberless much peace spread,
and the world's heart throbbed and a wind blew with unknown freshness over lands and seas.

and when the morning dawned, and this was told the grey dream readers said
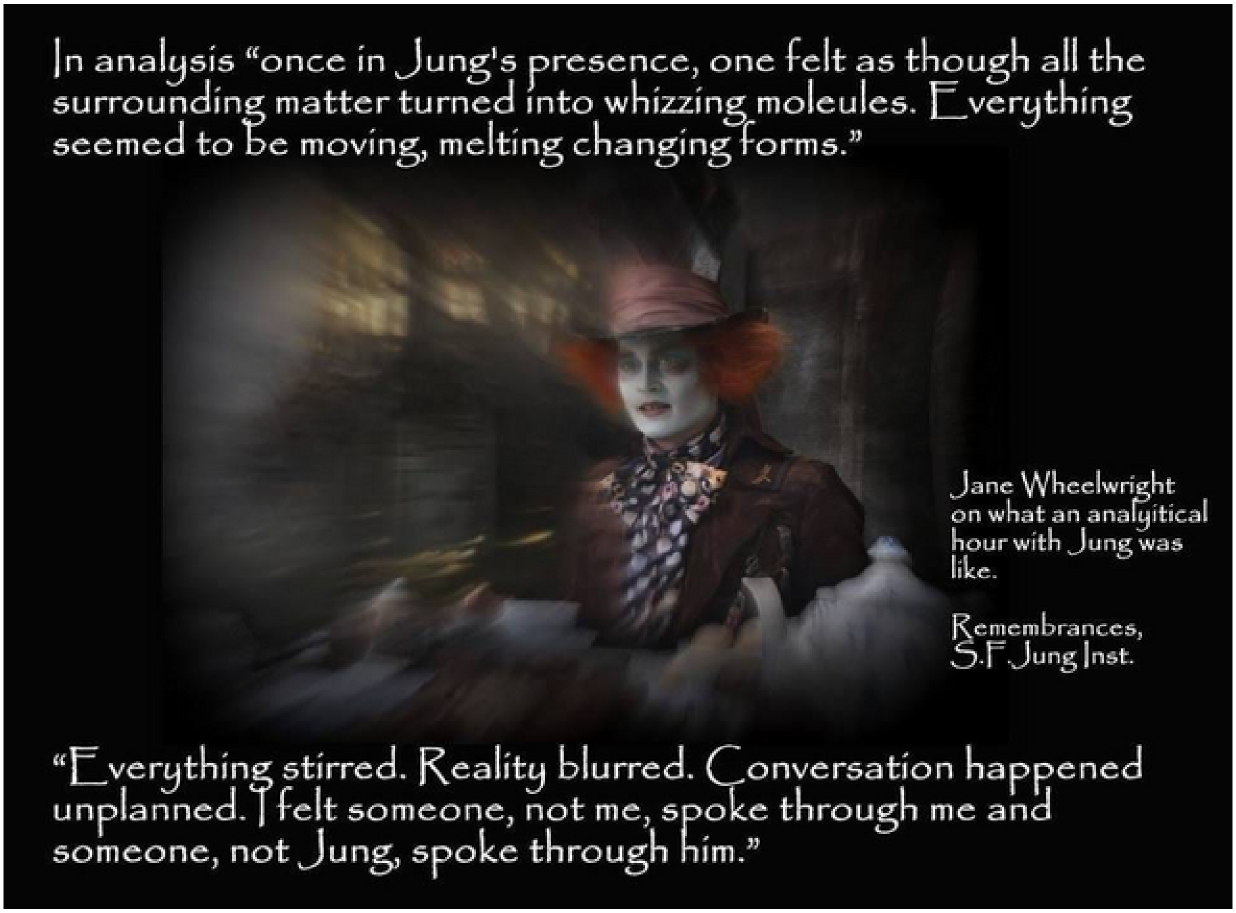
"The dream is good."

Light of Asia, Sir Edwin Arnold



In analysis “once in Jung's presence, one felt as though all the surrounding matter turned into whizzing moleules. Everything seemed to be moving, melting changing forms.”

Jane Wheelwright on what an analyitical hour with Jung was like.

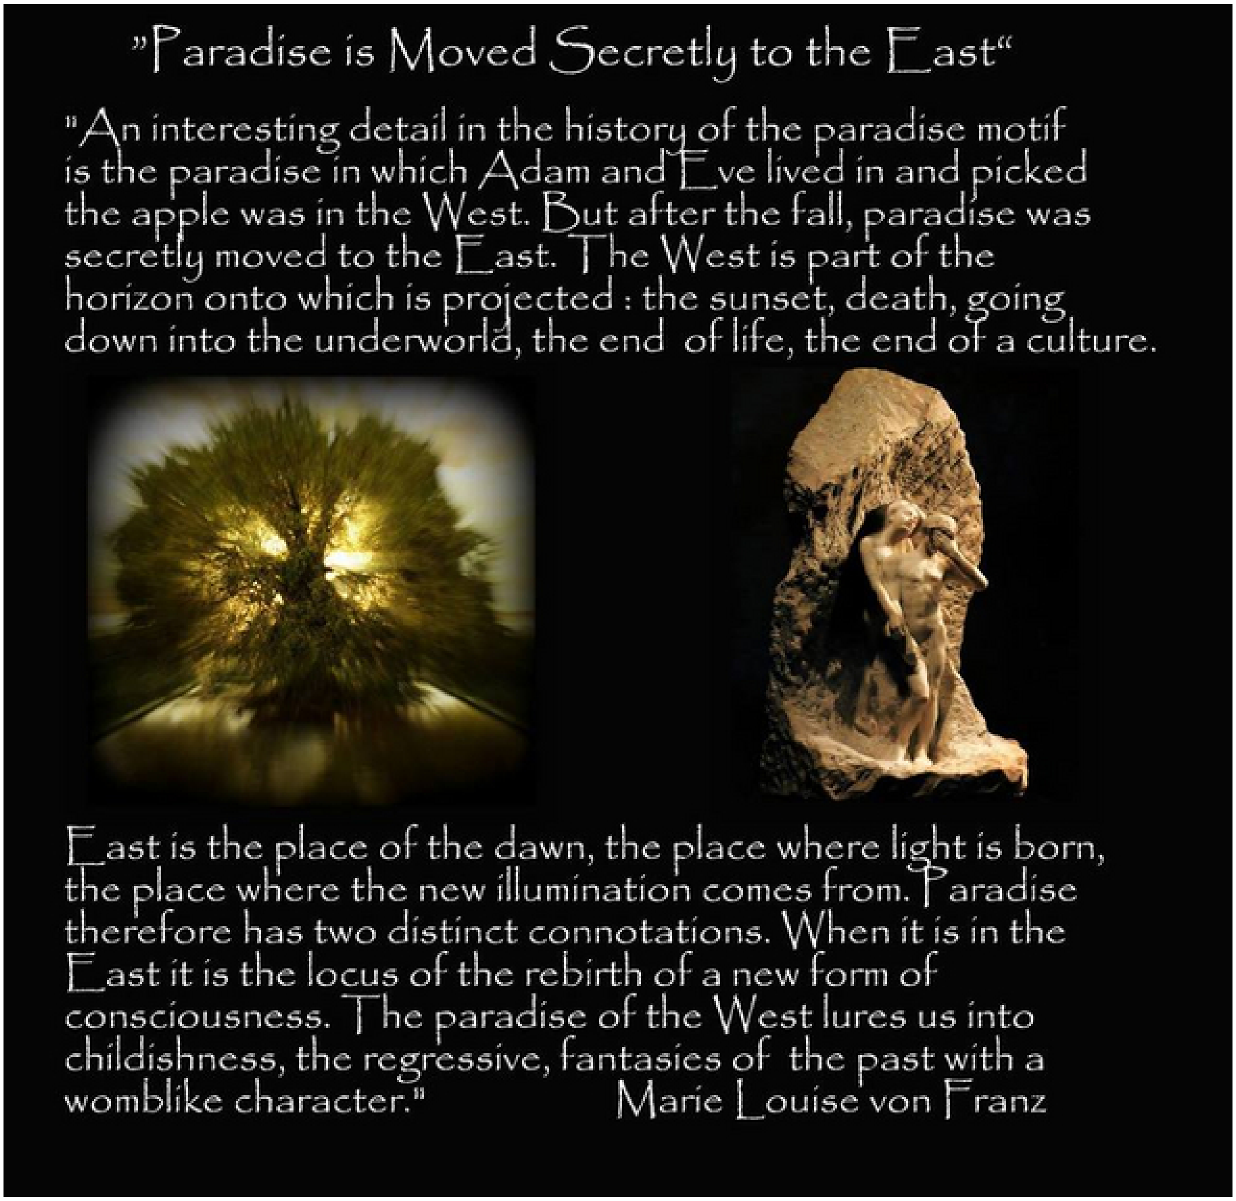
Remembrances,
S.F. Jung Inst.

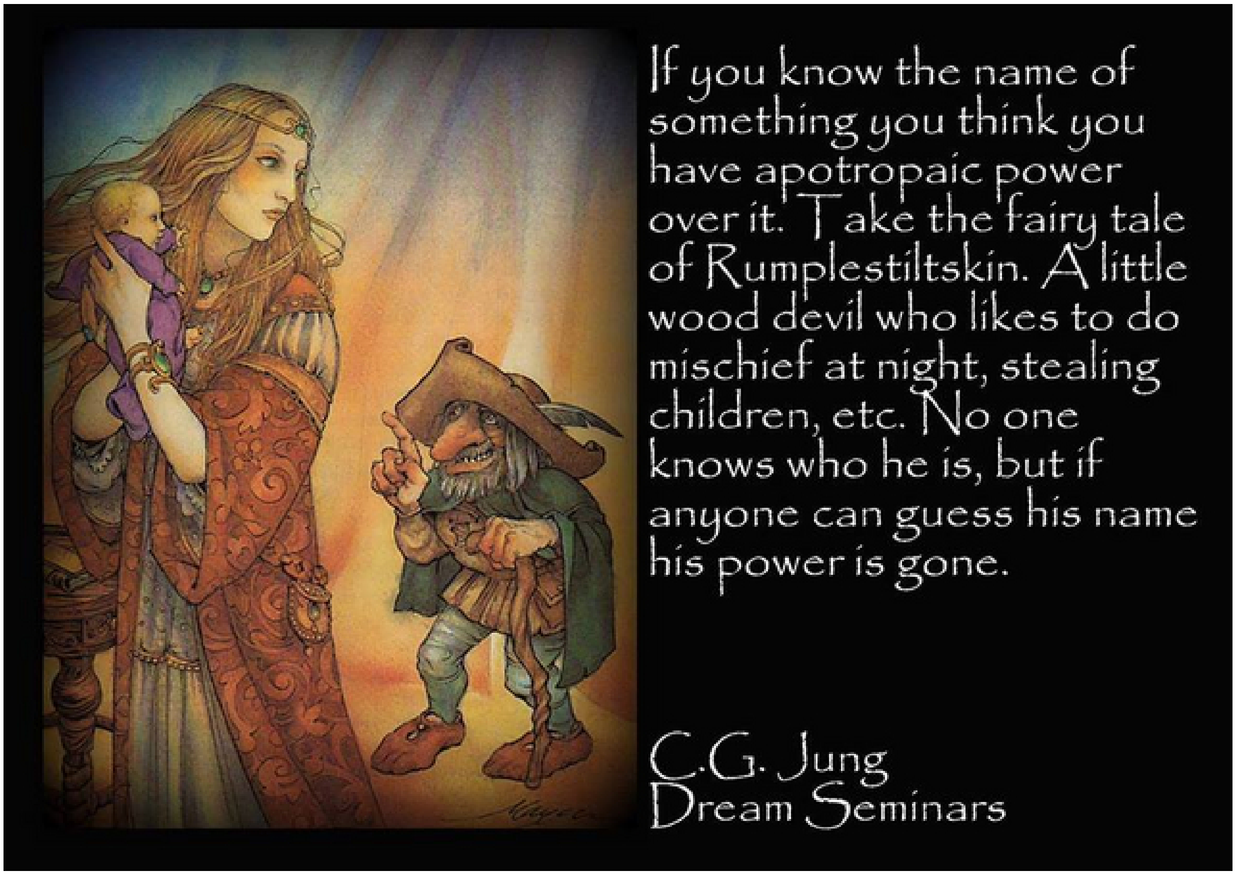
“Everything stirred. Reality blurred. Conversation happened unplanned. I felt someone, not me, spoke through me and someone, not Jung, spoke through him.”



"Paradise is Moved Secretly to the East"

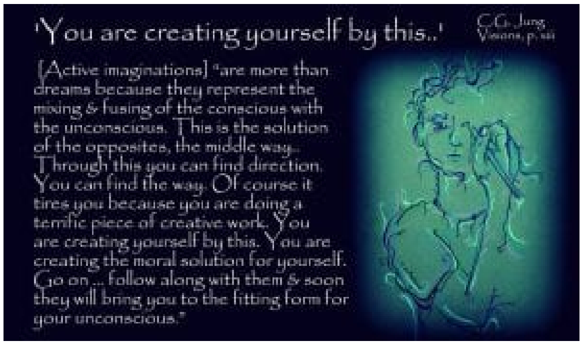
"An interesting detail in the history of the paradise motif is the paradise in which Adam and Eve lived in and picked the apple was in the West. But after the fall, paradise was secretly moved to the East. The West is part of the horizon onto which is projected : the sunset, death, going down into the underworld, the end of life, the end of a culture.

East is the place of the dawn, the place where light is born, the place where the new illumination comes from. Paradise therefore has two distinct connotations. When it is in the East it is the locus of the rebirth of a new form of consciousness. The paradise of the West lures us into childishness, the regressive, fantasies of the past with a womblike character." Marie Louise von Franz



If you know the name of something you think you have apotropaic power over it. Take the fairy tale of Rumplestiltskin. A little wood devil who likes to do mischief at night, stealing children, etc. No one knows who he is, but if anyone can guess his name his power is gone.

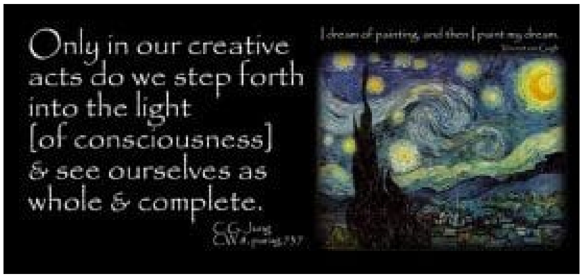
C.G. Jung
Dream Seminars



'You are creating yourself by this..'

C.G. Jung
Visions, p. xxi

[Active imaginations] "are more than dreams because they represent the mixing & fusing of the conscious with the unconscious. This is the solution of the opposites, the middle way.. Through this you can find direction. You can find the way. Of course it tires you because you are doing a terrific piece of creative work. You are creating yourself by this. You are creating the moral solution for yourself. Go on ... follow along with them & soon they will bring you to the fitting form for your unconscious."

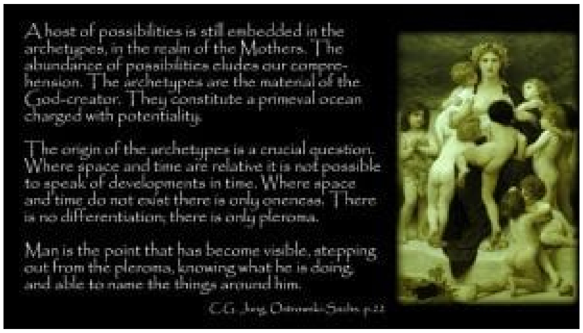


Only in our creative acts do we step forth into the light [of consciousness] & see ourselves as whole & complete.

C.G. Jung
CW 8, par. 737

I dream of painting, and then I paint my dream.

Vincent van Gogh

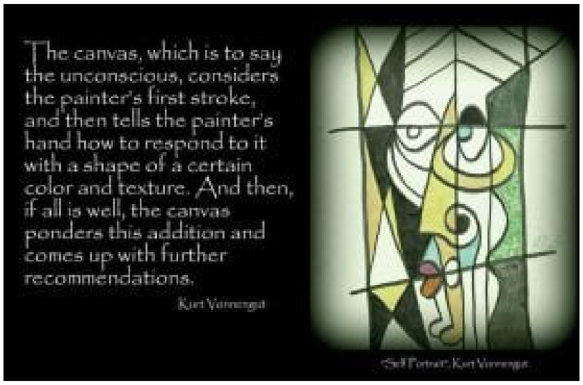


A host of possibilities is still embedded in the archetypes, in the realm of the Mothers. The abundance of possibilities eludes our comprehension. The archetypes are the material of the God-creator. They constitute a primeval ocean charged with potentiality.

The origin of the archetypes is a crucial question. Where space and time are relative it is not possible to speak of developments in time. Where space and time do not exist there is only oneness. There is no differentiation; there is only pleroma.

Man is the point that has become visible, stepping out from the pleroma, knowing what he is doing, and able to name the things around him.

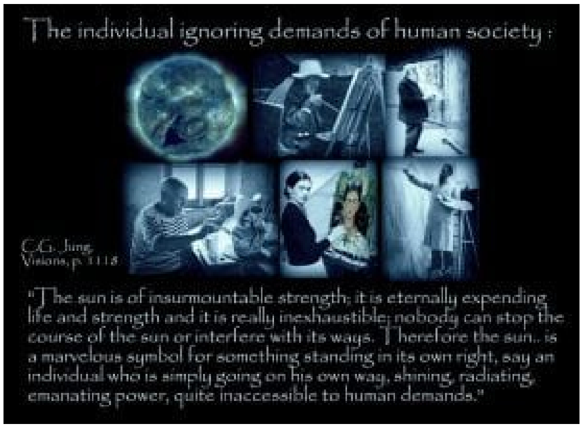
C.G. Jung, Ostrowski-Sachs, p.22



The canvas, which is to say the unconscious, considers the painter's first stroke, and then tells the painter's hand how to respond to it with a shape of a certain color and texture. And then, if all is well, the canvas ponders this addition and comes up with further recommendations.

Kurt Vonnegut

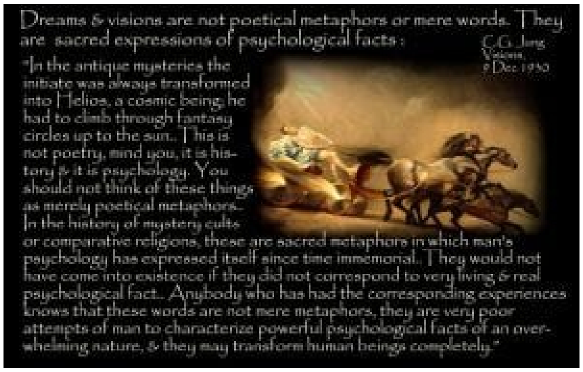
"Self Portrait", Kurt Vonnegut



The individual ignoring demands of human society :

C.G. Jung, Visions, p. 1118

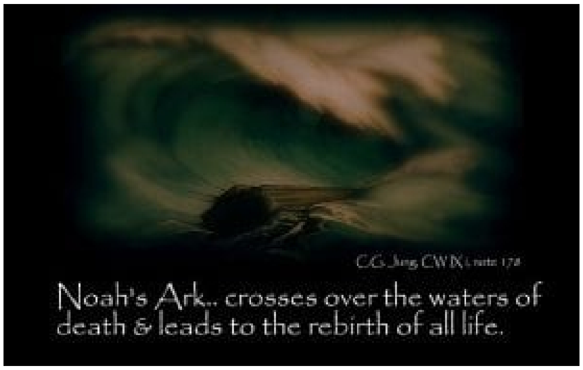
"The sun is of insurmountable strength; it is eternally expending life and strength and it is really inexhaustible; nobody can stop the course of the sun or interfere with its ways. Therefore the sun.. is a marvelous symbol for something standing in its own right, say an individual who is simply going on his own way, shining, radiating, emanating power, quite inaccessible to human demands."



Dreams & visions are not poetical metaphors or mere words. They are sacred expressions of psychological facts :

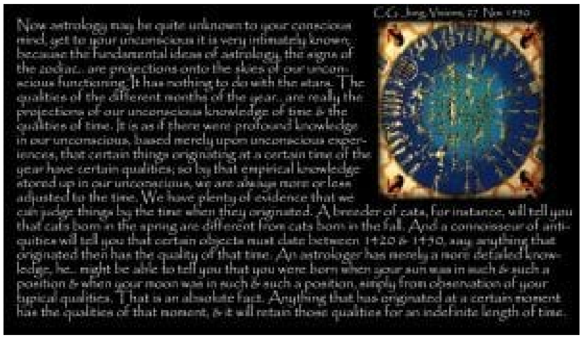
C.G. Jung, Visions, 9 Dec 1930

"In the antique mysteries the initiate was always transformed into Helios, a cosmic being; he had to climb through fantasy circles up to the sun.. This is not poetry, mind you, it is history & it is psychology. You should not think of these things as merely poetical metaphors.. In the history of mystery cults or comparative religions, these are sacred metaphors in which man's psychology has expressed itself since time immemorial.. They would not have come into existence if they did not correspond to very living & real psychological fact.. Anybody who has had the corresponding experiences knows that these words are not mere metaphors, they are very poor attempts of man to characterize powerful psychological facts of an overwhelming nature, & they may transform human beings completely."



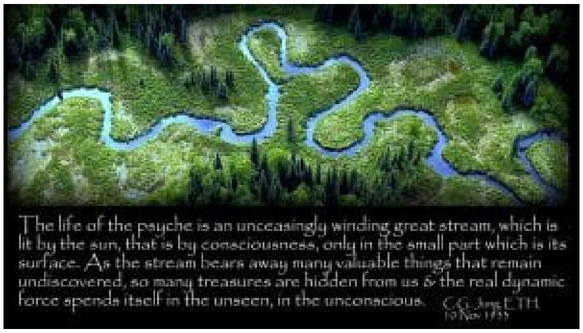
C.G. Jung, CW IX i, note 178

Noah's Ark.. crosses over the waters of death & leads to the rebirth of all life.



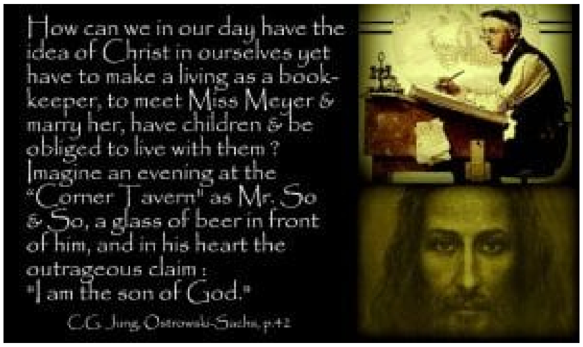
C.G. Jung, Visions, 27 Nov 1930

Now astrology may be quite unknown to your conscious mind, yet to your unconscious it is very intimately known, because the fundamental ideas of astrology, the signs of the zodiac.. are projections onto the skies of our unconscious functioning. It has nothing to do with the stars. The qualities of the different months of the year.. are really the projections of our unconscious knowledge of time & the qualities of time. It is as if there were profound knowledge in our unconscious, based merely upon unconscious experiences, that certain things originating at a certain time of the year have certain qualities; so by that empirical knowledge stored up in our unconscious, we are always more or less adjusted to the time. We have plenty of evidence that we can judge things by the time when they originated. A breeder of cats, for instance, will tell you that cats born in the spring are different from cats born in the fall. And a connoisseur of antiquities will tell you that certain objects must date between 1420 & 1450, say, anything that originated then has the quality of that time. An astrologer has merely a more detailed knowledge, he.. might be able to tell you that you were born when your sun was in such & such a position & when your moon was in such & such a position, simply from observation of your typical qualities. That is an absolute fact. Anything that has originated at a certain moment has the qualities of that moment, & it will retain those qualities for an indefinite length of time.



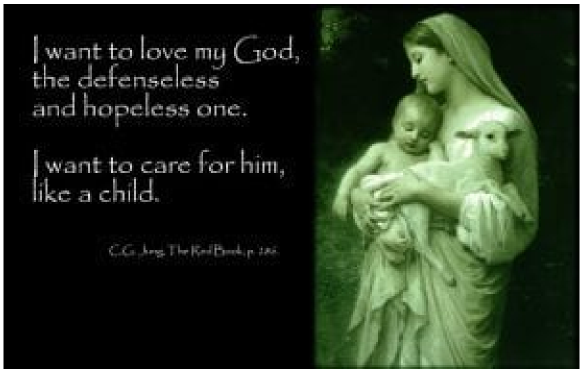
The life of the psyche is an unceasingly winding great stream, which is lit by the sun, that is by consciousness, only in the small part which is its surface. As the stream bears away many valuable things that remain undiscovered, so many treasures are hidden from us & the real dynamic force spends itself in the unseen, in the unconscious.

C.G. Jung, ETH
10 Nov 1933



How can we in our day have the idea of Christ in ourselves yet have to make a living as a bookkeeper, to meet Miss Meyer & marry her, have children & be obliged to live with them ? Imagine an evening at the "Corner Tavern" as Mr. So & So, a glass of beer in front of him, and in his heart the outrageous claim : "I am the son of God."

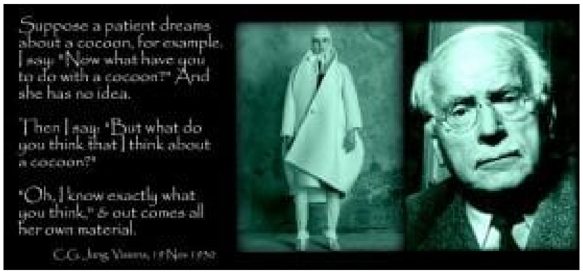
C.G. Jung, Ostrowski-Sachs, p.42



I want to love my God,
the defenseless
and hopeless one.

I want to care for him,
like a child.

C.G. Jung, The Red Book, p. 286

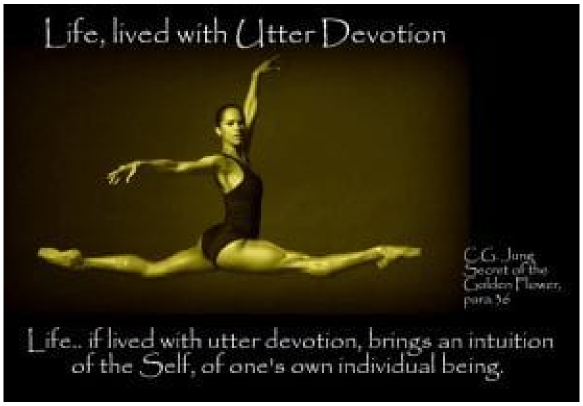


Suppose a patient dreams about a cocoon, for example. I say: "Now what have you to do with a cocoon?" And she has no idea.

Then I say: "But what do you think that I think about a cocoon?"

"Oh, I know exactly what you think," & out comes all her own material.

C.G. Jung, Visions, 19 Nov 1930



Life, lived with Utter Devotion

C.G. Jung
Secret of the Golden Flower,
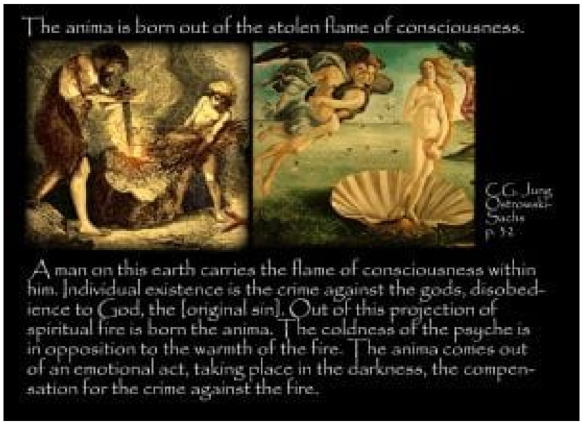
para 56

Life.. if lived with utter devotion, brings an intuition of the Self, of one's own individual being.



The anima is born out of the stolen flame of consciousness.

C.G. Jung
Ostrowski-Sachs
p. 32

A man on this earth carries the flame of consciousness within him. Individual existence is the crime against the gods, disobedience to God, the [original sin]. Out of this projection of spiritual fire is born the anima. The coldness of the psyche is in opposition to the warmth of the fire. The anima comes out of an emotional act, taking place in the darkness, the compensation for the crime against the fire.

That is one of the foolish ideas which men have.

They think that Eros is sex, but not at all,
Eros is relatedness.

C.G. Jung Dream Seminars
13 March 1929

Constantin Brancusi
The Kiss - 1910

Working with dreams increases the frequency of synchronistic events.

"The more we busy ourselves with dreams,
the more we shall see such [synchronistic, meaningful] coincidences."

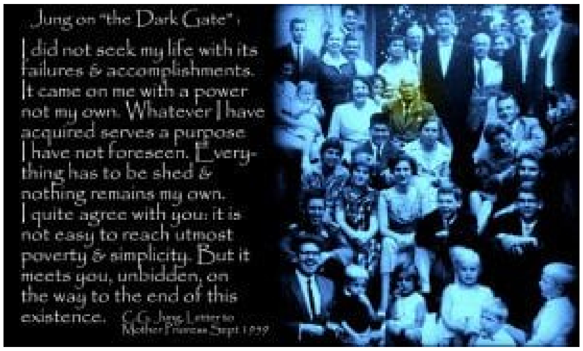
C.G. Jung Dream Seminars
28 Nov 1928



Jung on "the Dark Gate":

I did not seek my life with its failures & accomplishments.
It came on me with a power not my own. Whatever I have acquired serves a purpose
I have not foreseen. Everything has to be shed & nothing remains my own.
I quite agree with you: it is not easy to reach utmost poverty & simplicity. But it meets you, unbidden, on the way to the end of this existence.

C.G. Jung Letter to Mother Prioress Sept 1959

As soon as you come to the idea of growth & development you are confronted with the irrationality of nature.

Every rationalist hates
this, for with him things must be safe, "no risks please."

C.G. Jung Dreams Seminars, 5 June 1929

Every root in the earth has to find its way around a stone. It may take the wrong direction.

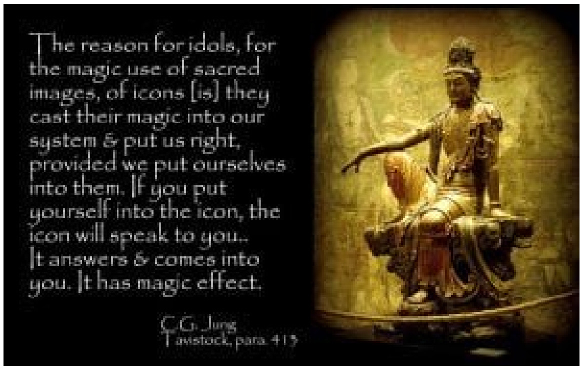
The living, actual voice of our forgotten, neglected soul, (all analysis is the story of her redemption) :

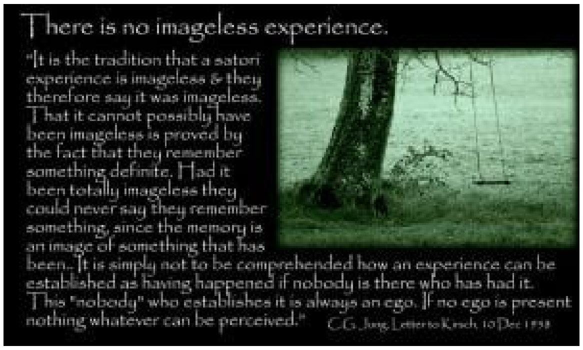
"Be turned to me with all your heart & do not cast me aside because I am black & swarthy, the sun hath changed my color & the waters have covered my face. I stick fast in the mire of the deep & my substance is not disclosed. Wherefore out of the depths have I cried & from the abyss of the earth with my voice to all you that pass by this way. Attend to & see me, if any shall be found like unto me, I will give in to his hand the morning star."

Aurora Consurgens, Marie-Louise von Franz



The reason for idols, for the magic use of sacred images, of icons [is] they cast their magic into our system & put us right, provided we put ourselves into them. If you put yourself into the icon, the icon will speak to you.. It answers & comes into you. It has magic effect.

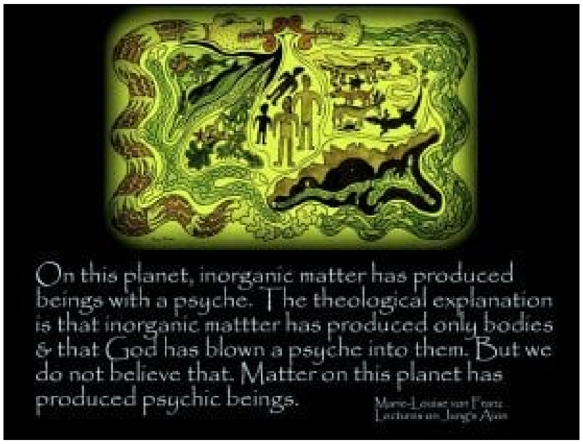
C.G. Jung
Tavistock, para. 415



There is no imageless experience.

"It is the tradition that a satori experience is imageless & they therefore say it was imageless. That it cannot possibly have been imageless is proved by the fact that they remember something definite. Had it been totally imageless they could never say they remember something, since the memory is an image of something that has been.. It is simply not to be comprehended how an experience can be established as having happened if nobody is there who has had it. This "nobody" who establishes it is always an ego. If no ego is present nothing whatever can be perceived."

C.G. Jung, Letter to Kirsch, 10 Dec 1958



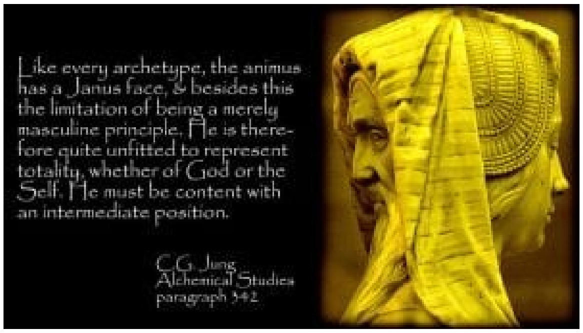
On this planet, inorganic matter has produced beings with a psyche. The theological explanation is that inorganic mattter has produced only bodies & that God has blown a psyche into them. But we do not believe that. Matter on this planet has produced psychic beings.

Marie-Louise von Franz
Lectures on Jung's Aion

As I was preparing for the jouney home after a day spent working out of doors by the lake, I saw, to my amazement, Jung bending down & looking at the lake from between his legs.

Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Life & Work

He told me to do the same. I complied and likewise looked at the world upside down. He told me how the world and things looked better and were perceived more correctly if you took the inverse view of them. With that, he bade me farewell & went into his shed.



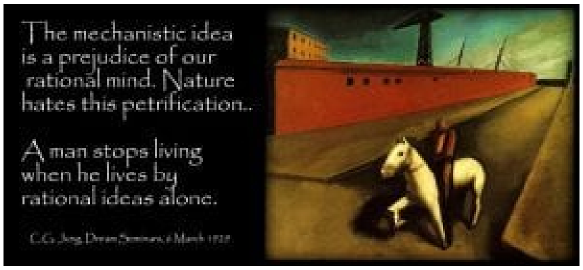
Like every archetype, the animus has a Janus face, & besides this the limitation of being a merely masculine principle. He is therefore quite unfitted to represent totality, whether of God or the Self. He must be content with an intermediate position.

C.G. Jung
Alchemical Studies
paragraph 342

We explain the unknown by the more unknown.

We 'explain' the unconscious with the aid of symbols and concepts derived from the same primordial ground.

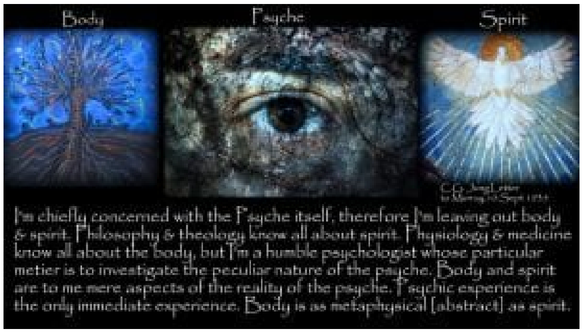
Marie-Louise von Franz, Psychotherapy



The mechanistic idea is a prejudice of our rational mind. Nature hates this petrification..

A man stops living when he lives by rational ideas alone.

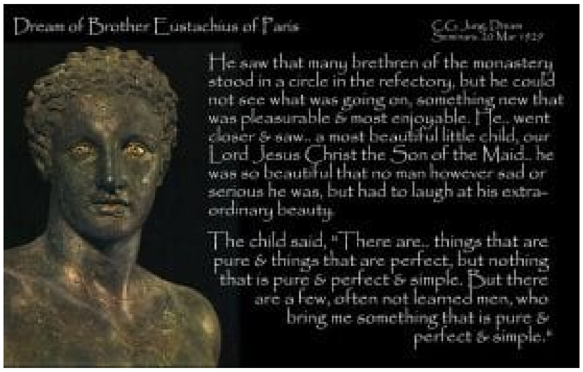
C.G. Jung, Dream Seminars, 6 March 1928



Body Psyche Spirit

C.G. Jung Letter to Murray, 10 Sept 1935

I'm chiefly concerned with the Psyche itself, therefore I'm leaving out body & spirit. Philosophy & theology know all about spirit. Physiology & medicine know all about the body, but I'm a humble psychologist whose particular metier is to investigate the peculiar nature of the psyche. Body and spirit are to me mere aspects of the reality of the psyche. Psychic experience is the only immediate experience. Body is as metaphysical [abstract] as spirit.

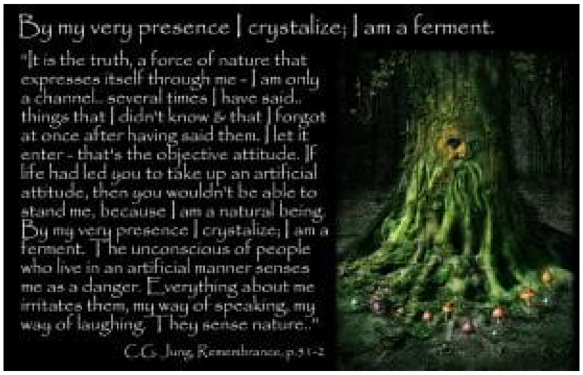


Dream of Brother Eustachius of Paris

C.G. Jung, Dream Seminars, 20 Mar 1929

He saw that many brethren of the monastery stood in a circle in the refectory, but he could not see what was going on, something new that was pleasurable & most enjoyable. He.. went closer & saw.. a most beautiful little child, our Lord Jesus Christ the Son of the Maid.. he was so beautiful that no man however sad or serious he was, but had to laugh at his extraordinary beauty.

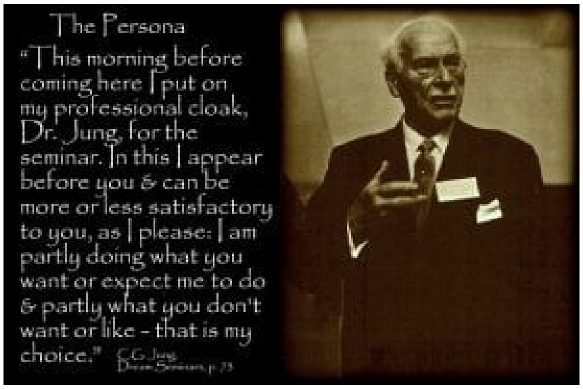
The child said, "There are.. things that are pure & things that are perfect, but nothing that is pure & perfect & simple. But there are a few, often not learned men, who bring me something that is pure & perfect & simple."



By my very presence I crystalize; I am a ferment.

"It is the truth, a force of nature that expresses itself through me - I am only a channel.. several times I have said.. things that I didn't know & that I forgot at once after having said them. I let it enter - that's the objective attitude. If life had led you to take up an artificial attitude, then you wouldn't be able to stand me, because I am a natural being. By my very presence I crystalize; I am a ferment. The unconscious of people who live in an artificial manner senses me as a danger. Everything about me irritates them, my way of speaking, my way of laughing. They sense nature.."

C.G. Jung, Remembrance, p.51-2



The Persona

"This morning before coming here I put on my professional cloak, Dr. Jung, for the seminar. In this I appear before you & can be more or less satisfactory to you, as I please: I am partly doing what you want or expect me to do & partly what you don't want or like - that is my choice." C.G. Jung, Dream Seminars, p. 73

The center of the Personality is the ego.

The center of the Individual is the Self.

Summary, C.G. Jung, Dream Seminars, 6 Feb 1929

A plant is wise enough to develop leaves on both sides, but we are in the unhappy position of developing only one side.

C.G. Jung
Visions, Oct 22 1930

Where space & time are relative it is not possible to speak of developments in time. Everything is present, altogether & all at once, in the constant presence of the pleroma.. Pleroma is always with us, under our feet & above our heads.

Man is the point that has become visible, stepping out from the pleroma, knowing what he is doing, & able to name the things about him.

C.G. Jung, Ostrowski-Sachs, p.22

Psychologically speaking, it makes a vast difference whether a man has an interesting conversation with his doctor [about a dream image]..the results of which are left hanging in mid-air, or whether he has to struggle for hours with refractory brush & colours.. his busying himself with it only increases its effect upon him.
Moreover, the concrete shaping of the image enforces a continuous study of it in all its parts, so that it can develop its effects to the full.
This invests the bare [image] with an element of reality, which lends it greater weight & greater driving power.

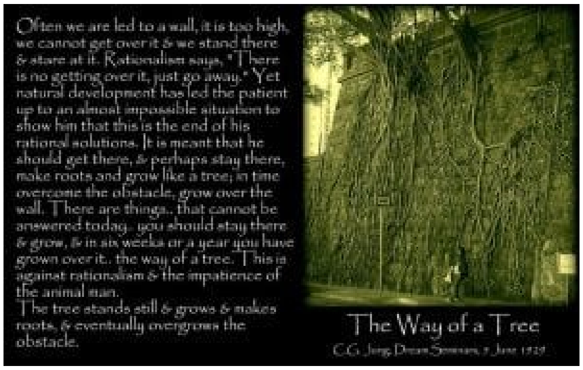
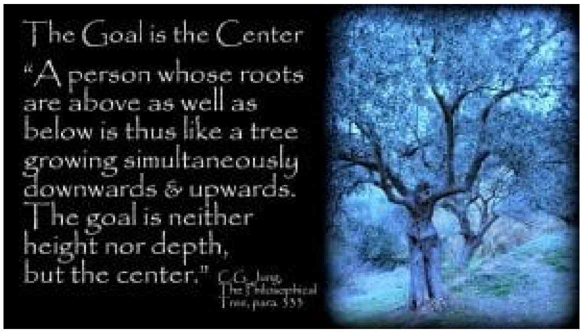
C.G. Jung
The Practice of Psychotherapy
para. 106



Often we are led to a wall, it is too high, we cannot get over it & we stand there & stare at it. Rationalism says, "There is no getting over it, just go away." Yet natural development has led the patient up to an almost impossible situation to show him that this is the end of his rational solutions. It is meant that he should get there, & perhaps stay there, make roots and grow like a tree; in time overcome the obstacle, grow over the wall. There are things.. that cannot be answered today.. you should stay there & grow, & in six weeks or a year you have grown over it.. the way of a tree. This is against rationalism & the impatience of the animal man.
The tree stands still & grows & makes roots, & eventually overgrows the obstacle.

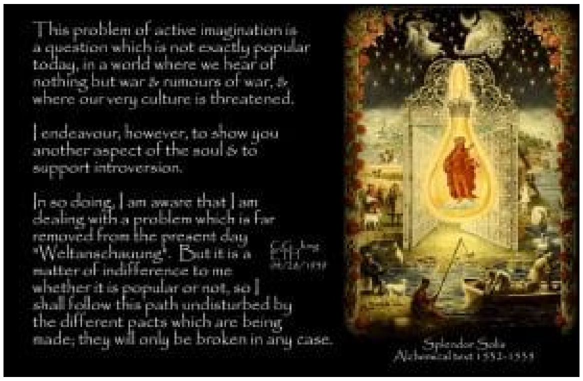
The Way of a Tree

C.G. Jung, Dream Seminars, 5 June 1929



The Goal is the Center

"A person whose roots are above as well as below is thus like a tree growing simultaneously downwards & upwards. The goal is neither height nor depth, but the center." C.G. Jung, The Philosophical Tree, para. 333



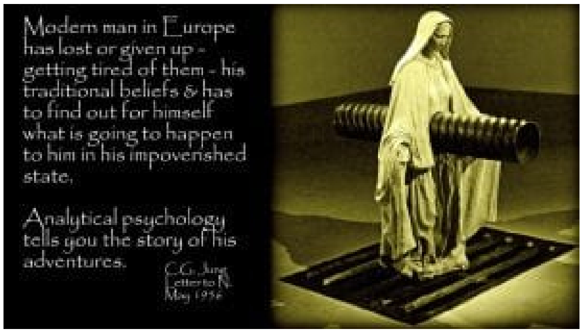
This problem of active imagination is a question which is not exactly popular today, in a world where we hear of nothing but war & rumours of war, & where our very culture is threatened.

I endeavour, however, to show you another aspect of the soul & to support introversion.

In so doing, I am aware that I am dealing with a problem which is far removed from the present day "Weltanschauung". But it is a matter of indifference to me whether it is popular or not, so I shall follow this path undisturbed by the different pacts which are being made; they will only be broken in any case.

C.G. Jung ETH [illegible]

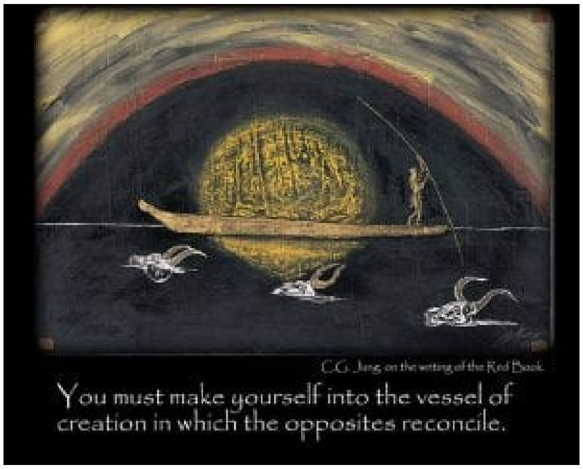
Splendor Solis
Alchemical text 1532-1535



Modern man in Europe has lost or given up - getting tired of them - his traditional beliefs & has to find out for himself what is going to happen to him in his impoverished state.

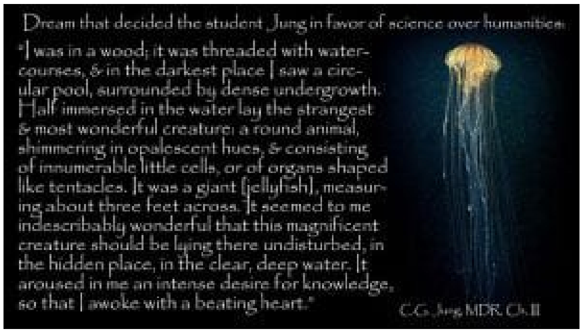
Analytical psychology tells you the story of his adventures.

C.G. Jung
Letter to N.
May 1956



C.G. Jung, on the writing of the Red Book

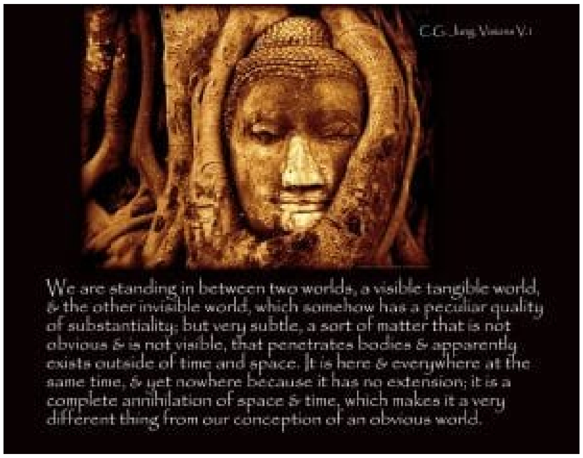
You must make yourself into the vessel of creation in which the opposites reconcile.



Dream that decided the student Jung in favor of science over humanities:

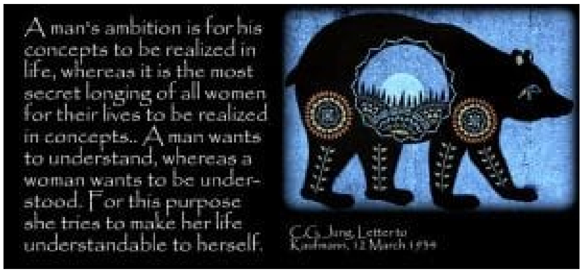
"I was in a wood; it was threaded with watercourses, & in the darkest place I saw a circular pool, surrounded by dense undergrowth. Half immersed in the water lay the strangest & most wonderful creature: a round animal, shimmering in opalescent hues, & consisting of innumerable little cells, or of organs shaped like tentacles. It was a giant [jellyfish], measuring about three feet across. It seemed to me indescribably wonderful that this magnificent creature should be lying there undisturbed, in the hidden place, in the clear, deep water. It aroused in me an intense desire for knowledge, so that I awoke with a beating heart."

C.G. Jung, MDR, Ch.II



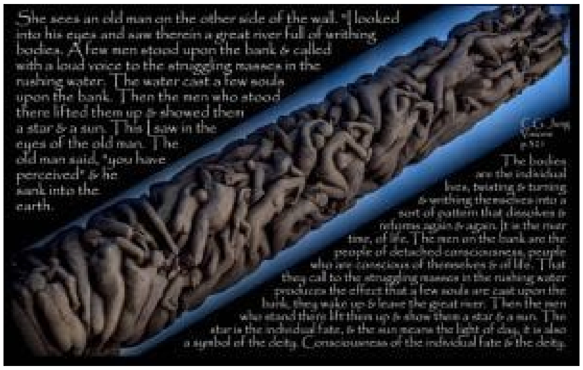
C.G. Jung, Visions V.1

We are standing in between two worlds, a visible tangible world, & the other invisible world, which somehow has a peculiar quality of substantiality; but very subtle, a sort of matter that is not obvious & is not visible, that penetrates bodies & apparently exists outside of time and space. It is here & everywhere at the same time, & yet nowhere because it has no extension; it is a complete annihilation of space & time, which makes it a very different thing from our conception of an obvious world.



A man's ambition is for his concepts to be realized in life, whereas it is the most secret longing of all women for their lives to be realized in concepts.. A man wants to understand, whereas a woman wants to be understood. For this purpose she tries to make her life understandable to herself.

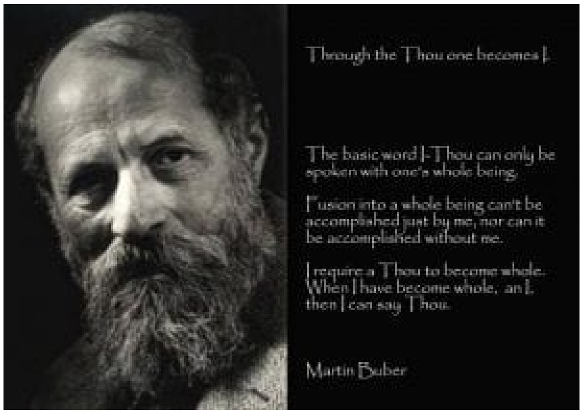
C.G. Jung, Letter to Kaufmann, 12 March 1934



She sees an old man on the other side of the wall. "I looked into his eyes and saw therein a great river full of writhing bodies. A few men stood upon the bank & called with a loud voice to the struggling masses in the rushing water. The water cast a few souls upon the bank. Then the men who stood there lifted them up & showed them a star & a sun. This I saw in the eyes of the old man. The old man said, "you have perceived" & he sank into the earth.

C.G. Jung
Visions
p.521

The bodies are the individual lives, twisting & turning & writhing themselves into a sort of pattern that dissolves & reforms again & again. It is the river time, of life. The men on the bank are the people of detached consciousness, people who are conscious of themselves & of life. That they call to the struggling masses in the rushing water produces the effect that a few souls are cast upon the bank, they wake up & leave the great river. Then the men who stand there lift them up & show them a star & a sun. The star is the individual fate, & the sun means the light of day, it is also a symbol of the deity. Consciousness of the individual fate & the deity.



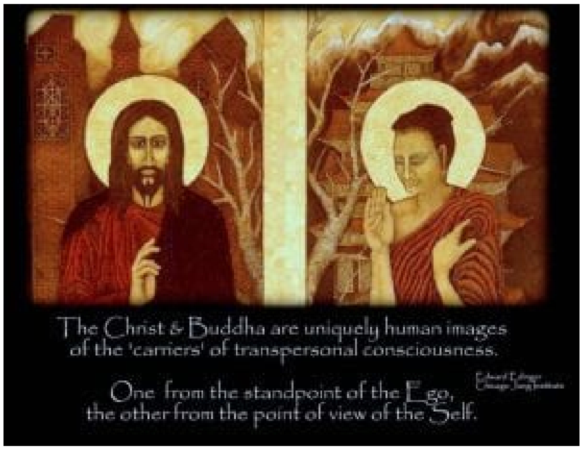
Through the Thou one becomes I.

The basic word I-Thou can only be spoken with one's whole being.

Fusion into a whole being can't be accomplished just by me, nor can it be accomplished without me.

I require a Thou to become whole.
When I have become whole, an I,
then I can say Thou.

Martin Buber



The Christ & Buddha are uniquely human images of the 'carriers' of transpersonal consciousness.

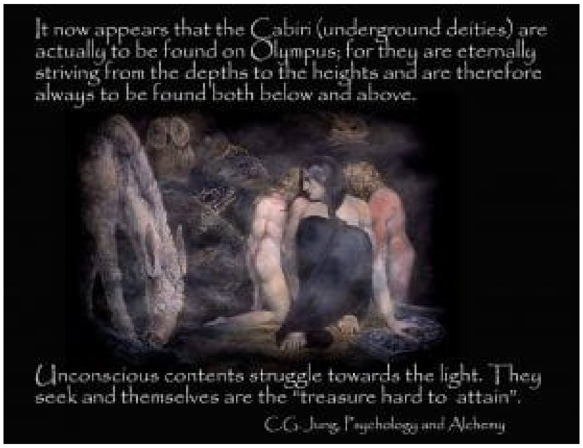
One from the standpoint of the Ego, the other from the point of view of the Self.

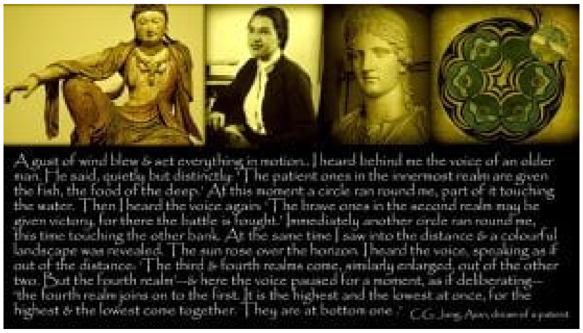
Edward Edinger
Chicago Jung Institute



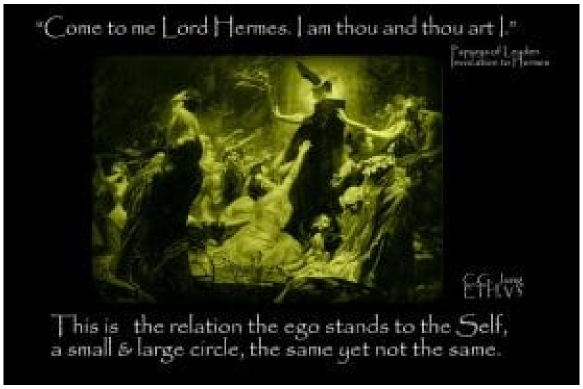
It now appears that the Cabiri (underground deities) are actually to be found on Olympus; for they are eternally striving from the depths to the heights and are therefore always to be found both below and above.

Unconscious contents struggle towards the light. They seek and themselves are the "treasure hard to attain".

C.G. Jung, Psychology and Alchemy



A gust of wind blew & set everything in motion. I heard behind me the voice of an older man. He said, quietly but distinctly: 'The patient ones in the innermost realm are given the fish, the food of the deep.' At this moment a circle ran round me, part of it touching the water. Then I heard the voice again: 'The brave ones in the second realm may be given victory, for there the battle is fought.' Immediately another circle ran round me, this time touching the other bank. At the same time I saw into the distance & a colourful landscape was revealed. The sun rose over the horizon. I heard the voice, speaking as if out of the distance: 'The third & fourth realms come, similarly enlarged, out of the other two. But the fourth realm'—& here the voice paused for a moment, as if deliberating—'the fourth realm joins on to the first. It is the highest and the lowest at once, for the highest & the lowest come together. They are at bottom one.' C.G. Jung, Aion, dream of a patient

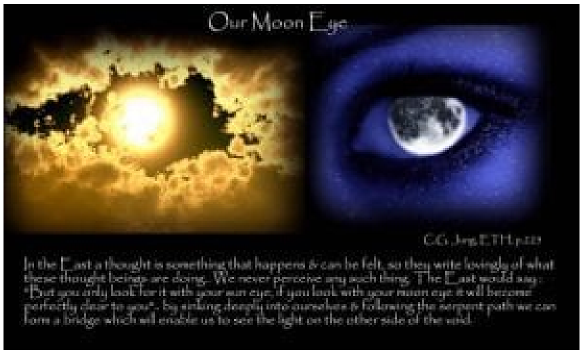


"Come to me Lord Hermes. I am thou and thou art I."

Papyrus of Leyden
Invocation to Hermes

C.G. Jung
E.T.H.V.5

This is the relation the ego stands to the Self,
a small & large circle, the same yet not the same.



Our Moon Eye

C.G. Jung, E.T.H. p.223

In the East a thought is something that happens & can be felt, so they write lovingly of what these thought beings are doing. We never perceive any such thing. The East would say: "But you only look for it with your sun eye; if you look with your moon eye it will become perfectly clear to you". by sinking deeply into ourselves & following the serpent path we can form a bridge which will enable us to see the light on the other side of the void.

Whenever a person turns sincerely to his unconscious psyche and its knowledge by considering its objective expressions, such as dreams and spontaneous fantasies, sooner or later the image of the Self will appear & confer upon the ego the potential for a renewal of its life.

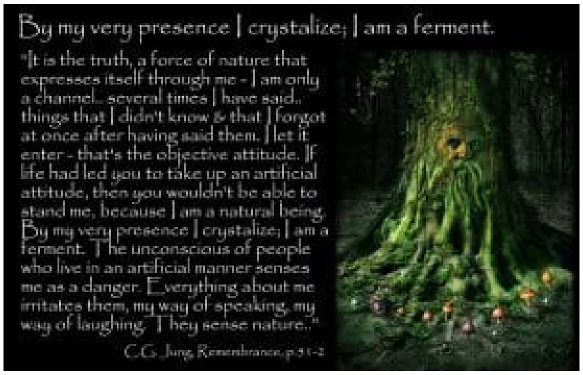
Marie-Louise von Franz
Archetypal Dimensions of the Psyche



By my very presence I crystalize; I am a ferment.

"It is the truth, a force of nature that expresses itself through me - I am only a channel.. several times I have said.. things that I didn't know & that I forgot at once after having said them. I let it enter - that's the objective attitude. If life had led you to take up an artificial attitude, then you wouldn't be able to stand me, because I am a natural being. By my very presence I crystalize; I am a ferment. The unconscious of people who live in an artificial manner senses me as a danger. Everything about me irritates them, my way of speaking, my way of laughing. They sense nature.."

C.G. Jung, Remembrance, p.31-2

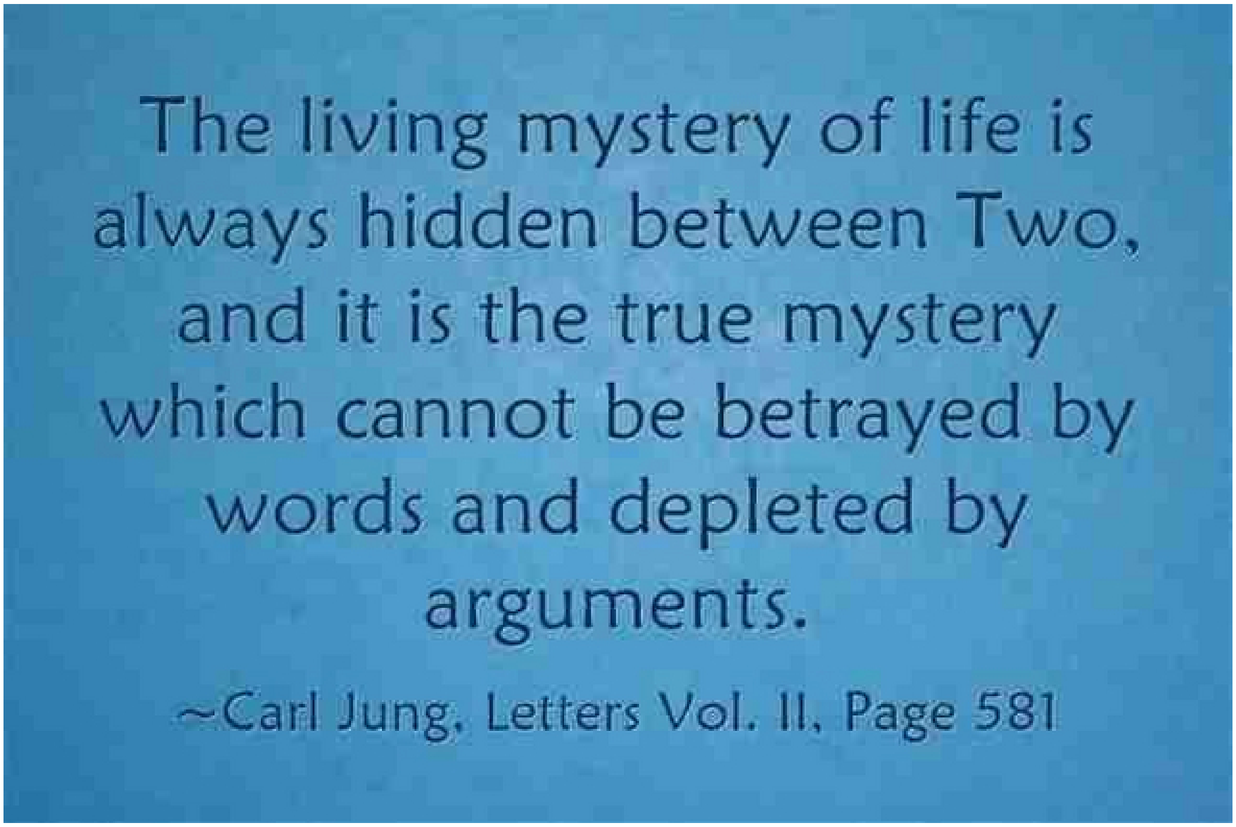
1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b4390-aaa.jpg
2. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a0800-bbb.jpg
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0b234-ccc.jpg
4. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0fcce-ddd.jpg
5. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e427f-eee.jpg
6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0def9-fff.jpg
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b4932-ggg.jpg
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9a9b8-hhh.jpg
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/94e88-iii.jpg
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f0d3e-jjj.jpg
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b10d0-kkk.jpg
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/301a5-lll.jpg
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b205e-mmm.jpg
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/77f6a-nnn.jpg
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a87d8-ooo.jpg
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f2bee-ppp.jpg
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/54fe2-qqq.jpg
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/22598-rrr.jpg
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/54b17-sss.jpg
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ef81c-ttt.jpg
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/603ed-uuu.jpg
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5dd45-vvv.jpg
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/22e9d-www.jpg
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ae1fd-xxx.jpg
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e7cad-yyy.jpg
26. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8cd8f-zzz.jpg
27. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/91825-aaa.jpg
28. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7e6b4-bbb.jpg
29. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9a57e-ccc.jpg
30. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1ddac-ddd.jpg
31. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3cb71-eee.jpg
32. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3964e-fff.jpg
33. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5744c-ggg.jpg
34. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9abc2-hhh.jpg
35. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d81b9-iii.jpg
36. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d4fd0-jjj.jpg
37. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/63719-kkk.jpg
38. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/449d1-lll.jpg

39. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c7173-mmm.jpg
40. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/92ba1-nnn.jpg
41. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7a1a8-ooo.jpg
42. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2f686-ppp.jpg
43. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5b98a-qqq.jpg
44. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/872c0-rrr.jpg
45. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/17f30-sss.jpg
46. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f2795-ttt.jpg
47. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ec951-uuu.jpg
48. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f49a5-vvv.jpg
49. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/65647-www.jpg
50. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/105ee-xxx.jpg
51. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c61be-yyy.jpg
52. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1dd41-zzz.jpg
53. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2187e-aaa.jpg
54. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7f4d2-bbb.jpg
55. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/faf33-ccc.jpg
56. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2e02a-ddd.jpg
57. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c743f-eee.jpg
58. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/70bfd-fff.jpg
59. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b3e95-ggg.jpg
60. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f0b3b-hhh.jpg
61. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c677a-iii.jpg
62. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1f6b7-jjj.jpg
63. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/45a4e-kkk.jpg
64. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/77e6a-lll.jpg
65. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0bb0b-mmm.jpg
66. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d66d3-nnn.jpg
67. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c18e1-ooo.jpg
68. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/605a0-ppp.jpg
69. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a7a2c-qqq.jpg
70. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/053fa-rrr.jpg
71. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ec4a7-sss.jpg
72. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0a331-ttt.jpg
73. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/253c6-uuu.jpg
74. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/17b89-vvv.jpg
75. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4805a-www.jpg
76. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/97645-xxx.jpg
77. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4f422-yyy.jpg
78. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/61fb3-zzz.jpg
79. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/afb18-aaa.jpg
80. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2f467-bbb.jpg
81. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7ae51-ccc.jpg
82. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ad108-ddd.jpg
83. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/40cdb-eee.jpg
84. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/181c5-fff.jpg
85. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/71839-ggg.jpg
86. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9c5bf-hhh.jpg
87. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/15e69-iii.jpg
88. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4e3a9-jjj.jpg

89. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/be1d2-kkk.jpg`
90. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/badba-lll.jpg`
91. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7c2f0-mmm.jpg`
92. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9188d-nnnn.jpg`
93. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1c9d7-ooo.jpg`
94. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/05c6e-ppp.jpg`
95. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4630a-qqq.jpg`
96. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f71b1-rrr.jpg`
97. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6e9b6-sss.jpg`
98. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c9ddd-ttt.jpg`
99. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3ce33-uuu.jpg`
100. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aca5d-vvv.jpg`
101. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a37cf-www.jpg`
102. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ba928-xxx.jpg`
103. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/194b6-yyy.jpg`
104. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/af925-zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 19 (2019-03-18 07:28)

[1]

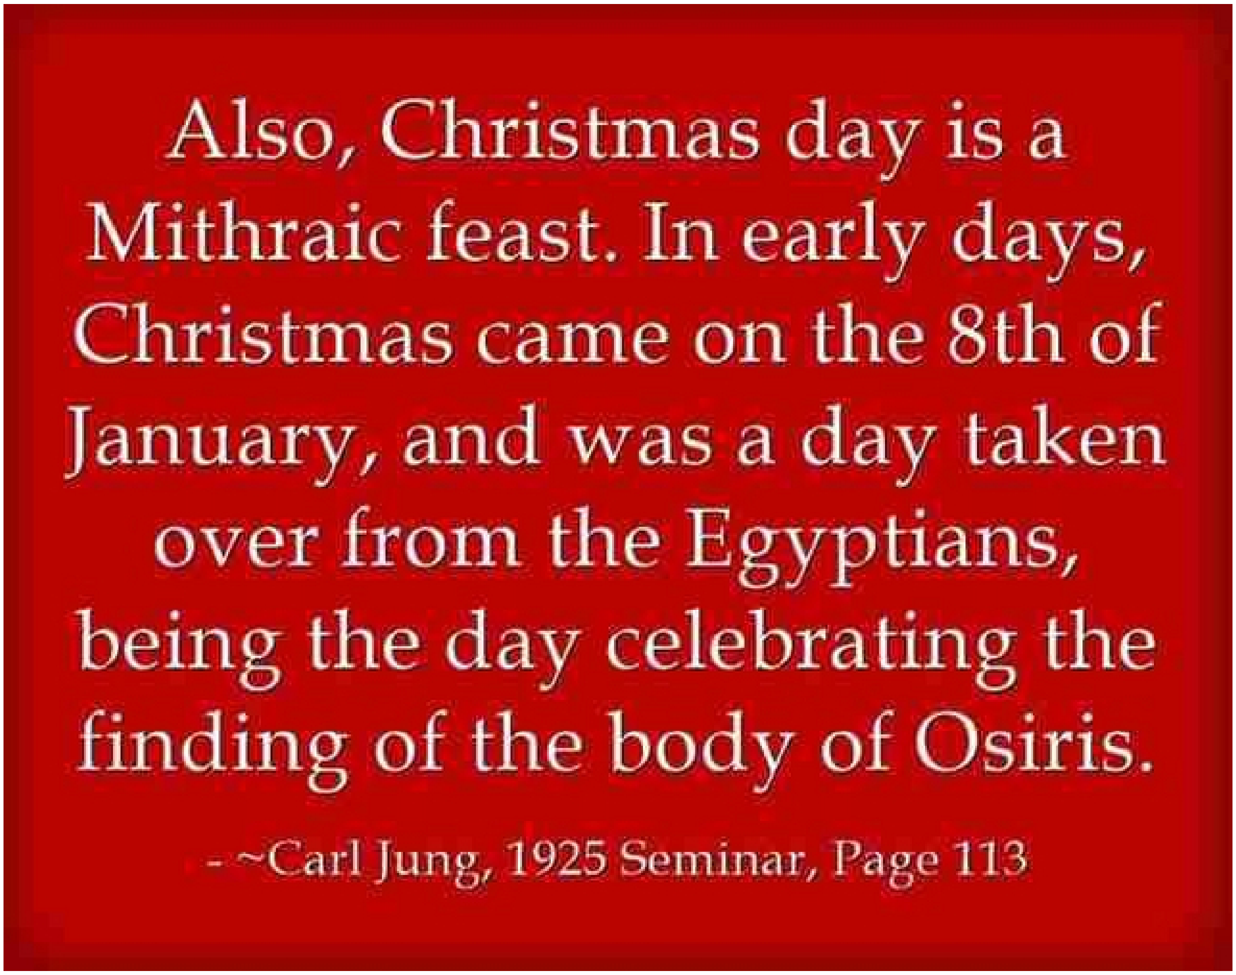


The living mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words and depleted by arguments.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 581

The living mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words and depleted by arguments. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 581

[2]

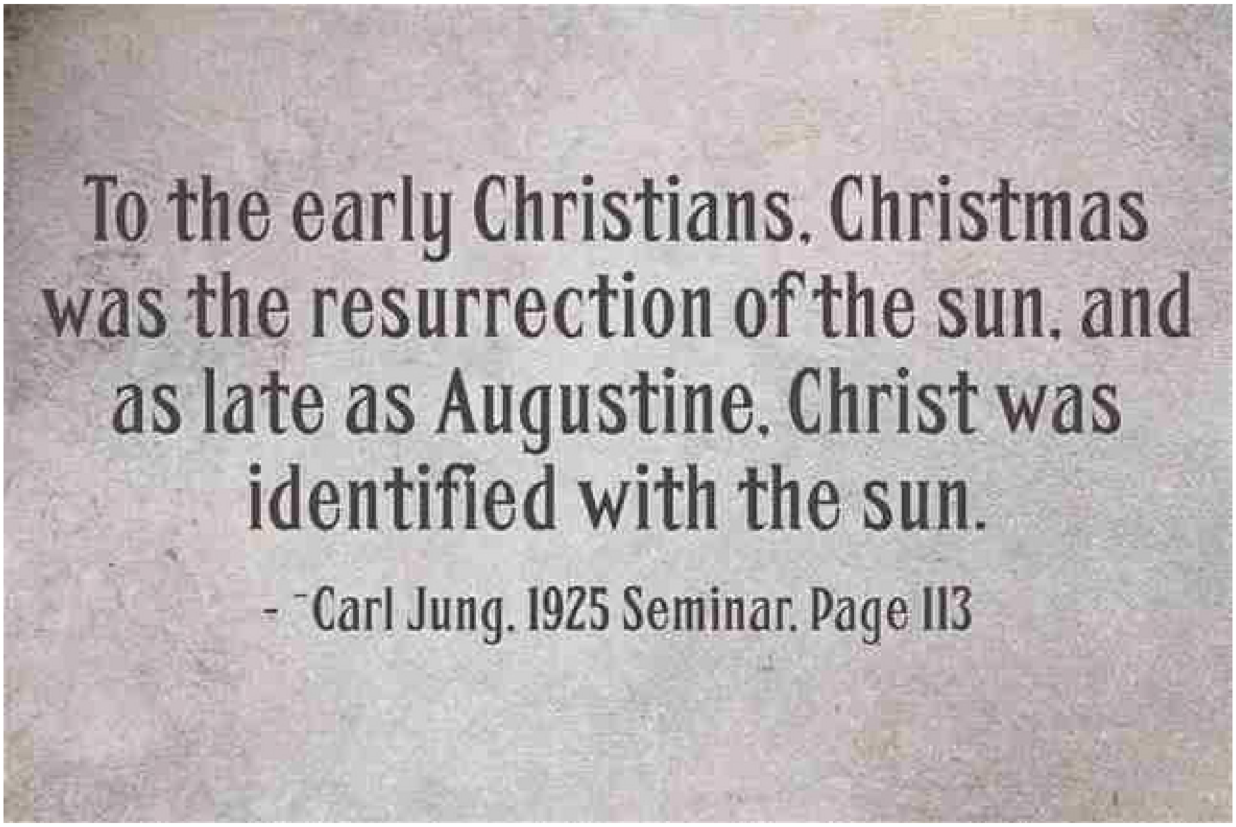


Also, Christmas day is a Mithraic feast. In early days, Christmas came on the 8th of January, and was a day taken over from the Egyptians, being the day celebrating the finding of the body of Osiris.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 113

Also, Christmas day is a Mithraic feast. In early days, Christmas came on the 8th of January, and was a day taken over from the Egyptians, being the day celebrating the finding of the body of Osiris. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 113

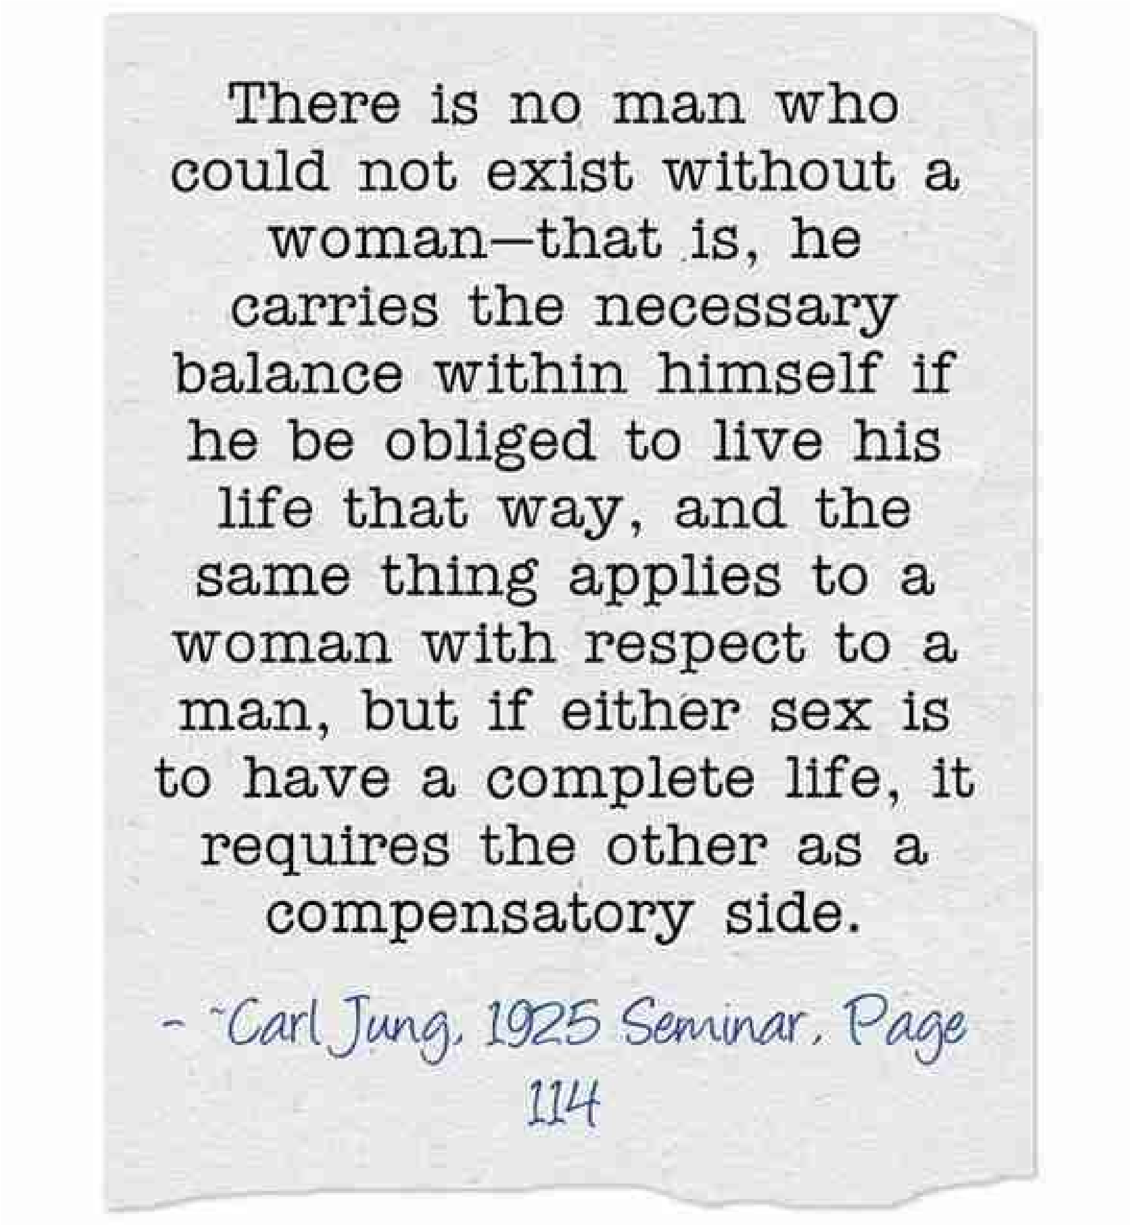
[3]



To the early Christians, Christmas was the resurrection of the sun, and as late as Augustine, Christ was identified with the sun.

- -Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 113

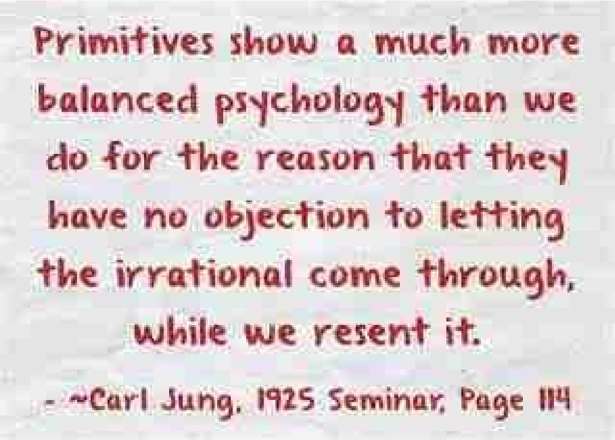
To the early Christians, Christmas was the resurrection of the sun, and as late as Augustine, Christ was identified with the sun. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 113



There is no man who could not exist without a woman—that is, he carries the necessary balance within himself if he be obliged to live his life that way, and the same thing applies to a woman with respect to a man, but if either sex is to have a complete life, it requires the other as a compensatory side.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114

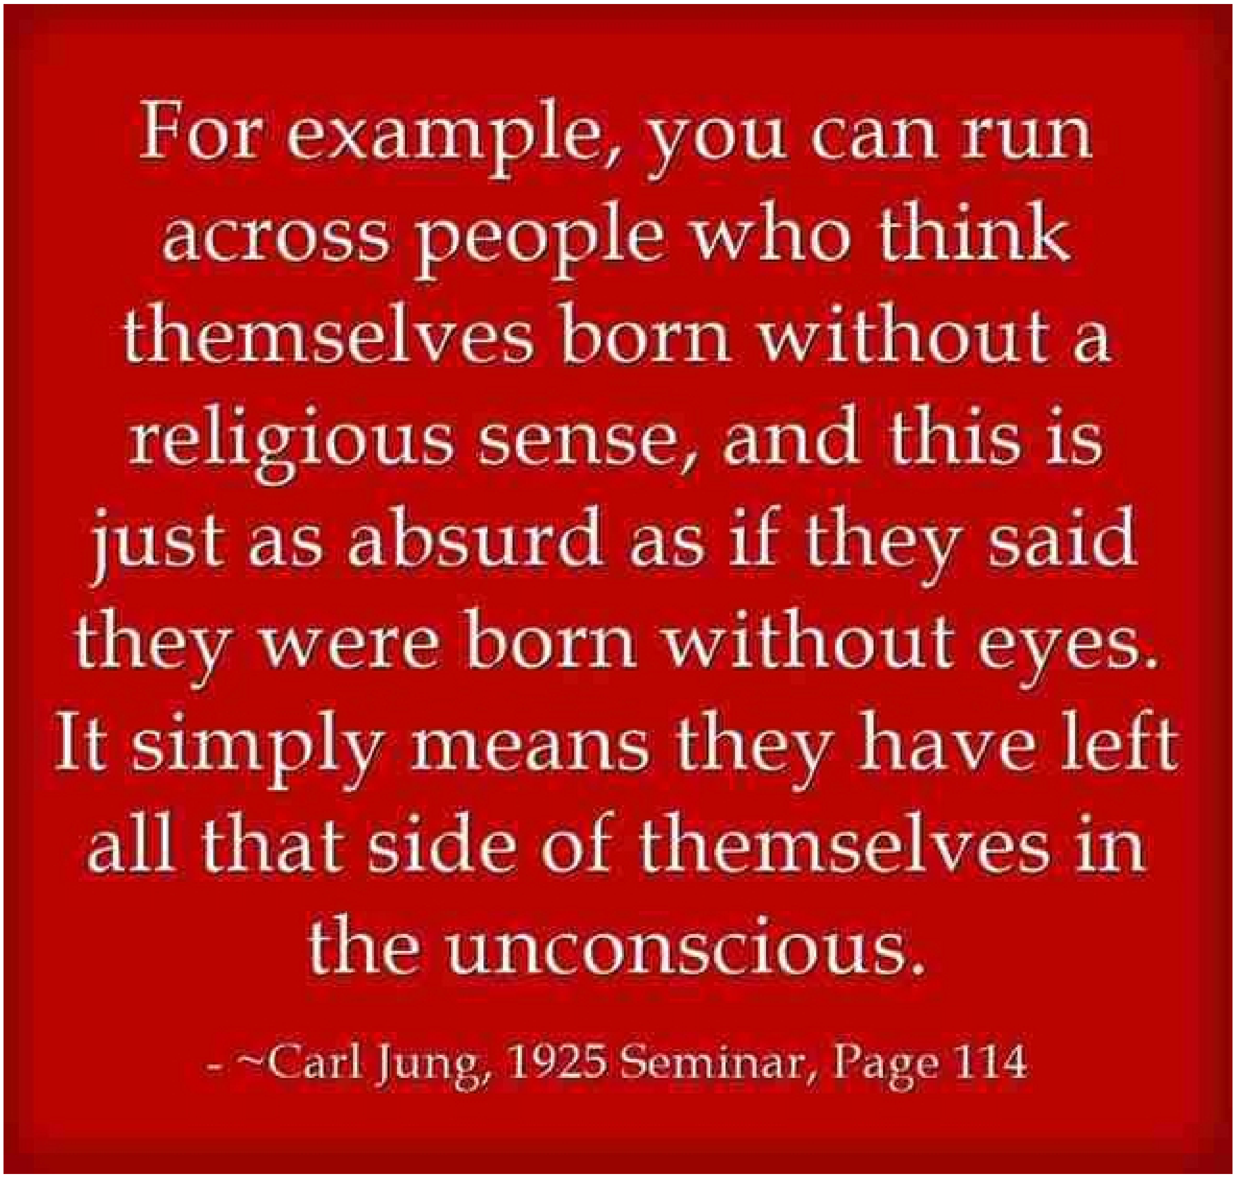
There is no man who could not exist without a woman—that is, he carries the necessary balance within himself if he be obliged to live his life that way, and the same thing applies to a woman with respect to a man, but if either sex is to have a complete life, it requires the other as a compensatory side. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114



Primitives show a much more balanced psychology than we do for the reason that they have no objection to letting the irrational come through, while we resent it.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114

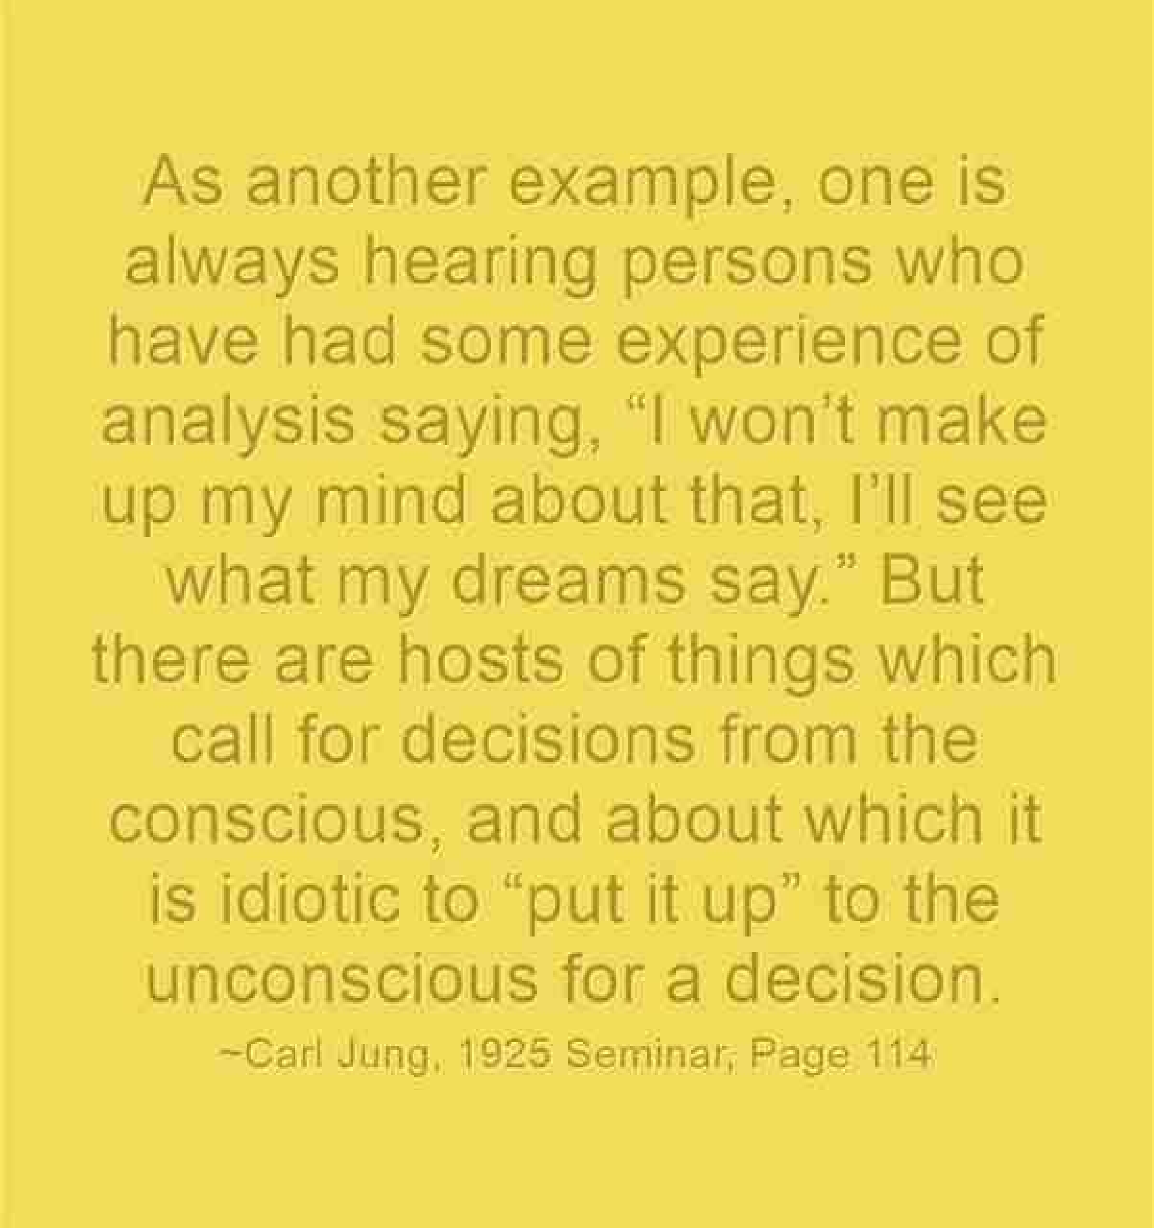
Primitives show a much more balanced psychology than we do for the reason that they have no objection to letting the irrational come through, while we resent it. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114



For example, you can run across people who think themselves born without a religious sense, and this is just as absurd as if they said they were born without eyes. It simply means they have left all that side of themselves in the unconscious.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114

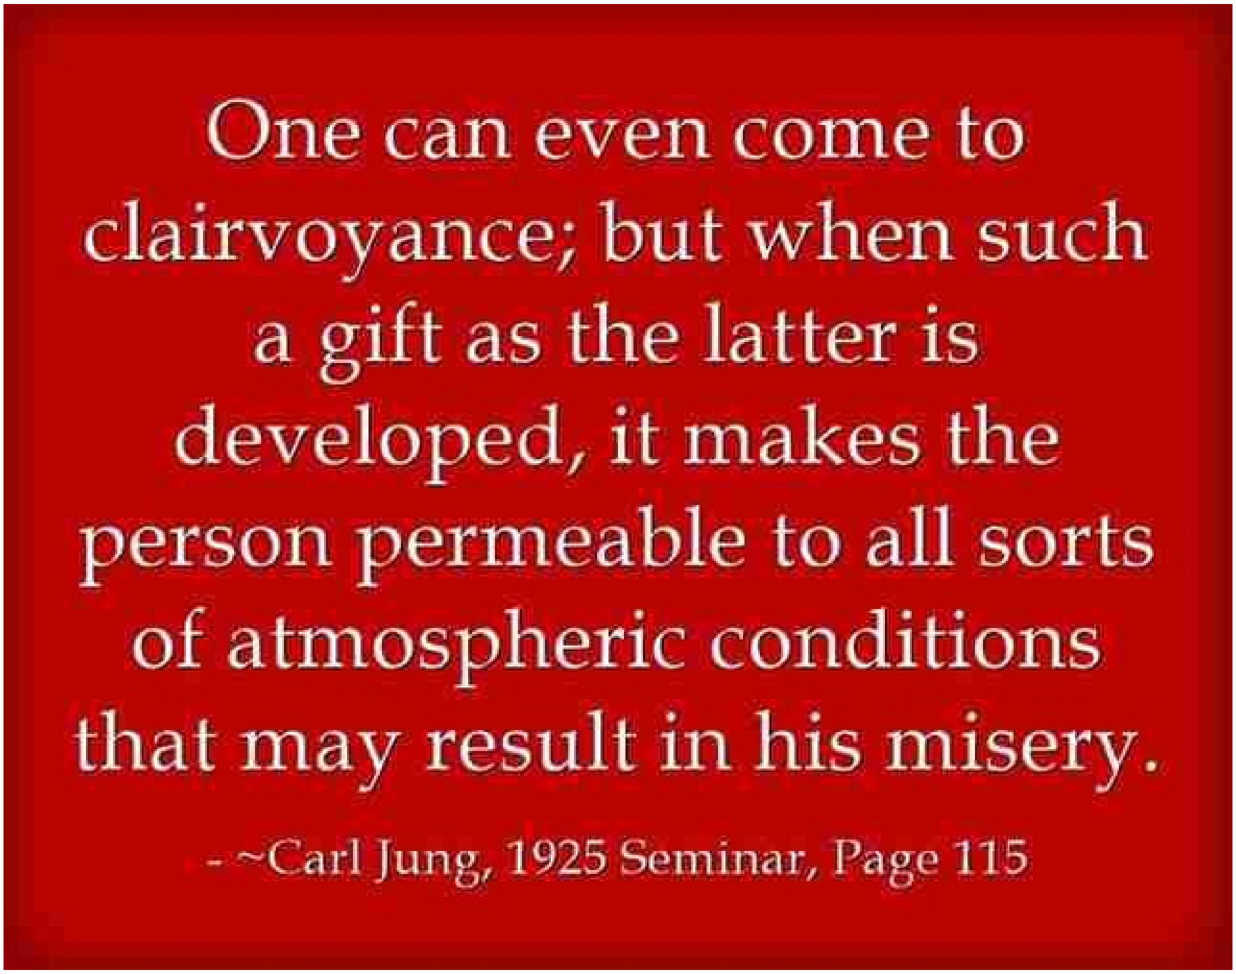
For example, you can run across people who think themselves born without a religious sense, and this is just as absurd as if they said they were born without eyes. It simply means they have left all that side of themselves in the unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114



As another example, one is always hearing persons who have had some experience of analysis saying, “I won’t make up my mind about that, I’ll see what my dreams say.” But there are hosts of things which call for decisions from the conscious, and about which it is idiotic to “put it up” to the unconscious for a decision.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114

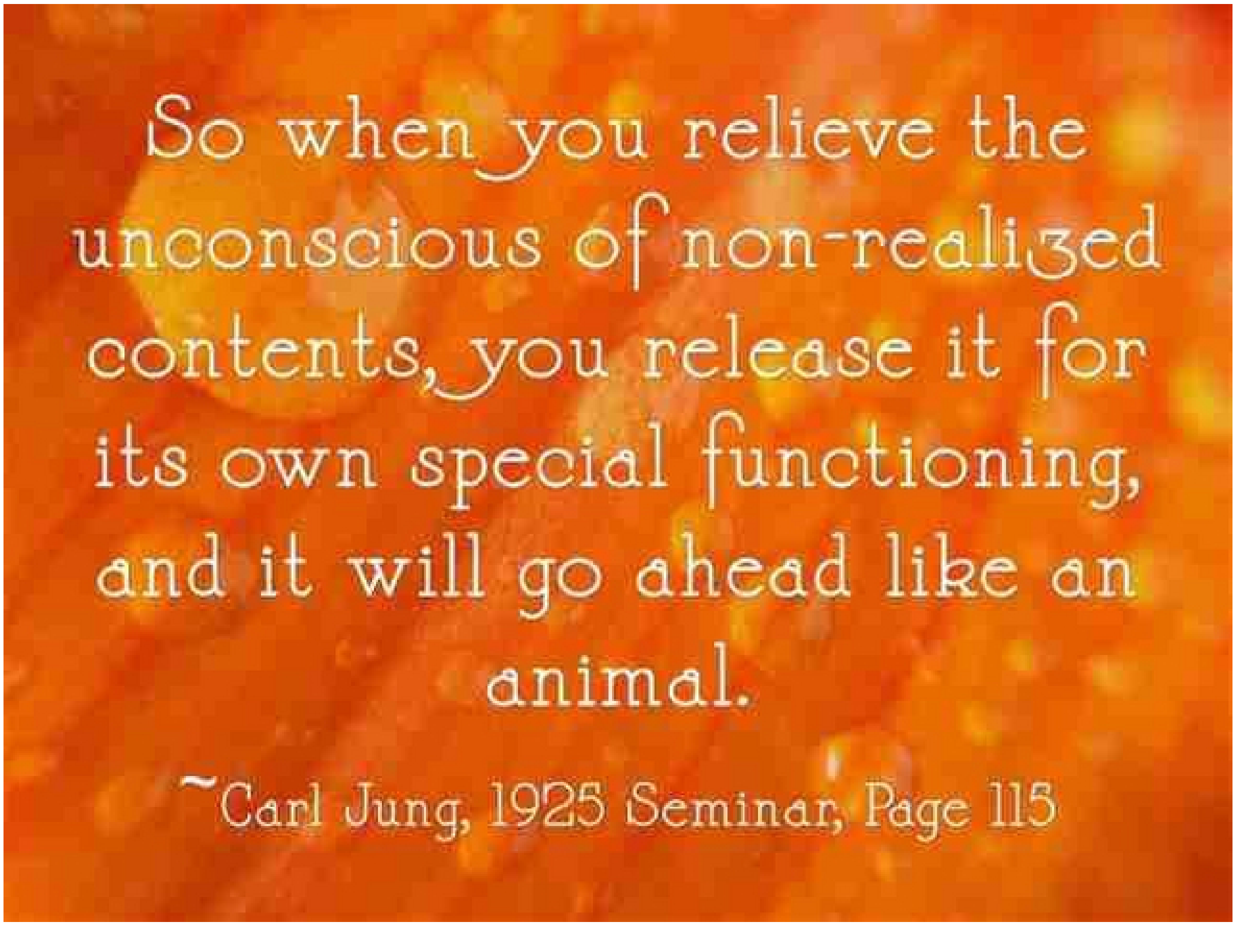
As another example, one is always hearing persons who have had some experience of analysis saying, “I won’t make up my mind about that, I’ll see what my dreams say.” But there are hosts of things which call for decisions from the conscious, and about which it is idiotic to “put it up” to the unconscious for a decision. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 114



One can even come to clairvoyance; but when such a gift as the latter is developed, it makes the person permeable to all sorts of atmospheric conditions that may result in his misery.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115

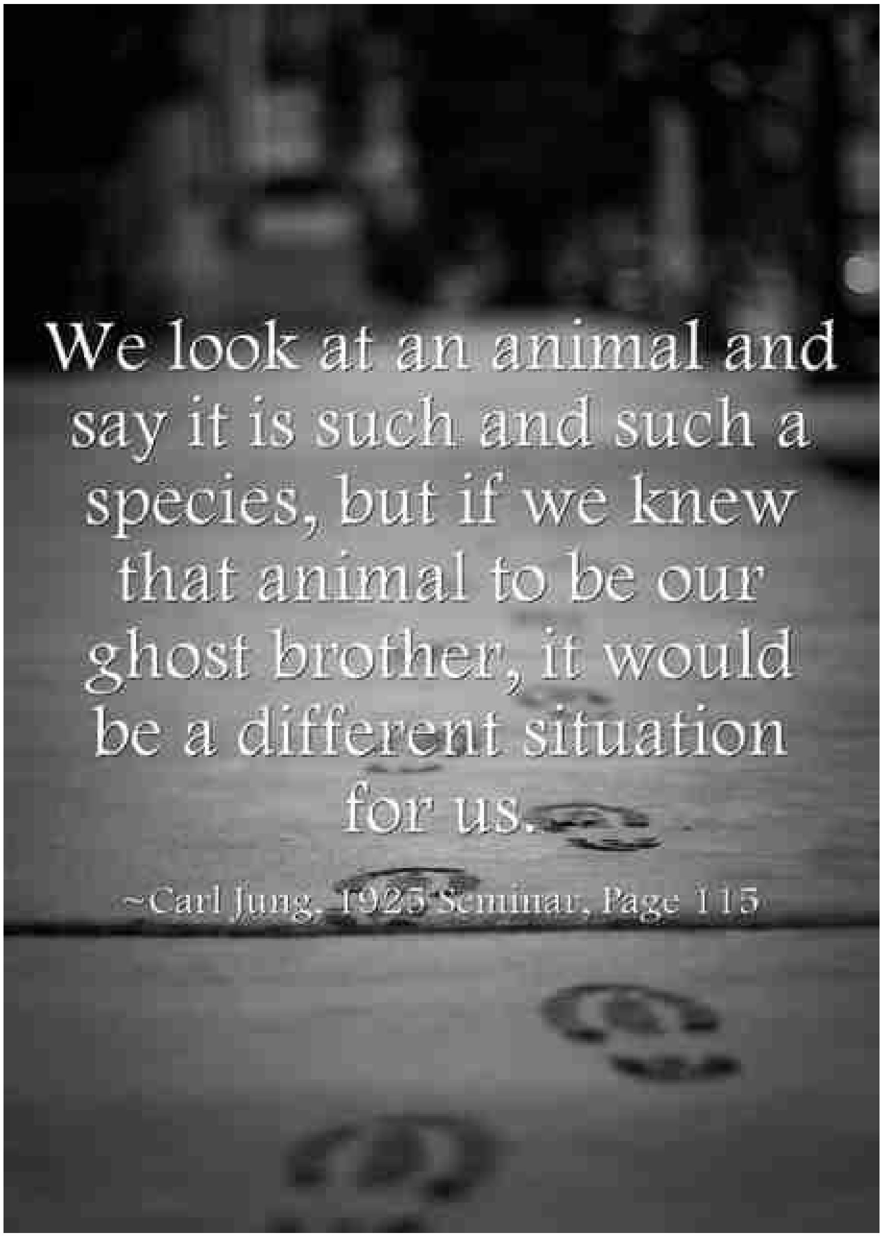
One can even come to clairvoyance; but when such a gift as the latter is developed, it makes the person permeable to all sorts of atmospheric conditions that may result in his misery. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115



So when you relieve the unconscious of non-realized contents, you release it for its own special functioning, and it will go ahead like an animal.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115

So when you relieve the unconscious of non-realized contents, you release it for its own special functioning, and it will go ahead like an animal. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115

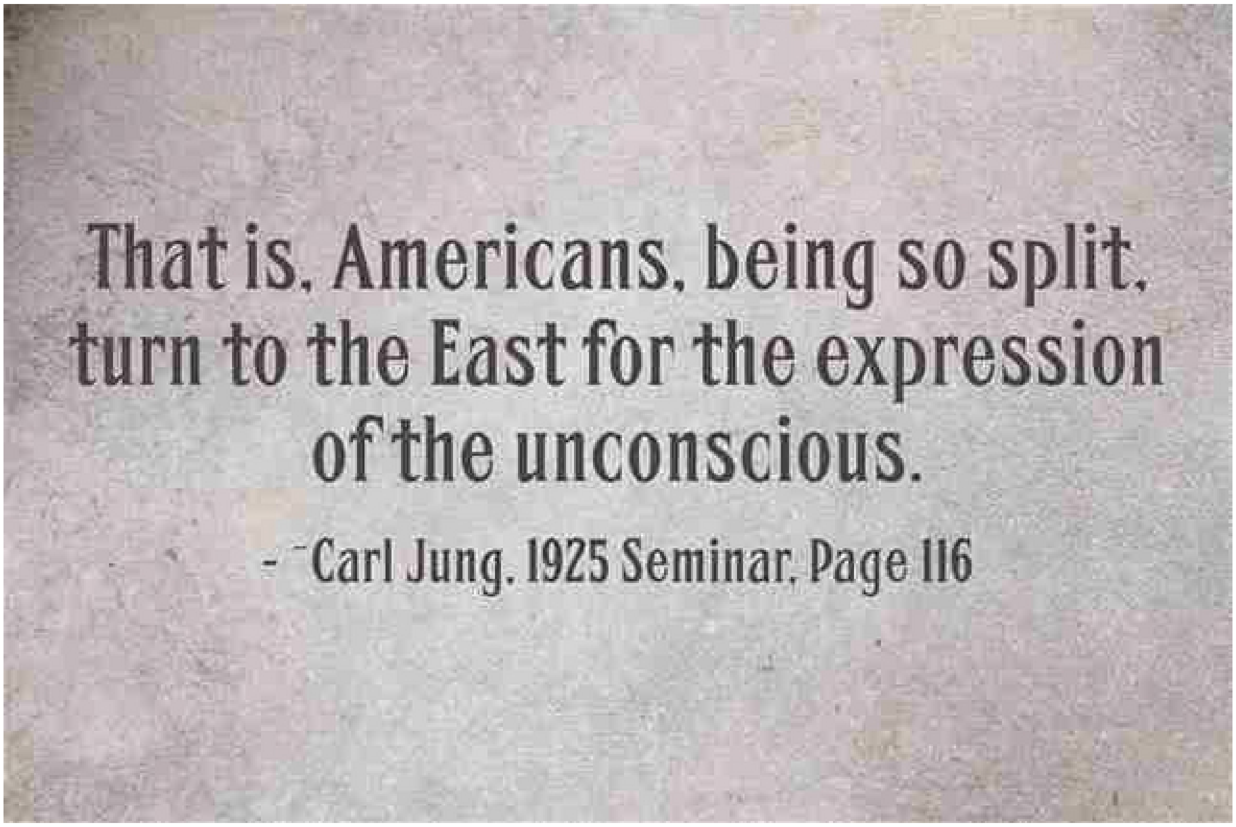


We look at an animal and say it is such and such a species, but if we knew that animal to be our ghost brother, it would be a different situation for us.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115

We look at an animal and say it is such and such a species, but if we knew that animal to be our ghost brother, it would be a different situation for us. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115

After all, an animal is not just a thing with fur on it; it is a complete being.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115

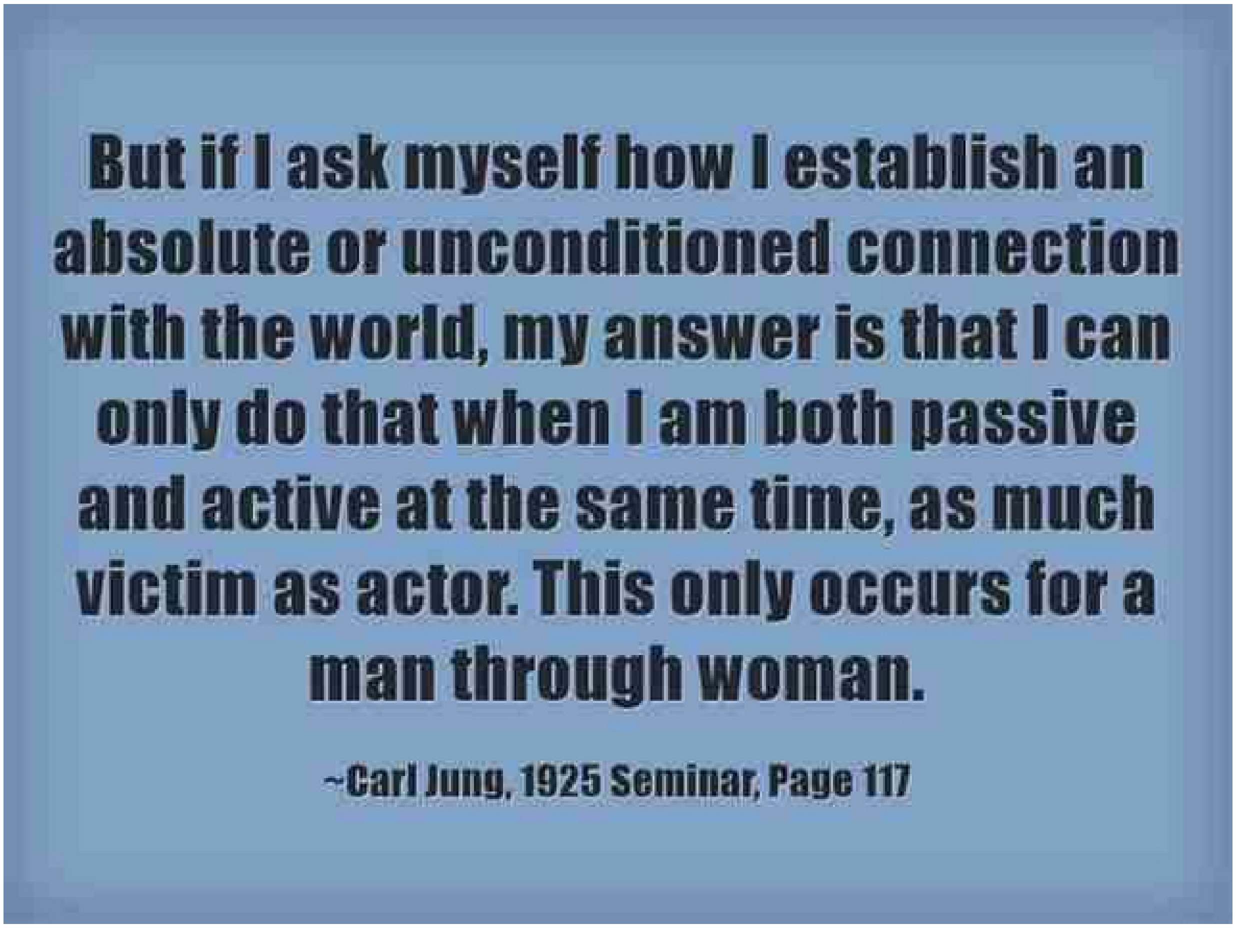
After all, an animal is not just a thing with fur on it; it is a complete being. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 115



That is, Americans, being so split, turn to the East for the expression of the unconscious.

- ¯Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 116

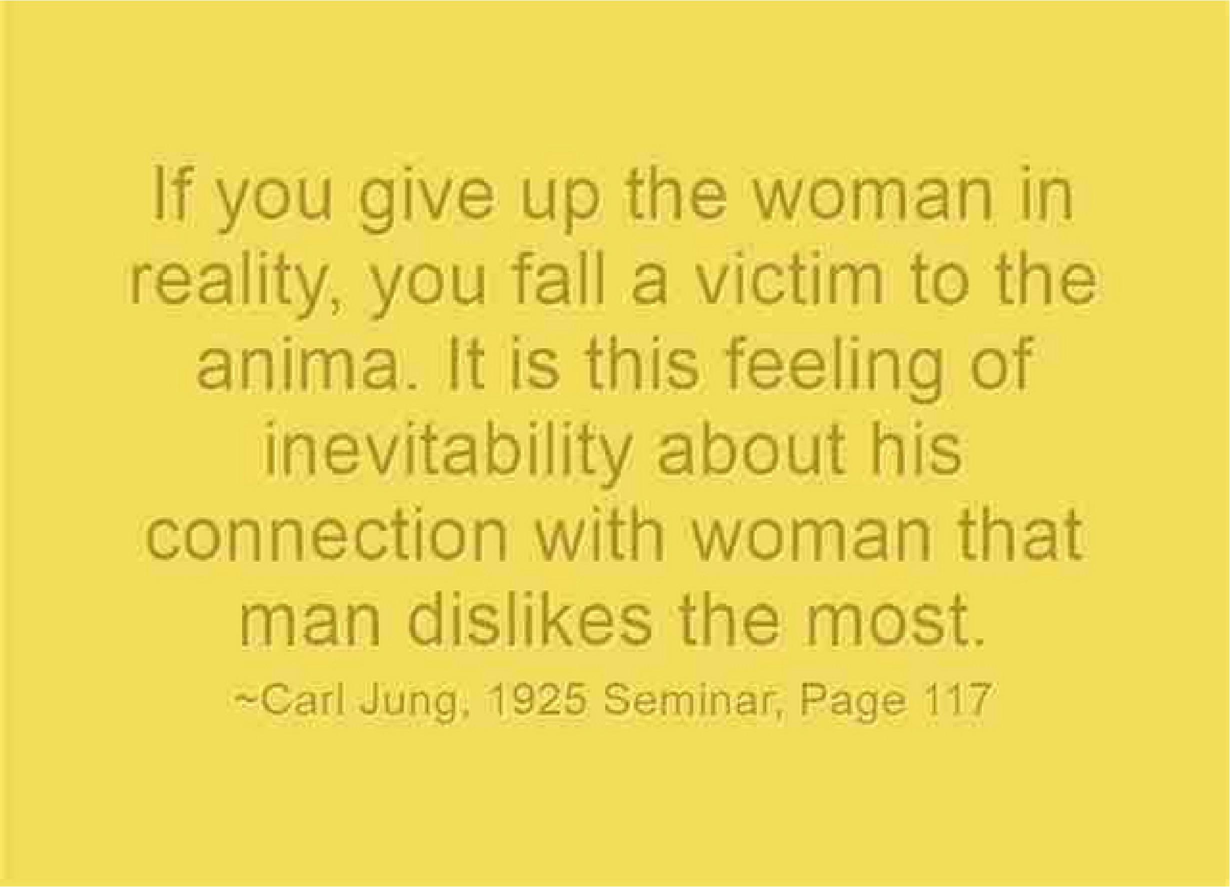
That is, Americans, being so split, turn to the East for the expression of the unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 116



But if I ask myself how I establish an absolute or unconditioned connection with the world, my answer is that I can only do that when I am both passive and active at the same time, as much victim as actor. This only occurs for a man through woman.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117

But if I ask myself how I establish an absolute or unconditioned connection with the world, my answer is that I can only do that when I am both passive and active at the same time, as much victim as actor. This only occurs for a man through woman. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117



If you give up the woman in reality, you fall a victim to the anima. It is this feeling of inevitability about his connection with woman that man dislikes the most.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117

If you give up the woman in reality, you fall a victim to the anima. It is this feeling of inevitability about his connection with woman that man dislikes the most. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 117

Let us take as a sample the Catholic Mass. If we study this we must recognize it to be one of the most perfect things we possess.

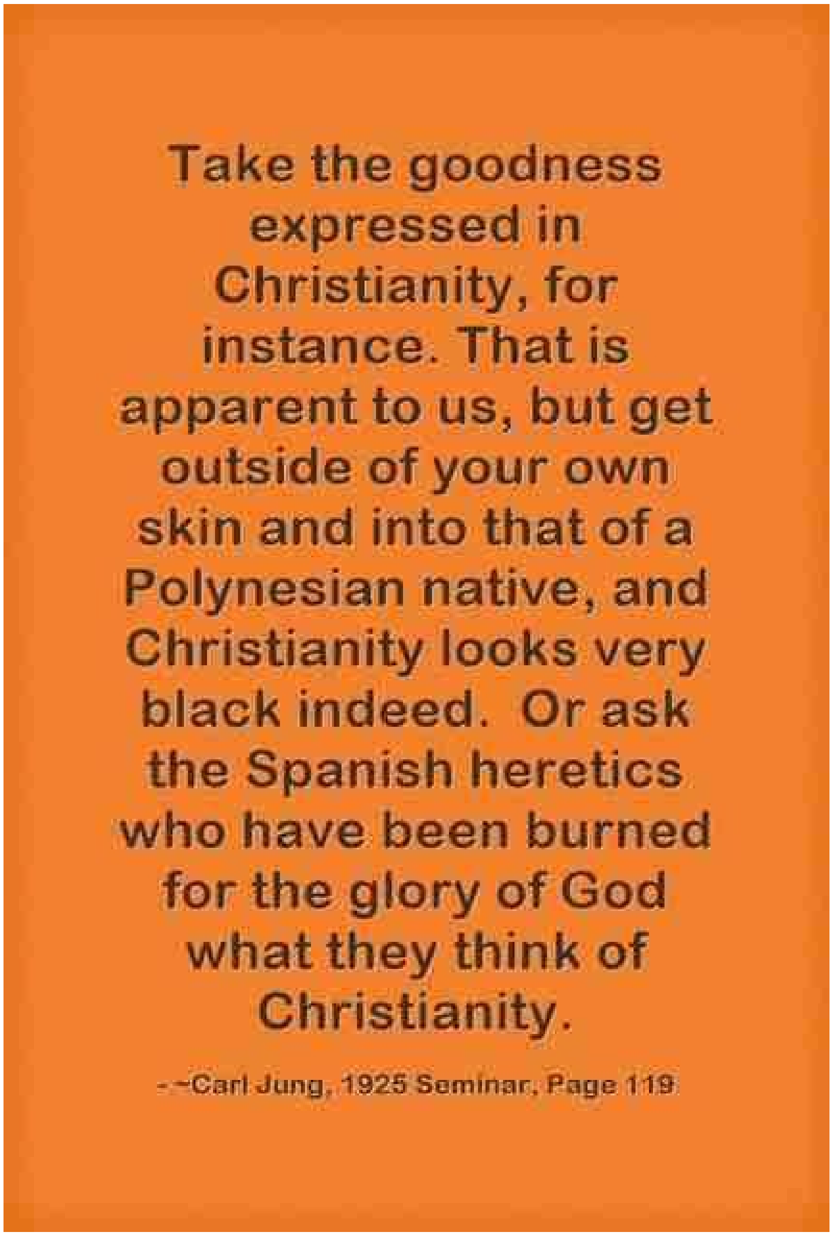
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 119

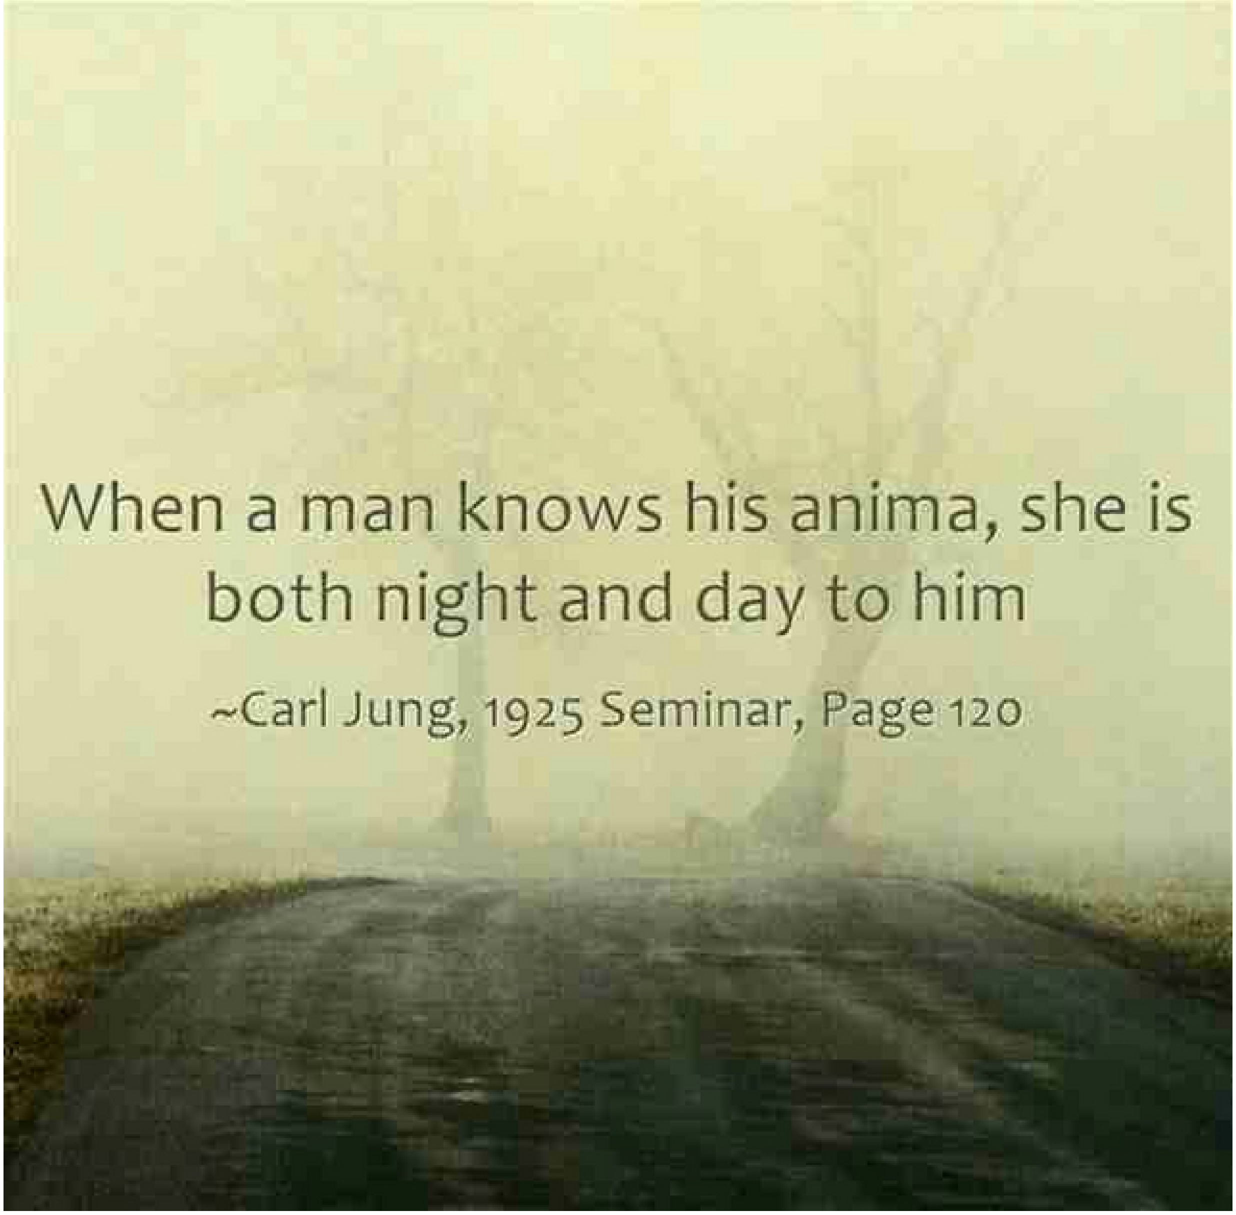
Let us take as a sample the Catholic Mass. If we study this we must recognize it to be one of the most perfect things we possess. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 119



Take the goodness expressed in Christianity, for instance. That is apparent to us, but get outside of your own skin and into that of a Polynesian native, and Christianity looks very black indeed. Or ask the Spanish heretics who have been burned for the glory of God what they think of Christianity.

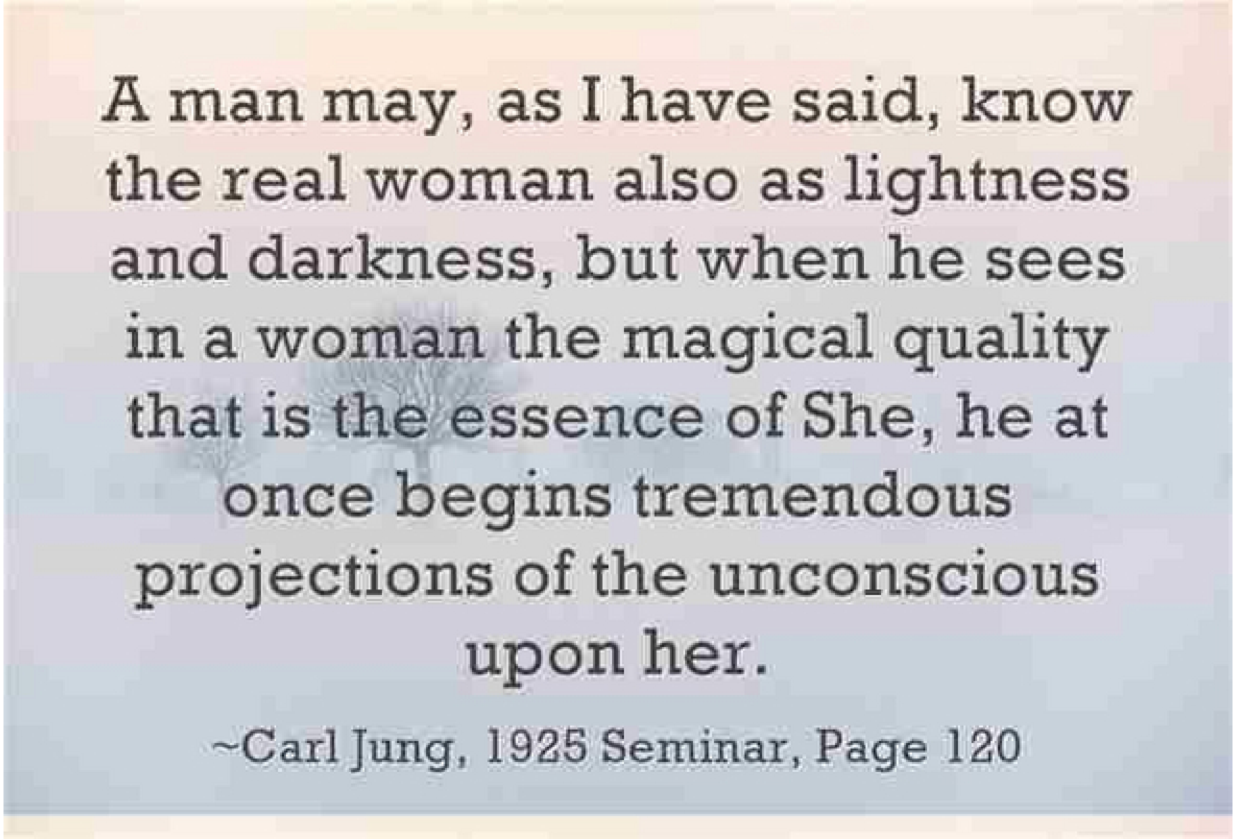
- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 119

Take the goodness expressed in Christianity, for instance. That is apparent to us, but get outside of your own skin and into that of a Polynesian native, and Christianity looks very black indeed. Or ask the Spanish heretics who have been burned for the glory of God what they think of Christianity. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 119



When a man knows his anima, she is both night and day to him
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 120

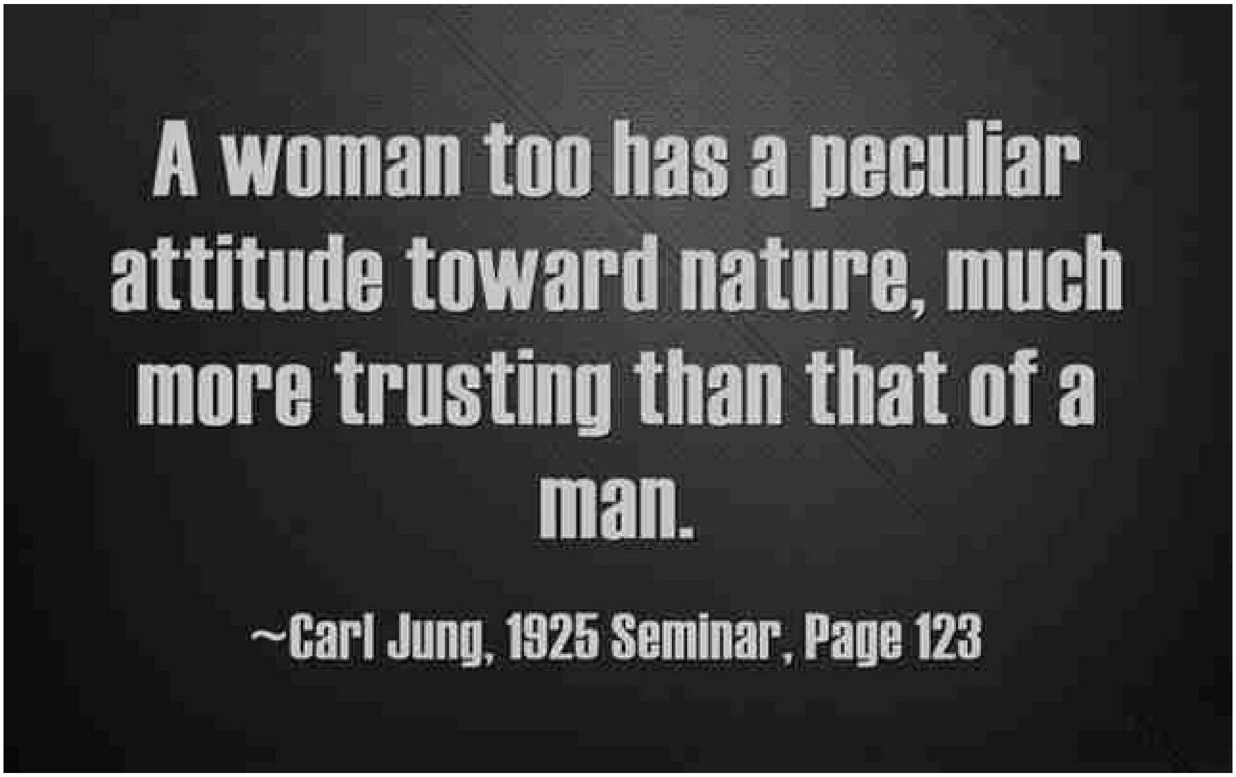
When a man knows his anima, she is both night and day to him. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 120



A man may, as I have said, know the real woman also as lightness and darkness, but when he sees in a woman the magical quality that is the essence of She, he at once begins tremendous projections of the unconscious upon her.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 120

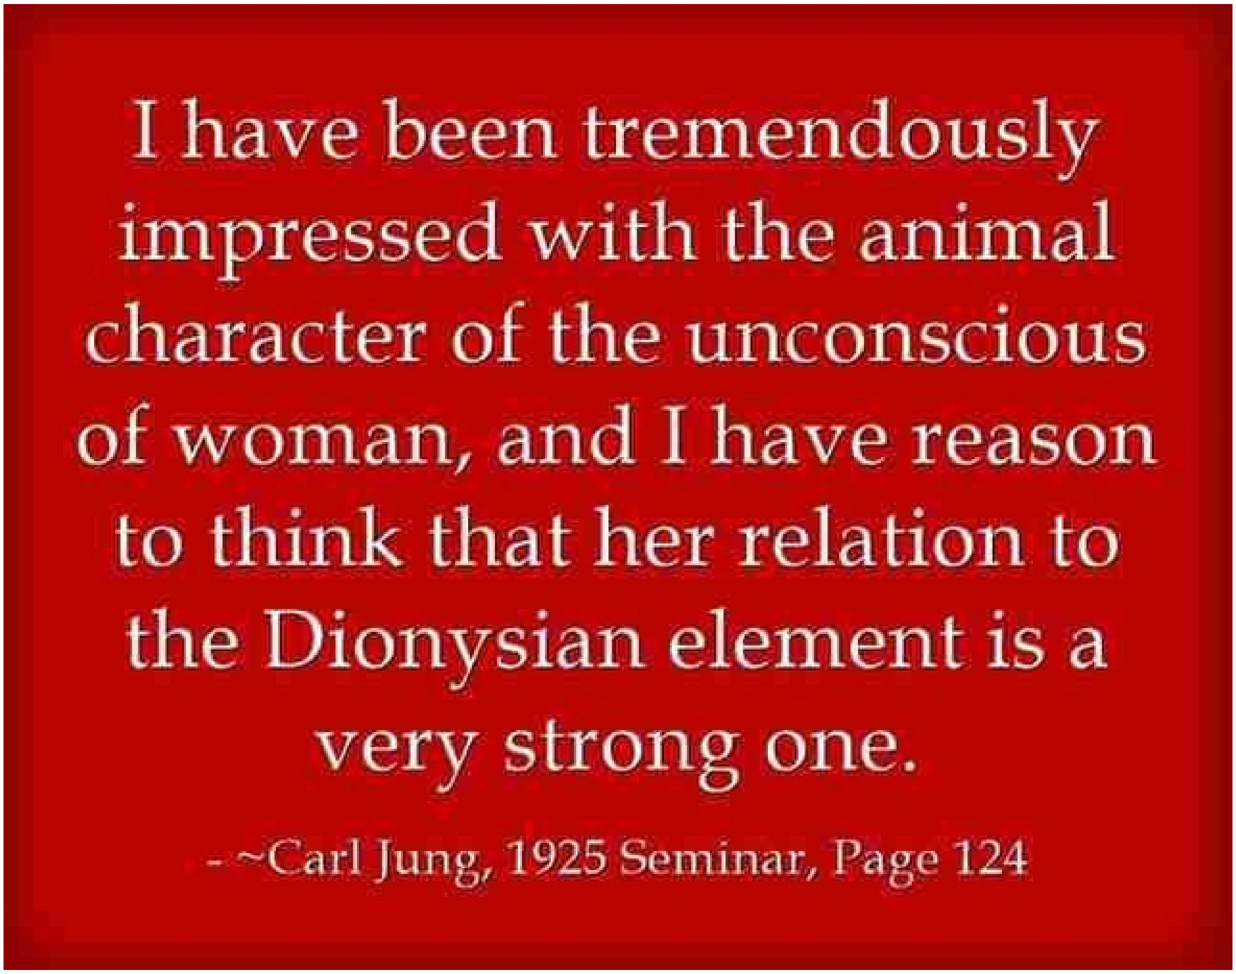
A man may, as I have said, know the real woman also as lightness and darkness, but when he sees in a woman the magical quality that is the essence of She, he at once begins tremendous projections of the unconscious upon her.
Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 120



A woman too has a peculiar attitude toward nature, much more trusting than that of a man.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 123

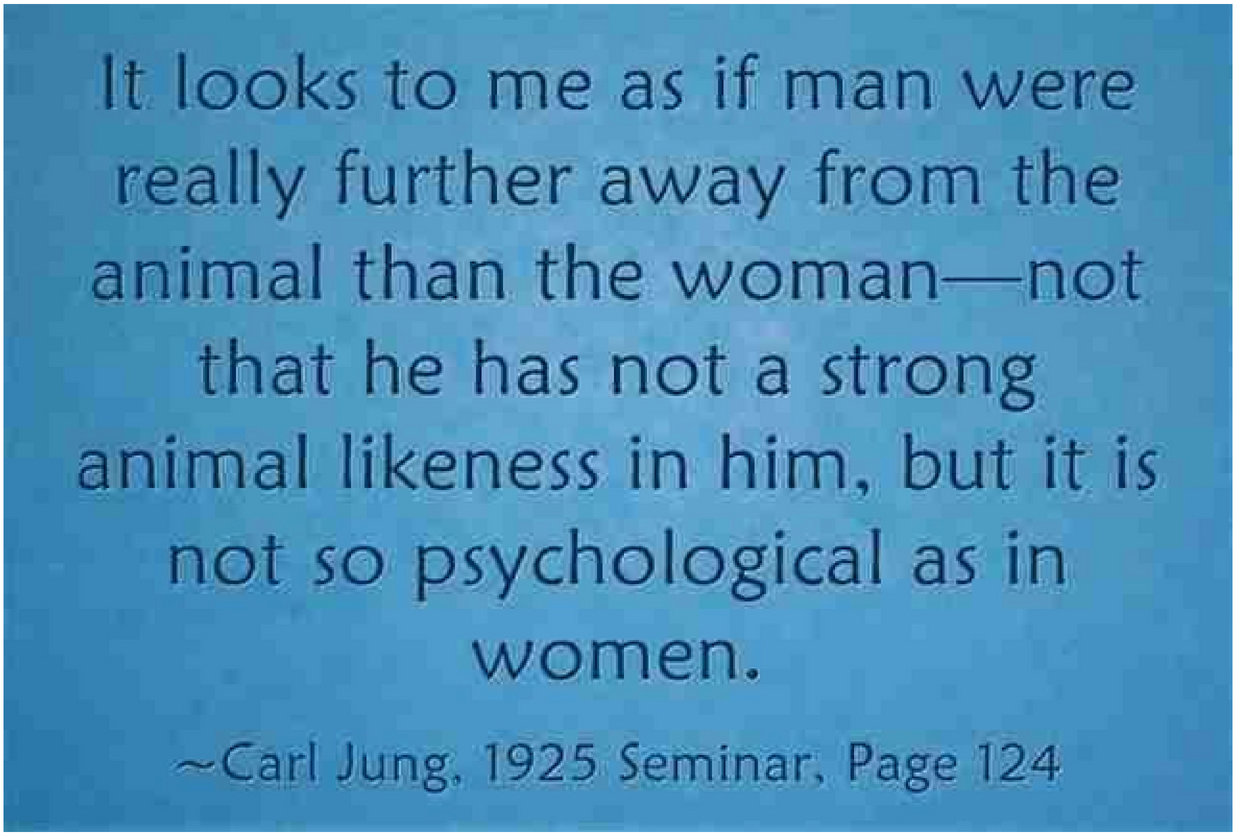
A woman too has a peculiar attitude toward nature, much more trusting than that of a man. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 123



I have been tremendously impressed with the animal character of the unconscious of woman, and I have reason to think that her relation to the Dionysian element is a very strong one.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

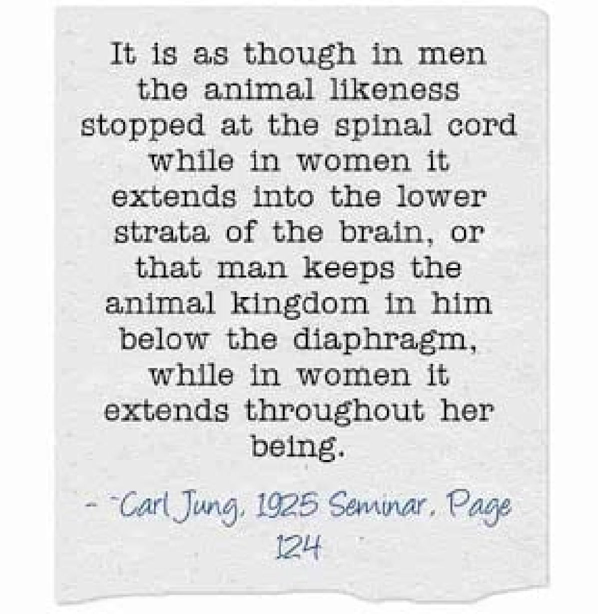
I have been tremendously impressed with the animal character of the unconscious of woman, and I have reason to think that her relation to the Dionysian element is a very strong one. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124



It looks to me as if man were really further away from the animal than the woman—not that he has not a strong animal likeness in him, but it is not so psychological as in women.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

It looks to me as if man were really further away from the animal than the woman—not that he has not a strong animal likeness in him, but it is not so psychological as in women. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

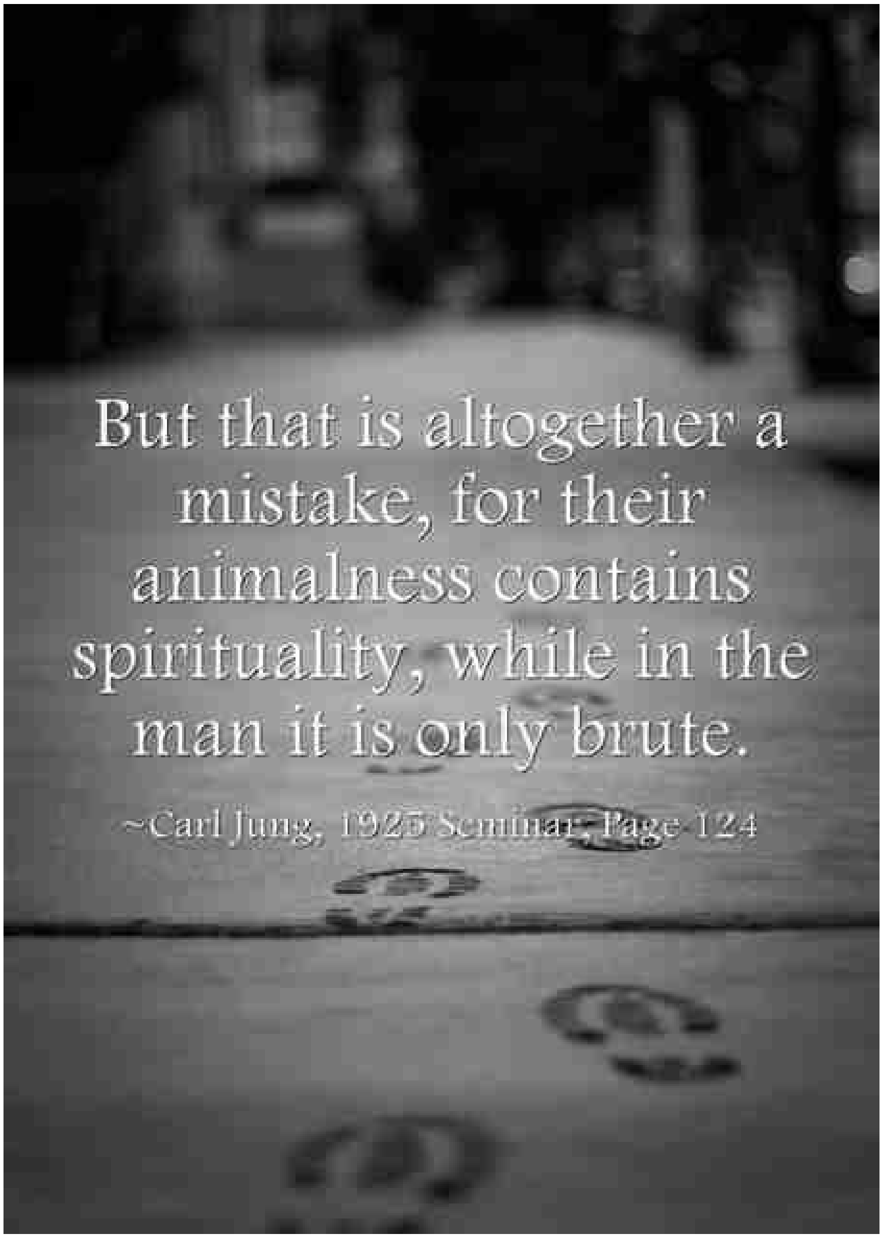


It is as though in men the animal likeness stopped at the spinal cord while in women it extends into the lower strata of the brain, or that man keeps the animal kingdom in him below the diaphragm, while in women it extends throughout her being.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

It is as though in men the animal likeness stopped at the spinal cord while in women it extends into the lower strata of the brain, or that man keeps the animal kingdom in him below the diaphragm, while in women it extends throughout her being. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

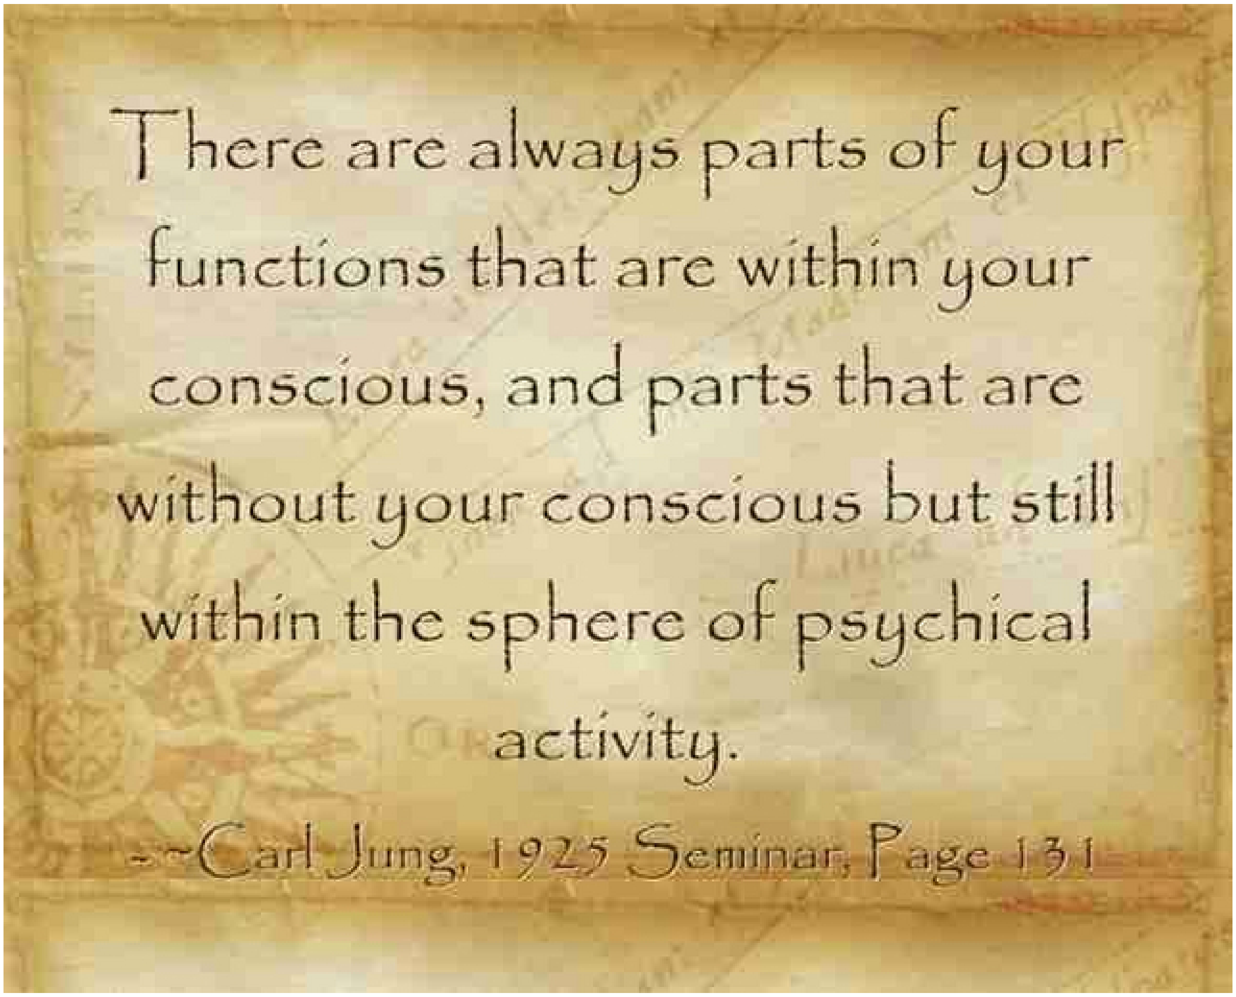
[22]



But that is altogether a mistake, for their animalness contains spirituality, while in the man it is only brute.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

But that is altogether a mistake, for their [women] animalness contains spirituality, while in the man it is only brute.
Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 124

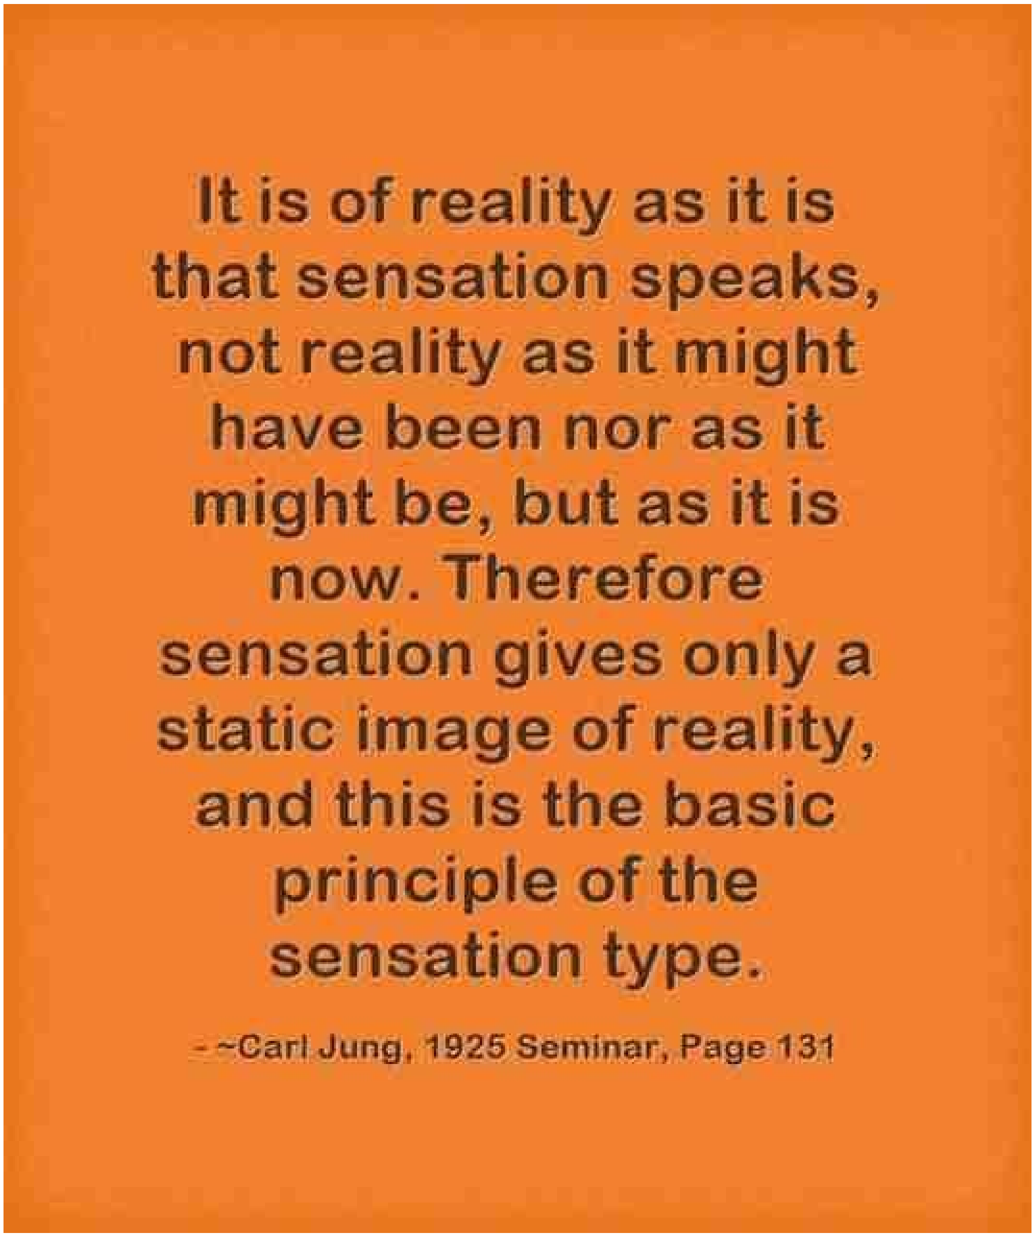
[23]



There are always parts of your functions that are within your conscious, and parts that are without your conscious but still within the sphere of psychical activity.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 131

There are always parts of your functions that are within your conscious, and parts that are without your conscious but still within the sphere of psychical activity. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 131



It is of reality as it is that sensation speaks, not reality as it might have been nor as it might be, but as it is now. Therefore sensation gives only a static image of reality, and this is the basic principle of the sensation type.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 131

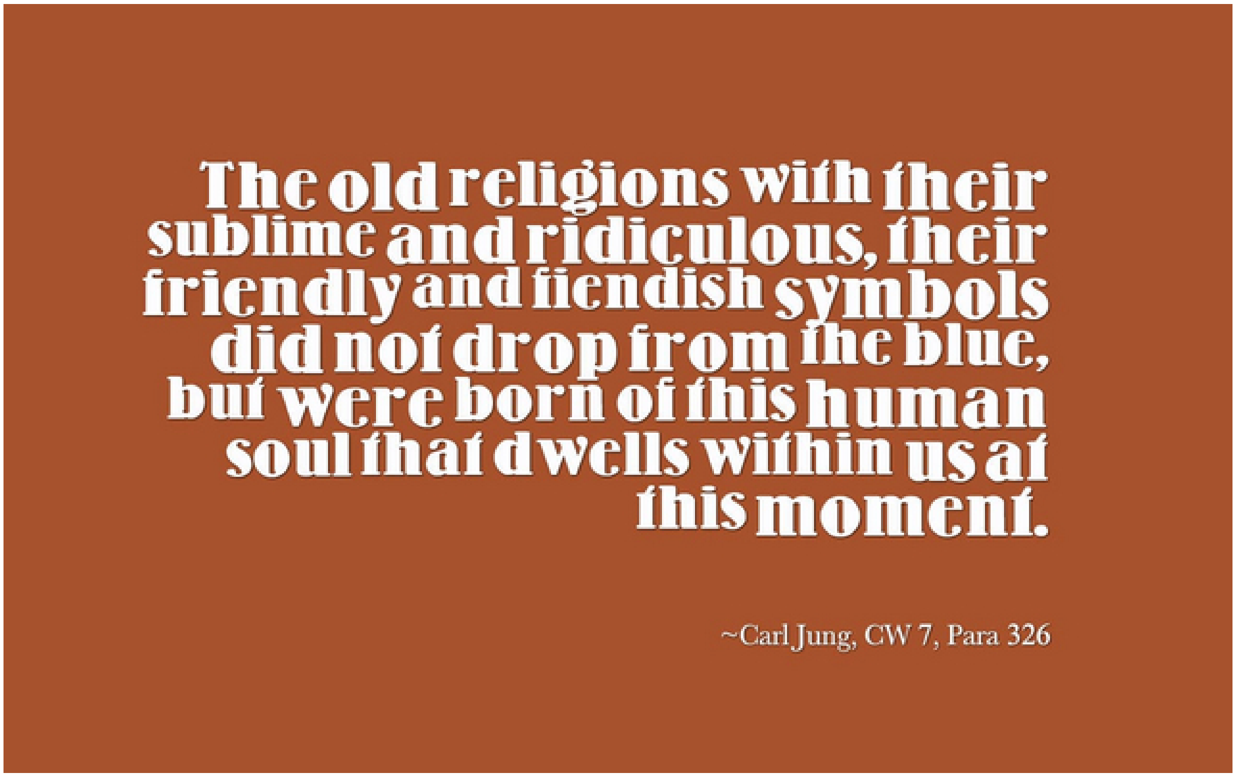
It is of reality as it is that sensation speaks, not reality as it might have been nor as it might be, but as it is now. Therefore sensation gives only a static image of reality, and this is the basic principle of the sensation type. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 132

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fcaaf-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/97a41-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/817eb-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/59284-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/544bc-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2a603-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8e1a7-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ce170-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/2f374-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a67a9-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5c19b-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4d712-lll.jpg`

13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/18688-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/242b6-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/48106-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b3c5d-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/c52ab-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ec661-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ebfb3-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/05743-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/31417-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/74a2c-www.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8b1f8-xxx.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/17582-yyy.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 41* (2019-03-18 10:40)

[1]

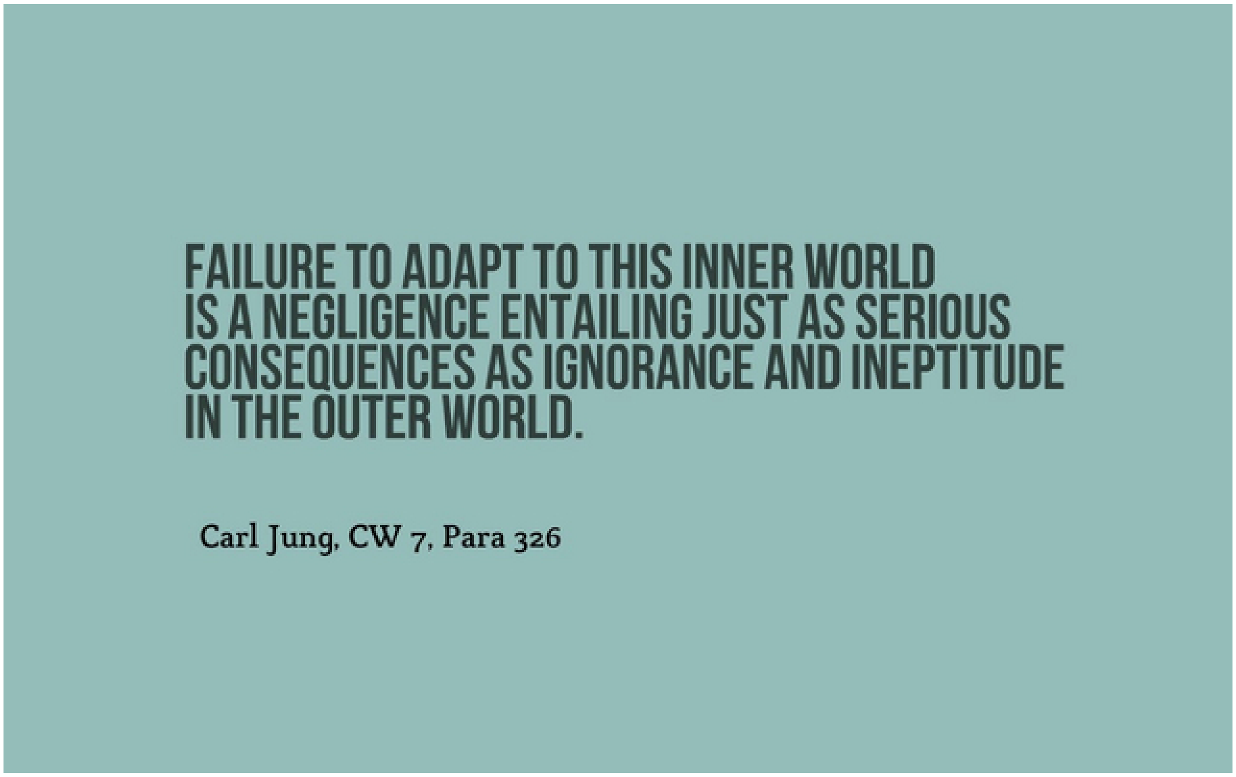


The old religions with their sublime and ridiculous, their friendly and fiendish symbols did not drop from the blue, but were born of this human soul that dwells within us at this moment.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 326

The old religions with their sublime and ridiculous, their friendly and fiendish symbols did not drop from the blue, but were born of this human soul that dwells within us at this moment. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 326

[2]



FAILURE TO ADAPT TO THIS INNER WORLD
IS A NEGLIGENCE ENTAILING JUST AS SERIOUS CONSEQUENCES AS IGNORANCE AND INEPTITUDE IN THE OUTER WORLD.

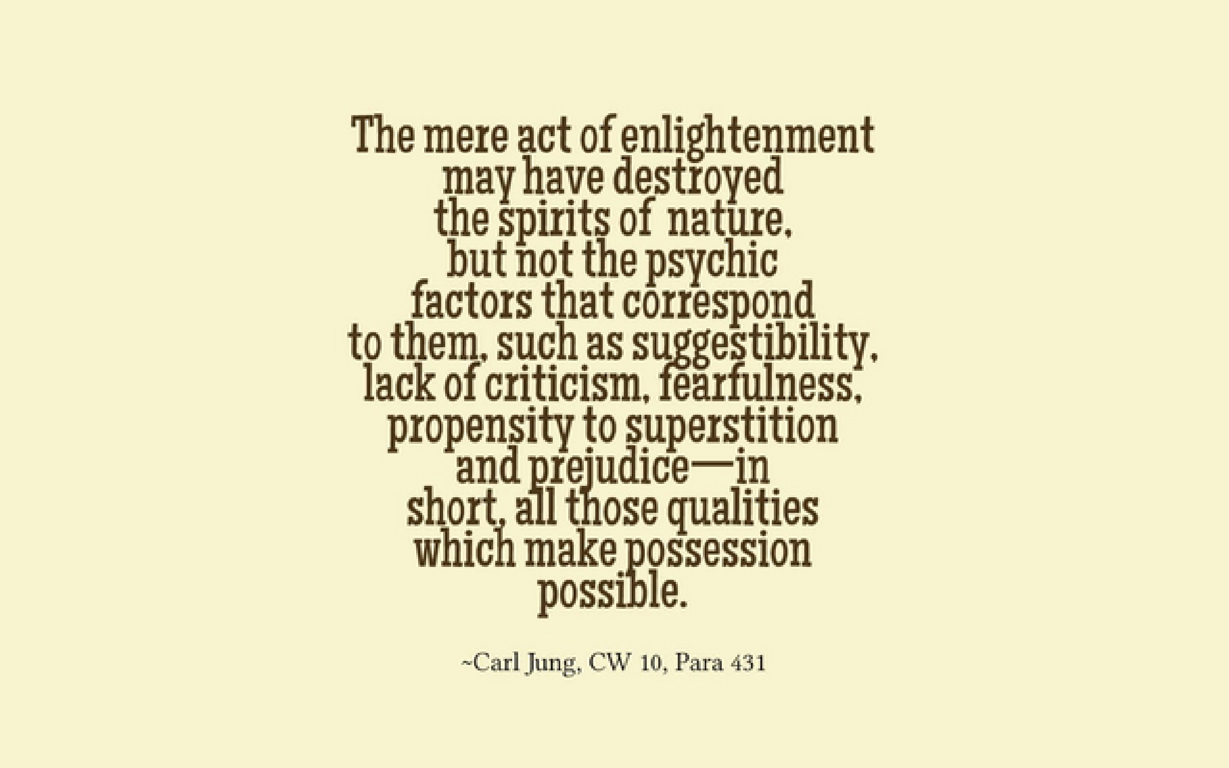
Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 326

Failure to adapt to this inner world is a negligence entailing just as serious consequences as ignorance and ineptitude in the outer world. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 326

[3]

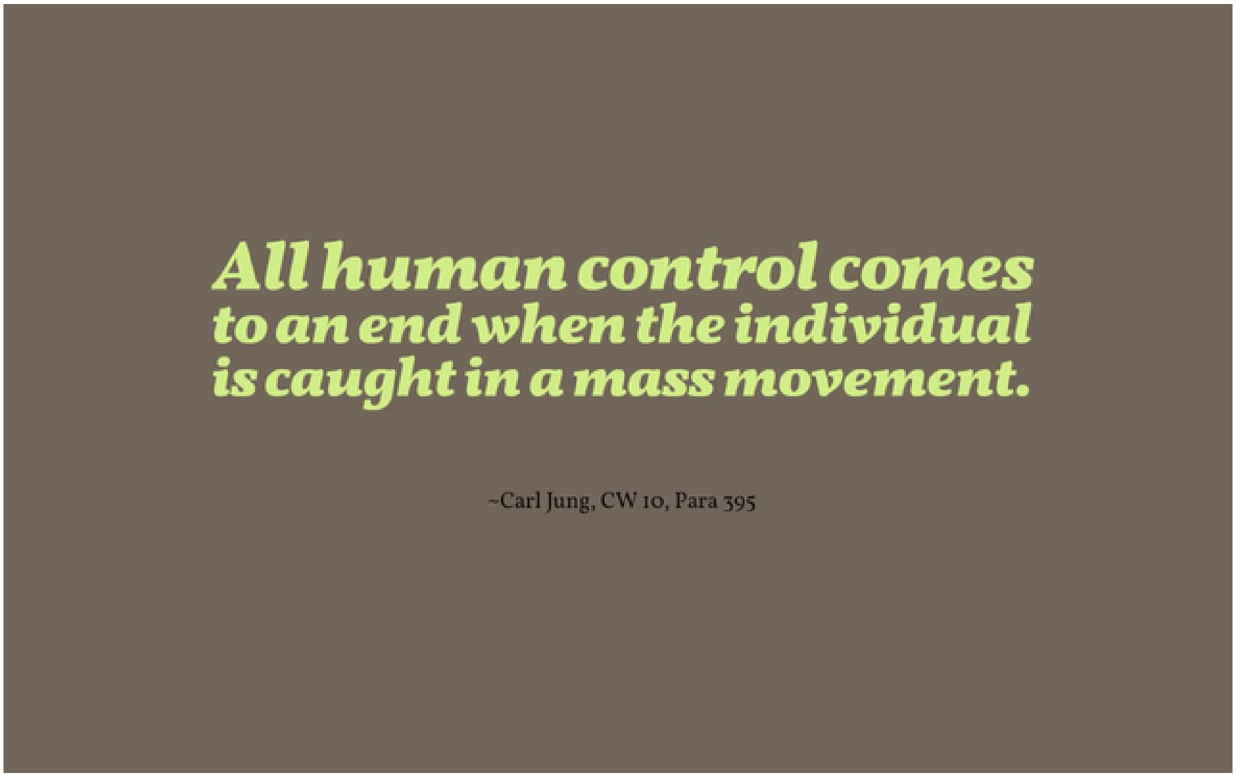


The mere act of enlightenment may have destroyed the spirits of nature, but not the psychic factors that correspond to them, such as suggestibility, lack of criticism, fearfulness, propensity to superstition and prejudice—in short, all those qualities which make possession possible.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 431

The mere act of enlightenment may have destroyed the spirits of nature, but not the psychic factors that correspond to them, such as suggestibility, lack of criticism, fearfulness, propensity to superstition and prejudice—in short, all those qualities which make possession possible. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 431

[4]

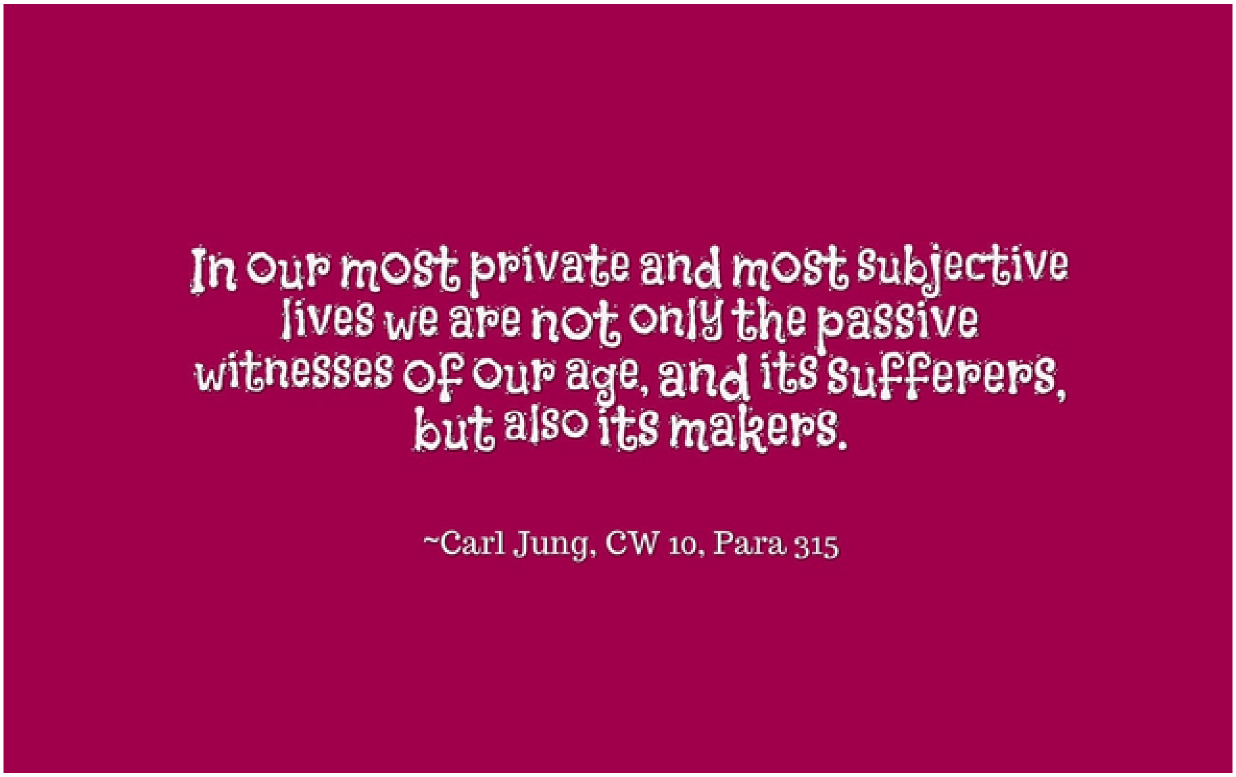


All human control comes to an end when the individual is caught in a mass movement.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 395

All human control comes to an end when the individual is caught in a mass movement. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 395

[5]



In our most private and most subjective lives we are not only the passive witnesses of our age, and its sufferers, but also its makers.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 315

In our most private and most subjective lives we are not only the passive witnesses of our age, and its sufferers, but also its makers. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 315

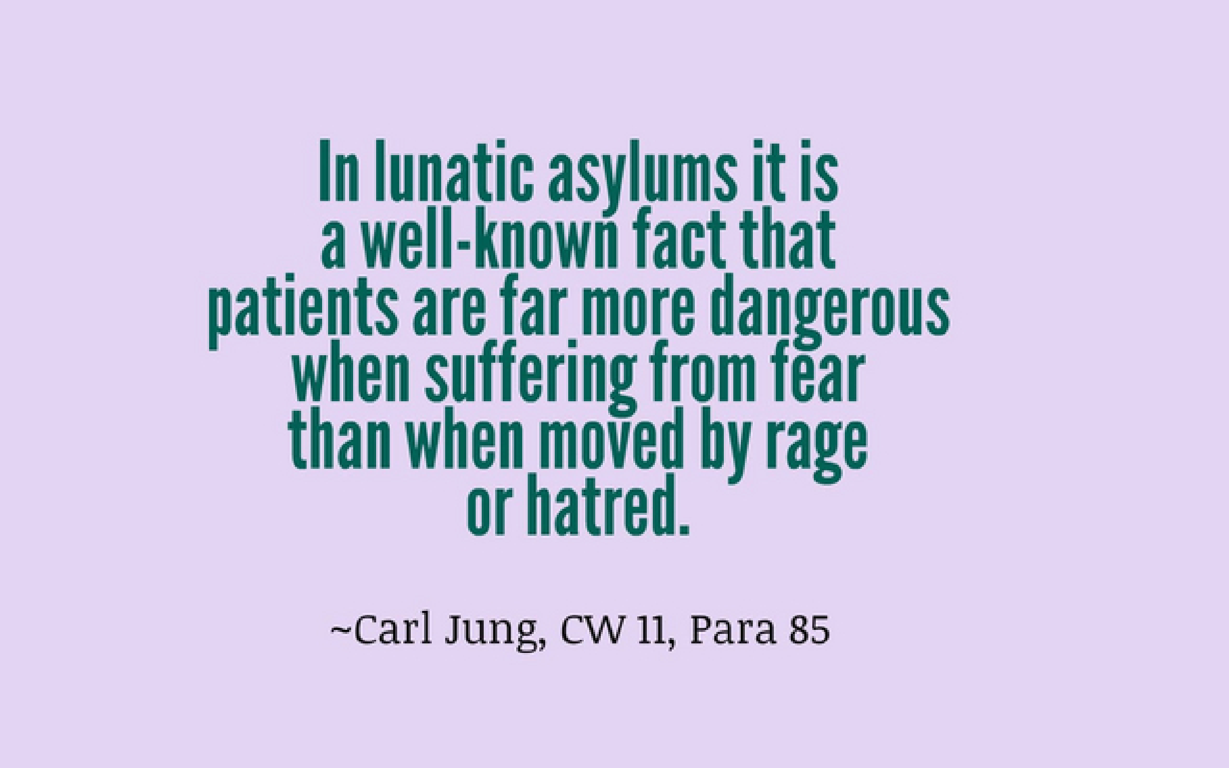
[6]

The Age of Enlightenment, which stripped nature and human institutions of gods, overlooked the God of Terror who dwells in the human soul.

~Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 302

The Age of Enlightenment, which stripped nature and human institutions of gods, overlooked the God of Terror who dwells in the human soul. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 302

[7]

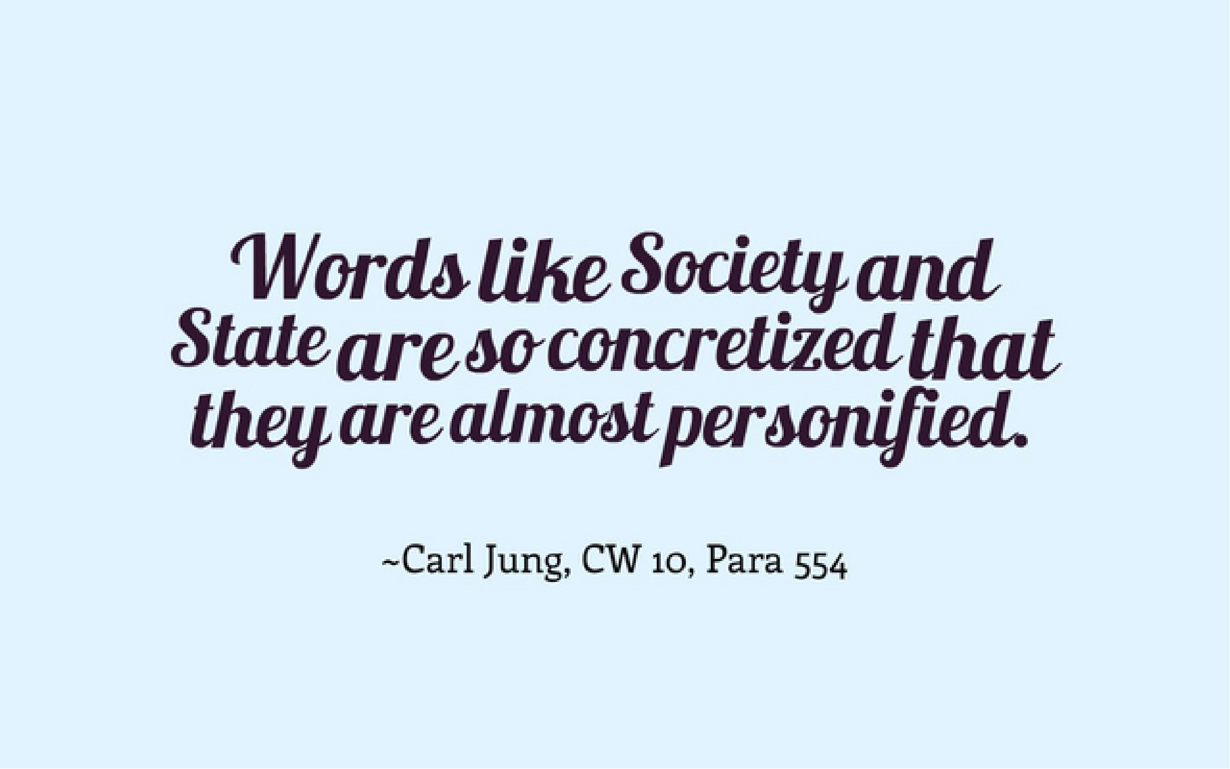


In lunatic asylums it is a well-known fact that patients are far more dangerous when suffering from fear than when moved by rage or hatred.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 85

In lunatic asylums it is a well-known fact that patients are far more dangerous when suffering from fear than when moved by rage or hatred. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 85

[8]



Words like Society and State are so concretized that they are almost personified.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 554

Words like "Society" and "State" are so concretized that they are almost personified. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 554

[9]

.In reality the normal man is civicminded and moral; he created his laws and observes them, not because they are imposed on him from without—that is a childish delusion—but because he loves law and order
more than he loves disorder and lawlessness.

~Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 442

In reality the normal man is "civicminded and moral"; he created his laws and observes them, not because they are imposed on him from without—that is a childish delusion—but because he loves law and order more than he loves disorder and lawlessness. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 442

[10]

The individual ego could be conceived as the commander of a small army in the struggle with his environment—a war not infrequently on two fronts, before him the struggle for existence, in the rear the struggle against his own rebellious instinctual nature.

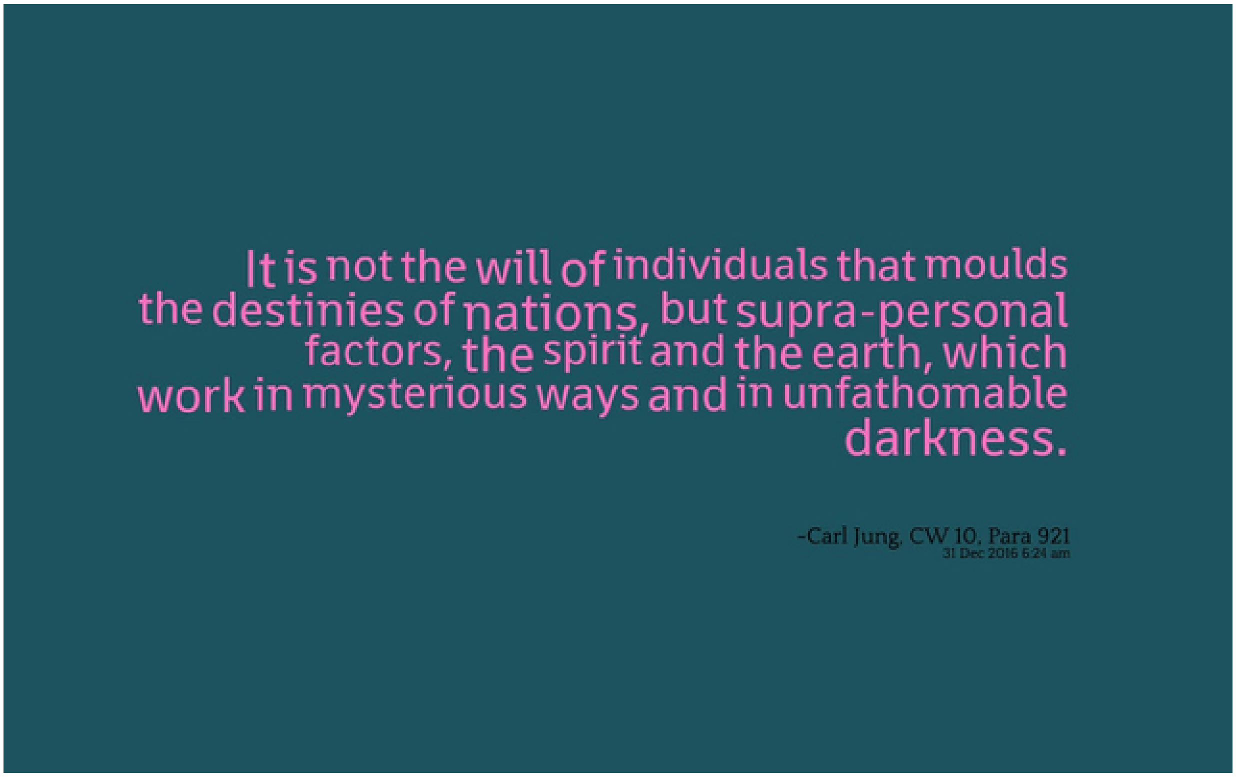
~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 693

The individual ego could be conceived as the commander of a small army in the struggle with his environment—a war not infrequently on two fronts, before him the struggle for existence, in the rear the struggle against his own rebellious instinctual nature. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 693

[11]

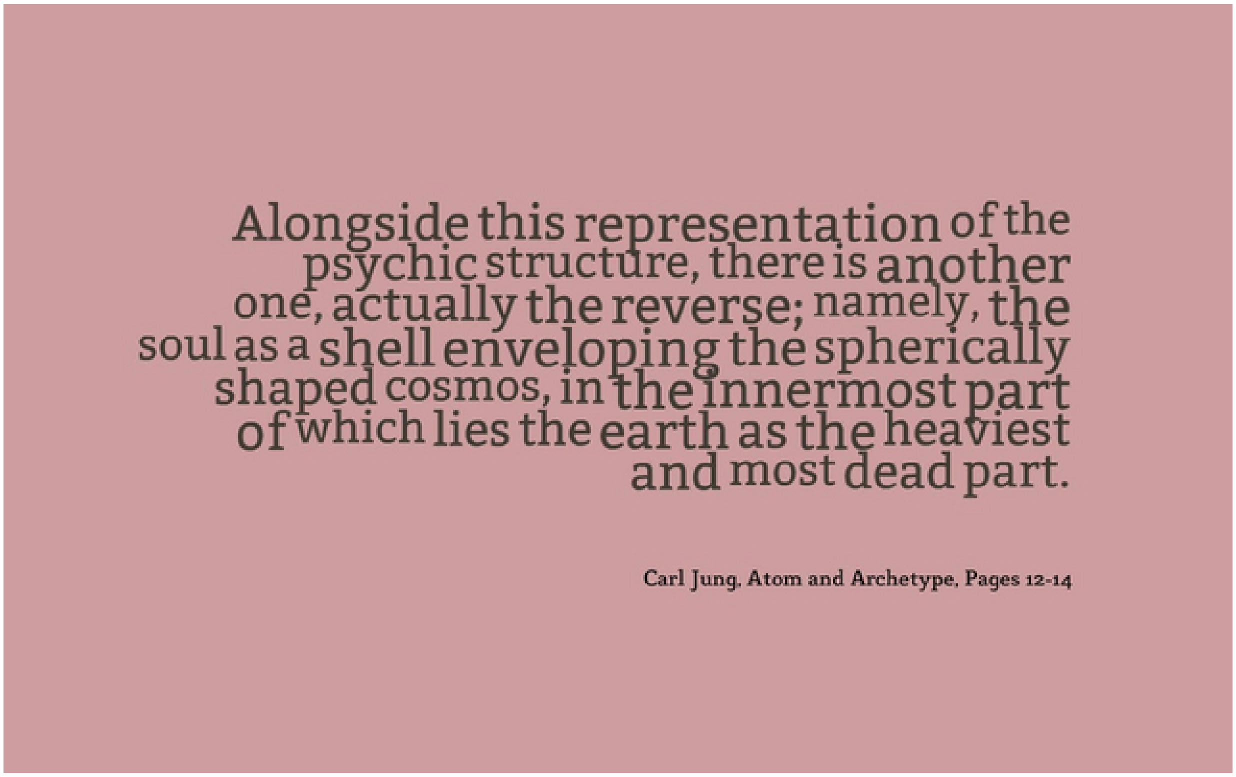


It is not the will of individuals that moulds the destinies of nations, but supra-personal factors, the spirit and the earth, which work in mysterious ways and in unfathomable darkness.

-Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 921
31 Dec 2016 6:24 am

It is not the will of individuals that moulds the destinies of nations, but supra-personal factors, the spirit and the earth, which work in mysterious ways and in unfathomable darkness. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 921

[12]

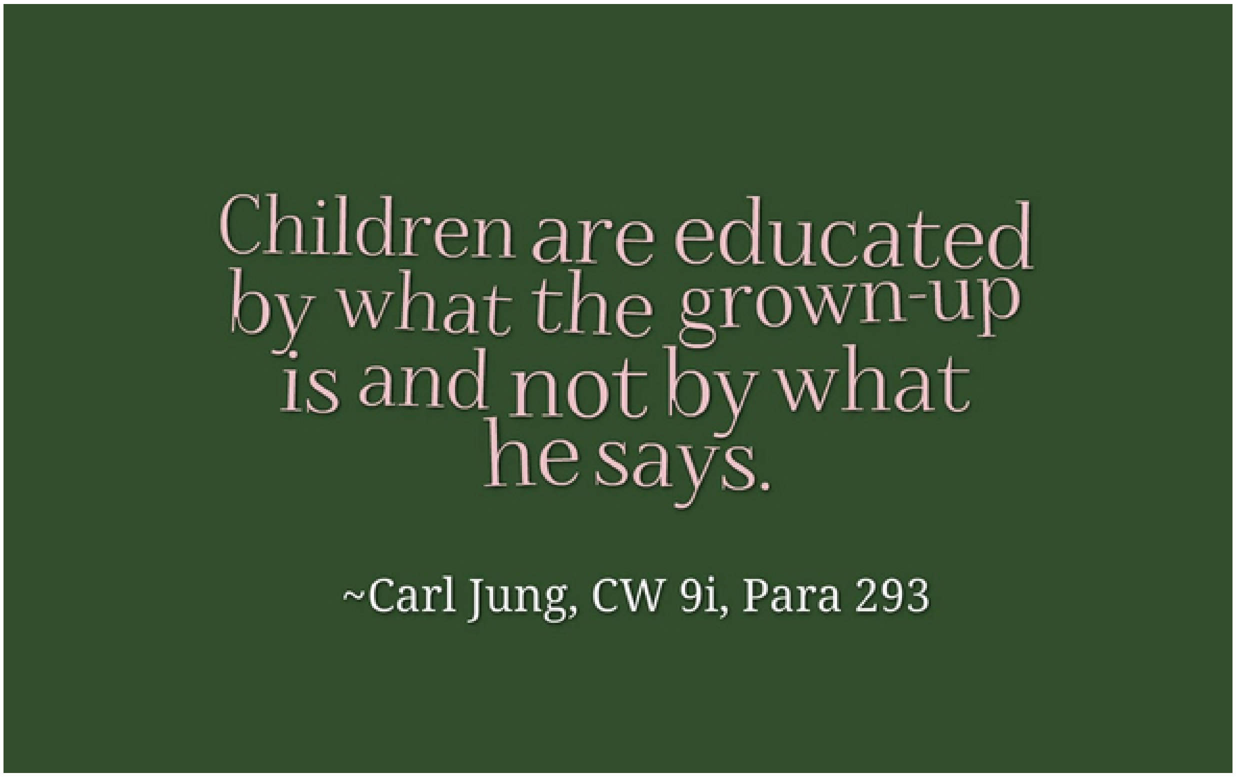


Alongside this representation of the psychic structure, there is another one, actually the reverse; namely, the soul as a shell enveloping the spherically shaped cosmos, in the innermost part of which lies the earth as the heaviest and most dead part.

Carl Jung, Atom and Archetype, Pages 12-14

Alongside this representation of the psychic structure, there is another one, actually the reverse; namely, the soul as a shell enveloping the spherically shaped cosmos, in the innermost part of which lies the earth as the heaviest and most dead part. Carl Jung, Atom and Archetype, Pages 12-14

[13]

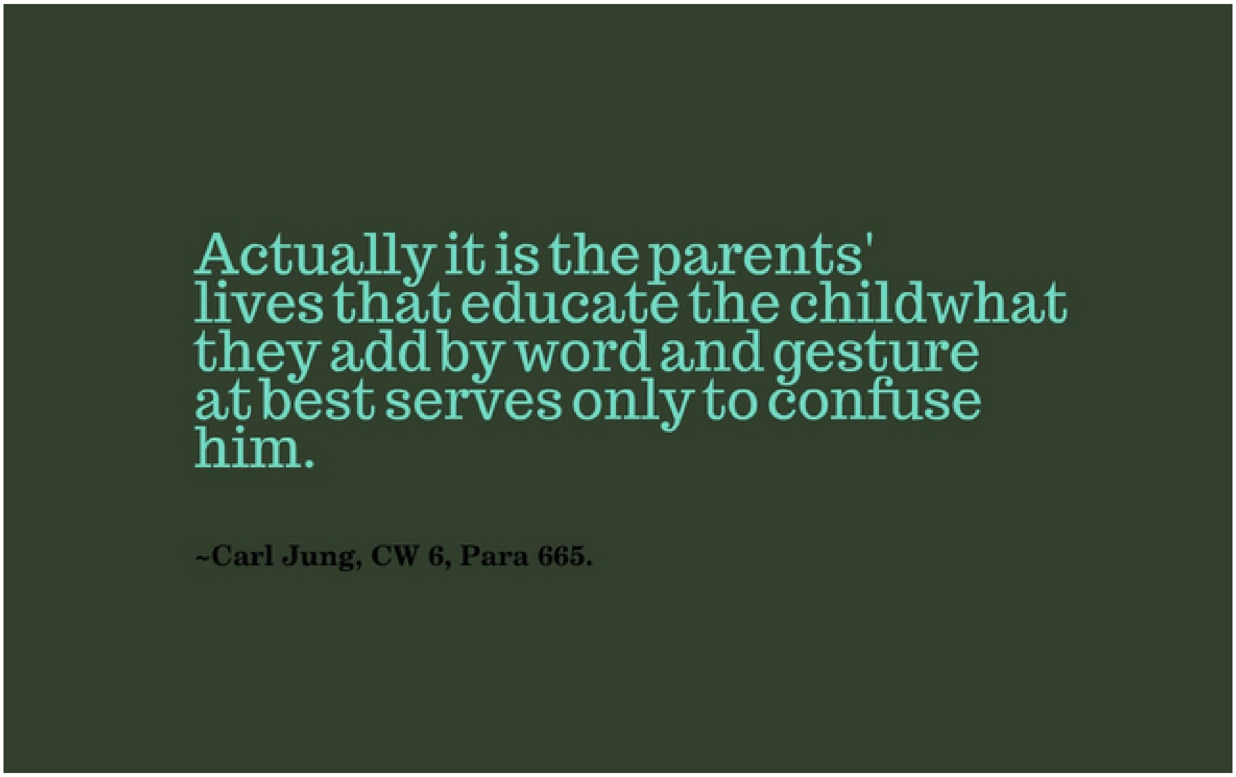


Children are educated by what the grown-up is and not by what he says.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 293

Children are educated by what the grown-up is and not by what he says. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 293

[14]

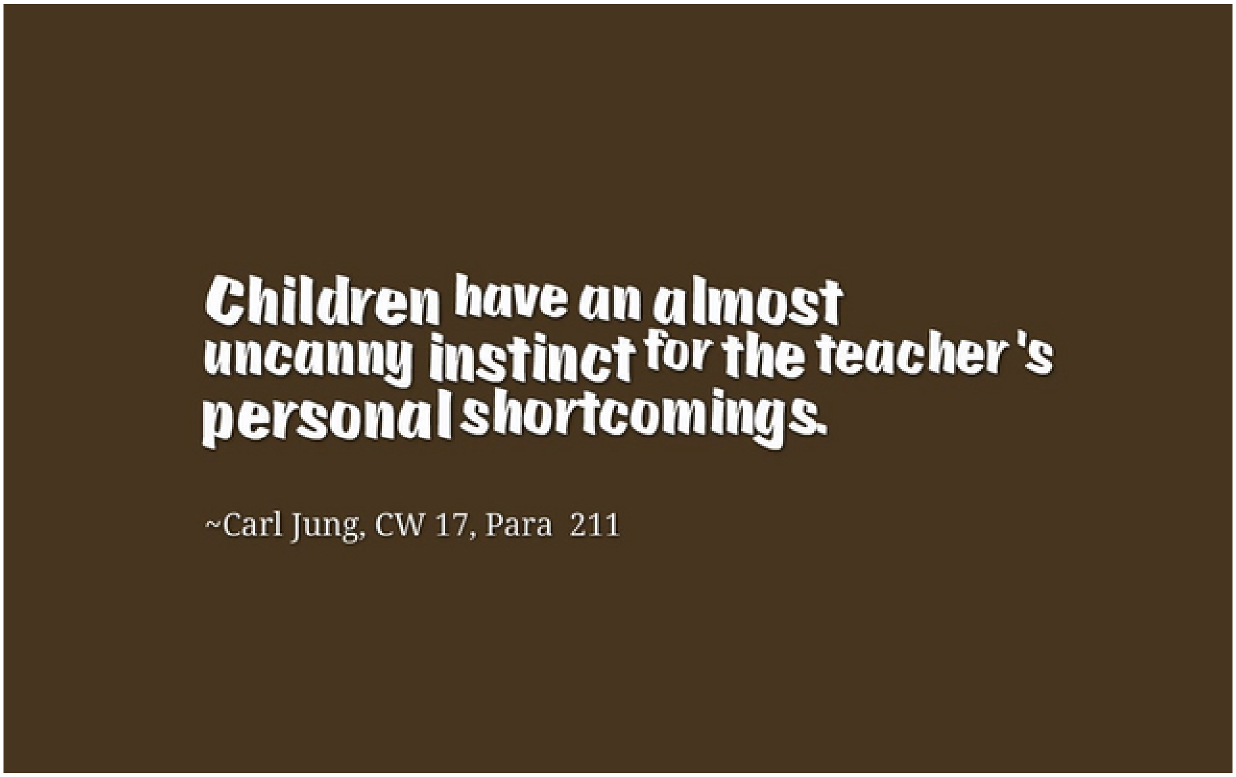


Actually it is the parents' lives that educate the childwhat they add by word and gesture at best serves only to confuse him.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 665.

Actually it is the parents’ lives that educate the child—what they add by word and gesture at best serves only to confuse him. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 665.

[15]

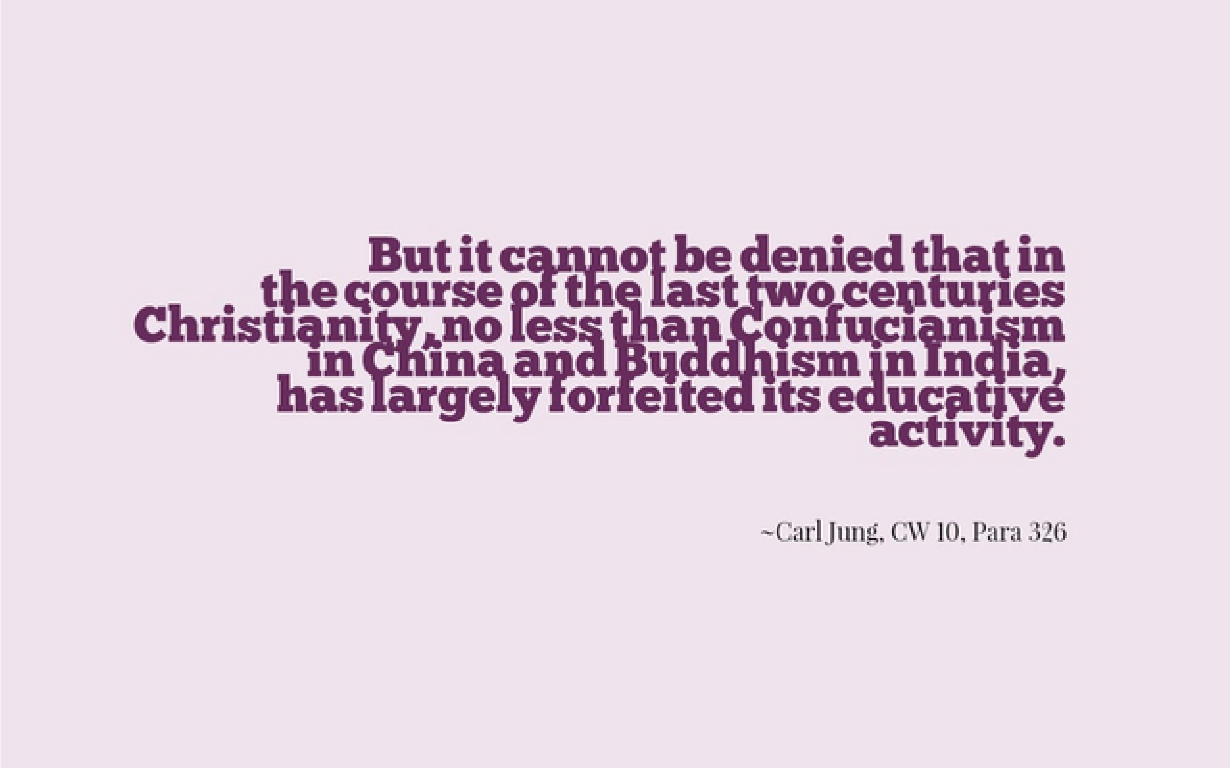


Children have an almost uncanny instinct for the teacher's personal shortcomings.

~Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 211

Children have an almost uncanny instinct for the teacher’s personal shortcomings. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 211

[16]



But it cannot be denied that in the course of the last two centuries Christianity, no less than Confucianism in China and Buddhism in India, has largely forfeited its educative activity.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 326

But it cannot be denied that in the course of the last two centuries Christianity, no less than Confucianism in China and Buddhism in India, has largely forfeited its educative activity. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 326

THE PSYCHIC HEALTH OF THE ADULT INDIVIDUAL, WHO IN CHILDHOOD WAS A MERE PARTICLE
REVOLVING IN A ROTARY SYSTEM, DEMANDS THAT HE SHOULD HIMSELF BECOME THE CENTRE OF A NEW SYSTEM.

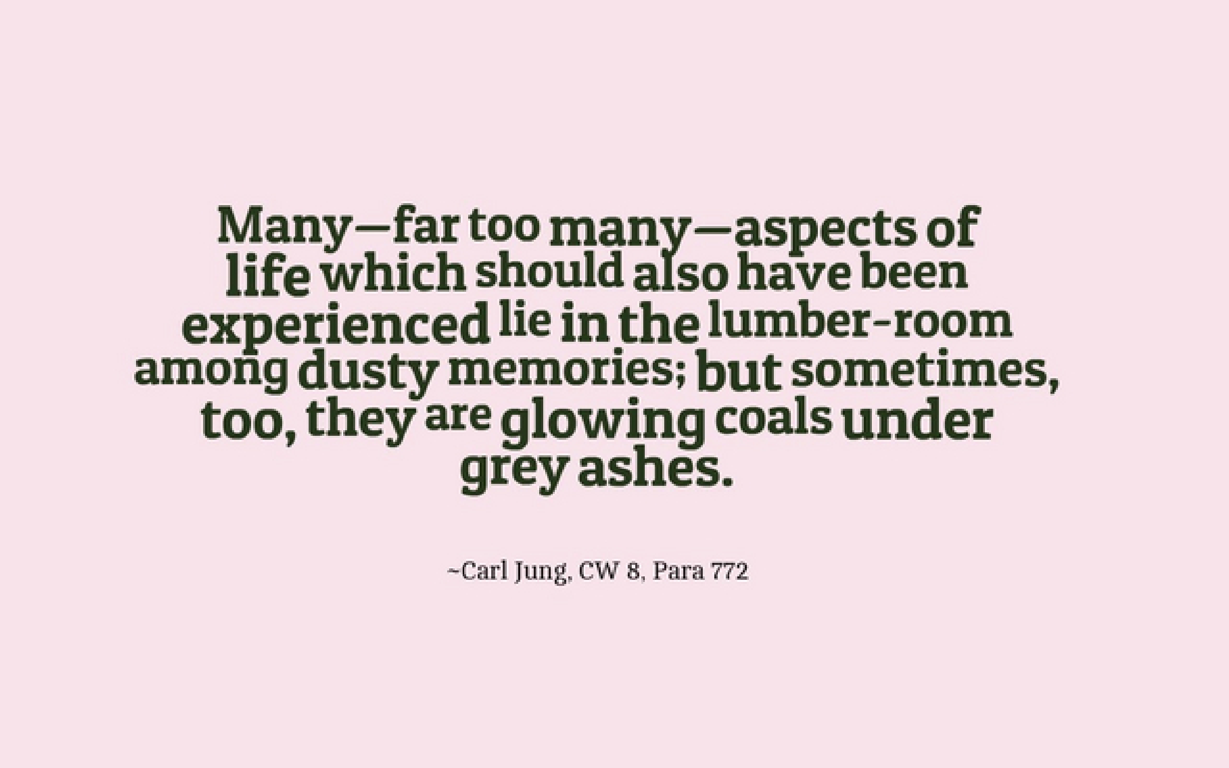
~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 644

The psychic health of the adult individual, who in childhood was a mere particle revolving in a rotary system, demands that he should himself become the centre of a new system. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 644

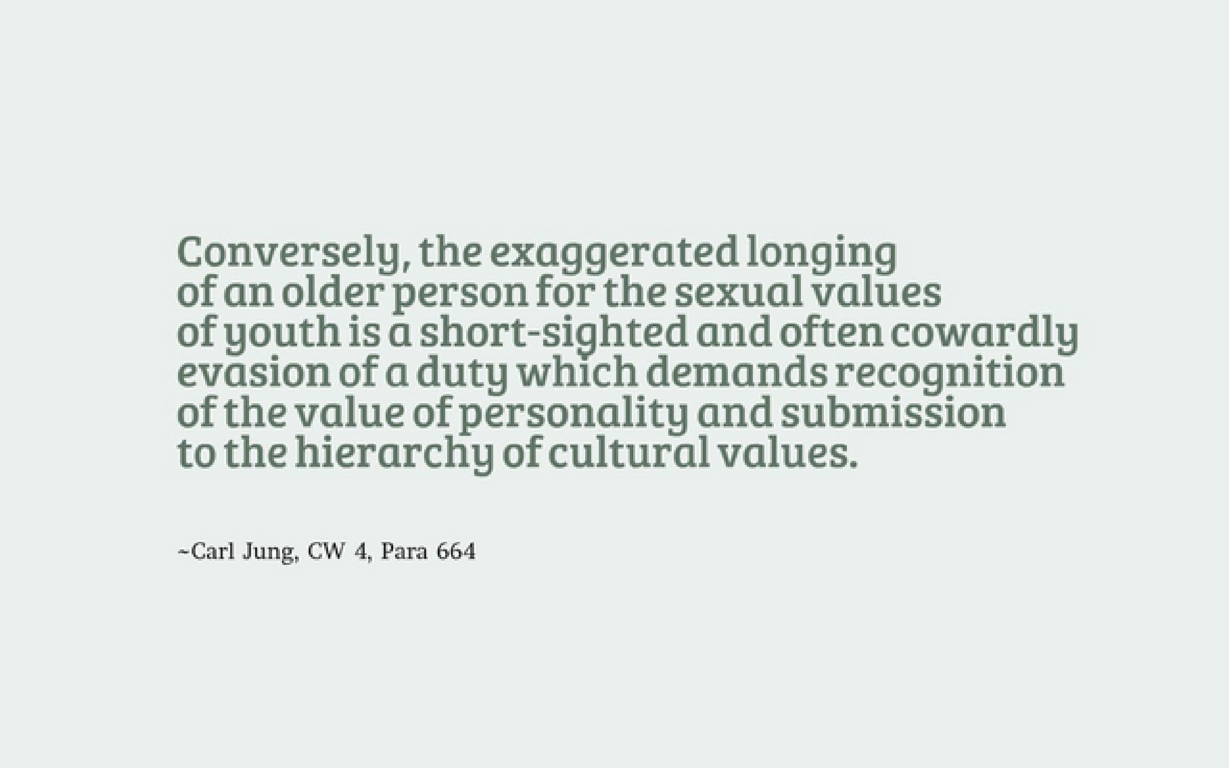


Many—far too many—aspects of life which should also have been experienced lie in the lumber-room among dusty memories; but sometimes, too, they are glowing coals under grey ashes.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 772

Many—far too many—aspects of life which should also have been experienced lie in the lumber-room among dusty memories; but sometimes, too, they are glowing coals under grey ashes. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 772

[19]

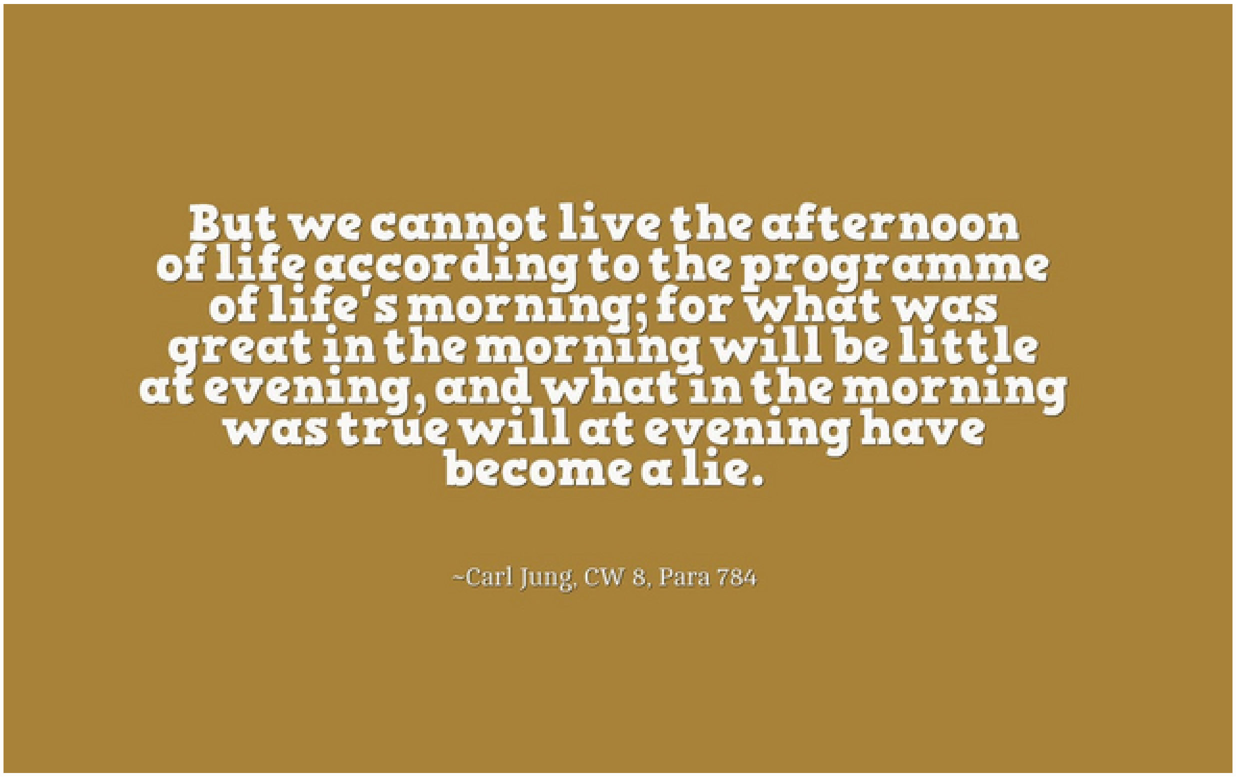


Conversely, the exaggerated longing of an older person for the sexual values of youth is a short-sighted and often cowardly evasion of a duty which demands recognition of the value of personality and submission to the hierarchy of cultural values.

~Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 664

Conversely, the exaggerated longing of an older person for the sexual values of youth is a short-sighted and often cowardly evasion of a duty which demands recognition of the value of personality and submission to the hierarchy of cultural values. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 664

[20]



But we cannot live the afternoon of life according to the programme of life's morning; for what was great in the morning will be little at evening, and what in the morning was true will at evening have become a lie.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 784

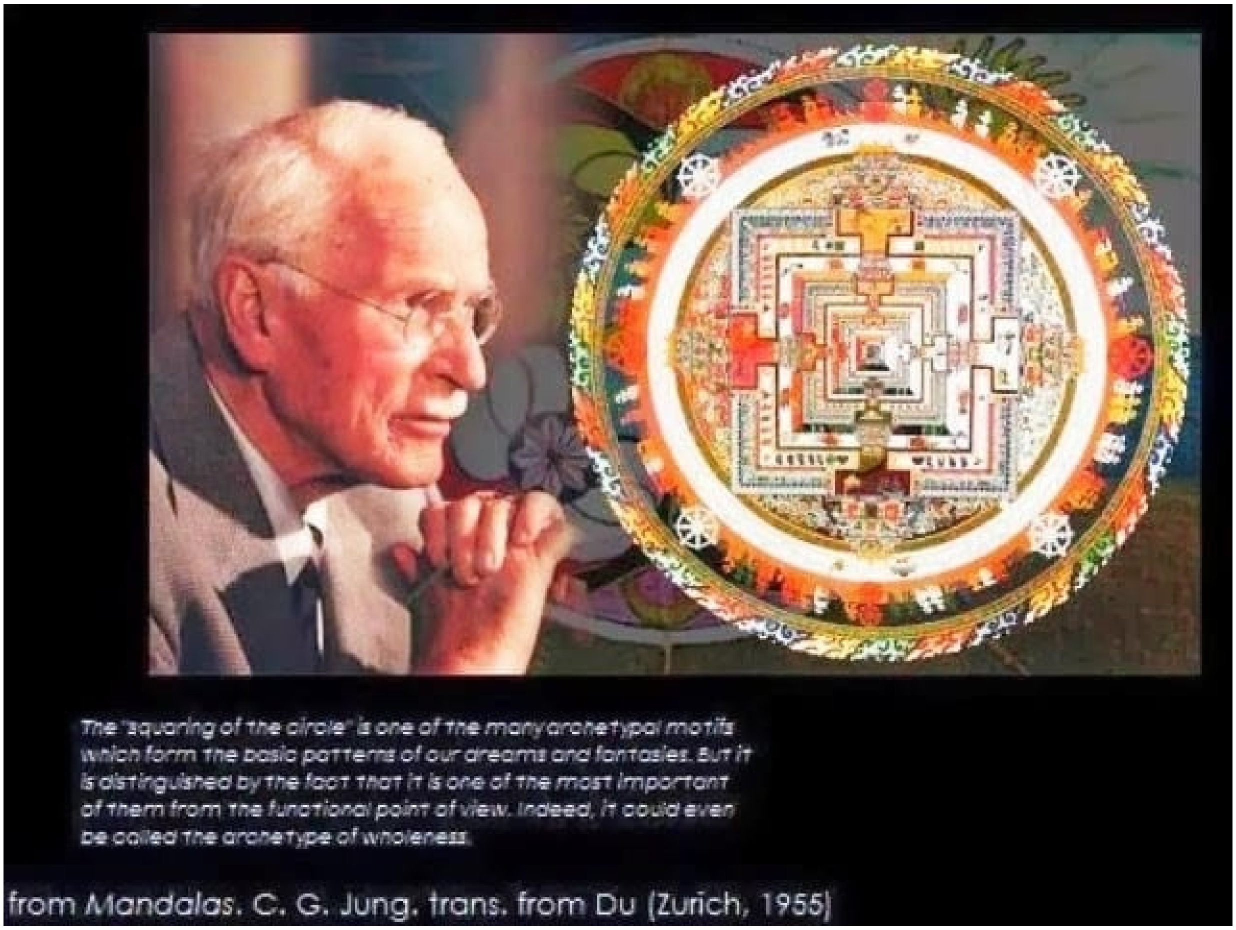
But we cannot live the afternoon of life according to the programme of life’s morning; for what was great in the morning will be little at evening, and what in the morning was true will at evening have become a lie. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 784

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/684c8-fff.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7c400-ggg.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a155e-hhh.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1eca8-iii.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/0849b-jjj.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4cacd-kkk.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f312e-lll.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4258a-mmm.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/90550-nnn.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/45cf4-ooo.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f98d9-ppp.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1cbe0-qqq.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/773f7-rrr.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fe988-sss.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4c5a1-ttt.jpg`

16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d1a01-uuu.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/20cf8-vvv.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/cac10-xxx.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e186e-yyy.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e8ac3-zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung and Tantric and Hermetic Symbols (2019-03-18 13:58)

[1]



The "squaring of the circle" is one of the many archetypal motifs which form the basic patterns of our dreams and fantasies. But it is distinguished by the fact that it is one of the most important of them from the functional point of view. Indeed, it could even be called the archetype of wholeness.

from Mandalas. C. G. Jung. trans. from Du (Zurich, 1955)

Lecture II 5th May, 1939

I repeated the sequence of Tantrik symbols in the last lecture, which arise from the Shri-Chakra-S ambhara Tantra; today I shall give you the corresponding series of Hermetic symbols of which I began to speak last Semester.

The prevalent opinion is that alchemy is formidable nonsense.

A modern book on the subject begins with the statement that it is the history of one of humanity's greatest mistakes.

This assertion may have some justification when looked at from the point of view of natural science, but every profound student of alchemy knows that the making of gold was not the real purpose and that the process was a western form of Yoga. With few exceptions, however, this fact is not recognised, so I am also performing an act of historical justice when I speak to you of alchemy.

In the first half of the nineteenth century an old Englishman and his daughter were still pursuing this philosophy and may be called the last alchemists.

They lived together and practised a life-long Yoga.

When the old man was getting on in years, he thought that they should share their secret with the world and suggested to his daughter that they should each write an account of their experiences in their own way.

For this purpose they retired into separate wings of their house.

After some months, the daughter had filled a respectable volume and brought it to her father who was delighted and in turn showed her his record.

He wrote in verse and she had produced a scientific book!

But after publication the old man began to have scruples, for was it not a sin to betray the secrets of Hermetic philosophy?

In a panic, the whole edition was bought up and burnt as a sort of auto-da-fe, but nine volumes escaped the flames.

This was about the middle of the nineteenth century. [The East has the same misgivings when it hands out its precious documents to us.]

Alchemy has mostly remained a secret tradition, it has only lately reached the surface of western consciousness.

To return to our modern alchemists: the daughter did not die till about 1910 and the book was republished by her admirers.

It was the first attempt at reviving the medieval spirit of alchemy on modern lines of thought.

To understand the symbolic language of this western Yoga is a difficult and arduous task and entails very laborious reading, for the alchemists had no psychological knowledge and we have to find the philosophic and psychological interpretation of their symbols for ourselves.

Mrs. Atwood's book, "A Treatise on Alchemy", is out of print to day and very rare.

I do not advise you to make a point of reading it, for it is indigestible and you must have real knowledge of alchemy in order to understand its meaning.

Till recently the book has remained unnoticed outside certain circles of alchemists.

Such groups do exist and when I published my article on alchemy in the "Eranos Jahrbuch 1936",

I received many letters from modern alchemists, telling me that I had failed to see the whole point of alchemy, which was really the making of gold!

It is, as I have said before, the inner content of alchemy which is of psychological interest, and we must draw on the history of the past if we wish to understand what is happening in our own unconscious.

The Hermetic symbolism, which corresponds to the Tantrik in all its essential points, begins with:

(1) the chaos, the massa confusa, everything is in a mixed condition in the primeval sea; this is the primeval water mentioned in Genesis. Psychologically this watery chaos means a dark unconscious condition.

(2) The Tetrameria follows, it is the division of this confused mass into the four elements, we would s ay the four functions, this quartering is an attempt at discrimination.

Through the influence of the fire, the prima materia is heated in the alchemist's oven till it separates into the vapours at the top and the firm substance at the bottom. The matter used by the alchemists was never pure, so the reactions produced in the retort varied enormously, but the volatile, the spiritus, always rose and the corpus remained below.

The alchemists participated to such an extent in the process - which comprised distillation, sublimation, etc. - that their unconscious was entirely projected into it, and this caused them to have visions, but for the most p art they did not realise that the visions had anything to do with their own psyche.

They lived very isolated lives and worked in secret, for their quest was illegal and opposed to the orthodox teachings of the Church.

Alchemy was looked up on as sorcery and it was dangerous to be taken for a sorcerer in those days. It is understandable, in such conditions, that all the alchemists' unconscious expectations should be centred on the opus and should appear in the form of visions.

There are old texts which record these visions in a wonderful language of images. We see from all this that the alchemists can hardly be compared with our modern chemists!

(3) The next symbol in the process is the mons, the mountain.

The alchemists often used this term for that which app eared above the dead or glowing body in the retort; and they also sometimes called the upper part of the retort itself the mountain.

This is a parallel to Mount Meru, it is the mountain in the clouds and the rain is below.

It is als o thought of as the carrier of the precious substance which will appear at a later stage of the process: the jewel, the medicina catholica, the elixir vitae or the wonderful healing herb, the panacea.

Christ, as a saviour, is another parallel.

We have seen that Christ is identified with the mountain and with the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands which destroyed the great image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream:

"Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image up on his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors ; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them : and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth " (Dan. II, 3 4-3 5.)

This allegory was certainly known to the alchemists, for among their number were fathers of the Church, such as Albertus Magnus, St. Thomas Aquinas and Alain de L'isle.

Some of these texts are falsely ascribed, to Albertus Magnus, for instance, but the symbolic language was greatly influenced by the fact that the fathers of the Church contributed to it.

The lapis angularis, for instance, was ascribed to the corner stone which is a well-known symbol for Christ.

(4) the city, the civitas, the castrum, which is built on the mountain.

This is the idea of the retort containing the precious substance.

It must be safely enclosed, hermetically sealed, for it is important that it should not diminish or disappear during the process of heating; the spirit must not escape.

(5) Thenthe four elements, the Quaternitas, appear on the mountain, corresponding to the four-headed Vajra on Mount Meru in the Tantrik sequence.

Whereas the elements in the Tetrameria were in solution, they now app ear as spirit and not matter, they are already sublimated elements.

These are four essences and on top comes the quinta essentia, the mediator in the centre.

This has a deep symbolic meaning, as it has in Tantrik Yoga, where we have seen the lotus coming out of the four.

(6) The fols auri is the alchemical parallel, we find that symbolism frequently in alchemy, as well as in Chinese philosophy.

It is an image for sublimation and the quinta essentia is such a sublimation.

The flower of sulphur and the flowering of salt petre are still spoken of in modern chemistry.

In India, the lotus forms the hollow vessel in which the gods appear, in alchemy this is more often a bath or retort.

(7) The moon and (8) the sun. The flower is followed in both sequences by the moon.

The Tetrameria was not only the "separatio" of the four elements, but also of the masculine and feminine, the primeval idea of the division into two.

We find it represented as the clouds in the air, the spirit, above; and the water, the feminine, below.

In Genesis we read:" And the Spirit of God moved up on the face of the waters”.

The alchemists understood this in the sense of "brooded", the water was impregnated by the sperma dei.

So the most important opposites, the masculine and the feminine, come together in the lotus and the retort.

When this union succeeds it is usually personified.

(9) The moon, the feminine is the albaoral- baida.

The introduction of Arabic words comes from the fact that our first knowledge of the old Greek alchemical texts came to us through Arabian alchemistic tradition.

Although the Codex Marcianus already existed in Venice, we had no knowledge of Greek in the Middle Ages.

Greek culture only spread to us by the efforts of the Humanists after the capture of Constantinople by the Turks.

Al-baida is an Arabic word meaning white woman and Beya is a corruption of it.

There is an important old text about Gabricus and Beya.

Gabricus derives from the Arabic el kibrit, sulphur, the colour of the sun, whereas the moon, the white, is the quicksilver: it is a union of the fiery heat with the cool damp substance.

(10) the Conjunctio. An old Latin M.S. of the 11th or 12th century, the Consilium Conjugii, gives advice concerning the marriage of the sun with the moon.

The Conjunctio is the last union, in which the difference of the sexes disappears.

The sun is often represented by gold and the moon by silver but, as mentioned before, these metals were not thought of materially, for the alchemists continually say "our gold is not the ordinary gold "; it is a gold essence - what that is was their secret.

It was not a corporeal union, but a union of the spiritus, the breath bodies.

(11)The following symbol, which corresponds to the Vihara, the monastery in the Tantrik sequence, is the vas herrnetis, the place in which the secret is made.

In the Book of the Yellow Castle we find this place described as the "purple hall of the city of jade".

It is also the crystal vase in which one can see the small figures of man as sol and woman as luna, in union.

The last opposites are brought together in the Vas Hermetis, it is the coincidentia oppositorum, the union of the two warring opposites.

The costly substance resulting from the process had to be protected in a treasure house.

(12) The lapis philosophorum appears as the last symbol.

This is the aim and the meaning of the whole opus.

In the Tantrik sequence it is the Lord of the mandala: the final product is identified with Buddha.

Christ is also frequently spoken of as a parallel to the precious substance.

The Church stresses the Imitatio Christi, so the idea of Christ being a symbol for the lapis, of Christ being the allegory instead of vice versa, brings in a heretical note.

The highest figure is hermaphroditic: male and female in one.

Christian iconography represents Christ as a very feminine man.

This is not just a matter of taste, but because he could not be the redeemer if he were not woman as well as man: all the opposites had to unite in him.

This is where the psychological secret comes in.

The figure which represents the highest symbol is also in one aspect a child.

The title of an old alchemical treatise runs: "The Hermaphroditic Child of the Sun and Moon."

It is the homunculus , the small thumbling, for it must be small to dwell in the innermost heart of man.

Alchemical philosophy conceives of the lapis as body, soul and spirit.

An old text actually says: "Thou art the stone", showing that a totality of human personality is really intended.

But this is represented in images such as the flower, the lux moderna, the light which has broken into the darkness, the sun of justice descended from heaven, etc.

The stone cannot be made without the grace of God.

The alchemists continually say "Deo concedente": (if God permits).

The process is an opus miraculous, because God manifests himself in it.

The essence of the divine appears in the experience of the working alchemist. In Greek alchemy, and especially in the writings of Zosimos, the famous Gnostic of the 3rd century, we meet with the symbol of light: Photeins, the luminous man. The idea of God as the luminous man played a significant role in the Gnosis, as the scintilla, the spark of eternal light in the darkness of matter.

It is the task of man to find the redeeming light in his dark condition.

In alchemy, the redemption of man is brought about through the opus; in contrast to Christianity, where redemption depends entirely on the grace of God.

The eastern concept is identical with the alchemical idea: it is the task of the individual to redeem himself.

It is not correct to say that the alchemists did not know this; some, and perhaps not a few, had this conception.

The chemical and the psychological processes went hand in hand, the alchemists worked with such intensity and expectation that it had a psychological effect on them.

This is difficult for us to understand.

But when we consider that the primitive hears trees and animals talking to him, that is he animates everything around him with the contents of his own psyche, because he does not see the world at all objectively, we cannot wonder that the alchemists lived in the same "participation" with the materia on which they worked, because its contents were unknown in the Middle Ages.

Those people found in dead matter what we should experience in another way, psychologically or metaphysically.

But today we no longer know what metaphysical means.

I shall now give you a psychological parallel to the two sequences which we have been following.

The first condition, Shunyata, Chaos, (avidya) is unconsciousness.

We like to think that we are not unconscious but we are to an amazing extent: think of the many things we do without knowing it.

But, so long as we are not aware of them, we do not even know that we are acting unconsciously and "Was ich nicht weiss, macht mir nicht heiss" (what I do not know, does not annoy me).

These unconscious actions, therefore, do not exist for us (any more than America exists for those who do not know that it was ever discovered) but other people see what we are unaware of ourselves!

When we suddenly get a box on the ears from the unconscious, we are often quite unable to discover any reason for it, but the cause lies very close to us, even if we do not like to see it.

Then something must be done about it and the Tetrameria begins.

Order must be brought into the confused condition or we shall never understand why we are at loggerheads with our surroundings or why we have suddenly got into an awful hole.

This is why Freud called this process "Psycho-analysis”.

The analysis of the psyche with the purpose of dissolving this dark condition and bringing order into it.

Every system of ordering is a system of four.

This dissolution of the darkness also dissolves the picture which we have made of ourselves.

Some people have a very exalted opinion of their own value, they do not doubt themselves, yet everything goes wrong - and others complain of them.

These people have to find out that they are not a hundred percent pure gold, but that they consist of a rubbish heap as well.

When this other side comes up, it can be so unacceptable that people lose all faith in themselves: the generous person sees that he is a miser and the respectable person that he is as scoundrel.

Then what is left?

A yea and a nay are both present, an uncanny condition in which you can lose yourself.

Then something slowly comes out of all this bewilderment, as Ararat emerged from the waters of the flood.

Just as the ark found a dry point on which to land, so you find a small but firm spot, an instinctive foundation on which you can stand and from which you can see: here I am right and there I am wrong, I am not quite right and not quite wrong, I am that.

This is the mountain, a sure though small conviction which appears first as an island in the waters.

With it comes the light and an insight which tells you that you know very little of yourself.

There is no certainty, it is a dark feeling.

But this precious insight is related to your very foundations - and then the city appears with its fortifications, as the magic circle.

This protection is essential, for there are people who are always letting !heir mind be torn away.

We need an inner and an outer protection from the dangers which surround us. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages107-111.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/f7c0f-1.jpg`

Carl Jung Quotations 43 (2019-03-18 16:30)

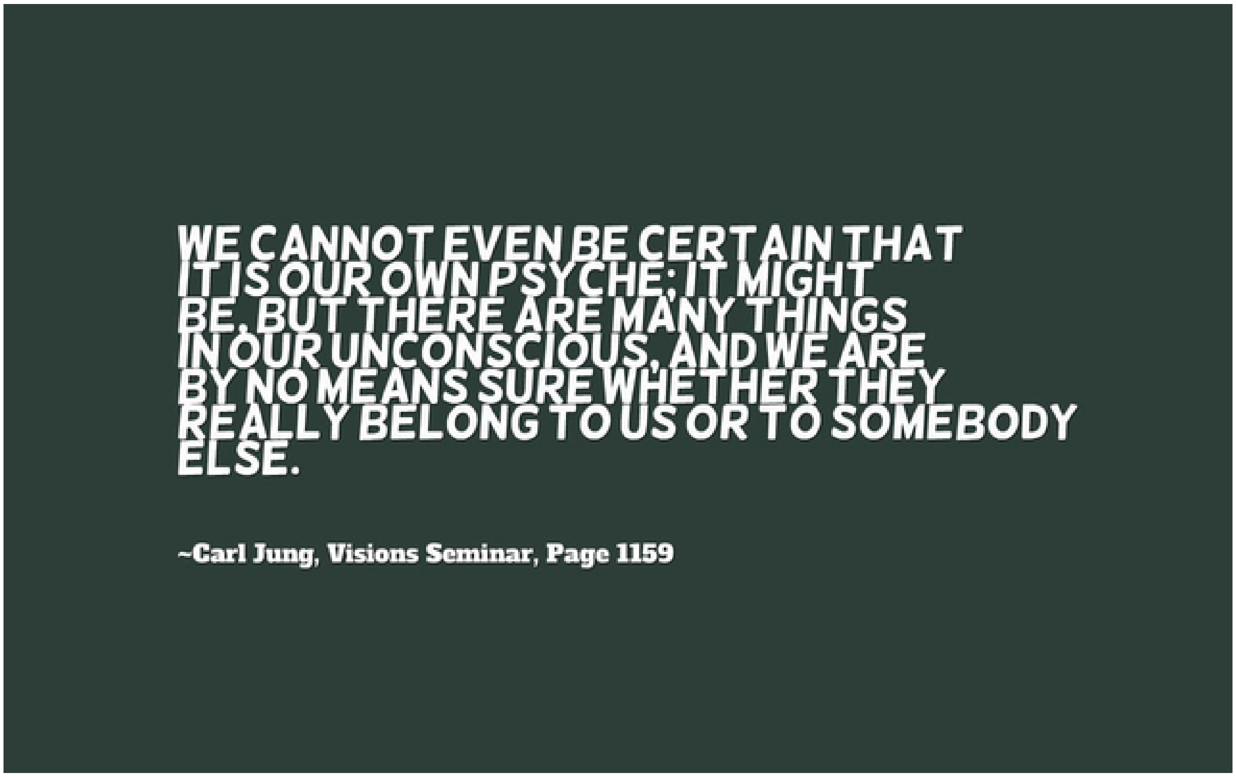
[1]

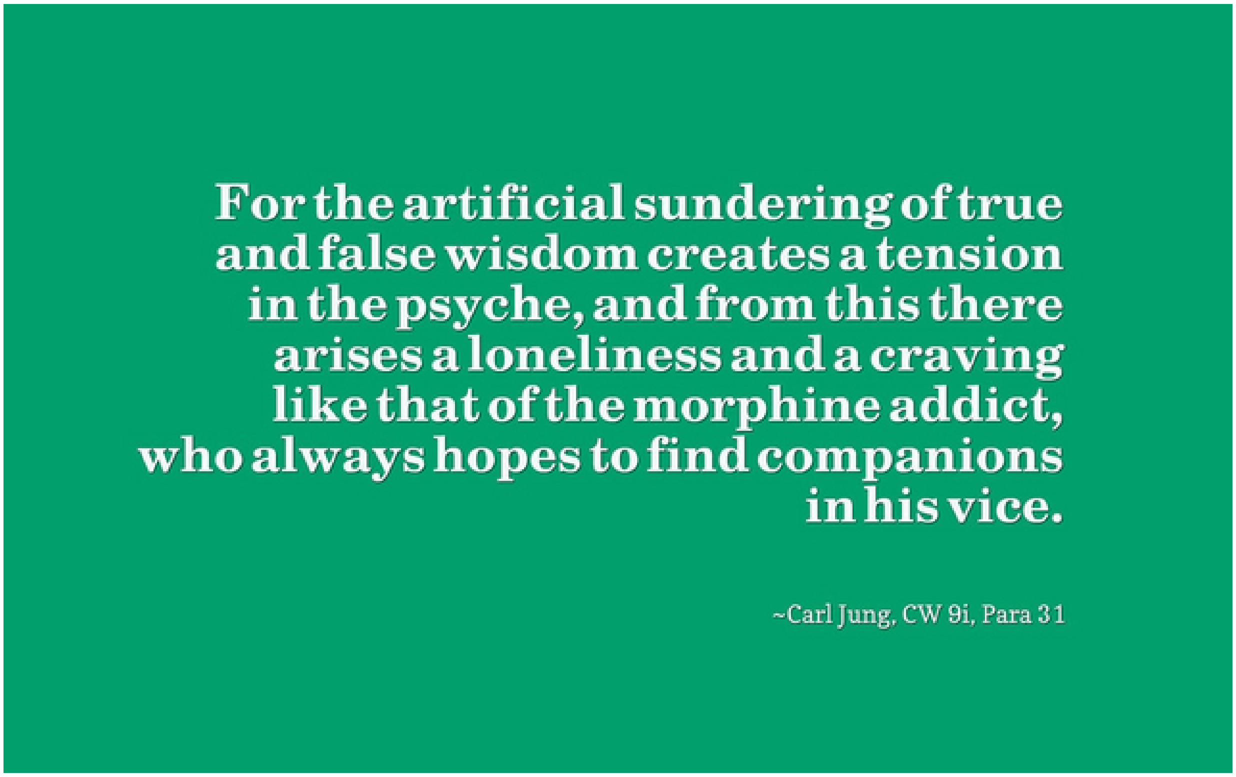


WE CANNOT EVEN BE CERTAIN THAT IT IS OUR OWN PSYCHE; IT MIGHT BE, BUT THERE ARE MANY THINGS IN OUR UNCONSCIOUS, AND WE ARE BY NO MEANS SURE WHETHER THEY REALLY BELONG TO US OR TO SOMEBODY ELSE.

~Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1159

We cannot even be certain that it is our own psyche; it might be, but there are many things in our unconscious, and we are by no means sure whether they really belong to us or to somebody else.   Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1159

[2]

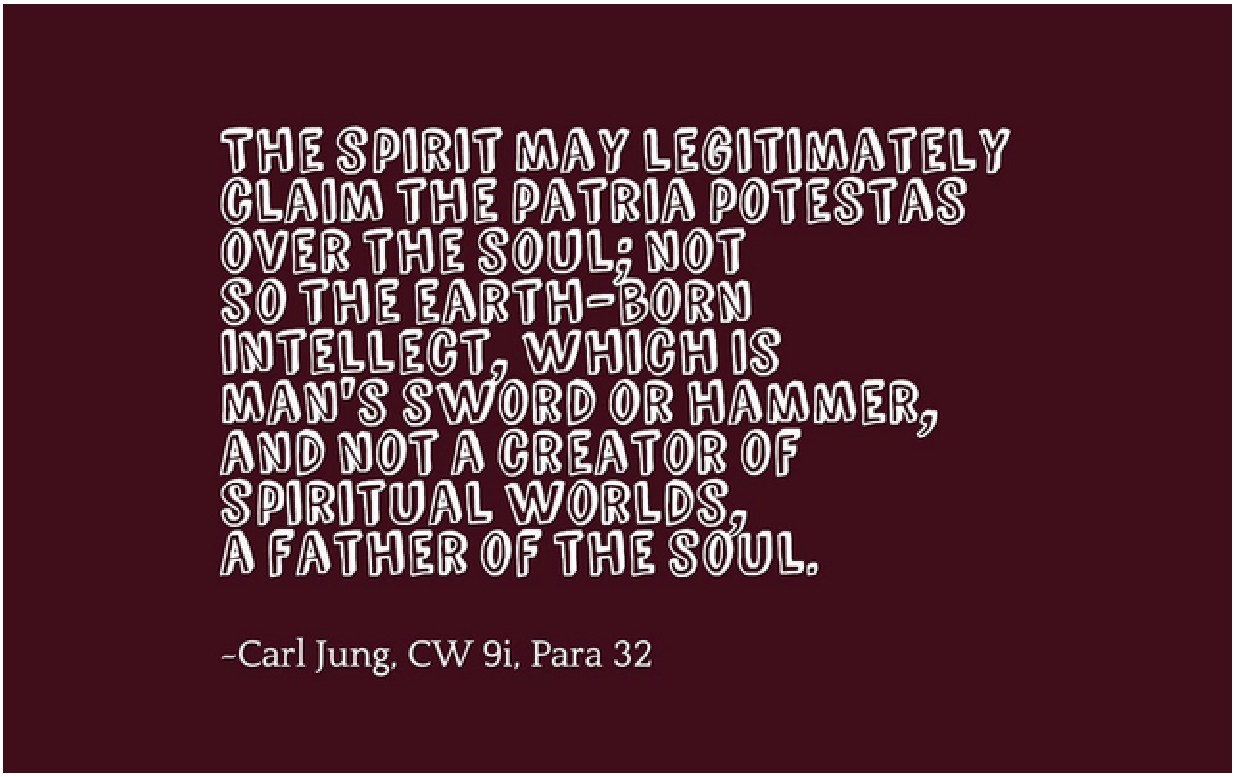


For the artificial sundering of true and false wisdom creates a tension in the psyche, and from this there arises a loneliness and a craving like that of the morphine addict, who always hopes to find companions in his vice.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 31

For the artificial sundering of true and false wisdom creates a tension in the psyche, and from this there arises a loneliness and a craving like that of the morphine addict, who always hopes to find companions in his vice. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 31

[3]

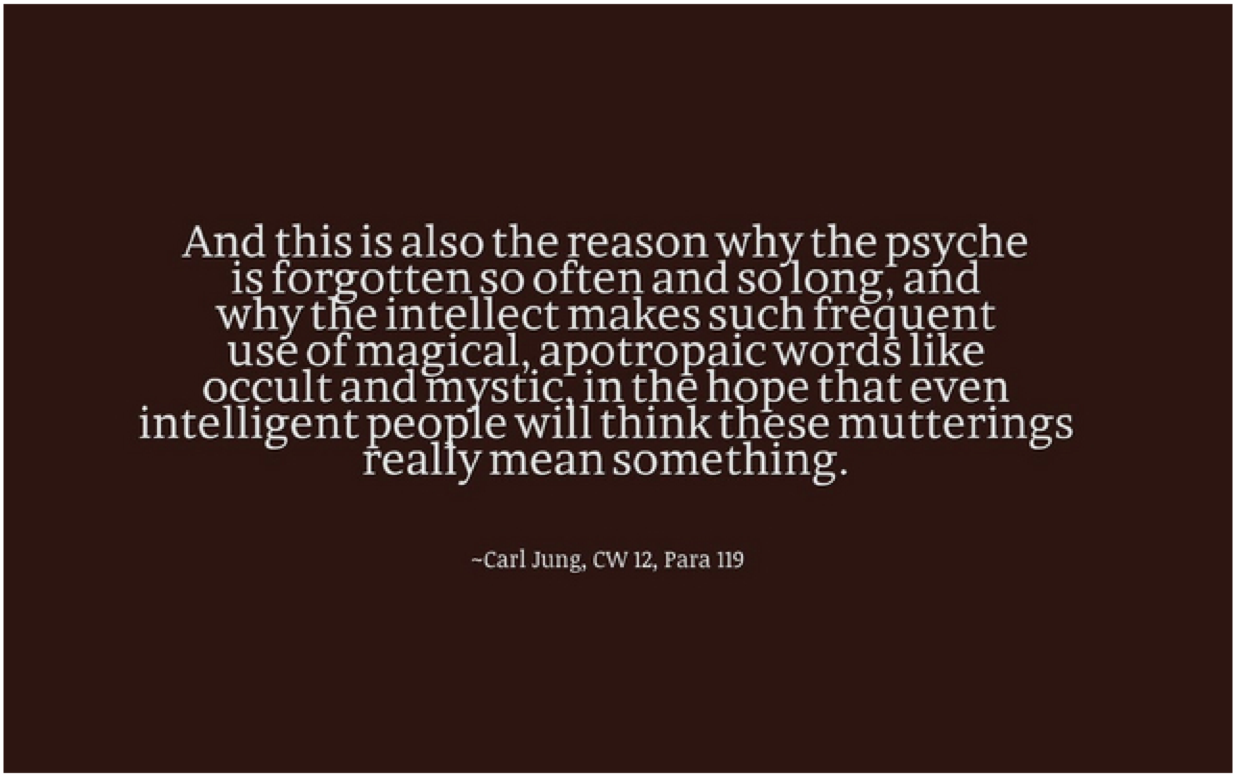


THE SPIRIT MAY LEGITIMATELY CLAIM THE PATRIA POTESTAS OVER THE SOUL; NOT SO THE EARTH-BORN INTELLECT, WHICH IS MAN'S SWORD OR HAMMER, AND NOT A CREATOR OF SPIRITUAL WORLDS, A FATHER OF THE SOUL.

-Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 32

The spirit may legitimately claim the patria potestas over the soul; not so the earth-born intellect, which is man's sword or hammer, and not a creator of spiritual worlds, a father of the soul. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 32

[4]

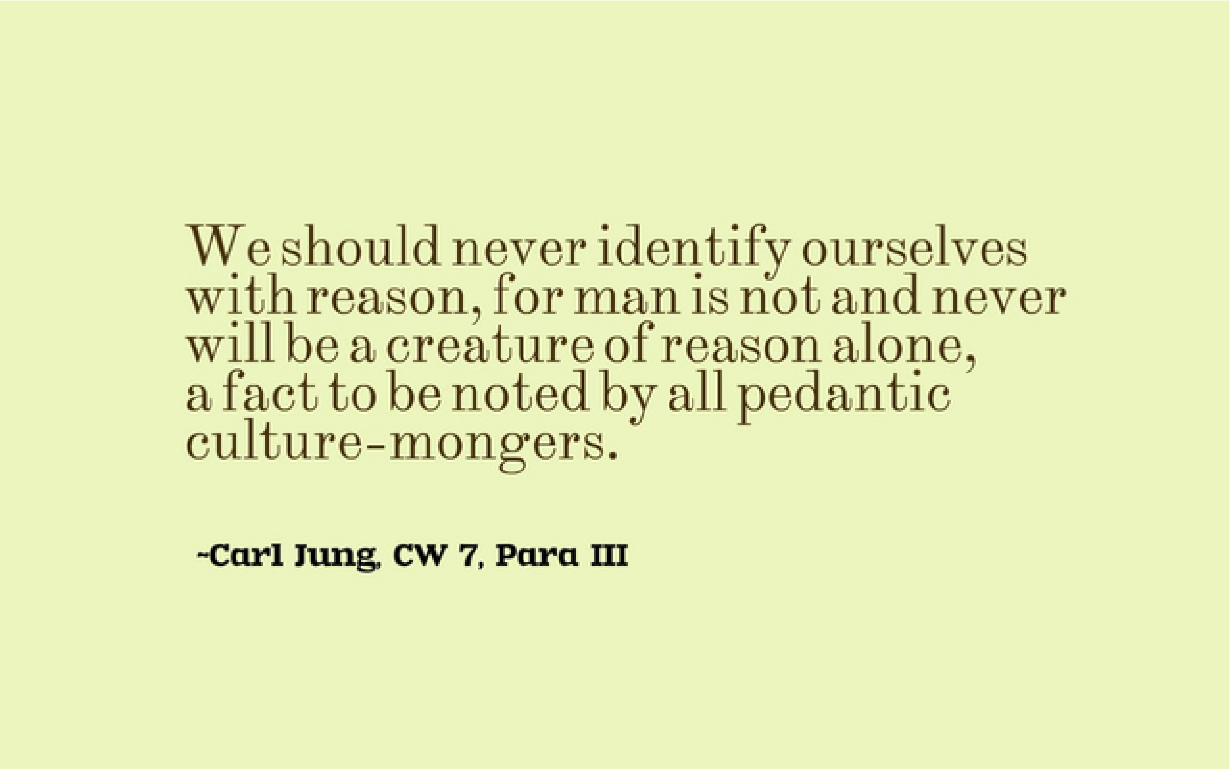


And this is also the reason why the psyche is forgotten so often and so long, and why the intellect makes such frequent use of magical, apotropaic words like occult and mystic, in the hope that even intelligent people will think these mutterings really mean something.

~Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 119

And this is also the reason why the psyche is forgotten so often and so long, and why the intellect makes such frequent use of magical, apotropaic words like "occult" and "mystic," in the hope that even intelligent people will think these mutterings really mean something. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para119

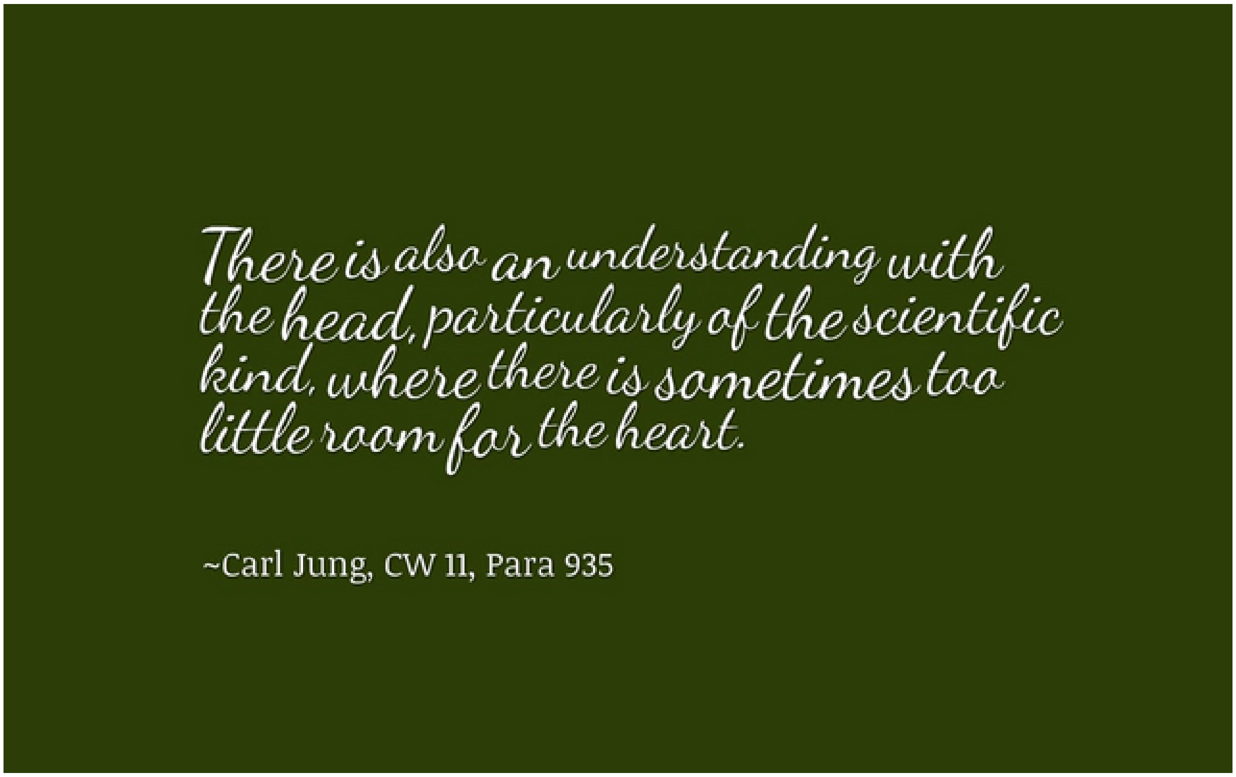
[5]



We should never identify ourselves with reason, for man is not and never will be a creature of reason alone, a fact to be noted by all pedantic culture-mongers.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para III

[6]

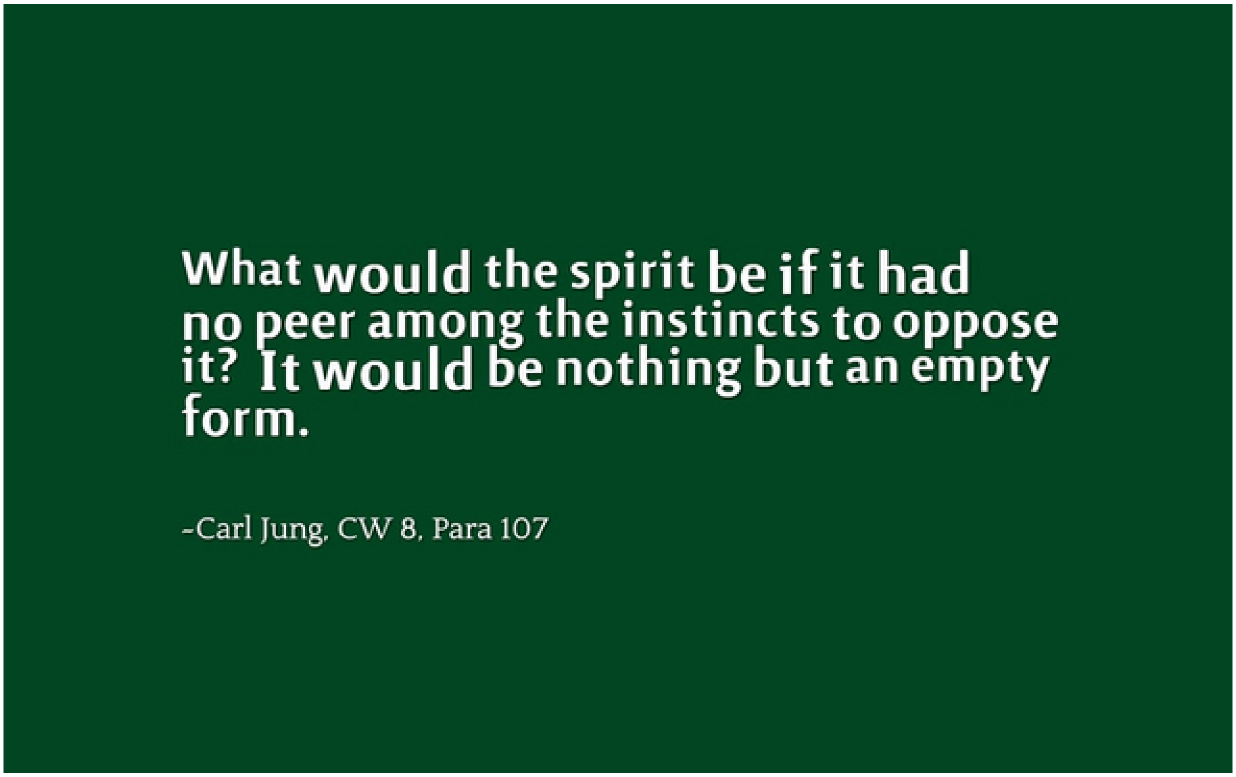


There is also an understanding with the head, particularly of the scientific kind, where there is sometimes too little room for the heart.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 935

There is also an understanding with the head, particularly of the scientific kind, where there is sometimes too little room for the heart. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 935

[7]

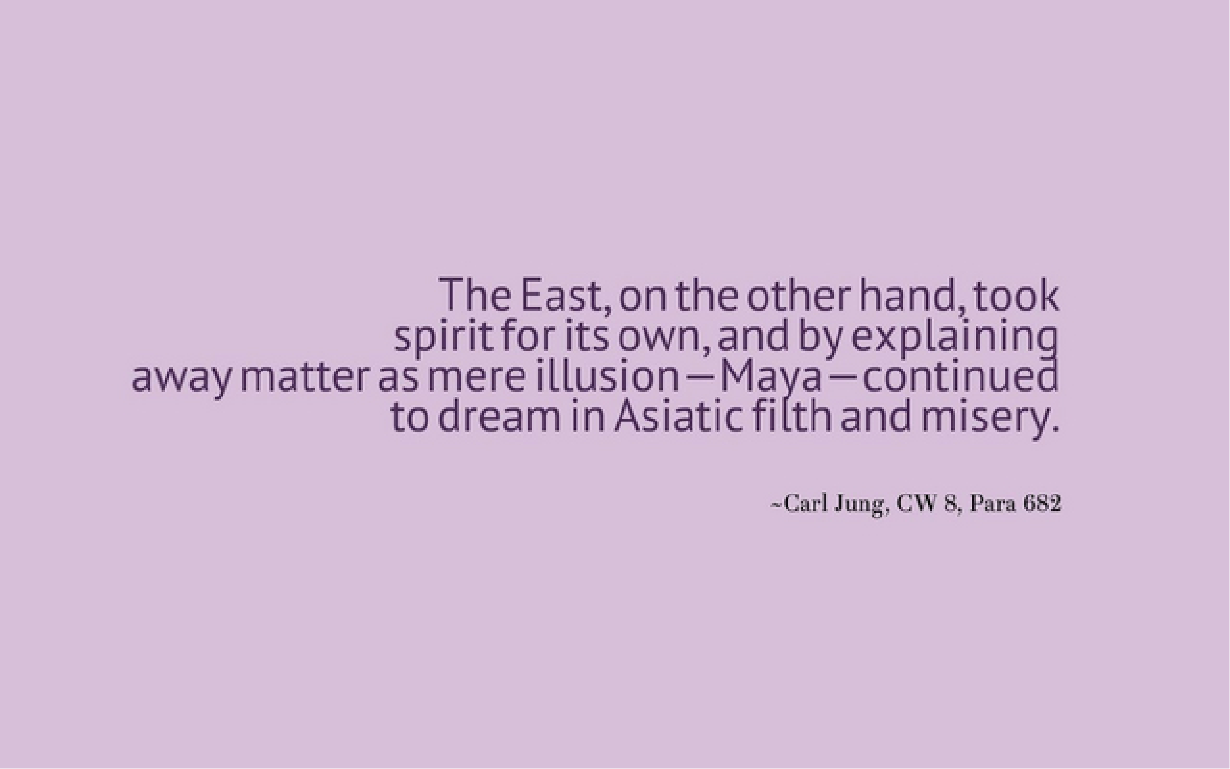


What would the spirit be if it had no peer among the instincts to oppose it? It would be nothing but an empty form.

-Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 107

What would the spirit be if it had no peer among the instincts to oppose it? It would be nothing but an empty form.
Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 107

[8]

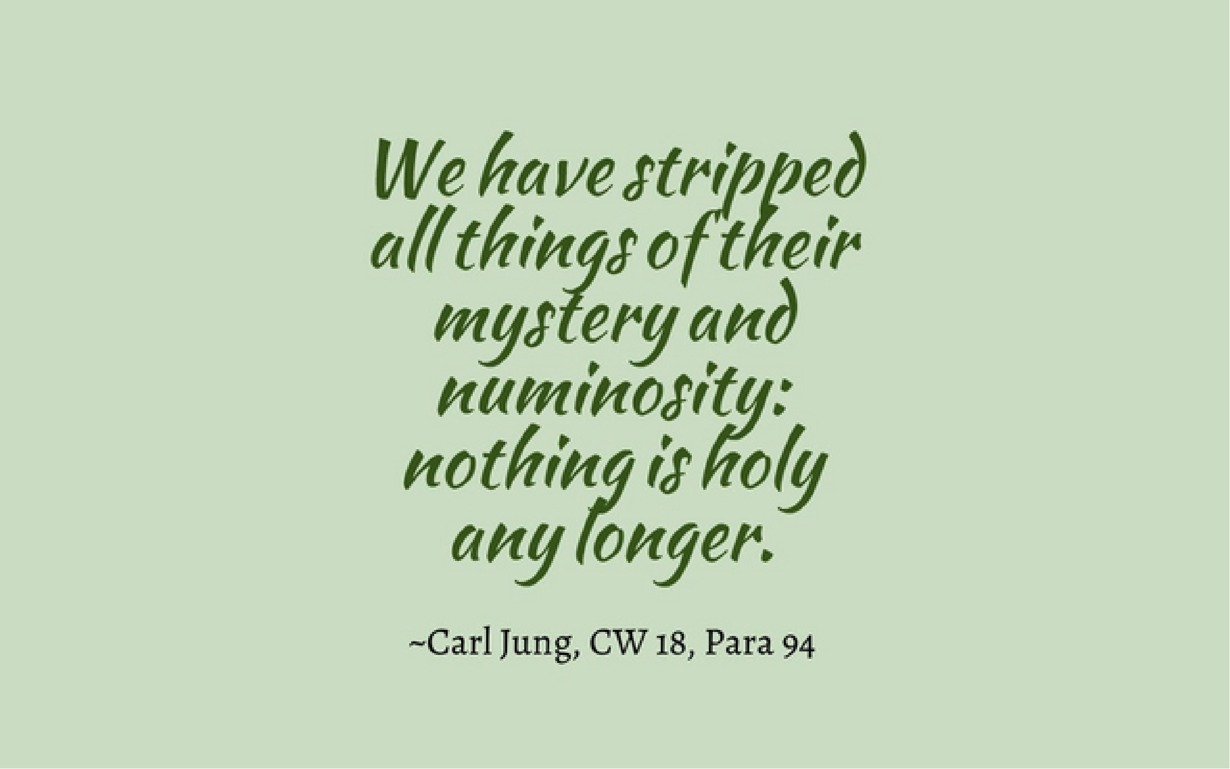


The East, on the other hand, took spirit for its own, and by explaining away matter as mere illusion—Maya—continued to dream in Asiatic filth and misery.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 682

The East, on the other hand, took spirit for its own, and by explaining away matter as mere illusion—Maya—continued to dream in Asiatic filth and misery. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 682

[9]

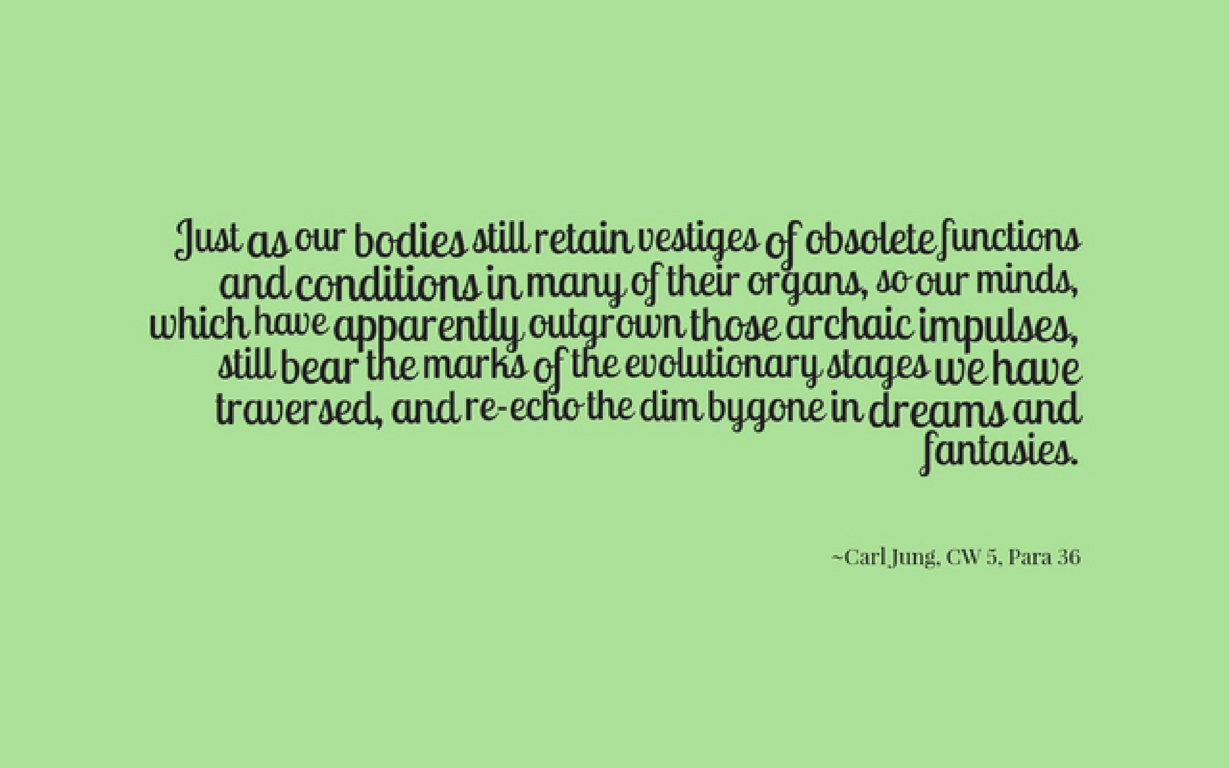


We have stripped all things of their mystery and numinosity: nothing is holy any longer.

~Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 94

We have stripped all things of their mystery and numinosity: nothing is holy any longer. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 94

[10]



Just as our bodies still retain vestiges of obsolete functions and conditions in many of their organs, so our minds, which have apparently outgrown those archaic impulses, still bear the marks of the evolutionary stages we have traversed, and re-echo the dim bygone in dreams and fantasies.

~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 36

Just as our bodies still retain vestiges of obsolete functions and conditions in many of their organs, so our minds, which have apparently outgrown those archaic impulses, still bear the marks of the evolutionary stages we have traversed, and re-echo the dim bygone in dreams and fantasies. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 36

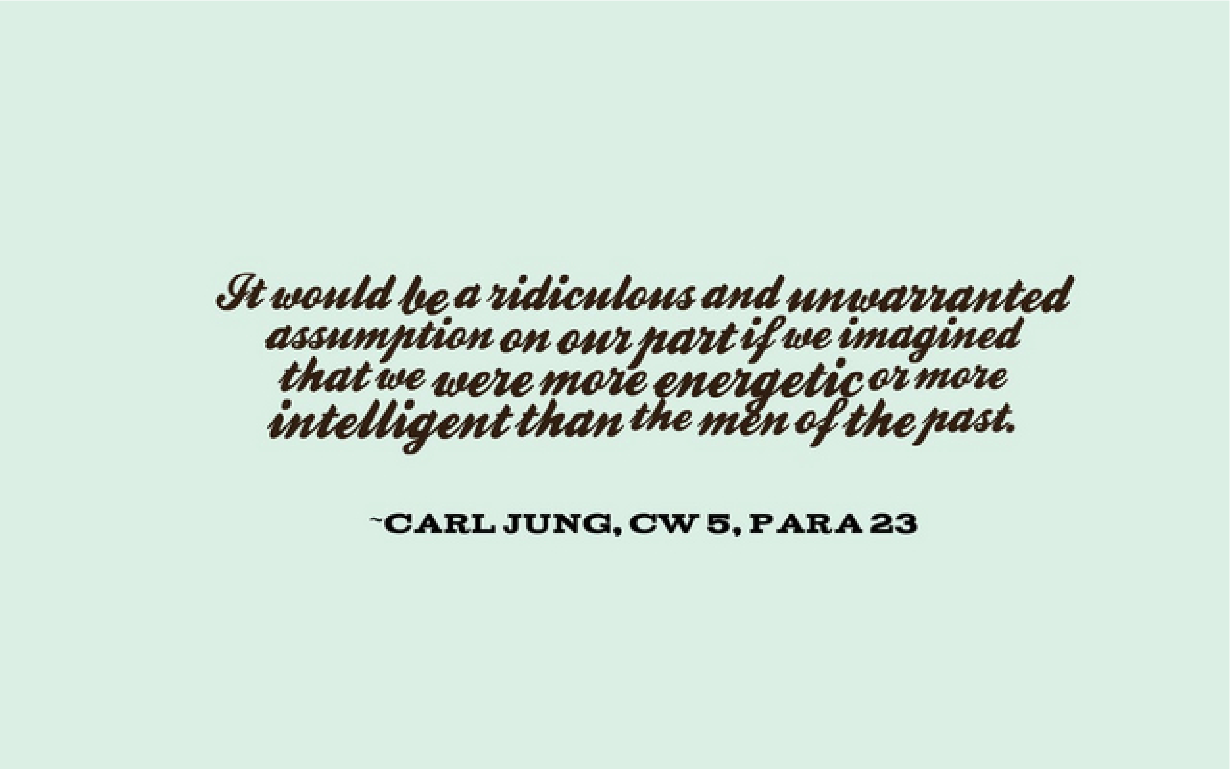
[11]

It would be a great step forward, in my opinion, if at least it were recognized how far the truth of dogma is rooted in the human psyche, which is not the work of human hands.

~Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 489

It would be a great step forward, in my opinion, if at least it were recognized how far the truth of dogma is rooted in the human psyche, which is not the work of human hands. Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 489

[12]

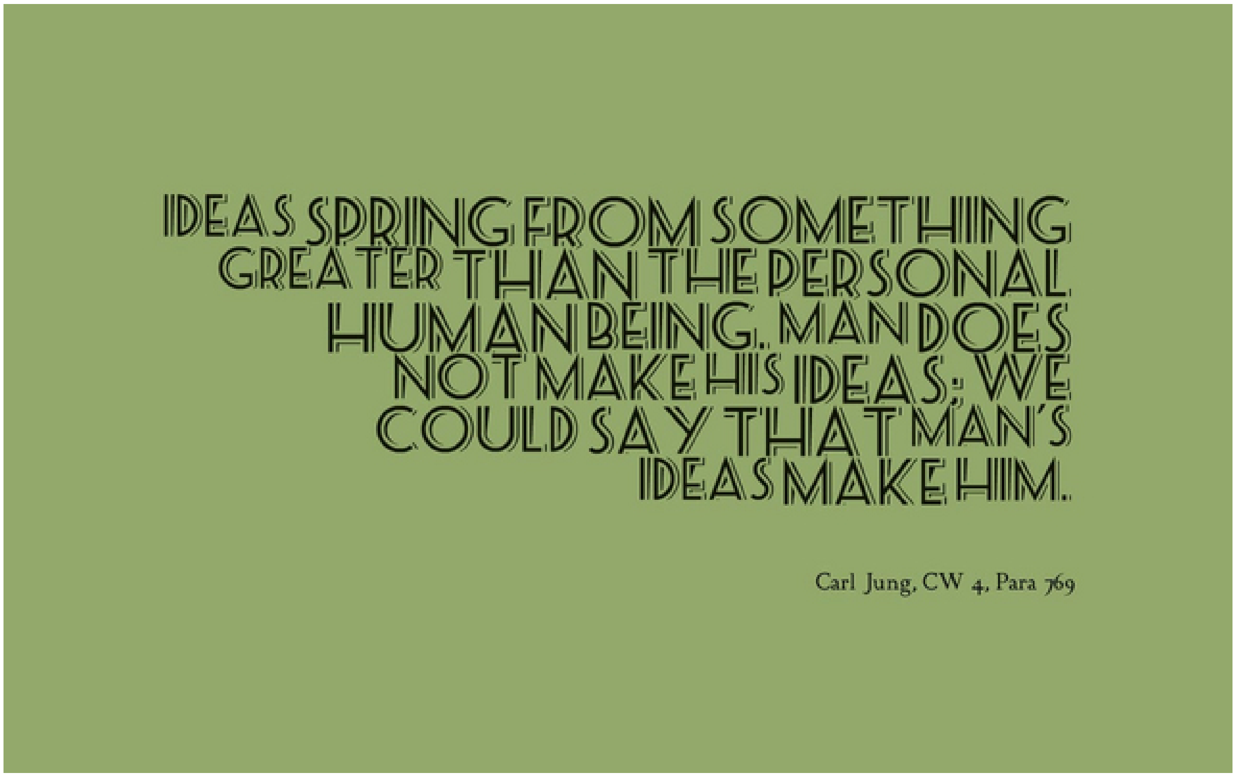


It would be a ridiculous and unwarranted assumption on our part if we imagined that we were more energetic or more intelligent than the men of the past.

~CARL JUNG, CW 5, PARA 23

It would be a ridiculous and unwarranted assumption on our part if we imagined that we were more energetic or more intelligent than the men of the past. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 23

[13]

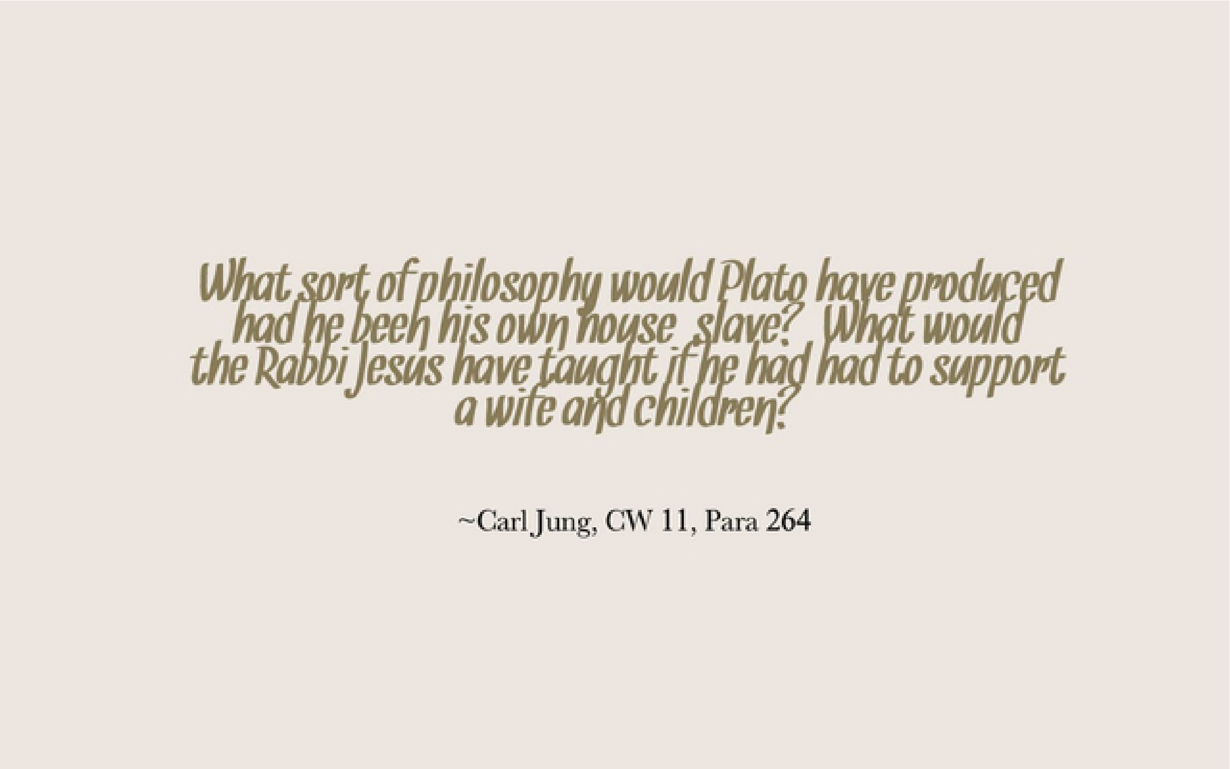


IDEAS SPRING FROM SOMETHING GREATER THAN THE PERSONAL HUMAN BEING. MAN DOES NOT MAKE HIS IDEAS; WE COULD SAY THAT MAN'S IDEAS MAKE HIM.

Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 769

Ideas spring from something greater than the personal human being. Man does not make his ideas; we could say that man's ideas make him. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 769

[14]



What sort of philosophy would Plato have produced had he been his own house slave? What would the Rabbi Jesus have taught if he had had to support a wife and children?

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 264

What sort of philosophy would Plato have produced had he been his own house-slave? What would the Rabbi Jesus have taught if he had had to support a wife and children? Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 264

[15]

WE SHOULD, THEREFORE, BE PREPARED TO ACCEPT THE VIEW THAT SPIRIT IS NOT ABSOLUTE, BUT SOMETHING RELATIVE THAT NEEDS COMPLETING AND PERFECTING THROUGH LIFE.

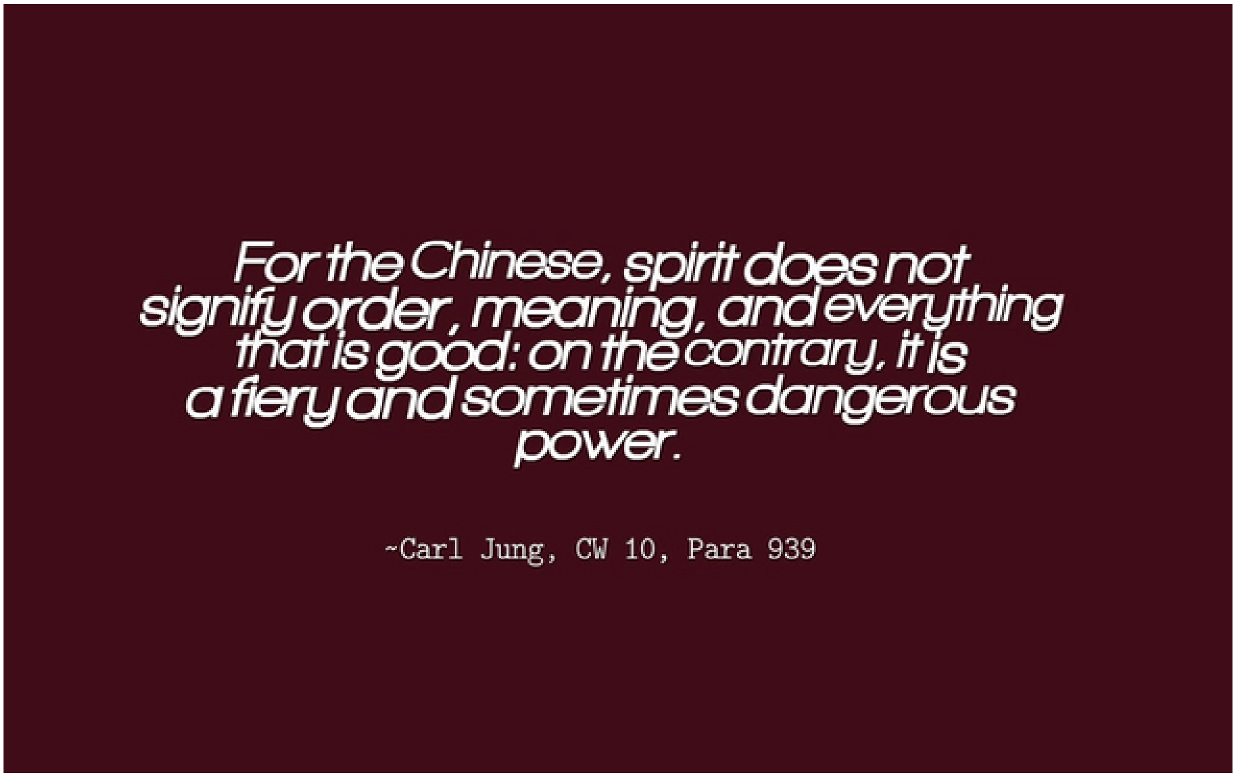
-Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 645

We should, therefore, be prepared to accept the view that spirit is not absolute, but something relative that needs completing and perfecting through life. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 645

[16]

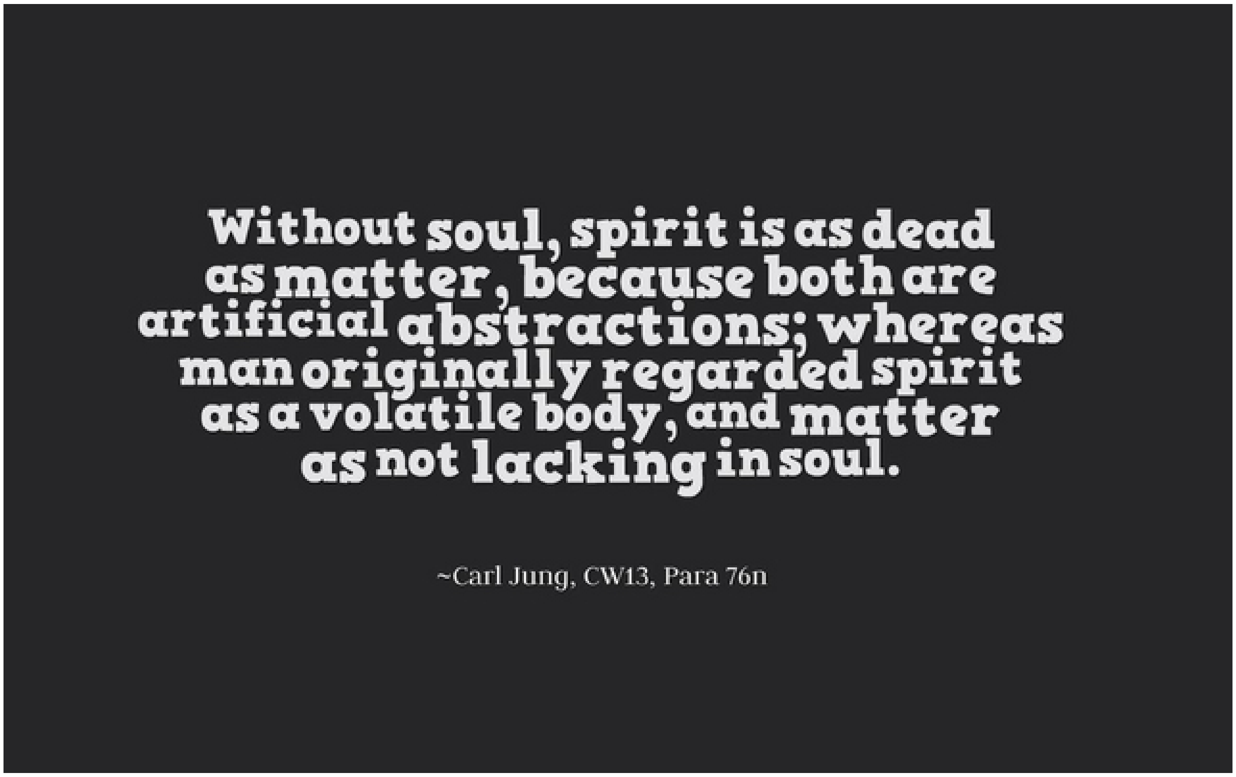


For the Chinese, spirit does not signify order, meaning, and everything that is good: on the contrary, it is a fiery and sometimes dangerous power.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 939

For the Chinese, "spirit" does not signify order, meaning, and everything that is good: on the contrary, it is a fiery and sometimes dangerous power. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 939

[17]

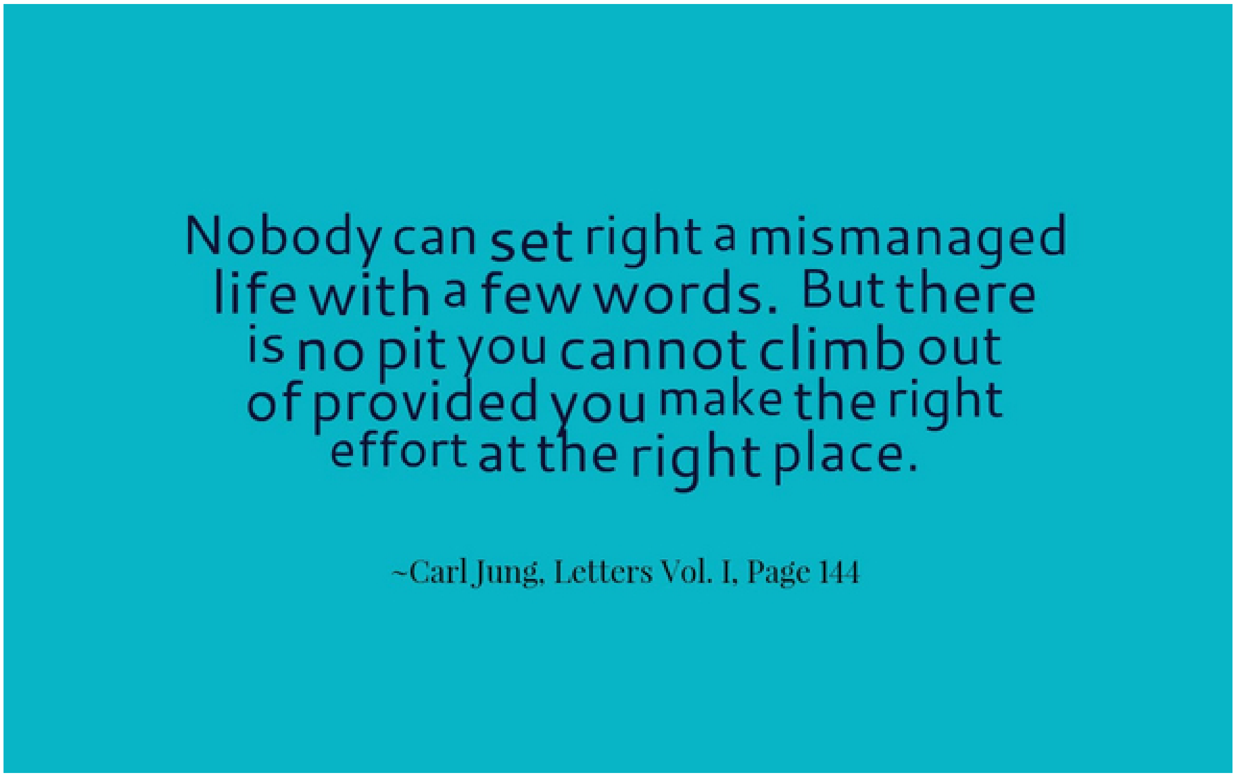


Without soul, spirit is as dead as matter, because both are artificial abstractions; whereas man originally regarded spirit as a volatile body, and matter as not lacking in soul.

~Carl Jung, CW13, Para 76n

Without soul, spirit is as dead as matter, because both are artificial abstractions; whereas man originally regarded spirit as a volatile body, and matter as not lacking in soul. Carl Jung, CW13, Para 76n

[18]

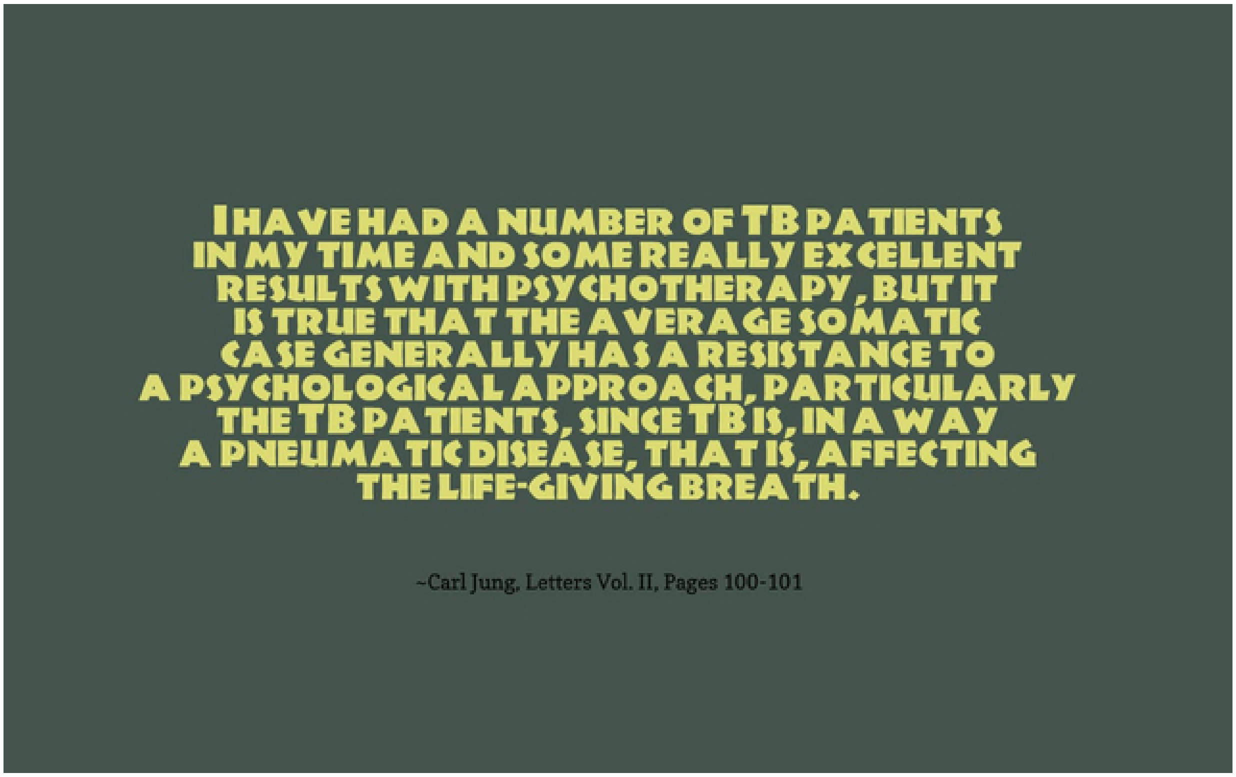


Nobody can set right a mismanaged life with a few words. But there is no pit you cannot climb out of provided you make the right effort at the right place.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 144

Nobody can set right a mismanaged life with a few words. But there is no pit you cannot climb out of provided you make the right effort at the right place. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 144

[19]



I HAVE HAD A NUMBER OF TB PATIENTS IN MY TIME AND SOME REALLY EXCELLENT RESULTS WITH PSYCHOTHERAPY, BUT IT IS TRUE THAT THE AVERAGE SOMATIC CASE GENERALLY HAS A RESISTANCE TO A PSYCHOLOGICAL APPROACH, PARTICULARLY THE TB PATIENTS, SINCE TB IS, IN A WAY A PNEUMATIC DISEASE, THAT IS, AFFECTING THE LIFE-GIVING BREATH.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 100-101

I have had a number of TB patients in my time and some really excellent results with psychotherapy, but it is true that the average somatic case generally has a resistance to a psychological approach, particularly the TB patients, since TB is, in a way a "pneumatic" disease, that is, affecting the life-giving breath. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 100-101

[20]

He [Jung] mentioned that in free association tests breathing was restricted when a complex was touched and that this could be related to TB.

-E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 74

He [Jung] mentioned that in free association tests breathing was restricted when a complex was touched and that this could be related to TB. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 74

[21]

YOU MUST PAY ESPECIALLY CAREFUL ATTENTION TO YOUR BODY BECAUSE YOUR INTUITIVE EXTRAVERSION, STRETCHING OVER CONTINENTS, PULLS ENERGIES INTO ITS VORTEX WHICH ARE DRAWN FROM THE BODY.

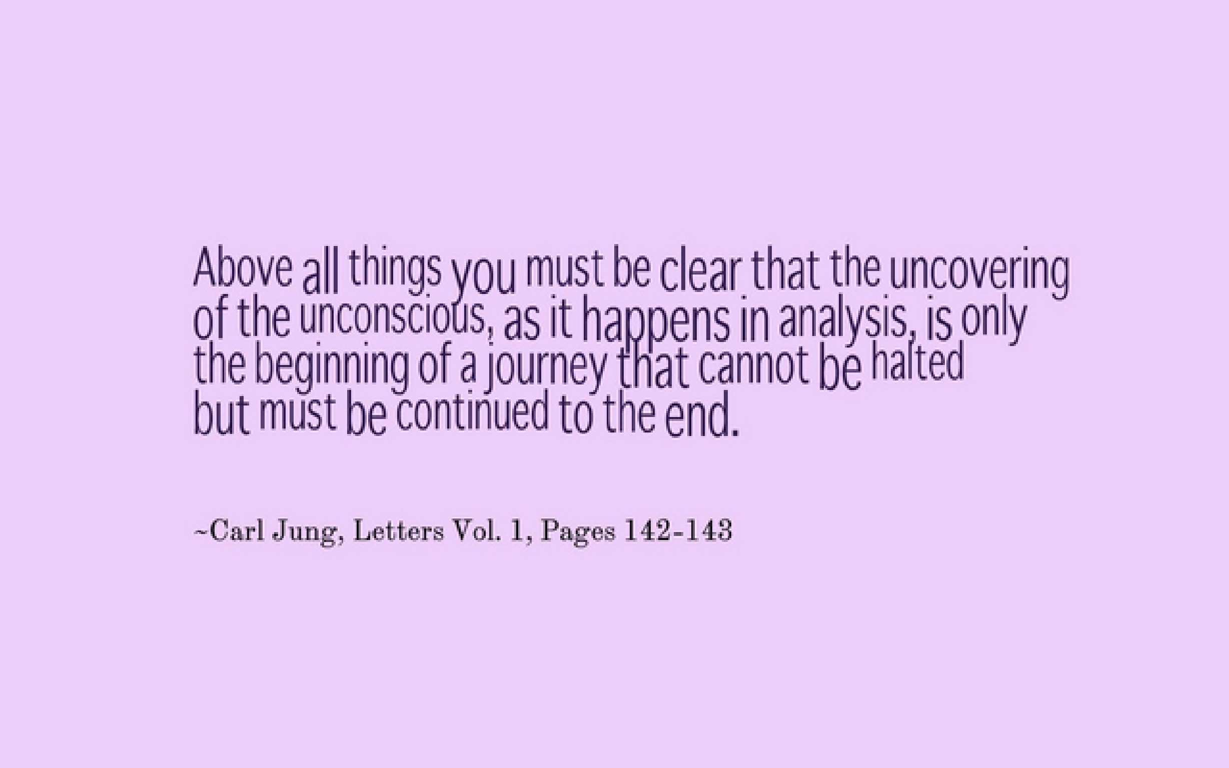
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 54-55

You must pay especially careful attention to your body because your intuitive extraversion, stretching over continents, pulls energies into its vortex which are drawn from the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 54-55

[22]

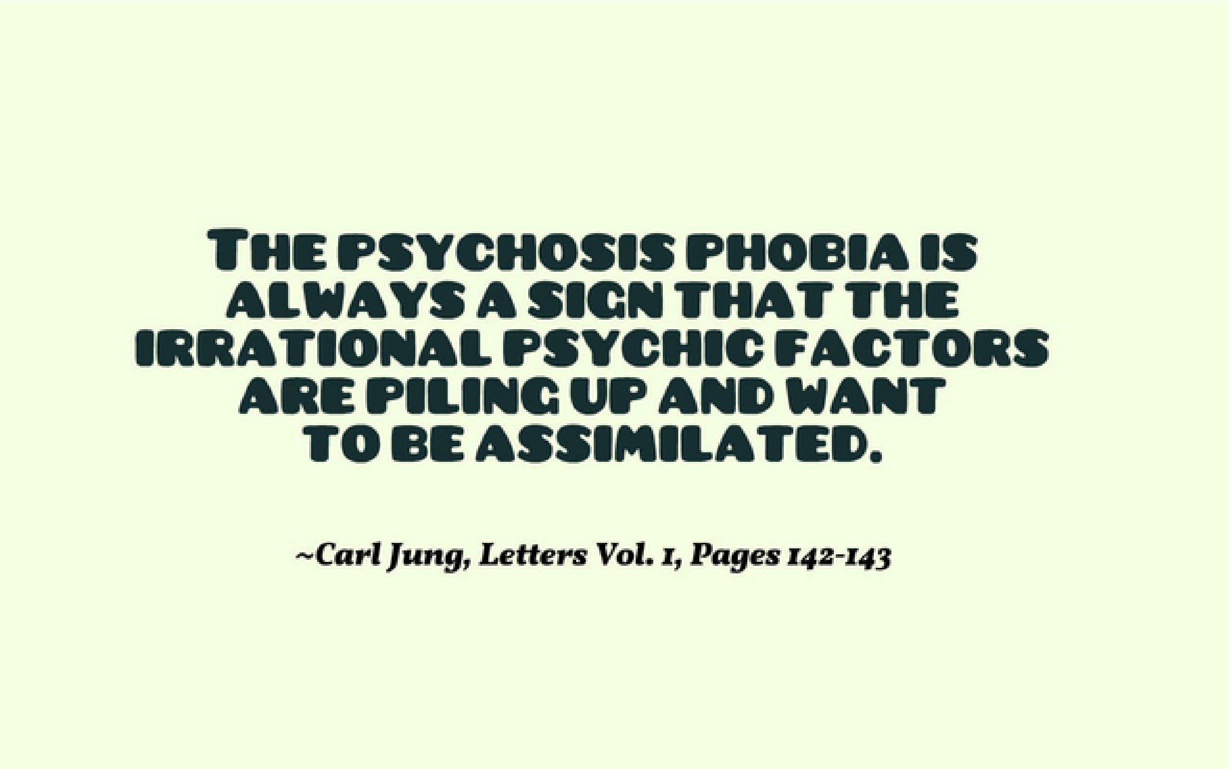


Above all things you must be clear that the uncovering of the unconscious, as it happens in analysis, is only the beginning of a journey that cannot be halted but must be continued to the end.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 142-143

Above all things you must be clear that the uncovering of the unconscious, as it happens in analysis, is only the beginning of a journey that cannot be halted but must be continued to the end. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 142-143

[23]

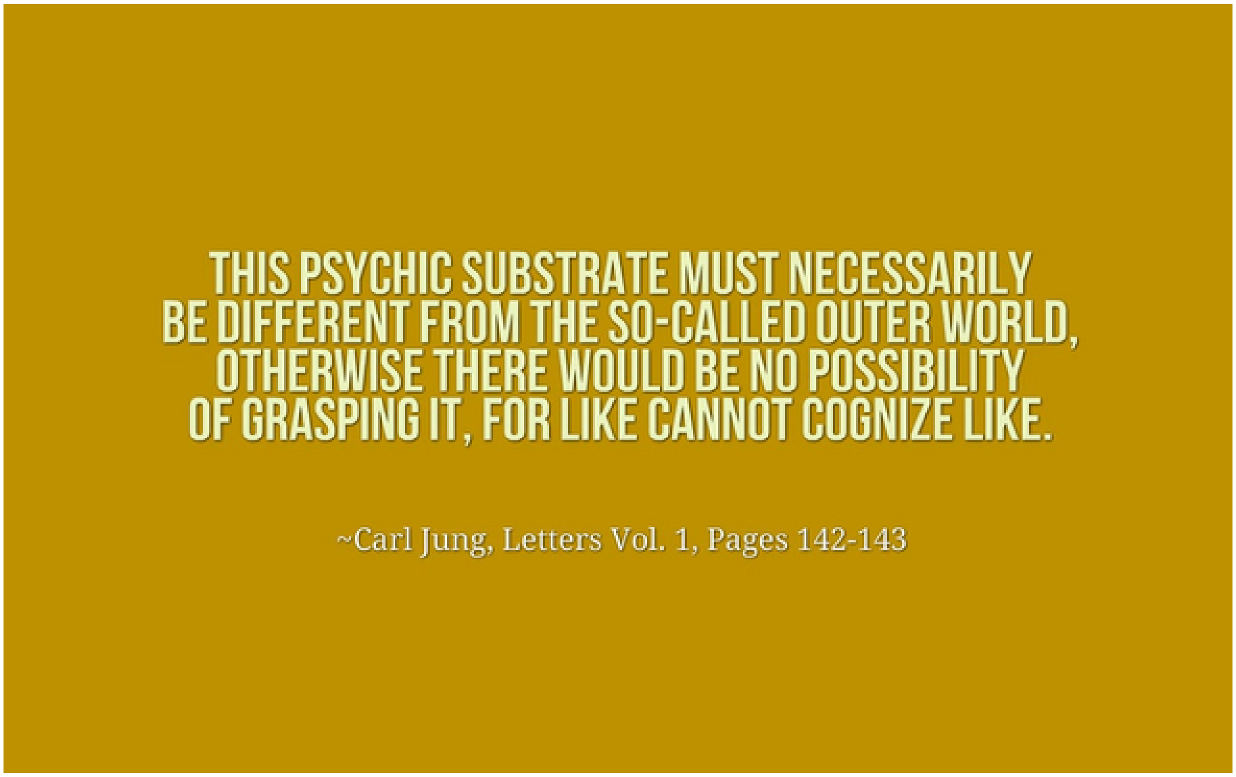


THE PSYCHOSIS PHOBIA IS ALWAYS A SIGN THAT THE IRRATIONAL PSYCHIC FACTORS ARE PILING UP AND WANT TO BE ASSIMILATED.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 142-143

The psychosis phobia is always a sign that the irrational psychic factors are piling up and want to be assimilated. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 142-143

[24]

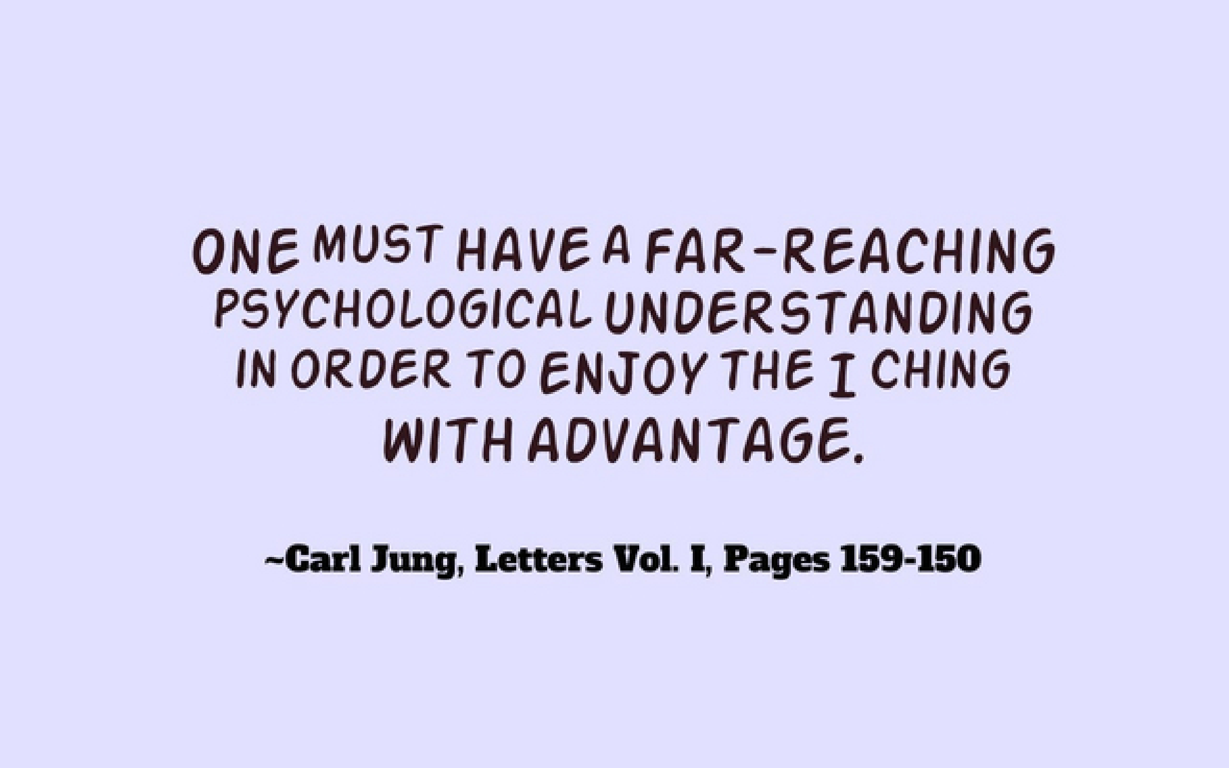


THIS PSYCHIC SUBSTRATE MUST NECESSARILY BE DIFFERENT FROM THE SO-CALLED OUTER WORLD, OTHERWISE THERE WOULD BE NO POSSIBILITY OF GRASPING IT, FOR LIKE CANNOT COGNIZE LIKE.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 142-143

This psychic substrate must necessarily be different from the so-called outer world, otherwise there would be no possibility of grasping it, for like cannot cognize like. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 142-143

[25]



ONE MUST HAVE A FAR-REACHING PSYCHOLOGICAL UNDERSTANDING IN ORDER TO ENJOY THE I CHING WITH ADVANTAGE.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 159-150

One must have a far-reaching psychological understanding in order to enjoy the I Ching with advantage. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 159-150

[26]

It is a fact that cannot be denied the wickedness of others becomes our own wickedness because it kindles something evil in our own hearts.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 408

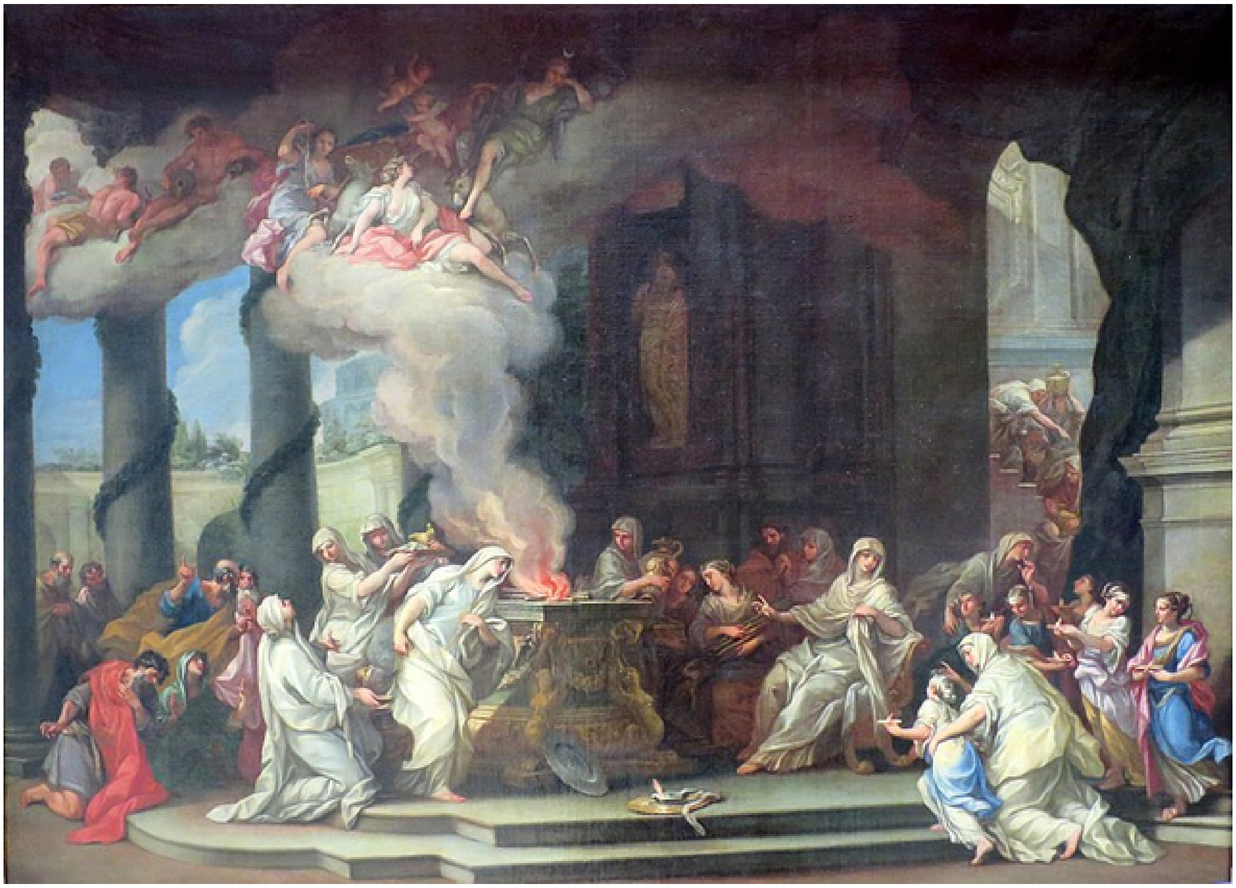
It is a fact that cannot be denied the wickedness of others becomes our own wickedness because it kindles something evil in our own hearts. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 408

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5e103-aaa.jpg
2. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/484af-bbb.jpg
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3b217-ccc.jpg
4. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b3ef9-ddd.jpg
5. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8d824-eee.jpg
6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d04af-fff.jpg
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/3317c-ggg.jpg
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/31550-hhh.jpg
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f9018-iii.jpg
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/87ce0-jj.jpg
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7e397-kkk.jpg
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a63d7-lll.jpg
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/92a1b-mmm.jpg
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bbd07-nnn.jpg
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f60cc-ooo.jpg
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8c6c8-ppp.jpg
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/82ed8-qqq.jpg
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/dc927-rrr.jpg
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5a073-sss.jpg
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/62f3b-ttt.jpg
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1dc7d-uuu.jpg
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ee351-vvv.jpg
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b714f-www.jpg

24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/a7853-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4635c-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e51d9-zzz.jpg`

The Vestal Virgin [The Keeper of the Fire] (2019-03-18 16:49)

[1]



Early 18th-century depiction of the dedication of a Vestal, by Alessandro Marchesini

Terms of service

The Vestals were committed to the priesthood before puberty (when 6-10 years old) and sworn to celibacy for a period of 30 years. These 30 years were divided in turn into decade-long periods during which Vestals were respectively students, servants, and teachers. Afterwards, they were retired and replaced by a new inductee. Once retired, a former Vestal was given a pension and allowed to marry.[9] The Pontifex Maximus, acting as the father of the bride, would typically arrange a marriage with a suitable Roman nobleman. A marriage to a former Vestal was highly honored, and – more importantly in ancient Rome – thought to bring good luck ... as well as a comfortable pension.

To get admittance into the order, a girl had to be free of physical and mental defects, have two living parents and be a daughter of a free-born resident of Rome. From at least the mid-Republican era, the pontifex maximus chose Vestals between their sixth and tenth year, by lot from a group of twenty high-born candidates at a gathering of their families and other Roman citizens. Originally, the girl had to be of patrician birth, but membership was opened to plebeians as it became difficult to find patricians willing to commit their daughters to 30 years as a Vestal, and then ultimately even to the daughters of freedmen for the same reason. [10][11]

The choosing ceremony was known as a captio (capture). Once a girl was chosen to be a Vestal, the pontifex pointed to her and led her away from her parents with the words, "I take you, Amata, to be a Vestal priestess, who will carry out sacred rites which it is the law for a Vestal priestess to perform on behalf of the Roman people, on the same terms as her who was a Vestal 'on the best terms'" (thus, with all the entitlements of a Vestal). As soon as she entered the atrium of Vesta's temple, she was under the goddess's service and protection.[12]

To replace a Vestal who had died, candidates would be presented in the quarters of the chief Vestal for the selection of the most virtuous. Unlike normal inductees, these candidates did not have to be prepubescents, nor even virgins (they could be young widows or even divorcees, though that was frowned upon and thought unlucky), though they were rarely older than the deceased Vestal they were replacing. Tacitus (Annals ii.30,86) recounts how Gaius Fonteius Agrippa and Domitius Pollio offered their daughters as Vestal candidates in AD 19 to fill such a vacant position. Equally matched, Pollio's daughter was chosen only because Agrippa had been recently divorced. The pontifex maximus (Tiberius) "consoled" the failed candidate with a dowry of 1 million sesterces.

Tasks

House of the Vestals and Temple of Vesta from the Palatine

Their tasks included the maintenance of the fire sacred to Vesta, the goddess of the hearth and home, collecting water from a sacred spring, preparation of food used in rituals and caring for sacred objects in the temple's sanctuary.[13] By maintaining Vesta's sacred fire, from which anyone could receive fire for household use, they functioned as "surrogate housekeepers", in a religious sense, for all of Rome. Their sacred fire was treated, in Imperial times, as the emperor's household fire.
The Vestals were put in charge of keeping safe the wills and testaments of various people such as Caesar and Mark Antony. In addition, the Vestals also guarded some sacred objects, including the Palladium, and made a special kind of flour called mola salsa which was sprinkled on all public offerings to a god.
[edit]Privileges
The dignities accorded to the Vestals were significant.
in an era when religion was rich in pageantry, the presence of the College of Vestal Virgins was required in numerous public ceremonies and wherever they went, they were transported in a carpentum, a covered two-wheeled carriage, preceded by a lictor, and had the right-of-way; at public games and performances they had a reserved place of honor;
unlike most Roman women, they were not subject to the patria potestas and so were free to own property, make a will, and vote;
they gave evidence without the customary oath, their word being trusted without question;
they were, on account of their incorruptible character, entrusted with important wills and state documents, like public treaties; their person was sacrosanct: death was the penalty for injuring their person and their escorts protected anyone from assault;
they could free condemned prisoners and slaves by touching them – if a person who was sentenced to death saw a Vestal on his way to the execution, he was automatically pardoned.
they participated in throwing the ritual straw figures called Argei into the Tiber on May 15.[14][15]

[edit]Punishments

Allowing the sacred fire of Vesta to die out, suggesting that the goddess had withdrawn her protection from the city, was a serious offence and was punishable by scourging.[16] The chastity of the Vestals was considered to have a direct bearing on the health of the Roman state. When they entered the collegium, they left behind the authority of their fathers and became daughters of the state. Any sexual relationship with a citizen was therefore considered to be incest and an act of treason.[17] The punishment for violating the oath of celibacy was to be buried alive in the Campus Sceleratus or "Evil Field" (an underground chamber near the Colline Gate) with a few days of food and water.

Ancient tradition required that an unchaste Vestal be buried alive within the city, that being the only way to kill her without spilling her blood, which was forbidden. However, this practice contradicted the Roman law that no person might be buried within the city. To solve this problem, the Romans buried the offending priestess with a nominal quantity of food and other provisions, not to prolong her punishment, but so that the Vestal would not technically die in the city, but instead descend into a "habitable room". Moreover, she would die willingly.[citation needed] Cases of unchastity and its punishment were rare.[18] The Vestal Tuccia was accused of fornication, but she carried water in a sieve to prove her chastity.

O Vesta, if I have always brought pure hands to your secret services, make it so now that with this sieve I shall be able to draw water from the Tiber and bring it to Your temple.[19]

Because a Vestal’s virginity was thought to be directly correlated to the sacred burning of the fire, if the fire were extinguished it might be assumed that either the Vestal had acted wrongly or that the vestal had simply neglected her duties. The final decision was the responsibility of the Pontifex Maximus, or the head of the pontifical college, as opposed to a judicial body. While the Order of the Vestals was in existence for over one thousand years there are only ten recorded convictions for unchastity and these trials all took place at times of political crisis for the Roman state. It has been suggested[17] that Vestals were used as scapegoats[20] in times of great crisis.

The earliest Vestals at Alba Longa were said to have been whipped to death for having sex.[citation needed] The Roman king Tarquinius Priscus instituted the punishment of live burial, which he inflicted on the priestess Pinaria. But whipping with rods sometimes preceded the immuration as was done to Urbinia in 471 BC.

Suspicions first arose against Minucia through an improper love of dress and the evidence of a slave. She was found guilty of unchastity and buried alive.[21] Similarly Postumia, who though innocent according to Livy[22] was tried for unchastity with suspicions being aroused through her immodest attire and less than maidenly manner. Postumia was sternly warned "to leave her sports, taunts and merry conceits." Aemilia, Licinia, and Martia were executed after being denounced by the servant of a barbarian horseman. A few Vestals were acquitted. Some cleared themselves through ordeals.[23] The paramour of a guilty Vestal was whipped to death in the Forum Boarium or on the Comitium.[24]

1. `http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/thumb/2/21/Alessandro_Marchesini_-_Dedication_of_a_New_Vestal_Virgin_-_WGA14054.jpg/800px-Alessandro_Marchesini_-_`

Carl Jung Quotations 44 (2019-03-18 17:30)

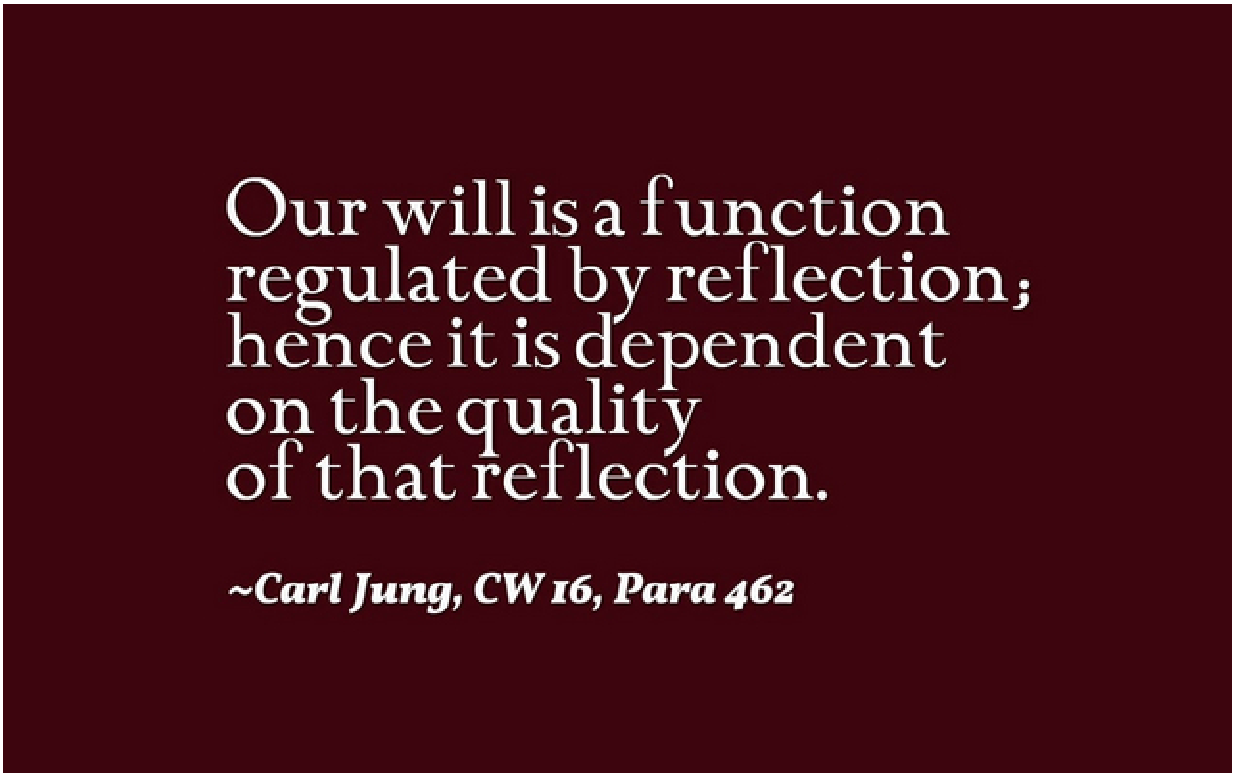
[1]

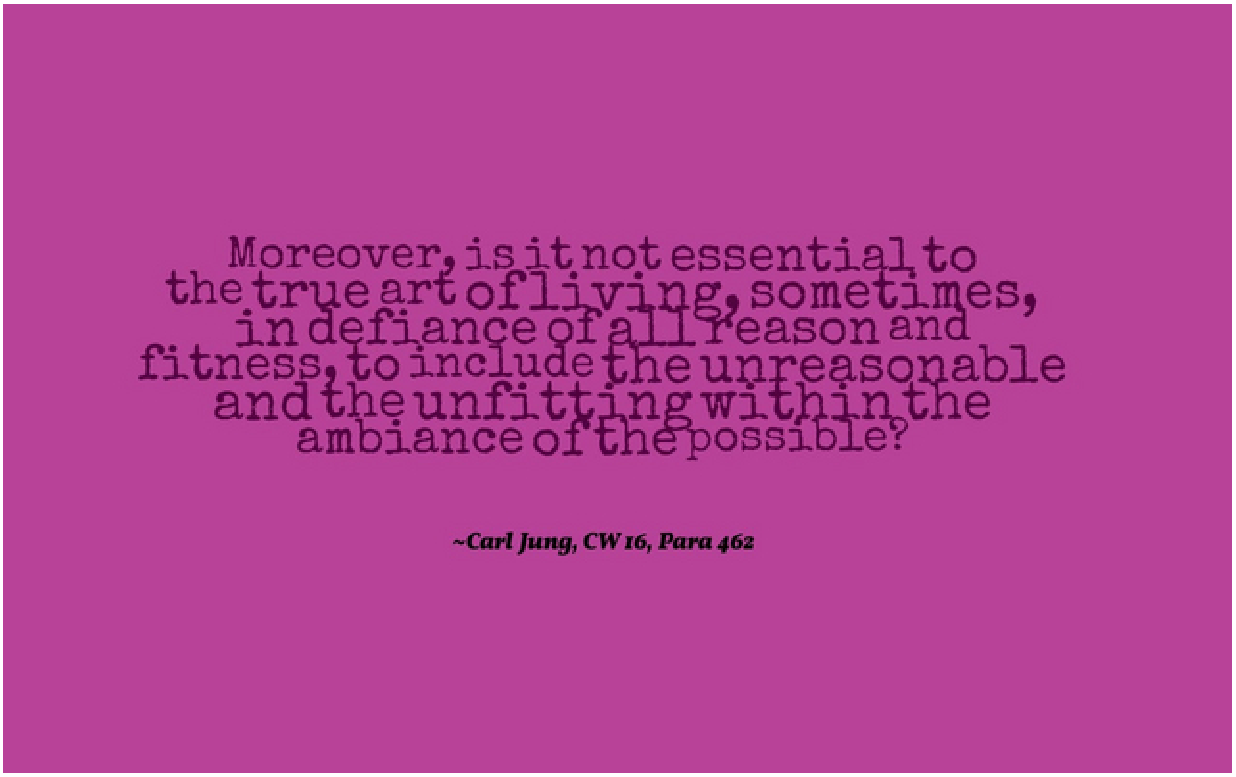


Our will is a function regulated by reflection; hence it is dependent on the quality of that reflection.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 462

Our will is a function regulated by reflection; hence it is dependent on the quality of that reflection. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 462

[2]

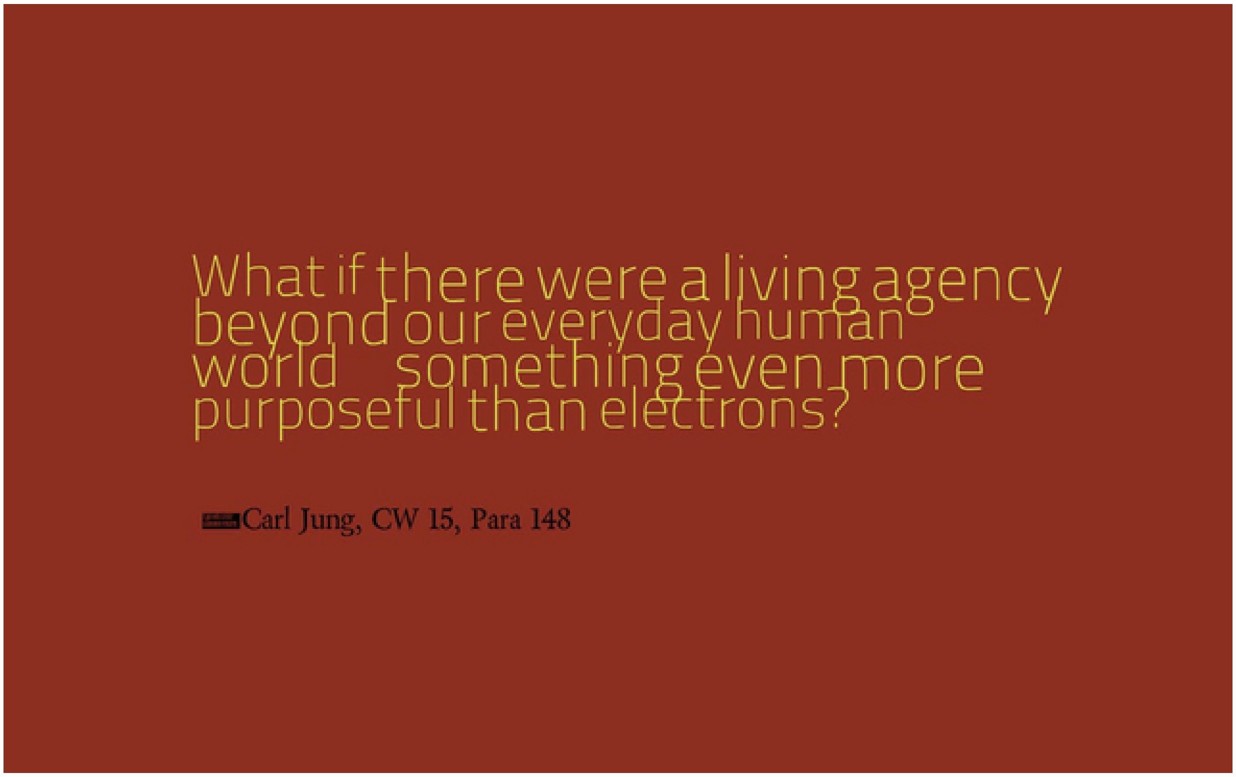


Moreover, is it not essential to the true art of living, sometimes, in defiance of all reason and fitness, to include the unreasonable and the unfitting within the ambiance of the possible?

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 462

Moreover, is it not essential to the true art of living, sometimes, in defiance of all reason and fitness, to include the unreasonable and the unfitting within the ambiance of the possible? Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 462

[3]

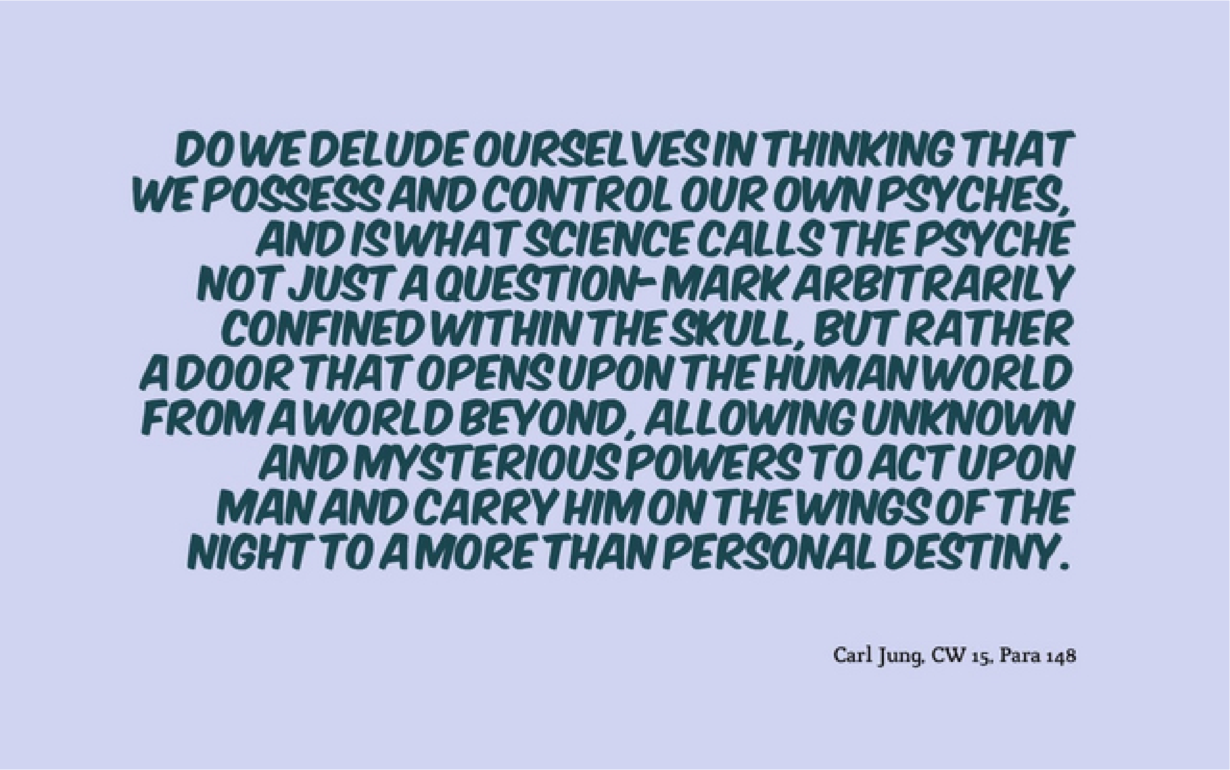


What if there were a living agency beyond our everyday human world something even more purposeful than electrons?

Carl Jung, CW 15, Para 148

What if there were a living agency beyond our everyday human world—something even more purposeful than electrons? Carl Jung, CW 15, Para 148

[4]

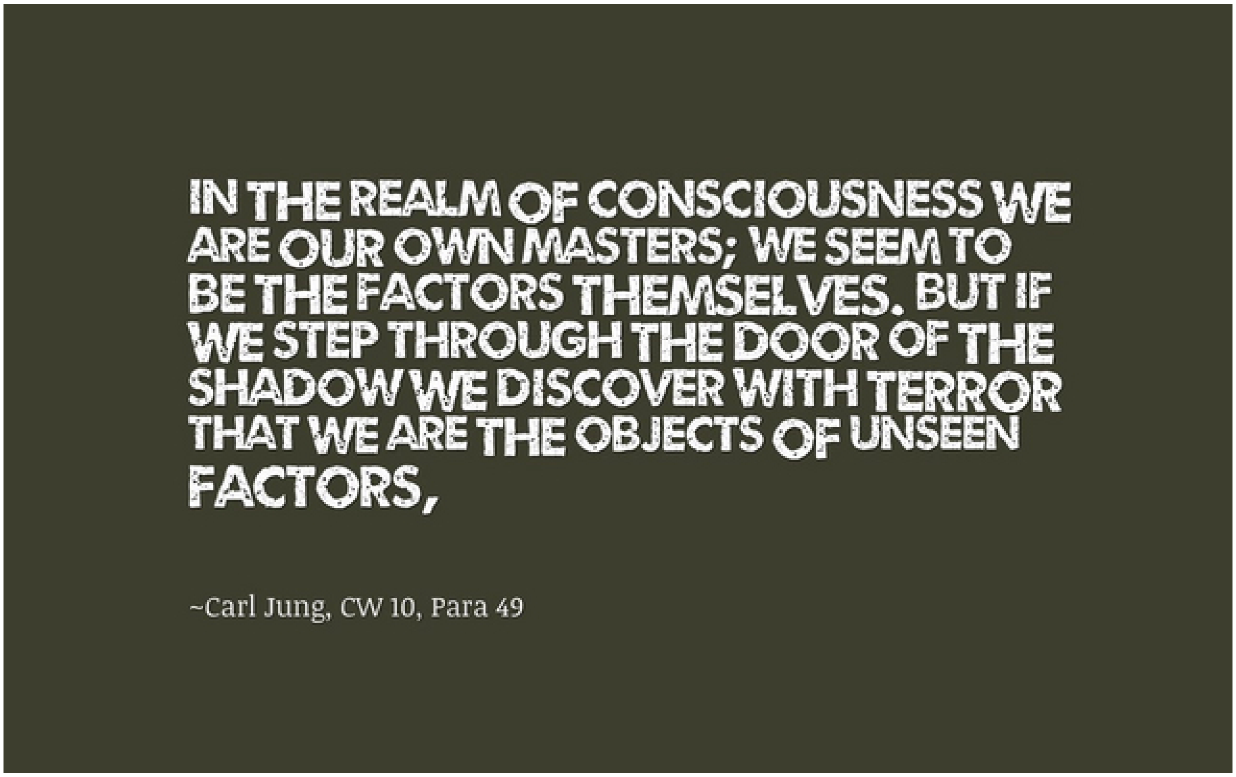


DO WE DELUDE OURSELVES IN THINKING THAT WE POSSESS AND CONTROL OUR OWN PSYCHES, AND IS WHAT SCIENCE CALLS THE PSYCHE NOT JUST A QUESTION-MARK ARBITRARILY CONFINED WITHIN THE SKULL, BUT RATHER A DOOR THAT OPENS UPON THE HUMAN WORLD FROM A WORLD BEYOND, ALLOWING UNKNOWN AND MYSTERIOUS POWERS TO ACT UPON MAN AND CARRY HIM ON THE WINGS OF THE NIGHT TO A MORE THAN PERSONAL DESTINY.

Carl Jung, CW 15, Para 148

Do we delude ourselves in thinking that we possess and control our own psyches, and is what science calls the "psyche" not just a question-mark arbitrarily confined within the skull, but rather a door that opens upon the human world from a world beyond, allowing unknown and mysterious powers to act upon man and carry him on the wings of the night to a more than personal destiny. Carl Jung, CW 15, Para 148

[5]

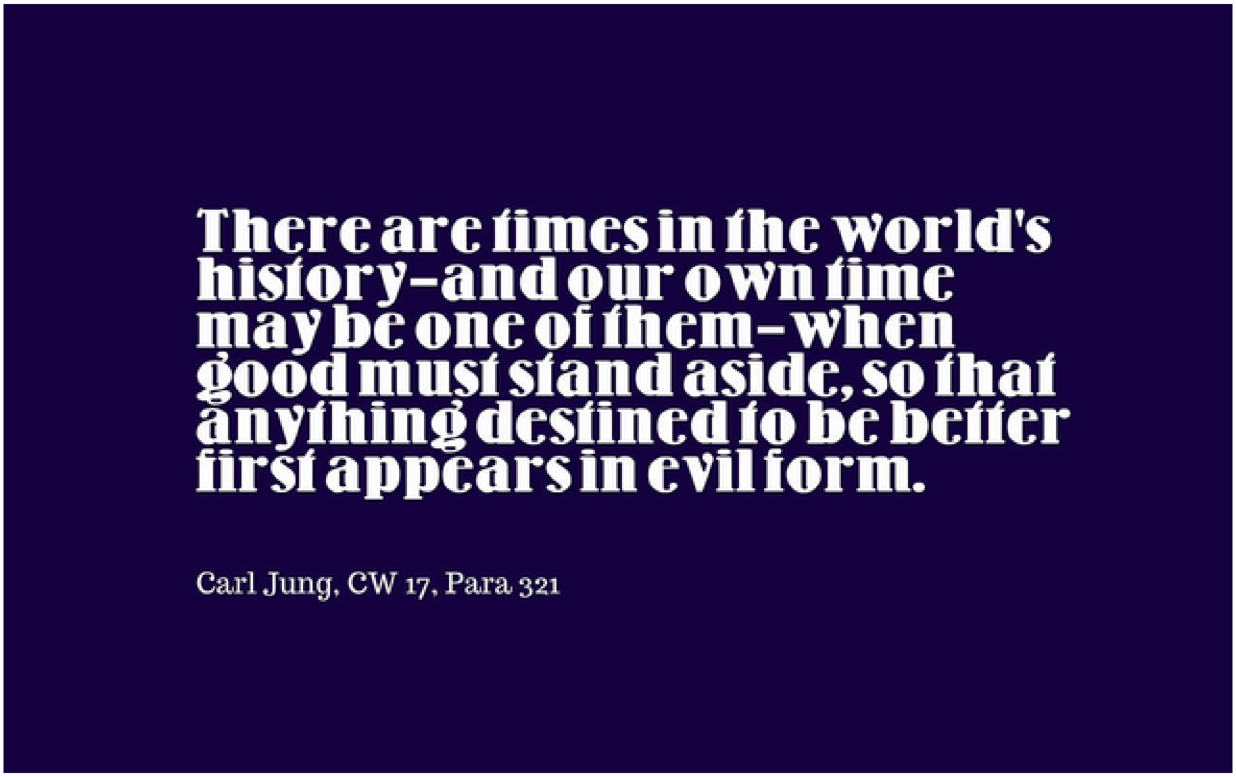


IN THE REALM OF CONSCIOUSNESS WE ARE OUR OWN MASTERS; WE SEEM TO BE THE FACTORS THEMSELVES. BUT IF WE STEP THROUGH THE DOOR OF THE SHADOW WE DISCOVER WITH TERROR THAT WE ARE THE OBJECTS OF UNSEEN FACTORS,

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 49

In the realm of consciousness we are our own masters; we seem to be the "factors" themselves. But if we step through the door of the shadow we discover with terror that we are the objects of unseen factors, Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 49

[6]



There are times in the world's history–and our own time may be one of them–when good must stand aside, so that anything destined to be better first appears in evil form.

Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 321

There are times in the world's history—and our own time may be one of them—when good must stand aside, so that anything destined to be better first appears in evil form. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 321

Evil needs to be pondered just as much as good, for good and evil are ultimately nothing but ideal extensions and abstractions of doing, and both belong to the chiaroscuro of life.

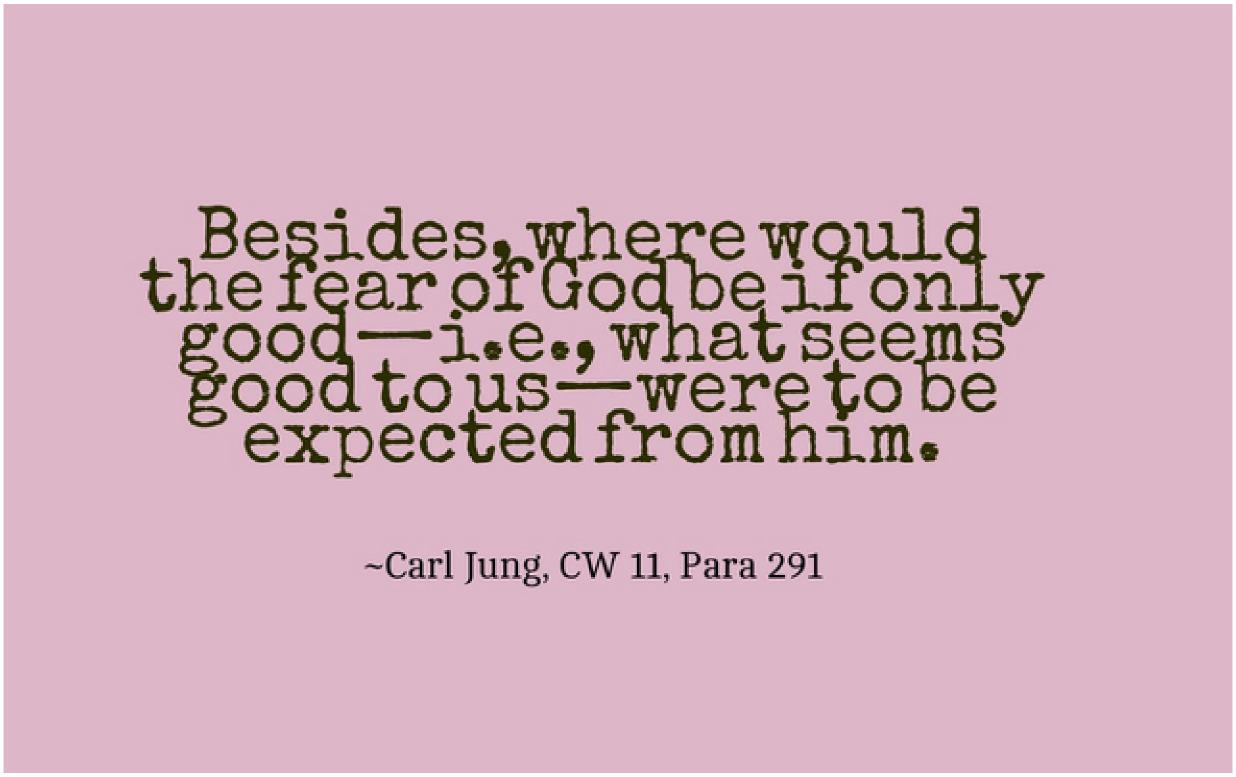
~Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 36

Evil needs to be pondered just as much as good, for good and evil are ultimately nothing but ideal extensions and abstractions of doing, and both belong to the chiaroscuro of life. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 36

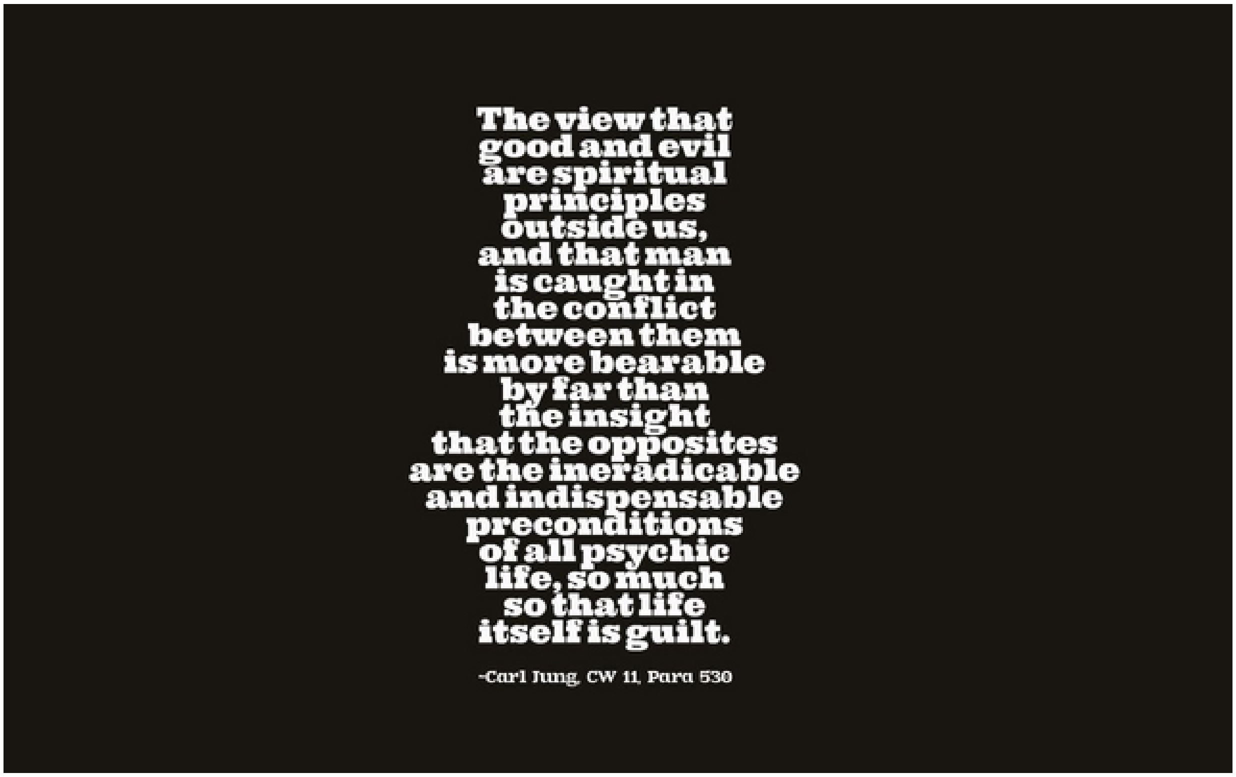


Besides, where would the fear of God be if only good—i.e., what seems good to us—were to be expected from him.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 291

Besides, where would the fear of God be if only good—i.e., what seems good to us—were to be expected from him.
Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 291

[9]

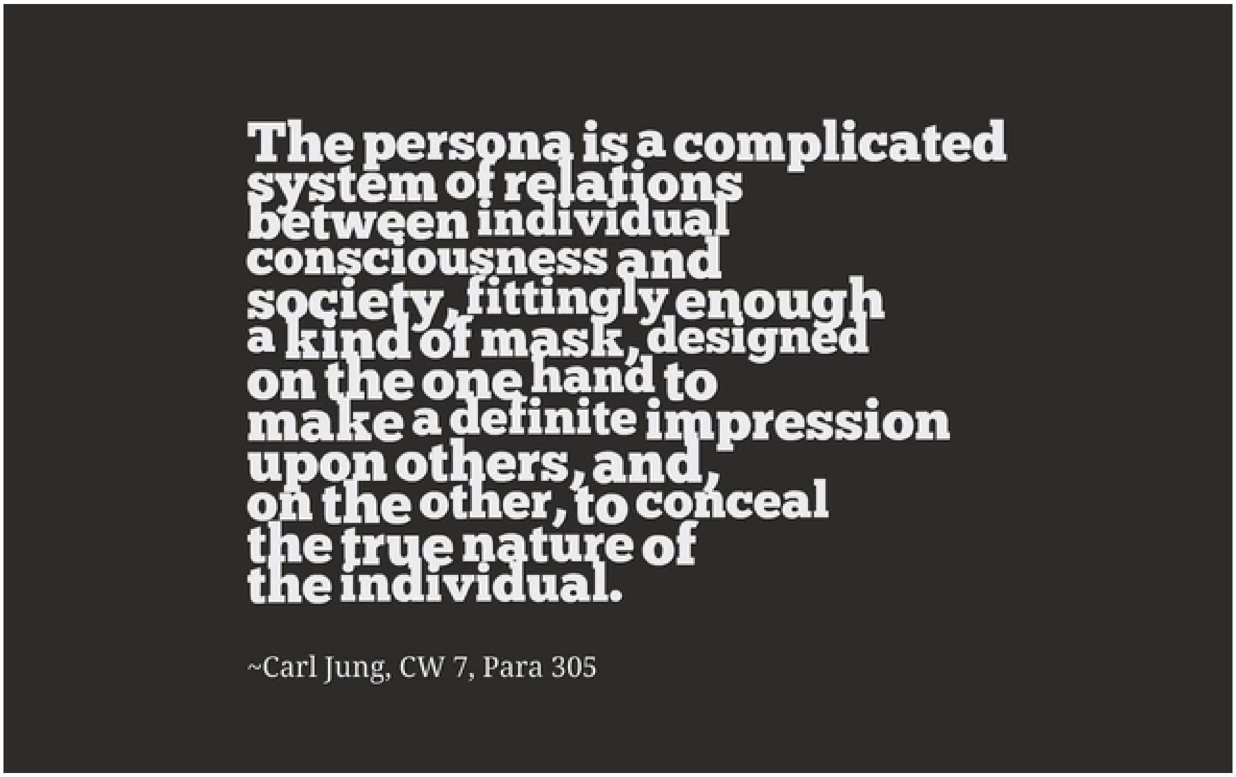


The view that good and evil are spiritual principles outside us, and that man is caught in the conflict between them is more bearable by far than the insight that the opposites are the ineradicable and indispensable preconditions of all psychic life, so much so that life itself is guilt.

-Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 530

The view that good and evil are spiritual principles outside us, and that man is caught in the conflict between them is more bearable by far than the insight that the opposites are the ineradicable and indispensable preconditions of all psychic life, so much so that life itself is guilt. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 530

[10]

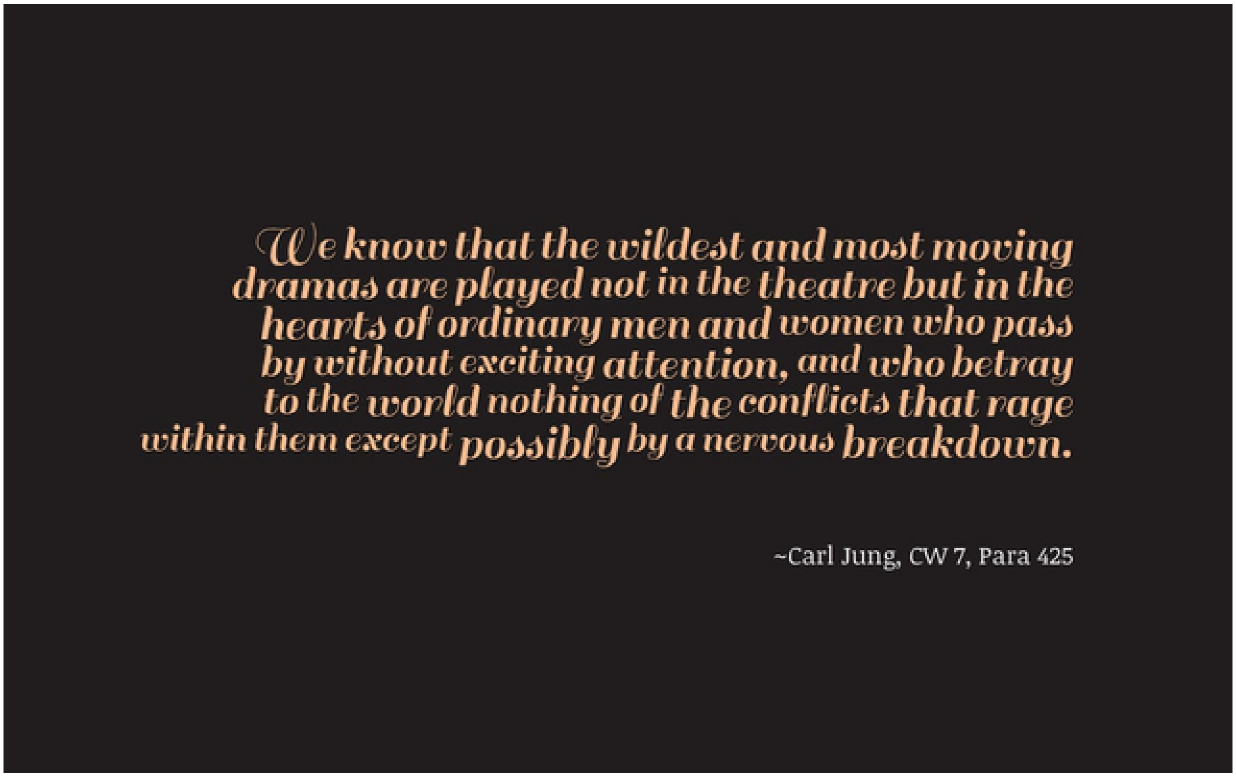


The persona is a complicated system of relations between individual consciousness and society, fittingly enough a kind of mask, designed on the one hand to make a definite impression upon others, and, on the other, to conceal the true nature of the individual.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 305

The persona is a complicated system of relations between individual consciousness and society, fittingly enough a kind of mask, designed on the one hand to make a definite impression upon others, and, on the other, to conceal the true nature of the individual. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 305

[11]

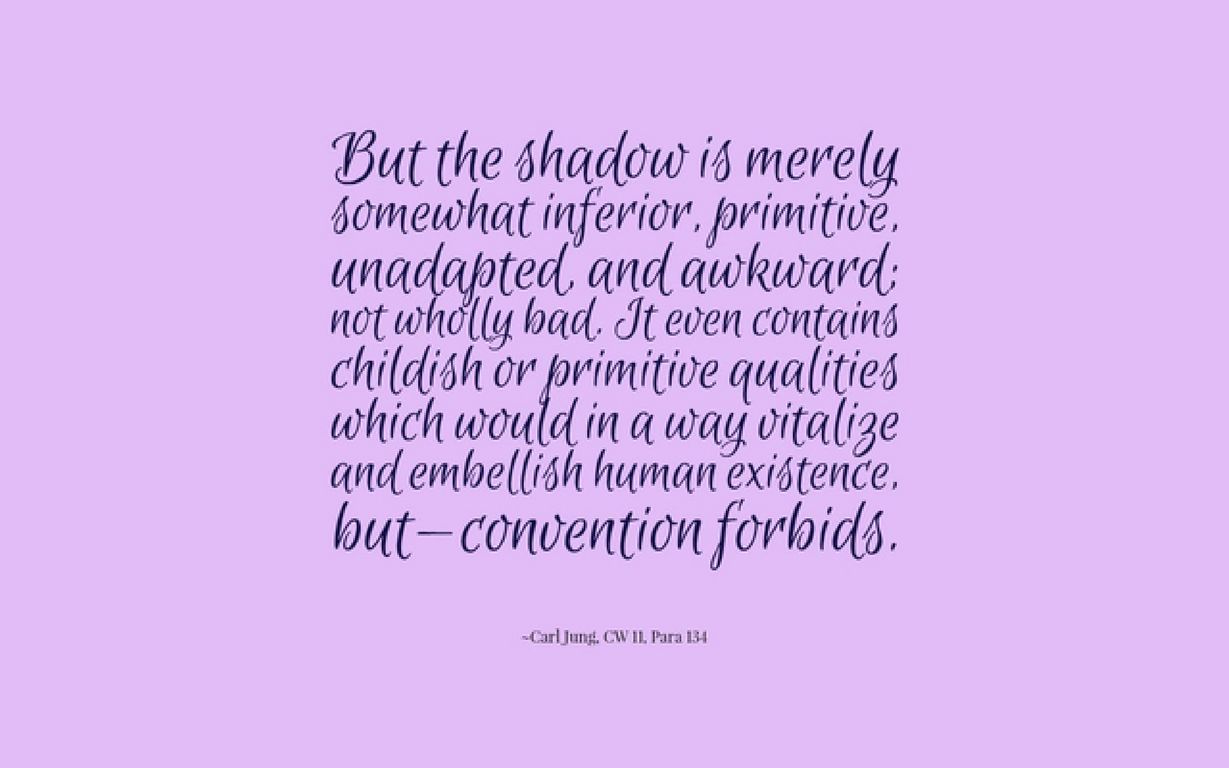


We know that the wildest and most moving dramas are played not in the theatre but in the hearts of ordinary men and women who pass by without exciting attention, and who betray to the world nothing of the conflicts that rage within them except possibly by a nervous breakdown.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 425

We know that the wildest and most moving dramas are played not in the theatre but in the hearts of ordinary men and women who pass by without exciting attention, and who betray to the world nothing of the conflicts that rage within them except possibly by a nervous breakdown. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 425

[12]

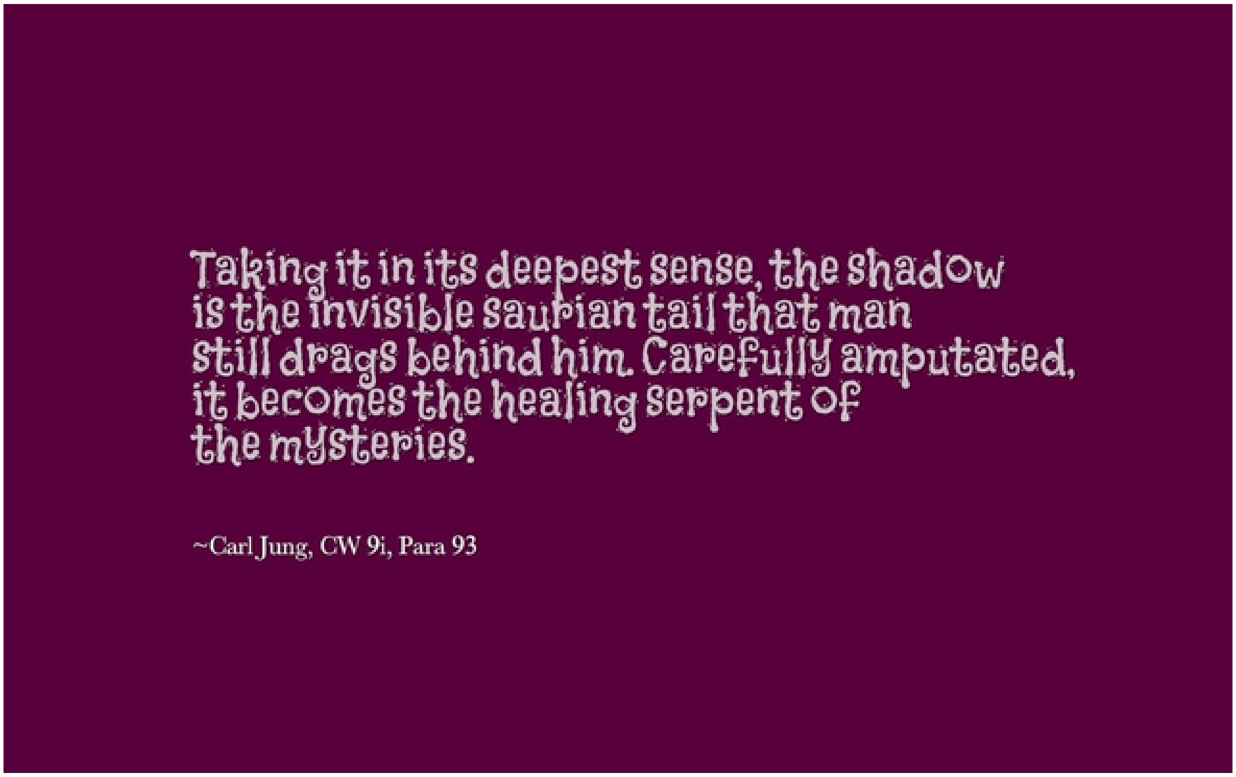


But the shadow is merely somewhat inferior, primitive, unadapted, and awkward; not wholly bad. It even contains childish or primitive qualities which would in a way vitalize and embellish human existence, but—convention forbids.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 134

But the shadow is merely somewhat inferior, primitive, unadapted, and awkward; not wholly bad. It even contains childish or primitive qualities which would in a way vitalize and embellish human existence, but—convention forbids. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 134

[13]

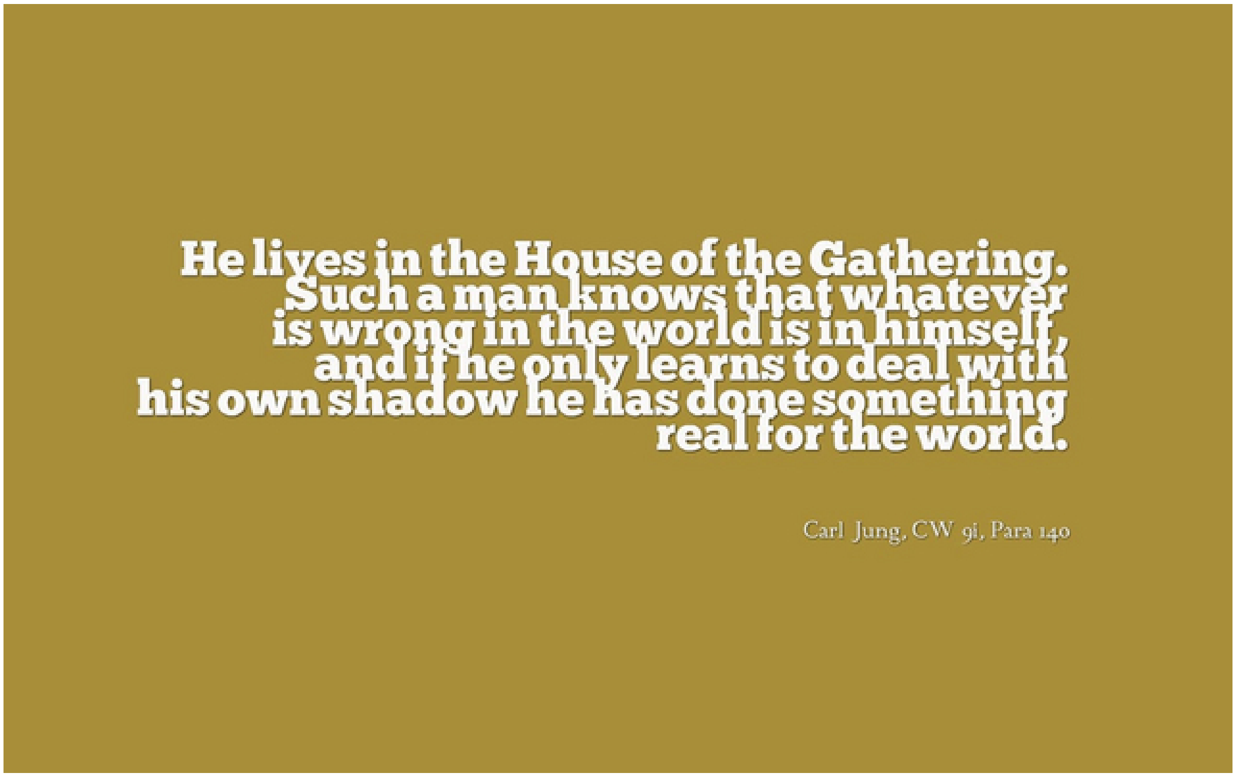


Taking it in its deepest sense, the shadow is the invisible saurian tail that man still drags behind him. Carefully amputated, it becomes the healing serpent of the mysteries.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 93

Taking it in its deepest sense, the shadow is the invisible saurian tail that man still drags behind him. Carefully amputated, it becomes the healing serpent of the mysteries. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 93

[14]



He lives in the House of the Gathering.
Such a man knows that whatever is wrong in the world is in himself, and if he only learns to deal with his own shadow he has done something real for the world.

Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 140

He lives in the "House of the Gathering." Such a man knows that whatever is wrong in the world is in himself, and if he only learns to deal with his own shadow he has done something real for the world. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 140

[15]

It [Shadow] is the world of water, where all life floats in suspension;
where the realm of the sympathetic system, the soul of everything living, begins; where I am indivisibly this and that; where I experience the other in myself and the other-than-myself experiences me.

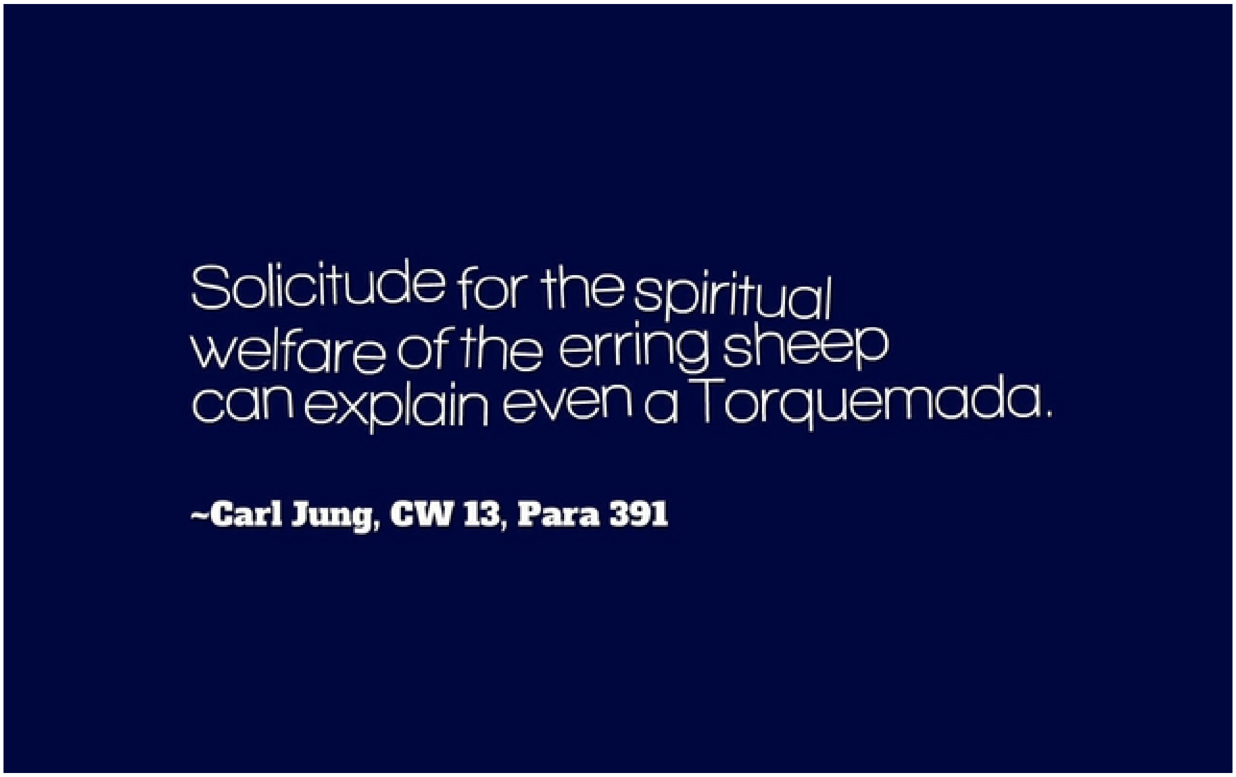
-Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 45

It [Shadow] is the world of water, where all life floats in suspension; where the realm of the sympathetic system, the soul of everything living, begins; where I am indivisibly this and that; where I experience the other in myself and the other-than-myself experiences me. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 45

[16]

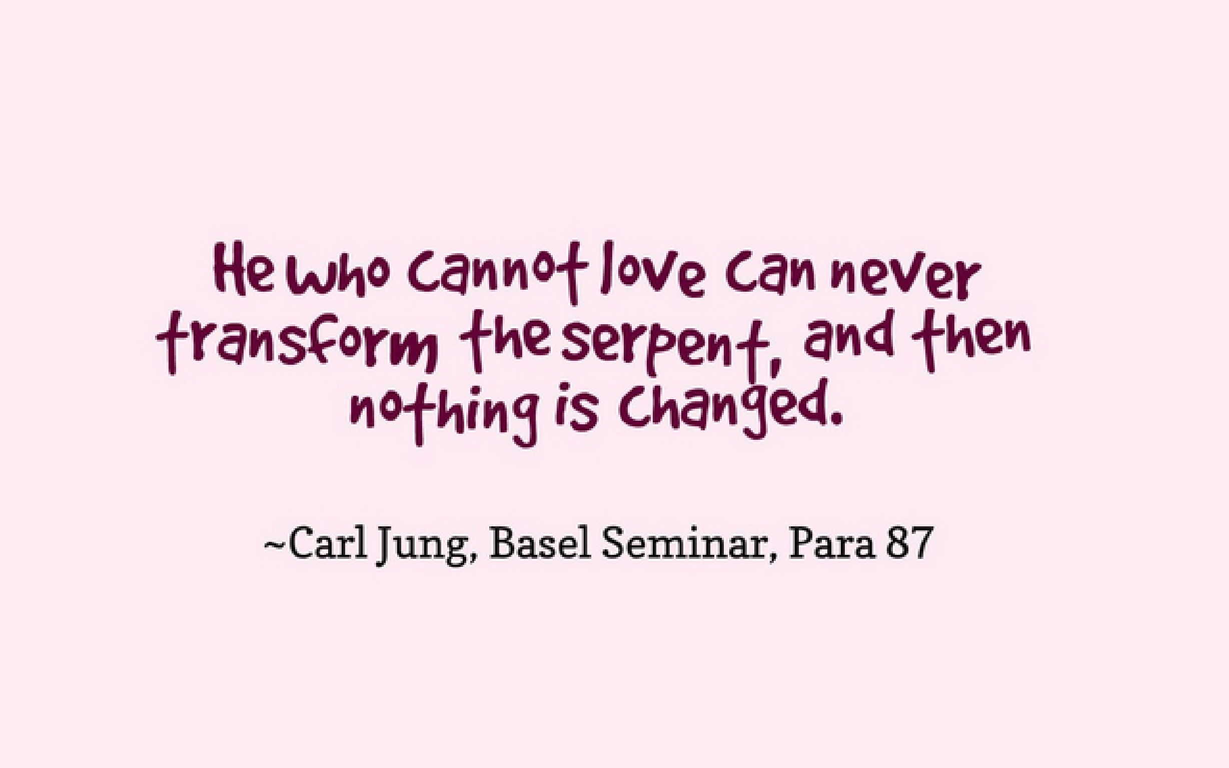


Solicitude for the spiritual welfare of the erring sheep can explain even a Torquemada.

~Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 391

Solicitude for the spiritual welfare of the erring sheep can explain even a Torquemada. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 391

[17]

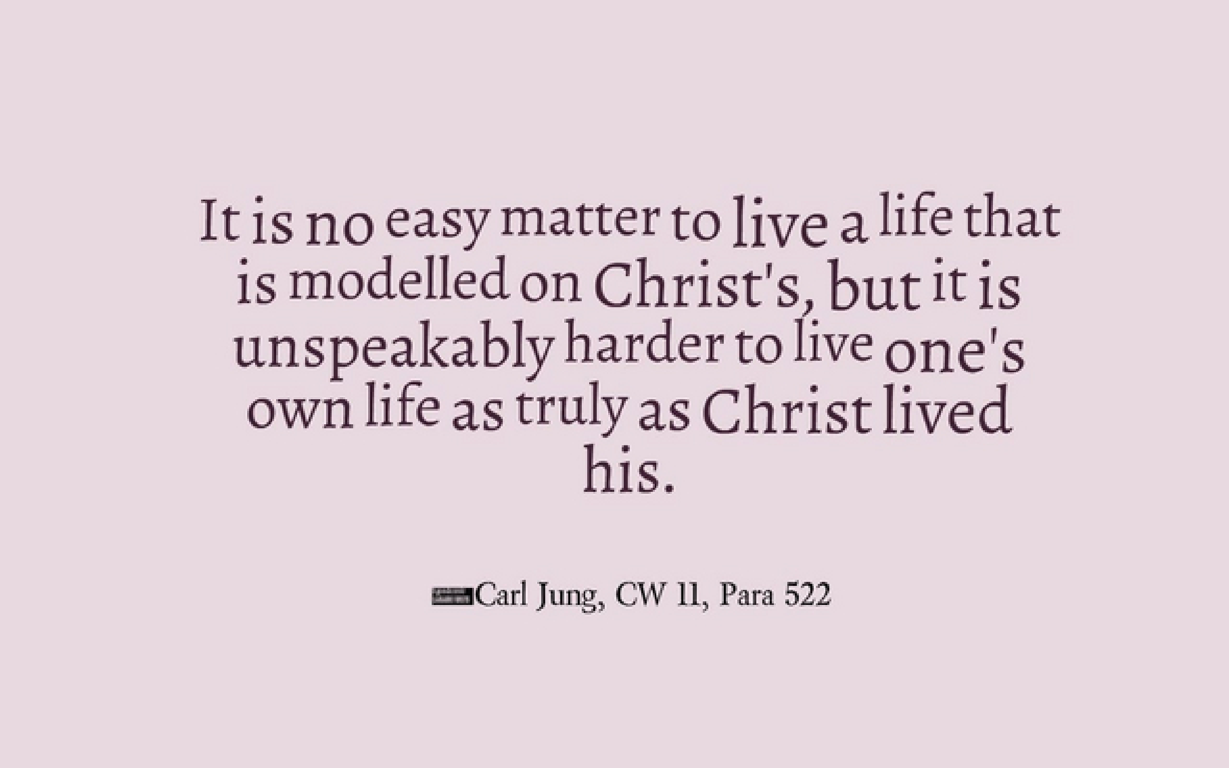


He who cannot love can never transform the serpent, and then nothing is changed.

~Carl Jung, Basel Seminar, Para 87

He who cannot love can never transform the serpent, and then nothing is changed. Carl Jung, Basel Seminar, Para 87

[18]



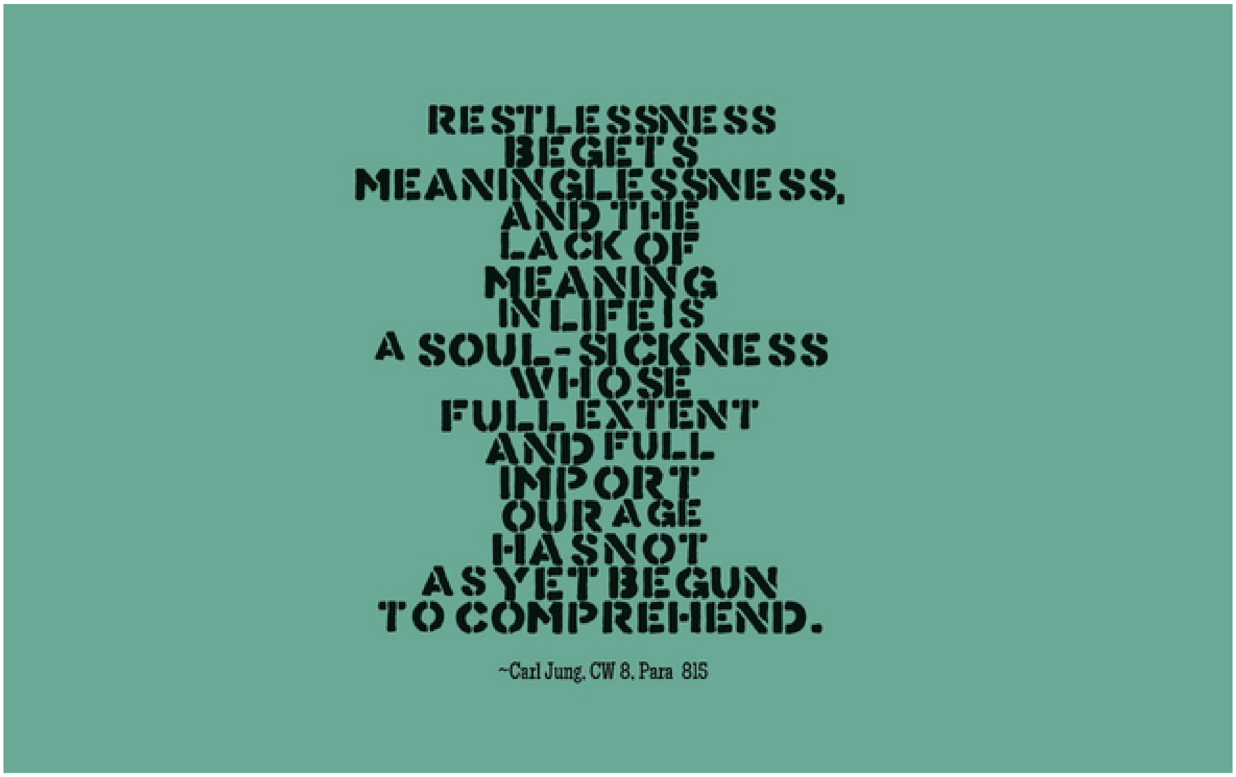
It is no easy matter to live a life that is modelled on Christ's, but it is unspeakably harder to live one's own life as truly as Christ lived his.

Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 522

It is no easy matter to live a life that is modelled on Christ’s, but it is unspeakably harder to live one’s own life as truly

as Christ lived his. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 522

[19]



RESTLESSNESS
BEGETS
MEANINGLESSNESS,
AND THE LACK OF MEANING IN LIFE IS A SOUL-SICKNESS WHOSE FULL EXTENT AND FULL IMPORT
OUR AGE HAS NOT AS YET BEGUN TO COMPREHEND.

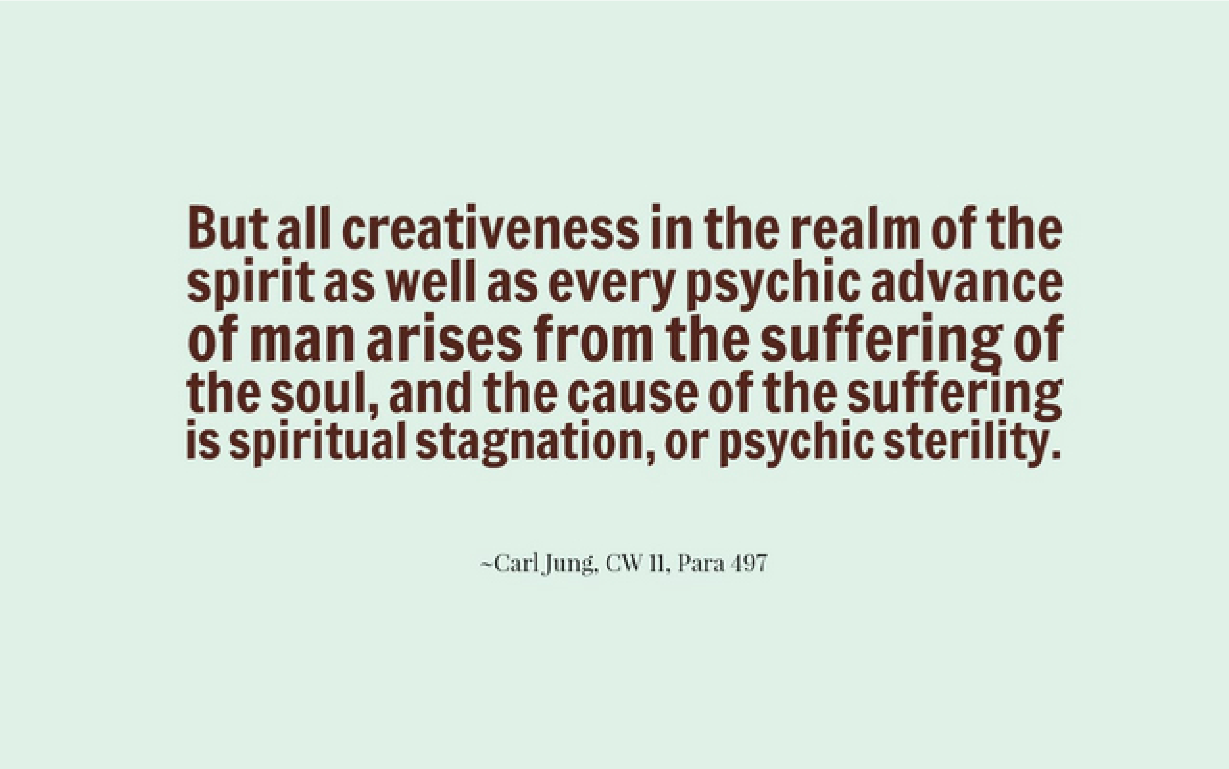
~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 815

Restlessness begets meaninglessness, and the lack of meaning in life is a soul-sickness whose full extent and full import our age has not as yet begun to comprehend. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 815

[20]

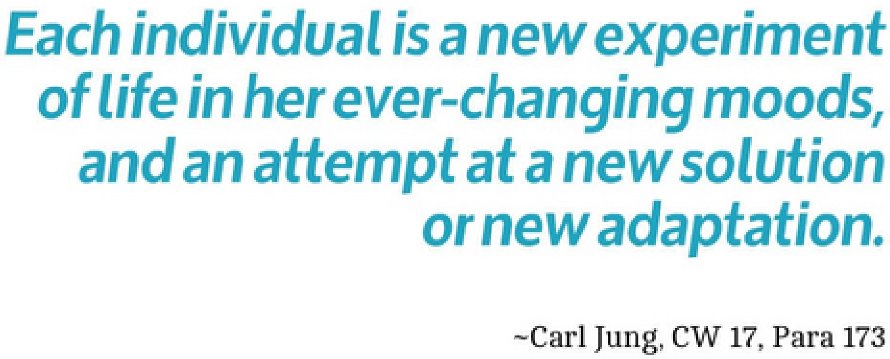


But all creativeness in the realm of the spirit as well as every psychic advance of man arises from the suffering of the soul, and the cause of the suffering is spiritual stagnation, or psychic sterility.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 497

But all creativeness in the realm of the spirit as well as every psychic advance of man arises from the suffering of the soul, and the cause of the suffering is spiritual stagnation, or psychic sterility. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 497

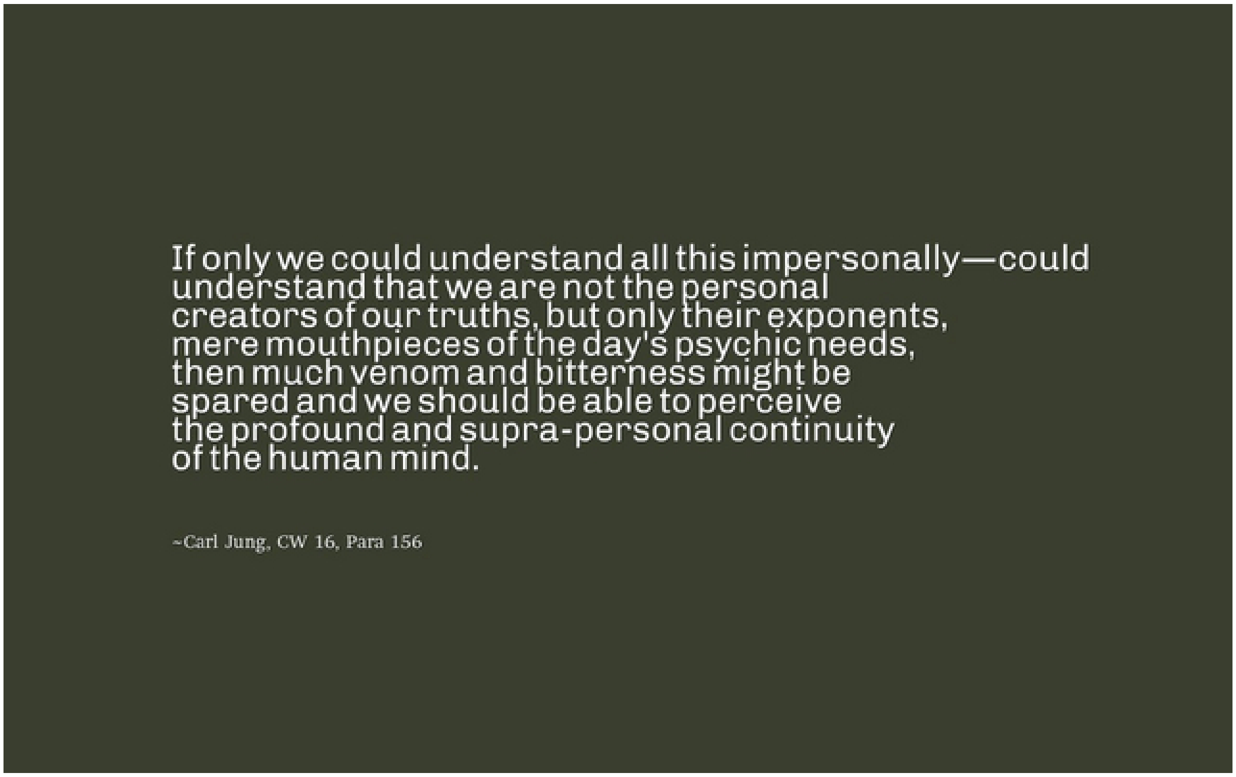
[21]



Each individual is a new experiment of life in her ever-changing moods, and an attempt at a new solution or new adaptation.

~Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 173

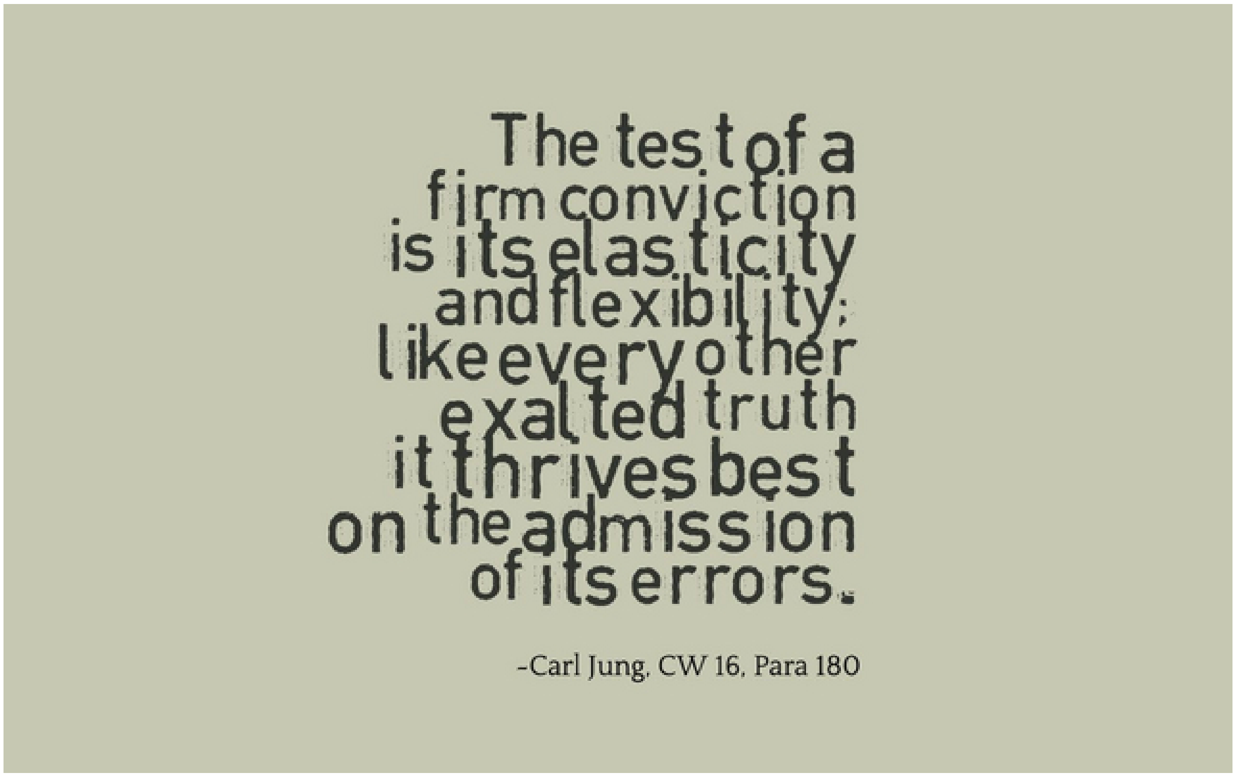
Each individual is a new experiment of life in her ever-changing moods, and an attempt at a new solution or new adaptation. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 173



If only we could understand all this impersonally—could understand that we are not the personal creators of our truths, but only their exponents, mere mouthpieces of the day's psychic needs, then much venom and bitterness might be spared and we should be able to perceive the profound and supra-personal continuity of the human mind.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 156

If only we could understand all this impersonally—could understand that we are not the personal creators of our truths, but only their exponents, mere mouthpieces of the day's psychic needs, then much venom and bitterness might be spared and we should be able to perceive the profound and supra-personal continuity of the human mind. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 156

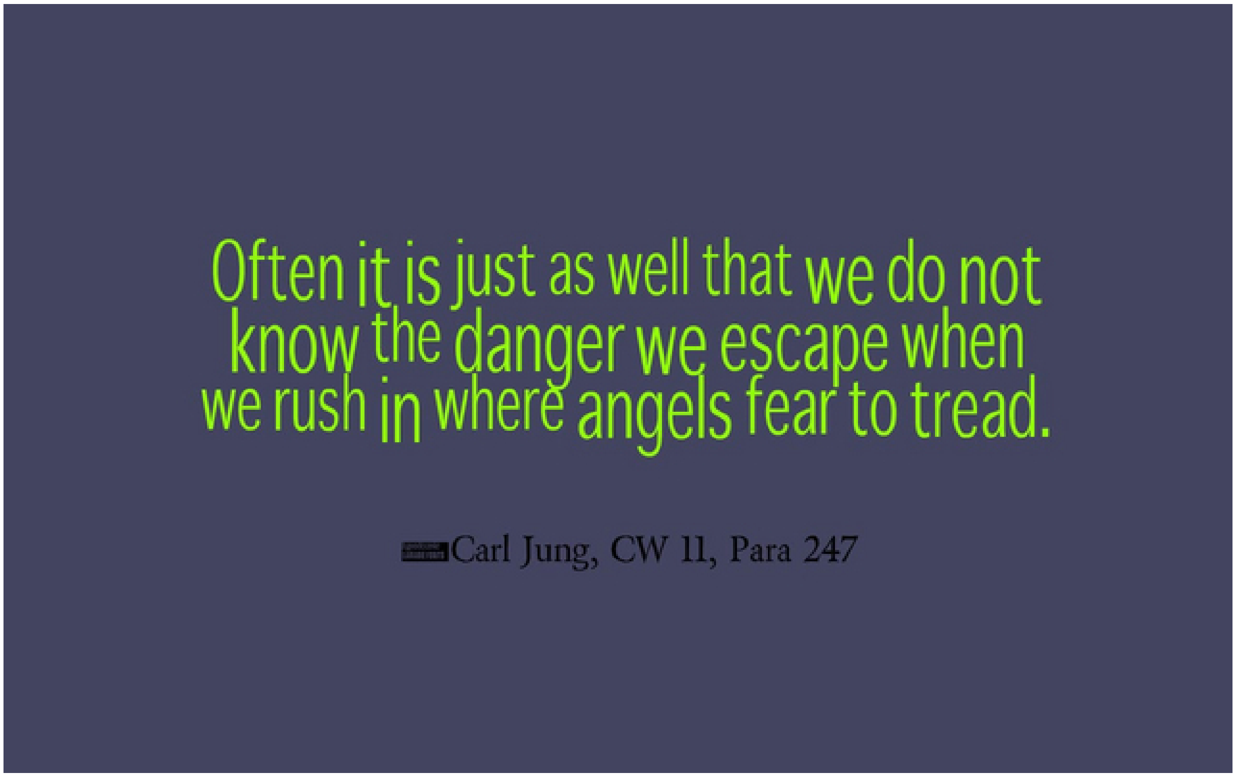


The test of a firm conviction is its elasticity and flexibility; like every other exalted truth it thrives best on the admission of its errors.

-Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 180

The test of a firm conviction is its elasticity and flexibility; like every other exalted truth it thrives best on the admission of its errors. Carl Jung, 16, Para 180

[24]



Often it is just as well that we do not know the danger we escape when we rush in where angels fear to tread.

Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 247

Often it is just as well that we do not know the danger we escape when we rush in where angels fear to tread. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 247

The existence of ego consciousness has meaning only if it is free and autonomous.

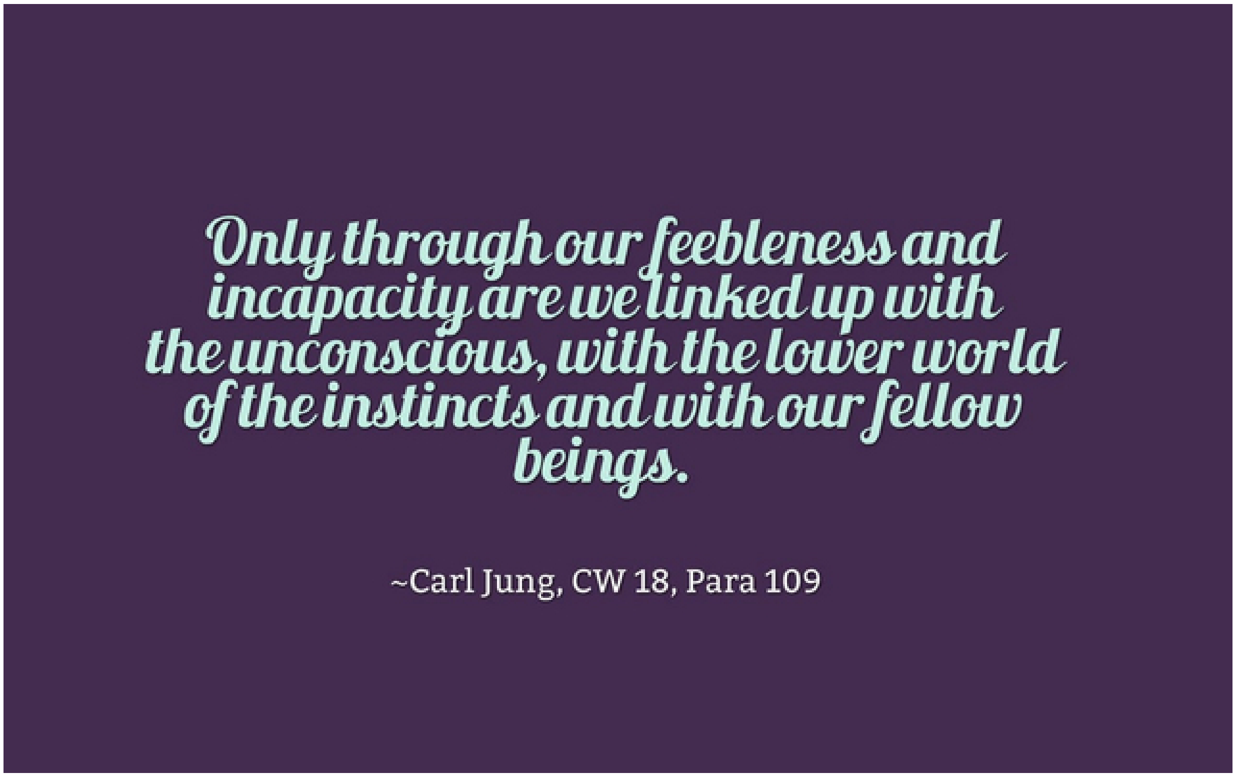
~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 391

The existence of ego consciousness has meaning only if it is free and autonomous. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 391



Only through our feebleness and incapacity are we linked up with the unconscious, with the lower world of the instincts and with our fellow beings.

~Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 109

Only through our feebleness and incapacity are we linked up with the unconscious, with the lower world of the instincts and with our fellow beings. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 109

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/08b09-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/12b17-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5383f-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/d7d39-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/70d1b-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5a17a-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/9b712-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/15227-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/8b880-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b1278-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/94ca3-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/b1460-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5ca40-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/de521-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/985f4-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/6a845-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/7b0ad-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e2bdf-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e8f45-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/32caa-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/87c96-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/be021-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/e76b0-www.jpg`

24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/db7cb-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/5ecc8-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/4ad8e-zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung: You have paid a salutary tribute to the earth with your illness. (2019-03-19 03:30)

[1]

To Count Hermann Keyserling

Dear Count, 2 January 1928

Your return to yourself, enforced by illness, is on the right track and is something I have wished and expected for you.

You identify with the eternally creative, restless and ruthless god in yourself, therefore you see through everything personal-a tremendous fate which it would, be ridiculous either to praise or to censure!

I was compelled to respect Neitzsche’s amor fati until I had my fill of it, then I built a little house, way out in the country near the mountains and carved an inscription on the wall: Philemonis sacrum-F austi poenitentia, and "disidentified" myself with the god.

I have never regretted this doubtless very unholy act.

By temperament I despise the "personal," any kind of "togetherness," but it is so strong a force, this whole crushing unspiritual 1eight of the earth, that I fear it.

It can rouse my body to revolt against the spirit, so that before reaching the zenith of my flight I fall back to earth.

That is the danger you too must reckon with.

It is also that fear that prevents our friend X. from flying.

He can be nothing else but intellectual.

You have paid a salutary tribute to the earth with your illness.

Let’s hope your gods will be equally gracious to you next time!

With best wishes for the New Year,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 49-50

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/55a03-22bkeyserling.jpg`

Carl Jung on Western and Eastern Meditations (2019-03-19 04:33)

[1]

Lecture III 17th November, 1939

We are speaking of the text by an old Spanish Jesuit, a "praeparatio".

I should like to remind you, before we continue with it, what is intended by such a preparation.

Its aim is to insure having the right attitude towards the real meditation.

The subject of this is prepared and a substantial image made of it.

This procedure is the same as that which we saw in the eastern texts, where Buddhas, Bodhisattvas, etc. had to be imagined substantially and in detail, but the objects of meditation are extremely different.

With the invocation, the petitio, as we saw, the difference increases.

The text continues:

"After this [the invocation), one must take one of the prepared points and must think it over, weighing everything which is connected with it. This weighing should be directed towards inducing the will to establish the right frame of mind, which is the goal of the meditation. It is this, and not the consideration and subtle analysis, which is the essence and fruit of the meditation. A conversation [colloquium) follows the meditation - such a conversation can also take place at the beginning or in the middle or in fact as often as one feels moved to hold one. This conversation is simply a confidential talk with the Lord Christ, the Mother of God, the Holy Trinity, or with some other divine figure. During it one should think of oneself in different roles, such as the creature with the Creator, the servant with his master, the son with the father, the pupil with the master, the patient with the doctor, the friend with the friend or the beggar with the rich man. Usually a prayer is attached at the end of this conversation.

If you have spoken with the Blessed Virgin Mary say an 'Ave Maria', if to the Holy Trinity a 'Pater Noster' and if to the Lord Christ an 'Anima Christi'."

The reason for all these roles is that every side of the contemplator's attitude to the divine figure should be, so to speak, illuminated.

Naturally he speaks quite differently as friend to friend, than as beggar to rich man.

A greater psychological reality is thus given to the conversation and more aspects are revealed.

But the Divinity is simply "talked to", no one answers.

We find the same idea in antiquity, when the images of the gods were also "talked to", though in these conversations there are answers recorded as well: the gods would nod or give some visible or audible token.

But whether they answer or not is really unimportant, the vital thing is that a connection should be established with the God.

We never find an answer in the exercises, or even an indication that an answer could occur, except the indirect effect of Grace.

This is regarded as the fruit of the exercises and could be interpreted as the answer of the Divinity.

An "oratio vocalis" follows the conversation, and if the special relation is to the Mother of God an Ave Maria is recommended, and if to the Holy Trinity then a Pater Noster, and if to Christ an Anima Christi.

The last is the most usual and is an old Church prayer which is an object for most careful meditation in the exercises.

I will first read you the prayer itself:

(Soul of Christ, sanctify me.
Body of Christ, save me.
Blood of Christ, inebriate me.
Water from the side of Christ, wash me.
Passion of Christ, strengthen me .
0 good Jesu, hear me:
Within Thy wounds , hide me :
Never permit me to be separated from Thee :
From the wicked enemy defend me :
At the hour of my death call me,
And bid me come unto Thee,
That with Thy Saints I may praise Thee
For ever and ever. Amen.)

We will examine this prayer in detail, as we did the eastern texts, and we will endeavour to have an equally naive attitude towards its contents, so familiar yet so totally unknown.

We will take a book of ERICH PRZYWARA: Deus semper maior, Theologie der Exerzitien, (Theology of the Exercises .) Vol. I, for this purpose.

The book begins with the pray er Anima Christi and Przywara says that it stands at the "entrance" of the exercises.

The Christian should be subjectively aware that he is permeated by the soul of Christ and soaked with the blood of Christ.

The anima or soul of Christ is a curious formulation.

Is it separated from the figure of Christ?

It certainly seems so, but as the dogma claims him as absolute God, as a totality, it seems very curious to separate his soul from this totality.

Yet it is a fact that this prayer speaks of the soul and body of Christ as two different things.

Przywara says that the vital content of the whole exercises is contained in becoming personally conscious that: "Christ lives in me".

He also says that "the chief methods of the exercises go from consideration (consideracion) to meditation, (meditacion) to contemplation (contemplacion) and to experiencing through the senses "(traer los sentidos).

This last is specifically Ignatian, the senses must cooperate in order for the permeation by Christ to take place. Przywara says: "Christ lives in me", but he might just as well say: "I live in Christ" , for he formulates it as "seeing with Christ's eyes, feeling with His heart and breathing with Him."

That means going over into Christ's form, and is a classical difference between East and West.

Przywara actually calls it "das Herausspringen a us sich selbst" .

You spring out of yourself into the form of Christ in the Ignatian exercises, you leave yourself behind or dissolve yourself into the bodily and spiritual presence of our Lord.

Exactly the opposite of the East, where it is you yourself who become Buddha.

I will read you further passages from e astern texts, when we have finished considering the "Anima Christi", so that you can see the enormous difference in attitude.

Przywara's detailed comments on this prayer are exceedingly interesting from a psychological point of view.

He says:

1. "Anima Christi, sanctifica me. - Soul is form-unity of the whole life. Soul of Christ is form-unity of everything which is Christ. The life of Christ is formed out of the soul of Christ and so is my life, because it is the life of Christ, in me."

By meditating on the soul of Christ you veritably become Christ and no longer live yourself but Christ.

We find the idea of the soul as the form giving principle already in the Middle Ages, it is the soul which forms the body and the outer life.

So in meditating on the Anima Christi you are meditating on Christ's form.

The same ide a is to be found in the East.

When I was in India I went several times to a small chapel of. the Rama Krishna order.

There was no altar according to our idea, but a sort of throne consisting of silk cushions and a photograph of Rama Krishna reposing on the cushions.

This was in very bad taste but these people were totally unaware of that fact.

It was part of a daily meditation, not to worship Rama Krishna, but to enter his form, as the monks of the order explained to me.

It was interesting that the celebrating monk had to prepare himself by meditation for days beforehand in order to be able to enter the soul of Rama Krishna and conduct the service.

The service was Hindu, and used old Vedic forms: earth, air, fire and water were all sacrificed and Vedic hymns were sung.

The priests sat round in the classical Lotus position and prostrated themselves during certain phases of the sacrifices.

Rama Krishna is not worshipped, his photograph is there to remind the worshippers of his form.

This is, therefore, totally different to the worship of Christ but the basic idea of soul as form is common to both.

After Przywara has established that the soul of Christ should so permeate the contemplator as to change his life into the life of Christ, he goes over to the second part of the first line: "sanctifica me".

I must read you his words in order to convey the peculiar "Ergriffenheit" of his style.

"Therefore, sanctifica me, set me apart or reject me as the Temple and utensils of the Temple, these are set apart or rejected so that they either serve the Temple alone or must be destroyed; and in service of the Temple they serve the altar, that is they serve in the sacrifice. 'Heilig' (sacred) means 'with God' but in such a way that it also means 'verflucht' (damned) : on the narrow line between blessing and curse, - and in this thoroughly surrendered. Christ lives in me - or I live not. Christ everything - or the curse in nothingness."

This refers to the passage about Christ "being made a curse for us", namely a burden.

1. "Corpus Christi sal a me. - Life of Christ in me is the life of God who became flesh, and whose body is the visible Church. It is not a matter of invisible divinity, nor of concealed inwardness, nor of lifeless spirituality, nor of pure soul, but of God who became man. Inwardness that manifests itself in works, spirituality that has its expression in flesh, soul that is only visible as the body. Christ in the visible Church, Christ in visible work, Christ in the visible world. For he should be All, All in me and All through me out into the world."

This is the sequence I have already spoken of in connection with the General Rules: realizations leading to emotions which in their turn are used for ethical resolves about conduct, which lead, so to speak, to the visible fruit of the meditation.

Przywara continues:

"Salva me, make me whole. It is just the body which makes whole: Christus, in that He is visible, man, flesh - through the humility of this impotence. Make me whole: healed wounds of sin, healed blood of sacrifice. Sin is healed in sacrifice: sanctifica me. But sacrifice is not the end. For sacrifice is the most open wound. Sin is healed in the sacrifice of the body of Christ. Body of Christ is being whole:
salua me. So it is the whole totality, spirit and flesh, God and creature, one in the 'head and body of one Christ', in every one of his members, in every life and action of these members."

So the body of Christ is thought of here as the origin of human totality, a reason ; why the one who is meditating should leave himself in order to go over into the form of Christ where alone he can achieve wholeness.

For Christ is our symbol for human totality.

You see how deep this meditation goes, not in every case, of course, but in such a case as Przywara who is an unusually intelligent man.

The concrete quality in this meditation is very remarkable.

There is no taking refuge in the spirit, no denial of the body, but a strong tendency to make everything visible and substantial and to emphasize the body.

This is the exact opposite of the eastern point of view, where everything concrete is regarded as Maya and dissolved as illusion, though there are materialistic systems also in the East for which this statement is not valid.

But in general the body is regarded there as substantial illusion.

You realise its reality and go on to recognise it as illusion and then the Yogin has reached another condition.

But in this western example there is a strong tendency to convert the inner experience at once into outer reality.

This is sharply opposed to the earlier meditations of the Devoti and is specifically Ignatian.

He concretised everything and embodied it in the visible body of the Church.

The emphasis he lays upon this, awakes the suspicion that matter is no a priori reality for western man, but has to be preached to him in order that he may realise its existence.

He still needs this realisation.

We come now to the next line in the prayer which is just as peculiar: "Blood of Christ, inebriate me”.

What would you think if you came on this sentence in an Indian text?

It would remind you of some bloody orgy, perhaps Dionysian, certainly primitive.

But we are so used to such sentences that they no longer strike us as unusual.

The blood of Christ is an abstract pale concept to us.

But supposing we had never heard it before?

Then we should understand the Indian who went to England and returned saying:

"The missionaries here give us no idea of the English religion. They worship animals, their Churches are full of lambs, eagles, oxen and people with wings."

We do not even see these any longer, for they are a matter of course.

But a naive stranger sees them, and hears our texts also.

And when he hears "Blood of Christ, make me drunk " for the first time it sounds dangerous, and he wonders what on earth we mean by it.

It arouses memories of ancient times and bloody sacrifices, and then he sees the image of a man nailed to a cross, represented in realistic detail.

By which time he is thoroughly shocked and asks himself what sort of people we really are to have such symbols.

There is no "Blut und Boden" (blood and earth) theory in the East, but that theory has a Catholic, nay a Christian, origin.

Such a sensual point of view originates in us.

Go to any picture gallery and look at the subjects of the medieval pictures and you will see it at once.

One man is being roasted, another is stuck all over with arrows, heads are being carried about on platters, and such like horrors on every side.

So we say: "Blood of Christ, inebriate me", and think of the blood of Christ in the sacrament, the wine.

It has been toned down, wine is less dangerous than actual blood.

But it is still an intoxication.

Wine has come to mean spirit in the Christian Church so it has lost its dangerous appearance.

Przywara says however: "Sanguis Christi, ine bria me. - Because Christ is Himself from inside (anima Christi), because Christ is Himself in his whole form (corpus Christi), therefore He now also streams through me, warms me throughout and circulates in my blood : not just the form of Christ as my form, but gushing in the streams of Christ, flowing in the circulation of the blood of Christ, restless in Christ's restlessness, transformed in the transformation of Christ - in His body which is the Church.

Therefore: inebria me. Narrow and timid 'reasonableness' must become the intoxication of drunkenness, so should my life be torn away.

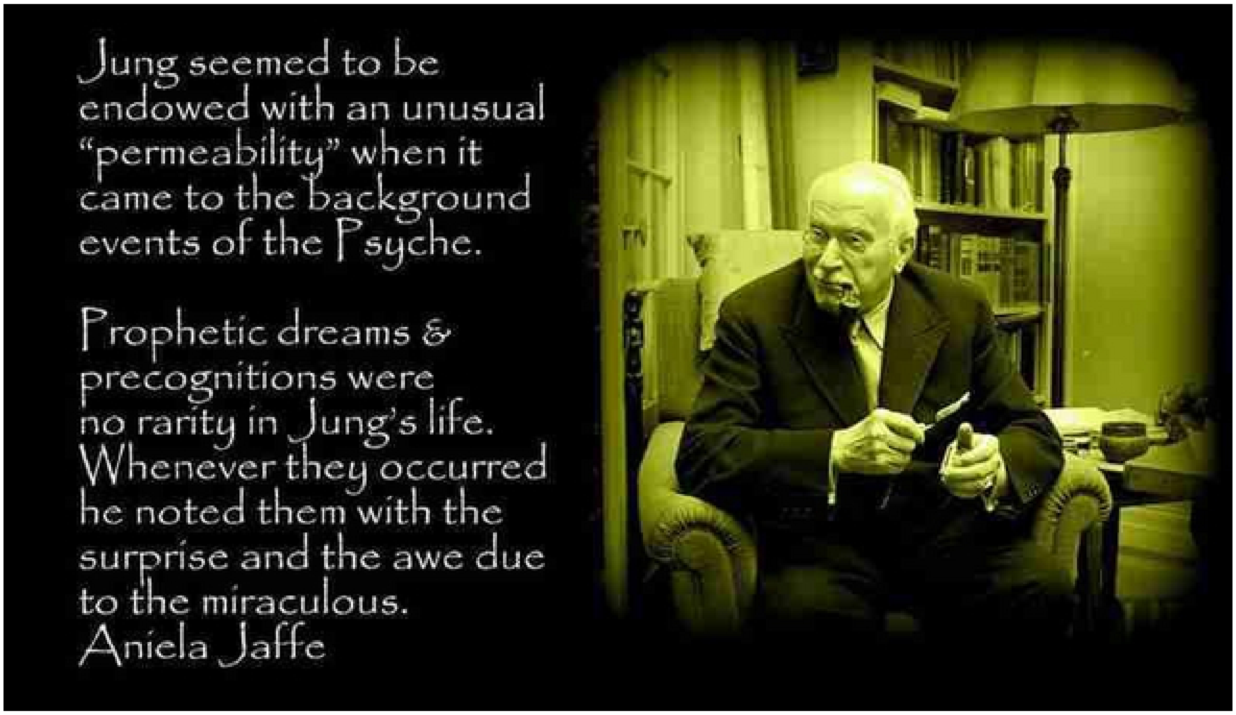
Blood of Christ which glows, Blood of Christ which pulses - in the love which is beyond all bounds, in its height, width and depth. Make me drunk!"

As you see Przywara describes it as an act of violence. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, Pages 184-188.
188

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/81570-1.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/844de-2.jpg`

Prophetic dreams and precognitions were no rarity in Jung's life. ~Aneila Jaffe (2019-03-19 04:35)

[1]



Jung seemed to be endowed with an unusual "permeability" when it came to the background events of the Psyche.
Prophetic dreams & precognitions were no rarity in Jung's life. Whenever they occurred he noted them with the surprise and the awe due to the miraculous.
Aniela Jaffe

To Carl Gustave Jung parapsychology was more than a subject for scientific research, experiment, and theory.

His life was rich in personal experiences of spontaneous, acausal, or-to use the common term-paranormal phenomena.

Jung seemed to be endowed with an unusual "permeability" when it came to the background events of the psyche.

Prophetic dreams and precognitions were no rarity in Jung's life.

But that alone does not explain the scope of his experiences; his sensitivity to manifestations of the unconscious was supplemented by constant observation of nature, of objects and of people.

Given his close attention to the worlds of the psyche and of external reality, it is not surprising that he perceived meaningful connections between the two which would have been overlooked by a less sharp observer.

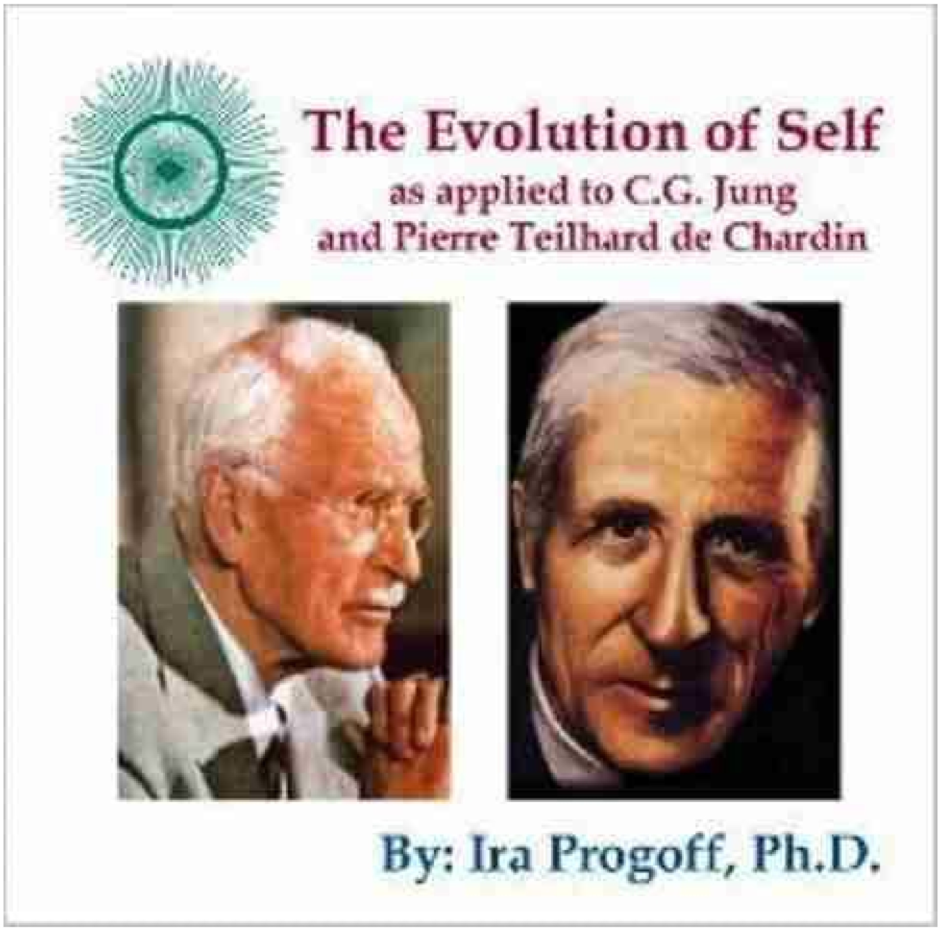
Prophetic dreams and precognitions were no rarity in Jung's life, though far from habitual.

Whenever they occurred he noted them with surprise-one is tempted to say, with awe due to the miraculous. Aniela Jaffe, The Life and Work of C.G. Jung, Page 1

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/f9744-12bprophetic.jpg`

Dr Jung: Comments on Ira Progoff's Doctoral Thesis. (2019-03-19 04:39)

[1]



Introduction: Toward a Ph.D. degree at the New School for Social Research, New York, in early 1952, Ira Progoff submitted as his thesis a presentation of Jung's psychological theories and an interpretation of their significance for the social sciences.

This was, most probably, the first serious notice of Jung's work by a social scientist.

Progoff sent his manuscript to the Bollingen Foundation, which was about to begin the publication of the Collected Works of Jung, and it came to the attention of one of the Foundation's advisers, Cary F. Baynes, an old friend of Jung's.

Recognizing the significance of Progoff's monograph, she sent the thesis to Jung to read and asked her daughter, Ximena de Angulo, who lived in Switzerland and had known Jung since her childhood, to facilitate matters by taking down Jung's comments.

Miss de Angulo sent Progoff her report of the interview—as the discussion turned out to be—and he took account of Jung's remarks in revising his thesis for eventual publication as a book: Jung's Psychology and Its Social Meaning (1953)

Progoff, who had been a welfare worker while studying at the New School, was enabled through a Bollingen Fellowship to go to Switzerland in 1953.

He met Jung for discussions and attended the Eranos Conference in August, where he came under the influence of the Zen scholar, D. T. Suzuki.

Out of his experiences he wrote The Death and Rebirth of Psychology (1956).

In 1966, Progoff founded Dialogue House, of which he is director, and which fosters a program for personal development through the "intensive journal" process.

A copy of Ximena de Angulo's interview was placed in the archives of Bollingen Foundation, where it was found nearly twenty years later and made available for publication in the present collection, with the permission of Miss de Angulo and Dr. Progoff. It is published in full, except for the deletion of page numbers in the thesis, as these have no systematic relationship to the revised book.

Ira Progoff: The interview took place in the summerhouse at the bottom of the garden.

We each had a copy of the thesis, and I had brought along pad and pencil so as to be able to take notes.

As a starting question I asked Jung if he thought the thesis merited expansion into a book, and he said without a moment's hesitation: "Oh, yes, most definitely."

He went on to say that as it stood, its most obvious shortcoming was a certain onesidedness, that it told "only half the story."

"You see, I am not a philosopher. I am not a sociologist—I am a medical man. I deal with facts. This cannot be emphasized too much,"
This, in a way, turned out to be the leitmotiv of the interview; he recurred to it again and again.

I received the impression that what bothered him about the work was that it was phrased as though he had had social theories in mind from the beginning.

I pointed out that in a thesis designed to prove the relevance of his ideas to the social sciences that had perhaps been unavoidable.

He said yes, yes, that was probably so; but it was clear that he attaches the greatest possible importance to accentuating his standpoint as a medical man, as an empiricist who discovers certain facts and erects hypotheses to explain them, but who is not responsible for the implications, philosophical or otherwise, that may be drawn from his statements.

He said that he was all the time being accused of making philosophical statements, because he made use of philosophical concepts, and because he didn't shy away from making his assumptions clear, but that his statements were not intended as philosophy, they were intended as descriptions of fact.

"I am not particularly well read in philosophy. I simply have had to make use of philosophical concepts to formulate my findings."

He went on to say that he thought the derivation of these philosophical concepts should be clarified.

"My conceptions are much more like Carus than like Freud."

Kant, Schopenhauer, C. G. Cams, and Eduard von Hartmann "had provided him with the tools of thought."

He had read their works when young, perhaps as early as his sixteenth year, at any rate well before the beginning of his medical studies, and they had influenced his thinking decisively.

"To Schopenhauer I owe the dynamic view of the psyche; the ‘Will’ is the libido that is back of everything."

It is a force outside consciousness, something that is not the ego.

Kant had shown that the world is tied to the "I," to the thinking subject, but here was this non-ego, this "Will" that was outside the Kantian critique.

When Jung came to study the dissociation of consciousness observable in schizophrenia, where people talk under the influence of something other than the ego, this non-ego struck him as the same thing as Schopenhauer’s "Will."

"The great question was, is there a non-ego, is there something that can pull me out of the isolation-in-the-ego of the Kantian world picture?"

It is correct that Burckhardt and Nietzsche influenced him; however, they were indirect, "side influences," Jung said.

They were part of the atmosphere of Basel at the time he was growing up, though Nietzsche had already left the city then; "Burckhardt was our daily bread. I used to see him every day, going to his work."

Everybody read him. Nietzsche was a great psychological critic.

"We were living at a time when there had been no wars within men’s memory, but here was a man who saw war coming, who wrote that the next century would be the most warlike of all. I felt that he was right."

But it was as a phenomenon that Nietzsche made the deepest impression on Jung.

He saw the non-ego at work in him; Nietzsche was in a fever, in a passion, a passion that "gripped" Jung.

He told how Nietzsche’s insights and visions had tremendous fascination to a person living at that time who thought about the contemporary situation.

"In his thirty-seventh year, Zarathustra happened to Nietzsche . . . ’cla ward die eins zu zwei, Zarathustra ging an mir vorbei.’ In 1888 he went mad. That was a tremendous event; it made a deep impression on me."

Bachofen also influenced him. "He influenced my understanding of the nature of symbols."

Jung thought that if the thesis were expanded, it might be a good idea to take his later writings more into con- sideration, especially Aion and Die Psychologie der CI bertragung.

These, he said, were the generalities.

Then he drew out a list, and we began going through the thesis point by point: "(it is not) that the unconscious is held in common. . . ."Jung: "That is leaning over backwards. It is collective, is held in cdmmon. 'Collective' may be objectionable in some ways, but it does convey the fact that we share unconscious contents, that there is participation mystique."

"...Jung's use of the term (unconscious) may partly be accounted for by the fact that he developed his thought while working under the influence of Sigmund Freud, and that he naturally adapted for his own system the terms with which he had been accustomed to working."

This is not true, Jung said. "I had these thoughts long before I came to Freud. Unconscious is an epistemologi- cal term deriving from von Hartmann. Freud was not much of a philosopher, he was strictly a medical man. I had read these philosophers long before I ever saw Freud. I came to Freud for facts. I read The Interpretation of Dreams, and I thought Oh, here is a man who is not just theorizing away, here is a man who has got facts. This was not Freud's first publication, but it was the first one I read, then I read the others. We met in 1906."

From the beginning, Jung said, he had occupied himself very much with zoology, with comparative zoology. Here he looked at me keenly to see if I took in the import of this statement.

When I responded, he went on with a gleam in his eye: "I was especially interested in palaeontology; you see, my life work in historical comparative psychology is like palaeontology. That is the study of the archetypes of the animals, and this is the study of the archetypes in the soul. The Eohippus is the archetype of the modern horse, the archetypes are like the fossil animals."

This led me to ask him what had first taken him into psychiatry.

"Oh," he said, "that was not until the very end of my medical studies. I had been acting as assistant to von Miller', the internist, who had received a call to Germany, and he wanted to take me along. In my last semester, I was preparing for my final exams, and I also had to know something about psychiatry, so I took up Krafft-Ebing's textbook on psychiatry. I read first the Introduction . . . and then it happened. Then it happened. I thought, this is it, this is the confluence of medicine and philosophy! This is what I have been looking for! They all thought I was crazy, they couldn't understand me at all, they thought I was giving up the chance of a fine career to enter a blind alley of medicine! You see, my professors all knew that in internal medicine they had facts to work with, something to build on, and they saw a great future for it, but psychiatry, that was sort of a strange no man's land tacked onto medicine, no one really knew anything. It was all up in the air, and it led nowhere."

I said that looking back now, his professors' reaction was really not surprising because, before his and Freud's work, psychiatry really didn't have any solid foundation and no place much to go.

"Well, yes, that is so," he assented.

"But I knew absolutely that this was the thing for me; it came over me with the most tremendous rush. You know, my heart beat so"—he spoke with great emphasis and looked at me intently—"I could hardly stand it; I was in a regular state!"

And even at this distance in time he managed, by his voice and the forceful way he gestured, to convey something to me of the intensity of this experience!

To me this was the high point of the interview—well, no, perhaps there was another one, which I'm coming to later—but at any rate it made the greatest possible impression on me to see how vividly he was able to reproduce this event before the mind’s eye; one could feel the sense of destiny, the nervous excitement that must have gripped him. ". . . term ’persona’ . . . derived from Etruscan, meaning mask."

Jung said the Latin word persona came from per sonare, to sound through, because masks had a sort of tube inside, from the actor’s mouth into the mouth of the mask, a built-in megaphone to amplify the sound so it would carry.

The mask came to be called persona after this megaphone. Not Etruscan.

"... the therapy of individuation ..." Jung: "Why therapy? It is not a therapy. Is it therapy when a cat becomes a cat? It is a natural process. Individuation is a natural process. It is what makes a tree turn into a tree; if it is interfered with, then it becomes sick and cannot function as a tree, but left to itself it develops into a tree. That is individuation."

I said I had always understood that individuation involved consciousness.

"Oh," he said, "that is an overvaluation of consciousness. Consciousness is a part of it, perhaps, yes, but that depends on how much consciousness there is naturally there. Consciousness can also block individuation by not allowing what is in the unconscious to develop."

He said it was therapy to restore the free flow from the unconscious, but the process itself is natural, and it will force itself meant to be an artist, but does something else, then pretty soon this development which is blocked will produce all kinds of symptoms, and in the end he will find himself painting whether he wants to or not, or else he will be very sick.

I asked him if it was what made a tree grow into a tree, if it was not the same thing as the Aristotelian entelechy, the inherent potentialities within the acorn which develop it into the oak.

He hesitated, and I had to say it again another way, but then he said it was the same thing. (I think his prejudice against Aristotle is so great that it made him unwilling to commit himself; probably because "Aristotelian" thinking within the Church produces such intellectual aridity and doctrinaire rigidity.)

I was still not quite sure I had understood aright, and I said it had always bothered me whether, say, a Hindu yogin or a primitive medicine man, a truly wise one, of course, could be considered to be individuated, since they were not "conscious" in our sense of what went on inside them.

"Well, I don’t know about that," he said. "They may not be conscious but they hear the inner voice, they act on it, they do not go against it—that is what counts. The primitive may not formulate it in the way you mean, but he has a pretty clear idea what goes on; I understand his language. When I go to him, we speak the same language."

"You know, it is possible to have ’consciousness’ in globo, so to speak, without its being differentiated."

It is on this that the Church bases the development of its dogma; otherwise we today would be in the position of knowing more than the apostles, since the dogma has been set down in the intervening centuries.

What has been defined and differentiated into dogma was present in globo in the inspiration of the apostles.

He repeated that individuation was a natural process; that "it can happen without consciousness."

These statements, and especially the decisiveness and assurance with which he made them, made a deep impression on me.

The part about how he came to specialize in psychiatry was the most exciting of the interview, because it is a moving thing to hear how a person received the "call," and because it opened up new perspectives for my own private research into his philosophical antecedents, the subject I had originally meant to write my thesis.

But this part held the most meaning for me.

The thought of this principium individuationis at work through all nature and through all mankind, East and West, has something awe inspiring and majestic about it.

I can’t explain exactly why it came as a revelation to me. I had previously had a slightly different perspective on it, with more of an accent on effort and less on nature and process.

That he knew so definitely what he was talking about gave me a direct intuition of the importance of "fact" and "experience" in psychology.

I could see that it was a fact that he was talking about, though it might escape definition, just as a tree is a fact.

A tree is not a bad analogy, because we do not understand how a tree functions either, how it raises up to its crown the huge volume of water that circulates in its system, for example, yet the tree is an indisputable fact, a natural process.

. . meaning of terms ‘introvert,’ ‘extravert’ depends on context of Jung’s theory of types, can only be grasped in terms of his total system . .." Jung’s comment here was that this was misleading; his terms are not deduced, they arise from the facts.

He feels that whatever application is made of his ideas, in fairness to him it should always be phrased so that this fact of cardinal importance is clear.

For the same reason he objects strenuously to the word "system"; he says he has no system, he deals with facts and attempts to construct hypotheses to cover them.

"System" sounds closed, dogmatic, rigid.

He wants the experimental, empirical, hypothetical nature of his work emphasized. As to the spelling of extravert, he says extrovert is bad Latin and should not be used. He also prefers archetype.

Paragraph on incest. Jung suggests looking up Die Psychologie der Ubertragung for a clearer view of the meaning of incest.

Paragraph as it stands is insufficient. (Immediately following the preceding sentence is a notation which is clear enough in itself, but which doesn’t seem to me now to have much connection with the incest paragraph.

However, I shall set it down here.)

"The archetype is the form of instinct, it is how the instinct appears to us; cf. Der Geist der Psychologie,’ Eranos Jahrbuch 1946."

Jung went on to say that an example of what he meant was the story of King Albrecht and Johannes, later known as Johannes Parricida.

The king and his suite were riding from Zurich to Basel.

Johannes and some companions wished to murder the king, but they couldn’t seem to make up their minds to do the deed.

Johannes kept hesitating.

When they came to the ford over the Limmat, at Baden, then he did it, he murdered the king.

"That is the archetype; you see, the ford is the natural ambush, the place where the hero slays the dragon. Then suddenly Johannes found it in him to do the deed; the archetype was constellated."

". . . Jung considers the libido intensity of the anima to be so great that he refers to it as ’maim,’ that is, as having a miraculous quality." (Ref. to Two Essays.)°

Jung says he never could have said "miraculous" but ausserordentlich wirksam, i.e., effective, or even numinous. But not miraculous.". . . Jung’s concept of individuation . . . opens the possibility of new conceptions of the nature of Man."

Jung said to put "of the nature of the psyche. . as Jung uses the term ’consciousness,’ it signifies a part, a small part of consciousness in general."

Jung said this is unclear, should be a "part of the cognitive" or something like that. Consciousness simply is consciousness, not part of it.
"The representation collective refers to the condition in which there is a failure to distinguish between the individual and the group as a whole."

According to Jung, the above is participation mystique.

A representation collective is a generally held idea, like "democracy is the best form of government," which everyone accepts without questioning; a kind of basic premise which is simply assumed to be true, which nobody dreams of investigating.

All sorts of cultural and political slogans would come under this heading.

He went on to say that he had known Levy-Bruhl personally, that he had been Jung’s house guest in Kiisnacht.

Levy-Bruhl had had many good ideas, but contemporary sociologists and anthropologists had completely failed to understand him, had misunderstood his idea that primitives think a-logically, and especially the conception of participation mystique.

These attacks had rattled him so much that later he took a lot back, and in later editions dropped the "mystique" out of the term, but Jung has stuck to the formulation of the first edition because he thinks it accurately describes the facts.

In this connection, Jung told of having gone to hear a lecturer who attacked the concept of participation mystique, and who told an anecdote to illustrate the fact that natives distinguish perfectly between themselves and others, and between persona and objects.

While the railroad from Mombasa to Nairobi was being built, a great deal of Native labor had to be employed, and the white engineers had the greatest trouble in getting them to work without constant supervision.

As soon as the engineer’s back was turned, they dropped their work. One man thought he would fix that.

He had a glass eye, and when he had to leave, he called the Natives together and said: "I am going, but I am leaving my eye to watch you," and he took the eye out and placed it on the table.

"You keep working, because this eye will see you if you stop."

When he returned he found to his consternation that nobody had worked. "We put a hat over your eye so it couldn’t see us loafing," the Natives told him.
Far from disproving Levy-Bruhl’s conception, as the lecturer thought, this anecdote backs it up: so little were the Natives able to separate the glass eye from its wearer that they went to the trouble to put a hat over it to prevent it from "seeing."

When Jung afterward wrote a polite letter to the speaker pointing out this fact, he received an irate reply, and the lecturer became his life-long enemy!

". . . Jung’s failure to be able to give an absolute definition of consciousness . • ." Jung commented: "How can consciousness explain itself ?"
"The ’collective representations’ by which society contains the individual, etc . . ." Again, it should be "participation mystique."
Jung reworded the sentence to read as follows:

"The participation mystique by which society contains the individual may be understood as a statement of the fact that individuals are still undifferentiated from each other, that is to say, they have not yet been self-consciously broken up into individual personalities."

"On this ’pre-conscious’ level, the individual contains him read: "On this ’pre-conscious’ level the individual is unconscious of himself."

He said "within his own archetype" was misleadingly worded, that a clear distinction must be made between the archetype and archetypal images, which is how the archetype appears to us.

"The archetypes exist in the unconscious as undifferentiated symbols . . ."

Jung suggests rereading "Der Geist der Psychologie" (Eranos 1946): the archetypes are psychoeides, are noumena (not numina!).

Only the image is empirical, he said.

". . the individual in society may be understood as a piece of the archetype, a piece that has been differentiated out of the collective representation."

Jung: ". . . differentiated out of participation mystique, i.e., out of the collective unconscious."

He said, "The archetype of the individual is the Self. The Self is all embracing. God is a circle whose center is everywhere and whose circumference is nowhere."'

. symbol . . . in other areas it appears with metaphysical or ontological overtones where it leads into the philosophical side of his system."

Jung said if one studied the definitions of "symbol" in the Types' one saw that it was not metaphysical.

(I think what he is getting at here and in other places is that he does not aim for a metaphysical overtone or for philosophical aspects. If we find such overtones it is because general usage has given some of the concepts he makes use of such overtones. He could, of course, have chosen entirely new terms, but I think he did not do so because he wants to redefine the traditional terms, show where they arise out of experience, and thus keep the tradition alive, but with a different foundation.)

"Only by the fact that (the libido analogue) comes from the collective suprapersonal layer of the unconscious is it able to function as a transformer of psychic energies . . ."

Jung said this was well-expressed and showed the correct understanding of what he means by "collective" in collective unconscious.

". . psychological problems of Western man . ." Jung said Protestantism also belongs in the context, i.e., pre-Christian paganism, Greco-Hebrew religiosity, and Protestantism.

This brought to my mind the reference to his Swiss Calvinist background, and I asked if it was correct. He said no, no touch of Calvinism.
The Reformation was introduced in Basel by Oecolampadius (in 1529), according to Jung the mildest of all the Reformers.

Important factors in keeping the Reform within bounds were the fact that the city was a bishop's seat and that the university had been founded by Aeneas Silvius (Piccolomini) when he became Pope Pius II.

Of all Swiss Protestant cities, Basel has always had the most tolerance and understanding of Catholic ways, viz., the celebrated Basler Fastnacht.

Jung attributes his own attempts at a sympathetic understanding of Catholicism to this element in his background.

. . when a culture becomes too highly rationalized .. .individuals are not able to experience the natural flow of unconscious materials."

Jung commented that symbols can lose their efficiency; they age.

"The result is a vacuum in the psyche between the upper and lower layers." Jung: "What should that be ?"
He seemed to think the idea ought to be worded differently. "The mechanisms of convention . . . keep people unconscious.

. . . (They) follow their customary runways without the effect of conscious choice."

Jung suggested saying "without bothering about conscious choice, without being confronted with the necessity of making up their minds."

"The lunatic is an individual completely overcome by the unconscious." Jung says it must read: "more or less overcome by the unconscious."
I pointed out that it appeared to be a direct quotation from his writings, but that didn't bother him. He said in that case it must be incorrectly translated.
". . . (demons) involve the reactivation of archaic images stored in the unconscious from past historical eras ..
."

Jung corrected this to read "they are the archetypal images which are always in the unconscious." He commented in general that it is important to differentiate the terminology correctly.
,". . . Jung's statement that the entire tradition of psychoanalysis—commencing with Freud and extending through his own work—has been possible only because Western civilization has been passing through a crisis in its deepest beliefs." (My italics.)

Jung says this must be taken much further back; the tradition begins with the German Romantics, comes down through Schopenhauer, Carus, etc., i.e., requires to be set in a larger historical perspective.

". . . Jung's conception of consciousness . . . two levels of meaning: one as the totality of the psyche, that is to say, as cognition in general; . . . the other as the small segment of awareness that centers around the ego." (My italics.)

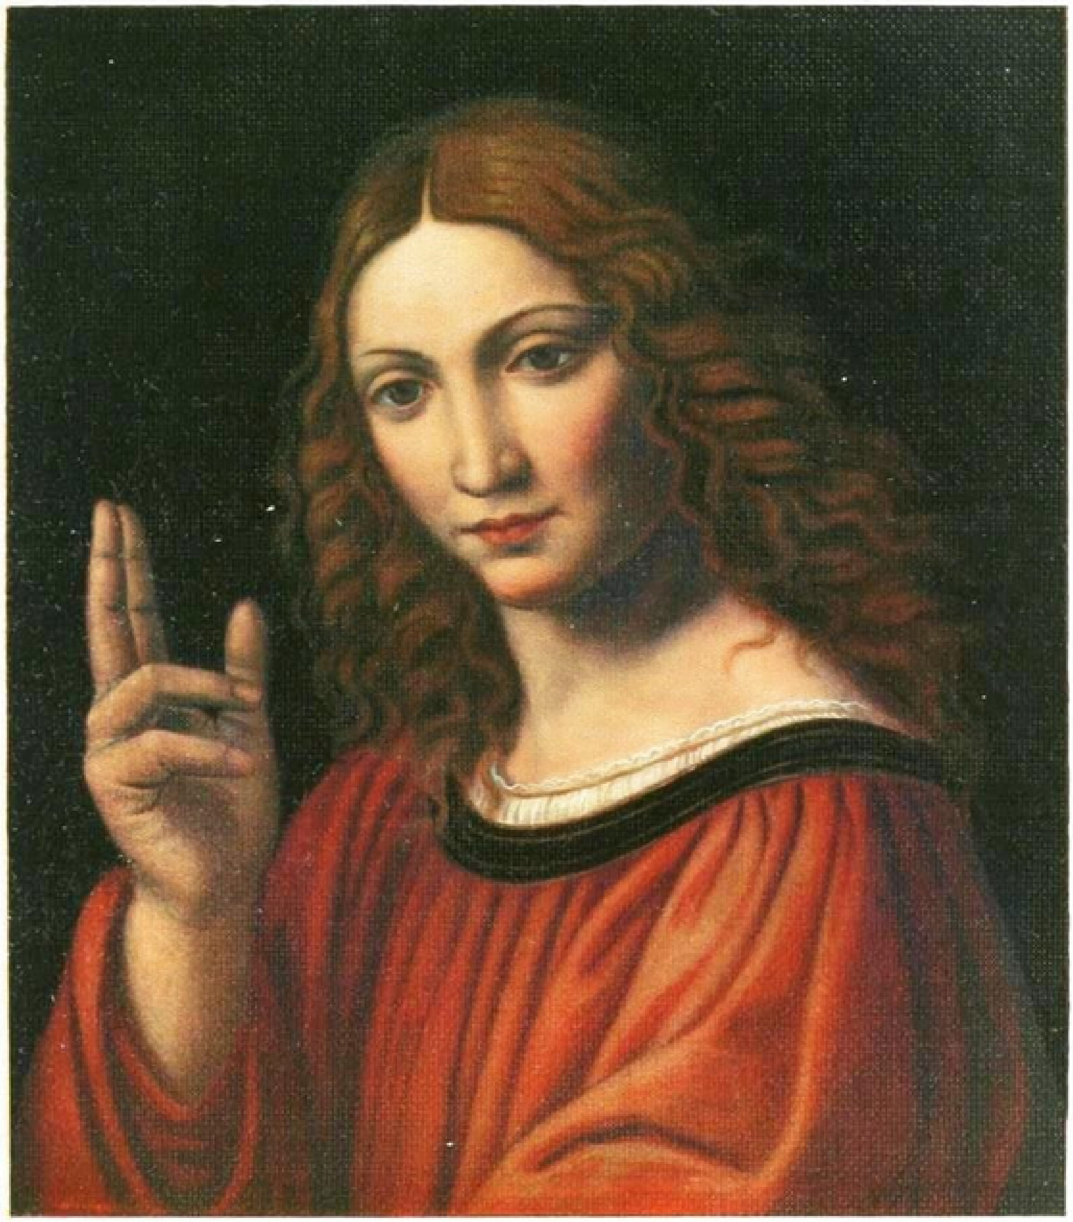
Jung said the first (italicized) part is wrong, only the second is correct. ". . contemporary situation ... searching for new religions, ... etc."

Jung asked to have the words "and moral" inserted into the latter part of the sentence, i.e., "the total questioning of intellectual and moral values and the search throughout Western civilization for the meaning of life." Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/07d6a-12bprogoff.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Androgyny of Christ. (2019-03-19 04:53)

[1]



Lecture VI 8th December, 1939

We were speaking of the wound in the side of Christ at the end of the last lecture.

We saw that it could be said to be the traditional conception of the feminine side of the corpus Christi.

The feminine side of Christ is much emphasised in Christian iconology, he is usually represented as a very feminine man.

The same characteristic was apparently attributed to his cousin, Mithras.

He also is represented, in the very moment of killing the bull, as exceedingly feminine; in fact Cumont, the greatest authority on Mithraism, says you could call his features directly hysterical.

This bi-sexuality of Christ is called androgynous, from aner (man) and gyne (woman).

This is not only a Christian idea, the gods in most religions have an androgynous nature ascribed to them in some form or other.

I was reading a book by a Catholic author, Koepgen, the other day: "Die Gnosis des Christentum."

It is a book authorised by the bishop's Imprimatur.

Koepgen emphasises Christ's androgynous nature and points out that His voluntary acceptance of a sacrificial death was feminine, and that male and female became an unbroken androgynous unity in him.

The Church, as the mystical body of Christ, is also androgynous and this is manifested in the celibacy of the clergy.

Koepgen says that this celibacy should not be mere bachelor virginity, but the androgynous unity of the soul which Christ Himself achieved.

This point of view is not exactly dogmatic but is tolerated by the Church.

The fact that Christ is regarded as male and female is extremely important, because it lays the foundation for the transcendent function, the reconciliation of the opposites.

The Roman Catholic Church regards Christ as the spouse of its unmarried members.

Therefore he is the bridegroom of women and the bride of men.

I speak, of course, of the conscious of men, to their unconscious He is also the bridegroom.

Przywara emphasises open wounds and says they are open so that we, (the worshippers and contemplators): "should be enclosed in the revealed God.

Those are his actual words.

The suffering of Christ is a going down, which can be compared to a grain of wheat sinking into a furrow of the earth and he continues:

"It is the suffering of a child of tender age that can only take refuge with the mother from whom it once came. Conceal me in Thee."

It would be impossible to say it more clearly than that.

But such a symbolism is in a way necessary in order to illustrate and explain the interpenetration between the worshipper and Christ.

We find this interpenetration in the Gospels already:

"He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him." John VI, 56.) and "I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them." (John XVII. 26.)

Both these texts clearly express the interpenetration between the believer and Christ, but all the accent is on the efficiency of Christ.

This is the natural result of Christ as the divine man, Christianity has attributed absolute autonomy to him, he is the centre of all activity.

As we saw in the course of last Semester, Christ is the western formulation of what the East calls the Self, Atman, the Purusha or Buddha.·

If one may interpret him as a symbol, he symbolises the Self.

The dogma claims that Christ was God who became man.

In psychological language this means that the Self approached the consciousness of man, or that human consciousness began to realise the Self, as a real human fact.

And indeed in a very peculiar form, the Self approached from outside autonomously, not as a human realisation.

Eastern man realizes the Self in himself but it approaches western man from outside, it is even an historical event, the life of Christ.

And thus the divine figure of the Self first became visible to the consciousness of western man, as a figure indescribably and indefinitely greater than man, in which man feels himself contained.

The East, on the contrary, first realizes the Self as the thumbling in man’s heart, as the smaller than small which I contain.

But the Self appears in western psychic experience as a divine figure, as something which contains me and faces me with the infinite power of a god.

We could say that western man became conscious of the fact that this man, this teacher Jesus, was the divine man, whose path had been prepared for thousands of years by Osiris in Egypt and as the idea of the coming of the Messiah in Israel. This was no human conspiracy, probably Christ had a convincing effect, there was something about him which carried the conviction that he was filled with the spirit of God, that he was a prophet.

We know from the gospels that he was first regarded as a prophet but gradually the prophecies of a Messiah gathered round him.

It was an age when the miraculous flourished.

There were other such figures in his immediate neighbourhood and public opinion often fixed on a man and called him a god.

Think of Empedocles who was regarded as a Deity.

He was followed by ten thousand people whenever he moved from town to town, and was received everywhere as a Saviour.

At last, presumably to get some peace, he cast himself into the crater of Etna.

Pythagoras also was considered a divine man.

There was nothing very remarkable about this in antiquity, for the gods were known to visit the earth, so it was by no means impossible to meet one in human form.

When a man had many of the qualities which are regarded as divine, antiquity was in the position to proclaim him a god.

The Christian dogma declares further that Christ, the Saviour, was a suffering figure, he was persecuted, mocked, wounded and finally put to death.

So taking human form is characterised by suffering for a god.

In other words, individuation, becoming conscious of the Self, is divine suffering.

So in Christian meditation, when the Self approaches as the suffering figure of Christ, characterised by his side wound - that is, by the mysterious and secret androgyny - we can see now where it especially wounds western man.

The West has an exquisitely masculine attitude and this must be wounded when, in individuation, the feminine approaches.

This also shows us why we do not find the motif of suffering stressed in the East.

The outer attitude of eastern man is passive and feminine, so it is the masculine which approaches him from the unconscious and he exults instead of suffering and says: I am everything, I create the world.

We find the motif of the wound, of a god becoming feminine or a suffering figure in German mythology.

There is a very characteristic passage in the Edda.

Wotan:

"I know how I hung on the wind swept tree nine eternal nights, wounded by a spear consecrated to Wotan, I myself consecrated to myself, on that tree, which conceals from every one, where it grows from its roots."

It has been suggested that this was influenced by Christianity, but I do not think this possible because the "I myself consecrated to myself" is not a Christian idea at all.

The whole of Christianity is permeated with "I and thee", with relationship and a pronounced Eros.

We might expect an eastern god to say: "I myself to myself" but this is impossible in the West.

Nevertheless this is a passage from a western text, but it is a very primitive avowal belonging to olden times before the one-sided differentiation of the western attitude had become accentuated.

We will proceed with the next invocation:

"Never permit me to be separated from Thee".

The unlimited sovereignty which is ascribed to Christ becomes very clear here:

"Ne permittas".

There is no question of I could (or could not) be separated from thee but do not allow me.

This is the way one addresses an absolute monarch, the whole power is ascribed to Christ.

Przywara meditates on this and says he is in the house of the Lord who admits and expels, who forbids and permits.

He says further:

"Man seems a god in this world."

He means that owing to his creative ability man can do a great deal in this world, and that because of technical achievement, for instance, he gets the idea that he is divine.

Przywara continues:

"But he stands in its centre and sees impotently, above and below him, the abyss of the powers: the eternity of the spirit and the incalculability of nature. And that both rage in him as battlefield."

We must go into this more deeply.

Przywara places man between the opposites, spirit and nature, we could say spirit and matter.

He goes on to say that this is the suffering on the cross, between heaven and hell.

We cannot call spirit heaven or hell, so we must take it as two pairs of opposites:

Then we have a right and a left and an above and below.

This is the real condition of suspension on the Cross.

We see an ancient idea shimmering through this meditation of Przywara's, namely that the cross is a cosmic symbol.

He sees man as a central point, a meeting place of great cosmic opposites.

Man is in fact a sort of reconciling symbol and Przywara allows that he is a sort of image of God, for in God also the opposites meet and are reconciled.

If we are allowed to understand Christ as a man who became a Self, he, on the cross, is the reconciling symbol, he is himself the cross.

The cross is a symbol for the reconciliation of the opposites and Christ triumphed over the opposites.

We have reached the acme of suffering with this image of suspension, a summit.

We have now spoken of eight invocations.

The first four form a kind of first verse, a praeparatio.

The contemplator is sanctified, saved, made drunk and cleansed.

In the second verse we come to the Passio Christi, to the interpenetration of Christ and the believer.

These are two stages which lead to a summit and form a curious parallel to the Shri-Chakra-Sambhara Tantra where the Thesis fell into two sections, A & B.

The prayer Anima Christi continues:

"From the wicked enemy defend me:"

This is exactly the same motif that we found after the first two sections in the Shri-Chakra-Sambhara Tantra, where there is also an incisive change in the text and the Lama defends himself against destruction.

In Section A the Lama declares his identity with Shri Heruka and the summit of B. is where he absorbs the rays of light into the Self.

That is through his own activity he has become Heruka.

Then comes the Anti-thesis, menace and defence, but in the eastern text it is no "wicked enemy" but a female being, "She, who has the Net of Lotuses", and causes fall.

This represents Maya, delusion, the illusion of the world: the more one is entangled in this, the further one is from the Self.

It is the senses which entangle one in illusory objects.

The devil which appears in the Buddhist meditation is feminine.

She is a Shakti, the companion of the god it is true, but she builds the phantasmagoric world in which the god shall see himself as in a mirror.

But when man, through his own inner efforts, raises himself to be Heruka or Shiva, he is in danger of falling a victim to the snare of illusion, because he is not yet perfected.

In the West the devil is masculine, he has exaggeratedly male attributes, horns and goat’s feet and behaves, as you know, in an exceedingly masculine way on the Bocksberg.

His form has been largely borrowed from the fauns of antiquity who had a notably bad reputation.

Why should the devil be masculine in the West and feminine in the East?

Mara, who tempted Buddha in the legend, was male, the Lord of the World, of Maya, an exact parallel to Satan in the temptation of Christ, only without the moral flavour.

He was a comparatively conscientious devil and could not understand Buddha wanting to leave the world.

It was Mara's job to maintain the creation of Maya and he merely wanted to get Buddha back into the world and used a number of charming bayaderes to help him.

But in the Shri-Chakra-Sambhara the deceiver is definitely feminine, a personification of Maya.

This is connected with the peculiar opposition between the eastern and western attitudes.

The conscious attitude of the West is masculine and that of the East feminine.

The world is full of suffering but the Yogin denies the world, he withdraws into himself and develops a powerful masculinity, and rules the world with its sorrows and pleasures, vices and virtues, temptations and promises.

But when western man develops his unconscious side it is feminine, he subdues his masculine conscious by a yearning surrender to Christ, the male is transformed into the female.

So his devil is masculine, for it is his former masculine attitude which entices him back into the world.

But with eastern man the case is reversed, it is the earlier feminine attitude which lures him back into the snares of the world.

If we want to draw the psychological conclusion we must go further and say that the West has an anima, that is, a feminine unconscious, and that the East has an animus, that is, a masculine unconscious.

And actually the eastern unconscious is exceedingly different to the western.

There is no term in eastern philosophy for the unconscious.

I found this very confusing at first when I was talking to eastern philosophers; I thought, with such an introspective people, there must be some such term.

At last I discovered that they call the unconscious consciousness, indeed enlightenment.

The consciousness of deep sleep, which we call unconsciousness, is to them the highest consciousness.

We can only understand this in connection with the fact that the eastern attitude is the opposite of the western.

The next invocation is:

"At the hour of my death, call me,"

It is not I will come to Thee, but I must be called, and the next invocation carries the same idea further:

"And bid me come unto Thee."

This is characterised by complete passivity, it is as if man could do nothing out of himself, could only yearningly hope and wish.

Man's soul looks longingly to the almighty Christ and hopes he may issue the command.

At most man dares to sigh, to pray and to propitiate the great King so that he may call the mortal worm into His Presence.

And the last sentence is:

"That with Thy Saints I may praise Thee, For ever and ever. Amen."

This is the "laudare dominum", to praise God is a very old custom in Christianity.

We hear it in some form or other in every service and every sermon.

We are so used to it that we do not hear it any longer and never think what it means.

It is really a court custom, and to get at its real meaning we should think of a Babylonian or Egyptian king surrounded by his court and by people singing his praises with guitars and other musical instruments, propitiating him.

The mighty of this earth are usually very ordinary human beings, no giants in intellect or stature.

Through favourable (or unfavourable) circumstances or just through inheritance, they find themselves on such a pinnacle that they feel exceedingly uncomfortable and get feelings of inferiority.

In every court, even the most primitive, we find people whose business it is to praise the king.

One can never come into the presence of a chief or king without submitting to a great deal of court etiquette.

In Africa, when I saw an African chief, I was introduced as a great European Lord, a Moslem and a Christian (I had read the Koran, which few Europeans have, so the Africans assumed I must be a Mohammedan) and I was informed that I was in the presence of the great King So and So who had six hundred wives, a large army and so on.

That is the laudare dominum, a court custom, which was gradually adopted in the Christian religion, God was honoured in the manner of an oriental prince.

There are many pictures of God surrounded by a multitude with harps who are praising him eternally.

The "laudare dominum" has survived the centuries and become a sort of standing phrase, but it was originally a conscious technique of propitiation, praising the monarch to get him into a good temper.

I am aware that I am saying something heretical but we must become conscious of what these things really are. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages 220-225

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/dffb3-2.jpg`

Carl Jung on “Ancestral” - Anthology (2019-03-19 05:27)

[1]

You live inasmuch as these Mendelian units are living. They have souls, are endowed with psychic life, the psychic life of that ancestor; or you can call it part of an ancestral soul. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 1401.

Thus we remain ignorant of whether our ancestral components find an elementary gratification in our lives, or whether they are repelled. Inner peace and contentment depend in large measure upon whether or not the historical family which is inherent in the individual can be harmonized with the ephemeral conditions of the present. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 237.

This image is fundamentally unconscious, an hereditary factor of primordial origin engraved in the living organic system of the man, an imprint or ’archetype’ [q.v.] of all the ancestral experiences of the female, a deposit, as it were, of all the impressions ever made by woman . . . Since this image is unconscious, it is always unconsciously projected upon the person of the beloved, and is one of the chief reasons for passionate attraction or aversion." Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 391.

Psychologically this means that the souls of the ancestors (potential factors, qualities, talents, possibilities, and so on, which we have inherited from all the lines of our ancestry) are waiting in the unconscious, and are ready at any time to begin a new growth. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 230.

The ancestral part is given to us by our body, we take over the life of our ancestors in that way. It is the terrace of life because it is here that life renews itself. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12July1935, Pages 240.

If we became aware of the ancestral lives in us, we might disintegrate. An ancestor might take possession of us and ride us to death. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 139

There is one ego in the conscious and another made up of unconscious ancestral elements, by the force of which a man who has been fairly himself over a period of years suddenly falls under the sway of an ancestor. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, page 38.

In the redemption of the individual, the whole past will be redeemed, and that includes all the inferior things as well, the animals, and all the ancestral souls, everything that has not been completed; all creation will be redeemed in the apokatastasis [at the time of the Last Judgement], there will be a complete restoration of things as they have been. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1280

The deposit of man's whole ancestral experience—so rich in emotional imagery—of father, mother, child, husband and wife, of the magic personality, of dangers to body and soul, has exalted this group of archetypes into the supreme regulating principles of religious and even of political life, in unconscious recognition of their tremendous psychic power. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 337

These constituents of the personality—which one may call functions, or Mendelian units, or the primitives would call them remnants of ancestral souls—these constituents don't always fit. Carl Jung, Dream Analysis, Page 453

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/90252-12bancestral.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Mystical" "Mystic" - YouTube (2019-03-19 05:38)

[1]Carl Jung on "Mystic" "Mystical" - YouTube

1. `https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=X1tBfToLlK8`

Carl Jung on “Angels" - Anthology (2019-03-19 05:41)

[1]

Why, when Pope Pius XII in one of his last discourses deplored that the world was no longer conscious enough of the presence of angels, he was saying to his faithful Catholics in Christian terms exactly what I am trying to say in terms of psychology to those who stand more chance of understanding this language than any other. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 410-423

But God, who also does not hear our prayers, wants to become man, and for that purpose he has chosen, through the Holy Ghost, the creaturely man filled with darkness—the natural man who is tainted with original sin and who learnt the divine arts and sciences from the fallen angels. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 746.

Every country or people has its own angel, just as the earth has a soul. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 432.

The only thing that really matters now is whether man can climb up to a higher moral level, to a higher plane of consciousness, in order to be equal to the superhuman powers which the fallen angels have played into his hands. Carl Jung, Answer to Job, Para 746.

A life without inner contradiction is either only half a life or else a life in the Beyond, which is destined only for angels. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 375.

The word meditation is used, when someone holds an inner dialogue (colloquium) with someone else who is invisible, and also when God is invoked, or when someone speaks to himself or to his good angel. Dr. Rulandus, Cited ETH, Page 171.

In these terrible days when evil is once again inundating the world in every conceivable form, I want you to know that I am thinking of you and of your family in Hungary, and hope with you that the avenging angel will pass by their door. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 336.

Around the birth of Christ, there follows the Age of Pisces. Pisces is a water sign.
That is probably why we have to look for the spirit in the water, in life's flow of images, and in the unconscious. And now we are on the threshold of the sign of Aquarius. The air element is assigned to it, and it is symbolized by an angel or a human being, instead of an animal. Here the spirit is meant to become something subtle again, and man to become who he is. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 354-355.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/1af99-12bangel.jpg`

Dr. Jung's childhood manikin (2019-03-19 05:41)

[1]
© Emmanuele Casale

[What if Dr. Jung's childhood manikin and writings remain hidden up in the attic where he hid thme?]

Thirty years later I again stood on that slope. I was a married man, had children, a house, a place in the world, and a head full of ideas and plans, and suddenly I was again the child who had kindled a fire full of secret significance and sat down on a stone without knowing whether it was I or I was it. I thought suddenly of my life in Zurich, and it seemed alien to me, like news from some remote world and time.

This was frightening, for the world of my childhood in which I had just become absorbed was eternal, and I had been wrenched away from it and had fallen into a time that continued to roll onward, moving farther and farther away. The pull of that other world was so strong that I had to tear myself violently from the spot in order not to lose hold of my future.

I have never forgotten that moment, for it illuminated in a flash of lightning the quality of eternity in my childhood. What this meant was revealed soon afterward, in my tenth year.

My disunion with myself and uncertainty in the world at large led me to an action which at the time was quite incomprehensible to me. I had in those days a yellow, varnished pencil case of the kind commonly used by primary-school pupils, with a little lock and the customary ruler. At the end of this ruler I now carved a little manikin, about two inches long, with frock coat, top hat, and shiny black boots.

I colored him black with ink, sawed him off the ruler, and put him in the pencil case, where I made him a little bed. I even made a coat for him out of a bit of wool. In the case I also placed a smooth, oblong blackish stone from the Rhine, which I had painted with water colors to look as though it were divided into an upper and lower half, and had long carried around in my trouser pocket. This was his stone.

All this was a great secret. Secretly I took the case to the forbidden attic at the top of the house (forbidden because the floorboards were worm eaten and rotten) and hid it with great satisfaction on one of the beams under the roof–for no one must ever see it! I knew that not a soul would ever find it there.

No one could discover my secret and destroy it. I felt safe, and the tormenting sense of being at odds with myself was gone. In all difficult situations, whenever I had done something wrong or my feelings had been hurt, or when my father's irritability or my mother's invalidism oppressed me, I thought of my carefully bedded-down and wrapped-up manikin and his smooth, prettily colored stone. From time to time–often at intervals of weeks–I secretly stole up to the attic when I could be certain that no one would see me. Then I clambered up on the beam, opened the case, and looked at my manikin and his stone.

[2]

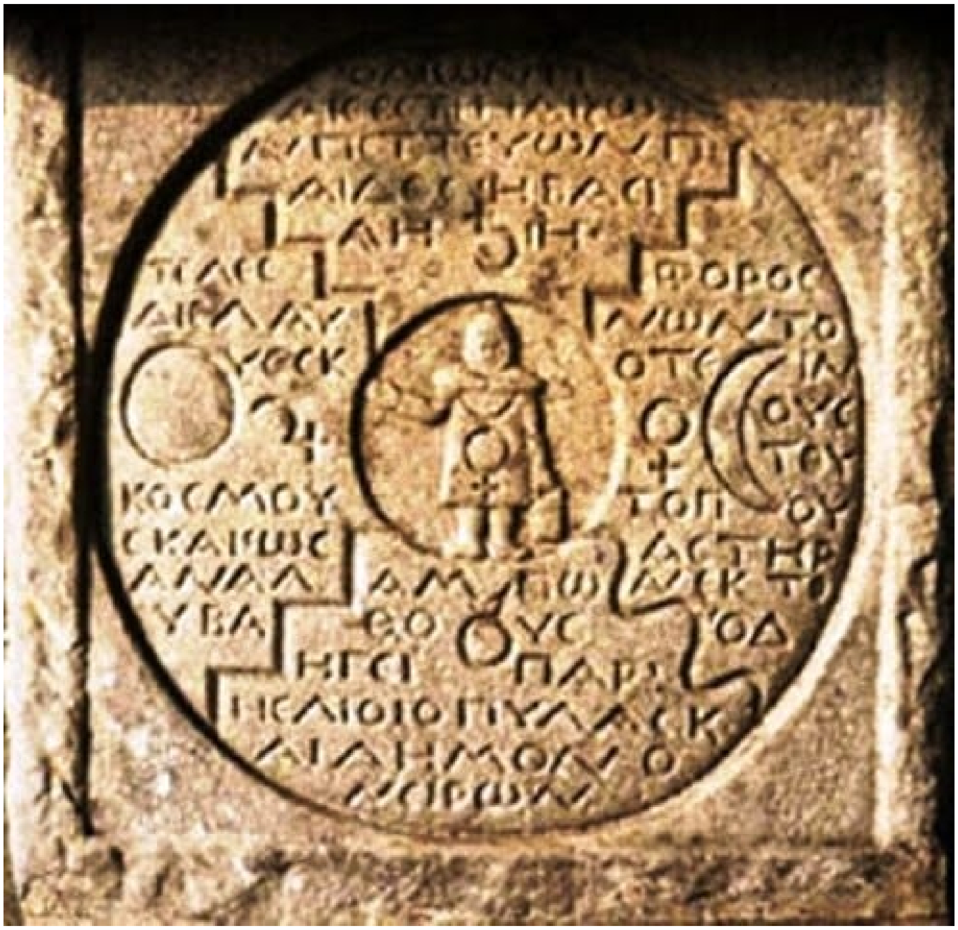
Each time I did this I placed in the case a little scroll of paper on which I had previously written something during school hours in a secret language of my own invention. The addition of a new scroll always had the character of a solemn ceremonial act. Unfortunately I cannot remember what I wanted to communicate to the manikin. I only know that my "letters" constituted a kind of library for him. I fancy, though I cannot be certain, that they may have consisted of sayings that particularly pleased me. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

From time to time–often at intervals of weeks–I secretly stole up to the attic when I could be certain that no one would see me. Then I clambered up on the beam, opened the case, and looked at my manikin and his stone. Each time I did this I placed in the case a little scroll of paper on which I had previously written something during school hours in a secret language of my own invention. The addition of a new scroll always had the character of a solemn ceremonial act. Unfortunately I cannot remember what I wanted to communicate to the manikin. I only know that my "letters" constituted a kind of library for him. I fancy, though I cannot be certain, that they may have consisted of sayings that particularly pleased me. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections.

The episode with the carved manikin formed the climax and the conclusion of my childhood. It lasted about a year. Thereafter I completely forgot the whole affair until I was thirty-five. Then this fragment of memory rose up again from the mists of childhood with pristine clarity. While I was engaged on the preliminary studies for my book Wandlungen und Symbole der Libido. I read about the cache of soul–stones near Arlesheim, and the Australian churingas.

I suddenly discovered that I had a quite definite image of such a stone, though I had never seen any reproductions. It was oblong, blackish, and painted into an upper and lower half. This image was joined by that of the pencil box and the manikin. The manikin was a little cloaked god of the ancient world, a Telesphoros such as stands on the monuments of Asklepios and reads to him from a scroll. Along with this recollection there came to me, for the first time, the conviction that there are archaic psychic components which have entered the individual psyche without any direct line of tradition.

[3]



My father's library–which I examined only very much later–contained not a single book which might have transmitted any such information. Moreover, my father demonstrably knew nothing about these things. When I was in England in 1920, I carved out of wood two similar figures without having the slightest recollection of that childhood experience. One of them I had reproduced on a larger scale in stone, and this figure now stands in my garden in Kusnacht. Only while I was doing this work did the unconscious supply me with a name. It called the figure Atmavictu–the "breath of life."

It was a further development of that fearful tree of my childhood dream, which was now revealed as the "breath of life," the creative impulse. Ultimately, the manikin was a kabir, wrapped in his little cloak, hidden in the kista, and provided with a supply of life-force, the oblong black stone. But these are connections which became clear to me only much later in life. When I was a child I performed the ritual just as I have seen it done by the natives of Africa; they act first and do not know what they are doing. Only long afterward do they reflect on what they have done. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections

I cannot recall in my boyhood ever having thought of the possibility of a connection between Lord Jesus–or the Jesuit in the black robe–the men in frock coats and top hats standing by the grave, the grave-like hole in the meadow, the underground temple of the phallus, and my little man in the pencil case. The dream of the ithyphallic god was my first great secret; the manikin was the second. It does seem to me, however, that I had a vague sense of relationship between the "soul-stone" and the stone which was also myself. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

It would never have occurred to me to speak of my experience openly, nor of my dream of the phallus in the underground temple, nor of my carved manikin. As a matter of fact, I did not say anything about the phallus dream until I was sixty-five. I may have spoken about the other experiences to my wife, but only in later years. A strict taboo hung over all these matters, inherited from my childhood.

I could never have talked about them with friends. My entire youth can be understood in terms of this secret. It induced in me an almost unendurable loneliness. My one great achievement during those years was that I resisted the temptation to talk about it with anyone.

Thus the pattern of my relationship to the world was already prefigured: today as then I am a solitary, because I know things and must hint at things which other people do not know, and usually do not; even want to know. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

Image: Atmavictu "Breath of Life" sculpted by Dr. Jung.

Image: Gallo-Roman limestone statue of Telesphorus discovered in 1884 in Moulézan (southern France), now exhibited in the Archeological Museum of Nîmes. The god is dressed in the hooded cape typical of the depiction of Celts in Roman Gaul.

Image: Sculpted by Dr. Jung at his Bollingen Tower.

"Soon something else emerged. I began to see on the front face, in the natural structure of the stone, a small circle, a sort of eye, which looked at me. I chiseled it into the stone, and in the center made a tiny homunculus. This corresponds to the "little doll" (pupilla) yourself which you see in the pupil of another's eye; a kind of Kabir, or the Telesphoros of Asklepios. Ancient statues show him wearing a hooded cloak and carrying a lantern. At the same time he is a pointer of the way. I dedicated a few words to him which came into my mind while I was working. The inscription is in Greek; the translation goes:

Time is a child playing like a child playing a board game the kingdom of the child. This is Telesphoros, who roams through the dark regions of this cosmos and glows like a star out of the depths. He points the way to the gates of the sun and to the land of dreams. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/e90d1-atma.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/ec7ed-galli.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/9e70b-time.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Animals." - Anthology (2019-03-19 05:46)

[1]

The Animals. We appreciate them much more. We think of the psychology of animals.

In the 19th century they made laws for their protection, and began to treat them more decently, but it is only in recent years that we begin to think of a few animals as our brothers. Carl Jung, Cornwall Seminar, Page 21.

There is so much that fills me: plants, animals, clouds, day and night, and the eternal in man.

The more uncertain I have felt about myself, the more there has grown up in me a feeling of kinship with all things. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 359.

At times I feel as if I am spread out over the landscape and inside things, and am myself living in every tree, in the splashing of the waves, in the clouds and the animals that come and go, in the procession of the seasons. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Chapter 8.

Because they are so closely akin to us and share our unknowingness, I loved all warm-blooded animals who have souls like ourselves and with whom, so I thought, we have an instinctive understanding. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 67.

This is old age, and a limitation. Yet there is so much that fills me: plants, animals, clouds, day and night, and the eternal in man. The more uncertain I have felt about myself, the more there has grown up in me a feeling of kinship with all things. In fact it seems to me as if that alienation which so long separated me from the world has become transferred into my own inner world, and has revealed to me an unexpected unfamiliarity with myself. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 359.

Even domestic animals, to whom we erroneously deny a conscience, have complexes and moral reactions. Carl Jung, Civilization in Transition, Page 446.

Emotional manifestations are based on similar patterns, and are recognizably the same all over the earth. We understand them even in animals, and the animals themselves understand each other in this respect, even if they belong to different species. Carl Jung, Symbols of Transformation, Page 234.

The most pronounced intuitives have what the Scotch call second sight, they can, for instance, foretell the weather, many animals also have this last power. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 100.

Often when people behave in an exceedingly unexpected manner the appearance of an archetype is the explanation ; archetypes go back not only through human history, but to our ancestors the animals, that is why we are able to understand animals so well and make friends with them. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 177.

Primitives are re ally human animals living on the lap of the earth and from its sap. We are merely enlightened! Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 200.

In these days, on the other hand, we are becoming very sentimental about animals, every kind of society for the prevention of cruelty to animals exists, which shows that we are getting more friendly towards our instincts. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 220.

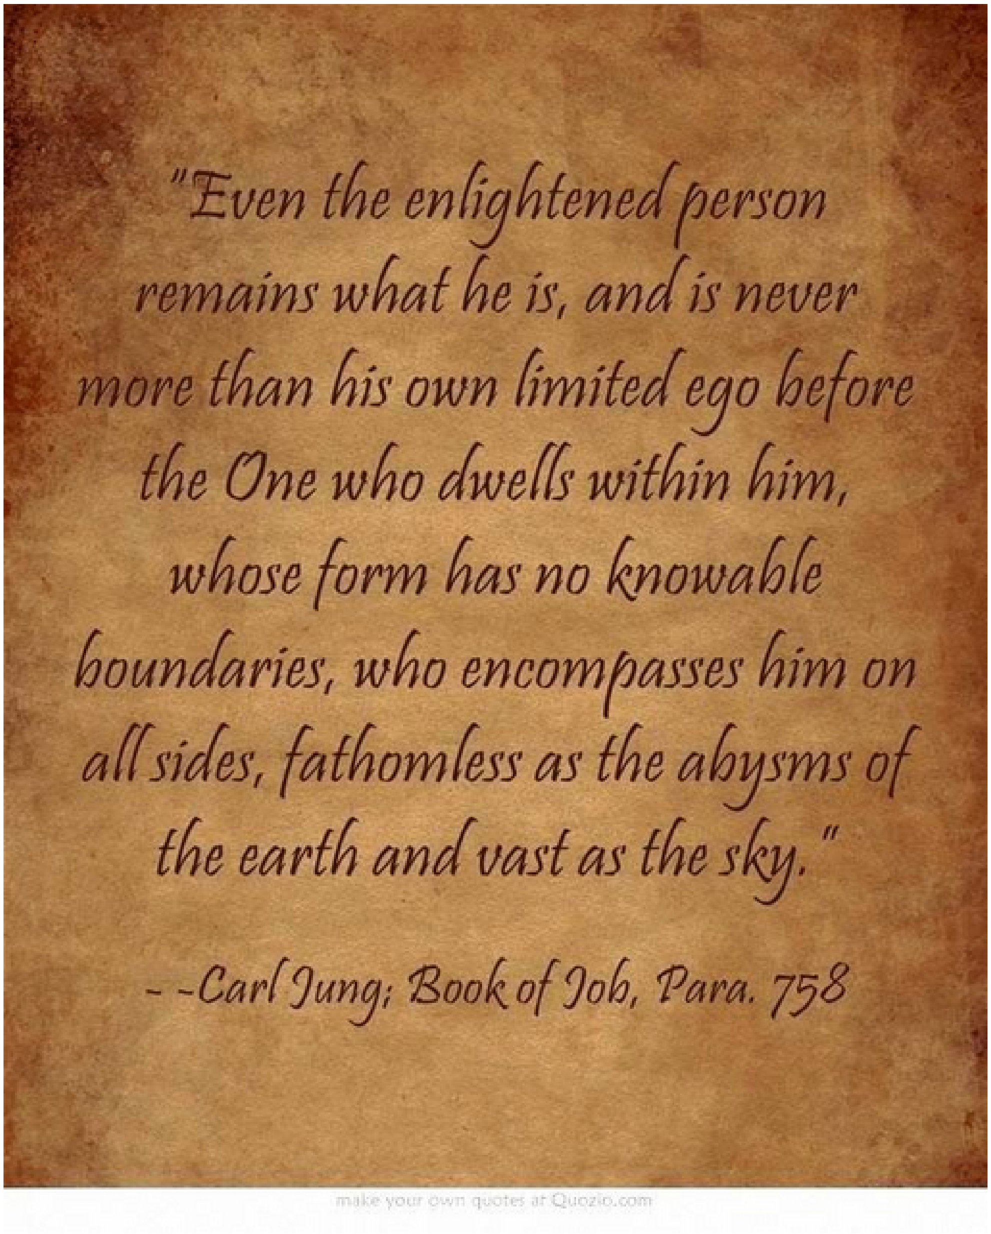
One of the aims of some kinds of Yoga is to understand the voice of all animals, but we are not convinced in the West that horses and dogs have such important thoughts. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 17.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/696e3-12banimals.jpg`

Carl Jung on Enlightenment: West and East (2019-03-19 05:46)

[1]



"Even the enlightened person remains what he is, and is never more than his own limited ego before the One who dwells within him, whose form has no knowable boundaries, who encompasses him on all sides, fathomless as the abysms of the earth and vast as the sky."

- -Carl Jung; Book of Job, Para. 758

make your own quotes at Quozio.com

Lecture V 1st December, 1939

We spoke in the last lecture of the line: "Passion of Christ, strengthen me" and I emphasised that the attitude to suffering was one of the great differences between East and West.

The difference is one of psychological temperament.

The Easterner says: Through enlightenment I become Atman and Buddha.

Essential life, on the other hand, lies in the autonomous figure of Christ for the Westerner and he beseeches Christ to penetrate and even to conquer him.

It is curious that the East has such a negative attitude to suffering, that it regards it merely as an illusion to be overcome, whereas to us it is the path par excellence to Christ, to the Self.

We grow into Christ through suffering, individuation can only be reached through it.

God suffers as man, it is not my personal suffering but the suffering of a God.

We could also say that it is projected into a divine figure.

In the East,on the contrary, man escapes from suffering through enlightenment, it is dissolved as Maya.

The peculiar attitude of the West means therefore, that the perfect figure, the future being, something infinitely superior to everyday man, is a God, so to speak, who becomes man and thus accepts suffering.

One could reverse this and say: in that man wishes to reach a divine state he must go through a stage of suffering.

This suffering is human suffering, my suffering, but this is only secondary for it is simply a repetition of Christ's suffering.

The essential thing is that it is eternal suffering which is always present and ever taking place.

This is a very difficult idea which you also find in the psychology of the Mass.

The sacrifice of Christ is not a repeated sacrifice but an eternal sacrifice, it happened out of space and time, it was, so to speak, from the beginning and ever more shall be.

But it is not only the sacrifice and suffering which are eternal but also the Glorification, the Resurrection and Christ's Ascension to his divine state as the second person in the Trinity.

This formulation of a suffering god must somehow fit the temperament of western man or the formulation would be different.

Antiquity would undoubtedly have been shocked by such an idea, yet it has fascinated western man for over fifteen hundred years.

It is gradually losing that fascination now, and at the same time our whole understanding for such ideas is collapsing, which spells a great loss.

I must go somewhat further into the Christian attitude for it is vitally important in order to understand the exercitia spiritualia.

You know Protestant conceptions are by no means at one over such ideas as the dogma of the Trinity for instance.

Perhaps you read the discussion which appeared lately in the "Neue Zucher Zeitung" about the Divinity of Christ.

It was a piece of medieval spiritual history, a discussion as to whether Christ was divine or not and many voices claimed that one could not admit a doctrine which claimed Christ as God.

This shows you the attitude in Protestant circles.

Christ himself said he was the Son of God, but this is no longer unanimously admitted.

This doctrine has always played a very important role and you will remember it was resented even in Christ's lifetime.

In the tenth chapter of St. John's Gospel we read that "the Jews took up stones again to stone him" because "thou, being a man, makest thyself God.

Jesus answered them: Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods?"

But the Jews went on insisting that Christ had blasphemed in saying: "I am the Son of God."

Jesus was quoting the 82nd Psalm which says: "I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High."

This is a very peculiar and obscure idea and has roused a lot of speculation.

One can only conclude that the actual words mean a kinship between man and God.

And there are other passages in the New Testament which show that Christ's words were taken literally.

In II Corinthians XIII. 5, St. Paul says: "Know ye not in your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" and in Gal. II. 20: "Nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

Certain Protestant Theologians who have re-translated the Bible, have translated in you as among you, so as to repress the thought that Christ could mean an inner Christ and the idea of kinship between man and God.

There is a parallel in the Oxyrhynchus Papyrus, which belongs to the first century, A. D.

This gospel seems to have consisted of a sort of collection of anecdotes about Christ.

In this Papyrus we find the passage: "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" as: "Wheresoever there are (two, they are not without) God: and where there is one alone I say I am with him"

This would seem to have been changed for it is obvious that two or three form a congregation, a Church; whereas one individual is not a Church in spite of Coleridge's saying that he was a member of the only true Church and at the moment its only member!

You see what consideration was at work, consideration for the Church.

This was clearly directed against the efforts of the individual and against individual grace.

In my opinion such an attitude forced the translators to cheat in order to uphold it.

For it is not among you but in you.

Even St. Paul himself does not live, Christ lives, the human being is an appendage.

There is a passage in the Acts of the Apostles: "For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring." (Acts XVII, 28.)

So we are the offspring of God.

But this idea was not developed, the idea of an autonomous Christ developed, and the human being was turned empty away, so to speak. In the East the individual can say: I am Atman.

But in the West the individual has no divine right, he is only recognised as a member of a congregation, a Church, and he has to wait for the Grace of the Church.

This prepared the ground and, when God disappeared, what was man?

The Church as an effective force has disappeared too, and what is left?

The mob, the State, the man-made State, a mere ant heap of individuals.

This is not only a spiritual catastrophe but a human catastrophe of the direst kind.

We are in danger of being delivered over to mass-phenomena and of sinking to the level of collective man.

In the mob personality disappears, it cannot make itself heard.

I am afraid that the historical responsibility for this state of things belongs to the Church: it did not emphasize the metaphysical significance of the individual and taught its members to deify the Church, the institution.

Our culture, which is threatened today, is primarily a Christian culture, if it had not been for the Roman Catholic Church, we should still be barbarians.

But we stopped at the institution of the Church, it was erected for the welfare of mankind and the divine germ of the individual was neglected and repressed, to such an extent that we have no understanding for the East and depreciate its teaching as megalomania.

We were all taught to depend on the walls of the Church, not on God in ourselves.

How many of you even know that Christ said: “Ye are gods”? Have you ever heard a sermon on this text?

I have not.

But there are many passages in the New Testament which are never preached upon.

I must call your attention to a further passage in the New Testament.

In the second chapter of Acts we read of the coming of the Comforter, of the Paraclete (the Holy Ghost), promised to the disciples by Christ: "And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."

The tongues of fire did not fall among them but on each.

Each individual could say the Paraclete has entered me, I am the dwelling, another aspect of God.

That is simply the logical fact, but it was never allowed to come true on account of the institution for, if God can speak through the individual, it opens the door to arrant heresy.

This was proved practically during the Reformation, the so-called "Schwarm Geister" crumbled the walls of the Church.

We must, therefore, be human and not judge the Church too hardly, for it was really impossible for her to tackle this problem.

The problem is an eternal truth but it only becomes acute when the Church is no longer able to control the situation and its walls spring apart.

Then we are forced to remember such texts.

They are no empty words but basic truths, and we have no foothold in the shifting ground of contemporary problems without them.

We fall captive to the herd animal if we cannot reach the individual divinity in ourselves.

If we think this means the ego, we are rightly condemned as individualists and egotists, but to remember our primeval divinity, that is a totally different thing.

Such passages spring from the deepest roots of man, they refer to the Self.

Not the human being, not the ego, is God but the Self is God in man, and it is superior to human consciousness, just as the whole is superior to a part.

We hear next to nothing of the Self in Christian philosophy because it has been left in the hidden truths.

But we should have heard of it if the Church had been able, while it was still strong and powerful, to develop the religion of the Holy Ghost.

That is, if the Church had gone beyond the historical figure of Christ, as he himself intended when he promised that the Holy Ghost should descend on each, as it had descended upon him at his baptism.

He said he was the Son of God, and called others the children of God, by which he recognised them as brothers and sisters.

But this thought was too difficult, it is still too difficult for the Church.

It is, however, impossible for us to recognise our relationship to eastern ideas, or to assimilate these, unless we realise our own Christian background and that such ideas were expressed in the original documents of our own faith.

We suffer from a certain "development arrete", our spiritual development stopped short, whereas that of the East is hypertrophic.

This is because they had and have no institution in the East which can be compared with the Roman Catholic Church. Buddhism, in this sense, is far from being a Church.

I should like to read you a passage from an author who wrestled with this problem and suffered deeply from the fall of the Church, of historical Christianity, a fall which unfortunately we cannot deny.

There are optimists who believe they can still deny it but, if we count the multitude who stand extra ecclesiam today, we have to admit that the Church is in a very bad way.

The author I speak of is Nietzsche.

He expressed it as “God is dead” and he did not realise that in saying this he was still standing within the dogma, for Christ’s death is one of the secret mysteries of Christianity.

Why we can hear in every sermon that "God is dead".

But Nietzsche did not realise this, he meant God has come to an end.

Nietzsche thought that as God was dead and had no successor, something very unusual had happened to the world.

And he did not realise that he was God’s successor!

When his psychosis overcame him he signed his letters: The Crucified, Dionysos, or Zagreus who was also a dismembered God, he, Nietzsche, fulfilled this fate himself.

And he prophesied his own fate when Zarathustra said to the ropedancer: "Thy soul shall be dead even sooner than thy body."

We cannot be surprised that in his most essential deepest work, his confession, "Zarathustra", there are many intensely Christian passages, where he moves in a wholly Christian world.

Whether he did so consciously is difficult to say, but he had a western psychology and had to remain in its standpoint and think on in its categories.

So the motif of Zarathustra is that of the suffering god, and I should like to read you some passages from the "Drunken Song" at the end as a "document humain".

Please pay attention to the peculiar symbolis m which Nietzsche uses:

"God’s woe is deeper, thou strange world! Grasp at God’s woe, not at me! What am I? . . . Thou grape-vine! Why dost thou praise me? Have I not cut thee!
I am cruel, thou bleedest-: what meaneth thy praise of my drunken cruelty?

’Whatever hath become perfect, everything mature - wanteth to die!’ so sayest thou. Blessed, blessed be the vintner’s knife! But everything immature wanteth to live: alas!"

What is the grape vine that has come to maturity and wants to die? And who holds the knife? Nietzsche himself holds that knife and Christ is the bloody sacrifice.

"Woe saith: 'Hence! Go! Away, thou woe!' But everything that suffereth wanteth to live, that it may become mature and lively and longing."

We come here to the other side of western man, the concupiscentia.

" - Longing for the further, the higher, the brighter. 'I want heirs,' so saith everything that suffereth, 'I want children, I do not want myself'. - Joy, however, doth not want heirs, it doth not want children, - joy wanteth itself, it wanteth eternity, it wanteth recurrence, it wanteth everything eternally-like-itself.

. . . Pain is also a joy, curse is also a blessing, night is also a sun, - go away! or ye will learn that a sage is also a fool.

Said ye ever Yea to one joy? 0 my friends, then said ye Yea also unto all woe. All things are enlinked, enlaced and enamoured. –

- Wanted ye ever once to come twice; said ye ever: 'Thou pleasest me, happiness! Instant! Moment!' then wanted ye all to come back again!
- All anew, all eternal, all enlinked, enlaced and enamoured, Oh, then did ye love the world, -
- Ye eternal ones, ye love it eternally and for all time: and also unto woe do ye say: Hence! Go! but come back! For joys all want - eternity! All joy wanteth the eternity of all things, it wanteth honey, it wanteth lees, it wanteth drunken midnight, it wanteth graves, it wanteth gravetears' consolation, it wanteth gilded evening-red –
- What doth not joy want! it is thirstier, heartier, hungrier, more frightful, more mysterious, than all woe: it wanteth itself, it biteth into itself, the ring's will writheth in it, -
- It wanteth love, it wanteth hate, it is over-rich, it bestoweth, it throweth away, it beggeth for someone to take from it, it thanketh the taker, it would fain be hated, -
- So rich is joy that it thirsteth for woe, for hell, for hate, for shame, for the lame, for the world, - for this world, Oh, ye know it indeed! Ye higher men, for you doth it long, this joy, this irrepressible, Blessed joy - for your woe, ye failures! For failures, longeth all eternal joy. For joys all want themselves, therefore, do they also want grief!"

This is a confession in which you can observe the peculiar swing over from the Christian psychology of the suffering God to pagan and so-called profane "Lust".

It lusts after itself in the last resort.

"Wanting themselves" is not wanting the ego but the Self.

We will turn now to the next line in the "Anima Christi":

"0 good Jesu, hear me."

This is again an invocation and exhorts the figure of Christ to undertake autonomous activity.

How does Przywara react to this?

He says he knows that Christ is listening to him and that he may tell him everything.

Meditation, according to the Jesuit point of view, is based on Christ's activity, and though the words themselves ask Christ to listen, Przywara meditates as if He had been listening from the beginning.

He says further:

"Whatever I say to Him, whatever He hears, whatever I declare, whatever He hears in Himself, it is I."

He means to say that he brings his ego to Christ and delivers it completely to the figure of Christ that he has invoked.

This thought is continued even more plainly in the next invocation:

"Within Thy wounds, hide me."

This is a generally Christian idea, the wounds of Christ are thought of as a protection for mankind, man can, so to speak, sink into them.

But think of that concretely, an open wound and tiny human beings being hidden in it.

Przywara uses the simile: "as a grain of wheat sinks unnoticed into the earth."

So the body of Christ is regarded as the earth which is ploughed, opened for the purpose of letting us in.

This idea played a considerable role and reached its summit in the mysticism of Zinzendorf in the eighteenth century.

The wound in the side of Christ is treated obscenely, any innocent school child could see that Zinzendorf regarded it as the maternal genital organ in which man must seek rebirth.

This is not a bad joke of mine but a fact.

And we find the same idea in Przywara, more aesthetically expressed, as a furrow in the earth.

There are Etruscan ploughs shaped like the phallus and the old custom of the peasant embracing his wife in a ploughed field for the fertility of the ground and many other primitive fertility customs originate in the same idea.

It is curious, Christ having a man's body, that such ideas should be attached to him.

But according to the Catholic interpretation Christ was not merely masculine but feminine as well.

Take for instance, the passage in Revelation, (XIV. 4): "These are they which were not defiled with women for they are virgins."

This refers to the Saints, who were, so to speak, celibate priests, men yet virgins, women.

And the same quality is ascribed to Christ.

It goes back to the passage in Genesis where Eve is taken out of the side of Adam.

That was apparently another wound, which was the gateway to the birth of Eve.

That is, so to speak, the ecclesiastical archetype for the birth of the Church from the wound in the side of Christ, so that this wound really has a maternal significance. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages 194-199

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/4fbb7-2.jpg`

Carl Jung on “Alchemy,” “Alchemist” – Anthology (2019-03-19 05:57)

[1]

But Mercurius is the divine winged Hermes manifest in matter, the god of revelation, lord of thought and sovereign psychopomp. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 292.

Not for nothing did alchemy style itself an "art," feeling—and rightly so—that it was concerned with creative processes that can be truly grasped only by experience, though intellect may give them a name. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 482.

That from which things arise is the invisible and immovable God. Liber Platonis Quartorum, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 323.

But Mercurius is the divine winged Hermes manifest in matter, the god of revelation, lord of thought and sovereign psychopomp. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 292.

For the alchemist, the one primarily in need of redemption is not man, but the deity who is lost and sleeping in matter. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 312.

True, what the soul imagines happens only in the mind, but what God imagines happens in reality. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 280.

"Sense" and "nonsense" are merely man-made labels which serve to give us a reasonably valid sense of direction. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 222.

All life is bound to individual carriers who realize it, and it is simply inconceivable without them. But every carrier is charged with an individual destiny and destination, and the realization of these alone makes sense of life. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 222.

In the last analysis every life is the realization of a whole, that is, of a self, for which reason this realization can also be called "individuation." Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 222.

It is only the intervention of time and space here and now that makes reality. Wholeness is realized for a moment only—the moment that Faust was seeking: all his life. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 214.

Just as the father represents collective consciousness, the traditional spirit, so the mother stands for the collective unconscious, the source of the water of life. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 71.

The secret is that only that which can destroy itself is truly alive. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 81.

Life that just happens in and for itself is not real life; it is real only when it is known. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 81.

Natural man is not a "self"—he is the mass and a particle in the mass, collective to such a decree that he is not even sure of his own ego. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 81.

I conjecture that the treasure is also the "companion," the one who goes through life at our side—in all probability a close analogy to the lonely ego who finds a mate in the self, for at first the self is the strange non-ego. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 117.

But no matter how much parents and grandparents may have sinned against the child, the man who is really adult will accept these sins as his own condition which has to be reckoned with. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 117.

Western man has no need of more superiority over nature, whether outside or inside. He has both in almost devilish perfection. What he lacks is conscious recognition of his inferiority to the nature around and within him. He must learn that he may. not do exactly as he wills. If he does not learn this, his own nature will destroy him. He does not know that his own soul is rebelling against him in a suicidal way.

In the light of the possibilities revealed by intuition, man’s earthliness is certainly a lamentable imperfection; but this very imperfection is part of his innate being, of his reality. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 114.

Only the gods can pass over the rainbow bridge; mortal men must stick to the earth and are subject to its laws. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 114.

We can never reach the level of our intuitions and should therefore not identify ourselves with them. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 114.

We should not rise above the earth with the aid of "spiritual" intuitions and run away from hard reality, as so often happens with people who have brilliant intuitions. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 114.

I have been accused of deifying the soul. Not I but God Himself deified it." Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 14.

But a conscious attitude that renounces its ego-bound intentions—not in imagination only, but in truth—and submits to the supra-personal decrees of fate, can claim to be serving a king. This more exalted attitude raises the status of the anima from that of a temptress to a psychopomp. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 380.

It [the unconscious] is and remains beyond the reach of subjective arbitrary control, in a realm where nature and her secrets can be neither improved upon nor perverted, where we can listen but may not meddle. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 46.

The conscious mind allows itself to be trained like a parrot, but the unconscious does not—which is why St. Augustine thanked God for not making him responsible for his dreams. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 46.

It should therefore be an absolute rule to assume that every dream, and every part of a dream, is unknown at the outset, and to attempt an interpretation only after carefully taking up the context. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 44.

The substance is always the same, but a new value is given to it, and the new value is the treasure. That is the secret of alchemy for instance. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 653.

On the one hand, emotion is the alchemical fire whose warmth brings everything into existence and whose heat burns all superfluities to ashes. But on the other hand, emotion is the moment when steel meets flint and a spark is struck forth, for emotion is the chief source of consciousness. There is no change from darkness to light or from inertia to movement without emotion". Carl Jung, CW 9, Page 96.

This light dwells in the "square inch" or in the "face", that is between the eyes. It is the visualization of the "creative point." Carl Jung, CW 13, Alchemical Studies, Page 25.

The circulation is not merely movement in a circle, but means on the one hand the marking off of the sacred precinct, and on the other, the fixation and concentration. Carl Jung, CW 13, Alchemical Studies, Page 25.

When I say as a psychologist , that God is an archetype, I mean by that the "type" in the psyche. Carl Jung, CW 12, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 149

However we may picture the relationship between God and soul, one thing is certain: The soul cannot be "nothing but. " On the contrary it has the dignity of an entity endowed with consciousness of a relationship to Deity. Even if it were only the relationship of a drop of water to the sea ... Carl Jung, CW 12, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 10.

So long as religion is only faith and outward form, the religion's function is not experienced in our souls, nothing of any importance has happened. Carl Jung, CW 12, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 12.

A saying of the alchemist is, "God is a circle whose centre is everywhere and whose circumference is nowhere." The saying holds for God, for the anima mundi and for the soul of man. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 35.

A very widespread view conceives spirit as a higher and psyche as a lower principle of activity, and conversely the alchemists thought of spirit as the ligamentum animae et corporis, regarding it as a spiritus vegetativus (the later life-spirit or nerve-spirit). Carl Jung, CW 9i, para. 386.

There is no recrossing the Rubicon. Carl Jung; "Individual Dream Symbolism in Relation to Alchemy", 1935.

This process of becoming human is represented in dreams and inner images as the putting together of many scattered units, and sometimes as the gradual emergence and clarification of something that was always there. The speculations of alchemy, and also of some Gnostics, revolve around this process. It is likewise expressed in Christian Dogma, and more particularly in the transformation mystery of the Mass. Carl Jung; “Transformation Symbolism in the Mass"; CW 11, par. 399.

[The alchemist Gerhard] Dorn . . . says, "In the body of man there is hidden a certain substance of heavenly nature known to very few Carl Jung; "Psychology and Religion" in CW 11, page 93, note 47.

Nature must not win the game, but she cannot lose. Carl Jung; "Alchemical Studies, 1942.

The greater the tension, the greater is the potential. Great energy springs from a correspondingly great tension of opposites. Carl Jung; "Alchemical Studies", 1942.

The union of opposites on a higher level of consciousness is not a rational thing, nor is it a matter of will; it is a process of psychic development that expresses itself in symbols. Carl Jung; Collected Works 13; Alchemical Studies; Page 16.

As a doctor it is my task to help the patient to cope with life. I cannot presume to pass judgment on his final decisions, because I know from experience that all coercion-be it suggestion, insinuation, or any other method of persuasion-ultimately proves to be nothing but an obstacle to the highest and most decisive experience of all, which is to be alone with his own self, or whatever else one chooses to call the objectivity of the psyche. The patient must be alone if he is to find out what it is that supports him when he can no longer support himself. Only this experience can give him an indestructible foundation. Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy; CW 12: Page 32.

Alchemy has performed for me the great and invaluable service of providing material in which my experience could find sufficient room, and has thereby made it possible for me to describe the individuation process at least in its essential aspects. Carl Jung; Mysterium Coniunctionis; Paragraph 792.

It seems to be very hard for people to live with riddles or to let them live, although one would think that life is so full of riddles as it is that a few more things we cannot answer would make no difference. But perhaps it is just this that is so unendurable, that there are irrational things in our own psyche which upset the conscious mind in its illusory certainties by confronting it with the riddle of its existence. Carl Jung; "The Philosophical Tree" (1945); CW 13: Alchemical Studies; Page 307.

Everything that the modern mind cannot define it regards as insane. Carl Jung; "Psychology and Alchemy," 1944.

Christian civilization has proved hollow to a terrifying degree: it is all veneer, but the inner man has remained untouched, and therefore unchanged. His soul is out of key with his external beliefs; in his soul the Christian has not kept pace with external developments. Yes, everything is to be found outside-in image and in word, in Church and Bible-but never inside. Inside reign the archaic gods, supreme as of old. Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy, Page 11.

Once the exploration of the unconscious has [begun] ... , the individual is confronted with the abysmal contradictions of human nature, and this confrontation in turn leads to the possibility of a direct experience of light and darkness, of Christ and the devil. Carl Jung; "Psychology and Alchemy,"1944.

I would not deny the possibility of parallel dreams, i.e., dreams whose meaning coincides with or supports the conscious attitude, but in my experience, at least, these are rather rare. Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy; CW 12; Page 48.

In alchemy the egg stands for the chaos apprehended by the artifex, the prima materia containing the captive world-soul. Out of the egg — symbolized by the round cooking vessel — will rise the eagle or phoenix, the liberated soul, which is ultimately identical with the Anthropos who was imprisoned in the embrace of Physis. Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy; Page 202.

The stirring up of conflict is a Lucipherian virtue in the true sense of the word. Conflict engenders fire, the fire of affects and emotions, and like every other fire it has two aspects, that of combustion and that of creating light. On the one hand, emotion is the alchemical fire whose warmth brings everything into existence and whose heat burns all superfluities to ashes (omnes superfluitates comburit). But on the other hand, emotion is the moment when steel meets flint and a spark is struck forth, for emotion is the chief source of consciousness. There is no change from darkness to light or from inertia to movement without emotion. - "Psychological Aspects of the Mother Archetype" (1939). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 179

The reality of evil and its incompatibility with good cleave the opposites asunder and lead inexorably to the crucifixion and suspension of everything that lives. Since ‘the soul is by nature Christian’ this result is bound to come as infallibly as it did in the life of Jesus: we all have to be ‘crucified with Christ,’ i.e., suspended in a moral suffering equivalent to veritable crucifixion. Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy; Paragraph 470.

A man who is unconscious of himself acts in a blind, instinctive way and is in addition fooled by all the illusions that arise when he sees everything that he is not conscious of in himself coming to meet him from outside as projections upon his neighbour. Carl Jung; The Philosophical Tree; CW 13; Alchemical Studies; Page 335.

The divine process of change manifests itself to our human understanding . . . as punishment, torment, death, and transfiguration. Carl Jung; Alchemical Studies.

The alchemists projected the inner event into an outer figure, so for them the inner friend appeared in the form of the “Stone,” of which the Tractatus aureus : “Understand, ye sons of the wise, what this exceeding precious Stone crieth out to you: Protect me and I will protect thee. Give me what is mine that I may help thee.” To this a scholiast adds: “The seeker after truth hears both the Stone and the Philosopher speaking as if out of one mouth.” The Philosopher is Hermes, and the Stone is identical with Mercurius, the Latin Hermes. Carl Jung; CW 9i; Para 283

From the earliest times, Hermes was the mystagogue and psycho pomp of the alchemists, their friend and counselor, who leads them to the goal of their work. He is “like a teacher mediating between the stone and the disciple.” To others the friend appears in the shape of Christ or Khidr or a visible or invisible guru, or some other personal guide or leader figure. Carl Jung, CW 9I, para. 283

It would be blasphemy to assert that God can manifest Himself everywhere save only in the human soul. Indeed the very intimacy of the relationship between Cod and the soul automatically precludes any devaluation of the latter. It would be going perhaps too far to speak of an affinity; but at all events the soul must contain in itself the faculty of relation to God, i.e. a correspondence, otherwise a connection could never come about This correspondence is, in psychological terms, the archetype of the God-image [q.v.]" Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Pages 399-400 and Psychology and Alchemy, CW 12, par. 11.

The self is not only the centre but also the whole circumference which embraces both conscious and unconscious; it is the centre of this totality, just as the ego is the centre of consciousness. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 398 and Psychology and Alchemy, CW 12, par. 44.

Filling the conscious mind with ideal conceptions is a characteristic of Western theosophy, but not the confrontation with the shadow and the world of darkness. One does not become enlightened by imagining figures of light, but by making the darkness conscious. Carl Jung; The Philosophical Tree; CW 13: Alchemical Studies. P.335

People will do anything, no matter how absurd, in order to avoid facing their own souls. They will practice Indian yoga and all its exercises, observe a strict regimen of diet, learn theosophy by heart, or mechanically repeat mystic text from the literature of the whole world - all because they cannot get on with themselves and have not slightest faith that anything useful could ever come out of their own souls. Thus the soul has been turned into a Nazareth Gradually from which nothing good can come. Therefore let us fetch it from the four corners of the earth - the more far-fetched and bizarre it is the better. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 99 .

Insanity is possession by an unconscious content that, as such, is not assimilatable to consciousness, nor can it be assimilated since the very existence of such contents is denied. Carl Jung; Alchemical Studies; Collected Works 13, par 53.

The highest and most decisive experience of all . . . is to be alone with . . . [one's] own self, or whatever else one chooses to call the objectivity of the psyche. The patient must be alone if he is to find out what it is that supports him when he can no longer support himself. Only this experience can give him an indestructible foundation. Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy; CW 12: P.32.

The conscious mind allows itself to be trained like a parrot, but the unconscious does not — which is why St. Augustine thanked God for not making him responsible for his dreams. Carl Jung; Psychology and Alchemy; Page 51.

Hierosgamos. Sacred or spiritual marriage, union of archetypal figures in the rebirth mysteries of antiquity and also in alchemy. Typical examples are the representation of Christ and the Church as bridegroom and bride (sponsus et sponsa) and the alchemical conjunction of sun and moon. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 395.

Hence one could say —cum grano salis —that history could be constructed just as easily from one's own unconscious as from the actual texts. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 86.

Dionysus is the abyss of impassioned dissolution, where all human distinctions are merged in the animal divinity of the primordial psyche—a blissful and terrible experience. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 90.

The intellect may be the devil , but the devil is the "strange son of chaos" who can most readily be trusted to deal effectively with his mother. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 90.

But the principle of the unconscious is the autonomy of the psyche itself, reflecting in the play of its images not the world but itself, even though it utilizes the illustrative possibilities offered by the sensible world in order to make its images clear. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 146

Matter in alchemy is material and spiritual, and spirit spiritual and material. Carl Jung, Alchemical Studies, Page 140.

With a truly tragic delusion these theologians fail to see that it is not a matter of proving the existence of the light, but of blind people who do not know that their eyes could see. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 14.

It is high time we realized that it is pointless to praise the light and preach it if nobody can see it. It is much more needful to teach people the art of seeing. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 14.

I did not attribute a religious function to the soul, I merely produced the facts which prove that the soul is naturaliter religiosa, i.e., possesses a religious function. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 14.

[Uniting symbols] arise from the collision between the conscious and the unconscious and from the confusion which this causes (known in alchemy as ‘chaos’ or ‘nigredo’). Empirically, this confusion takes the form of restlessness and disorientation. Carl Jung, Aion, CW 9 II, §304.

No matter how isolated you are and how lonely you feel, if you do your work truly and conscientiously, unknown friends will come and seek you. Carl Jung citing an Alchemist, Letters Vol II, Page 595.

The divine process of change manifests itself to our human understanding . . . as punishment, torment, death, and transfiguration. Carl Jung, Alchemical Studies, CW 13, par. 139.

"Sense" and "nonsense" are merely man-made labels which serve to give us a reasonably valid sense of direction. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 222, Para 330.

But every carrier is charged with an individual destiny and destination, and the realization of these alone makes sense of life. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 222, Para 330.

No matter how lonely you are and how lonely you feel, if you do your work truly and conscientiously, unknown friends will come and seek you. Carl Jung, citing an Alchemist, Letters Vol. II, Page 595.

The color blue cannot be found in alchemy, but it is found in the East, where it takes the place of black and actually represents a color of the underworld. Carl Jung, Children’s Dreams Seminar, Page 366.

As I see it, the psyche is a world in which the ego is contained. Maybe there are fishes who believe that they contain the sea. We must rid ourselves of this habitual illusion of ours if we wish to consider metaphysical assertions from the standpoint of psychology. Carl Jung, Alchemical Studies; Page 76, Para 51.

Thus, with Augustine, the first day of creation begins with self-knowledge, by which is meant knowledge not of the ego but of the self, that objective phenomenon of which the ego is the subject. Carl Jung, Alchemical Studies, Page 248, Para 301.

People will do anything, no matter how absurd, in order to avoid facing their own souls. One does not become enlightened by imagining figures of light, but by making the darkness conscious. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 99.

From the alchemical saying :
Heaven above All that is above
Heaven below Also is below
Stars above Grasp this Stars below And rejoice. Carl Jung, CW 1 6, par. 384.

Hence the must fix his eye not on what is done but on how it is done, because therein is decided the whole character of the doer. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 31, Para 36.

I do not hold myself responsible for the shortcomings in the lay public’s knowledge of psychology. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 4.

But the right way to wholeness is made up, unfortunately, of fateful detours and wrong turnings. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 6.

I for my part prefer the precious gift of doubt, for the reason that it does not violate the virginity of things beyond our ken. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 8.

If the supreme value (Christ) and the supreme negation (sin) are outside, then the soul is void: its highest and lowest are missing. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 8.

On the contrary it [The Soul] has the dignity of an entity endowed with consciousness of a relationship to Deity. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 10.

As the eye to the sun, so the soul corresponds to God. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 10.

The great events of our world as planned and executed by man do not breathe the spirit of Christianity but rather of unadorned paganism. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 11.

The Christian missionary may preach the gospel to the poor naked heathen, but the spiritual heathen who populate Europe have as yet heard nothing of Christianity. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 12.

So long as religion is only faith and outward form, and the religious function is not experienced in our own souls, nothing of any importance has happened. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 12.

It is high time we realized that it is pointless to praise the light and preach it if nobody can see it. It is much more needful to teach people the art of seeing. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 13.

Has it not yet been observed that all religious statements contain logical contradictions and assertions that are impossible in principle, that this is in fact the very essence of religious assertion? Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 15.

If the theologian really believes in the almighty power of God on the one hand and in the validity of dogma on the other, why then does he not trust God to speak in the soul? Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 17.

The archetypes of the unconscious can be shown empirically to be the equivalents of religious dogmas. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 17.

In the West the archetype is filled out with the dogmatic figure of Christ; in the East, with Purusha, the Atman, Hiranyagarbha, the Buddha, and so on. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 17.

The message of the Christian symbol is Gnosis, and the compensation effected by the unconscious is Gnosis in even higher degree. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 25.

The alchemistic development of active imagination broke off after the Middle Ages but such interruptions do not occur in the East. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 3, Page 14.

One text says that the "heart" of Mercurius is at the North Pole and that he is like a fire (northern lights). He is, in fact, as another text says, "the universal and scintillating fire of the light of nature, which carries the heavenly spirit within it." Carl Jung, Alchemical Studies, Para 256.

To begin with I did not have the feeling at all that I was guilty of plagiarism with my [anima/animus] theory, but in the last 5 years it has become more and more uncanny as I have discovered quite suspicious traces of it also in the old alchemists, and now the mischief seems complete since it turns out that I was discovered already in the 18th century. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 248.

When yang has reached its greatest strength, the dark power of yin is born within its depths, for night begins at midday when yang breaks up and begins to change into yin. Carl Jung, CW 13, Alchemical Studies, Para 13.

Man was understood, already in antiquity, as a small mirror image of the whole of the world. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Page 59.

But that "the One" should meditate, and that the world should be produced by the spirit in its creative role, is a conception which goes directly back to the philosophy about the Nous in antiquity. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Pages 59-60.

The idea lies concealed here that Christianity is only concerned with the problem of the salvation of man, whereas alchemy is concerned with that of the whole of nature. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Page 61.

The world is an image to us, even when we have a scientific conception of it and assert: "This is so and so", it is still only an image. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Page 62.

Our modern scientific attitude tries to eliminate every subjective factor from scientific reasoning. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Lecture VII, Page 65.

And matter [which was alive and had psychical qualities for him) contained a secret intention, a kind of wish, as if it wanted to be transformed. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Lecture VII, Page 66.

In the cheap and vile substance, which can be found everywhere and which is despised, the highest and most precious substance mind is hidden, which longs to be redeemed and to return to its original state of incorruptibility, to the form in which it was originally created and in which it was of the same nature as the creator. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Lecture VII, Page 66.
We are used to thinking of matter and spirit as of two wholly different and opposite principles. But to the alchemist, the materia was filled with a spiritus, and the two were inseparably one. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Lecture VII, Page 67.

For man has the yearning in himself to become what he would call the perfect man. Or rather, there is the image of a perfect and complete being in his unconscious. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Lecture VII, Page 67.

There must be a psychical equivalent of matter preformed in man, and this is our own matter, our physical world: the body, for the body is matter. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Lecture VII, Page 67.

The vegetative processes in our bodies, in their normal functioning, cannot be reached by our consciousness or influenced by our will. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Lecture VII, Page 67.

Inasmuch as they cannot be influenced by consciousness, the functioning of the intestines, the heart, the glands, the whole world of the cerebro-spinal reflexes, and so on, all belong to the vegetative psyche, and lie in the dark, in the unconscious. The vegetative processes in our bodies, in their normal functioning, cannot be reached by our consciousness or influenced by our will. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Lecture VII, Page 68.

...I have been working for many years on the psychology of the unconscious, and it was the enigmatical and puzzling structure of the unconscious which brought me to alchemy, as well as to the study of Yoga and of the Ignatian exercises. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture 10, Page 81.

This means, applied to alchemy, that it is death to take alchemy as an external occupation, but the man who regards it as an inward experience, can live and rejoice. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XI, Page 97.

The earth, in the alchemistic sense, means the body and in a double sense: chemical bodies (substances), minerals etc., and the human body. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 101.

Who would have thought that the alchemists, popularly supposed to be searching for gold, were really promising themselves freedom from illusion, exaggerated emotion, passion, excess and all possible vices Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIII, Page 108.

The "Processing" is the alchemistic procedure; this, Taoism and the Book of Changes are all the same thing, according to Wei Po-Yang. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIII, Page 109.

We must assume, therefore, that the spirit has two aspects in alchemy, the human mind as we know it, and the serpent mind, which we can only say is unconscious. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIII, Page 111.

Therefore the Chinese alchemistic treatises, as far as we know them, do not differ in any essential way from the western treatises, in fact in places they agree with each other almost word for word. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIII, Page 112.

It was Khunrath who said that Christ is the saviour of man, whereas the mysterious substance of alchemy is the saviour of the universe, not only of man but of nature. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIV, Page 121.

The central idea of Taoism is no moral question, but is the Tao, the indefinable essence of the right way, and this is also the mystery of alchemy. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 142.

The goal which the alchemist sets himself, however, is not a direct redemption of the human being, nor is it a propitiation of the Deity nor a defence against evil. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 143.

It [Alchemy] is the idea of producing a perfect and complete being, a being which has a redeeming effect and which has many names: panacea, medicina catholica, the philosophers' stone and innumerable other synonyms. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 143.

The goal of alchemy is not merely material, it is partly in "the Beyond", and is almost exactly similar to the goal of Taoism, where the whole effort is directed towards finding or creating Tao. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 143.

For the Mass itself is an "opus" (the Benedictines themselves use this term), it is a work of transformation, and is therefore similar to the alchemistic procedure. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 156.

The alchemistic opus is older than the Mass, just as the eternal water of alchemy is older than Christian baptism. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 156.

And so we find them in alchemy also, and the fact is recorded that in deep meditation dissociation occurs between the ego and a "second", that takes on the form of an inner figure, or represents something quite objective which will answer questions or produce enlightening remarks. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 172.

The purpose of the meditation of the alchemists is also spiritualis, but in contrast to the other methods of meditation which we studied here - those of Yoga, Mahayana Buddhism and the Ignatian excercises - the subject of meditation in alchemy is something unknown, and not a known dogmatic formula. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 174.

We can therefore assume, psychologically speaking, that the object which is to be transformed in alchemy is connected with the human body: it is a mystery of the body. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 177.

We think of a chaos as complete confusion, but to the alchemists it was a confusion of definite qualities and of special factors. Carl Jung, ETH, Pages 201-202.

The idea is that primeval man possessed a substance, a sort of earth, out of which Paradise could grow, and Adam (or primeval man) carries the secret of this earth in himself. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 215.

The snake in alchemy is the "mercurial serpent", the old Gnostic image for the Nous, the mind, where the spirit was represented as a serpent, as the Agathodaemon (the good daemon), or directly called the serpent of the Nous. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 215.

This serpent does not represent "reason" or anything approaching it, but rather symbolises a peculiar autonomous mind which can possess one completely, a spirit of revelation which gives us "Intuitionen" (intuitions). Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 215.

Since the time of the old Gnostics, the serpent has been the symbol for the brain and its appendages; that is, for the lower centres of the brain and for the spinal cord, partly on account of its shape, but also from introspective reasons. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 216.

One could say, in a certain sense, that the unconscious was the invisible, psychical part of the tangible and visible nervous system, just as one might say consciousness was the invisible part of the brain. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 216.

Living matter is a mystery which is beyond our understanding, if only for the reason that we ourselves consist of living matter. We cannot climb above our own heads, a fact which should be a warning to all those people who try to explain the nature of God. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 216.

...the serpent is the hypostatic, underlying materia (the essence of matter), which sinks into the water, or is as it were in the water, and, through illusion, it deceives the senses. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 219.

To put it more simply: the prima materia can be won from the centre of a stone or substance, but then it is no longer designated as a substance but as an agent. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 221.

Therefore the prima materia is called "monad", "ens reale" and "forma interna", that is, it is the inner form which gives things their existence, and is, therefore, the cause of all existence. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 221.

And this being has body, soul and spirit, and is, therefore, the principle of life itself, as well as the principle of individuation. Its nature is spiritual, it cannot be seen, and it contains an invisible image. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 221.

We could define the unconscious as a psychical existence in ourselves of which we are unconscious. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 224.

Even today the majority of people have no idea what psychology is; they have a personal psychology and some metaphysical convictions. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 224.

And it is a curious fact that, all over the earth wherever we find astrology, the stars have essentially the same meaning. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 225.

While a man sees something in the sky, there is no chance of his seeing it in himself, and so naturally he will attribute his own actions to the stars. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 225.

The well-known sentence in the Lord's Prayer, "Deliver us from evil", meant, as it was first understood, deliver us from the evil principle of the Heimarmene. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 225.

The beautiful old name, Elizabeth, is a remnant of the same idea. It originated in Babylon and means: "My deity is the seven", that is, these even planets, for only seven were known in those days. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Pages 225-226.

The things, which impress us from outside, can only do so because of our inner attitude. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 226.

You can put the most marvellous things before the eyes of a stupid person and they will make no impression on him, for all impressions come from inside ourselves. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 226.

The elements are of an earthly nature, the physical and chemical constituents of our bodies. These are the earth in us, so to speak, and the stars represent the beginning of psychical life, the influence of the stars in the condition of the chaos. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 229.

Psychologically this means that the souls of the ancestors (potential factors, qualities, talents, possibilities, and so on, which we have inherited from all the lines of our ancestry) are waiting in the unconscious, and are ready at any time to begin a new growth. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 230.

These are, so to speak, the re-animated souls of the ancestors which have been lying dormant in the unconscious, and the alchemists call these units or souls the sleepers or the dead in Hades who are resurrected by the "holy waters" (that is the miraculous water of alchemy, the fertilising Mercury). Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 230.

If we regard alchemy rationally it is complete nonsense but it is exceedingly meaningful psychologically, the whole riddle or secret of the human psyche is to be found in it. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 117.
The alchemists returned in matter to the mother, the first carrier of the feminine unconscious. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 117.

Alchemy began about the same time as Christianity, in fact we find alchemical ideas in China long before our era, so one can only be sure that the symbolism and language of the Fathers of the Church play an enormous role in alchemy. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages 161-162.

The coniunctio in alchemy is a union of the masculine and feminine, of the spiritual and material principles, from which a perfect body arises, the glorified body after the Last Judgement, the resurrection body. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 159.

This means an eternal body, or the subtle body, which is designated in alchemy as the philosopher's stone, the lapis aethereus or invisibilis. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages 159.

In alchemy, the redemption of man is brought about through the opus; in contrast to Christianity, where redemption depends entirely on the grace of God. The eastern concept is identical with the alchemical idea: it is the task of the individual to redeem himself. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, Page 110.

The chemical and the psychological processes went hand in hand, the alchemists worked with such intensity and expectation that it had a psychological effect on them. This is difficult for us to understand. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, Page 110.

Every profound student of alchemy knows that the making of gold was not the real purpose and that the process was a western form of Yoga. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture, Page 107.

The alchemists think of the Redeemer as lying hidden or sleeping in the materia, he does not only descend from heaven but comes also from the depths of matter. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 189.

An old alchemist said that God was obviously displeased with his work on the second day when he had separated the waters above from the waters below, thus creating the Binarius (two) which is the devil. On all the other days "God saw that it was good" but not on the second day. (Compare Gen. I. 6-8.) Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 215.

"It is by the revelation of the highest and greatest God that I have attained this art, and only through diligent study, wakefulness, and through constantly reading the authentic books." Carl Jung, Citing an Alchemist, ETH Lecture V. Page 161.

I use the word "Gnosis" intentionally, because alchemy retained, or rediscovered, a great many things which played a very important role in the early days of Christianity. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture V. Page 162.

The lapis philosophorum of the alchemists is the same thing as the Vajra, it is the thing which is produced in the laboratory of a man’s life and which is far more durable than he is. These thoughts run parallel both in the East and West. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 43.

Women played a considerable part in alchemy, and worked at it themselves. This is not the case in Indian Yoga, with the exception of Tantrism. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 24Feb1939, Pages 92.

Alchemical philosophy is an instrument and a way to the inner transformation of man, a problem which is practically unknown today. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3Mar1939, Page 99.

This leads us over to the secret gnosis of the Middle Ages, when it takes the form of alchemy. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 198

Psychology did not suddenly spring into existence; one could say that it is as old as civilization itself. The ancient science of astrology, which has always appeared in the wake of culture all over the world, is a kind of psychology and alchemy is another unconscious form. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture I, Page 11.

Anthropos: Original or primordial man, an archetypal image of wholeness in alchemy, religion and Gnostic philosophy. There is in the unconscious an already existing wholeness, the "homo totus" of the Western and the Chên-yên (true man) of Chinese alchemy, the round primordial being who represents the greater man within, the Anthropos, who is akin to God. Carl Jung, CW 14, par. 152.

Christ can indeed be imitated even to the point of stigmatization without the imitator coming anywhere near the ideal or its meaning. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 7.

The Western attitude, with its emphasis on the object, tends to fix the ideal—Christ—in its outward aspect and thus to rob it of its mysterious relation to the inner man. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 8.

If the supreme value (Christ) and the supreme negation (sin) are outside, then the soul is void: its highest and lowest are missing. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 8.

As the eye to the sun, so the soul corresponds to God. Since our conscious mind does not comprehend the soul it is ridiculous to speak of the things of the soul in a patronizing or depreciatory manner. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 11.

Too few people have experienced the divine image as the innermost possession of their own souls. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 12.

Just as the alchemists knew that the production of their stone was a miracle that could only happen "Deo concedente," so the modern psychologist is aware that he can produce no more than a description, couched in scientific symbols, of a psychic process whose real nature transcends consciousness just as much as does the mystery of life or of matter. Carl Jung, CW 11, Page 296.

These "centres" are the so-called chakras? and you not only find them in the teachings of yoga but can discover the same idea in old German alchemical books, which surely do not derive from a knowledge of yoga. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 16.

In alchemy there lies concealed a Western system of yoga meditation, but it was kept a carefully guarded secret from fear of heresy and its painful consequences. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 219.

For the practising psychologist, however, alchemy has one inestimable advantage over Indian yoga its ideas are expressed almost entirely in an extraordinarily rich symbolism, the very symbolism we still find in our patients today. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 219.

The help which alchemy affords us in understanding the symbols of the individuation process is, in my opinion, of the utmost importance. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 219.

The third degree of [Alchemical] conjunction is universal: it is relation or identity of the personal with the supra-personal atman, and of the individual tao with the universal tao. . . . Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 762.

An alchemical text says: "The mind should learn compassionate love for the body." Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 25.

It [Alchemy] is the mental work of 1,700 years, in which there is stored up all they could make out about the nature of the archetypes, in a peculiar way that’s foolish. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 17.

It [Alchemy] is also called Hermetic Philosophy, though, of course, that conveys just as little as the term alchemy. —It was the parallel development, as Narcissism was, to the conscious development of Christianity, of our Christian philosophy, of the whole psychology of the middle ages. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 17.

I am an orphan, alone; nevertheless I am found everywhere. I am one, but opposed to myself. I am youth and old man at one and the same time. I have known neither father nor mother, because I have had to be fetched out of the deep like a fish, or fell like a white stone from heaven. In woods and mountains I roam, but I am hidden in the innermost soul of man. I am mortal for everyone, yet I am not touched by the cycle of eons. Carl Jung, Quoting an Alchemical Text, MDR 227.

It is not my responsibility that alchemy is occult and mystical, and I am just as little guilty of the mystical delusions of the insane or the peculiar creeds of mankind. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 184-187.

Faust II has been my companion all my life but it was only 20 years ago that certain things began to dawn on me, especially when I read Christian Rosencreutz’s Chymical Wedding, which Goethe also knew but, interestingly enough, did not mention among the alchemical literature of his Leipzig days. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 246-247.

So far as we know, Goethe used only the relatively late alchemical literature, and it was the study of the classical and early medieval texts which first convinced me that Faust I and II is an opus alchymicum in the best sense. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 246-247.

Inasmuch as we attribute to the Holy Spirit the faculty of procreating in matter, we must unavoidably grant it a nature capable of contact with material existence, i.e., a chthonic aspect, as the alchemists did; otherwise it could not influence Physis. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 267-268.

Just as some alchemists had to admit that they never succeeded in producing the gold or the Stone, I cannot confess to have solved the riddle of the coniunctio mystery. On the contrary I am darkly aware of things lurking in the background of the problem-things too big for our horizons. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 392-396

The very existence of alchemistic philosophy proves that the spiritualization process within Christian psychology did not yield satisfactory results. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 400-401

In Europe, as far as I can make out, Meister Eckhart is about the first where the self begins to play a noticeable role. After him some of the great German alchemists took up the idea and handed it down to Jacob Boehme and Angelus Silesius and kindred spirits. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 453-454.

Goethe’s Faust almost reached the goal of classical alchemy, but unfortunately the ultimate coniunctio did not come off, so that Faust and Mephistopheles could not attain their oneness. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 453-454.

Astrology differs very much from alchemy, as its historical literature consists merely of different methods of casting a horoscope and of interpretation, and not of philosophical texts as is the case in alchemy. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 463-464

The bird signifies the aerial, volatile spirit (in the chemical sense "spirit" is volatile, but it also designates the Spiritus Sanctus), whose physical and spiritual meanings are united in the alchemical spiritus Mercurialis. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 476-477

As you know, I have reopened the discussion about alchemical philosophy, i.e., I have at least shown a way which allows a new interpretation of its essential thoughts. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 534-536

The physical side of the problem is a well-known matter, whereas the psychological and Hermetic side of this problem is accessible only to a very few, on account of the fact that the subject of unconscious phenomena is studied only by a very few and the study of alchemy is-if possible-still more unknown. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 534-536

On the side of physics it was Pauli alone who appreciated alchemical thought very highly. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 534-536

The starry vault of heaven is in truth the open book of cosmic projection, in which are reflected the mythologems, i.e., the archetypes. In this vision astrology and alchemy, the two classical functionaries of the psychology of the collective unconscious, join hands. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 195, Para 392.

I have not been there [Oxford] again although I always dreamt and hoped to delve more deeply into the treasures of alchemistic manuscripts at the Bodleian. Fate has decreed otherwise. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 579-580

All life is bound to individual carriers who realize it, and it is simply inconceivable without them. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 222

"Sense" and "nonsense" are merely man-made labels which serve to give us a reasonably valid sense of direction. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 222

But just as Buddhism in its many differentiations overlaid the original spiritual adventure, so Christian rationalism has overlaid medieval alchemistic philosophy, which has been forgotten for about 200 years.   Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 600-603

So I am not in the least surprised when you say that the alchemical pairs of opposites can be correlated with the endophylactictrophotropic and the ergotrop-dynamic systems. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 617-620

The fact that deity and devil belong together also plays a great role in alchemy.   Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Page 373.

Nobody has ever known what this primal matter is. The alchemists did not know, and nobody has found out what is really meant by it, because it is a substance in the unconscious which is needed for the incarnation of the god. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 886

Thus, the alchemical process also begins with such a division into the four elements, by which the body is put back into its primordial state and so can undergo transformation. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams, Page 367.

We need to find our way back to the original, living spirit which, because of its ambivalence, is also a mediator and uniter of opposites, an idea that preoccupied the alchemists for many centuries. Carl Jung, Aion, Para 141

For alchemy is the mother of the essential substance as well as the concreteness of modern scientific thinking, and not scholasticism, which was responsible in the main only for the discipline and training of the intellect.   Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 266.

Since the object of this endeavor [Alchemy] was seen outside as well as inside, as both physical and psychic, the work extended as it were through the whole of nature, and its goal consisted in a symbol which had an empirical and at the same time a transcendental aspect. Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 700.

This remarkable capacity of the human psyche for change, expressed in the transcendent function, is the principal object of late medieval alchemistic philosophy, where it was expressed in terms of alchemical symbolism. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 360

For the alchemists the process of individuation represented by the opus was an analogy of the creation of the world, and the opus itself an analogy of God's work of creation. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 550

Since the psychological condition of any unconscious content is one of potential reality, characterized by the polar opposites of “being” and “non-being,” it follows that the union of opposites must play a decisive role in the alchemical process. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 557

We know that the mask of the unconscious is not rigid—it reflects the face we turn towards it. Hostility lends it a threatening aspect, friendliness softens its features. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 29

The experience of the unconscious is a personal secret communicable only to very few, and that with difficulty. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 61

The archetype is, so to speak, an “eternal” presence, and it is only a question of whether it is perceived by the conscious mind or not. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 329

There is always an attraction between conscious mind and projected content. Generally it takes the form of a fascination. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 436.

So long as a content remains in the projected state it is inaccessible. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 555.

I may define “self” as the totality of the conscious and unconscious psyche, but this totality transcends our vision; it is a veritable lapis invisibilitatis [stone of invisibility]. In so far as the unconscious exists it is not definable; its existence is a mere postulate and nothing whatever can be predicated as to its possible contents. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 247.

As a doctor it is my task to help the patient to cope with life. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 32

The patient must be alone if he is to find out what it is that supports him when he can no longer support himself. Only this experience can give him an indestructible foundation. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 32

The labours of the doctor as well as the quest of the patient are directed towards that hidden and as yet unmanifest “whole” man, who is at once the greater and the future man. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 6

But no matter how much the parents and grandparents may have sinned against the child, the man who is really adult will accept these sins as his own condition which has to be reckoned with. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 152

Our psychic prehistory is in truth the spirit of gravity, which needs steps and ladders because, unlike the disembodied airy intellect, it cannot fly at will. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 79

Experience of the opposites has nothing whatever to do with intellectual insight or with empathy. It is more what we would call fate. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 23.

Without the experience of the opposites there is no experience of wholeness and hence no inner approach to the sacred figures. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 24.

Since the psychological condition of any unconscious content is one of potential reality, characterized by the polar opposites of “being” and “non-being,” it follows that the union of opposites must play a decisive role in the alchemical process. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 557

It has yet to be understood that the Mysterium magnum [the great mystery] is not only an actuality but is first and foremost rooted in the human psyche. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 13.

The man who does not know this from his own experience may be a most learned theologian, but he has no idea of religion and still less of education. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 13.

Hence a religion becomes inwardly impoverished when it loses or waters down its paradoxes; but their multiplication enriches because only the paradox comes anywhere near to comprehending the fullness of life. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 18

